'GERMAN OFFENSIVE COMPLETELY CHECKED'

FOCH'S HAND SEEN IN DISMISSAL OF GENERAL GOUGH

BREAK DUE TO FAULTY TACTICS

Further Reorganization in British Commands Expected Immediately

Special to The Star by C. W. Gilbert.

WASHINGTON, D.C., April 6. The appointment of Sir Henry Rawlinson to succeed Sir Hubert Gough in command of the British Fifth Army brought to Washington the first intimation of what actually happened in the great battle which has been raging in France for the last fortnight. The removal of a general from command while the battle is on is bitter discipline, and there is no mistaking what it signifies. The Fifth Army, under General Gough, occupying the British right wing, the junction with the French, was cut to pieces.

The replacing of Gough means that it was not the mere weight of guns which the Germans were able to mass against the Allies, though this was appalling, that explained the destruction or capture of the Fifth Army. German military correspondents during the first two or three days of the great offensive kept repeating charges of bad British generalship in accounting for the German triumph. And now comes the appointment of a new army commander to lend confirmation to the German stories.

GOUGH'S ALLEGED FAILURE.

Details of Gough's failure have not been allowed to leak out, but when reference is made to what happened and to the time when the Germans were rejoicing over the failure of British generalship, it is apparent that the break through Gough must have taken place on the second and third days of the German drive. On the first day, the British resisted the storm of shell effectively, and the French have been successful throughout in standing off German assaults. It was the cutting to pieces of Gough's army that made possible the large captures of men and guns and other material by the Germans. It was also this breach that enabled the Germans to cross the Somme line and seize the strong defensive positions in the neighborhood of Peronne as if nothing stood in their way.

GRAVEST MOMENT OF BATTLE.

That was the gravest moment in the entire battle. The French had to take over part of the British line and a large section of the available reserves had to be thrown into action to strengthen the line and stem the tide of German advance. This accounts for the fact that there has not been a counter offensive, this and the circumstances to which Haig alluded in a despatch after the destruction of the Fifth Army, when he reported great loss of war materials including tanks.

HAND OF FOCH SEEN

In the sharp disciplining of Gough and the appointment of Sir Henry Rawlinson is seen the hand of Foch, the new Allied generalissimo. General Rawlinson has been associated with Foch in the inter-Allied War Council and there is every reason to believe that he was selected for the command by Foch just as there is reason to believe that his predecessor General Sir Henry Wilson, now chief of the British Imperial staff, was also selected by him.

Further reorganization is expected, for the failures of British generalship both in the recent battle and at Cambrai are too serious to be passed over.

GIANT HYPOCRISY OF COUNT CZERNIN FREELY EXPOSED

SHOWS TEUTONS LIED THROUGHOUT

Robbed and Strangled Crushed States—Then Talked of Moderation

By Associated Press.

LONDON, April 6. — Lord Robert Cecil, parliamentary under-secretary of Foreign Affairs, told the Associated Press yesterday that "whatever doubt about Count Czernin might have existed before his latest declaration, there can be none about now that he stands for Prussian ideals and Prussian policy. (Cecil)

"I must confess," Lord Robert added, "that I prefer Prussian brutality to Austrian hypocrisy. If you are going to rob and strangle your neighbor, it is better not to talk of your moderation."

Lord Robert, taking up what he characterized as Count Czernin's latest peace terms, continued: "Count Czernin claims with the greatest audacity that he and his allies have just made proposals that are moderate, and even guided by the principles of self-determination, no annexations and no indemnities.

"As far as self-determination is concerned, in every one of the new States they have set up, they have done so without the slightest regard to the wishes of the peoples, and no serious attempt was made even to follow racial boundaries or racial antecedents.

"The province of Dobrudja (Rumania) which has been handed over to Bulgaria, has only 18 per cent. Bulgarians and 50 per cent Rumanians. Southern Bessarabia, which apparently is offered to Rumania, is the part of Bessarabia having the fewest Rumanians.

VAST TERRITORY STOLEN.

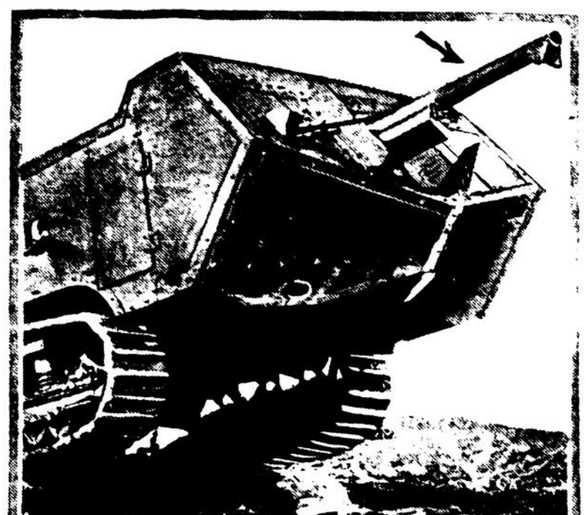

As for no annexations, Count Czernin claims that all he has done is to carry out slight frontier rectifications. What he really has done is to take an important part of the Danube and all the passes between Austria-Hungary and Rumania. Not only this, he has driven back the Carpathian frontier eight or ten miles.

"But the most hypocritical part of Czernin's peace terms, while affecting not to demand a war indemnity for the Central Powers, is the fact that they have imposed one of the heaviest war indemnities ever imposed. It is a curious proviso which applies to the new states, that they are to be under no obligation whatever toward Russia in regard to former relations with her. The result is to concentrate on the remainder of Russia the whole debt which hitherto was spread over the whole of Russia.

"From the Ukraine particularly Czernin claims there is to be secured all food obtainable. No doubt this will not be a question of purchase but of seizure. All the cost of the requisitions made by the Central Powers will be written off in Rumania. It will amount to £1,000,000. Beyond that they claim the exclusive right to exploit the petroleum fields, and any disputes arising from this are to be settled by a tribunal set up in Leipzig.

