Uplands compiling directory of traditional artists

By Catherine Dean
RECORD CORRESPONDENT
LENNOXVILLE

Fabienne Aubuchon is on the lookout for traditional artists. The eager 21-year-old Bishop's University student has been hired by Uplands to compile a directory of Eastern Townships Resource People in the field of traditional arts.

Thanks to a grant from the Ministry of Culture and Communications of Quebec, professional painters, sculptors, photographers (arguably a traditional art), quilters, embroiderers, potters, stained glass artists, knitters, weavers, artists who teach and their work will be easily accessible.

Each artist is interviewed by Aubuchon. A photograph of a representative piece of each artist's work will head the page. An entire page will be devoted to each Townships artist.

Aubuchon is eager to get the word out, so all traditional area artists are included.

"Each interview lasts about one hour," Aubuchon explained. "I ask the artists questions about their profile and their works of art, their influences, and where they were educated, briefly."

The directory, which will include Web pages, FAX numbers and phone numbers will be distributed free in the area. It will prove an invaluable resource for galleries, museums, cultural centres and schools for the planning of workshops, talks and exhibits. It is slated to be printed in December 2000.

Aubuchon, a drama student feels a kinship with the artists.

"It works well, because I'm an artist myself," she said. "My main interest is poetry. I wanted to get closer to the community of Lennoxville."

Sutton celebrates Swiss national day

By Caroline Kehne

Mount Sutton will play host for Swiss National Day celebration on Saturday, Aug. 5.

Organized by the Federation of Swiss Societies of Eastern Canada, the celebration will start at 8 a.m. and continue on through the evening with activities for the entire family.

The celebration will kick off with the small-calibre rifle competition, followed by a break for coffee and croissants at 10 a.m. An 11:15 a.m. ecumenical service will follow, in the chalet. Music and singing will be provided by the groups Jodlerclub Am Rigi, Glodau and Landlerkapelle Rothenberger und Appenzeller Frauestrichmusik.

At 12:30, the athletically inclined will compete in Swiss-style wrestling and, from noon to 3:30 p.m., free chair lift trips will be offered, one trip per person.

From noon to 4 p.m., there will be folklore activities, music and song, and from 2 to 5 p.m., children's games. The official party kicks off at 8 p.m. with the singing of the Swiss national anthem and a Swiss lampion procession follows at 8:30 p.m.

At 8:45 p.m., join the group at the bonfire, to watch an alphorn performance and, from 10:30 p.m. to 2 a.m., entertainment and dance. There will also be a drawing for a Swiss Air return trip ticket, Montreal to Zurich.

Admission is charged for anyone over 15, with a reduced entrance price after 6 p.m. Women dressed in Swiss national costume will be admitted free. The celebration will take place rain or shine. For more information, call (514) 324-2123, (450) 291-3244, (450) 296-4907 or (514) 932-7181.

Homage to six great music masters

A premiere at the Saint-Benoit-du-Lac Abbey

The next-to-last weekend of the Orford Festival is offering the public two remarkable chamber music concerts.

Mozart, Beethoven, Stravinsky, Debussy, Bartok and Schumann, six great masters of music, are on the evening's program of Friday, Aug. 4th, titled "Pillars through the eras." On Saturday, Aug. 5th and Sunday, Aug. 6th, a premiere in the new Abbey church of St-Benoit-du-Lac - a concert of "classical" instead of "sacred" music, with oboist Louise Pellerin and organist Dom André Laberge, will be presented.

With "Pillars through the eras," chamber music lovers will rediscover six masterworks of the classical repertoire. The concert will begin with the famous Trio in E sharp major, K.498, "Des Quilles" by Mozart. It will be followed by Ludwig Van Beethoven's beautiful Sonata for piano no. 32 in C minor, opus 111, considered one of the most innovative works in the history of Western music. The "Three pieces for solo clarinet" composed by Igor Stravinsky in 1918 will end the first part of the program.

The second half of the concert will start with the "Rhapsody for clarinet and piano" by Claude Debussy. It will be followed by Bela Bartok's "Contrasts for clarinet, violin and piano," a masterwork that was commissioned by the celebrated clarinetist Benny Goodman in 1937. The concert will end softly with Robert Schumann's romantic "Fairy Tales, opus 132, for clarinet, viola and piano."

