In Pyongyang, finding history and comfort in 'Gone with the Wind'

By Tim Sullivan
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
PYONGYANG, NORTH KOREA

The former black marketeer has read it. So has the beautiful young librarian, and the aging philosophy professor who has spent his life teaching the ruling doctrine of this isolated outpost of totalitarian socialism. At times it seems as if everyone in Pyongyang, a city full of monuments to its own mythology, has read the book.

In it they found a tortured love story, or a parable of bourgeois decline. Many found heroes. They lost themselves in the story of a nation divided by war, its defeated cities reduced to smoulder and ruins, its numbed aristocrats reduced to starvation.

The book is "Gone With the Wind."

To come across Margaret Mitchell's 1936 Civil War epic in North Korea is to stumble over the unlikeliest of American cultural touchstones in the unlikeliest of places.

What does antebellum plantation life have to do with North Korea, where three generations of rulers — grandfather, father and now the young son, Kim Jong Un — have been worshipped as omniscient? What appeal does Scarlett O'Hara's high-society ruthlessness hold for people only a few years past a horrific famine?

And yet here, in a country thought to have the world's tightest censorship net, a place where the literary culture was largely inherited from Joseph Stalin, the government has published a novel that longs for the days of the slave-owning American South.

Maybe the explanation is in Mitchell's own words.

"They had known war and terror and hunger, had seen dear ones dead before their times," Mitchell writes of postwar southerners. "They had hungered and been ragged and lived with the wolf at the door. And they had rebuilt fortune from ruin."

In "Gone With the Wind," North Koreans found echoes of their own history and insights into the United States: bloody civil wars fought nearly a century apart; two cities — Atlanta and Pyongyang — reduced to rubble after attacks by US forces; two cultures that still celebrate the way they stood up to the Yankees. If North Koreans have yet to find fortune, they haven't given up.

"In North Korea only the strong survive," said the onetime black marketeer, a former salesman of used televisions who spent much of his life in Pyongyang but who eventually escaped to South Korea. "That's the most compelling message of the novel."

Perhaps more than anything, though, North Koreans found what readers everywhere ask of a good novel: an escape and a comfort. And in a country with little in the way of entertainment, a police state that keeps the entire population relentlessly on edge, Mitchell's well-told (if relentlessly soapy) tale of lost love, mansion life, war and honour became an important refuge.

Ambitious young North Korean women, raised amid deeply entrenched sexism, find inspiration in Scarlett's rise from ruin. Men revel in the muscularity of her swashbuckling love, Rhett Butler. People struggling with a lack of heat in winter, or political infighting, or the everyday pain of a marriage gone to hell can disappear into Mitchell's story.

It also moved into official life. The movie, forbidden to the general public but beloved by the former dictator and movie buff, Kim Jong Il, is sometimes used in English-language programs to train elite government officials. North Korean negotiators meeting with US envoys would occasionally quote from it, once replying to American criticism with the quote (which perfectionists might note is slightly off from the book and the movie): "Frankly, Scarlett, I don't give a damn."

Ask around in this capital city, an enclave of North Korea's educated elite, and nearly everyone has something to say about it.