"No wonder that Count Czernin in a moment of candor says that both in the conclusion of peace with Ukraina and Rumania the first thought was to furnish Austria with necessary foodstuffs and munitions. That has been the object of the peace, and it has been accomplished by giving to Austria Hungary such economic and strategic advantages as to place these two countries at the mercy of the Central Powers."

HEAVY GUN ON NEW FRENCH TANK NOW USED TO STAY ASSAULT OF GERMANS

This new tank was completed by the French in time to take into the battle now raging on the Somme and for fifty miles up and down the British lines. Its chief feature is the new heavy gun, heavier than anything heretofore built on a tank. The arrow on the picture points to the gun. At the sides there are the usual machine guns, which have been used on tanks before.

BRITISH HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE, April 5, (delayed). It is the airplane, swooping down from a friendly cloud to new and undreamed-of attacks, that has commanded the latest situation of the battle summoned. And it is the entire allied battle fleets of flyers, the British, the French and the Americans, that are showing in the daring operations.

The spirit of victory is less apparent among the German troops today than it was a week ago. Without the slightest doubt they have depreciated appreciably, at some places during the last few days, although too much emphasis must not be placed upon this fact. Their casualties are out of all proportion to the things that they have attained. This coupled with the constant exposure to the strain which overhead fighting has subjected them is leaving them [illegible] with [illegible] been again included with the [illegible] from the high command of a swift and splendid victory and almost immediate peace.

ENEMY'S UNCOMFORTABLE LOCATION

Exhausted divisions are being taken out of the line and the continued stagnation on the front between Arras and Albert is easily understood. The enemy is uncomfortably in the waste spaces of the old trench system. He has difficulties in the matter of transport and the new grouping of guns for the placing of the guns in new positions is a problem that presents enormous difficulties.

Anti-aircraft guns are dotted about lavishly by the invading forces; they fire wildly. Our men do not swerve a hair's breath from their course. THE WEEK IN WASHINGTON

BRITAIN LONG AGO ASKED BRIGADING OF AMERICAN FORCES

Much Opposition in U. S. Till German Drive Brought Need Home—British Officials Think Bad Blunder Made by General Gough

Special to The Star.

WASHINGTON, D.C., April 6.—Lloyd George and Earl Reading this week persuaded the United States Government to take a step which the British Government, and the French as well, have desired for a long time, but which, for some reason or reasons, could not induce this Government to agree to. That was the idea of brigading American troops with the British in France.

Many months ago, the British Government suggested to Washington that it would strengthen tremendously the resistance which the British could offer to the impending German drive if more or less raw American troops—not the regulars and well trained National Guard regiments in Pershing's expeditionary force—could be rushed over and scattered at intervals through the British lines.

This proposal, of course, roused the most profound opposition in the American General Staff. High Army officers were inclined to resent the suggestion as one indicating inferiority. There was the personal element that the scheme, as first broached, would not provide commands for any American officer of higher rank than colonel, for the plan was to segregate the American forces used in this dilution process by units of one regiment each in British brigades.

GERMAN DRIVE BROUGHT ACTION.

At any rate, there was no agreement at the time with the British suggestion. Then, when the German drive had come, and had duly impressed the American people, and when the need for some sort of urgent action was manifest, Earl Reading read, at a dinner in New York, the appeal of Lloyd George to America. The following day the British Ambassador saw President Wilson, and it is learned on high authority the promise was then given that the original British suggestion would be adopted at once, and the new American forces which have gone to France recently would be brigaded with the British troops, no matter whose feelings might be trampled on in the process.

HASTE ON ALL SIDES.

The desire on the part of the Government that America should get into the war at once with all the power it can, and to play any part that may be assigned to it, is taken by the "Win the War Now" faction here as one of the most favorable signs which has been given for some time. Haste in the war making machinery is discernable on all sides. Troops are being rushed to Europe at such a rate that it now appears that the public prediction of the Secretary of War at a recent hearing of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, to the effect that this country would have 1,500,000 men in France before the end of 1918, will be borne out in fact.

Less encouraging is the state of the air craft production program. Apparently the much heralded liberty motor has not got entirely beyond the state of infantile diseases. It is recognized by capable experts, and the quantity production is declared to be on, but it is admitted that there will be further changes in the motor to correct minor faults.

As an offset to the disappointing production of ships for last month, high promises of what the concrete ship will do are being held up. If the concrete ship turns out to be a success, and there seems no reason to doubt it, it can be turned out much more speedily than either steel or wooden ships.

PRIORITY OF SHIPPING.

Incidentally, the question of priority has been put up to the President in its most difficult form in this very question of ships. One of the most important reasons for the failure of the ship-builders to come up to their March schedules on delivered ships—not launched ships—was the lack of engines. The shipbuilders have protested to Mr. Hurley, chairman of the Shipping Board, that they can't get engines because the Navy Department stepped in ahead of them at the engine works, and have tied up everything in sight to rush out engines for the big fleet of destroyers the Navy wants to fight submarines with.

Mr. Hurley, with several Senators, will put this question directly up to the President, as to whether it is more important to give priority to the Navy, for destroyers to chase submarines, or for cargo ships, needed for carrying supplies to Europe. Most administration officials regard this question as of equal difficulty to the old riddle about whether the chicken or the egg was first.

THINK BAD BLUNDER MADE.

British circles in Washington are much depressed for the moment over the news which has come through about the recent German offensive. The removal of General Gough, during the very progress of the battle, they think, indicates that a bad blunder was made by the commander of the fifth army, and there are some who would not be surprised at the removal of Field Marshal Haig.

Haig's despatches, it is pointed out in British circles, indicate a prodigious loss of supplies. Great emphasis is placed on the necessity of arming American soldiers going to France with machine guns. It is stated that for the first time in some time the Germans, as the result of the capture of so many Russian cannon, which they had adapted, and of many British guns in the recent offensive, now actually are superior in artillery to the Entente armies.

