Huntingdon Town

Work for a Game Warden.—

Evidence of the fish and game laws being broken is in evidence as one goes up the Trout River and sees some fine large fish floating down stream. It appears as though someone must be dynamiting fish. A large maskinonge said to weigh upwards of 40 lbs. was found dead. Other fish of smaller sizes were quite numerous. If our streams are to be exploited for fish in this manner we will soon be without the angler who makes a good summer tourist. The Fish & Game Inspectors will be doing the district a good turn if they get active on this case. At the pond in front of Howard Biggar's farm black duck are hatched annually and on Sunday the 14th or before, the three hatches were all cleaned out. The duck season opens on September 1st.

Bowling Medal Competition Thursday.—

Although the evenings are getting cooler, interest is still maintained in bowling. Tomorrow evening bowling for the club medals will take place. A big turnout is looked for. Mr. Geo. Robb in behalf of the local club has extended an invitation to the curlers about Aubrey to come to Huntingdon and enjoy a game of bowls some evening in the near future.

Petty Thieving in Town.—

Throughout the summer a number of people have had plants,, chairs, etc., stolen from verandas, and last week-end a spare auto tire was stolen from a car. In the last case a boy went to the auto owner and told him he could get his tire for $2. When things get to this point, it is high time for some action. It seems harder to follow up cases of petty thieving than thefts of greater magnitude, yet where will the petty thieving terminate. This is a problem our Town Council can weigh and if they deem it advisable to have an organization formed amongst citizens of the town to go the limit in making prosecutions, we feel certain it would get support.

HYDRO READY TO TAKE DELIVERY

Can Absorb Initial 25,000 h.p. From Beauharnois Without Difficulty

The Ontario Hydro Commission is ready to take delivery of 25,000 h.p. October 1, from the Beauharnois Company and it is in a position to absorb it without difficulty, officials stated in Toronto. The October delivery would be the first of a series of blocks to be laid down between now and 1937 under the Hydro's contract with Beauharnois.

Commissioner Alfred Maguire said that most of the additional supply of power would be distributed to consumers in the eastern part of the province, though part of it may be routed through the Leaside converter station later.

While current demand makes it advisable to deliver the initial block between the Quebec border and Toronto, he said, future blocks would probably be distributed to other parts of the province in accordance with the survey of future power needs made by the Hydro Commission's engineers at the time the Beauharnois contract was made.

BARNS BURNED ON ELGIN FARM

Threshing Operations Going on When Buildings Destroyed at J. Donnelly's

The barns of Mr. James Donnelly, of Elgin, near what is called Mud Creek, were destroyed by fire Wednesday afternoon about three o'clock.

Threshing was in progress and it is supposed sparks from the engine went up the blower pipes and set fire to the straw. In a very few minutes the barns and contents were burned to the ground including the season's crop, all the farm implements and threshing mill, with the exception of the tractor which was driven out. A large crowd quickly gathered but nothing could be done as the fire had gained too much headway.

There was an insurance of $1700. on the buildings which will not nearly cover the loss.

In aged cows, Cherry Bank Bonnie Lady was a very popular winner, followed by the noted Cherry Bank Bonnie Buttercup and Cherry Bank White Buttercup respectively both McArthur entries.

Cherry Bank again scored in the two-year-old class when Cherry Bank Miss Gem made a comparatively easy win.

In the yearling class Cherry Bank Lady Watson was chosen for first money but was finally placed third while Cherry Bank Gem 5th took fifth in the same class.

In the calf class a grand-daughter of Cherry Bank's famous former herd sire, St. Sulpice Colonel won for M. F. Cheeseman of Ellenburg, N.Y., and was later made junior champion female, whilst the McArthur entry, Cherry Bank Cherry, lacking somewhat the bloom of the first three, was placed fourth.

Cherry Bank Sir Sydney was made junior and grand champion male with Hobsland Syndicate, for L. L. Grow & Sons of Fort Jackson, N.Y., reserve.

The senior and grand female championship was also captured by a McArthur bred animal in Cherry Bank Bonnie Lady. Knew the Candy Man

A Baltimore policeman picked up a small girl crying lustily for "mamma." Other than that her name was "Marie" he could learn nothing about her. She was taken to police headquarters. Finally some one thought to ask her where she bought her candy when at home. She gave the name of a candy store owner without hesitation. The rest was easy. Her name was Marie Biser, aged four. She had strayed from her mother in a downtown store.—Capper's Weekly.

Queensberry History

Queensberry House in Scotland, hereditary property of the house of Queensberry, it is said was constructively in the County of Dumfries. It is recalled that when the Duke of Queensberry was attending the closing session of the Convention of Estates—the old Scots Parliament—in June, 1707, and passing the Act of Union with England, his chef went mad and trussed up the turnspit boy, but was stopped in time from roasting him alive.

SUDDEN DEATH ELGIN FARMER

Despondency Resulted in Untimely Death of John McKee, Aged 58

The Elgin community was shocked and saddened upon learning that the late Mr. John McKee who lived alone on his farm about 1 mile west of Athelstan station had passed away on Thursday.

Mr. McKee had been in usual health although somewhat despondent at times and on Thursday morning he apparently grew worse and took a dose of poison. To alleviate intense suffering, it is surmised, he threw himself into a deep hole in the creek behind F. Bergevin's farm, and was drowned. One of his neighbours going to his farm found that he had apparently taken poison and hastened to call a doctor. While he was on this errand McKee went to the river and jumped in.

Coroner Dr. J. R. McEwen was summoned but deemed an inquest unnecessary, the man having come to his death by double suicide in despondency.

ROYALS WON FROM RIVALS

Chateauguay Paddlers to C. N. E.—Boating Club Barn Dance

For the last time this season Chateauguay baseball rivals, Royals and Giants, hooked up in another masterly exhibition of the summer pastime, on Monday evening, and their efforts drew forth the plaudits of a good sized crowd of people, out at the stadium. Baseball, like the brand we all want to see and hear about, was again served up to the gathering. After a desperate nine innings of battle, the Royals emerged on the long side of 4-3 score. A very unfortunate accident happened to one of the players of the Giants, namely, Johnny Benoit, who in bravely trying to steal third base in the fifth frame fell on the ground, and dislocated his shoulder. Benoit was one of the starts of the game previous to that accident, and of course had to retire.

Several of the prominent local paddling enthusiasts who cast their lot in with the Lachine club this year, were very fortunate in being able to make the annual trek to the Canadian National Exhibition which is being held in Toronto, and according to advices just received were exceptionally successful in their various races.

The annual barn dance which is staged at this period of the Chateauguay Boating Club years' activities, was put on last Friday evening and proved the rule rather than the exception for entertainment. A very good crowd was in attendance for the affair, and of course, fancy togs were the attraction that evening. Music was supplied by an old time French-Canadian band.

Brilliant Standing of Two Pupils Commented Upon by Registrar of McGill University

Huntingdon Academy students are deserving of special credit for the excellent standing which they have made in the final examinations this year. In all, McGill University, awarded four scholarships to local graduates.

Miss Hunter was only 2.9 marks per subject behind the first in the province, and Gerald Walsh only 3.20 marks per subject behind Miss Hunter. Professor T. H. Matthews, registrar of McGill University, has written a note of congratulations on the success attained by these two students.

Is A Fall Fair Worthwhile?

When the present adult population of this district was boys and girls, our annual fall fairs were events of the year well worth remembering and celebrating. During the lapse of time we have all more or less lost interest in the fall fairs, and they have lagged behind. The district fairs have not kept place with the times, and it was therefore necessary a year ago that this paper be critical of the home show. Perhaps our remarks were severe, but they at least got under the skin of some of the officials of the show and they retaliated, only to receive a prompt and pointed answer. That little episode is presently working to the advantage of Huntingdon Fair. It made the interested parties perk up and feel the importance of their office and will to do something to fulfil the requirements of that office.

The Huntingdon Fair for 1932 will show life that has been dwindling, and on Thursday and Friday, September 8 and 9 the show will take place. In place of being a dragged out three day show, it will be for two days only.

Huntingdon Fair has been largely responsible for a good number of our farmers getting into the breeding of better cattle and horses, and after they show here successfully for several years we see some of the exhibitors promote themselves, and showing on the Eastern Circuit. This year we find that the prize herds of H. S. Tannahill & Son, and W. L. Call will be at Quebec during Huntingdon Fair, but in their place a number of new exhibitors are entering the fray. As sure as one generation follows another, so it is that entries can be secured and thereby maintain the show, if the directors deem it fit to exert themselves towards this objective. The directorate promise a worthwhile livestock show which will be paraded on Friday at 2 p.m.

This paper has always contended that to conduct Huntingdon Fair, to draw attendance, it was necessary to have some sporting activity. Baseball is the attraction that brings results, and this year's card of Chateauguay Ponies vs. Beavers and Huntingdon will prove to be a great attraction.

The Fair assumes a responsibility in that it does not hope to only improve the branches of agriculture and entertainment of man but it also wants to do something for the health of the rising generation. A baby clinic has been held here on several occasions, and every year it is held, it is amazing how many babies are found to be ailing, unknown to the parents. The baby clinic is an important adjunct to the fair and is always ably conducted under the leadership of the W.I.

These are some of the good points about our fall fair, but if we are to keep it going it is necessary that the two show buildings be thoroughly cleaned and well filled with flowers, fancy work, vegetables, home cooking and everything else that space is provided for within the buildings. If the buildings are not wholly occupied, they look uninviting; that is indeed one of the greatest and most glaring grievances that can be held against the show.

Although 1932 is a year that many fairs are finding it difficult to conduct financially successfully, it must be remembered that Ormstown and Lachute made money this year, and so can Huntingdon, if the Directors leave nothing undone that should be attended to, and at the same time let the public know about it before the fair opens on Sept. 8th.

Let everyone wish Huntingdon Fair success and support that wish by attending it on both days. If you have something to exhibit, make your entry now, for that is equally as important an adjunct to the success of the show as attending it.

Going Back to School

"The whining school boy, with his satchel and shining morning face, creeping like snail unwillingly to school." That is how Shakespeare describes the school boy in describing the seven ages of man in his play "As You Like It." Schools will open their doors when the students will pour into the old familiar buildings to commence once again the round of duties which will last for the longest session of the year, until Christmas. We doubt, despite Shakespeare's description, whether there will be much whining or creeping to school. A happy feature of the long summer holidays children of today are given, is the fact that towards their close the child tires of the inactivity from work, and tires a little of play too, so that when the opening day arrives the majority are ready and willing to proceed in pursuit of their studies for three months.

To some, the five and six year olds, school opening presents a new and wonderful adventure. The building they have often gazed upon is to be entered and explored. The realm of story book, the intricacy of arithmetical problems, art and physical training present to the starters something new each day and each week, and their first year at school is usually one of unbounded enthusiasm and delight.

May we refer just briefly to those who have been going to school regularly for some time. Some, with honor, have passed their summer examinations and proudly look ahead for new and greater fields to conquer, while others, perhaps a little crestfallen, through failure to pass exams, are not so eager for the fray. To those who did fail and are perhaps a little downhearted, or who may have an inferiority complex regarding their own accomplishments may we say step right into the work, co-operate with your teachers and parents, for both want to help you, and your disappointment of this year will turn to glorious achievement next year.

Dairy Preferences Affect on Whole Milk Trade

This country is particularly interested in the possibilities for dairy products in the new trade relations opened up by the Empire Conference. Not that the Chateauguay Valley will benefit directly, as our most immediate concern is the whole milk trade, but indirectly it is bound to have an effect on the price of whole milk.

The likelihood of improved conditions is apparent in the recently issued report of exported dairy products for the year 1931. Ten million six hundred dollars' worth of cheese was exported, an increase of six per cent. over 1930. Two million five hundred dollars' worth of butter was exported, an increase of 805 per cent. over 1930. The latter figures impress us with the fact that we are fast becoming a butter export country.

The new preference in the United Kingdom market for cheese is 15 per cent. ad valorem, for butter 15 shillings per 112 lbs. With the comparisons of 1931 against 1932 the new preferences practically assure us of a better market than before. There will be competition from New Zealand, but a competition that is not half so dangerous as continental dumping.

On the whole a brisk demand for milk products is expected. This will ease the whole milk trade and better prices should result.

15,993,700 pounds of Canadian Cheese were sold in the British market in July. The amount received for the same was $1,591,014. The exports in June amounted to 4,882,100 pounds and sold for $472,502. There was also an increase in butter exports, from 141,400 in June to 1,628,700 in July. These are evidences of the gradual improvements that are being experienced in different lines of trade. Farmers, in view of the abundant harvest and advancing prices of wheat, are more hopeful than at any time during the past two years.

No Bid Made For Church

"Any offer at all for a Presbyterian church? Can't I get a bid for it? Any offer at all for the property? I'm not going to dwell on it, but if I get a bid I'll stay here all afternoon. Can't I get any offers at all?" So the auctioneer droned at noon as Westdale Presbyterian Church, Hamilton, Ont., was put up for sale by auction in an auction room with Frederick Gladwell wielding the hammer. The scene was the climax of a long and stormy story in which the financial backers of Westdale Church finally foreclosed and seized the building. The auction was held with a reserve bid placed by an unknown purchaser. "Any offer?" Mr. Gladwell demanded. "Once, twice, thrice. Any offer? All through. I declare the property withdrawn from sale." It is understood that the building now passes into the hands of the mortgage holders, the Royal Trust Company.