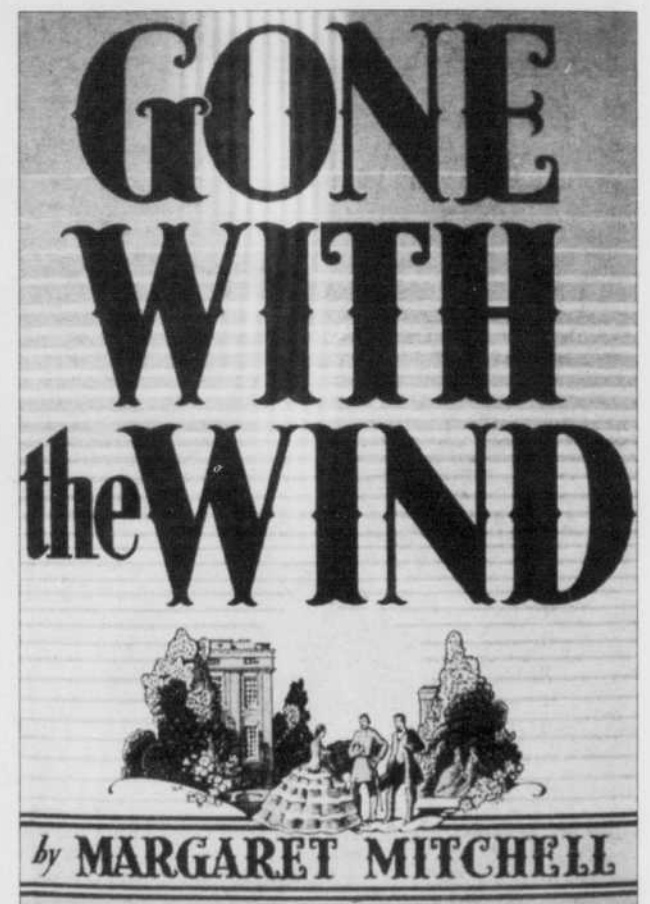

"Scarlett is a strong woman," said Pak Su Mi, a twenty-something guide at Pyongyang's main library, The Grand People's Study House, a maze of house-sized rooms lit by stuttering fluorescent lights where the smell of mildew often hangs heavily.

In a country where women's fashions were long frozen in Soviet-style dowdiness, men watched intently as Pak strode through the library in her tight skirt, heels clacking on the concrete floors. "But the triangle relationship between Scarlett, Rhett Butler and Ashley, I didn't like that," she said.

The games that Scarlett learned in the whirl of plantation life — to toy with men, to hide her intelligence, to dangle her sexuality — reinforced the worst American stereotypes.

"I have to be loyal to my man, not be thinking of another man," Pak said.

Guides at places like the Study House are groomed to interact with foreigners, and are well-versed sliding propaganda into conversations. Pak didn't miss her chance.

"In my country," she noted, pressing a button for the elevator, "the woman is more important in relationships."

"Gone With the Wind" is one of the bestselling novels in modern history, and remains a talisman in the American South, where Mitchell's vision of a lost aristocracy often pushes aside the complexities of Civil War history. It still sells about 50,000 copies worldwide every year, according to its publisher, Scribner.

When it was released, though, it sold copies by the million. It was popular from England to Nazi Germany to imperial Japan, which then occupied the entire Korean peninsula.

The book, which the Japanese probably brought to Korea in the 1930s, is thought to have largely disappeared from here by the end of the 1950-1953 Korean War. By then, the peninsula was firmly divided, many cities were shattered, and North Korea's founder, Kim Il Sung, was building a Stalinist police state.

When the government suddenly ordered it translated and released in the mid-1990s, a time when North Korea's all-important Soviet support had disappeared and famine was looming, it swept like a literary firestorm through Pyongyang. The book scene here has long been dominated by detective stories and romance novels riven with heavy-handed propaganda, and classic foreign novels like "Don Quixote."

"For a while, you couldn't have a conversation without talking about 'Gone With the Wind,'" said the former Pyongyang TV trader, who spoke on condition he not be identified, fearing repercussions against relatives still living in the North.

Why it was published, though, remains unclear.

While Washington and Pyongyang are still technically at war, and hatred for the United States government is a constant in North Korean propaganda, American culture has always been quietly popular

The Time Jumpers

Texas and Nashville music as it used to be played

COUNTRY CONNECTION

JESSIE AULIS

The Time Jumpers play country music, real country music at a time when few do. They started out in Nashville in 1998 as a group of the best studio musicians who wanted to play together for pure pleasure.

Monday evenings were the slowest of the week at the Station Inn club in Nashville, so they were able to get a weekly gig immediately. If you gather all that talent on a stage, anywhere, people will soon take notice.

That is exactly what happened and The Time Jumpers had to move, to a much larger nightclub in downtown Nashville to accommodate the crowds who wanted to see their Monday night shows.

