The information provided in this brochure has no legal value. The official reference documents are the Act respecting industrial accidents and occupational diseases (CQLR, chapter A-3.001) and the Regulation respecting financing (CQLR, chapter A-3.001, r. 7), which was amended in 2015.

The Schedule of rates contains only the titles of classification units. However, the Regulation details the activities covered by the classification units. For more information, consult the Regulation respecting financing, published in the Gazette officielle du Québec.

Under certain criteria, an employer classified in a unit marked with an asterisk (*) may also be classified in an exceptional unit.

Employers' classification

The classification of an employer in one or more units is based on the nature of all the activities within the employer's business. This classification is made on the basis of the information that the employer provides to the CSST in that respect.

To reflect the specific risks of a business as accurately as possible, the CSST takes into account only the activities that the business actually carries on. The outsourced activities are not taken into account for classification purposes.

For example, in the case of a fruit and vegetable wholesaler whose employees' activities are related to sales and administration as well as to transportation and warehousing, the employer will be classified in unit 54410, Wholesale trade in foodstuffs; wholesale trade in beverages, whether alcoholic or non-alcoholic; transporting of raw milk.

In fact, all such activities are related to the fruit and vegetable wholesale trade.

However, if the employees are involved exclusively in sales and administration (because transportation and warehousing are outsourced), the employer will be classified in unit 65110, Brokerage firm, professional services firm; firm offering administrative support services.

Moreover, an employer may be classified in more than one unit if it carries on various activities that are of a different nature; therefore, an employer operating both a restaurant and a pharmacy would be classified in two units.

Lastly, even if some of the employer's activities, considered in isolation, may be classified in separate units, they will not be so classified if they support one of its activities covered under another unit.

For example, the delivery of a product manufactured by an employer, because it is an activity supporting manufacturing, will be included in the unit covering the manufacture of that product. However, if the employer also makes deliveries for other businesses, it will also be classified in the unit corresponding to such transportation, because making deliveries is then its secondary activity.

Premium rate

To determine the premium rate corresponding to a particular unit, the ratemaking process involves two steps: establishing the average rate and calculating unit rates.

The average rate takes into account the financial requirements related to the administration of the occupational health and safety plan and all the insurable payrolls of employers registered with the CSST. For 2016, the CSST evaluates the financial requirements of the plan at approximately $2.57 billion and estimates the insurable wages at $140 billion. The average premium rate for 2016 is $1.84 for every $100 of payroll, which represents a reduction of 5% compared to the average premium rate for 2015, which was $1.94.

The general unit rate is determined by taking into consideration the corresponding risk index for each unit. The index is obtained by comparing the experience data of a particular unit with that of all units. The unit rate is determined by multiplying the index by the average rate.

However, the CSST sets different rates for enterprises whose activities come under federal jurisdiction. Their individual rates are lower, because they are not subject to certain provisions of the Act respecting occupational health and safety. Therefore, those rates do not take into account the costs of prevention plans and the For a safe maternity experience program.

Joint sector-based associations

Joint sector-based associations are bodies devoted to the prevention of employment injuries. They provide workers and employers in their respective activity sectors with training and research services, information, advice and assistance in occupational health and safety matters. Specifically, they can help create and run health and safety committees, design and provide training and information programs, and draft prevention guides and technical data sheets.

With the exception of the construction sector, where they are obligatory under the Act respecting occupational health and safety, joint sector-based associations are created on a voluntary basis by employer and worker associations in the same activity sector. There are eleven joint sector-based associations, run by joint boards of directors and financed by a specific assessment paid by the employers in the activity sectors for which such an association was formed.

Therefore, a joint sector-based association assessment is added to the premium of these employers.

This rate varies from $0.020 to $0.097 for every $100 of insurable payroll in 2016.