56-Millions Whiskey Tax

Taxes on liquor provide almost as much revenue to the Dominion treasury as does the income tax, pointed out Allan Bronfman, managing director of the Distillers Corporation, Ltd., in a spirited eulogy on his trade given at Montreal. In support of his claim, Bronfman quoted the Dominion revenue from booze taxes in a single year as $56,000,000. In addition, the various provincial governments derive substantial sums from the same source. The Dominion impost on whiskey had risen since pre-war days from $1.90 a gallon to $9 on domestic and $10 on imported. In four years the capital invested in distilleries jumped from $26,422,000 to $61,000,000. The acknowledged king of Canadian distillers made another claim on behalf of the whiskey-makers—that of helping the grain industry by purchasing more than 1,000,000 bushels of barley a year.

Curfew Rings at Aylmer

The long, mournful blast of a siren sounded in Aylmer, Que.,—it was the 9 o'clock curfew—but it meant nothing to the children on the streets who continued to play. Suddenly, Chief Delbert Dumoulin and his force swept along in battle array. Thirty-seven boys and girls were taken into custody by the officers of the law, lodged in the town cells, and despite the protests of indignant parents, remained there until their release one hour later, at 10 p.m. The "prisoners" included 28 boys and nine girls, ranging in age from nine to 16 years. For the first time in eight years, since it was placed on the statute books, the curfew law had been enforced. "And from now on," Chief Dumoulin explained to the irate parents, "it will be enforced."

Indians Not Exempt

Indians owning a gasoline station, even when it is on an Indian reservation, are not exempt from the tax demanded from all other similar traders by the Provincial Government, Judge Monet at Montreal, decided in ordering Joseph Martin to pay a fine of one dollar and costs for having failed to pay his tax. Martin, who is an Indian and operates a gas station on the Indian reservation at Caughnawaga, entered a plea of not guilty to evading the tax, claiming that under Federal legislation all Indians were exempt from taxation while living on a reservation. Judge Monet, however, said that no Federal Act of Parliament dealt with Indians in relation to such a tax and he was compelled to take the only legislation which did deal with the subject as binding on all citizens. In this case legislation was provincial and it called for the payment of a tax.

The Judge Judged Differently

Love, along with almost everything else, is falling in value, Nicholas Kitsos has discovered. Where Kitsos, a cafe owner, San Francisco, had figured the love of his wife was worth at least $50,000, the legal yardstick of Superior Court Judge E. P. Shortall fixed it at just $1. Judge Shortall so decided after poring over Mrs. Kitsos' amorous diary which the aggrieved husband had submitted as evidence in his suit against B. A. Wheeler, salesman, for alleged alienation of affections. "The defendant writes that he hasn't $50,000 to settle your suit," the judge told Kitsos. "I'll give you a default judgment of $1. From this dairy I would take it that your wife didn't have $50,000 worth of love for you."

Boys Switch Homes

Heinrich Beuth, twelve, packed his clothing, left the home he has known since his birth, and went over to the home of Frau Marie Donk. Wilhelm Donk, also twelve, went through the same procedure and will live at the home of Frau Matilda Beuth. The two boys, of Gladbach, Germany, born on the same day twelve years ago in a maternity clinic there, were exchanged by their mothers after investigators, medical and scientific, and a court of law had upheld the claim of Frau Donk that the clinic had inadvertently exchanged the boys at birth.

Lock-Jaw Cured by Locke

The latest "Miracle" by Dr. Locke, of Morrisburg, Ont., that is the talk of the district is that of his curing a long-standing case of lock-jaw. A young lad from United States whose jaws had not been able to open for some years came to the famous man for treatment recently. This week he was successful in parting his jaws, and a complete cure is rapidly under way. That is just a sample of why the crowds continue to grow.

Use Girls as Shields

Seven bank robbers, who used six frightened girls as shields against gun fire of police, held up the Second National Bank of Beloit, Wisconsin, and escaped with between $40,000 and $50,000. For three blocks the girls were forced to ride through busy downtown streets on the running boards of the robbers' automobile. A chief of police and other officers, pistols in hand, watched helplessly as the car drove away from the bank. Three blocks away the robbers forced the young women to jump from the moving car. In the bank the robbers, armed with pistols and two sub-machine guns slugged B. P. Eldred, president, and Henry Coke, a customer. The robbers stuffed into two laundry bags the currency with which the bank was to meet several large payrolls.

Unwanted as Family Member

A bullet pinged from the underbrush as Francis Cedric White of Water Township was swimming with his fiancee, Hattie Warkus, of Levack, near Sudbury, Ont. It narrowly missed the girl and struck the youth in the arm. While police were hunting for the mysterious assailant Emile Warkus told police that he was the guilty man. Warkus, as it happens, is the brother of the pretty Hattie and told authorities that he had warned White to keep away from his sister, as he was not wanted as a member of the family, or there would be trouble. When his sister left home, evidently on an errand, Warkus became suspicious and followed her and sure enough she met White at a rendezvous and then both went swimming. Warkus returned to his home, snatched a .22 rifle from behind a chair and went to the swimming hole. Then he waited until an advantageous time arrived to shoot the youth. Even so he nearly hit his sister. Warkus believes that the bullet ought to end the romance.

Motorman Makes Thrilling Rescue

Clinging from the pilot of a speeding, plunging limited of the Lake Shore Electric Interurban line, Motorman Bill Lang, at Lorain, Ohio, scooped from beneath the wheels of his car three-year-old Lelia Smith, as she played on the tracks. Lang, one of the veteran motormen of the line, had brought the limited about a curve when he noticed what appeared to be a bundle between the rails. Looking sharply, he saw it was a baby—Leila, playing with her doll, "Elvira." Applying the brakes to the car, travelling 55 miles an hour, Lang flung himself through the door and onto the pilot, barely in time to snatch up the baby. Lang brought her into the cab on to Lorain, where hospital nurses apprised her injuries as little more apparently than a cut head and bruised arm. Lang took the limited on to Toledo.

His Grave and Monument

Aneketa Radzevich Sutkovoy, who last year dug his own grave at Ansonia, Conn., is now putting the finishing touches on a sepulchre and monument built with his own hands. Sutkovoy, 67, claims friendship with the late Czar Nicholas. He was chief jurist of a province near Kiev, Russia, was considered wealthy and entitled to be addressed "mister." A desire to travel brought him to this country. He was employed in a brass foundry for twenty-five years, and retired on a pension about five years ago. Being in poor health, his thoughts turned to the grave and he decided to prepare his own resting place. An orthodox Russian, he turned to the Three Saints Cemetery as the burial place.

Four-Leaf Clover Lucky

There is still luck in finding a four leaf clover. At least Miss Peggy Armour of Perth, Ontario, thinks so. Walking from the 11th to the 12th tee of the Jasper Park Lodge golf course, Miss Armour stopped to pick an emblem of good fortune and straightway smacked the ball off the 12th tee 145 yards for a hole in one. It was the first time the feat had been performed on the course this season and also the first in her career for Miss Armour who won the Alberta ladies' championship last year. On her way to the 13th tee Miss Armour found another four leaf clover but it was too much to ask of Fortuna. The 13th hole happens to be 595 yards long.

Rubbed Poison on Clothes

Antoni Ciagli, of Hadley, pleaded guilty in district court at Northampton, Mass., in one of the most unusual assault cases ever before the court. He admitted he rubbed poison ivy leaves upon his wife's clothing and upon a towel she used, with the result the woman's life was for a time despaired of. She was employed as a field worker and as she perspired her dampened clothing communicated the poison to her body and the towel she used to wipe her face did likewise.

Boy Speeder Surprised

Herbert Rosenthal, 16, was under sentence, 3,000 of them, for speeding. Craged with driving a car 45 miles an hour on the wrong side of the street Rosenthal was confident when arraigned and told Justice Jack DeWitt: "I can't be sent to jail because of my age and if you fine me my dad will have to pay it." Justice DeWitt passed him the sentence "delivery boys drive dangerously" with orders to write 3,000 times and hand the sheets to the sheriff Saturday morning."

Cheap Marriage

Cheap marriage was desired by a colored man at Tarrytown, New York. He appeared with his sweetheart at the office of the Town Clerk and asked for a marriage license. When informed that it would cost $2, he turned to his intended bride and said: "I thought you said the license only cost $1. I won't pay $2." He then stalked out, leaving the woman stranded and astounded.

Speak, and Fountain Flows

Chicago has a new kind of oasis, but it's O.K. with the prohibition enforcement officials. This is because it gives off nothing more potent than pure water. It's a fountain donated to one neighborhood by a laundry and it operates on the photo-electric cell principle. All you need to do is walk up to it, speak a word or two softly, and the water begins to flow from a jet.

The Old Man's Luck

Unhappy sequel followed a marriage of convenience in Zagreb, Jugo-Slavia. A wealthy Polish Jewess, who had a profitable business in Zagreb, was ordered to leave. To get Jugo-Slavian citizenship as soon as possible, she married an old man from a workhouse, promising to pay him $750, on his agreement to leave her immediately after the wedding breakfast. He claims now she did not pay him, and sent him back to the workhouse, whence he was expelled because he had a rich wife. The poor old fellow demands now that his wife should either live with him or pay his "purchase price."

SLEEP

No one can do without sleep. The amount of sleep required varies greatly, according to the needs of the individual. Rest in bed, apart from sleep, allows for recuperation, provided the person is relaxed and calm, and is not disturbed mentally or physically.

Sleep is a mystery, in that its cause is not known. The fact that several explanations have been offered is evidence that no one theory is fully satisfactory. What we do appreciate is the fact that during sleep the mental and physical wear resulting from the day's work is repaired, with the result that the morning finds the sleeper refreshed.

During sleep the body is relaxed, the rate of breathing is decreased, the heart beats are fewer, blood pressure falls, and there is a general slowing down of body functions. The body is at rest, with the essential functions operating at a rate sufficient for the maintenance of life.

Attention used to be directed to the position in which it was thought that one should sleep. It is now known that the ordinary healthy sleeper changes his position quite frequently during the night. It does not matter what position is assumed upon going to sleep, for it will be changed many times during the night.

It is a mistake to work hard trying to go to sleep. Many persons suffer from insomnia because they go to bed with a firm conviction that they will not sleep. Their worry about not sleeping is the one thing which, more than any other, keeps them awake. If such people would go to bed in a quiet room, allow the body to relax, and realize that it does not matter whether or not they sleep as long as they rest, they would not need to worry about not sleeping; they would sleep.

At this time, attention is directed to the sleeping requirements of school children. During the summer season the regular hour for going to bed is apt to be forgotten; later bedtime is the rule, with extra sleep in the morning. If such is the case, it is important—with the opening of school—to get the child back into the old routine. Children require a great deal of sleep, and that means a regular, early bed-time.

Sleep cannot be bought. It is just as much the property of the poor as of the rich. Like fresh air and sunshine, sleep and rest are requisites of good health, and may be had for the taking. Health is largely the product of our habits of life. One good healthful habit is to secure sufficient rest.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Riverfield

The Howick branch of the W.M.S. is in charge of next Saturday's concert, with Mrs. James Anderson as convener.

Last Saturday's concert, which was "Leader's" night, was an unbounded success. The hall had never so large an audience and the receipts nearly doubled that of an average attendance. Mr. D. Whitelaw of Montreal sang several Scotch songs, and Miss E. Armstrong played selections on the Hawaiian guitar. Character songs were sung by Mr. C. Orr and other musical items were contributed by Messrs. A. Carmichael, G. Angel, G. Roy and W. Orr. A humorous playlet, entitled "A delicate operation" was enacted by Messrs. L. Fulford and E. Robertson, doctors, Miss A. Orr, nurse and Mr. F. Gruer, the patient, which caused much merriment. Each item was given its full meed of applause. Mr. J. J. Craig was chairman.

Rev. G. MacLennan, representative of the Bible Society, will preach in both churches on Sunday.

Little Miss Barbara Charnley attained her seventh birthday on the 22nd and entertained her many little friends at Fairview Cottage.

Three Colors For Scarf; Worn With White Sports

There are all sorts of attractive scarfs, many of them made of red, white and blue. There are lots of clothes accessories in those colors, anyway. They are worn with white sports clothes.

There are, for instance, scarfs made in triangles of the three colors, oddly chunked together. There are scarfs of three colors in wide stripes, others with the center portion of the scarf white, the ends striped red and blue. These scarfs, striped and triangles, are made of the finest wool crocheted in a loose, lacy stitch.

Other scarfs are made of the three colors striped lengthwise, in soft silk crepe. Still others are made of two colors on one side, lined with the third color.

World Telephone Development

World progress in communication—the development of those facilities which bring the human race into closer contact—is of universal interest. Necessarily the project of collecting and assembling the data is fraught with difficulties, and must always fall short of being of the character of last minute information. In a recently published summary, made from official data by Bell system statisticians, world telephone figures are now available up to the date of January 1, 1931.

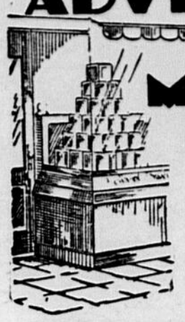

North America has 21,836,301 telephones, or 61.80% of the world total—almost twice the total of all other countries. Canada with 14.0 telephones for each 100 population comes second in telephone development to the United States which leads the world with 16.4 telephones per 100 of its inhabitants. New Zealand comes third with 10.2, followed by Denmark with 9.9, Sweden with 8.7 and Australia with 8.1 telephones per 100 inhabitants.

In Canada the telephone is used to a greater extent than in any other country. During 1930 Canadians made 264.8 telephone conversations per capita, while the United States and New Zealand with 226.0 and 208.3 were the only other countries with over 200 telephone conversations per person. Denmark with 152.2 was the leader of the European countries in conversations per capita. Canadians make 8 times more use of their telephones than the British who reported 33.1 conversations per capita and over 13 times more than the French who make 20.3 calls per capita.