GIFT TO CANADIAN RED CROSS.

In recognition of the part Canada has played in the war for human liberty, the War Council of the American Red Cross has appropriated $500,000 as a gift to the Canadian Red Cross. The gift is made without restrictions, but with the expressed hope that it will be found possible to use the contribution for the relief of Canadian soldiers at the front.

The resolution of the War Council providing for the appropriation declares that the American people profoundly and gratefully recognize the devotion of the Canadian people and the armed forces of Canada in the great war, and are deeply appreciative of the spirit of heroism and self-sacrifice with which so many Americans have fought and died as members of the Canadian forces during the past years, and that it therefore is highly appropriate that the American Red Cross should extend to the Canadian soldiers a measure of assistance toward their relief and comfort.

It is declared, further, that such tribute cannot be translated more serviceably or appropriately than by a gift through the Canadian Red Cross, and that it is the desire of the American Red Cross to afford substantial recognition of the sentiment of brotherhood and sympathy which pervades this country in this present crisis of human affairs.

In a letter addressed to Lieut.-Col. Noel G. L. Marshall, chairman of the Council and Executive Committee of the Canadian Red Cross Society, the chairman of the War Council of the American Red Cross enclosed a copy of the resolution providing for the gift, and added a personal assurance of the feeling of sympathy and admiration, on the part of the American people, for the part taken by the Canadian Red Cross and the Canadian people in the war, in which both peoples are now engaged.

The hope is expressed, in the letter to Lieut.-Col. Marshall, that the American National Red Cross will be able in time to achieve proportionately the fine results which the Canadian organization has obtained through the last four years.

FATHER AND SON DAY AT CENTENARY

Brown will preach to boys and young men on "Who am I?" A large choir of boys will lead the singing.

McGILL ALUMNAE PATRIOTIC FUNDS

At a meeting of the McGill Alumnae Society, held yesterday afternoon, it was announced that the four lectures given under their auspices in January and February had netted $770. Of this sum it was decided to spend $500 on the libraries established by the society in the military convalescent homes; and $100 on the Women's Military Hospital in London, England, of which Dr. Winnifred Cullis spoke to the society. Fifty dollars each will be sent to three members overseas, to be spent by them on comforts for soldiers. These members are Miss Isabel McCaw, who is driving a motor ambulance near Saloniki; Miss Margaret Taylor, in France; and Miss Agnes Warner, who is nursing in France and Belgium.

A pretty wedding took place in Trinity Church Wednesday afternoon, when Miss Florence Ruby Hamilton, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James H. Hamilton was married to Mr. Willington Young Derick, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Derick, of Clarenceville, Que. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Trill. The church was effectively decorated for the occasion with spring flowers and Easter lilies. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore her travelling suit of nigger brown gabardine with small hat to match and carried a bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley. She was attended by her cousin, Miss Violet Carpenter, as bridesmaid, gowned in pink silk with large crownless hat of black tulle and carried pink carnations. Little Miss Maud Hamilton acted as flower girl. She was dressed in white with touches of pale blue, and also wore a crownless hat of pale blue tulle, and carried a basket of pink sweet peas. Mr. David Craig was best man. After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents where Easter lilies and spring flowers also formed the decorations. Later Mr. and Mrs. Derick left for Toronto where they will reside. The out-of-town guests were the bridegrooms parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Derick, and Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Derick, of Clarenceville.

Five o'clock will be the hour of His Excellency's arrival. Returned soldiers only will be admitted to the club rooms proper; but His Excellency, after his inspection of the club, will ascend to the auditorium of the church to make the formal announcement of the opening. Invitations will be sent to all subscribers. The public will be admitted. His Excellency will have afternoon tea at the club canteen, where he will partake of the same menu that is served to the soldiers. He will then inspect the various recreation rooms that are to be at the disposal of the soldiers.

CLUB IS ENLARGED.

The club, established two years ago, has outgrown its original quarters and next week will start a new career on a greatly enlarged scale, a fund of $15,000, collected by the Rev. C. A. Williams for the purpose, has made the alterations possible.

Though utilizing the greater part of the basement of St. James church, the club is in no sense denominational. Soldiers and sailors of every creed are welcomed there. The rooms as seen yesterday by The Star, are resplendent in shining paint. The kitchen has been enlarged and the dining room is somewhat bigger than before. The room that has been used as a lounge will be in future a reading, writing and smoking room. Adjoining it is the large game room where the bowling alleys and billiard tables are to be found. A delightfully large and airy recreation room has been newly finished on the City Councillor street side of the building. The afternoon sun streams through a long line of windows upon the cosy chesterfields and arm chairs there installed. So busy have been the billiard tables in the games room that Mr. Williams has arranged to have two more of them installed in the new west room. A piano is also part of the furniture.

The club has no fees attached. The only place in it where money can be spent is at the canteen and there only nominal prices are charged for meals. Baths and shower baths have been installed. A miniature rifle range is planned. In short there is every possible comfort for the soldiers.

The sum collected by Mr. Williams for the club has not been sufficient to cover the alterations and additions which have cost close to $30,000. Mr. Williams is anxious to secure still another $5,000 so that two open fire places may be installed, an outdoor tennis court may be built and the club put on a firm financial basis for the coming year.

It is Mr. Williams idea that the club rooms will, in the piping days of peace, be divided into two sections and used as a community centre for working girls and a club for working men.

GREAT AUDIENCE GREETS ENGLAND'S NOTED PRIMATE

CONVEYS BRITAIN'S THANKS TO CANADA

Special to The Star.

