The King Practiced With Tommy Gun When Invasion Threatened Britain

Prime Minister Winston Churchill in a moving address of congratulation to King George on the victorious conclusion of the war in Europe disclosed to the House of Commons that in the days when Britain was threatened with invasion, the King practiced with a tommy gun and rifle in the garden of Buckingham Palace.

Mr. Churchill said that during the first days of his administration in 1940, the King often came into their luncheon conferences from his target practice.

"If it had come to a last stand in London—a matter which had been considered at one time," said Mr. Churchill, "I have no doubt that His Majesty would have come very near to departing from his usual constitutional correctness by disregarding the advice of his Ministers."

In a warm tribute to the steadfastness and leadership of the King Mr. Churchill said with emotion:

"I do not think any Prime Minister has ever received so much personal kindness and encouragement from his sovereign as I have. He is well beloved because of his courage, of his simple way of living and of his tireless attention to duty."

The Prime Minister also extolled Queen Elizabeth for her war work. "I am sure," he said, "that many an aching heart has found some solace in her gracious smile."

Mr. Churchill said the King receives him in audience once a week when most of their business is done at lunch.

"We have the strongest Parliament in the world," Mr. Churchill said, in conclusion. "We have the oldest and most famous, most honored, most secure and most serviceable monarchy in the world."

"The King and Parliament both rest safely and solidly upon the will of the people expressed by free and fair election on a basis of universal suffrage."

Three Centuries Of Wheat Growing

The growing of wheat in Canada can be traced back approximately 340 years to the summer of 1605, when a French settlement in the Maritimes cut the first crop. Today one of Canada's leading export commodities, Canadian wheat, was being exported as far back as 1754 to the tune of 80,000 bushels.

Britain 'Drafts' POW For Work

Nazi Captives in Britain To Help Clear 'Blitz' Areas

The British Ministry of Works announced German prisoners of war would start work at once to help rebuild damage they caused in Britain.

No fanatical Nazis will be allowed in the battalions that will work on roadmaking, drainage, site preparation, sewer construction, and clearing of rubble from bombed buildings.

Britain needs a million houses at this present moment. If orthodox labor markets only are tapped there is not the slightest chance of getting sufficient help. For the coming year Britain will have available only half the number of building workers it employed in 1939.

Under War Office
The War Office will settle how long they work, what conditions they will work under, and what and how much food they will eat, and where they will live. But the Ministry of Works and Buildings says that the employment of prisoners won't mean that a single British workman will be out of a job.

The utmost care will be taken to safeguard the conditions of British labor, and for this reason chiefly it is intended to use prisoners only on unskilled work.

Considerable hopes are entertained that a satisfactory amount of work will be got out of German prisoners working under the new plan. In agricultural work, especially in Yorkshire, they have done quite a good job for a few shillings a week, and there seems no reason why they shouldn't answer just as well in demolishing rubble as in raising crops.

Churchill: 'Carry On With The Coffee'

Prime Minister Churchill sat calmly drinking coffee when a bomb damaged 10 Downing street during the German air blitz on London. It was disclosed recently, Churchill was dining when the ceiling and chandelier hurtled down. He merely said: "Carry on with the coffee."

Britain Recruiting Demolition Squads

Whatever methods are employed by the United States and Russia to make it impossible for German industry to engage again in the manufacture of weapons and war material, Great Britain's modus operandi has already been decided on every definite line, it has been made known to the Ministry of Labor.

More than 10,000 British scientists and technicians are being recruited for the British Control Commission to "blue-print" German war industry for "treatment" by Allied dynamiters and demolition squads.

"We are recruiting technicians and scientists with experience in twenty different industries," a Labor Ministry official informed the Industrial correspondent of the London Daily Mail. Only eight of these are not solely engaged in war production. The rest are to be faithfully dealt with under the Yalta agreement. Death warrants have been signed for armament and shipbuilding industries.