Canada with 1,402,861 ranks fourth in absolute number of telephones, being led only by United States, Germany and Great Britain. But in Germany and Great Britain the number of telephones per 100 population is only 5.0 and 4.3 respectively. It is interesting to note that in Canada 82 per cent and in United States 100 per cent of the telephones are under private ownership and operation, while in Germany and Great Britain all telephones are operated by the government. Argentina leads South America in telephone development with 2.6 per 100 inhabitants. Japan easily leads the Asiatic countries but has only 1.4 telephones per 100 people.

In the provision of telephone facilities for cities of 50,000 people and over, Canada leads the world. With 23.7 telephones per 100 inhabitants in these communities its closest rival is the United States with 22.6. In the smaller towns and villages Canada ranks second, with 9.7 telephones per 100 people, being led only by the United States, with 12.2 telephones per 100 people. Thus the inhabitants of Canadian cities and towns of under 50,000 inhabitants are better provided with telephones than most of the larger European cities.

ADVERTISING for the MERCHANT of TO-DAY

Conducted by HAROLD S. EDGAR

A series of weekly articles on advertising and merchandising prepared for the merchants of the Chateauguay Valley with the co-operation of the Huntingdon Gleaner.

"Keeping Your Eyes Open"

It is vitally important in this busy world that we who are merchants know what is going on around us. Yet how frequently we walk or drive down familiar streets—along familiar roads—past the business premises we know—even walk into our own store—take our place at our desk and never really see things as they are.

In the larger merchandising marts of the world, the large stores definitely set aside certain individuals, whose job is to keep their eyes open to look ahead—to look around, and to pass this knowledge thus gained to their principals for the good of the business.

Today in the world of textiles and fashions, experts are planning what will be the fashions three years hence, and are working towards that goal a part way design for next year—a still further advance style for the second year, and at the end of the third year you will see the fashions as they were evolved over the period.

Other products such as draperies, furniture, and even interior decoration in paint and wood finishes with apparently no connection with personal fashions, have a very definite relation to them. For instance you can hardly imagine people of today attired in the present type of garments sitting around uncomfortably on haircloth sofas and stiff backed chairs. Nor can you imagine our great-grandfathers and great-grandmothers in the costumes pictured in the old album, surrounded by our present type of household furniture.

The merchant of our smaller places today has little to do with the designing of fashions, though he does pick from the market, the type of goods that his customers want, or can be sold. He cannot properly do this if he does not know what is going on.

In one of our larger cities, there are four big department stores within half a dozen blocks on the main retail street. Regularly each week day morning before opening time, you will find the merchandise manager of one of these stores briskly walking down the street passing the show-windows of the other three. With his trained eye, his knowledge of goods—he will take in while passing along each store—the goods that are being shown, though when desirable he does not hesitate to stop for a more careful examination.

This takes probably 15 or 20 minutes, but he goes back to his office with a knowledge of just what his contempararies are showing.

Possibly the other three stores are doing the same—this I do not know but if not they are missing a bet. I have no doubt that Mr. Merchandise Manager also has scouts shopping around and reporting on the goods inside the store.

Clever girls, handy with the pencil, walk through the shops photographing in their minds' eye the fashions that are unusually attractive in gowns or headgear, and afterwards sketch it for the benefit of their own firm.

It is not possible or not necessary with the merchant in the smaller towns to keep as close a tab as this, and yet it is as vital to the merchant in the smaller field as to the departmental store manager in the big city. I would, therefore, urge that you take time to see the stores in your own line in your own town. See also the others that are not in your own line—a hardware man can get pointers from the dry goods layout and the dry goods from the furniture shop—but more important than all learn to look at your own store with the critical eyes of an outsider.

Take time off as well to go to the next town or to several towns—to the larger city and even to the smaller community. You will see things you can adopt for your own business. You may even see the other fellows mistakes you would wish to avoid.

Just for example have a look at your sign outside. Does it fittingly represent the store you aim to conduct? Is it as well painted as at first, or have you become so familiar with it that you do not realize that it is no longer what it should be to do you justice.

Next Week—"BEHIND THE COUNTER or BEHIND THE DESK."

Mr. Edgar will be glad to answer questions in this column, if readers will address their communications in care of this paper. Confidential replies can be arranged through the editor.—(Copyright)

Sour Cream in Soup

A cup of thick sour cream added to any vegetable soup a moment after it is taken from the fire thickens it more smoothly than if the soup were mixed with a white sauce. It should not be boiled with the soup—merely added to it a moment after removal from the fire. Or, if the soup is to be eaten cold, so much the better. Beet or sorrel or tomato soup chilled, and served with sour cream, perhaps granished with slices of hard-cooked egg is a refreshing summer dish.

Sour Cream Hotcakes

In preparing any kind of hot cakes or waffles, sour cream can be used instead of milk. Use ½ teaspoon soda for each cup of sour cream and omit baking powder.

1 cup sour cream, 1½ cups flour, 2 eggs, 1 tablespoon sugar, ½ teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon baking soda, 1 tablespoon grated orange rind, dash of grated nutmeg. Separate yolks and beat lightly, add sour cream and dry ingredients sifted together, lastly the beaten egg whites. Pour on waffle iron or pancake griddle.

Why Some Personal News Items are not Printed

Too many people think personal items constitute news for a weekly newspaper. The fact is that these items are the last thing to be considered. The Gleaner and the weekly newspapers of the Ontario-Quebec Division of the Canadian Weekly Newspapers' Association have advised all their correspondents not to report, when one neighbour calls upon another; for that is not news, but is pure gossip. We have also asked that they make no mention of visits of persons who live within a few miles of the place where they are visiting, unless the person be very aged and the occasion rare. The Gleaner is noted for its volume of news and its freeness of gossip. Will you assist your district correspondent by supplying them with real news items that will be of interest to all readers.

Boomerang Long in Use as Weapon of Warfare

An article in the Encyclopedia Britannica on the boomerang of the Australian aborigines mentions various peoples that have used similar instruments. Both the return and non-return boomerang are found in most parts of Australia. The return form was, according to General Pitt-Rivers, used in ancient Egypt. A weapon closely resembling the boomerang survives to the present day in northeast Africa, with allied forms made of metal, or throwing knives. In South India is found a boomerang-shaped instrument which can be made to return. The Hopis of Arizona use a nonreturn form. The Indian Cyclopedia gives details of the chakro or steel disk, formerly carried by Sikh soldiers. These were 6 to 9 inches in diameter and about an inch of breadth of rim, and had sharply ground edges. They were rotated on the forefinger, then projected with considerable force 150 feet or more. They are called expensive and almost useless weapons. Another form of boomerang used in India is made of wood and iron at Gujerat and of wood and ivory at Trichinopoly.

SUPPLY THE ESSENTIALS OF DIET FIRST

By Barbara B. Brooks

One nutrition authority has said that we should urge children to first eat what they need and then let them have what they want (within reason). That is good sound advice for both children and adults, unless of course, you are reducing.

In the morning, for instance, it is wise to eat, and to urge children to eat their fruit, cereal and milk first. Then if the appetite is not yet satisfied, there may be additions of eggs, bacon, ham, toast, rolls or whatever is available.

For the children's lunch, a vegetable, creamed or buttered, or a vegetable soup, with whole wheat bread and butter, first. Then a simple dessert of a custard or fruit is in order, but not until after the vegetable because there has already been a supply of fruit and an energy producing food at breakfast time.

If the child, at noon has been given a cooked vegetable and not a raw one, the first food offered at the evening meal should be a salad of raw chopped vegetable or a sandwich containing vegetables. Some of the best of these raw vegetable sandwiches are made from chopped raw spinach, mayonnaise and egg, grated raw carrot and honey, chopped celery and mayonnaise, sliced tomato and chopped cabbage. After the uncooked vegetable the child may be given sweet of some sort or whatever he likes.

Sometime during the day every child should have an egg in some form. If it has been omitted for two meals, be sure to include it in the third. It may be soft-cooked, coddled, baked or it may be incorporated in an egg nog or soup to which raw egg has been added just before serving. Chopped egg sandwiches are popular with most children.

Those essentials of a child's diet which are necessary for adequate nutrition are two vegetables besides potatoes every day (preferably fresh or green), a fruit, bread and cereals, an egg and a quart of milk. The last requirement is very important. If your child has not had enough milk in two meals see that the first food offered him for the third meal is something with milk in it or milk itself.

You can readily see that it is not hard to make a diet adequate. The main difficulty lies in coaxing the child to eat what he should. At the beginning of the meal, before the child tires of the food he sees, offer him what he should have. He will soon learn that if he eats what he is offered first that he can have what he likes. But don't tell him so, let him find it out for himself.

BEST KIND OF CHERRY PIE

Everyone has a recollection of the perfect cherry pie which once tested has never been forgotten. Each season sees a new effort to achieve this perfection, but with differing results. For the still hopeful ones the following recipe is suggested: One quart cherries, ½ cup sugar, flour, powdered sugar.

Use Red Ones

The common red cherries are the best for pies. Stoning the cherries is desirable. Line a deep pie pan with good plain paste, fill nearly full with the cherries, sprinkle with sugar, and dredge lightly with flour.

Cover with an upper crust, which should be rolled as thin as possible, make a vent in the centre, and press the edges lightly together so that the juices will not escape during the baking. Serve cherry pies the same day they are baked, or the under crust will become heavy. Sprinkle powdered sugar over each piece just before serving.

Some good cooks prefer to cook the cherries first. Note this recipe: Two cups cherries (stoned), ½ cup sugar, 1 cup water, 3 tablespoons cornstarch, 3 tablespoons water, pastry.

Cook the cherries with the sugar and water until soft, and thicken with cornstarch mixed with water, add a drop or two of almond flavoring. Cool and turn into pie shell. Cover with lattice crust. Bake in a moderately hot oven.

HAVE A LOOK

The dean of a certain college was called to investigate a charge made by some of the girls that the men who lived in the fraternity next door invariably forgot to lower their shades at night. The dean looked out of the sorority windows and then said, "Why I can't see into any of the windows in the fraternity house."

A meek voice from one of the girls said, "Oh, yes you can, only you have to stand on a chair."

Rev. Harry Walker, S. T. L., B. A. and Mrs. Walker in England

Dear Mr. Sellar—

I have been thinking of late that it might be of interest both to yourself and to your large circle of readers to obtain some information respecting the Rev. Harry and Mrs. Walker, who after 40 years of efficient service in the Canadian Methodist (now United) Church, and who superannuated a years ago, are now residing in the Old Country. It will be remembered by your readers that Mrs. Walker is a daughter of the late Mrs. Jas. Stephen and a sister of Mr. W. F. Stephen, formerly of Huntingdon, and now of Ottawa. The Rev. and Mrs. Walker elected on their retirement to spend a year of rest and travel in the land of his birth. A very delightful twelve months have thus been passed amid old and familiar scenes, among relatives and friends and in forming also new and pleasing contacts. During this period Mr. Walker has done a considerable amount of preaching on Sabbath days. He has been on the public platform at many social and anniversary occasions; thus the weeks have passed very delightfully since they left our shores one year ago. Although Mr. Walker has seen three-score and ten summers, he is very hale, hearty and quite youthful in appearance, equal to many years of work in his high and holy calling, possessing as he does an alert and robust mind, fully in touch with the questions of the day, abreast with the teachings of his church, and withal vigorous and sane in his presentation of truth.

Since 1925 the United Church of Canada has had a full quota of ministers to man her fields, hence a return, even to assistant work, in 1932, would be impossible. In the old land it is very different as the work there is so largely augmented by the valuable service of local preachers, who receive years of training, with oral and written theological examination, and who in many instances are quite equal to supplying the best pulpits. Their names are placed upon what is called the Circuit Plan which is prepared once a quarter (3 months) by the ministers and may embrace from one, three to six and even to ten, fifteen and more preaching appointment. Hence the services rendered by this noble force of local preachers throughout the length and breadth of the land from Sabbath to Sabbath is unvaluable. I have just received a paper from the Old Land (The Northeastern Daily Gazette) dated August 11th, containing a brief paragraph touching Church Union soon to be consummated embracing the Wesleyan Methodist, the Primative Methodist and the United Methodist Churches. The following extract may prove interesting, after the remarkable union of Scottish churches three years ago:

A World Tribute

"Methodist Christians all over the world, claiming a membership of 50,000,000 persons, with 60,000 ministers and 90,000 local preachers, are sending representatives to join in the celebrations which will also be attended by the Archbishop of York, the heads of other religious communions in Britain and overseas, the High Commissioners of the Dominions, and Foreign Ambassadors. There are to be meetings both in the Albert Hall and the Westminster Central Hall, and a large open-air demonstration in Hyde Park. There will also be special exhibitions of relics associated with the history of Methodism and its founders, John and Charles Wesley. Visitors will see among many other fascinating things the bureau belonging to Charles Wesley, at which he must have written many of his 6000 hymns."

This briefly sets forth the importance of the approaching days of Methodism in England.

Many ministers who have returned to the Old Land have found their services have been much in demand as supernumeraries and by permission of their Canadian home church, which already have their fully required quota of labourers, have taken on work and rendered valuable service with the Mother Church. Mr. and Mrs. Walker have found such an open door, with a modest remuneration, and have elected to remain. They will enter upon their new work the first Sunday of September. They have been appointed to the Lancaster Circuit, considered one of the finest fields in British Methodism. They are provided with a large and beautifully furnished house. Mr. Walker will preach in three churches, according to the Circuit Plan arangements. The churches on the Lancaster Circuit compare favourably with the best churches in Montreal, with appointments suitable to carrying on all branches of church activity.

