Resolution Passed To Borrow Up To $75,000 For Town Operation

Huntingdon Town Council met at the County Building, on Monday evening with all members present.

Following the reading of the minutes and passing a number of bills for payment, Miss Tessier complained to the council of the state of the area where she resides in the west end of town. It was stated that the water is not draining away there on account of the fact that certain ditches have been filled in and the water cannot get away. Alderman Picard suggested that a ditch be made and a catch basin be installed. The council as a whole decided that the Health Unit be asked to have an inspection made of the area and of the houses to find out if they were all in a sanitary condition. A committee of the council would also visit the district to see if all the houses were on proper foundations and report back at the next meeting.

Albert Varin asked that he be issued with a building permit. Alderman Walsh reported that he had already given him a permit, but that he had instructed him not to proceed with building until he had examined the laws of the Town in that regard. Varin reported that the house was almost completed. Council admonishd Varin for proceeding without proper permission and also because the building does not conform with the laws in that regard. He was ordered to place a foundation under the building and this he promised to do in about three months time.

Mr. Vachon, who operates a business on Bouchette Street, appeared before the council to complain he was charged too much for Business Tax. The total tax amounted to $90 which covered a second hand store and a restaurant. After some discussion, council decided to give him a credit of $25.00.

A number of taxi owners appeared before the council to complain of the Provincial Transport Bus going around town picking up passengers. They said that if the bus company was not paying tax to the town, then the bus should only be allowed to stop at one point in town and not go around the town. The previous council had granted permission to the company to do this, but the taxi owners felt it deprived them of business which they should have as taxpayers.

Council decided to have a letter sent to the Provincial Transport Company informing them to discontinue their pick-up route in town and to have one point only for future pick-up.

Complaint was also registered that some cars were being used as taxis in town and from out of town points and no taxi license was being paid. The council said that if some specific case could be reported to the police, charges would be laid. It was promised that the police would be informed and that they had been informed before.

A resolution was passed to borrow up to $75,000 for current expenses until taxes had been collected. $40,000 of this is earmarked to pay off the outstanding loan at the bank and to put the town in good standing. The other $35,000 would be used as and if required.

A petition was presented, signed by residents of Wellington St. between Dalhousie and Cemetery Streets, requesting that Wellington Street be kept residential. The question of a work shop on this street is the main consideration. The council are to check on the matter and study the by-law with respect to the question.

Godfrey Leduc came to the council to request water for a house he intends to build on Centre Street, Huntingdon. The sewer runs on the street, but no water is laid on it. He intends to build several houses. The matter was discussed but was finally left until an adjourned meeting for further consideration.

Tenders for the removal of garbage were received and opened. There were three tenders as follows: Jack Welburn, $5,500; F. J. O'Connor, $5,250; R. Taillefer, $7,000, all on an annual basis.

The present cost to the town is about $4,500. It was felt that without garbage collection the town would only need one truck and could also do with two less men. By these savings to put the garbage collection out on contract would mean a saving to the town. It was decided to think the matter over and study all the points and report further at the adjourned meeting on April 20th.

A considerable discussion took place on water and water pressure. It would appear that the pressure in Garden City is still not what is required. It was better when the pipes were cleaned out last summer, for awhile, but since that time it has not been so good. It had been suggested that the mains be washed out in order to get rid of the coating on the pipes. It was stated that it was doubtful if this would be a remedy, it may only improve the situation for a time. A reserve supply of water was thought to be the really true solution, but how to get it and the cost involved is a matter for considerable investigation. The subject was left for further study.

S. Welburn Has Broken Leg In Car Accident

An accident occurred on the Gore Road, about 5.15 p.m. on Saturday, April 4th, which resulted in injuries to Stanley Welburn of Rockburn. Mr. Welburn was proceeding east along the Gore Road and was going over a hill in his truck. Another car owned by Roderick Soulier, Athelstan, was backing out of Mr. Viau's driveway, when he noticed the truck coming over the hill. He drove his car forward into the lane again. The truck cut off to the left and hit a soft shoulder in the road which caused it to go into the ditch. It hit three trees and the last one dead centre, making the truck a total wreck. Mr. Welburn had one leg broken and was taken first to the Huntingdon County Hospital and then transferred to the Montreal General, by ambulance. Const. Goyette and Hirsch investigated the accident. No damage resulted to the Soulier car.

HMS Britannia Will Be Moored At Valleyfield, Night June 26

When the sleek, blue hull of Her Majesty's Yacht "Britannia" cuts through the waters of the St. Lawrence Seaway this summer, she will have already logged over 100,000 miles and sailed most of the sea lanes of the world in the service of the present Royal Family.

But this trip, up the mighty river, through the Great Lakes and deep into the heart of the North American continent, will be the first time, as far as can be determined, that the Yacht has cruised in fresh waters.

From the time the Royal Party boards the ship at Seven Islands, Que., on June 20 until they disembark at Port Arthur and Fort William on July 9, she will have added to her proud record by sailing an indirect route of over 3,000 statute miles through the world's longest inland waterway.

During the course of the "Britannia's" progress up the St. Lawrence Seaway System, the Yacht will spend one night moored in the Beauharnois Canal. The ship is expected to arrive at dusk on the evening of June 26th. On board will be Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh, with Dwight D. Eisenhower, President of the United States. Mr. Eisenhower will leave the yacht at Valleyfield, and will return to R.C.A.F. St. Hubert Airfield from whence he will fly to Massena, N.Y. At 6 a.m., June 27th, the "Britannia" will leave Valleyfield and steam towards Cornwall, and on through the Seaway to Brockville, Kingston and Toronto, where the Royal Party will disembark on Monday, June 29.

At Windsor, on July 3, the Royal Cruise will continue to Sarnia, Georgian Bay, Chicago, Sault Ste. Marie and the twin cities of Port Arthur and Fort William.

Accompanying the yacht "Britannia" through the Seaway will be a number of Royal Canadian Navy War Ships and boats of the R.C.M.P.

While Her Majesty and The Duke of Edinburgh continue their tour by air and rail, the Yacht will make her return passage through the Seaway and, on Tuesday, July 28, again pick up her Royal passengers at Shediac, N.B., for calls to Charlottetown, P.E.I., and Cape Breton N.S.

The Queen and Prince Philip will leave the ship at Sydney on Friday, July 31, to fly to Halifax. The following day, their official duties completed, they will re-embark on "Britannia" for a restful voyage home.

Nearly All Staff Vacancies Accounted For

The School Commissioners of Huntingdon High School met in the High School on Thursday evening with all members present except Commissioner McIntosh.

Following the reading of the minutes and passing a number of bills for payment, the inspector's report was read. This expressed satisfaction of the operation of the school, especially in view of the disruption caused by the building going on. The report mentions that the school will have more accommodation, but not too much classroom space due to more classes per grade.

Several items and changes and extras in the electrical contract were discussed and the extra costs were quoted. The Board decided on what it felt was required and ordered these to be proceeded with.

Further payments on the account of the contractor and architect were ordered made, according to a schedule.

Mrs. M. Duke was appointed deputy examiner for the period when the annual examinations will take place in the school.

Several applications for positions of teachers were discussed and some will be asked to consider joining the school staff. A number have already been engaged and almost all the vacancies have now been filled.

The meeting adjourned to the call of the chair.

The Health Of Children Looked After In Britain

Better social and environmental conditions, higher living standards, better and freely available health services have wrought a great improvement in the health and physique of Britain's children.

Compared with 50 years ago, children of today are taller and heavier and they mature earlier. In urban areas, where the increases have been greater than in rural areas, both boys and girls are 2-3 inches taller at the age of 5, and 2-4 inches taller at the ages of 8 and 12. At 5, boys are 4-6 pounds heavier than formerly, and 7½-9 pounds heavier at the age of 12; similar increases in weight are recorded for girls. The increase in size is common to all social classes, but differences between children of middle and lower income groups have diminished considerably. The average weight of a 14-year-old boy in a poor district of Sheffield in 1956 was 27 pounds more than the average weight of all 14-year-old Sheffield boys in 1920.

There has been a massive reduction in the death rates from the more common infectious diseases, other than poliomyelitis. Acute rheumatism is no longer a scourge: rickets, for all practical purposes, is non-existent, and tuberculosis has almost ceased to be a cause of deformity of bone and joints. Accidents are now the chief cause of death for children.

There has been a steep fall in recent years in the number of debilitated and undernourished boys and girls: only 1.72 per cent was found to be in an unsatisfactory general condition in 1957. The problem of obesity in children is now attracting at least as much attention as undernutrition.

The School Health Service

A notable part in this improvement has been played by the School Health Service, established in 1908. It has continued to operate since the establishment of the National Health Service because the State recognises that special medical care, both preventive and curative, is essential to the welfare of growing children, and that a separate Service is the best means of providing it. Therefore, although the School Health Service has been closely co-ordinated with the National Health Service (and parents are quite free to use the latter on behalf of their children), it continues as a separate entity organised by the local education authorities and designed to develop and maintain the physical and mental well-being of children who are being educated at publicly maintained schools. All the medical and dental services provided through the School Health Service are free of charge to parents.