Comprised of Dawn Sears, Ranger Doug Green, Andy Reiss, Dennis Crouch, Jeff Taylor, Joe Spivey, Larry Franklin, Paul Franklin, Billy Thomas, Kenny Sears, and Vince Gill, the band's talent is equalled only by their passion for the music and the magnificence of their interpretations.

This ensemble has three ace fiddle players, an amazing accordion player in Jeff Taylor (Elvis Costello, Paul Simon), a steel legend in Paul Franklin (Alan Jackson, Mark Knopfler) and a bass legend in the making in Dennis Crouch (Robert Plant, Gregg Allman) and Ranger Doug, from Riders in the Sky, among the band's several other players and singers.

For country music fans, Gill may be the only well-known name in the group, but the Rounders Record bio that describes the band members as people who have "made major contributions to the richness and vigour of country music" isn't exaggerating.

The Time Jumpers are truly bringing country music back to Music City. They revisit classics and add new songs to their swing and honky-tonk repertoire. There's sophistication to their great improvisation and soulful lead and harmony vocals.

They are making music in the spirit of Bob Wills and His Texas Playboys, and they have just released the 11-piece Western swing band's, self-titled Rounder Records debut.

Several of the band members wrote or co-wrote the album's nine original songs.

Vince Gill contributes five of the 12 tracks on the album. The group didn't want to simply cover old Bob Wills tunes, so they tried to craft timeless songs in the same genre. The Time Jumpers feature four lead singers taking turns, Vince Gill along with the delightful Dawn Sears, her husband Kenny Sears and Ranger Doug Green (of Riders in the Sky).

"New Star Over Texas" is a new song but it sounds like it could have been written and recorded years ago by Ray Price. The Time Jumpers' cover of Johnny Mercer and Robert Emmet Dolan's "Yodel Blues" finds Gill, Dawn Sears and Ranger Doug showing off on vocal and harmonies.

"The Woman of My Dream" has the essence of what the Texas Playboys did in their time but it still has its own identity as one of Gill's songs. "On the Outskirts of Town" will make you want to dance even if you never did before. But the heartbreaking "Three Sides to Every Story" has all the hallmarks of an instant country classic.

The band also crosses over to other classic genres with the same reverence that they have for Western Swing. From the smoky jazz number "Faint of Heart," which Gill co-penned but features Dawn Sears' strong voice, to the bouncy cowboy song "Ridin' on the Rio," which is a salute to Ranger Doug (the front man of the group Riders in the Sky), it is nothing short than a pure delight.

They also include wisely chosen covers (Johnny Mercer's "Yodel Blues," Harlan Howard's "Someone Had to Teach You"). After a couple of listens, it's hard to imagine how the album could have been done in a better or more sincere way.

In an era when electric guitar dominates on catchy party anthems and singers deliver odes about pickup trucks, we have mainstream country radio where the most popular country artists make music rooted in 1970s Southern rock or '80s arena rock sounds, rather than the old-school country traditions.

It is not the type of music they play (Western swing, more or less), the real reason is the amazing and legendary musicianship they bring to the stage that seduces. This band is one of the tightest professional groups anywhere, and their performances are infectious.

Because these Nashville musicians each have professional commitments of their own, they probably won't be going on a massive tour to support this record, and it'll be a miracle if the album gets some radio play because of the Top 40 format so popular now. But The Time Jumpers album is highly recommended for fans of top-notch musicianship, and of Texas and Nashville music as it used to be played.

The Time Jumpers is quite simply one of the best records of 2012. The dexterity

Real life candidates have a starring role, but viewers embrace TV's make believe politicians

By Frazier Moore
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It seems you just can't watch TV without confronting politics. And that's not just the glut of campaign coverage, now reaching its feverish climax.

No, the high drama of this political season has been echoed by episodic TV this season. If candidates in real life are often criticized for playing roles and relying on scripts, these TV shows' pretend politicians make no bones about it.

This isn't anything new. Years ago, viewers celebrated the presidency of Jed Bartlet on "The West Wing." Fans of "The Wire" savored the ascent of Tommy Carcetti from the Baltimore city council to the Maryland governor's office. Michael J. Fox, and then Charlie Sheen, worked for New York Mayor Winston on the sitcom, "Spin City."