TORONTO, April 6.—Almost as sonorous as his title and wonderfully clear is the voice of the Most Reverend Cosmo Gordon Lang, Archbishop of York, who arrived from the United States yesterday, and spoke last night to a great and tremendously enthusiastic gathering in Massey Hall. The assemblage was not a gathering of Anglicans, it was representative of every Christian denomination and of every walk of life. There were present two other Archbishops, Archbishop Thornloe of Algoma and Archbishop McNeil of the Catholic Church, along with Rev. Dr. Chown, General Superintendent of the Methodist Church, and Rev. Dr. John Neil, Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly. Bishop Bidwell, Bishop Clarke of Niagara, Bishop Lucas of MacKenzie River, representatives of the universities, the city council, the board of trade, and other organizations were also there.

About His Grace there is a dominant manliness that went straight to the hearts of his hearers. He brought the thanks of Britain to Canada for the manner in which this country has stood by the great cause in which Britain has embarked, and he told of the magnificent work of the armies of democracy and of the navy at the front, as well as of the women and the men at home in Britain.

Incidentally he set at rest, though unconsciously, a controversy that has raged in a mild form in this city since the first of the photographs of him taken in New York were published in local newspapers, for he is white haired and his brow extends to the crown of his head. People who knew him years ago in the old land, or got their impressions through the youthful and popular pictures of him published for a decade back, are now satisfied that time brings changes. There were no frills about his message. He was the church militant in a great cause, and he had no explanations to offer and nothing to beg for. Montrealers have a treat in prospect.

TORONTO HAS BEAR HUNT.

There is likely to be an exodus of Toronto's sportsmen and youth to York Mills near the city today, a real live bear having been shot in that neighborhood yesterday, and another making good its escape. Workmen commenced the felling of some fine big trees on the Boultbee estate and heard growling from one of them. There was a temporary panic, but this was stilled when some one remembered the stories that were told by school girls and other persons last fall that they had seen two bears in the vicinity.

Presently a good sized bear was noted in the tree and a determined effort was made to capture it alive, but this proved to be impossible, and the brute was shot. Another bear was sighted, but made its escape. There is not an open door in the neighborhood today, according to all reports, and a number of persons whose bear stories last year were regarded as the products of imagination, aided in cases by a little liquid stimulation, have now been completely restored to the sunshine of public confidence. Where the bears came from has always been a mystery to those who saw them first, and it remains a mystery to everyone now.

ORIGINAL FIRSTS GIVEN SEND OFF.

Twenty-six of Toronto's original firsts left for the east last night, amid scenes that have hardly been paralleled among the stirring events of its kind that have been so frequent here since the war began. Bands played and the crowds sang and cheered, none more bravely than the veterans themselves as the train departed, each man bearing a huge box of cigars, cigarettes and tobacco, the gifts of the city presented by Mayor Church and Col. Bickford, in addition to many private gifts. For the men whose furlough is not yet up, there will be a great public reception soon.

GRIEF AMIDST JOY.

F. G. H. Pattinson, of Winona, returned from Peoria, Illinois, yesterday, where he had attended the wedding of his daughter, and found awaiting him news that his son, Flight Commander C. E. Pattinson of the Royal Navy Air Service, had been killed in an accident in England. Captain Pattinson was only twenty-one years of age, had already seen much active service, had accounted for a number of Hun airplanes, and had himself been shot down twice, fortunately landing in the British lines.

SHERIFF FLINTOFT DEAD.

James Flintoft, Sheriff of Lambton County, who had been ill for some time, died at his home in Sarnia yesterday afternoon in his seventy-seventh year. His wife, three sons and a daughter survive. Of the sons, one Percy, is in Montreal, another is Deputy Sheriff.

He was 28 years of age and was one of the best known of the younger generation of business men in Toronto. A soldier brother was killed in action some months ago.

SUBLIME FRENCH CONFIDENCE IS MOST INSPIRING

Authorities Returning to London Pay Glowing Tributes

CANADIAN DEFENCES OF THE STRONGEST

Nothing Left Undone to Give Protection to Troops

Special Star Cable From Our Own Correspondent. Copyright.

THE MONTREAL STAR OFFICE, 20 Cockspur street, London, April 6.—A Canadian Brigadier General, the work of whose Canadian constructional unit behind the lines in France has just won him a French decoration, tells me it is most inspiring to see the sublime French confidence in the present crisis. They know they can and will hold the Germans, however fierce their onset, and ultimately drive them back. He described in a way which it is not permissible to repeat, the elaborate measures taken on the Canadian front to strengthen the defences, and to give our men every conceivable form of protection from the enemy guns, and every ounce of power to punch when the time for punching comes.

A prominent Canadian, writing from Paris, says:

"So far, what may be called the Canadian quarters in Paris remain unharmed by the shells of the German mystery guns. We take advantage of the intervals between the firing to get to our offices. Everybody here believes a German advance on Paris impossible. Nobody can fail to observe and admire the calm assurance of the French people under these heavy trials. In this spirit they are splendidly led by Premier Clemenceau.

"We wish our restless friends in Quebec City could spend just one week in Paris just now."

SAW SON'S GRAVE.

Ex-Governor Gibson, back from a visit to France, was under fire at Ypres and Armentieres. He says: "I saw the grave of my son, Lieutenant Frank Gibson, 15th Battalion, who was killed in November, 1915. The cemetery was well kept. I felt a certain melancholy pleasure in observing the care bestowed on the graves.

"From Vimy Ridge we saw much German firing directed against our aeroplanes, which were observing over the enemy lines.

"We found Paris under long distance gunfire, the gun being fired about every twelve minutes throughout the day. It is believed there are more than one of these guns. On the first day there was a partial cessation of business, but Parisians soon got accustomed to the gun. There is no panic. The motto seems to be 'business as usual.'

"Motoring from Paris to Boulogne we passed crowds of troops on the roads, and also hundreds of refugees—old men, women and children carrying all they could of the family belongings.

"Wherever I went in France even after the present big battle, I found absolute confidence in the future. Nothing is more delightful than the tone invariably observed in reference to the Canadian troops.

WINDERMERE.