Through the Service, every child attending a publicly maintained school undergoes a number of general medical and dental inspections during his school career and such other inspections as are found to be necessary or advisable. Minor ailments are normally dealt with by the school nurses under the general supervision of the school doctors. Children found at periodic medical inspections to need detailed investigation, or whose parents require further advice about care or management, are invited to attend clinics where

Canada Makes Record Sales To India

India climbed to fifth place among Canada's leading importers last year, with purchases totalling $79 million, from eighteenth in 1957 when Canadian imports were valued at $29 million. This record figure was approached only once before, in 1949, when our sales to this country reached $72.6 million. The highest recorded total before the last war was $12 million in 1928.

The explanation of this startling change, given in "Foreign Trade" by B. A. Macdonald, Commercial Counsellor in New Delhi, is of course the very large shipment of Canadian wheat to India in 1958: in round figures, 25 million bushels valued at $40 million. Part of this wheat was given to India under the Colombo Plan or other aid programs to help overcome the serious food shortage of 1957. But the greater part was actually purchased by the Indian Government on long-credit terms on which it pays interest.

A good share — perhaps $15 million — of Canada's $79 million exports represented capital goods. It incuded highly manufactured materials and technical equipment for the Canada-India hydro-electric project at Kundah in Madras State and for the Canada-India atomic reactor at Trombay, near Bombay, and essential raw materials such as aluminum ingot and rod, copper and nickel made available to India under the Colombo Plan. Purely commercial shipments in 1958 were probably valued at about $25 million, says Mr. Macdonald.

Do You Agree?

Much has been said about the "small farmer". Who is he? The following is a definition we heard the other day. "The small farmer is one who through the consequences of size, type and situation of holding on which he works, is unable to secure a reasonable living." Do you agree?? Furthermore, a "Reasonable living" is likewise interpreted in the same issue as, "Remunerative employment capable of yielding a net income broadly equivalent to the average earning of a skilled farm worker." Do you agree?

Canada Buys More U. K. Products In '58

Britain sold more to Canada during 1958 — a year when our imports from the United States and other Commonwealth countries declined, W. Gibson-Smith, Commercial Secretary in London points out in the latest issue of "Foreign Trade". The U.K.'s gains in this market, he reports, no doubt stem in part from the interest stirred up by the visit of the Canadian Trade Mission to Britain in 1957 and the visit here last year of a U.K. trade delegation.

Canadian imports from the U.K. increased by about 1 per cent in 1958, rising from $522 million in 1957 to approximately $527 million — in contrast to the drop of approximately $430 million (10.7 per cent) in our imports from the U.S. British products which made major gains were automobiles and parts, agricultural and animal products, aircraft, aircraft engines and parts, radio appartus, other machinery and diesel engines.

The current trend here seems to be to import truck parts and engines (diesel and otherwise) from Commonwealth countries rather than from the United States. This trend is partly due to Canadian and U.S. firms establishing plants to make these products in the United Kingdom, in order to have a base of operations in the sterling area and thus reap the advantage of tariff preferences.

A Dairy Farmer Meditates

I long for a cow of modern make,
That milks five days for leisure's sake,
That sleeps on Saturday, snores on Sunday,
And starts again afresh on Monday.

I wish for a herd that knows the way
To wash each other day by day,
That never bothers to excite us,
With chills or fever or mastitis.

I sigh for a new and better breed,
That takes less grooming and less feed,
That has the reason, wit and wisdom,
To use the seat and flushing system.

I pray each week-end, long and clear,
Less work to do from year to year,
And cows that reach production's peak,
All in a five-day working week.

I look for officials, by the mob,
To guide the farmers at their job,
And show these stupid breeders how,
To propagate a five-day cow.

About Style In Writing

Some people think that style is like the geometer's "straight line", which is not anything anyone has ever seen. In fact it is not a line at all, but simply the straightness of a line.

Others believe that style can be seen and developed. They say it is a pattern in words expressing some idea of the writer's mind within a beautiful fabric.

We all know that some writers have the ability to beautify the commonplace and to illumine the dingy and the sordid. Cardinal Newman summed up this talent in his essay on style: "The Art of Letters is the method by which a writer brings out in words, worthy of his subject, and sufficient for his readers, the thoughts which impress him."

It is a counsel of despair to maintain that we are incapable of adding dignity, distinction and a certain allure to what we write. Writing is not a hallowed mystery, remote and secret. The ability to express ourselves is not a frill for the edges of life, but an indispensable tool of our self-understanding, our understanding of others, and our rational contact with the world around us.

It is a great tragedy that many men and women with valuable thoughts, yes, even with sublime ideas, have failed to develop skill in communicating them to others.

Someone brought "style" out of the clouds of uncertainty by listing its elements under five headings: economy, simplicity, sequence, climax and variety. A letter or a book checked by these points is fairly likely to be a good piece of communication, and these are virtues that can be developed.

An obvious striving after style, whether of the rough, tough sort or the polished, brittle kind, is ridiculous. Writing should be simple and natural, not insipid but sinewy, not brief for the sake of brevity, but compressed for the sake of intelligibility, not dainty, but definite and brisk. The writer must sit firmly in the saddle, guiding his mount.

The need for style

It is not enough, if a writer wishes to stir people's minds, to put down facts as he would note on a blueprint the particulars about an engineering project. An executive may know his business inside out, but he needs also to be able to convey his ideas about it to his people in such a way as to win the response he desires.

'A certain unaffected neatness and grace of diction are required of any writer merely as a matter of courtesy. But a genuine style is the living body of thought, not a costume put on for a special occasion. One doesn't need the verbal music of Shakespeare, but one must be able to make a pattern out of a muddle and build up a certain unity of matter and manner.

A genuine style is the expression of the writer's mind. Great writers do not aim at style for its own sake. They are inspired by their subject, and this inspiration shows itself in their words. They do not leave us in doubt about their topic: Macbeth is about ambition, Othello is about jealousy, Timon of Athens is about money, and King Lear is about renunciation. The style fits the subject, and it is only by being wilfully blind that one can fail to understand what Shakespeare is saying.

What is the nature of your subject? What impression do you wish to convey about it? Is your writing designed to entertain, inform, teach, sell or condole? Is it designed to be appreciated universally, by a certain class, by your superiors or subordinates, by your family?

The personality of the writer's style will reflect itself through the way in which he handles his subject with the purpose he has in mind. The resulting letter or article or book will show the writer's personal sense of the facts he sets down.

Perhaps you like Gertrude Stein's style: many people do. She wrote in "What is Poetry?": "One of the things that is a very interesting thing to know is how you are feeling inside you to the words that are coming out to be outside of you."

An individual style is impossible to the writer who takes his material from books straight to his fingertips without undergoing examination in his head. Such a product has no more individuality than a plaster cast of a cast, and not nearly the same perfection.

Brightening the subject

Style should be used to brighten the intelligibility of a subject which is obscure. It joins the instructive with the agreeable. It avoids monotony. It uses ornament where ornament will be effective and is redundant if repetition will make a point.

If one is to say something significant he must rise above the sheer enumeration of first order facts. Writing is wearisome without contrast and without development of a thought. A white canvas cannot produce an effect of sunshine; the painter must darken it in some places before he can make it look luminous in others. Sir Joshua Reynolds, the great portrait painter of the eighteenth century, said, when someone asked him how he could bear to paint the ugly cocked hats, bonnets and wigs of his time: "They all have light and shadow."

What is the application of this principle of art to writing a letter? It lies in this: we need to set off our facts by feelings and our feelings by facts; we need to introduce an occasional irrelevancy, perhaps, to lighten the letter, to add artistic piquancy.

When we follow this course we make our writing easy to read. The force of all verbal forms and arrangements is great in proportion as the mental effort they demand from the reader is small.

Some people confuse economy of language with abruptness, and simplicity of expression with the fatuous. We need to use the fewest number of words and the simplest form of composition to secure the full effect we desire, but this purpose also requires that we use enough words and give sufficiently detailed explanations to enable our readers to grasp our ideas. It is the needlessness of words and superfluous complexity that ruin style.

The audience must be considered. Some ideas cannot be conveyed in a way that would be in-more time can be given to them. Consultative and specialist services are also provided at these clinics, usually by arrangement with the National Health Service Fully qualified speech therapists are employed to treat speech defects.

The Health of Children

Child guidance clinics for the treatment of maladjusted children are provided by most local education authorities under the Service and also by many large hospitals and a few voluntary organisations. There are about 300 clinics in England and Wales, though not all are full-time. The service is being extended as rapidly as circumstances permit. Child guidance clinics are normally staffed by teams consisting of a psychiatrist, an educational psychologist and psychiatric social workers.