I am confident, Sir, that many of your readers who knew Mr. and Mrs. Walker so well, he as pastor of Kensington Church, many years ago, and an annual visitor to Huntingdon in later years, and Mrs. Walker as one of yourselves, will have nothing but the kindliest feelings towards our overseas friends and the most cordial good wishes for years of delightful service in the great and newly-organized Methodist Mother-Church of England,—in that "beautiful isle of the sea," that spot that still remains and shall continue to remain one of the Wonders of the World.

Corn Flake Cream Dessert

4 cups corn flakes, ¼ cup sugar, ¼ cup butter, ½ teaspoon cinnamon. Put corn flakes through a food grinder, using finest cutter. Mix thoroughly with sugar, butter and cinnamon. Mix flour, sugar and salt. Add egg yolks, and mix until smooth. Add scalded milk slowly being careful not to cook eggs. Cook in double boiler until thickened. Add vanilla. Cool and pour into lined pan and top with following meingue: 3 egg whites, 6 tablespoons sugar.

Beat egg whites until they hold their shape, but not until they lose their ship appearance, and add sugar. Spread on top of pie and sprinkle with remaining crumbs. Bake in a slow oven (300 degrees F.) for 40 minutes. Cool and serve. Yield: 10 servings.

"Please, mum, father's sent me round to say that your dog Towser's killed three of his prize Cochinchinas this afternoon," announced an apple-faced youth to an elderly maiden lady, living at the end of the street.

The lady was very indignant.

"Towser," she said, "couldn't do such a thing, I'm certain. Tell your father that he must have made a mistake."

"But father saw the dog with one of the fowls in his mouth, mum," persisted the boy.

"Then tell your father that circumstantial evidence has led many a wiser man astray," sniffed the lady.

The boy returned a few minutes later. "Father's compliments, mum, and perhaps you're right," he said. "He says I'm to tell you that circumstantial evidence would point to the fact that he shot your dog half an hour ago, but he reckons as 'ow you'd find the poor thing died of housemaid's knee!"

Wifey (bitterly)—"So you have forgotten our wedding anniversary?"

Hubby—"How could I remember it? Time has slipped away so fast and so happily that the wedding seems but yesterday.

Birthdays of Nonogenarians Observed

As Saturday, August 27th was Mrs. Cole's 92nd birthday, and also the 74th anniversary of her marriage, and as Monday, August 29th was Miss Loving's 92nd birthday, a number of friends brought or sent congratulatory messages to "The Lilacs" on Saturday. Mr. and Mrs. F. F. Tefft came from Plattsburg to take dinner with their friends and brought a beautiful birthday cake which was the crowning confection at the tea hour when there were present twenty-one ladies, nearly all being close relatives or near neighbours. Miss Cole was assisted in serving refreshments by Mrs. Tefft and Miss Marguerite Waddell, and a very happy social time was spent by all present.

Presbyterian W. M. S. Meeting

W. M. S. auxiliary met Wednesday afternoon at the Town Hall with eleven ladies and some visitors present. Quilting and other sewing occupied the work period. The question of forming a new Presbyterial for the rural districts was voted upon, the majority being opposed. An interesting article on prayer in relation to missions was read by Miss V. G. Semple. At the close of the afternoon a very delicious tea was served by Mrs. Maitland. The September meeting will take place at the home of Mrs. John Carson.

Two Others Arrested

Additional evidence secured by the authorities of Clinton County has led to the arrest of Elmer Robidoux's brother-in-law, Raymond Cayea, and of the latter's brother, Joseph Cayea. Raymond has admitted his presence at the slaying but states that his brother Joseph did the planning. Their motive now appears to have been a wish that Joseph might occupy the farm owned by Mr. Bradley.

Visitor Favorably Impressed

Mr. Wm. Ford, who recently came here from P.E.I. states that the Quebec farmer's condition compares favorably with that in the island province, where mixed farming has been largely given up for potato-growing or fox-ranching on an extensive scale, resulting in the ruin of thousands who have had nothing to fall back on during the present slump in prices.

On Wednesday last a number of our young folks with several friends from the city organized a picnic party and spent a pleasant day at the river.

Assist for Lumber Industry

Quebec, August 24.—The Quebec Government took steps today to help the lumber industry of the province and relieve unemployment among married men engaged in cutting operations. The Cabinet passed an order-in-council reducing ground rent and stumpage dues and at the same time stipulated that a "reasonable wage" must be paid to the lumberjacks and that preference be given married men or those caring for families. Ground rents are reduced from $8 per acre to $5. Stumpage dues on pulpwood are cut from $2.70 per 1,000 feet to $2, equivalent to $1 per cord. No provision was made for reduction in sawn lumber stumpage dues. Reductions follow representations made to the Government by lumbermen. The order-in-council provides that only companies operating during the full season will benefit. Lumbermen must employ residents of Quebec, preference must be given to married men or those caring for families and "reasonable wages" must be paid. "By these means the Government hopes to encourage the cutting of timber in the forestry limits, even while taking into account the existing economic conditions," concludes the order-in-council. Department of Lands and Forests estimates the season's cut at 500,000,000 feet.

Sanjurjo Gets Life Sentence

Madrid, August 25.—General Jose Sanjurjo, prominent member of the royalist regime, was convicted of rebellion against the young republic today and sentenced to death. His sentence was then commuted to life imprisonment. The climax of a day and a half of deliberation by a mixed tribunal of the Supreme Court and the cabinet violently divided the populace according to its sympathies and gave rise to rumors of another monarchist uprising. General Herranz, Sanjurjo's lifelong companion in arms was sentenced to 30 years in prison—equivalent to a life term—Lieut. Colonel Infantes received a term of 12 years, and Captain Justo Sanjurjo, the general's son, was liberated. These sentences were not altered. The chief defendants were found guilty of conspiring to place Don Juan Carlos, third son of former King Alfonso, on the vacated throne in the short-lived revolt of two weeks ago which led to the occupation of Seville for a few hours and bloodshed in the streets of Madrid. The eight civil and military judges after 20 hours of debate pronounced the verdicts without recommendations of mercy and submitted their findings to the Cabinet for final review in accordance with Spanish law. Premier Manuel Azana, emerging from a stormy session of the Ministry, announced to a Chamber of Deputies tense with waiting that the Government had decided to petition President Alcala Zamora to commute General Sanjurjo's penalty to life behind the bars. The President signed the commutation papers a short while later.

London Greets Leaders Back

London, August 26.—After more than six weeks' absence in quest of trade across the seas, the United Kingdom delegation to the Imperial Economic Conference is home again. Led by Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin, members disembarked from the Empress of Britain at Southampton today and travelled by special train to London, where they were greeted by Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald and other cabinet colleagues. Mr. Baldwin said he hoped and believed the Imperial Conference had done "a useful bit of work." The conference was successful from every point of view, declared his genial lieutenant, Rt. Hon. J. H. Thomas.

Garner Flays Tariff Bill

New York, August 26.—Responsibility for "nearly all our civic troubles" was laid to "Government's departure from its legitimate functions" by Speaker John Nance Garner, in accepting the Democratic vice-presidential nomination. With a postage stamp and a 2,500-word letter, the Texan broke political precedent by using the mail for his formal acceptance. The notification message was made public tonight at Democratic National headquarters. The failure to meet the depression emergency courageously at its inception and the enactment of the Hawley-Smoot tariff in the face of an almost universal protest," Mr. Garner wrote, "are, to my mind, the most naked evidences of the failure of the Republican leadership to realize its responsibilities and live up to its obligations. If no other errors had been committed, these two things would be amply sufficient to explain the unpopularity of the present Administration and the wide confidence that it will not be continued."

Millions in Funds Disappeared

Winnipeg, August 28.—Four days before John A. Machray, university governor and Church of England chancellor, makes his first court appearance to answer of theft charges, auditing of books of the two institutions whose funds he controlled had revealed the following facts: 1. That about $100,000 of University of Manitoba's $1,600,000 endowment trust fund remains. The rest has either been stolen or lost in bad investments. 2. The Rockefeller Institute Trust Fund of $500,000, donated to the university for medical education has disappeared. 3. The Isbister endowment of $130,000 also is gone. 4. Other smaller trust funds, administered by Machray as university bursar and chairman of the board of governors, have been seriously depleted. 5. Church of England funds totalling $1,500,000 have been reduced through irregularities "to an alarming extent." Machray was chancellor of the ecclesiastical province of Rupert's Land. 6. Only one Church fund, one of $250,000, is intact. 7. The clergymen's retirement fund, to which clergy of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Northwest Territories and the Yukon contribute so they could retire with a $700 annual pension, has been depleted to an unknown extent.

Few Without Some Sort Of Covering For Body

Practically every primitive tribe dwelling in the tropics that has been studied by scientific observers has been found to wear some form of bodily covering of the loin region, either in the form of paints of various colors, tattoo marks, strands of beads of various materials, beaten bast or bark cloth, or of woven girdles or aprons of cotton or other vegetable or animal fibers. The inhabitants of the Nicobar islands and of Central East Africa are apparently of all tribes the most free from loin coverings of all sorts. Reason given for the wearing of loin coverings vary. Native modesty is usually present in some form ,even apart from any influence that may be attributed to the whites. Tribal and ceremonial painting or tattooing is often a causative factor, and may supplement a woven girdle worn for entirely different purposes, namely, for the insertion of the hilt of a knife and as a place of attachment for burdens. Most primitive peoples are burden carriers. Protection against insect pests is often attempted through the agency of breech clouts. Tradition and native styles usually dictate the use of certain forms of loin covering, even to the minutest detail.

Old English Church of Interest to Americans

Southwark cathedral, one of London's ancient churches, known to Londoners as the "Church in the Hole," is falling into decay, says an article in the Montreal Family Herald. Shakespeare used to attend divine services there. His brother, Edmund, is buried in the church. John Harvard, whose donations founded Harvard university, was baptized there in 1607. Some years ago the alumni of Harvard rebuilt one of the chapels. Southwark cathedral is the only English church in which a Fourth of July celebration ever was held. This took place some years ago. Shakespeare and his contemporaries used to come over to Southwark to see their plays produced. They often lodged in Southwark and attended the cathedral services. In recognition of these visits, there is now a memorial window to the famous Elizabethan dramatist in the cathedral.

Tommy was being examined in the catechism by the visiting minister.

"What is meant by regeneration?" asked the minister.

"Why, it's just being born again," replied the lad, with some maternal prompting.

"And wouldn't you like to be born again?"

No reply to this, even under paternal pressure, until finally in desperation the truth came out: "I ain't taking an chances on being a girl."

"My little girl is very clever," said a lady to her guests. "She can imitate almost anyone. Come, my dear, pretend to be the housemaid."

The little girl did so, and the guests were greatly amused.

Then suddenly backing away from her father, the girl exclaimed in a terrified tone: "Sir, let me go! Don't touch me, sir! Let me go! Give you a kiss, indeed! Supposing missus was to hear you?"

Then the clever child was suddenly bundled out of the room.

Auntie: "Well, John, and how do you like your new baby brother?"

Four-year-old John: "Asleep."

Eye For Values

A collector of manuscripts and first editions of early Americana found a sermon in pamphlet form in a second-hand book shop. It was the only known copy of the old sermon except the one which the collector already possessed. He paid $500 for the second copy, then took it home with him and threw it into the fireplace. The destruction of the second copy added several times its purchase price to the one the collector originally held, he explained.

Ambition

In an address on salesmanship Charles M. Schwab laid stress on the necessity of being well dressed, but added:

"But there must be something to back up the front. The old saying that no man is a hero to his valet should not hold good. Try to be what you pretend to be and remember this:

"'Many a man wishes he were as wise as he thinks his wife thinks he is'"

Animals Well Treated

Only loads of certain size are permitted on wagons and the wagons must be greased regularly so they pull easily. Every animal pulling a burden must be properly shod and drivers are cautioned to feed them well, keep them treated properly when they are ill. Fowls cannot be carried with heads down, as this is cruel.

RECI-PIES

By Barbara B. Brooks

Of desserts which is your favorite? Nine out of ten men say "PIE". A good number of women would probably vote the same way if they were not counting calories and therefore rather shy about admitting a preference in which they dare not indulge.

Pie is always acceptable as a dessert no matter what the season. We are sometimes reluctant about serving it in warm weather because we dislike to heat an oven. This is no longer an excuse for not having it because there are the uncooked varieties, the ones which require no heat. They are sometimes called refrigerator pies.

Refrigerator pies usually have crumb crusts. Corn flake crumbs are excellent for this purpose. They have a good color and add a distinctive flavor. The crust may be made in two different ways.

Corn Flake Pastry I—1 cup corn flake crumbs, ¼ cup butter, ¼ cup sugar. Cream butter and sugar and add crumbs, kneading thoroughly. Press into pie tins.

Corn Flake Pastry II—1 cup corn flake crumbs, ¼ cup sweetened condensed milk. Combine the ingredients thoroughly and press into pie tins.

Magic Strawberry Cream Pie—1 1-3 cups sweetened condensed milk, ¼ cup lemon juice, 1 cup sliced strawberries, ½ cup whipping cream, 2 tablespoons powdered sugar.

Blend milk with lemon juice. Fold in strawberries. Pour into nine inch pie tin lined with Corn Flake Pastry II. Chill. Serve with whipped cream sweetened with the powdered sugar.

The above recipe can be made with raspberries, blackberries, or blueberries. It can also be made with two medium sized bananas cut into pieces.

A lemon pie made in a similar manner is delicious.

Lemon Cream Pie—1 1-3 cups sweetened condensed milk, ½ cup lemon juice, grated rind of 1 lemon, ½ cup whipping cream, 2 tablespoons powdered sugar, corn flake pastry II.

Combine milk, lemon juice and grated lemon rind. Pour into nine inch pie tin lined with corn flake pastry. Chill and top with whipped cream sweetened with powdered sugar.