For a brilliant interpretation of these masterworks, Agnes Grossman, artistic director of the arts centre, chose four great musicians. An outstanding soloist, violinist Lorand Fenyves has also left his mark as a remarkable teacher. Professor at the University of Toronto, he gives master classes in Europe, the United States and Japan.

Robert Berebes has, for almost 40 years, been associate principal violist with the Montreal Symphony Orchestra. Clarinet and saxophone soloist with the Montreal Symphony Orchestra, the virtuoso André Moisan is now leading an active career as conductor, teacher, soloist and chamber musician. Pianist Avo Kuyumjian, laureate of the prestigious Beethoven competition, has had a brilliant career as soloist for the last 20 years. Critics are unanimous in declaring him one of the most prominent artists of his generation.

The special event "Baroque at the Abbey" is on the program for Saturday, Aug. 5th at 8 p.m., with a repeat performance on Sunday, Aug. 6th at 2 p.m. It will celebrate the first concert of classical music in the new Abbey Church of Saint-Benoit-du-Lac.

With a repertoire for organ, oboe and English horn devoted to Handel, Bach, and Charles Koechlin, a French composer of the early 20th century, two of our great musicians join together their talents. Quebec born oboist Louise Pellerin has gained laudatory reviews for her great sensitivity. She frequently appears at some of the world's most prestigious festivals.

Apart from a career as a soloist and chamber musician in North America and Europe, Mrs. Pellerin holds professorships at Aurich, Winterthur and Paris Music Conservatories, and teaches at the Orford Art Centre.

Dom André Laberge is the Abbey of Saint-Benoit-du-Lac organist. A grant holder of the Arts Council of Canada, he completed his studies with Xavier Darasse and Gustav Leonhardt and is presently dividing his time between private teaching and recording, apart from his monastic and prior duties.

The events of Friday and Saturday evenings will be preceded by a talk with musicologist Carol Bergeron at 7 p.m.

For information and reservations, access the website at: arts.Orford@sympatico.ca or call (819) 843-9871 or 1 888 310-3665.

Harmony Band Rides Again

CAROLINE KEHNE/CORRESPONDENT

The Knowlton Harmony Band, under the direction of Roger de la Mare, provided a grandstand concert at this year's Foster Horse Show, held July 30 in Bromont. Organizer Heather Heath says that this was a repeat performance for 26 of the band's current members who, as high school band members, played at the horse show in the early 1950s. For their return performance, the band performed a luncheon concert and later, provided the music for the "musical sacks" class. Heath added that the "reunion" was a success and that the band is welcome to return for next year's show. - Caroline Kehne, Record Correspondent.

"I've been here three years as a student and it's about time I got to know my community," she added. "I'm curious about what this region contains and to find out how the artists are influenced. It gives me the courage to pursue a career in the arts."

So far, Aubuchon has interviewed 75 artists, among them: sculptor George Foster, folk artist Jana Kendall, furniture maker Brian Creelman, potter Lucy Doheny, quilter Margaret Littler, painter and furniture designer Luigi Tengo and potter Jason Krpan.

"I spoke with Jason Krpan," Aubuchon said. "He's very down to earth. He grows his own food and makes his own dishes. His pottery is functional. He has influenced me a little bit, personally. I actually bought a percussion pot."

Another positive influence has been Lucy Doheny, also a potter.

"Their art is really important for me. Lucy Doheny was telling me about speaking with a nun who explained that humanity came from nature and because clay is from nature, man learns to grow and centre themselves. It's fun to know the artist's way of thinking, their reason for creating.

They're not doing it for nothing," Aubuchon exclaimed.

"Most of them have trust in me, in what they're telling me," she continued, "so I feel really privileged."

The only thing Aubuchon laments is that her job will come to an end.

"I continue until the end of August, unfortunately," she added. "This is one of life's best experiences. It's really nourishing. We have a wonderful colony of artists and we have to show that to the rest of the province of Quebec."