Handicapped Children

It is normally through examinations carried out in the School Health Service that local education authorities become aware of children suffering from disabilities of mind or body which necessitate special educational treatment. This may be given in the ordinary schools, or in special schools for those children who are more seriously handicapped.

Special schools exist for the following 10 categories of handicapped pupils: blind; partially sighted; deaf; partially deaf; educationally subnormal; epileptic; maladjusted; physically handicapped; pupils suffering from speech defects; delicate. There are day and boarding special schools for children in each category, except that blind children, on account of their small numbers, must always be boarders.

Local education authorities are also responsible for providing education for children undergoing treatment in hospital. Either a hospital special school is established or individual tuition is given, dependent upon the number of child patients in a particular hospital and the length of their stay. Home teaching is available for severely handicapped children who on account of their disability are unable to attend any kind of shool.

All forms of special educational treatment provided by local education authorities are free of cost to the parents.

Dewittville

Women's Institute Meeting—

DEWITTVILLE—On Thursday night, April 2nd, the Q.W.I. enjoyed a visit to the National Office of the Canadian Landrace Association, and study of Mr. Gordon Green, Magazine Editor of the Family Herald and "The Macdonald Farm Journal, Ormstown, Que.

Mrs. Otto Bulow introduced Mr. Green. This being Library Week, he spoke on this subject, and also briefly on Agriculture and the need of more beef cattle, in order to supply enough meat for the increasing population of Canada.

Mrs. Cameron Bryson thanked Mr. Green for his interesting talk.

Refreshments were served by Mrs. Archie MacIntosh and Mrs. Rolland Greenbank, assisted by Mrs. Gordon Green.

DEWITTVILLE — On March 26th a meeting of the Dewittville W.C.T.U. was held at the home of Mrs. F. W. Martin in Ormstown. The treasurer reported a balance of $32.97 on hand.

This being our Annual meeting the President, Secretary, Treasurer and Superintendents gave their reports.

A County Life membership pin was presented to Mrs. Irwin Todd by three of the members. This was pinned on by her mother, Mrs. Allan Ritchie. The Clip Sheet taken up was entitled "A Look at the Past: Our Pioneers". The hostess served a delicious salad tea and a social half-hour was enjoyed.

Rockburn

ROCKBURN — Dr. and Mrs. A. S. Reid, spent the long Easter week-end in Montreal the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Smith.

Guests for Easter of Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Douglas, were Corp. and Mrs. R. Douglas and son Daryl of Longueuil, Mr. and Mrs. R. Wilson and son of Ormstown and Mr. and Mrs. L. Carter and sons of Merrill, N.Y.

We are glad to see that work is started on the new home, Mr. Maurice Maither is planning to build.

Groceries?

Just as "All that glitters is not gold", neither can we say that everything in the present day grocery basket can be classified as groceries. As a matter of fact, marketing specialists of the Co-operative Extension Service of the United States, report that today's housewives buy many things that are billed to the food budget that would cause more than indigestion, if ever they found their way to the master's table. As a matter of fact, these specialists tell us that, on the average, 15 cents out of every dollar spent in the modern groceteria, goes for non-edible products. What do housewives, (and their shopper-husbands) buy with this 15% portion of the grocery budget? Things like pet foods, tobacco products household supplies, health and beauty aids, housewares, magazines, phonograph records, toys, and even small hardware items. Shopping centres realize this, and they are broadening the selection of these non-edible items on their shelves, items that used to be found only in the hardware, or drug stores. When housewives balance their budgets at the end of the week, how many times have they complained about the high costs of food, when in most cases, a large percentage of the money went for household supplies, and not for foodstuffs at all?

About Style In Writing

telligible to all persons who can read, but the writing should be simple enough for the rank of intelligence expected of the probable readers. Many authors believe that if they express themselves in such a way as to be simple enough for ordinary minds they are also appealing to a more astute or specialized reader because he will recognize the reason for simplicity and will admire the clarity of expression.

Simplicity, paradoxically, is the outward sign of depth of thought. The writer who presents his ideas in the form of parable and symbol, using commonplace words, is avoiding more showy qualities in an effort to make his meanings clear. He has made a disciplined selection and ordering of his material in advance of composition.

The nature of the subject-matter must be given more than a passing glance. We speak of various types of style, like narrative style, historical style, or an argumentative style. In all these, the style is the expression of a kind of thought, level with the subject and adequate to it. When a writer's power is fully developed in keeping with his expanded intellect, he may write in all styles, changing with the character of his subject, detecting the fitness of certain verbal arrangements for certain kinds of thought, achieving harmony between matter and expression.

No one expects to write rainbows into a business letter, but if the manager of a complaints department is writing to a distressed woman about her dissatisfaction with goods or services, he will not fob her off with the foggy-formal diction of a rubber-stamp letter, nor will he use the icy-sharp sentences of an inter-office memo.

Style is not artificial

Having a style of writing is not to write stylishly, to try to please by novelty. The use of unusual phrases and little known words displays only a childish liking for tinsel.

It is not worth while to reach the picturesque or the poignant at the cost of being unnatural. If the language used is discordant to the position of the writer or to his topic, readers will laugh or fall asleep.

Imitation of another writer's style is dangerous. It is like wearing a mask. It gives rise to a feeling of insincerity. It does not show a fine sense of style but the vulgar instinct to display.

Many essayists have written about style, and most of them agree in placing sincerity first in importance. "If you wish me to weep, you yourself must feel grief," said Horace in his Art of Poetry.

There are certain elements of composition which need to be mastered as a dancer learns her steps, but the style of the writer, like the grace of the dancer springs from a deeper source. Style must be genuine: the expression of the author's mind.

Out of sincerity, out of being brave enough to express himself in his own way, following the moods of his mind: out of these come simplicity, sequence, and variety, and style becomes the dress of the writer's thoughts.

Nothing is so forcible as truth plainly told. On the other hand, we might write a poem made up of lines that sound prettily on the tongue, but so insipid as not to linger a moment in memory.

About developing style

Good prose is suitable to its environment of place, time and occasion; it is suited to the nature of its writer, the sort of topic, and the character of the person to whom it is addressed. The style in which it is written is not designed to make us see the writer, but his subject and thoughts.

Prose does not with to compete with poetry. Prose will not turn away from rhythm if rhythm is necessary to its purpose, but it will seek rather a modulated utterance, a medium between prose and poetry. It will seek to be lucid and easy, but when opportunity offers it will also be graceful, witty, pathetic or imaginative. It may attain these qualities by being casual, colloquial and personal; by avoiding blaring trumpets and the mouthings of actors striving to make points.

The elements of prose style can be developed, as everyone can testify of his own experience. We can learn to use proper words in proper places. We can learn to use right phrases in the right way.

Let us repeat, in different words, a definition of style, so as to assure ourselves that style may be developed. Style is exactness, saying what one believes and means. Surely this can be learned. Style is related to fitting what is written to the apprehension and need of the reader. Undoubtedly, this can be developed. Style is the expression of the writer's personality. Who will deny that this can be improved?

A. J. Cronin, author of Keys of the Kingdom, The Citadel, and many other works, had no knowledge of style or form, no idea of technique, when he started his first novel. He found it difficult to express himself. He struggled for hours over a paragraph. "A sudden desolation struck me like an avalanche," he writes of this period. "I decided to abandon the whole thing." Cronin threw away his manuscript, and then, shamed by a Scottish crofter, he dug his papers out of the ash can, dried them in the oven, and went doggedly to work. In three months of what he calls "ferocious effort" he finished his novel Hatter's Castle, of which millions of copies were sold.

Some things, like the dates in history can be learned by repeating them, but style is not like that. It has to be appraised with sensibility and then practised.

This is a painstaking quest. Our pens will sometimes be at fault for a while, no matter how accomplished we are. We will pause, rewrite, and amend before we are satisfied that our language has done justice to what we have in our minds to express. Genius takes pains, improves by practice, suffers failures, succeeds often on a second or third try. Plato, it is said, wrote the introduction to his Republic seven times over in different ways.

Waiting upon inspiration is a snare. The crests of great composition rise only upon the back of constant work and effort.

This work consists not alone in pounding typewriter keys or scratching with a pen. It entails reading and re-reading what one has written — reading it aloud to get the ear-feeling of it. It means a continuing course of self criticism: have I said what I am trying to say? have I used words that really express it? are my images, parables or metaphors the best possible? have I said anything that is unavoidably ugly or too long?

The writer will, in his re-reading, harden his heart to his felicitous phrases and his smoothly-flowing paragraphs. He will be alert to censure spiritless sentences, condemn what is rugged and mishapen, draw a line through what is incorrect factually, lop off redundant words and phrases while preserving the virtues of repetition, remove distracting ornament, rearrange what is expressed ambiguously, and throw light upon the parts that are difficult to understand. One needs the sort of hard-hearted determination voiced by Ovid when he said "When I re-read I blush, for even I perceive enough that ought to be erased, though it was I who wrote the stuff."