And don't forget HBO's hapless Vice-President Selina Meyer. Played by Julia Louis-Dreyfus, she'll be back with the comedy "Veep" next year.

But who's in office right now?

— CBS' "The Good Wife" is set in a Chicago law firm, but it has always had a political streak, thanks to Peter Florrick, estranged husband of attorney Alicia Florrick (series star Julianna Margulies).

Played by Chris Noth, he was the state's attorney who, when the series began, was brought down by a sex and corruption scandal. He then clawed his way back to his old job. Now he's running for governor of Illinois.

— A parallel gubernatorial race is unfolding in Illinois on the just-concluded second season of the Starz drama, "Boss," as, even more dramatically, long-time Chicago kingpin Tom Kane (Kelsey Grammer) is struggling to maintain his grip as mayor.

— On the new ABC series "Nashville," Teddy Conrad is running for mayor of Music City. Up to now he's been the in-the-shadows husband of country legend

Rayna Jaymes (series star Connie Britton). But with the help of Rayna's father, ruthless tycoon Lamar Wyatt, Teddy (played by Eric Close) hopes to win a spotlight of his own.

— Showtime's "Homeland" had a national hero in US Marine Sergeant Nicholas Brody when he returned home after eight years' imprisonment in Afghanistan. None of his admirers could have dreamed that Brody (played by Damian Lewis) had been turned against the US by his al-Qaida captors and was primed to carry out a terrorist attack on American soil.

Now, in the series' second season, Brody has been elected US Congressman and is being groomed for the vice presidency.

— ABC's "Scandal" is also set in Washington, where Olivia Pope and her staff are crisis management specialists.

Her firm's elite clientele often puts Olivia (played by Kerry Washington) in contact with the nation's biggest power brokers. And none is more powerful than President Fitzgerald Grant, whom Olivia previously served as White House communications director — and with whom she's had a passionate affair, right under the nose of the first lady.

Serious business! But make-believe politics isn't always so dramatic on TV. Nor is it always so big-time.

— Just remember Leslie Knope, a dedicated public servant in fictional Pawnee, Ind., on NBC's comedy "Parks and Recreation." Played by series star Amy Poehler, Leslie used to be deputy parks director, then at the end of last season, she won a seat on the Pawnee City Council.

Her boyfriend has moved to Washington to manage a congressional campaign, and maybe Leslie will someday find her way to Washington, too.

But for now she's a plucky change agent in Pawnee. And that's as it should be. Leslie serves as a reminder that all politics is local — right on your TV.

of the musicians is awesome. You will keep this album forever.

Taylor Swift - Red (Deluxe Edition)

There was a lot of controversy over Taylor Swift's first single off her brand new album titled Red. The song, "We Are Never Ever Getting Back Together" is a punchy, bouncy hit that leans a lot more towards pop music than country.

On this fourth album, a 16-track set, Taylor Swift continues to step away from her country roots. Red is a little bit country, a lot of pop and contains a heavy dose of rock and roll. One more time she brings some great story songs, most of which are very autobiographical.

Swift has always been a singular songwriting talent though, and the real step forward on Red is her increased maturity and thematic refinement. She is creatively ambitious; she wanted to push the envelope, the boundaries, but I think she knocked the wall down! The wall between country and pop that is.

Swift has the ability to create albums that are not only catchy but have substance and a relatable quality to them and Red is not different.

"Begin Again" is the second song to be released from Red. The song describes the magic of a first date but this time there's a twist since it is the first date after going through a terrible breakup. You can feel it when she sings "I've been spending the last eight months/Thinking all love ever does/Is break and burn and end/But on a Wednesday in a cafe/I watched it begin again."

Sometimes observations about life put into lyrics can make a song really special as when she sings "But you stopped to talk about the movies that your family watches every single Christmas/You throw your head back laughing like a little kid."

The gigantic ambitions of Taylor Swift's latest album, Red, should come as no surprise. Swift's career and her music have been headed towards full-fledged crossover success for quite some time.