Piggery gallery a treat before the show

By Catherine Dean
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

Theatre-goers at the Piggery in North Hatley can enjoy an art exhibit featuring sculpture, oils, pottery and watercolour and mixed media at the Emily LeBaron Art Gallery one-half hour before each show, during intermission and following each play.

Among the artists is Mary Cartmel, who moved to the Eastern Townships from Montreal at the age of 20. She has a fine arts background in painting, drawing, design, printmaking, pottery and in the design and colour of textiles. Mary now carves Quebec soapstone, which comes from the Knowlton and Mansonville area.

Virginia Cope is an Eastern Townships oil painter who finds inspiration in the rolling hills and lakes surrounding the Townships. Her colourful impressionistic paintings reveal a love of nature. Cope's work is exhibited at galleries throughout Canada and is part of many private collections.

The Piggery welcomes back the work of Lucy Doheny for a 10th year. Doheny, a Lennoxville native with a BA in Fine Arts and Classical Studies from Bishop's University and a Diploma of Education, learned the art of pottery in 1977 at Champlain Regional College from Dean Mullavey. In 1981, she opened her own pottery studio.

Characterized by their usefulness and beauty, Doheny's pottery can be seen across the country. Her pots are owned by international collectors, and are displayed at the Gardener Museum of Ceramic Art in Toronto and the Guild of Canadian Crafts and Arts in Montreal. Her work will be featured from July 28 to Aug. 20 at 1001 Pots in Val David, Quebec.

Brenda M. Parsons has studied and taught art at McGill University and has attended painting workshops in the United States, Europe and Montreal. The artist takes her inspiration from wildflowers, such as yellow irises, goldenrod and Indian paintbrush. Included in the exhibit are scenes from Italy. Parsons' work is contained in a number of private collections and she has exhibited in Montreal.

The Emily LeBaron Art Gallery is also open on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and on Wednesdays and Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. August 6 to 9, the gallery will be closed due to construction of new theatre sets.

Annual arts and crafts show

Lovers of arts and crafts and The Piggery should remember The Piggery's 17th annual Arts and Crafts Show. Some of the finest artisans of the Eastern Townships will be on hand to display their work at the annual sale which features pottery, sculptures, handmade furniture and more.

The Arts and Crafts Show will take place Saturday, Aug. 19, from 9:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., and Sunday, Aug. 20, from 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

Director rhapsodizes about Bless The Child

By Jamie Portman
SOUTHAM NEWS

There's a particular reason why director Chuck Russell feels so strongly about his new supernatural thriller, Bless The Child. And it has to do with spirituality.

The genre has always fascinated him, but if this had been just another run-of-the-mill horror movie, Russell wouldn't have been interested in making it.

He was attracted to the project, which is based on a best-selling novel by Cathy Cash Spellman, on more profound grounds - what he calls its "resonant sense of spiritual truth." Russell looked at this story of a little girl whose extraordinary powers make her the prey of a vicious satanic cult, and decided there was an opportunity for more than displays of on-screen magic or horrifying special effects.

"I had been on the lookout for a good supernatural thriller and with this one

SOUTHAM

Holliston Coleman and Kim Basinger star in Bless the Child, a supernatural thriller about a little girl with extraordinary powers.

I was hooked from the very beginning," he says gently. "It was very valid dramatically, and most important, I wanted to find out what happened to that kid."

But Russell also saw the film as the opportunity to focus "on the very real battle between good and evil that we all have to deal with, on some level, every day of our lives."

He's chatting in his spacious office in Beverly Hills. His desk is piled high with scripts, and his walls are adorned with previous movies he has directed (The Mask) or produced (The Shawshank Redemption). It's an unexpected setting for a discussion on matters spiritual - but this soft-spoken, bespectacled filmmaker believes such concerns lie at the core of Bless The Child.

"Do I believe in evil? Oh yes, but I also believe in the power of good on a supernatural level." That was the ultimate appeal of this project. "I had never before seen a film in this genre which dealt with genuine good. Most films of this nature are concerned only with the power of supernatural evil. Here we have a reminder that supernatural good can be powerful also."