Words and sentences

The person seeking to develop style in writing doubtless knows enough about the elements of grammar so that he need not become wrapped up in the grammatical niceties of his manuscript. He will not become so immersed in words that he is like the laboratory worker who comes to love the guinea pigs for themselves, not for the knowledge they give.

If a writer pauses to wrestle with the choosing of a handful of words he dams up the flow of his ideas. When he lets himself go he will find his mind calling upon his total life experience, spin-drifting back into past ages for an illuminating incident, calling upon everyday events for a parallel, and rocketing into space where all art lines converge to provide an angle. No person more than a writer needs so much to see things as a little child, exciting because looked at as new, wonderful because of what imagination can do with them.

Diction is the choice of words, and its problems are not the exclusive preserve of inexperienced writers. These problems are quite normal, and their solution is part of the process of all careful writing. The expert writer, however confidently he may dash off sentences and paragraphs, is always acutely conscious of selecting and rejecting words a hundred times in the course of writing a letter or a report. He will have at his hand for reference such a book as A Dictionary of English Synonyms, by Richard Soule (McClelland and Stewart, Limited, Toronto).

No hard and fast rule demands that we use short words exclusively. One good reason for short words is their greater impact. "Stop" is much more emphatic than "desist." But there are times when the short word does not convey the strength of a longer word: for example, "nasty" is not so effective as "disgusting."

The emphasis of a sentence lies not in its length but in it shortness. There is a narcotic effect in long-spun sentences. They demand an effort of memory, because we have to hold on to the statement in the first phrase until we reach the point in the final phrase.

However, we must not conclude that simple sentences are always best. The reader's pleasure must be catered to, and he will not be pleased by a style which always leaps and never flows. A judicious mixture is called for, so that the drowsy monotony of long sentences is broken by the occasional use of a short, sharp sentence which revives drooping attention.

True and false brevity

True brevity of expression consists in saying only what is worth saying, and in avoiding tedious detail about things. We are indulging in the meanest sort of style when we spin out thoughts to the greatest possible length. Brevity does not mean saying less than occasion demands, but not saying more.

The limit to be placed on a piece of writing is not necessarily an arbitrary restriction of the number of words. The answers to these questions are the real determinants of length: is it all necessary to my purpose? does it sustain interest throughout? A style that takes note of these criteria has common sense as well as art on its side.

About writing letters

Business mail is often depressing, needlessly so. People do not write as they think, but as they think business expects them to write.

Good style in business letters follows in general the suggestions for effective style in other sorts of writing. A beneficial approach would be this: banish the fear of appearing too simple. It is merely a stodgy fear of being different that holds many men back from following their quite sensible impulse to write clearly, colourfully and even dramatically when the occasion warrants it.

The letter which gives us greatest pleasure in the reading is one that seems to be part of a talk between intimates. The writer is not trying to dazzle us, but is paying us such attention that we know the occasion of the letter is important to him and to us. He has thought through the subject before starting to dictate, so that he does not waste our time with non-essentials, but he is colloquial enough to be friendly. He has seasoned his message with the salt of his personality.

If the writer of a letter has knowledge, intelligence and discernment he can make the most commonplace things interesting. He does not use a pompous introduction, but hastens on to the event. He visualizes situations so that they interest the reader. He uses active verbs to attain a lively style: instead of "it is believed" he says "I believe"; instead of "it appears to be desirable" he says "we want". He closes vigorously, not with an artificial paragraph of friendly expression, as it were tagged on like an afterthought.

Summing up

What is style? A practical look at the problem gives us every reason to believe that if we have achieved individual expression, brevity, directness, lucidity, some adventurousness of idea and phrase, we need not pine timidly over some mystery called "style": we have it. But it is proper always to be striving to reach an ideal, little by little.

To write well is no gift of the angels, nor is it the outcome of striving audaciously to be different. The first thing demanded of the literary craftsman is that he be clear: then follow eloquence and harmony.

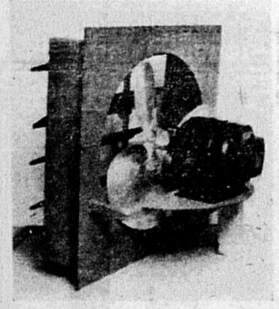

It is well,, in these days, to recall the old civilities, and apply them to our writing. The traditional values still are worth clinging to in a society that has been made uneasy about the civilization it has created. Business men may find constructive assurance when their correspondence shows that there is still a part of society unstained by deviltry, unravaged by destruction, and bearing gifts of real friendship.

But style is only for those who believe in what they write. It cannot enable shadows to become other than shapelss conceptions.

Madame de Sévigné, a master of style in her own world of the seventeenth century and still a model worthy of study, wrote to her daughter: "Never forsake what is natural. You have moulded yourself in that vein, and this produces a perfect style."

Shun artifices and tricks and fashions. Gain the tone of ease, plainness and self-respect. Speak frankly what you have thought out in your own brain and have felt within you. This, and this alone, creates a perfect style, as she says who wrote the most exquisite letters the world has known.

Calgary Artist Is Prospector In North Areas

CALGARY, (CP) — Mrs. Barbara Dale is equally at home with her easel, or prospecting in northern bush country.

She has worked in a Vancouver drugstore dispensing drugs, operated an interior decorating and antique shop in Victoria and travelled through northern B.C., Alberta and the North-west Territories prospecting.

"Prospecting is the life for me," the energetic brunette said. "There is nothing like it."

"It is the element of chance which makes it so fascinating. My husband, Ronald, who is a prospector for Noranda Mines, and myself have made money this way — but we have sunk a lot into the ground too."

Fought Fire

One exciting experience was when she was faced with the prospect of fighting a forest fire. Directly in its path, she and her husband helped fight it for a week.

"People in the north see things differently," she said. "They are interested in one thing — survival — not keeping up with the Joneses."

She says they have used every means of travel from husky dogs and snowshoes to horses and foot. "One can travel a good 12 miles a day on foot."

When Mr. Dale, an active prospector, is travelling his wife settles down in a city or town, preferably close to where he is working, and checks claims and prepares for the next trip.

"We live for the summer when we can once again prospect. As soon as we get enough money for the trip and the season is right, we pick our spot and go," said Mrs. Hale.

"HAVE YOU TRIED O'Keefe ALE?"

O'Keefe ALE

All over Huntingdon district you'll see a big change .... to O'Keefe Ale. A lot of people wanted an ale that was mild .... and O'Keefe Ale gave them the natural mildness they have been looking for! How about you? You'll never know how good ale can be unless you try it, so next time, why not ask for a mild O'Keefe Ale?

THE O'KEEFE MILDNESS SECRET

Ever bitten into a grape seed? It's bitter, unpleasant. Grape growers found by experiment that they could develop seedless grapes with nothing to spoil the delicate flavour.

Ordinary hops contain seeds which give an unpleasant bitterness to ale. But O'Keefe master brewers insist on costlier "Seedless Hops". There's no unpleasant bitterness, just the right natural mild flavour.

Editorial Notes

Radioactive Fallout

THE seriousness of radioactive fallout from tests of nuclear weapons has been a matter for discussion of recent weeks and it has been said that many things have been contaminated, but not too seriously at present. Among the points where tests have been made, is Quebec, and it has been found that there is considerable radioactive fallout in evidence.

In the recent fringing of the world with a radioactive ring, it was noted that at the poles, there was less density than at other points. It was also noted that many more points were evidencing the fallout.

An independent survey indicates that the radioactive strontium-90 content of milk tends on the whole to be greater in the Northern United States than in the south. The tests, including Quebec City and Winnipeg as well as 48 American cities, were conducted by the Consumers Union of the United States, a non-profit organization which publishes the monthly magazine "Consumer Reports". Strontium-90 is a product of nuclear tests, returning to earth as fallout with potential dangers to the health of the present and future generations. This is the report in the March issue of the magazine.

In its tests of samples collected in July and August, 1958, CU found that the strontium-90 in the milk supplies of several cities was about twice the average of others. The seven cities were, in order, New Orleans, Bismarck, N.D., Boston, Pittsburgh, Memphis, Tenn., Quebec and Chicago. The count ranged from 15.6 strontium units in New Orleans down to 12.6 in Chicago, with Quebec being second last on the list with 13.6. There is "incontrovertible evidence" that the radioactive content of milk has been increasing since 1954. Consumer Reports says, estimating that about 80 per cent "of the minute quantity which enters our bodies comes to us in our milk". "Unpolished or whole wheat, unfiltered rain water and similar items of diet such as vegetables, may also contribute a significant amount of strontium-90."

It would be as foolish to stop drinking milk says the magazine, as to refuse an x-ray examination for a broken limb. Much research is now going on but investigation of the unknown factors is urgently needed. Practical measures to reduce the absorption of strontium-90 from the soil and to eliminate it from milk are being studied. It is the diplomat who holds the key to the solution of the base problem: cessation of nuclear explosions in the atmosphere.