Work That Will Endure

Modern sculptors believe in hard work. Specimens of their work have recently been exhibited exquisitely fashioned out of stones that are almost as hard as a diamond, and certainly considerably more resistant than case-steel. Work of this sort is all the more remarkable when we remember that, until comparatively recently, the modern fashion in sculpture was to model in clay. The master's model was then copied in marble or stone by masons. The old methods, which gave us the gargoyles of the medieval cathedrals, are now coming back, however, and sculptors are again working direct on the stone.

The Scotch doctor lay dying. After fifty years of helping others into and out of this world he himself was to be called to fact the noblest experiment of them all. With almost his last breath he said to his wife, the faithful companion of his joys and sorrows:

"When I'm to be buried I want a nameplate on my coffin."

"Ye shall have it," assured the widow-to-be; and contentedly the ancient physician turned his face to the wall.

And on the morning of his funeral the passersby noticed that the polished brass plate which had graced the doctor's doorpost was missing; and the graveside-standers read through their tears, as they lowered the casket into the earth, "Angus Abernethy, M.D., Office hours 9 to 11 a.m."—Canadian Yardmaster.

The Man Hunters

by Mabel McElliott

CHAPTER X ... ...

On the way home in the hard brightness of the street car Ben said, "That's the way to live. Like Sonya and Arnold. Free and easy."

Susan stared at him. "You like that?"

Ben moved impatiently. "Oh, I knew what you'd say. I know the apartment's kind of messy. But they're not tied down. They live their own lives and have a good time."

Susan, remembering Arnold's unkempt appearance and the greasy loops of Sonya's pale hair, the spots on her smock, was silent. She did not want to criticize Ben's friends.

"It's a great love, anyhow," Ben burst out after an interval as the brightly lighted trolley proceeded, in series of jerks and stops. "They were terribly in love. Arnold had a wife some place in Russia but they fixed that up. They're what I call a really happy couple."

Susan felt an hysterical impulse to laugh but she restrained herself. She had thought the whole crowd, the Strinskys and their unwashed friends (with the exception of that exotic blossom, Denise), dreadful people. With provincial simplicity she discounted whatever talent lay in Arnold's long fingers because they did not look clean. She wondered how she could best describe the party to Aunt Jessie.

She let her hand lie limply in Ben's warm one at parting. "I can't ask you to come in," Susan said gently. "Aunt Jessie's gone to bed. Thank you for taking me to the party."

Ben muttered, "Wanted you to meet the crowd. You'll like them better when you know them. They're real people."

Susan withdrew her hand. "Good night, then," she said, avoiding his hot, uncomfortable gaze. He called after her, "I'l phone you." Susan waved to him through the screen door, glad the tiresome evening was over. There was something almost frightening about Ben's intensity. Even when he had talked of the Strinsky's romance he had made it seem a personal matter.

Those dreadful people! Their way of living might seem ideal to Ben Lampman but it certainly did not to Susan. She would not go there again!

* * *

But as summer waxed and waned the girl almost regretted her decision. Chicago's Bohemia might not be the social background she desired but loneliness was hard to bear and the warm nights brought with them an aching sense of missing something.

Rose Milton went to Sweetbrier Lake for two weeks and wrote back glowing accounts of her conquests. She sent snapshots of herself, the center of a merry mixed group. Susan, tossing sometimes on a hot and disordered bed, listening to the raucous music of the radio next door, would wonder about life. She was 19, not unattractive, intelligent. What promise was there ahead for her? Even if she held the job at Ernest Heath's ,and it looked as if she might, with Miss O'Connell's convalescence lengthening out, what had she to look forward to?

Next year she might get $22 a week. In five years she might even be making $35. Well, what then? She would stay on with Aunt Jessie in the cottage. She would be 25, she would be 30, 35. She would begin to wear eyeglasses and go to lectures in the evening with some woman friend. She would be one of the brave, ever-increasing army of unmarried women workers in the Loop district. They had their two weeks' vacation, their one presentable suit. They wore neat, sensible shoes and devoted themselves wholeheartedly to the concern for which they labored.

Susan saw them in halls and elevators. She heard them whispering together in the cafeterias.

"My boss says—my boss thinks—" There would be usually a smug little smile as they spoke of their employers. "Office wives," Susan had heard them called. Their loyalty, certainly, was a quality most wives would do well to copy. They had none of the wives' privileges. They had neither charge accounts, nor chauffeur-driven cars, nor trips south in the winter. They kept columns neat in big ledgers and typed exquisite letters. They dusted the big mahogany desks and turned the loose-leaf calendars daily. They called the University Club to order a toble for four, for Tuesday, please, "and will you be sure it's near the window?" They bought theater tickets for plays they were never to see, ordered camellias for pretty ladies who had no reason for existence, and made deposits in bank books of sums that would have kept them in clothing throughout their lives.

Susan said to herself that it wouldn't be so bad if the average secretary could see herself getting ahead as a young man might, using the office as a stepping stone to higher places. The typical girl worker, however, poured her energy, her sympathy and her intelligence into the job and unless she met with exceptional luck or extraordinary favoritism she might work 10, 15, 20 years without any recognition beyond the weekly pay envelope whose sum remained discouragingly small.

* * *

She was young, she was lonely, she was good. Sometimes during those warm, disturbing summer nights Susan wondered if it paid. She wondered if she might not, some day, answer the invitation in Jack Waring's eyes. She wondered if that seat in his sport roadster might not prove altogether too alluring some evening. Susan hoped not but she wondered.

The telephone rang one morning when she was alone in the office.

"Hullo. Miss Carey?"

The girl's heart, for no good reason, began to beat thickly and uncomfortably.

"This is Bob Dunbar. Be an angel and have lunch with me. At one? Righto. How about the Blackstone?"

Susan hung up the receiver with a gasp. The Blackstone, and she was wearing her old pink shantung! Well, her hat was new. It was a little rose pink straw she had picked up on a basement counter for $1.50. You would never have guessed the price. In a fever of excitement she waited for Pierson to come back to relieve her. With trembling fingers she pressed the small hat into place. If only she had known, if only she had guessed he was going to call her! She might have had a manicure. She might have worn her more sophisticated blue crepe. She might have done a thousand things!

Dissatisfied, almost in tears, at last she picked up her hand bag and turned to go. Pierson's whining voice followed her.

"Don't forget to be back by two, sharp. Mr. Heath has that cathedral estimate he wants to draw up."

Susan caught her underlip in her teeth. Well, that was being a working girl. She would have to hurry. No dallying over the coffee cups for her today. But the pulse that had been set drumming in her blood ever since she had heard Bob Dunbar's voice over the telephone would not be stilled.

She walked on air to Michigan avenue. Despite the fact that the society editors declared no one stayed in Chicago for the dog-days there was, as usual, a well-dressed, alert-eyed throng of shoppers on the avenue. The day was a gift from the gods. Cool, almost sharp that breeze was and there were white caps ruffling the cobalt surface of the "inland sea."

Susan drew great breaths and was glad to be alive—glad to be on the sunny side of 20—glad to be meeting this particular young man.

He came toward her, detaching himself from the little group in the lobby, and she felt a lift of the heart at sight of that tall, well-knit figure in its perfectly fitting gray flannels.

He lifted his hat, and that simple action sent her heart rearing and plunging like a wild thing.

"You look awfully fit!" The clipped voice was just as Susan remembered it. Not for nothing had Bob Dunbar spent several years at British schools.

She smiled at him, almost too happy to speak. "You, too," she said softly. She wondered why she was always at ease with this boy. She had known him such a little while and yet it was always as if they were renewing an old and delightful acquaintance. It was as if they had known each other forever.

* * *

He leaned across the table, his blue eyes darkening as he stared at her frankly, quite as if he'd never seen her before.

"I like you in that pink thing," he said slowly. And a strange thing happened. The room, the other lunchers, the waiters murmuring in a corner, the music muted from the strings of a discreet orchestra, all seemed to vanish. The boy and girl were alone. Yet all she said was, "Thank you." Her voice shook ever so little as she formed the words.

"I'm going abroad again," said the boy, still looking at her strangely and deeply. "Father wants me to. I wanted to say goodby."

The words rang like a knell in Susan's heart yet, being a woman, she summoned a fixed smile to answer him."

"Going abroad?" she repeated, feeling rather stupid yet unable for the moment to find other words.

He frowned and played with his fork. "Yes. Thought I was to stay here and go into the business."

She said "I'm sorry" and the words struck her as being painfully inadequate.

"So am I." His mouth twisted whimsically as he looked at her. "I—it hasn't all gone as I thought it would. I wanted to be friends. I hoped—"

The waiter arrived with a tray of little silver dishes and Susan hated him. There was an interval and then they were alone again in the vast, scented, murmuring room once more.

"Well, that's that!" Bob Dunbar told her. His laugh sounded nervous and harsh. "Perhaps you'll still be around when I come back."

"When will that be?"

"Oh, late fall—by Christmas, at the outside."

Christmas—Christmas—Christmas—Susan felt as though she were suffocating. To find love, all at once, and have it snatched away.

Those large, fringed eyes, gray and black by turn, were raised to his.

"That's right. I wanted to tell you something. I would have before but the family's been pestering me all summer. Been keeping me out of town. Treating me like a kid in grade school. But you must know—you must have guessed before this—"

Susan felt joy suffusing her, washing over her like warm rain.

Into the waters of this tete-a-tete there dropped the tiniest of pebbles. A girl's voice, slow and drawling and insolent, broke across Bob Dunbar's. The strange voice said, "Wherever have you been, darling? I've been missing you so."

Susan glanced up to find the red-haired girl who had been at the Strinsky's party staring impudently at her. But the words were addressed to Bob Dunbar who had sprung to his feet.

"Miss Ackroyd, this is Miss Carey," he said.

Susan wished the ground might open and swallow that red-haired girl, Denise.

CHAPTER XI

Denise Ackroyd, slim and perfect in her tailored suit of black faille, continued to stare insolently at Susan but her words were addressed to Bob Dunbar.

"Where have you been keeping yourself?" Denise went on in that high, sweet, agreeable voice, which had rung out above the others that night at the Strinskys' studio. Bob said rather unomfortably that he had been with the family at Lake Geneva, that he had got in some golf.

"You look it," said Denise, surveying him with what Susan thought a proprietary gaze. Susan felt out of it. The other girl, with the ease and smoothness of long practice, had taken control of the situation. Susan was suddenly conscious that her rose pink shantung was all wrong. She wondered, dismally, why she had come. She was out of place in this big, cool, shining room where all the lunchers seemed to know each other and stopped to talk and laugh in little intimate groups.

If the other girl was aware of any rudeness in ignoring Susan she gave no sign. She monopolized young Dunbar completely. It was only when Susan, raging in her heart, gathered up her gloves and said she must go that Denise appeared to notice her.

"Oh, you have a job, I suppose?" she said in a surprised, faintly disdainful tone. As if, thought Susan angrily, there was anything wrong about having a job!

"No, don't come with me," Susan insisted to the young man. "Really, I must rush and you may as well stay and talk."

Surely he won't take me at my word, the girl thought. Surely he'll finish what he started to say before that hateful Denise interrupted!

Womanlike, Susan insisted that the young man should do exactly exactly what she hoped he would not. She did not really believe he would take her at her word. But Dunbar by this time was bewildered by her silence and sudden coolness. He began to imagine the flash of understanding which had passed between them was nothing but a mirage. He walked with her as far as the lobby where, puzzled and annoyed by her new, distant manner he left her and returned to the restaurant and Denise.

Walking across town, Susan raged in her heart. The click of her heels kept time with her furious thought. "I hate her. I hate her. I hate her," she stormed inwardly.

She was hard put to it to keep back the tears. The day which had seemed so perfect an hour ago was unendurable. The sun beat down on the pavements, the big policeman at Adams and Clark looked fairly wilted. No wonder, thought Susan, that girls like Denise Ackroyd always managed to look so exquisitely turned out. They had their half hundred little French frocks, their efficient maids in the background. They had swimming and tennis. They had adoring parents who existed for the sole purpose, apparently, of paying bills. For the first time in her life Susan began to be really sorry for herself. She wondered rebelliously if life needed to be so utterly unfair. The corrosion of self pity ate into her soul.

It was in this mood that she entered the office, hung up her hat, and with notebook in hand went into Mr. Heath's private office to take dictation. Yesterday all this had seemed quite thrilling.

She had imagination to see the poetry that lay behind the prosaic talk of stone and mellow beams and steel work. Yesterday Susan had thought of herself as a cog in this important business machine. A small cog, it is true, but still a necessary one. Now she wondered dully why that had seemed to matter. She wanted passionately to be the sort of girl Denise Ackroyd was. She wanted to be able to laugh and talk flutingly of the endless nothings which seemed to make up the conversation of that particular crowd.

Ernest Heath wondered what had happened to the girl. She was so quiet and pale, so subdued. Quite unconsciously he had come in the last few weeks to depend upon and to expect the flash of glowing understanding, the ready response that was half Susan's charm. Today all that was absent.

"I wonder if the girl is ill," Heath thought, for the moment vaguely annoyed at the idea. For the first time since she had been in his employ he began to speculate, idly, on the girl's life apart from Ernest Heath, Incorporated. Like most men of his type—correct, dignified, rich and unimaginative—his secretary of the moment always seemed to him to have been created for the sole purpose of arriving promptly at nine each morning, discharging her duties crisply and efficiently, and departing of the stroke of five into some dim limbo he neither knew nor cared to know about.

* * * * *

Miss O'Connell whose place Susan was taking had always seemed to him the veriest robot. It had never occurred to Heath to wonder what her life outside the office might be. But then Miss O'Connell was nearing 40. She wore rimless eyeglasses and, as Ray Flannery had devastatingly announced, had worn a hair net. Susan was different. Heath, sedate and proper as he was, had not realized what an inspiration there had been for him in this girl's eager, upward glance. The flash of dark grey eyes under long lashes, the rich apricot color that occasionally stained her cheek—irrationally now he missed them and, manlike, was annoyed without knowing why.