Farm Machinery Goes To UNRRA

One of the most pressing needs of the liberated peoples of Europe is farm machinery. Canada has undertaken to supply UNRRA with 22,500 tons. This, plus our exports to our old markets, will take 30 per cent. of all we produce. The rest—70 per cent.—is distributed through a permit system to farmers who can show the most urgent need, and to servicemen being established on farms under the Veterans' Land Act.

Canada's total milk production for 1944 is estimated at 17,600,000, 000 pounds.

WHAT SCIENCE IS DOING

Ash Bricks

British scientists have produced a new fire-proof building material from waste ash which may save millions of dollars annually.

It is claimed that its strength improves with age; it is not influenced by frost or damp, it is vermin-proof; it can be plastered, papered and painted in color, sawn to any shape and will take screws and nails.

The new material is, made from waste product of electricity power-stations the ash residue from furnaces which burn pulverized coal.

It is claimed that over 800 million bricks could be produced in Britain with the ash, which is now thrown away, at an approximate cost of $6,645,000 a year.

The ash bricks have already been used in the construction of offices and workshops and one new housing estate in Central England is to have the first house built entirely of them.

Robot's Limitations

One of the biggest problems of modern farming is labor-saving machinery, according to a BBC broadcast. The cowmen on my neighbor's farm phrased it rather neatly when a milking machine was installed. He said: "Well, er may be all right for milking but what other use is it? I've been a milking machine for forty years, but I can lay a hedge or make a stack or hoe a turnip. You try taking this thing out and show er a turnip."

Princess of Gratzen

LOUIS ARTHUR CUNNINGHAM

CHAPTER III

"The Princess understands and speaks a little French, Madame Laurin," said Rudolph. "Likewise Pol Martin and Rosine. You may be sure they will learn fast."
"We shall have good teachers, isn't it?" Meridel's slow, sweet smile warmed the old lady's heart. She wanted to embrace Meridel and these little ones, tell them they were safe from the terror now, away forever from fear and hunger and hate and misery.
"Come on, Bonhomme Fricot," said little Rosine to Pol Martin. The old lady stared. Meridel laughed, a gay, silvery laugh. "It is a nickname from a game they play. Bonhomme Fricot is a hero of theirs. He is like the Pied Piper. In reality he was some queer old one who did much good in the village in France where they refuted, these little ones, after Gratzen was — was trampled into the ground. I was in Paris then. By luck I found Pol Martin and Rosine among the homeless thousands."

"Bonhomme Fricot," said Rosine gravely, "was shot dead by a German soldier. We saw the soldier go into Bonhomme Fricot's house and come out and we saw Bonhomme Fricot's poor dead body lying there in his hut and then we all had to run, for the Panzers were coming into St. Como and—"
"Please come, Rosine," said Meridel. "And try to forget those things."

"We will not forget Bonhomme Fricot," said Pol Martin. "Not ever. When we were starving he gave us chocolate. Everyone in St. Como loved him. He used to teach us games when we hid from the Stukas—and he taught us to sing."
They sang the ancient roundelay that Madame herself had sung in childhood, as they marched upstairs.

The thick door of Madame's own suite closed on the childish voices. Madame stood in the hall with Rudolph and looked at him a moment and smiled and nodded. "It is the best play I was ever in," said old Mimi Fabre, "and the loveliest role I ever enacted."
"And I, Madame," said Rudolph with a deep and humble bow, "have never before witnessed such superb acting."

Madame had moved her intimate possessions, her clothes, her countless knickknacks and photos to the housekeeper's apartment in the north wing.

She went to her new quarters where already she had begun to arrange her things. There had been a sad moment when going through them she had come upon Michel's photographs — Michel as he had been three years before, a few days preceding the time he had said, "Darn it, Tante Mimi, I shall go to France if I want to, I shall lead the life I choose, I shall be a painter, a poet, a tramp — anything I like; and I don't care if I never earn an honest penny. I'm tired of your dictator ways. I won't be regimented any longer. Roger can take it, seemingly, and he's welcome to it, I'm off."