Science does still not know the answers to a variety of uncertain factors. Each nuclear test adds to the dangers. If there never are any more explosions, the fallout from tests already made will reach a maximum about 1970, rising 2½ or three times its present value, and then will decline slowly for a generation or two.

This newspaper has been convinced for many years now, that these nuclear tests have been responsible for the many strange changes experienced in weather in different parts of the world. This latest series of survey would seem to indicate, that changes are not immediate, but take a period of time to come about.

The Newfoundland Situation

THE situation with regard to Newfoundland and the Federal Government is another of those peculiar affairs which are actually hard to know who is right. The whole thing developed from a strike of loggers and with which Premier Smallwood did not agree. As Premier of the Province, Mr. Smallwood together with his government is responsible for the law and order. He took some rather drastic measures to ensure this keeping of law and order and it required that the R.C. M.P. which is policing the province, to take stern measures. The whole thing to the person outside looking in, is quite complicated and much of it does not make sense.

Everyone was happy when Newfoundland decided to join with Canada and there is no doubt but that Newfoundland benefited by so doing and in a number of ways. Previously this area had looked to England for guidance and assistance. This at times did not prove wholly satisfactory and there were a number of disputes. Today Newfoundland is enjoying all benefits allowed to Canadians in any part of this country. The biggest resentment at the present time, is Prime Minister Diefenbaker's announcement of not renewing certain financial agreements at an expiry date in a few years time. Premier Smallwood has therefore invoked a campaign against the P.C. Government and is trying to discredit the present officials. A big noise was made when it became known that reinforcements for the R.C.M.P. in the Newfoundland strike trouble had been refused. Much more seems to have been made of this issue than it actually warranted. It is something that might have happened in any of the provinces where the R.C.M.P. are doing the policing. The searchlight has now been turned from this situation to that of the one to do with finances. This is, at this time, a long range controversy and much could happen in the interim which could change the decision now made.

While the situation is embarrassing to the present government, it has an element of childishness. Having been frustrated at one turn, pettishness causes the so-called injured parties to seek new disagreements.

One thing which may come of the situation, is to show that the Unions will have to watch their step in bringing on strikes and resorting to violence. Premier Smallwood took a step which required courage and having a new union set up to bargain for the workers. Greater recourse to sterner measures in some of these strikes, might be more beneficial in the long run for the general economy of the country. It is hard to say what the real outcome will be in Newfoundland, for there is still a state of uncertainty all around. Certainly disagreement between Provincial and the Federal Government is not an ideal situation and the sooner the matters are straightened out, the better for all concerned.

Personal Challenge

CANADIAN Library Week, April 12-18 may be the most personally provocative "week" set aside so far. It challenges each of us to read more, and to read more widely.

Canada, it seems, isn't a reading nation; we don't overwork our public library facilities and we're not overloaded with bookshops.

Generally, however, the supply of reading material isn't so much in question as is the demand. Once past the demands of teachers and professors, we read by choice and, generally speaking, we can choose what we read.

The fact that a group of Canadians believe we are not using our freedom to read and are alarmed enough to sponsor a Library Week should prompt some serious thinking.

To ignore the pleasure and profit caught between book covers is like boarding up all the windows of your house, shutting out past and present and refusing to attempt to shed any light on the future.

Prose and poetry can provide entertainment, information, stimulation and meaning to an individual caught up in the complexities of life. Well-chosen reading can lead us to both know and feel more purpose in living and widen our boundaries of understanding. Reading can shake us out of dangerous complacency; it can fill out the hollow man.

Ignorance is blinding, and freedom — a never anchored thing — must be used and preserved to push back ignorance. We are free to read. We cannot afford to be a nation of non-readers.

It was not much of a dinner that Maggie cooked, for she boiled the potatoes without salt and fried the pork to a crisp. It did not matter, however, for of the three the father was the only one who had an appetite, and he did not complain. When done, he left to resume his task, and the young couple were alone. At supper he was told all, when he quietly rose, gripped Morton by the hand and said nothing. Next day the two sons arrived, and, on learning the news, by way of congratulation, slapped Maggie on the back until she declared it was sore. There were long discussions over Morton's plans. He told them he had obtained promotion after Lundy's Lane, and, as captain, his commission was worth a good deal; he would sell it and then, as a retired officer, he would be entitled to a grant of land in Upper Canada. He proposed they should all leave and go with him. To this father and sons were much inclined, for the fact that the place they occupied was subject to seigniorial rent they did not like. In addition, the sons knew that, as discharged militiamen, they could claim lots wherever Morton might go. It was arranged Morton should go to Quebec, sell his commission, and by the time he returned they would be ready to join him.

Four days aufter he had left, Maggie received a letter from him, enclosing one from Mrs. Scott. He said he found that Colonel Scott had arrived at Montreal, and after winding up some ordnance business there, meant to sail for England with the Fall Fleet. Mrs. Scott sent a pressing invitation to Maggie to come and stay with her until Morton returned from Quebec. Maggie went, expecting to stay ten days or so, but her visit lengthened out to the end of August. They were happy weeks, spent in enjoyable society and in the delightful task of the preparation that is the prelude to a happy marriage. Morton at last got back, and had not merely the money obtained for his commission, but a patent for a large tract of land on the shore of Lake Ontario, obtained by him in an interview with the gallant Gordon Drummond, his old commander. Leaving Maggie at Montreal, he went again to the Chateauguay to tell all was ready. While there, he took a run up to Four Corners, in order to visit the poor widow whose only son had been slain in the skirmish that led to his imprisonment. He found her, and not only made sure she would be cared for but instituted steps to secure her a pension, for congress was considering the question of relief to those who had suffered by the war. During his stay at Four Corners, he lived with Mr. Douglas, and repaid with earnest gratitude the advances he had made him while living in misery in the stable, which sad abode he looked into and thanked God. That other widow, the mother of the cavalryman killed at Crysler, he had written before leaving Niagara, and received a grateful reply. On the morning after his return from Four Corners everything was ready for the final leaving of the home on the Chateauguay. The three canoes that were to convey them and their belongings, were waiting when the old man was missed. Morton, guessing where he was, went to seek for him, and found him kneeling by the grave of his wife. Reverently approaching, he whispered the boatmen were anxious to start, assisted him to rise, and, leaning heavily on his arm led him to the canoe where he was to sit. One last look at the shanty his hands had built and the fields they had cleared, and a bend in the river shut them out from his sight forever. Resuming his wonted contented cheerfulness, he adapted himself to the change, and rose still higher in Morton's esteem. When they reached the Basin, the wind was favorable for the boat that was about to leave on her trip to Lachine, and there they arrived late in the evening. The following morning Morton left for Montreal with Mr. Forsyth, the sons remaining to stow away their outfit in the Upper Canada bateau, which done, they also journeyed to the same place. That evening there was a quiet little party at Colonel Scott's quarters, and next morning a large assemblage, for every officer off duty in the town was present, to see the army chaplain unite the happy pair. When all was over and Maggie had gone to dress for the journey, Morton received congratulations that he knew were sincere. "Why", said Major Fitzjames, "she is fit to be a Duchess".

"She is fit for a more difficult position", interjected Colonel Scott; "she has a mother-wit that stands her well alike in the circles of polished society and in the hour of danger and hardship".

"Who is this that is such a paragon?" asked Mrs. Scott, who had just come in.

"Mrs. Morton".

"Oh, say she is a true woman, and you say all. Mr. Morton you have got a treasure".

"I know it", he replied, "and I will try to be worthy of her. She will be the benediction of the life I owe her".

The day was fine and, for a wonder, the road was good, so that a large party, many of them on horseback, escorted the newly married pair to Lachine. As they drove past King's Posts Morton recalled his first visit to it, the spy, and all the painful complications that had ensued, and now so happily ended. As they stood on the narrow deck of the bateau, and the wind, filling the huge sail, bore them away, a cheer rose, led by Colonel Scott. It was answered from the receding boat and Maggie waved her handkerchief.

The journey was tedious and toilsome, but when they sailed into the bay on which Morton's land was situated, saw its quality and fine situation, they felt they had been rewarded for coming so far. That Maggie proved an admirable help-mate need hardly be told, but what was remarkable is, that Morton became a successful farmer. Willing to put his hand to whatever there was to do, under his father-in-law's direction, he quickly became proficient, and when there was work to be done

The Week At Ottawa

OTTAWA. (CP). — Canada's complex freight rate structure is to be studied by a royal commission for the second time in 10 years.

The new commission will handle the federal government's promised long-range inquiry into freight rates. Prime Minister Diefenbaker said he is confident that this ponderous job can be completed within a year.

Previously cabinet ministers had said the inquiry would be aimed at redressing freight-rate discrimination against the Atlantic and Western provinces.

Meanwhile, the government intends to block any further general rate boosts until it gets the commission's recommendations.