EDNA ROBINSON ARRESTED IN N.Y.

The missing witness, Edna Robinson, whose disappearance caused a sensation at the time when Carl Epstein was on trial for the attempt to do grave bodily harm to Controller E. W. Villeneuve, and in which she was to appear to give important testimony, has finally been located in New York and will be brought back to Montreal on Monday in charge of Detective Tierney, who effected her arrest, on a bench warrant at five o'clock yesterday morning.

It will be remembered that it was stated at the trial of Epstein that it was on information furnished by Edna Robinson that Detectives Tierney and Forget arrested Epstein, and she appeared in court on February 19 in answer to a subpoena which had been served upon her. The case however was adjourned at the request of the counsel for the defence and when Edna was called upon to testify on the morning of February 1 she was nowhere to be found and a bench warrant was issued by Judge Coquet for her apprehension. At that time the investigation into charges against Capt. Savard was about to begin and Edna Robinson was also to have been an important witness at this inquiry.

The trial of Epstein was adjourned in the hope that Edna Robinson could be located, but Detective Tierney later informed the court that he had been unable to find the missing witness, who had left the city under assure of threats of death that had been made against her. After another adjournment without the woman being found the Epstein trial was concluded and Carl Epstein was found not guilty of the charge against him on the evidence addduced.

But the matter was not permitted to drop there. The search for Edna Robinson was continued by Detectives Tierney and Forget under the direction of Mr. Villeneuve. Many cities were followed, including a visit to Toronto where the woman had been seen, but when the detectives reached there she had again disappeared.

Edna Robinson was, however, finally located in New York and Detective Tierney left Montreal on Thursday morning to get her and bring her back to the city. She was arrested by him at five o'clock in the morning of the 5th, and arrangements are being made by the immigration authorities in New York for her return to Montreal on Monday morning.

The work of Detective Tierney in following up this matter and executing the warrant that had been issued is highly creditable, and Mr. Villeneuve, when informed of the arrest of Edna Robinson, expressed his appreciation of the work he had done in this connection and he added that much credit was due to Detectives Tierney and Forget for their activity and zeal in the case.

Perhaps when Edna Robinson is brought back to the city there may be some elucidation of the point as to who were instrumental in having this important witness removed from Montreal and what forces contributed to this end. Her appearance in court will be awaited with a great deal of interest.

GERMANY TODAY

A Remarkable Eye-Witness Story of Present Conditions in the German Empire by Miss Blanche Slocum, an American Opera Singer, Who Left There Last Month

Registered in accordance with the Copyright Act.

Broadly speaking, the great difference between Americans and Germans today is this: We are openly at war with the German Imperial Government, they are secretly at war with the German Imperial Government.

While aristocrats and militarists still support Prussianism, the masses do not. Their hatred grows. It is genuine. The manufactured hatred against America has subsided considerably. The sincere, deep hatred against the German Imperial Government amounts to nothing less than veiled mutiny.

When I crossed into Switzerland on my way home in January, 1918—the last American out of Germany—I was still considered "dangerous." I owed my escape from Germany to wire pulling by the Spanish embassy and by two influential Germans.

LOOKED ON AS DANGEROUS.

I was considered dangerous—not because I was in a bad temper, though I might well have been, for I had seen my musical career in Germany cut short and the twelve German operas I had learned made useless by war between Germany and the United States—but because my four and a half years in Germany enabled me to become the bearer of dangerous news. Especially dangerous was my knowledge of the rebellious spirit among Germans and their dwindling hatred for America.

I had seen bread riots. I had known of women shouting in the streets of Berlin, "Down with war! Down with the government!" and scattering pamphlets filled with anti-government propaganda. I had repeatedly heard soldiers exclaim, "O, to be taken prisoner! Anything to get out of Germany!" I had seen rich Germans take sides with the Social Democrats. Over and over again I had heard working people say, "Nice, isn't it? for our masters to sit in their chairs and tell us to fight it out; we're the dogs and the slaves!"

REWARD OFFERS POSTED.

I had seen notices posted up in Berlin offering 3,000 marks' reward for evidence leading to the conviction of any one speaking against the government. The proclamation concluded with, "Sad to say, many of these spies are men wearing field gray uniforms." Many Germans had said to me, "You don't know how people feel; we don't dare open our mouths; if we did we'd be put in jail." More than once soldiers had told me they hoped Germany would lose the war, they hated the government so.

This was news. It still is. It reflects a very recent change of feeling and almost as recent is the change of feeling toward America. I well remember the taunt, "American ammunition!" in all the papers and in common talk. I remember the hatred it engendered. Early in the war I often heard such expressions as, "My boy had been killed by an American bomb and I hope I live to get revenge." A popular play in Berlin showed a German-American making ammunition to kill his brother in Germany. President Wilson was cartooned wading in blood with money bags on his back. In one cartoon he was kissing a Chinaman.

AMERICANS CALLED BEASTS.

When we entered the war the papers called us beasts, and said we were in for revenue only, and the German people hated us because our action prolonged the war, but it seemed to me that much of their talk was insincere. It changed enormously as time went on.

Prof. Bonn, who had taught in America, came out with articles on the American point of view regarding submarine warfare, and a German woman said in my hearing: "If one reads those articles, one understands the Americans and feels differently toward them." One day I was entertained in the home of a German baroness; another baroness, wife of a great army chief, said in my hearing: "Isn't it shocking that Germans complain as they do about the military? Isn't it strange that here and there all over Germany people insist that Wilson is an idealist?"

SEES CHANGE IN FEELING.

Evidently this trend of thought was nothing rare; I myself had met many Germans who saw the truth about Wilson and confessed openly that they saw it. Before I left Berlin I sometimes found groups where people spoke out with remarkable freedom, and on one occasion a German lady actually said, "Hurrah for America!" at a tea to which I and other Americans had been invited. I heard a great lady own up to a cordial admiration for Wilson and say: "It is the ambition of my life to take my whole family to America after the war and stay there."