Really it would be easier to be upset with Red's crossover aspirations, if the album was not so good. One can imagine that a huge majority of her fans will appreciate her work no matter what it sounds like.

"The Lucky One," "Sad Beautiful Tragic," and "I Almost Do" are the softer, emotional tracks on the album and they're all songs that could do very well on mainstream country radio.

"All Too Well" is country, and finds Swift "dancing 'round the kitchen in the refrigerator light" in the memory of a romance that has seemingly been buried in time. The tune would have fit perfectly on Speak Now. It comes as a reminder that this type of song will always remain in Swift's heart.

In an interview with Taylor Swift on CBS, she explained just how her brand new album Red fits in alongside her other albums and what she feels it represents in terms of her development as an artist.

Fearless, she says, was about "the breakthrough and all the discovery." As in, "wow there's a big wide world of music" out there, and "I'm excited, and scared..."

Then with Speak Now, that's the album where "I felt like I really had something to prove, because that last album was so big. I wanted to write the record by myself, to prove to myself that I could do it."

With Red, she says, "I wanted to learn. I wanted to take my comfort zone — which at that point was writing songs alone — and I wanted to throw myself into a different realm."

On Red, Taylor Swift broadened her musical roots by involving different producers and artists. Being only 22, the young woman has all the time in the world to experiment. People are wondering if she will be back to her roots, but I think that it all depends on the response she will get from the pop fans. For now she's on a musical trip but she hasn't completely left home.

Burton Cummings cleans up his act, determined to keep rocking into golden years

By Nick Patch
THE CANADIAN PRESS

With his 65th birthday approaching, Burton Cummings is thinking retirement. Not from music, mind you, but from the hard-partying lifestyle he's dutifully sustained over his 50 years in the music business.

The Winnipeg native says he hasn't had an alcoholic beverage in two or three months, and he quit smoking three years ago to preserve his voice (cigarettes, that is, he notes with a mischievous grin: "I still like Mrs. Green ... once in a while").

And in part because of these prudent lifestyle choices, Cummings is as optimistic as ever he can stay relevant into his golden years.

"I'll be 65 on New Year's Eve — I can't live like a teenage goofball anymore," an energetic Cummings said in an interview backstage at Toronto's Massey Hall this week.

"I'm not quite ready to move to Lourdes yet ... but I'm pretty clean. I haven't had any alcohol now for months ... for an Irish guy that's a singer in a rock band, that's pretty good.

"And I think I've probably quit everything at the right time," he added. "Because people tell me I sound ... better than I used to."

And as proof, Cummings is releasing the new live disc "Massey Hall" on Tuesday.

Captured over the course of performances at the historic Toronto venue in 2010 and 2011, the disc finds Cummings applying his still-vital pipes to a succession of well-loved Guess Who classics.