And away he was too, that very night, even though she had risen to magnificent heights of invective, threatenings and pleadings. He should never have a cent of her money — he didn't want it. His brother Roger should have it all, he was welcome to it. He was the most ungrateful of nephews — he wasn't, but she was the most arrogant and overbearing of aunts.

Madame had flung Michel's picture in a trunk that night and tried to put him forever out of her heart. She had heard no word of him in the years between, nor had his brother Roger, who was now with the air force; nor had anyone else. If he had gone to France as he'd planned, perhaps they would never know what had become of him. Wild young devil anyway; volatile, hot-tempered, reckless and devoid of any fear of self-consciousness. The old lady had set his picture in its chrome frame in her dresser and had taken it up to look at it, holding it close to her, when she heard Roger's step on the stairs.
She put down the picture hastily, but Roger's dark eyes found it at once. "Forgiven him, Tante Mimi?"
"None of your business." She gave him her cheek to kiss. "And why are you sneaking up the back stairs?"
"You told me to, over the phone — don't you remember? I'm the housekeeper's nephew now. What is all this anyway?"

"It's Rudolph. He's the Baron Rudi de Morpin. The princess is his niece. He's been letting everyone in this silly little country of his think he owns Philibert and is worth a million. I didn't have the heart to tell these poor, hunted children that he's only the butler, Roger. He would have been cruel to do so. Had you seen them when they first walked into Philibert this evening—"

"I can imagine," said Roger slowly. He sprawled out in an easy chair, a tall, elegant figure in the uniform of a flight lieutenant. He had been over and back twice. "I'm glad you did it, Tante Mimi. It was like you, I'd never think of such a thing. I'd have made a mess of the situation. You and Mike are the ones who think of the fitting thing to do. I'm glad you've forgiven Mike — it's about time you brought his handsome mug out of the ash can. He was always your favourite, wasn't he?"
"That ungrateful, headstrong, irresponsible—"

Roger held up his hand. "He's you all over, that's why the two of you were always fighting. But underneath it all, Madame Fabre-Lusignan, Mike was the apple of your eye and you know it. The harder you yelled at him, the louder you swore at him, the more you loved him."

The old lady scowled fiercely, then blew her nose and grabbed hastily for a cigarette. "You're too smart, you, Roger — always were — too darned smart."

Roger grinned, shook his head. "I'll never be able to outsmart you, Duchess. Now what about the royal guests? Is the housekeeper's nephew permitted to have a peep at them?"
"They are at dinner now. I take it you dined before you came here?"

CHRONICLES of GINGER FARM

By Gwendoline P. Clarke

Life is a queer business. Sometimes it is difficult to write because there is so little to write about; other times it is difficult because there is so much. This is definitely one of those "so much" occasions. Even yet it doesn't seem possible that the war in Europe is over. Partner said this afternoon—"I suppose it won't be long now before the boy is home again!" That, too, is hard to believe. We said good-bye to our son, determinedly resigning ourselves to a parting that might stretch out into years. And now it may be a little less than a year before we see him again. And in that we realize how extremely fortunate we have been. Naturally we hope our good fortune may continue—but we are not out to count our chickens yet.

Every day brings fresh news from Europe. Goerring captured... Quising on trial... and surely the most forgiving souls must be glad that these inhuman monsters will soon meet the fate they so richly deserve. As for Hitler—very few people believe even yet that he is dead. I hope he isn't. I hope he is hiding some where, cringing in fear of the fate that awaits him. And oh, how I hope they catch Himmler!
Yes, the end of the war in Europe, and its far reaching results have occupied our attention so much that it has almost stopped us talking about the weather. Any other time we would be saying plenty. Such a spring! There are many farmers in Halton county who haven't finished seeding yet. In fact there are a few who never even started. Some, of course, managed to get through—that is on the lighter soil—while a few had to sow over again.