In the film, opening Aug. 11, Kim Basinger portrays Maggie O'Connor, an ordinary big-city hospital nurse whose life is turned upside down when her drug-addicted younger sister (Angela Bettis) dumps her new-born autistic daughter, Cody, on her one Christmas Eve.

Cody (Holliston Coleman) becomes the daughter Maggie has always wanted, but as she grows older, she starts exhibiting extraordinary powers - from making objects move to healing a fatally injured bird. The forces of evil are determined to harness these powers to their own end, and Cody is abducted by them. The cast also includes Jimmy Smits as a New York cop and former seminarian who's an expert in ritual homicides and occult crime, Rufus Sewell as a charismatic cult leader, and Sir Ian Holm as a priest with a powerful understanding of satanism. Russell liked the fact that the script offered a strong female protagonist in Basinger's character, and that there was nothing glamorous about her life; instead she had a middle-class background with whom audiences could easily identify.

"This is essentially a woman's story, and that's unusual for the genre. Yet the character Kim plays is no shrinking violet. And as an actress she is able to tap some very profound emotions."

From the beginning, he believed Basinger would be right for the role, but doubted she would be interested. He was quickly proved wrong.

"I went to Kim as soon as I had a script ready to go, and it was one of the most pleasant first meetings I'd ever had with a star. I wasn't sure whether she would accept the part. I thought she might consider it a risk, but I needn't have worried. She wanted to do it.

"I think it's the first film she has done which has nothing to do with the fact that she's attractive. It has to do with her strength and intelligence."

During shooting last year in Toronto, Basinger said she identified with the film on several levels. "First, of course, it's an incredibly absorbing story that deals with some truly fundamental issues: the war between good and evil and the selflessness of love. I was also attracted because Maggie isn't a peripheral role. She's not there just to serve as a love interest or as a helpless victim. She's a strong woman who is absolutely central to this film."

Russell reiterates that he would never been interested in doing just another movie about the struggle between the forces of light and darkness. "I liked this because it had solid characters." Because it was so character-driven, he was cautious in his use of visual effects. "I rationed my effects shots to serving the story." He emphasizes that the film's supernatural manifestations - for example, ominous flights of dark angels - are "visions" experienced by Maggie as she confronts evil in the world. "The message we wanted to convey is that these demons are always around us, but they don't manifest themselves until we actually wage battle against them."

Because of the emphasis on character, casting was all important. For example, Smits's steely integrity made him ideal for the role of the cop. "I've been a fan from the first time I saw him. There's something explosive about the way in which he totally dominates the screen."

Casting the role of the sinister cult leader was even trickier, and Russell ended up hiring British actor Rufus Sewell. "Rufus is an intense actor, and what he does here is marvellous. He had wanted to play a powerful villain's role, but what made me want to cast him is the fact that he's equally convincing as a leading man. I needed a villain capable of being unbelievably charming. I needed someone capable of convincing us of his charismatic appeal."

Russell says Bless The Child has been testing "like a dream" with preview audiences. He also hopes it finds its place in a season which already has one supernatural hit in What Lies Beneath and which will later be ushering in a restored version of The Exorcist. But he also thinks his film occupies a special niche. "That's because it operates on two levels - as a very frightening thriller and as a character piece about the power of good."

Patrick Huard choisit de livrer son deuxième 'one-man show' en primeur aux gens des Cantons de l'Est

Les lumières jaillissent sur un superbe décor urbain, puis un air de saxophone et la voix de Dan Bigras, qui signe la musique originale du spectacle, se font entendre. C'est du toit d'un immeuble de centre-ville que l'humoriste Patrick Huard a choisi de livrer ce qu'il appelle son "bilan de vie," son deuxième "one-man show" présenté en primeur aux gens de la région.

Vous trouvez le concept narcissique? Ça l'est. Huard parle de lui, de ses qualités, de ses défauts, de ses rapports avec sa fille, avec sa blonde Véronique Cloutier. Il est aussi question de son ex, Linda Lemay.

En somme, de tout ce qui a défrayé les manchettes des journaux à potins à la suite de sa rupture avec la chanteuse, mais également de ses préoccupations "d'homme blanc dans la trentaine," à savoir: l'argent, les relations de couple, la paternité, la mort, la sexualité, la spiritualité.