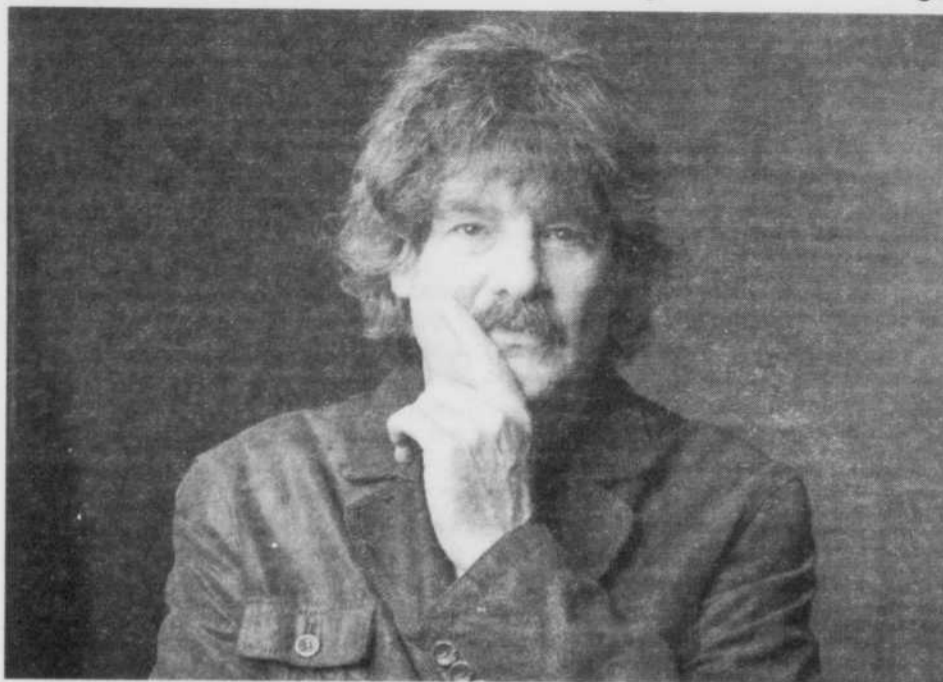

While Cummings also incorporated several cuts from his post-1976 solo career — and two from his most recent collection of new material, 2008's "Above the Ground" — he rarely waits long before digging back into one of the colossal hits he co-wrote with Randy Bachman, including "These Eyes," "Laughing," "American Woman" and "No Time."

Cummings is as aware as anyone how thoroughly those tunes have been emblazoned into the Canadian psyche after four decades of steady radio rotation — so he was also aware that his margin for error was virtually non-existent.

"I think we have done the songs justice. That's the thing, man. 'Cause if you're going to do a live album, and it's composed mainly of songs that have been on the radio for decades, it can't be lame. You can't put out something second-rate," he said.

"I was nervous before. I'm not scared now. I think the public's going to like it."

That Cummings still frets about his ability to perform his best-known songs is perhaps surprising, given that these time-worn classics have spent nearly as much time on his lips as that bushy black moustache.

GOOGLE IMAGES

Listening to him dig in here — trilling sensitively on "These Eyes," hollering confidently on "American Woman" — it sure sounds like he still relishes playing the hits.

"They don't get stale to me," he agrees. "(Late Guess Who producer) Jack Richardson ... used to say, 'I don't see why he doesn't do more new stuff on stage.' Man, it's hard enough to get a hit record. What's wrong with playing them for the rest of your life?"

"And besides that, I could do two and a half hours of hit records. What am I going to do? Shove new stuff down people's throats?"

Still, there are elements of the past that Cummings is unlikely to want to revisit.

He's down on the idea of reuniting again with Bachman, with whom he last shared the stage back in 2009 after years of on-and-off collaboration. Without ruling anything out, Cummings said that with Bachman paired once again with former partner Fred Turner, another reformation was unlikely.

"That's doubtful now, because he's gone back with Fred and they're trying to do that whole BTO thing again," Cummings said. "We had a great four-five years of Bachman-Cummings, and then we were kind of gearing up to go to Vegas and he decided he'd go with Fred. We all lost some time and effort because of that."

"I will always respect Randy. He's an amazing musician and a wonderful player and we wrote great stuff together, but I really think the days of Bachman-Cummings are done. I wish he and Fred the best. There's no bitterness or weirdness, it serves me better now to be Burton by himself."

He was less generous in sizing up former Guess Who mates Jim Kale and Garry Peterson, who own the trademark on the band name and regularly perform gigs under that header with side-men.

Cummings says he doesn't speak to his former collaborators and "probably never will unless it's with lawyers in a courtroom."

The relationship is so badly damaged that Cummings says if the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in Cleveland ever saw fit to finally recognize the Guess Who — a longstanding snub in the eyes of many of the band's fans — Cummings wouldn't show up for the induction.

"I won't go if it happens," he said. "Just as Axl Rose could not stand up there, there's no way I could stand up there with Peterson and Kale after what they've done to the name ... and the next day, (they) go back to Hattiesburg, Miss., with some other guy on vocals and some other guy on keyboards and guitars. There's no way. So I'll graciously decline."

"What they've done to the name is a disgrace."

Even as Cummings describes his tense relationship with his former bandmates,