And such weather for chickens! Last Thursday we had another 200 arrive by train. And on that day it snowed again. It wasn't cold enough for snow to settle but what a wet sticky path there was from the house to the chicken pens. Partner finally put boards down—and now I find walking the boards quite a feat in the art of keeping my balance. If the boards were over a creek I would have been drowned long ago. Of course the little chickens inside their warm, dry pen, found little to worry about, but the pullets, now seven weeks old, and without any artificial heat, looked as if they regretted being hatched out to face such a damp, dismal world.

However there are other feathered friends that we find a little more cheery. To my great joy a pair of bluebirds are nesting near the house. We haven't seen blue birds around here for years. Ah how I love them! Perhaps it is only because of Maeterlinck's story—but I always feel that bluebirds are a good omen—that where there are bluebirds there is happiness. That flash of heavenly blue among the trees often seems to me like a message of courage and hope straight from God!

I wish I liked chickens as well as I like bluebirds. Of course I just love them when they are small—the chickens I mean—but after they are about six weeks old there are times when I wish I had never seen a chicken. Will they roost where you want them to? Not a bit of it. They will fill up the roosts in the daytime all right, especially when they take their afternoon nap—but they stubbornly avoid anything that looks like a roost at night and bunch up together all over the floor. And if there is one place where they shouldn't be that is where you find them. Children and chickens are very much alike in one way—the younger they are the less trouble they give. How well I remember my mother saying—"I wish you children were all in your cradles again—you were not half the worry to me when you were small that you are now!"

I imagine that feeling will find an echo in a good many other mother hearts. It has done in mine upon occasion. But chickens and children come through that stage—and for that we can all be truly thankful.

TABLE TALKS

Three Favorites

In answer to many requests the Consumer Section, Dominion Department of Agriculture, are repeating three favourite recipes today. "Crinkles," the wartime cookie with the peace-time taste, are popular from Charlottetown to Victoria. "Whipped Jelly Sauce" simply never fails, and as added attractions it is easily prepared, is delicious in flavour, gives colour and can be used with many different desserts. "Lunch in a Bowl" is a hearty soup of the main dish type. Add a salad and an easy dessert and presto... supper is ready.

Crinkles

¼ cup mild flavoured fat
¼ cup brown sugar
¼ cup white sugar
1 cup sifted all-purpose flour OR
1 cup plus 2 tablespoons sifted pastry flour
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup rolled oats
¼ cup warm water
½ teaspoon baking soda
¼ teaspoon vanilla
Cream fat and sugars thoroughly. Mix flour, salt and rolled oats and add alternately with water in which the soda has been dissolved. Add vanilla, drop from teaspoon on to a cookie sheet and flatten with fork. Bake in a moderate oven, 350 F, for 10 to 12 minutes. Yield: 2 dozen cookies.

Whipped Jelly Sauce
¾ cup fruit jelly (cranapple, red currant, etc.)
1 egg white, unbeaten
pinch of salt
Melt jelly in a bowl over hot water. Add egg white and salt, and beat with rotary egg beater until stiff. Cool. Six servings.

Lunch in a Bowl
¾ lb. bologna (in one piece)
2½ cups water
1 carrot, diced
1 onion, chopped
1 potato, diced
1 cup shredded cabbage
3 cups canned tomatoes
1½ teaspoons salt
Pepper to taste
6 rounds of toast
¼ cup grated cheese
Cut bologna into small dice, add water, cover closely and simmer for 30 minutes. Add vegetables and seasonings, cover and simmer until vegetables are tender. Sprinkle toast rounds with grated cheese, place under broiler until cheese melts. Serve in individual bowls with toast rounds. Five to six servings.

Over 8,000 Schools Destroyed In Russia

It would be difficult to form an estimate of the entire damage suffered by Russia during the German occupation. The losses inflicted on the public education system of the Ukraine alone amount to two billion rubles. Over 8,000 elementary schools were destroyed, as was the home of that citadel of Ukrainian culture, Kiev University, planned by the famous architect Beretti.