Mais attention, dans cet environnement de tôle et de nuit, le propos qu'il veut "honnête" tient davantage de l'habile provocation que de la confiance! Un peu à la manière d'Yvon Deschamps, Huard manœuvre de telle sorte qu'on n'arrive plus à distinguer les opinions auxquelles il adhère de celles qui servent à mettre en relief la bêtise humaine. Du début à la fin du spectacle, on a droit à un humour grinçant, "rock-'n'-roll," voire déstabilisant, et surtout à une redoutable performance d'acteur.

MORT DE RIRE?

Même si on ne rit pas toujours de bon cœur en entendant les énormités proférées par l'humoriste, dont ces nombreux clichés éculés (mais combien persistants) notamment sur les femmes, les "fifs", les gros, les B.S., qui donnent parfois lieu à certaines blagues faciles et vulgaires, on est néanmoins conquis par son audace. À mon avis, le clou de la soirée, le numéro le plus tordant et le plus brillant, c'est celui sur la mort.

Huard révèle la terreur que lui inspire la grande

Faucheuse, qui frappe indifféremment, sans justice et sans discernement. Mais, à bien y réfléchir, combien plus abominable encore serait-elle s'il nous incombait la tâche de... choisir la prochaine victime? Dans la même veine, il incarne ensuite un personnage condamné par le cancer, un ami qui, parce qu'il va mourir, en profite (c'est le moins qu'on puisse dire!) pour obtenir des faveurs, dont cinq minutes dans le show. Odieux et totalement hilarant!

Et puisqu'il en est question dans son spectacle: oui, la soirée vaut largement le prix du billet. On en ressort peut-être confusément complice ou indigné, mais il n'en demeure pas moins qu'on est littéralement suspendu aux lèvres de l'humoriste pendant les quelque deux heures et demie que dure ce show qui, assurément, ne laissera personne indifférent. Au Vieux Clocher de Sherbrooke, jusqu'au 2 septembre.

books From novels and biographies to cookbooks and beyond, there's nothing like a good read

Settling old scores a little boring

Ravelstein

by Saul Bellow

In fiction, truth and honesty are not the same thing. The truth is relevant to a novel for its fictional tangents, many of which prove more authentic than actual fact. While Saul Bellow has used his own life fictionally to great effect in books like More Die of Heartbreak and The Dean's December, the Nobel prize-winner's latest book, Ravelstein, is crushed under the burden of real life.

Still, there is much to admire in Ravelstein, the story of Chick and his best friend Abe Ravelstein, a professor of political philosophy - a large man with expansive tastes.

Tired of hearing of his friend Abe's attempts to live beyond his means, Chick suggests that his friend, a well-respected academic, put his knowledge into a book. The book makes Ravelstein a millionaire and he delights in spending money on the finer things in life - suits by Lanvin, neckties by Hermes and Ermenegildo Zegna, linens by Pratesi, meals taken in Paris at the Lucas-Carton and a stay at the famous Crillon in Paris (at the same time as Michael Jackson and his entourage).

Though the author has much fun with Michael Jackson and his friend's preposterous fame, he is more serious about Ravelstein, a professor who's made millions lecturing on Plato and Socrates.

The references to the high life become monotonous after a while, though touches like Abe's atrocious table manners at the home of a snobby Jew-hating couple and some of the banter between the two men works.

Where the book really falls down is in settling scores. Bellow himself was married to a well-respected mathematician hailing from Eastern Europe. Some of the parts of the book characterizing Chick's marriage to the beautiful work-obsessed, ex-wife 'chaos physicist' hailing from Eastern Europe read more like "things I forgot to tell her as she was going out the door" than as fiction designed to illuminate the human condition.

Strangely touching is the scene when Chick comes upon his ex-wife Vela marking their separate possessions with coloured squares and triangles.

Though people are inordinately petty in real life, the whole Vela-Ravelstein dislike appears foolish and a little boring.

Ravelstein later ups the ante, telling Chick that Prof. Radu Griesescu, the husband-in-a-couple with whom Vela likes to spend time, is a Nazi, using Chick for credibility. At this point, one expects Vela to enter on a broomstick wearing a pointy hat.