A German professor said to me: "I'd give anything in the world to go to America and live there the rest of my days." I heard such sentiments expressed by many. "As soon as the war is over we shall go to America," they said, and spoke of "what a fine man Wilson was."

When we entered the war it seemed to me that the feeling among Germans was not rage but grief. Hosts of Germans had relatives over here and had been taught to love America. Now, to their sorrow, even America was against them. In addition they realized that the detested war would be prolonged. They were not at first afraid of our soldiers; the press had said: "The submarines will take care of them." But from the outset they dreaded American resources and American money.

EMPHASIS TO WILSON MESSAGE.

Discouragement, along with the beginnings of grave enmity against the ruling classes, lent tremendous emphasis to President Wilson's message pointing out that we had no quarrel with the German people but only with the German Imperial Government. To every one's surprise, it appeared in full in German newspapers, which boasted: "See how free we are! We print this thing word for word right in Germany"—whereupon they tore it to ribbons editorially, branding it a masterpiece of hypocrisy.

The official arguments put forth for consumption by the masses was, in effect: "Wilson means to start a revolution in Germany. You can have one. Try it. You will be playing into the enemy's hands. As soon as you begin fighting among yourselves, the foe will be upon you, your country dismembered, your business forever ruined, and yourselves treated with monstrous cruelty and contempt."

The argument gained force by reason of certain epithets reported to have been employed by Lloyd George, who was quoted as calling Germans "robbers and bandits." The government said to the people, "How would you like to make peace with such a man as that? What would you be getting into?"

SHREWD MOVE BY GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Gerard's words have been used in the same way. So have others. Whenever any one of prominence in an enemy country declares that "nobody should associate with Germans after the war" or trade with them, and that "Germans must be treated like cannibals," the German Government tells the people. It is shrewd policy. The people stand by the Government only because they believe that the Government is all that stands between them and their enemies. They are frequently the same people who cry, "Down with the war! Down with the Government!"

What do they mean by "Down with the Government"? A few talk of a republic. I have heard them. Many dream of a socialist Utopia. Just what kind of socialist Utopia I could never determine. But, with the exception of the aristocrats and militarists, they are disgusted with the present regime and disgusted with the war, and the line of cleavage President Wilson sought to bring about between the German masses and their rulers is already there. It is largely his work.

ICE NOT MOVING TO ANY EXTENT

No material movement in the ice took place in the St. Lawrence river yesterday. Mild weather over the week-end may be the means of causing a big shove in the river.

Terrebonne which had been inundated on Thursday, reports that the water has gone down and that the streets around the wharves are in fair condition.

No break in the ice has yet occurred at Three Rivers where the water is very high. The riverside streets and the lower part of the city has been under water for two days past.

A landslide was reported from Portneuf which carried away part of the Canadian Pacific Railway track. No one was injured, but the service was held up while repairs were being made.

Conditions in Sorel remained the same, with the wharves covered with water. No break in the ice has yet taken place in Lake St. Louis and Lachine reported everything in order.

SOME SURPRISES IN THOSE NAMED AS CITY GOVERNORS

R. A. Ross Knew Nothing of His Inclusion—Hon. C. Marcil Just Elected Alderman — City Treasurer Will Hold Position for Brief Period

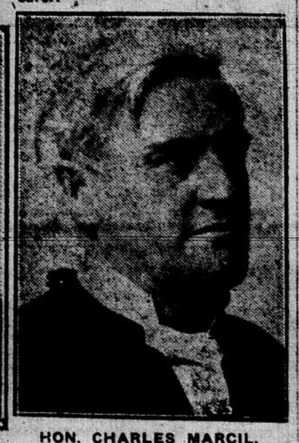

E. R. DECARY, N. P., Chairman of the Board.

CHARLES ARNOLDI, City Treasurer.

R. A. ROSS, Consulting Engineer.

HON. CHARLES MARCIL.

The Governor-in-Council has made its long-awaited announcement as to the personnel of the new board of administrators that is to govern the city of Montreal under the charter as amended at the last session of the Legislature. The appointments, deferred until the results of the civic elections had been ascertained, contain a number of surprises.

Four of the five commissioners are appointed; one is a city official, who was named in the Montreal Bill. The four appointees are Ernest R. Decary, notary, the Hon. Charles Marcil, M.P., who was elected Tuesday as alderman for Notre Dame de Grace ward, R. A. Ross, consulting engineer, and A. Verville, M.P., a leading labor man, and formerly a plumber by trade. The sole city official on the list will be Charles Arnoldi, city treasurer. The salary of the chairman is to be $12,000 a year, that of each of the other commissioners, $10,000 a year.

As originally planned the board was to include three present heads of departments, Charles Laurendeau, K.C., head of the law department, who was to be chairman; J. Pelletier, city comptroller, and Mr. Arnoldi. The two former formally refused to act, but, according to special provisions in the charter amendments, they will still retain their civic offices. Mr. Laurendeau's salary is $15,000 a year, while that of Mr. Pelletier is $7,000. Mr. Arnoldi is to retire on pension May 1, and his place will then be filled, the appointment being made by the other members of the board subject to ratification by the Governor-in-Council.

MR. ROSS SURPRISED.

Mr. R. A. Ross, when asked by The Star this morning relative to his appointment, said he was more than surprised to see his name included. The first intimation he had of it was when the Provincial Treasurer, the Hon. W. Mitchell, telephoned him last night saying he had been trying to get in touch with him, but failing to do so had taken the liberty of including his name in the Commission. Mr. Ross had been out of town for several days and thus no communication had reached him. Asked if he would accept the position, Mr. Ross said: "I don't know the conditions. I am absolutely ignorant of the powers given the commission under the Bill, but I am not going into the thing unless it is so arranged that something can be done. I am having an interview with Mr. Mitchell this morning on the subject."