Listlessly Susan finished her task. Her employer, with a pricking sense of uneasiness, signed the completed letters, snatched his impeccable Panama from the rack and departed in the direction of Hubbard Woods. Susan closed and locked her desk and dawdled over the business of washing her hands. Somehow she was not at all eager to go home. The dull pain at her heart which had been clamoring for notice all afternoon seemed intensified. With that sharpness of perception which seems to come to all of us after we have done an irretrievably foolish thing Susan saw how stupidly wrong she had been to leave Bob Dunbar as she had.

"You're a little fool," she told herself angrily. "You left the field completely to Denise!" She sighed and the sigh was like a groan.

Susan glanced up to see the round eyes of Ray Flannery staring at her. "Nobody," said Ray sagely, "ever moaned like that unless she thought she was in love. Susan summoned the ghost of a smile, shaking her head in denial. Ray's unwinking stare met hers incredulously.

"I know the symptoms," Ray went on, looking wise, "and take it from me, kid, it isn't worth it." Warming to her subject she perched on the nearest desk and continued, "Love's a lot of hooey. It's all right in the movies but what I say is, leave it there." Susan laughed. She couldn't help it. Ray, with her dandelion head, her pretty face made up in what Aunt Jessie would have thought shameless fashion, Ray being philosophical, was really too funny!

"I'm telling you," Ray pursued the subject with relish, "Mamma says to me, she says, 'Don't you be going off and getting married like all these crazy kids in Edgewater, without a penny to their names.' Mamma says 'have a good time while you're young. You're only young once.'" Again Susan's wan smile answered her.

"No fooling," Ray asured her. "It's the bunk. They all step out, maybe to Crown Point or St. Joe or somewheres, and first thing you know they're having a baby and you see them pushing the buggy up and down Sheridan Road on Sunday afternoon and looking like they'd cut each other's throats for a nickel."

Her description was so painfully apt that Susan giggled. Ray had taken out her make-up kit and had begun meticulously to rub more raspberry colored salve into lips already flaming. Susan watched her, fascinated. For one wild moment her impulse was to confide in Ray. Surely this knowing little creature could tell her how to handle Denise Ackroyd. But some reserve held Susan silent.

"Boss gone?" Ray asked, glancing around casually. Susan said he was.

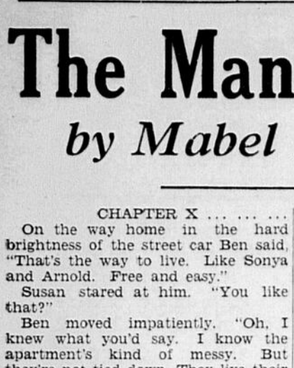

"That's swell," Ray approved. "He's a pill if you ask me. The kind that goes around with his nose in the air."

Susan frowned faintly. "He's been very kind to me," she said.

Ray sniffed. "What I always say is, I like a fellow with a little life in him. Some one," here she lowered her shrill voice ever so little, "some one like Jack Waring."

Susan was putting on her hat in front of the mirror and so she did not hear the soft footfall behind her and was utterly taken by surprise when two warm hands clamped themselves over her eyes. But she recognized the mocking voice saying, "Who takes my name in vain?" Scarlet, confused, she turned to find herself within arm's length of that philanderer, Jack Waring, himself.

A Perfumed Mist Based on

Japanese Flowers

There is a spray based on an extract of Japanese flowers. It was developed at Mellon Institute of Industrial Research by Rex Research Fellowship. Ten years and over $100,000 have been spent in perfecting it.

The name is Fly-Tox. When used in a new-type Fly-Tox sprayer, it fills the room with a cloud of perfumed mist, harmless to people, stainless to anything.

But that flower extract is deadly to flies and mosquitoes. It kills them quickly at a touch. And they can't escape if Fly-Tox is used rightly—to fill the whole room with that floating mist.

Fly-Tox, at a cost of 1 or 2 cents, rids a room completely of these deadly pests.

This is the latest, most efficient, most economical way to free your home—and keep it free—from these germ-bearing insects. They contaminate all foods they touch—infect when they bite. They destroy over 40,000 lives per year, mostly lives of children. Employ it liberally and often to be safe.

FLY-TOX ONLY

A Rex Research Product

Use Fly-Tox only, and always in a new-type Fly-Tox sprayer. Then every stroke will release into the air some 150,000 particles of spray.

Fly-Tox is efficient beyond all compare. It is all-pervading, quick and economical. Every lot is tested on flies in our laboratory. Its potency is guaranteed by every dealer. Use nothing less efficient when the safety of your home is at stake. Fly-Tox is sold everywhere throughout the world. Harmless to people. Stainless. Fly-Tox is made in Canada.

Pot Roasted Chicken

Cook with small amount of water in kettle or covered pan in oven.

Four to five-pound chicken, 4 tablespoons butter or other fat, 1 cup chopped celery and leaves, 2 tablespoons chopped onion, 2 or 3 sprigs parsley, cut fine, 2 cups fine bread crumbs, ½ teaspoon salt, pepper, ¼ teaspoon savory seasoning.

Dress and Stuff o

Select a plump chicken, draw, remove pin feathers and oil sac, wash and wipe dry inside and out. Sprinkle salt inside the chicken and fill it lightly with hot stuffing. Fold the wings back on the neck and tuck the legs into the band of skin and flesh below the tail. Rub the surface of the chicken with butter; sprinkle with salt, pepper and flour. Then put the chicken on a rack in a heavy kettle, add a small quantity of water, cover closely, and cook over low heat about two hours or until the chicken is tender. Then transfer the chicken to an open roasting pan. Add the drippings, baste well, and put in a moderately hot oven until brown. Serve with plain or giblet gravy.

Instead of cooking in a heavy kettle as indicated above, the chicken may be put in a covered pan and cooked until tender. Remove the cover during the end of the cooking for the chicken to brown.

For the savory dressing: Melt the fat in a skillet, add the celery, onion, and parsley and cook for a few minutes. Then add the bread crumbs and seasonings and stir until well mixed and hot. Sprinkle salt inside the chicken and fill it lightly with the hot stuffing.

Gravy: For each cup of gravy, use 2 tablespoons of the pan drippings and 1½ tablespoons of flour. Blend fat and flour thoroughly in the skillet, add 1 cup of milk, and stir until thickened. Add chopped parsley, salt and pepper to season. Add the giblets (chopped cooked) if desired.

PLEASANT COMPANY

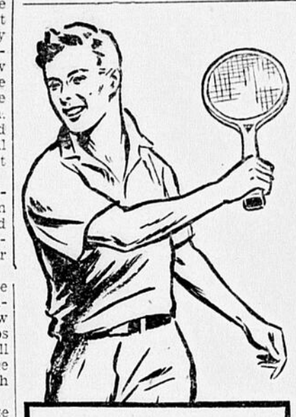

A magazine of the goldfish industry states that the sale of goldfish, goldfish bowls, fish food, castles, rocks, shells and aquatic plants for fish bowls has markedly increased during the depression period. Goldfish are more popular than ever before, they re welcome guests in every home. "And why shouldn't they be?" I ask, as I commune with my pet, Evangeline, serenely afloat in her transparent globe.

Her influence is soothing and restful. She doesn't say that conditions are the fault of any party. She does not say they are caused by capitalism, or over expansion, or speculation or world unrest. She doesn't say they are psychological. And she does not say they can be cured by this, that or the other thing.

She don't say nothin', she don't know nothin', she just keeps lolling along.

Mission Band Concert.—

The concert given by the Willing Workers Mission Band on Friday night, was, in the estimation of many people, the best entertainment given here for some time. The first item, the Flower Fairies, by the smallest members, each dressed to represent a flower, was very pretty. While not wishing to single out any one, we feel that special mention should be made of little Hazel Chalmers, who took the part of the Queen of the Fairies without any previous rehearsing, the little girl who had that part unfortunately being too ill to be present. The senior boys then gave an amusing sketch "The Mock Trial," followed by a study "A Day in the Life of a Foreign Missionary," in which both Senior and Junior members had a chance to display any latent talent. Violin and piano music by Mrs. Gibson and Miss Walker during intermission and between the acts was much enjoyed. The collection, taken up by four little girls in Hindu costumes, amounted to $12 80, while the members of the Y.W.A. realized $7.00 from sale of ice cream.

W. M. S. Meeting.—

A very largely attended meeting of the Women's Missionary Society was held on Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. J. W. Ross. Miss Millicent Walker, of Huntingdon, one of the Presbyterial Vice-Presidents, read a very interesting paper on Stewardship, stressing how the women of the church might use their needles and money in the furtherance of the spread of the gospel. At the close of the business meeting a delicious lunch was served by the hostess and a social time was enjoyed by all.

On Saturday afternoon a very interesting ball game was played between the Internationals and Athelstan on the local diamond. Who Gets Your Money?

The Local Merchant or the Foreign Merchant?

Do you realize that, as a customer you have a vital interest in buying Canadian-made goods from your local merchants? In this way:

1. You enable yourself to provide for your family.
2. You provide work for your fellow citizens.
3. Your money remains in the locality in which you earn your living and helps in its development.

If, on the contrary, you purchase foreign-made goods in stores that are owned by foreign organizations, you wrong yourself because in this way:

1. Your money supplies means of living to foreigners and makes for their prosperity instead of your own.
2. You deprive yourself and your fellow-citizens of employment.
3. Your fellow-citizens become servants in their own house and you must abide by the consequences.

Gurd's DRY GINGER ALE

CANADIAN GARDEN SERVICE 1932

Of the four seasons, spring alone is more important than the one just commencing, for the Canadian gardener. Not only at this time are the fruits of the earlier work harvested, but plants are prepared for the rigorour days of winter and even in the coldest districts of the Dominion there are certain flowers and vegetables to te put in now for an early start in 1933. Few people with any ground or window space at their disposal neglect the garden in April and May, but there are far too many, who overlook the possibilities of fall work. By taking advantage of the September and October planting season it is possible to give many things a much earlier start over those set out in the spring and it is also possible to furnish a wealth of bloom from spring flowering bulbs to bridge the gap until the annuals commence to show their colors.

General Fall Work

Under the heading general work, will come grass seeding, the introduction and moving of practically all perennial flowers, the planting of rose bushes, shrubs, ornamental and fruit trees, vines and practically any other nursery stock which is usually set out early in the spring but which may also be planted at this time. There will also be a certain amount of pruning of early flowering shrubs, the removal of all the old raspberry canes and a general clearing out of two year old wood from the climbing roses. Pea and bean vines, past bearing, and any other garden refuse including weeds, should be dug under. This sort of thing contains a certain amount of fertilizer and it adds humus, a valuable ingredient in both heavy and light soil. Later on when the wind begins to blow from the north and frost has laid everything low but the hardy October and November blooming chrysanthemums, some sort of winter protection in the form of leaves, strawy mulch or snow, will have to be considered but it is too early to think about this just now.

Sow Grass Seed

Grasses and clovers are cool weather planting and as a rule make their best growth either before or after the heat of summer. Generally speaking it is a waste of money and effort to sow seed in July or August, though this season, in Eastern Canada at least, those who did so were lucky. The reason of course, for such unusual growth—and this also explains the hay field which awaited the returning vacationist when he put away his fishing rod and brought out the lawn mower—was the unusually cool summer weather and the amount and frequency of the rain. In patching old lawns or sowing new ones, it is important to stir the soil thoroughly killing any weeds, and above all things to make as level as possible. Only the best lawn grass mixtures, especially blended to suit Canadian conditions, are recommended and these should be sown at the rate of at least one pound to every 200 square feet and more than this where sparrows and starlings are prevalent. Cover lightly by raking one way only. After seeding it is advisable to go over surface with roller or pounder.

Plant Bulbs Now

This is also the time to plant spring and winter flowering bulbs like the tulip, hyacinth, narcissus, daffodil and several others not so well known. These bulbs are growing rapidly in popularity in Canada and so they should because they are inexpensive and furnish wonderful blooms at a time when flowers are very much appreciated. For outside they may be set out from now until the ground freezes and by using several types a succession of bloom from easly May until late June can be obtained. Most of these bulbs, and especially the narcissus, daffodil, hyacinth, Chinese lily and early tulip, will also bloom indoors from late November until April, if the bulbs are planted in special garden fibre or ordinary loam in pots. They must be started in some cold dark place then gradually brought into full light and living room heat. If a few pots are planted each week from September until Christmas, a long succession of bloom will be obtained.

CHILDREN ENROLLED IN OLD ENGLISH COLLEGES

A curious possibility of the turning of the wheel is suggested by the plea which is being made for an earlier entry into the universities, partly in order that distressed modern parents may be relieved a little earlier of the cost of maintenance of sons and presumably, daughters. It is true that at present boys enter the university at an age when, over a long period, they would have been ready to leave. John Milton had only just passed his fifteenth birthday when he went up from St. Paul's school to Cambridge, and he was nineteen when he took his bachelor degree. Sir John Denham was sent to Oxford at Sixteen, though he seems to have behaved himself there very much after the fashion of some young fellows who have matriculated at a later age, for the future poet is described as a "dreaming young man, given more to dice and cards than study." But even fifteen or sixteen, which seems very early to us, would have seemed very late to the authorities of an earlier age, when "thousands of boys, huddled in bare lodging houses, clustering round teachers as poor as themselves, in church porch and house porch" took the place of "the brightly colored train of doctors and heads." It was in those days that scholars like "Edmund Rich, archbishop of Canterbury and saint in later days, came to Oxford, a boy of twelve years." The most ardent advocates of change would scarcely advise a return to those days.—Manchester (England) Guardian.