There are certainly enough opportunities on which to build a plot. Ravelstein is stricken with AIDS. Chick struggles to write Ravelstein's posthumous biography and gets deathly ill on a trip with his new wife to the Caribbean. Perhaps more time should have been devoted to Ravelstein and Chick and not to settling old scores.

Natural home remedies book covers a lot of ground

Everywoman's Guide to Natural Home Remedies

by Sally Freeman

In the laboratory, popular folk remedies are undergoing scientific scrutiny. Do the natural chemicals in garlic, certain culinary seasonings, or chicken soup actually have medicinal properties?

"Some of America's leading university research laboratories have confirmed that they do. The newest unit of the National Institutes of Health, the Office of Alternative Therapies, is one of the major research groups investigating folk medicine along with alternative therapies that include yoga, acupuncture, acupressure, vitamin therapy, and Ayurvedic medicine."

Sally Freeman's updated and revised book about natural home remedies covers a lot of ground: she has separate chapters on the reproductive system, the digestive and urinary systems, the cardiovascular system, the respiratory system, and more.

In only 271 pages, however, there is not enough room for more than a very general explanation of the major problems. Freeman attempts to go through the causes of specific ailments and then explain medical and herbal remedies from around the world.

For example, there are five pages devoted to menopause, explaining how problems associated with this complaint depends on the individual and how a woman can take care of herself physically and emotionally. Hot flashes and night sweats are discussed, and various practical suggestions-such as getting enough exercise and proper nutrition, and herbal remedies - alfalfa seeds steeped in boiling water with lemon - are offered.

Freeman also includes some interesting anecdotes about herbal remedies. For instance, during World War Two it was observed that pilots who snacked on bilberry jam were more successful at hitting targets at night than other pilots. Bilberry is a European berry similar to the blueberry, but with a different chemical composition.

The many benefits of garlic are described - a raw clove tucked in your cheek can prevent a cold, and it also good relieves both diarrhea and constipation.

The chapter entitled Emergencies is one of the best quick-reference guides in the book. An ice pack on bee stings reduces pain and swelling, and baking soda neutralizes the acidic bee serum, soothes the sting, and draws out the stinger. First-degree burns can be nursed with the gel from an aloe plant, and the burn can be soothed by applying cold water, not ice, at ten-minute intervals.

In Russia, honey is applied to the burned area, and St. John's wort oil has been found to heal first-degree burns in 48 hours in a clinical study. Eye injuries, fainting, nosebleeds, poison ivy, splinters and more are discussed in the emergencies section.

The book contains good resources and a bibliography, as well as an index and an herbal reference that lets you quickly find the benefits of certain herbs.

In her introduction, Freeman warns readers that they should see their physician if their symptoms persist and to read labels carefully on herbal products. There is some useful and interesting information about herbs in the book, but it is too general to be an authoritative reference on the subject.

Gross commands the stage

Reviewed by Sunil Mahtani
STRATFORD, ONT.

The Stratford Festival production commanding the most attention this season from both audiences and the media is clearly Hamlet, due to the casting of Canadian heartthrob Paul Gross in the lead role. It is the play and the actor most frequently discussed at Stratford this year, and the number one question posed by all is: Is Constable Fraser of TV's Due South any good as Shakespeare's tragic hero?

The answer: Yes, and that is a most pleasant surprise.

Stratford's artistic director Richard Monette wasn't taking any commercial risks by casting Gross as Hamlet. He knew it would be boffo box office playing host to one of Canada's few Hollywood-style stars and would also bring in the younger audiences all theatres covet.

However, Monette was taking an artistic risk by placing the credibility of a Stratford Shakespearean production squarely on the shoulders of a hunky TV actor. If Gross couldn't handle it, he wouldn't be blamed - Monette and the festival would be targeted.

Monette must have known something others didn't. Gross is a sensitive, thoughtful actor who tackles the most difficult role in the English language with verve and gusto. His gamble on Gross has paid off in spades.