The Governor-in-Council spent several days deliberating as to the personnel of the commission before decision was reached. Last night Sir Lomer Gouin issued a statement expressing the hope that the Mayor and Council of Montreal would agree with the new board, in which, he declared, he had every confidence.

WHAT IS FACING IT.

The board has its work cut out for it, in many respects, but the most pressing need of the city is financial. On or before May 1 it will be necessary to find no less a sum than $20,000,000 for loans or renewals of loans. Taxation to the extent of $4,000,000 must be levied to cover the deficits of Montreal and Maisonneuve, now a part of Montreal. The new taxing powers granted the city at the last session of the Legislature will be exercised by the new administration.

In the capital sum of $20,000,000 that must be found by the new board the largest single item is $13,000,000 in a short term loan, half of which fell due in December and the other half in May. There is also an amount of $3,000,000 for Maisonneuve which must be faced, a floating debt of $2,000,000 for Maisonneuve, and a necessary loan of $2,000,000 for public works in Montreal.

The financial problem is but one of the many difficult questions which the board must face. The aqueduct question is another that baffled the old board of control. The abattoirs problem is wide open. Millions must be expended to put the streets of Montreal in a decent state of repair. The city's water supply must be augmented by some means or other. Some means must be taken to settle the claims against Montreal in connection with agreements made with outside municipalities at the time of their annexation. These are but a few instances. Never did a new administration set out on a task of more difficulty and greater magnitude.

SKETCHES OF NEW MEN.

The personnel of the board, including several names that have not been prominently mentioned by rumor, will be a surprise to many.

All the four men appointed by the Governor-in-Council are outstanding figures in one or other field of effort in Montreal, but none have hitherto taken a leading part in civic affairs or had experience of civic administration.

The chairman of the board, Ernest R. Decary, B.A., LL.B., is a well-known member of one of the oldest Montreal families, the first Decary having landed in Montreal with Maisonneuve. He is a notary by profession, belonging to the firm of Decary, Barlow and Joron, 232 St. James street. He was born in Montreal, Dec. 9, 1878, the son of Alphonse and Rose de Lima Decary.

He was educated at St. Mary's college and Laval University, graduating from the latter institution in 1900 with his arts and law degrees. He was appointed a notary September 15, 1900, and in the practice of his profession has bought the sites for Model City, the Canadian Northern station, and the Place Viger station. He is married and has three sons, and lives at 321 Peel street.

Mr. Decary is a Liberal in politics.

Two other members of the new board are also prominent in Liberal politics, the Hon. Charles Marcil and Alphonse Verville, both members of the Dominion Parliament.

BY-ELECTION IN N. D. DE GRACE.

Mr. Marcil, who is a journalist by profession, has had a lengthy career in politics, and was formerly Speaker of the House of Commons in the Laurier administration. He was elected alderman for Notre Dame de Grace in the civic elections just passed, before which time he had been prominently mentioned for the deputy speakership of the House of Commons, to which George Bolvin, M. P. for Shefford, was elected. His appointment will create a vacancy in the City Council.

He was born at Ste. Scholastique, Two Mountains county, July 1, 1860, a son of the late Charles Marcil, advocate, and Maria Doherty, his wife. He was educated in the public schools and at Ottawa College and from 1880 to 1900 was connected with the newspaper field in Montreal, writing both French and English with facility and power. He was first elected to the House of Commons for Bonaventure County, at the general elections of 1900, and has sat continuously for the county since, having won every political contest. He became Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons in 1905 and the Speaker in 1909, holding the latter position until the dissolution of Parliament in 1911. He was appointed a member of the King's Council for Canada October 6, 1911.

LABOR'S REPRESENTATIVE.

Mr. Verville, who was a plumber by trade in former days, was for many years a prominent labor leader in Montreal. He enjoyed for years the unique distinction of being the only Labor representative in the House of Commons of Canada, until the present Parliament was elected. Of all the new appointees, Mr. Verville may be said to have had the most experience in civic matters, as he served as a member of the Tramways Commission which drew the new franchise for the street railway system here with the city of Montreal.

Mr. Verville was born at Cote St. Paul, October 28, 1864, a son of Alfred and Pamela Verville. He was educated in the local schools, and on leaving school served his apprenticeship as a plumber and steamfitter. From 1882 to 1893 he lived in Chicago, but in the latter year returned to Montreal, where he became one of the leaders in the organized labor movement.

He entered upon his political career in 1904, when he was a candidate in Hochelaga for the Provincial Legislature, but was defeated. In 1906 he ran in Maisonneuve division for the Federal Parliament, and this time was elected. He was also elected for Maisonneuve in 1911, and last December he was again elected, this time to represent the new constituency of St. Denis. He has always taken an independent stand in Parliament, showing chief interest in matters affecting the working classes. Mr. Verville was president of the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress for some years.

ENGINEERING EXPERT.

It is not yet decided whether Robert A. Ross, C.E., of the firm of R. A. Ross & Co., consulting engineers, will accept the appointment of the Governor-in-Council. Mr. Ross expressed the greatest surprise when the appointment was brought to his attention and declared he had never been consulted. He is eminent in his profession, widely known throughout Canada in connection with many important engineering operations.

Mr. Ross is a native of Montreal, and has practised his profession in this city for many years. In 1897 he became a member of the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers, and in 1907 a councillor of that body. He was formerly a member of the firm of Ross and Holgate, consulting electrical engineers.

He has become widely known in connection with the hydro-electric scheme of the Ontario Government. In 1903 he was named a municipal commissioner by the Ontario Government to investigate the development and distribution of electrical power from Niagara Falls for municipalities in the province. He resigned in 1905 and in 1909 became the chief adviser of the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario. In 1909 he was named professor of engineering economics at McGill.

He is a member of the various engineering societies, including the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers, of which he is an officer, and the American Institute of Electrical Engineers.