As a temporary stop-gap, a one-year subsidy of $20,000,000 to the railways will be provided in a bill expected to come before the Commons shortly. This subsidy is designed to soften the impact of the 17-per-cent rate increase that went into effect Dec. 1.

The last royal commission on transportation was appointed in 1948 and completed its work in 1951. It was headed by Hon. W. F. A. Turgeon, then Canadian ambassador to Eire. Legislation resulting from that report has not yet become fully effective.

The Turgeon commission's major recommendation was for equalization of freight rates in Canada. The board of transport commissioners has been working steadily ever since to set up such a system.

Diefenbaker-Smallwood

When provincial premiers visit Ottawa it is usual for them to get together, if only briefly, with the prime minister — just as a courtesy visit. Premier Smallwood of Newfoundland announced last week that his plans for a stop in the capital didn't include talking with Mr. Diefenbaker.

Instead, Mr. Smallwood said he will leave Newfoundland's case in Ottawa — a case including the loggers' strike, court appointments and federal grants—to W. L. Browne, the province's representative in the cabinet, and James A. McGrath, Conservative member of the Commons for St. John's East.

Thus, Mr. Smallwood didn't leave any doubt about his feelings toward the federal government. During the loggers' strike and Ottawa's withdrawal of RC MP reinforcements, he had indicated he felt both men should resign for supporting the government's stand.

Meanwhile, the reinforcements issue has landed in Exchequer Court. Newfoundland has decided to sue the federal government for unstated damages for what it calls breach of contract in refusing to send reinforcements to help police the strike last month. It was for this reason that RC MP commissioner L. H. Nicholson resigned.

At St. John's, the 10th anniversary of Newfoundland's entry into confederation passed without flag-waving last week. "We have been bitterly hurt by the lack of understanding we have received from the rest of Canada," Premier Smallwood told guests at a dinner in his honor.

Royal Tour

Officials have started a dry run of this summer's Royal Tour of Canada.

Esmond Butler, the Canadian who became the first person from outside the United Kingdom to be called to the Buckingham Palace staff, has begun a 10-day trip along the 12,0000-mile route to be followed by Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip.

When he returns to London, Mr. Butler will advise the Queen of preparation made for the six-week tour, and receive any suggestions for changes.

There are about 85 stopping places on the itinerary. Objective of the dry run is to assure that planned programs follow the tour themes of informality, of letting the public see their monarch, and of making the tour as restful and interesting as possible for the royal party.

Russian Plan

Transport department officials are expressing deep interest in Russia's plan to make its already-active Arctic shipping lanes a communications lifeline between the Soviet and the Far East.

The seven-year Russian program, announced recently, would include more icebreakers, more stout Arctic shipping, more aids to navigation and stepped-up research into ice, currents and weather.

Behind the move is the fact that it is 5,800 miles from Murmansk to Vladivostok by the northern sea route. By the Suez, it is 12,380 miles. One-third of Russia, including regions now under intense development, lies north of the Arctic circle.

The world's first nuclear-powered icebreaker, the Lenin, will operate this year as the flagship of the Soviet Arctic fleet. Russia also is building several 26,000-horsepower icebreakers. Canada's biggest icebreaker is the d'Iberville, of 14,000 horsepower.

Prison Overcrowding

Canadian penitentiaries already are jammed beyond capacity. There now are about 6,000 convicts within walls originally intended to hold about 4,500.

This prison population could increase substantially — perhaps by 3,000 or more — when the federal government eventually takes over responsibility for all offenders sentenced to a year or more. It now accommodates those serving terms of two years and up.

To attempt to find some answer to this problem, the justice department's three-man penal reform committee has gone to Europe in search of ideas that Canada might use. Members will visit Belgium, Holland, Sweden, Norway, France, Denmark, Switzerland and possibly West Germany.

The committee already has visited the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and Ontario to determine what penitentiary changes will be necessary. It will tour Western Canada later.

The Week In Quebec

Quebec (CP). — Some 125 badminton players from Canada, the United States, Indonesia, Thailand and Malaya left Quebec City this week after competing in the 32nd. Canadian Badminton championships that ended March 28th.

Foreign players, showing consistent skill and stamina throughout the four-day tournament, won all the top honors.

Only four Canadian players managed to reach the finals and they were knocked off without much trouble by a powerful five-man contingent from Asia and a small group of Americans headed by the Devlin sisters of Baltimore.

In the Junior Section, a closed affair for players under 19, all the honors went west and British Columbia won the Ontario trophy, emblematic of the Junior Team Championship.

For the first time in the history of the tournament a major title went to the Maritimes as Bev Piers of Halifax and Bud McKnight of Moncton won the senior men's — over 40 — doubles crown by beating Mac Tessier and Jacques Turcot of Quebec 11-15, 15-7, 15-5.

This minister of finance says —

"Yes, we can afford it!"

Mother's decision has not been arrived at lightly. Her peek into her purse is anything but casual—for as family minister of finance she is also keeper of the budget. She weighs every important purchase carefully, because she has a dozen places to put every dollar . . . and only so many dollars.

The same problem — a dozen places for every dollar — is a familiar one to the Minister of Finance at Ottawa. His budget is around six billion dollars. This very large sum of money is spent through various government departments.

It's no secret how the Minister of Finance obtains this money. He gets it largely in taxes from millions of Canadians like you. If he spends more than he gets from you, he must turn around and borrow from you the amount he has overspent . . . or else create new money.

The creation of new money is one factor that leads to inflation — when the dollar buys less and less. So, as a thrifty Canadian, you are wise to ask government only for those services you are willing to pay for . . . with taxes.

Personally you try to pay as you go, to live within your income. It's important that government try to do the same thing.

You want to live well now and to realize all your ambitions for the best possible future. That future is tied up with a sound dollar — a dollar whose purchasing power you can depend on.

A SOUND DOLLAR MEANS A BETTER LIFE FOR YOU

THE FIGHT AGAINST INFLATION NEEDS YOUR ACTIVE SUPPORT

Obituary

The Late Janet Glen Elliot

In the early hours of Thursday morning, March 26th, Janet Glen (always known as Jessie) Elliot slept peacefully away at the Charron Nursing Home in Huntingdon. She was in her 90th year.

Janet Glen Elliot was a daughter of the late Robert Elliot and his wife Applinea Tait and was the youngest of eleven children. All her brothers and sisters had predeceased her, but she is survived by numerous nephews and nieces of three generations.

She was born at "Lark Hall", Fertile Creek, May 20, 1869 and the greater part of her life was spent there. For some years she had lived in Montreal and during the past ten years, in gradually failing health, she had made her home with Mrs. Wm. Hamilton in Ormstown. Only a month ago, due to the illness of Mrs. Hamilton, she had been removed to Huntingdon.

She had been a life-long member of Georgetown Presbyterian Church, and in former years was an active member of their W.M.S. Rev. W. G. Brown, Minister of Georgetown Church conducted the funeral service which was held at McGerrigle's Parlours in Ormstown on Saturday afternoon, March 28th, a large number of relatives and friends being in attendance. Beautiful floral tributes covered the casket. Pall bearers were Alfred Greig, Andrew Glen, Robert Merson, William Duncan, George Cooper, and George Graham. Burial was in Georgetown Cemetery.

Canadian Garden Service

There Is Plenty Of Time

A lot of seeds and efforts are wasted by starting gardening too soon. Most things will not make any growth and some will die if planted before soil and air really start to turn warmer. One should be very sure the soil is in condition to work too. If it packs or is muddy, it is not dry enough. Even if we are a bit late in starting it is amazing how later plantings tend to catch up to the cold-retarded things we may have planted weeks earlier. There is another most important point to consider. Many people, before they gain garden skill, are inclined to start too early and to stop too soon. If we want a succession of garden fresh vegetables, just at their best, and a long season display of flowers, then we must spread out the sowing of seed.

Experienced Canadian gardeners in most parts of the country, make a regular practice of making several plantings two or three weeks apart, of their main flowers and vegetables. In this way they have something right at its best from early summer until fall frosts take over.

Grow Your Own Vitamins

Most people grow vegetables because they like to eat them and get them while they are really fresh and crisp. But there are valuable vitamins in them too. Lettuce, for instance, and especially leaf lettuce which is more exposed to the sun than the other kinds, is high in vitamin A. Carrots will supply the same vitamin and for a longer period as this vegetable of course will keep well in storage. For vitamins B and B2 as well as A, kale is highly recommended. It contains about twice as much vitamin as ordinary cabbage and it is easier to grow. For the highly prized vitamin C nothing is better than a fresh tomato. The season can be greatly extended by planting an early, a medium, and a late sort.

Birds Are Allies

On balance, birds to far more good in the garden than any possible harm. They help keep down bugs and eat weed seeds, and they are beautiful and interesting to have around. Shrubs and trees, bird houses, feeding stations and watering or bathing pools, all will help to bring wrens and orioles and robins. But we can do more than this. There are certain bright flowers that have a special appeal for humming birds. There are all sorts of shrubs with bright and edible fruit or seeds that will invite cardinals. There are others that are particularly attractive for the goldfinch. It pays well to study the special likes of the birds, to plant things that will produce food and shelter in winter as well as in summer.