Keeping Floors in Good Condition

Nowadays waxed floors are found in practically every home. Excellent waxes are to be bought reasonably, and most women finish their varnished, stained or painted floor with a final coat of wax. It is an excellent preservative, and the look of a floor is vastly improved by its use. An old mop, washed and wound tightly with old soft material makes a good polisher, is not heavy to handle, and saves backache and tired knees. The first time a floor is waxed the result may be discouraging, but every time it is done the result is better, and in the application of wax, a thin coat evenly applied will give a hard finish, while an overdose of wax results in a smudgy appearance that is only removed by much polishing.

In addition to the covering of our floors with paint and stains, the use of linoleum has developed exceedingly, and linoleum is finding its way from the kitchen and passages into bedrooms, dining rooms and living rooms. It is a certain fact that an old floor properly covered with linoleum will really give a new for an old. The choice of linoleums will depend on the taste of the individual, although naturally there are special patterns suited for special purposes, and those of large patterns must be avoided in small rooms. But the life of all linoleum will be considerably lengthened if it is given proper care, and all dealers recommend that it be well waxed as protection against wear. Special varnish is procurable for linoleum and a coat of this on printed linoleum, or even on a cheap oilcloth, will be of value. Before waxing or varnishing new linoleum it is well to let it lie for a little while until it is properly stretched into shape, as wood surface, must be well cleansed before varnish is applied.

A novel method for rejuvenating old linoleum from which the pattern is worn is that known as the "Dapl-Art." After the linoleum is well cleansed, a coat of floor enamel is given, or, if necessary, two coats. Then with the help of a cheap sponge (cut in two) and a small tin of enamel of contrasting shade to the first, a dapple effect is produced. It is necessary to first dampen the sponge with water, so that it will not absorb the floor enamel. Then some of the enamel to be used for dappling is poured on to a flat tin. The sponge is pressed lightly into the wet enamel and transferred to the floor as in printing. This process is repeated until the floor is covered with the dapple effect. Two tones of brown or grey, Dutch blue over yellow, sage green over sand, or sand over blue, all give good results, and the worn linoleum is transformed into a newly patterned one.

TO TURN UP A NEAT HEM

Have you not sometimes seen coats (or perhaps worn them) which at the lower edge had a bulging blistered, wrinkled appearance, indicating that they had not been properly turned up? An improperly turned coat edge looks unsightly and can be quite easily avoided when the length or lining is being altered.

Small Seams

At the lower ends of the front facing the outside and facing are stitched in a seam inside, then turn to the right side, where this seam is pressed flat. Naturally, at this place there is not much of an allowance needed, merely enough for the seam, but the rest of the hem requires more material for turning up. There should be at least two inches allowed for this hem. After turning the hem up and making sure that the coat hangs straight and evenly, the hem should be basted in and then tacked at the top edge of the material. This should be done with a large loose catch-stitch, catching the hem edge to the coat material and taking care not to take up more than a single thread on the right side, but making the stitches on the wrong side at least an inch in length. These stitches will then be quite invisible from the right side of the garment.

There are several methods of turning up the lining, all of them good and practical. If there is an inner lining, which is usually of flannel the silk and flannel should be basted together at the edge, then a hem of an inch or so can be made with all the edges turned in and lightly felled to the flannel which places the hem between the lining and the outside. The lining should be left long enough to completely cover the turned-up coat edge with its catch stitching. Tack both lining and outside together at the seams, and fasten ends of the facing where it covers the end of the hem.

No Interlining

When there is no inner lining, the silk lining can be turned in about an inch above the coat edge and lightly hemmed down. First lay the coat on a table with its lining side up toward you; stretch the coat lengthwise as much as possible, then place a number of pins some inches above the lower edge, fastening the lining and outside together. Then turn the lining in at the bottom the desired amount and pin again at intervals, keeping the coat material smooth and even. Baste lightly to the inside of the hem only, and try the coat on. See that there is no tautness or wrinkling at the lower edge. Should there be any irregularity, rip the basting loose at this point and loosen or tighten the lining as may be needed to have it lie smooth. It can be easily seen whether the lining is too long or short, as it will either pull or hang below the coat edge.

The Queen Resumes Work

During the winter months there is little or no activity within a bee colony, for during the cold weather, the only matter of concern to the bees is to secure enough food and to keep warm. Sometime last fall the queen ceased her egg-laying, and as the combs became empty of brood they were filled with food for the winter. As the weather became cool the bees gradually clustered closer and closer around their queen until finally a fairly compact cluster was formed and, except during an occasional spell of warm weather, this cluster may remain unbroken for a period of five or six months. During the winter, the cluster moves about within the hive, at all times keeping in contact with the food supply. Towards spring an unknown something will inform the bees that summertime is again on its way and the cluster will gradually loosen and expand and in the centre of the cluster the queen will again resume her work of egg-laying. Only a few eggs are laid at the start, but as the days lengthen and the sun becomes stronger, the number gradually increases until as high as 2,500 may be deposited daily. In outdoor wintered colonies, egg-laying usually commences sometime during the month of March, depending greatly upon the weather. In some localities such activity may be resumed even earlier. Cellar wintered bees do not usually start so early as outdoor wintered bees, except under abnormal conditions. This early egg-laying is of great importance to the beekeeper, for it is the eggs laid during the spring and early summer that will produce the bees to gather the honey harvest. The larger the force of field bees at the commencement of the harvest the greater will be the crop, and it follows that the greater the number of eggs laid during the early part of the season, the larger will be the field force. To get the maximum number of eggs laid, three things are necessary (1) a vigorous and prolific queen; (2) an abundant food supply and (3) adequate protection from cold and changeable weather. Neglect to supply any one of the three will result either in starvation and death of the colonies or in colonies that are too weak in bees to gather a surplus of nectar when the honey flow is on.

Teacher: "Why, Tommy, surely you know what the word mirror means. What do you look at after you've washed, to see if your face is clean?"

Tommy: "The towel, Ma'am."

ANGEL, DEVIL'S FOOD

Fruits, Nuts and Chocolate Add to Popularity of Angel Cake

When eggs were seventy-five cents a dozen, women had an excuse to refuse the family that most palatable and delicious cake, called angel food. But now when eggs are little more than a cent each, the homemaker can give a party air to daily meals with these marvellous cakes.

While angel food requires care in the making, perfect results are easily obtained if the cook follows the recipe exactly. Remember, too, that air is the one and only leavening in angel food cake. This fact determines every step in the mixing. Sift flour several times in order to incorporate air in the mixture. Fresh eggs make the best cakes, but should be at least three days old to beat successfully. Cold storage eggs, or those preserved in brine or water glass will not have as much air beaten into them as into fresh eggs.

In beating the egg whites for angel food, a flat wire whisk should be used as more air can be enclosed with this than by any other method. Underbeaten egg whites have not as much air beaten in them as possible and will make the cake undersized, heavy and of coarse texture. Overbeaten egg whites make the cake dry. The wire whisk should enclose air until the egg whites are just stiff enough to hold up in peaks.

In mixing angel food, use the folding method—that is the down up and over motion. Cut down through the mixture and curving up and over enclose as much air as possible in the mixture. Work with speed but not in a hurry—a cake that stands around while the cook takes her time too deliberately is spoiled before it goes into the oven.

For perfect angel cake use the finest possible cake flour to obtain even texture, foamy light and white.

1 cup sifted cake flour, 1 teaspoon cream of tartar, 1 cup egg whites (8 to 19 eggs), 1¼ cups sifted granulated sugar, ¼ teaspoon salt, ¾ teaspoon vanilla, 1 teaspoon almond extract.

Sift flour once, measure, and sift four times more. Beat egg whites and salt on a large platter with flat wire whisk. When foamy, add cream of tartar and continue beating until eggs are stiff enough to hold up in peaks but not dry. Fold in sugar carefully, two tablespoons at a time until all is used. Fold in flavoring. Then sift small quantity of flour over mixture, fold in carefully; continue until all is used. Pour batter into ungreased angel food pan and bake at least one hour in slow oven. Begin at 275 and after 30 minutes increase heat slightly (325 F) and bake 30 minutes longer. Remove from oven and invert pan for 1 hour, or until cold.

Chocolate angel food cake varies the measurements of the above recipe slightly—

¾ cup sifted cake flour, ¼ teaspoon salt, 4 tablespoons cocoa, 1 teaspoon cream of tartar, 1¼ cups egg whites (10 to 12 eggs), 1¼ cups granulated sugar, 1 teaspoon vanilla.

Sift flour once, measure, add cocoa, and sift four times more. Then follow directions as for angel food, baking the cake in an ungreased angel food pan in slow oven for at least 1 hour.

The most unusual angel food, and wholly delicious is tutti-fruitti angel food. The recipe for angel food as given above is used and ¼ cup candied cherries, quartered, ¼ cup nut meats, chopped, ¼ cup southern style cocoanut is used.

Pour one half the cake batter of the first recipe into an ungreased angel food pan. Sprinkle fruit and nuts over it, then add rest of batter spreading evenly with a knife. Run knife through to bottom of pan to mix fruit evenly throughout. Bake in slow oven (275) for 1 hour, increasing heat slightly (325) after 30 minutes. Remove from oven and invert pan for 1 hour or until cold.

Wash Gloves Often

Gloves, like hose, wear all the better if they are washed frequently. Frequent cleansing of slightly soiled gloves is better than occasional washing of badly soiled ones, for ingrained dirt does more to weaken the fabric than many washings.

Gloves are very easy to clean. Chamois, doeskin and other gloves sold as washable can be slipped on the hands, then scoured with a brush dipped in lukewarm soapsuds. The brush should be firm, but not too stiff. A brush suitable for fingernails will be about right for gloves. The tips should receive special attention, for at crevices the grime works into the seams.

Gloves should receive the same treatment inside. After the outside is scrubbed and rinsed in clear lukewarm water, turn the gloves and scrub the inside with lukewarm soapsuds, then rinse again in clear lukewarm water.

Drying requires a bit of care. Roll the gloves first in a turkish towel to absorb excess moisture, then blow into each glove to get the fingers well separated and stuff the whole glove with tissue paper. This gives shape to the drying and prevents contact between colored stitching and any plain part of the glove that might otherwise become discolored.

Gloves should dry in mild heat, not near a stove or radiator, and not outdoors if it is cold. A towel rack in kitchen or bathroom will probably be the right spot.

If by any chance washable gloves show signs of stiffness, they can be made supple again by rinsing, after washing, in lukewarm water plus a teaspoon of olive oil.

Eighth Wonder of the World

Milan, the capital of Lombardy, is unquestionably the industrial metropolis of the country and essentially the sign and symbol of the new Italy. Indeed, there are few cities in Europe where the spirit of the Twentieth century is more firmly enthroned; yet it still radiates the atmosphere of a brilliant and glowing past and many great and ancient buildings remain to bear witness to the golden age of art. The marvelous cathedral of white marble is the eighth wonder of the world. Five centuries of effort and the genius of a whole series of gifted architects have gone into its making. The great edifice was begun in 1386 and reached its present form due to the generosity of Napoleon. The cathedral is a veritable architectural encyclopedia, a product of all the ages.

Seven-Minute Icing

1 egg white (unbeaten), ½ teaspoon cream tartar, 7-8 cup granulated sugar, 3 tablespoons cold water. Place in double boiler over hot water and beat with Dover egg beater seven minutes. Add flavoring. Remove from fire and beat until stiff enough to spread.

Babcock Milk Test

The Babock test for milk is a method of determining the quality of milk invented by Stephen Moulton Babock in 1890. The test is based on the fact that strong sulphuric acid will dissolve the nonfatty solid constituents. A definite quantity of the milk to be tested is placed with sulphuric acid in a bottle having a narrow graduated neck. The bottle is then whirled for a few moment in a centrifugal machine hot water is added to bring the liquid fat into the neck of the bottle, which is then whirled a second time, and the column of fat is read off on the graduate scale.

HOT DAYS CALL FOR COOL DISHES

Here are recipes for frozen salads and desserts made with evaporated milk. They will be welcome, too, because most of them have come from women who have solved that very modern problem of how to enjoy rich, sweet-tasting foods and yet retain that schoolgirl figure. For the secret of the popularity of evaporated milk in the preparation of salads and desserts lies, in part, in the fact that while it imparts a rich creamy flavor, it is much more "lean" than the fat-rich cream.

Evaporated milk has many other good qualities when used where cream is usually called for, but doubt if its popularity would be so great were it not for the fact that it is so comparatively fat free yet rich to the taste. This is because the 8 per cent. of butter-fat contained in evaporated milk is so thoroughly broken up and distributed throughout the body of the substance that the taste-buds actually encounted more fatty surfaces than they do in cream containing 25 per cent. butter-fat.

Frozen Fruit Salad

1 cup evaporated milk prepared for whipping, 2 tablespoons lemon juice, 1 cup mayonnaise, 3-8 cup pecans, ½ cup crushed, drained pineapple, ½ cup chopped white cherries, ½ cup chopped apricots, 1 small orange, chopped.

Heat milk to boiling point. Chill in bowl surrounded by ice and salt. Whip until stiff. Add lemon juice and mayonnaise and fold in lightly but thoroughly. Chop pecans and add chopped fruits. Then fold into milk-mayonnaise mixture. Turn into freezing pan and place in mechanical refrigerator. From 6 to 8 hours required for freezing. This salad may also be poured into a freezing mold or an ice cream can and packed with a 1:3 salt-ice mixture. About 3 or 4 hours will be required for freezing. Yield: 10 servings.

