Enormously of the Federal Department of Agriculture's Science Service have been producing a series of investigations of these countries ever since the last four centuries and have come out with some brilliant historical facts.

The results, they tell me, are to be found in a number of documents, diaries, and reports that span over a century and a half of history. As the research continued, they discovered that during the American Civil War, the Confederacy had engaged in a series of secret meetings to discuss the possibility of various strategies to win the war. These strategies included the use of covert operations, espionage, and even the possibility of creating a new currency to fund the war effort.

The evidence is clear: the Confederacy was not just fighting a war, but also a battle for survival. They had to find ways to keep their economy afloat and their soldiers fed. This was not an easy task, as the Union controlled much of the trade routes and had a strong navy to prevent Confederate ships from entering or leaving the country.

In the end, the Confederacy was unable to overcome these odds. The war dragged on for four years, during which time the Confederate states suffered massive losses both in terms of manpower and resources. However, their efforts did not go unnoticed. Even today, historians continue to study the Confederacy's battles and strategies, hoping to uncover more insights into the events that shaped American history.
Tips On Drapery Care:

From

PONTIAC CLEANERS

Shawville

1. Air and brush draperies frequently to remove积累 of dust and dirt before you put them away for the winter. Do not use the vacuum cleaner. Dust with a wide brush.

2. Draperies should be cleaned as soon as they become soiled. The more quickly you act, the less likely it is that the damage will be permanent.

3. Dirt, grime, moisture and steam from the air conditioning system can cause damage to fabrics.

Rat's Cousin Many Times Away

Plays Key Role In Research

Even as the airplane and the "fast" trains are replacing the slow horses in North Country transportation, so the house hamster is replacing the golden pig in modern science. As a matter of fact, the scientists of McGill University, T. W. Cameron, Professor of Pharmacology, and his associates, are conducting a detailed study of the chemical reactions of the rat's brain. The rat, in case you haven't heard, has a memory far better than man's. It has the capacity to memorize names, figures, and facts in a remarkably short time.

Today, the mouse is used in many phases of medical and allied research. At McGill, Dr. W. A. S. Cameron, with Dr. J. W. Cameron and other members of the research team, are working on the use of new drugs in the treatment of cancer. The studies are being conducted on cancer cells in rats, and the results are promising.

The rat has been used in a variety of other experiments as well. For example, in one study, rats were fed a high-protein diet and then placed in a cold environment. The results showed that the rats were able to maintain their body temperature despite the cold, which is a useful adaptation for living in cold climates.