Any actor playing the Prince of Denmark must prove his mettle within the first few minutes of his appearance in a very difficult scene in which Hamlet is mourning the loss of his father. If audiences don't buy the actor's grief, the entire performance is threatened. Gross pulls off this difficult scene well, arriving on stage subtly, almost imperceptibly, then slowly building his performance and taking over the stage.

Gross has remarkable presence. Towering above the rest of the cast, he has the stature and the regal handsomeness that serves this princely role well.

Gross and director Joseph Ziegler have created a Hamlet that is a departure from the one most often seen. Gross plays him as a much younger man and with a sense of humour. This paints the role far differently than most productions, but it doesn't take away from the power of the play. This Hamlet is not as sombre or as brooding as most, and that makes him far more accessible to audiences.

It is an interpretation clearly designed for Gross and it works. Here, the choices made by Ziegler and Gross reveal a Hamlet that, although deeply disturbed by the death of his father, the king, the speedy remarriage of his mother to his uncle, and ghostly visions of his father telling him he was murdered by said uncle, is not going mad. When Hamlet produces the play-within-a-play recreating the death of his father to reveal the guilt of his uncle, he is ecstatic when it produces the results he's after. This gives him some comfort, some lucidity.

The tragedy is somehow even greater as we see a Hamlet that seems to be gaining some control in his life, yet must inevitably die due to the desires and actions of those around him. The interpretation pays a certain respect to the character that is not always clear in productions of this play.

CYLLA VON TIEDEMANN

Paul Gross as Hamlet... actor tackles the role with gusto.

The heightened level of humour may be held up to criticism, but it does not detract from the play. This Hamlet is by no means a comedy. It is still the story of a disillusioned man who is suffering, but by playing him as a younger man, Hamlet's journey is slightly different, his reactions slightly different. Gross may have less angst than older Hamlets, but his is a valid interpretation that works.

Gross is aided by a competent supporting cast, including Benedict Campbell as a suitably stoic Claudius; Domini Blythe as the cool Gertrude; and Juan Chioran, who excels in three roles - the Ghost of Hamlet's father, an actor who plays the King in the impromptu play and a gravedigger.

Designer Christina Poddubiuk's Gothic arches, and costumes featuring frock coats, ruffled shirts and boots for men, elegant Empire gowns and bonnets for women, evoke the production's post-Napoleonic setting very well.

By taking on the role of Hamlet at Stratford, Gross is among a prestigious group of actors one wouldn't normally associate him with: Christopher Plummer, Kenneth Welsh, Brent Carver and Colm Feore have all played the role here. By holding his own in arguably the most challenging role in the English language and creating a performance that works, the actor making his Stratford debut can hold his head high among that elite group, proving to audiences and critics there's more to Paul Gross than previously thought.

Style in the 90s

TV DATA

In the 1990s, fashion became entertainment. The media suddenly started paying as much - or more - attention to the private lives of people named Naomi, Linda and Gianni as they did to Michelle, Julia and Arnold. So "Celebrity, Sex & Style in the '90s" is as appropriate a way as any to describe the documentary special Fashion: The Last Decade, airing Saturday, Aug. 12, on CBC Newsworld. But there's a more complex story to tell than just the glitz and glamour of the industry. The Last Decade delves deeper and puts the industry in the context of its times. Tim Blanks, who wrote and hosted the special, characterizes the decade as "a bit of a conundrum." As host of Newsworld's weekly Fashion File series and fashion editor for Toronto Life magazine for most of the 1990s, Blanks has had a front-row seat to what often looked like the greatest show on Earth. On one hand, he says, "the biggest trend of the decade was minimalism, and that reflected a very conscious effort to reject the values of the '80s. ... A lot of the decade, people were keen on paring their lives down, and fashion's appetite for minimalism definitely reflected that. In the '90s, fashion tried to turn its back on the Greed Decade. The '80s were maximalism; the '90s were minimalism." At the same time, Blanks points out, fashion was usurping the role traditionally played by movies. During the Depression, Hollywood provided an escape with its glamorous, aloof and mysterious demigods. In the '90s - when movie stars always seemed to come clad in sweat suits and backward baseball caps - the supermodels, such as Canada's Linda Evangelista (pictured), took over.