Frozen Cheese Salad

½ cup evaporated milk prepared for whipping, 2 tablespoons lemon juice, 3 oz. cream cheese (1 small pkg.), ¼ cup mayonnaise, ½ cup chopped dates, ½ cup crushed, drained pineapple.

Heat milk to boiling point and chill in a bowl surrounded by chopped ice and salt. Add lemon juice and fold in. Mash cheese and add mayonnaise Blend until soft and smooth. Fold into whipped milk. Add fruit and mix lightly but thoroughly. Turn into freezing pan and place in mechanical refrigerator. About 3 hours required for freezing. This salad may also be poured into a freezing mold or an ice cream can and packed with a 1:3 salt-ice mixture and frozen like a mousse. Yield: 6 servings.

Chocolate Mousse

1 cup evaporated milk prepared for whipping, 1 square bitter chocolate, ¼ cup evaporated milk, ¼ cup boiling water, 7 tablespoons sugar, 2 egg yolks, pinch salt, ½ teaspoon vanilla.

Chill 1 cup of milk in bowl surrounded by chipped ice and salt. Melt chocolate in top part of double boiler over hot water. Put the ¼ cup milk and the water in top part of second double boiler and add sugar. Heat to scalding point. Pour over well-beaten egg yolks, stirring constantly. Add salt. Return to double boiler and cook over slowly boiling water five minutes, stirring continuously to keep smooth. Pour egg mixture slowly over melted chocolate, stirring vigorously. This mixture is smooth and shiny. Cool and add vanilla. Whip milk until stiff and fold chocolate-milk mixture lightly but thoroughly into whipped milk. Turn in old freezing pan and place in mechanical refrigerator immediately. About 5 hours required for freezing. This mousse may also be poured into a freezing mold or an ice cream can and packed with a 1:3 salt-ice mixture. About 3 or 4 hours will be required for freezing. Yield: 6 servings.

PICKLES, SAUCES, RELISHES AND CHOWDER

Green Tomato Relish

One peck green tomatoes, ½ ripe tomatoes, ½ onions, 3 heads cabbage, ½ dozen green mangoes and same of red ones. Chop this all fine or run through coarse food chopper. Sprinkle with 1 pint salt, put in muslin bag and drain 24 hours. Then mix with the vegetables, 1 tablespoonful black pepper, same of mustard seed, cinnamon, ground mustard, 2 of celery seeds. Mix with this 3 pounds brown sugar and enough vinegar to make a thick mass. Heat 15 minutes and can hot.

Chili Sauce

Scald and peel 24 ripe tomatoes, and chop up with 2 red peppers, 2 green peppers and 2 large onions Put this into an enameled saucepan and add 4 cups vinegar, 1½ cups brown sugar, 2 level tablespoonfuls salt, 2 level teaspoonfuls allspice, same of cloves, nutmeg, cinnamon and ground ginger. Bring this to a boil, stirring frequently to prevent sticking, and boil until the sauce begins to thicken. The onions will then be well done. This should not require over an hour. Remove from stove, pack into jars and can while hot.

Mixed Pickles

Two hundred small cucumbers, 50 large ones, seeded and cut in long pieces, 1 quart small onions, whole; 3 heads cauliflower, shredded; 5 green sweet peppers, 1 quart Lima beans cooked tender. Put each in separate vessel and let stand in salt over night. Drain. Take vinegar enough to cover, add 1 pint prepared mustard 3 pounds brown sugar, 3 tablespoons celery seed and 8 of mustard seed, boil in the vinegar a few minutes, then add the vegetables. Boil and can while hot.

Pepper Hash

Take 1 dozen green and 1 dozen red sweet peppers, add 1 dozen medium-sized onions, chop fine, then cover with boiling water and let stand 15 minutes. Then drain, dry and add 3 tablespoonfuls salt, 2 pints vinegar and 2 cups granulated sugar. Cook 15 minutes and seal.

Sliced Cucumber Pickles

Select large cucumbers, a little larger than dill size. Cut in round slices one inch thick. To each gallon of the sliced cucumbers add ½ cup salt and cover with boiling water. Let stand 12 hours. Measure enough vinegar to cover pickles, add 1 cup brown sugar, 1 tablespoonful ground mustard, 1 teaspoonful turmeric, same of all-spice and cinnamon. Heat this mixture, add pickles. When boiling hot, can. This same dressing can be used for whole cucumbers.

French Tomato Pickles

Slice in earthen jar, 1 peck green tomatoes, 6 large onions and add 1 cup salt. Let stand 12 hours and drain. Add 1 quart vinegar, 3 pounds brown sugar, ¼ pound white mustard seed, 1 teaspoonful cloves, 1 teaspoonful ginger, 2 teaspoonfuls mustard, 1 teaspoonful cayenne. Cook slowly 15 minutes.

Tomato Catsup

Scald and peel 2 dozen large ripe tomatots and chop with them 4 large mangoes and 2 large onions. Put this on the stove and cook until the onions and mangoes are tender. Run this through a flour sieve or very fine wire colander. Place in an enamel or aluminum pan and add 4 cups cider vinegar, 1½ cups dark brown sugar, 2 level tablespoonfuls salt, 2 level teaspoonfuls each of all-spice, cloves, cinnamon and ground ginger. Bring this to a boil and keep stirring until it is boiled down to the required thickness. Pour into well-sterilized bottles or glass cans and seal while hot.

This same recipe is used for chili sauce except that the pulp of the tomato, onion and mangoes is left in.

Celery Chowder

One pound flour, 2 egg yolks, 2 pts. finely cut celery, 1 cup diced carrot, 1 small onion, minced, 2 lbs. butter. Salt and pepper to taste.

Cook the celery in water to cover until tender (the leaves and outer stalks may be used). Put through a sieve, saving the water for soup. Cook diced carrots until tender. Saute minced onion and carrot in the butter until delicately browned. Add the hot milk and thicken with the flour mixed with a little cold milk or water. Combine the vegetable and milk mixtures and cook together until well blended. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Just before serving add the beaten egg yolks. Serve with strips of toast.

A man who had spent all his life in active business passed to the spirit world. On arriving there he thought: "Now for some rest and perfect peace."

But after a few days a spirit tapped him on the shoulder and said: "Excuse me, sir; you are wanted on the ouija board."

A THORN IN THE FLESH

One of the most difficult things we are called to do is to come in frequent contact with aperson who irritates us constantly and not lose our sense of proportion. Most of us, at one time or another, have had to meet people who seem to rub us the wrong way no matter what they say or do. We may not actually dislike them but they keep us upset all the time. When you come to think about it, it is very foolish to allow any person, especially someone about whom we are indifferent, to spoil our dispositions and our happiness.

It was necessary for me to come in frequent contact with a woman who riled me all the time about trifling things. I finally shook myself mentally, and decided I was very weak-minded to allow anyone to make my whole life uncomfortable and that I was going to stop it. Fortunately, just at that time I read a book with a character in it very similar to this woman who was my bete-noir. I enjoyed the woman in the book immensely, so I wondered why I could not enjoy the woman in actual life. I started looking on her as a character on a book, You know when you are reading you will often be able to look ahead and to know just what the character will say and do in any given circumstance. You know what is going to happen, but enjoy reading about it anyhow. That is what I did with this woman: I thought ahead to see what she was apt to ay and do. When he did it, I was amused instead of annoyed. I supposed I was subtly flattered on my ability to read character. In any case the sting was gone. She still annoyed me, but not nearly so much, as I derived more amusement than annoyance from that time on. Try the scheme and see if it will work with your thorn in the flesh.

Let us know our Farms.

Farmers residing in Ormstown and Howick are invited to bring us a sample of their farm land so that we may tell them how much lime it needs. This sample should weigh about one pound and be taken from thick arable bed, in a field where the soil is of uniform quality. It is best to take many samples and mix them, then take from the mixture a sample which will represent all the field to its advantage. Farmers may bring as many samples as they please.

We will be in Ormstown, on September the 12th, from 8 a.m. to twelve o'clock, at the Earl Walsh Mill. Also at Howick on the same day from 1.30 p.m. until 6 p.m. at Mr. Arthur Brault's Mill.

Washington's Supremacy

Many estimates of George Washington's character have been written, but perhaps none is more interesting than that of the historian George Bancroft, who summarized the great first President as follows: "His faculties were so well balanced and combined that his constitution, free from excess, was tempered evenly with all the elements of activity and his mind resembled a well-organized commonwealth; his passions, which had the intensest vigor, owned allegiance to reason; and with all the fiery quickness of his spirit, his impetuous and massive will was held in check by consummate judgment. He had in his composition a calm which gave him in moments of highest excitement the power of self-control and enabled him to excel in patience, even when he had most cause for disgust."

CURE COOKING ACCIDENTS

If food does burn, place the saucepan in a large pan of cold water, remove lid, and let stand for half an hour; then reheat the unscorched parts, being careful not to include any food that bears evidence of being burned.

Obliterating the Taste

Scorched foods usually require additional seasoning to disguise the accident. A few grains of salt will minimize the scorched taste in milk or in cream soups. A spoonful of peanut butter dissolved in a cream soup or sauce that has been scorched will obliterate the distasteful flavor.

The Double Boiler

Another preventive is the use of a double boiler. Whenever a recipe gives one the choice of using a double for slow cooking or the rapid process with an ordinary sauce pan, the double boiler is the safer choice.

Curdling is another cooking accident usually due to too high temperature. If this occurs in a custard it may be rescued by pouring into another dish, whipping with an egg-beater, then returning it to the stove and baking in a moderate heat. The addition of another eggyolk is also a help.

Curdled sauce and salad dressing can be made smooth again by whipping with an eggbeater.

When Bobby went to visit his grandmother he was much interested in whatever went on in the kitchen. One day she said to him, "I'm going to make you a nice little pie in a saucer, all for yourself. Don't you think I'm pretty good to take so much trouble?"

Bobby pondered. "Grandma," he said at length, "mother told me not to be a bother, and if it's goin' to be any trouble you can just as well make my pie reg'lar size."

Foamy Honey Sauce

One-fourth cup honey, ¼ cup butter, 1 cup powdered sugar, 1 egg well beaten, 1 cup whipping cream.

Cream honey and butter. Add powdered sugar gradually. Add egg. Just before serving add whipped cream. Excellent sauce for puddings.

FOOD PREJUDICES

Many of use are prejudiced against certain foods. We avoid them because we dislike them. Some people secure a considerable amount of pleasure in telling us about the foods they dislike and explaining why they dislike them.

A feeling of dislike for some particular food is frequently the result of an unpleasant introduction to that article of diet. In our minds it is associated with something unpleasant and for that reason we avoid it since we only like things which please us. We would like practically all foods if they were introduced to us in small quantities, just enough to taste, until we have become used to them. We do not acquire a liking for olives by being forced to eat a large number of them the first time. We eat one, or part of one; later we repeat the sampling and then we find that we "like olives."

The idea that some food disagrees is very often the result of that food being associated with the occurrence of some digestive upset. The fact that it had nothing to do with the upset does not banish the dislike as long as the two are associated in the mind. There is no reason why you should not like one food more than another. If one does not want to eat some non-essential food, there is no reason why he should, except that as one of the family, it may be rather a nuisance in planning the meals. It is much more comfortable for everyone if you eat everything.

The person who sits down to the table and enjoys whatever food is prepared is the one who has the right attitude towards food, an attitude which all normal people should have. It is not desirable to be thinking of food in the sense of its relative value as you eat it. The one who prepares the meals is the one to assume responsibility for the required variety of food and the regular appearance of milk, fruits, green vegetables and eggs on the table. The pleasant duty of the family is to consume and enjoy what is placed before them and not to fuss about it.

If you have acquired a prejudice against some food, you had better get rid of it. Start by taking a very small amount of it whenever it is prepared. Take it along with something else that you particularly like, and in a short time you will be able to laugh at your old dislike.

From what has been said, it is obvious that the selection of an adequate variety of food rests with the housewife. It is she who is also responsible for its proper preparation and for serving it in an attractive manner. She should introduce new foods in small quantities along with well-liked ones. It is best for her to ignore the food prejudices of the various members of the family, for if they are encouraged, they become the more firmly fixed in their dislikes.

Little Frank, who had removed with his family to a new house, was taken to visit the new tenants of the old home, with whom his mother was on friendly terms.

The chief object of interest was a recently arrived baby. Frank was much taken with the infant, and on his way home remarked:—

"Mother, it's a pity we moved from that house. If we'd stayed a bit longer we should have got that baby."

A VANISHING TRIO

An interesting news story records the impressions of an old-time harnessmaker who is well past the allotted span of life. There is pathos in the narrative. Time was, and not so long ago, where there were few places more attractive than the harness shop, where the horses came to be outfitted; and now such a store hardly can be found. In country towns the harness shop had rare charm for the country boy, whose visit was not complete without a chance to jingle the long strings of sleigh-bells, while he inhaled the pungent odor of leather, and watched the cutters at their work.

There was ready-made harness; also the made-to-order variety. Just as with man the horse of standard size was easily fitted, while the big fellows who had run to grith or had other unusual physical outlines had to be measured. Altogether, it was a nice business, and between the skilled harness-maker and the artistic tailor there was something like a bond of sympathy. Fitting was their business, and they were proud of their work.

The tailor remains in business but the harnessmaker is passing from the scene. Hand-in-hand, the harness shop and the livery stable are walking slowly down the road that leads to oblivion; and not far behind goes the blacksmith. Great glaring garages and oil stations have usurped their places not only in the cities but in towns and villages, and even at the crossroads. Saddles and bridles may be seen when the thoroughbreds step about the race-tracks; and the odd heavy draught gray horse is dressed up in the old way, but the harness business has seen its great day.

The youth: "Mr. Jones, I want to marry your daughter."

Mr. Jones: "Can you run a car and buy gasoline in the manner to which she has been accustomed?"