An Herb Garden

Practically all the common herbs can be grown in the Canadian garden and usually in the poorest part of it provided it gets full sun.

Grown as annuals, unless they are taken in for the winter, are rosemary, tarragon and sweet marjoram and dill. Truly perennial are thyme, sage, chives, the mints (apple, orange, peppermint and spearmint) and lovage. Parsley is perennial, but the finest flavour comes from plants that are started every season. Soak the seed overnight to hasten germination.

Tarragon, however, must be started from root cuttings and so usually are chive plants which as well as being used to flavour salads are decorative, disease-free and do not need watering. Mints need a moist spot.

Rows Save Space And Time

Even indoors in a seed flat or pot in which seedlings are started, it is a good idea to sow the seeds in distinct rows. The reason? It is easier to tell seeding flowers from seedling weeds. If a plant isn't in the row it's a weed. And rows make cultivating very much easier.

Beothuks Now Extinct

An interesting primitive Indian Tribe of Newfoundland, now extinct, is mentioned in the Book of Knowledge. They were the Beothuks, first encountered by Cabot in 1497. The last known tribe member died in 1829.

AUBREY-RIVERFIELD — The W.I. meeting was held at Mrs. Andrew Allen's on Friday, April 3rd, at 2 p.m. Motion by Mrs. Janet Reddick seconded by Mrs. Finlay Milne that a life member be made in the near future.

Highlights were read from the Provincial Semi-Annual Board Meeting minutes by the Secretary. The Secretary was instructed to write a letter to the Salvation Army asking them to send a truck to Aubrey-Riverfield to pick up discarded articles sometime in May.

Current events: Agriculture: How a compost box may be built in the corner of the garden. One hundred packages of seeds have been received to be distributed to the school children. Citizenship: Friendship letters, Shake hands with friends across the sea with pen and ink. Express feelings on paper. Education: Extract from Dr. Dunton. Improvement needed for Canadian education. There is more money spent on luxuries than education. Home Economics: An article read on the W.I. National office with Mrs. Taylor the first National Secretary.

Publicity: A new stamp to be issued May 13th to commemorate a world wide organization of 6,000,000 rural women.

An agriculture quiz was conducted by Mrs. Harold Robertson. High score winners were Mrs. R. W. Templeton, Mrs. Burton Reddick, Mrs. Gordon Easton, Mrs. Roy Angell. Low score Mrs. W. G. Allen, Mrs. Lloyd Allen.

Pot holders and rack donated by Mrs. Lozoff were drawn and won by Mrs. Andrew Allen.

Mrs. Burton Reddick introduced the guest speaker Mr. R. Reid, Hemmingford. Mr. Reid gave an informative talk on new types of bulbs such as snow crocus, baby iris and multi-floral hyacinths, the planting and care of them. Garden soil and compost, ways of restoring depleted elements in soil. Ways to treat tomatoes and prevent rot, also how to prevent woody brown centres in turnips. Companion cropping such as corn and vines, combinations with lettuce, radishes and onions. Soaking gladioli to prevent thrip and spraying young plants with D.D.T.

Mr. Reid told of how to make a self watering window box for either inside or outdoors.

Mrs. R. W. Templeton thanked Mr. Reid. Mrs. Osborne Orr read a poem, Thoughts for the New Year.

Hostesses were Mrs. A. A. Allen, Mrs. W. G. Allen, Mrs. Hiram Reddick, Mrs. H. Angell.

The Akita C.G.I.T. group held a successful tea in Riverfield, on Tuesday, March 31st, at 2 p.m.. The program was held in the Church.

The President, Barbara Ness expressed the regret that one of their leaders Mrs. Keith Robb was a patient in the Barrie Memorial Hospital but it was the wish of everyone that she would soon be well and home again. Barbara Ness introduced the guest speaker Miss Margaret Quigley, Prov. Secretary. Miss Quigley gave a splendid message with thoughts on Easter, also telling what C.G.I.T. stands for, explaining the pledge, mentioning what one expects of a girl in C.G.I.T. uniform. Miss Quigley explained the difference between body and soul, the body is like a frame wherein is inclosed the soul. Outward appearance may change, but it is the soul within that tells our character. The girls dressed in C.G.I.T. uniform very efficiently served afternoon tea to 63 ladies under the supervision of their leader Mrs. Ken Lyall.

Mrs. Lyall thanked the ladies for their kindness in coming out to help the girls, as the proceeds from this will swell the funds and help to send some girls to camp.

Hemlock

he did not say to his helpers "Go", but "Come", and set them an example of cheerful and persevering exertion. Having land and enough to spare, he induced a good class of immigrants to buy from him, so that before twenty years, his settlement was known as the most prosperous on Lake Ontario. Influential and public-spirited, Morton, as his circumstances grew easy and did not exact the same close attention to his personal affairs, took a leading part in laying the commercial and political foundations of Upper Canada, and Maggie was widely known in its best society. That they were a happy couple everybody knew, and their descendants are among the most prominent subjects of the Dominion.

Mr. Cyr was reported taken to hospital in serious condition. One child, Solange, 2, was rescued and apparently is not injured.

Workers employed by the Foundation Construction Company for the construction of grain elevators at Baie-des-Anglais near Baie-Comeau have voted 43 to 24 in favor of membership in a union affiliated with the Canadian and Catholic Federation of Labor.

There were 102 workers eligible to vote. Twenty-nine ballots, 27 in favor of the CCCL union and the other two in favor of a rival CLC union, were annulled.

Official name of the Union will be Le Syndicat de la Construction (The Construction Syndicate).

Construction work at Baie-des-Anglais started March 5. Eventually some 500 to 600 workers will be employed on the project.

Provincial Secretary Yves Prevost announced the winners of three 1958 contests sponsored by the Provincial Government in fields of literature and science.

A third period six-goal storm from the Ottawa-Hull Junior Canadiens downed wearying Quebec Baronets 6-0 in Memorial Cup hockey play here this week. The game opened a best-of-three Eastern Semi-Final Series. The second game was scheduled to be played in Hull Sunday and the third if necessary, Monday, also in Hull. Winner of the series will meet the Ontario Hockey Association Junior A champ for the right to represent the East in the Memorial Cup Final.

Sports Camera

During the recent Stanley Cup semi-final playoff round between Boston Bruins and Toronto Maple Leafs, news stories made brief mention of the fact that both teams flew between Boston and Toronto.

Readers probably took that for granted. In today's jet-age, thousands of people, including National Hockey League teams, use planes for transportation purpose.

It wasn't always so with teams competing for the Stanley Cup, one of the oldest trophies in sport.

Probably the longest and most exhausting itinerary in the old mug's history was completed in 1905 when Dawson City Klondikers travelled nearly 4,400 miles from the gold-centre to Ottawa to challenge the fabulous Silver Seven for the cup which Lord Stanley donated in 1893 at a cost of $48.67.

How the Klondikers went to the Capital, part way by dog sled is recalled in Jack Sullivan's official Stanley Cup record book, published last year.

"They were a bunch of rollicking customers from all parts of Canada who had been lured by the smell of gold. Strong, wiry, confident young men . . . who had played hockey and then prevailed upon Colonel Joe Boyle, a rich prospector, to angel them for their crack at Ottawa.

"The Colonel, though he wasn't convinced they were good, promised them some money. They left Dawson City on the afternoon of Dec. 9, 1904, running behind dog teams and waving to the gay crowds lining the route."

Struggling Journey

The editors of Sullivan's Stanley Cup annual went to the Ottawa Journal to dig up what the writers of that era said about the trip:

"They covered 46 miles their first day, 41 the second. The third day saw them struggling along to cover 36 miles and some of them suffered with blistered feet . . . The mercury went down 20 degrees below zero during that trip from Dawson City to Skagway where they missed boat connections by two hours and had to fret at the dockside for five days. They went to Seattle and then Vancouver where they headed East by train."

"Unperturbed by all this hardship, The Klondikers arrived in Ottawa amid great fanfare on Jan. 12, 1905," the annual says.

The trip, as far as the Klondickers' hopes for a Cup championship were concerned, was in vain. Silver Seven, in the midst of a three-year reign as Cup champions, defeated the less experienced Dawson City team 9-2 in the first game of the best-of-three series.

The second game was no contest at all. With one-eyed Frank McGee on a scoring rampage, Ottawa massacred the Klondikers 23-2. McGee who scored 59 goals in 19 Stanley Cup games, rammed in 14 during that game. It's a record which still stands.

"Thus it was recorded in Stanley Cup history that the team that travelled the farthest to win the silver grail, was also the team that took the worst beating," the record book adds.

Here Are A Few Notes On Baseball

Any baseball fan can tell you the number of home runs Mickey Mantle belted last year or the salary of Ted Williams. But can he tell you who wore the first baseball glove? Or what player was the first to catch a ball dropped from the Washington Monument?

Statistics will be flying thick and fast now that the baseball season is here. But for those who really want to impress their wives or girl friends, here are some baseball firsts, compiled by the research department of The World Book of Encyclopedia.

The first clash between a player and his archenemy — the umpire — occurred June 19, 1846, when the Knickerbocker Club of New York played the New York Baseball Club at Elysian Fields in Hoboken, N.J. A player named Davis was fined six cents for cussing. The umpire was Alexander Cartwright, a leading player for the Knicks, who had chosen to umpire instead.

That game was also the first instance of team baseball as we know it. The New York club won 23 to 1 after four innings.

The Knickerbocker Club, formed in 1845, was the first regular baseball organization. And in their third season, the members donned blue and white uniforms to become the first team uniformly outfitted.

A breach of baseball etiquette made Al Reach the first paid ball player. In 1864, it was considered unethical for a player to "jump" from one team to another. Reach, however, deserted the Brooklyn Atlantics when he was offered money by the Philadelphia Athletics.

Five years later, the Cincinnati Red Stockings turned professional and became the first salaried team.

In those days, baseball was far from the gentlemanly game the Knickerbockers had played. A player might leave the field bleeding or unconscious after stopping a fast ball, but he refused to baby himself by wearing protective equipment.

In 1875, however, Charles Waite, first baseman for Boston, put on a glove — flesh-colored, so the fans wouldn't notice it. A. G. Spalding finally wore a dark brown glove, adding stuffing to it a little at a time.

The first catcher's mask was developed in 1878 for a Harvard player who preferred being called a sissy to have his fine Barrymore profile smashed.

Still wondering about the Washington Monument? Well, Billy "Pop" Schriver of a Chicago ball club caught a ball dropped from the 500-foot level of the memorial in 1892.

Just a grandstander, but... that's baseball.

What To Do If Fire Breaks Out

A leading cause of the more than 500 death by fire which occur in Canada annually is ignorance of what to do when fire breaks out, according to the All Canada Insurance Federation.

Officials of the Federation, which represents more than 200 fire, automobile and casualty insurance companies, said some form of detection and alarm is of the utmost importance if fire breaks out. They recommended the following measures:—

1) Know the location of your nearest fire alarm box, and how to operate it.

2) Keep the telehone number of the fire department near the telephone at all times.

3) Know how to use a fire extinguisher—and keep at least one in the house at all times.

4) Never delay in turning in a fire alarm; it is the first few minutes that count most.

5) All windows and doors, except those used for escape, should be closed at first sign of fire.

6) If smoke is smelled, even though no fire is seen, report to fire department immediately.

7) In cold weather, don't stop to dress children before getting them out of the house; wrap them quickly in a blanket if necessary.

8) Make sure there is at least one exit in case of fire that is not bolted or barred by boxes or furniture.

9) Leave baby sitters with complete instructions on what to do if fire breaks out.

Teatime Topics

A revolution round the wash tub has taken place in Canada in a few years. The days of scrubbing away at clothes for hours have given way to automatic washers and driers, and time once spent at the ironing board can be diverted to something else while clothes drip themselves dry.

These scrub-board changes have led to a few discoveries by technicians testing equipment.

Did you know that water temperature should not exceed 100 degrees Fahrenheit? Too much heat, say the experts, can set stubborn wrinkles in "easy-care" garments. Use your elbows as a thermometer — the water should feel lukewarm.

Adding more detergent than is necessary won't make laundry any cleaner. In fact, too much suds reduces rather than improves washing action. About one tablespoonful of detergent per article is best when washing by hand, and about a tablespoon and a half for every four-pound load being put through the machine.

After hanging the garments to dry, fasten the top buttons of shirts and blouses. Drip-dry garments should be removed from the wash when they are still dripping wet. Hang them up, close the top buttons when the garments are almost dry, finger-press all collars, lapels, creases and pleats.

"Automatic wash and wear" garments can be put through an automatic washer, dried in a modern home drier and be ready for wear with little, if any, touch-up ironing.

"Wash and wear" defines garments which can be worn repeatedly, washed and worn again with little or no ironing. After washing they retain intended creases or pleats.

"Easy care" clothes usually need some ironing.

Fruit Dumplings

Fruit becomes infrequent in the winter months unless an effort is made to include it in menus. Here is a recipe for peach-raspberry dumplings which meets winter's requirements of being hot.

To make the dough you need two cups of pastry flour, four teaspoons of baking powder, a half-teaspoon of salt, a tablespoon of sugar, a half-cup of shortening and a half cup of milk.

Mix and sift flour, salt, baking powder and sugar. Cut in shortening with pastry blender or two knives. Add milk. Stir only until flour is moistened. Roll to quarter-inch thickness. Cut dough into six squares.

For the filling: two 20-ounce cans of drained peaches, six teaspoons of raspberry jam, a few grains of nutmeg, two teaspoons of grated lemon rind.

Place a peach half, cut side up, in the centre of each square and fill the cavity with raspberry jam. Top with a second peach half and sprinkle with nutmeg and lemon rind. Moisten edges of dough and draw around peach, pinching opposite corners together at the top. Place on a greased baking sheet. Bake in a moderate oven. Serve with cream or peach juice.

Imagine going to a party at a house without furniture. It does sound madcap, but Ottawa hostess Aidrie Cruikshank has a reputation for throwing some of the Capital's most interesting and original parties.

Besides, there was a reason for the lack of furniture—the Cruikshanks were leaving the city after a 10-year stay. The furniture was gone, but the party went on.

Diplomats, cabinet ministers and other Ottawans were among the 200 people who sat on stair steps, boxes or just stood around having a gay time.

Part of the moving-day party was food, of course, and this time friends came laden.

Mrs. Cruikshank, an attractive woman full of vitality and ideas, has a party philosophy that goes like this:

"I just try to give a new and funny twist to parties. Anything to take the stuffiness out of them."

Most guests say they love Mrs Cruikshank's parties, but would not have the nerve to follow her example.

Pembroke, a lumber centre about 100 miles northwest of the capital, is the new home for Mrs. Crulkshank, who once gave a luncheon for Mrs. John Diefenbaker, wife of the prime minister and persuaded all her friends to come dressed as butlers and maids.

Natural Look

Paris designers this year have been criticized for a lack of originality — their styles have gone back to the natural look.

However, it is reported that the buyers are buying and shoppers will find hemlines just comfortably below the knees, the waist in its place and a neckline decolletage that is wide rather than low.

Although the season boasts a multitude of colors, greens appear to be the most popular.

Piano Prodigy

In Winnipeg, nine-year-old Emmanuel Ax has been impressing experts with his piano talent. The boy, who arrived in Canada from Poland with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joachim Ax, played Bach, Beethoven and Mozart for Victor Feldbrill, conductor of the Winnipeg Symphony Orchestra. He said Emmanuel apparently has "a photographic memory of music. He has absolute pitch, a rarity in someone so young."

Stern Spouse

When a Detroit judge granted Antonas Waitkunas, 74, a divorce, he commented: "You shouldn't have married such a young girl."

Mrs. Waitkunas is 64.

Mr. Waitkunas testified than when he retired in 1954 his wife said: "No work, no eat."

His wife got his $150 pension cheque. She gave him $10 a month, cut him down to one meal a day, moved him into their basement and rented his upstairs room.

Never Too Young To Learn Safety

A child of five years of age is not too young to begin learning the alphabet. Is he too young to learn to keep from playing in the streets? Probably not, but the child will never learn if he is not taught by his parents, says the Provincial Highway Safety Committee, (Prudentia). Too many accidents to children occur because of lack of warning from parents. Why not take the trouble to warn your children of the danger. It may mean saving their lives.

'Tis well to forget the past because the future will give you plenty to worry about.

Two Thirds Are Pedestrians

Who are the victims of most accidents, one may ask. The Provincial Highway Safety Committee, (Prudentia), says that the results of a country wide investigation have revealed that two thirds of the victims in traffic accidents are pedestrians, and of these, the old and young are the most frequently struck down. The man or woman who drives must take greater responsibility in view of these facts. Dangerous driving and lack of judgment on the part of the motorist can easily be fatal to the pedestrian.

RESTORATION OF ANCIENT TIKAL

A dead city is coming to life in the steaming, bird-haunted jungles of Peten, in nothern Guatemala. The Book of Knowledge Annual describes how teams of archaeologists and other scientists from the University of Pennsylvania are restoring the ancient city of Tikal, once the largest centre of the Maya civilization, which began in the third or fourth century A.D. After the Old Empire had flourished in Guatemala for centuries, the Mayas abandoned these cities and formed a whole new group of city-states farther north, in Yucatan. This Yucatan culture was the one the Spaniards found when they conquered that region in the 16th century.