He is a charter member of the Engineers' Club, and a member of the Royal St. Lawrence Yacht, and other clubs.

FOR ONE MONTH ONLY.

Mr. Arnoldi is one of the oldest heads of departments at City Hall and has rendered valuable service to the city of Montreal for forty years. He first entered the city's services in 1875 when the became accountant of the roads department. After filling that position for eight years, he was named chief collector of taxes, and later assistant city treasurer. He became city treasurer in 1912, succeeding the late William Robb.

Mr. Arnoldi will sit on the board of administrators for a few weeks only, as he is to retire on pension May 1, the Legislature at the last session having provided for his pension. His successor will, it is understood, be a man prominent in banking circles in Montreal. When Mr. Arnoldi passes from the board there will not be left a member with great financial experience, and in view of the fact that much of the board's work will be financial, it is expected that an expert in this line will be the logical filler of the vacancy.

PRESENT OF EGGS.

The "Capt. Jack" Red Cross Circle sent an Easter greeting in the form of twelve dozen fresh eggs, to the Royal Edward Military Annex, and twenty-four dozen to the Drummond street convalescent house.

This little circle was named after the late Major (then captain) J. N. Warminton, who went overseas with the first contingent.

BISHOP AT ST. EDWARDS.

The Lord Bishop of Montreal will be present at the seven o'clock service in St. Edwards Church next Sunday evening to administer the rite of Confirmation.

TO THE FOOD CONTROL BOARD

The Star directs the attention of the Food Control Board and of the Government to a great revolutionary movement now going on in England for adding enormously to the production of the land.

The results are amazing—so extraordinary that a single day's neglect in getting facts and action based on these facts would be a national crime.

It is now a good many years since Lord Rosse, of giant telescope fame, experimented with electricity upon growing crops of potatoes. His experiments were inconclusive in their results, electrical science being then in its infancy.

But the idea that electricity might have a practical value for grain, roots and hay growers has never since been allowed to drop. And now the announcement is made on high agricultural authority that the riddle has been solved, and that electricity is likely to become as valuable to the farmer as it has become already to mechanics.

Dr. Charles Mercier, an English scientist, writes that "great and startling improvements in agriculture are on the point of being introduced.

"The improvements referred to are two, and both owe their efficacy to the application of electricity. It has been known for some time that the direct application of electricity to growing crops produces a remarkable increase in yield, but the expense of the application has rendered the method unprofitable. The Journal of the British Board of Agriculture now reports that a method has been devised which overcomes this objection. This method has been very successful experimentally, but has scarcely yet passed the experimental stage. It is, however, full of hope.

"The other improvement is a method of treating by electricity seed before it is sown, and this has passed the experimental stage. Farmers on a large scale, who have tried it experimentally in previous seasons, are now laying down plant to test the whole of their seed corn—wheat, barley and oats. Owing to the liberality of the Ministry of Munitions (British), acting at the instance of the Board of Agriculture, installations at which farmers can have their seed treated by experts, have been erected at several centres, and are capable of treating some 30,000 sacks per month. The increase of yield from seed so treated, though not as great as the increase from electrification of the growing crops, is yet very great, ranging from 20 to as much as 80 per cent.; and, as I have said, it is past the experimental stage and is in full operation."

The news is startling! It is of the very first importance! It is certainly not to be neglected by Canadian farmers!

Will climatic and other conditions permit the new treatment to come into use here? Will it pay to generate, or to utilize electric power for such purposes? Is it likely to be a practical help to the average farmer? Are farmers anxious to give it a trial?

The Editor of The Star will be glad to hear from his readers their opinions upon the subject. Will every one who is interested write to him as soon as possible? For, there is no time to lose if any benefit is to be obtained for this year's crop!

NO HESITATION IN CANADA RE 1918 IMPERIAL COUNCIL

Australia and N. Z. Also Keen on Having One

PREMIERS ALMOST SURE TO ATTEND

Australasia Emphatically Against Return of German Colonies

THE MONTREAL STAR OFFICE, 20 Cockspur street, London, April 6.—Canadian officials here know nothing of the published report that Sir Robert Borden and his colleagues hesitate about coming to London for the Imperial war Cabinet and Imperial Conference, which are tentatively fixed for June. It has been stated that the Australian, New Zealand and Canadian authorities are inclined to regard it as a precipitate policy on the part of the Colonial Office to propose another Imperial Conference this year.

This suggestion is groundless as affecting Canada. Premier Massey of New Zealand, did apparently indicate the difficulties of leaving his colony at the present juncture, but the Imperial feeling in New Zealand is so strong that he has since definitely intimated his intention to attend. The real difficulty is Australia, where the labor party, now holding a majority in the Commonwealth Parliament, have turned down Premier Hughes, who is spoken of as a leader of a mixed combination of Imperialists concerned exclusively with the prosecution of the war. It is still hoped, however, that Premier Hughes will attend with Joseph Cook, who was leader of the Opposition when the Labor party held office.

Authorities here say that although it is arguable whether an Imperial Conference is really necessary this year, the rapid development of inter-Imperial financial commercial co-operation make it imperative that the Imperial War Cabinet reassemble in the early future.

New Zealand and Australian public opinion is also most emphatic in demanding that the British Government clearly understand the strong Colonial views that on no consideration should the German colonies be replaced under any conceivable measure of German control.

WINDERMERE.

FIRE STATION ABANDONED.

No. 31 fire station, which has been considered unsafe for some time, has been abandoned, the firemen who were stationed in the building having been sent with their apparatus to other fire stations in the north end of the city. Chief Tremblay had been contemplating the change for some time and when a portion of the wall showed signs of caving in last week, he gave orders that the building be evacuated. It is thought likely that the present structure will be demolished and a completely new building erected in its stead.

BRITISH RAID ON COLOGNE.

GENEVA, April 6.—The recent British aerial raids on Cologne caused 248 deaths, half of whom were soldiers, according to the latest reports received at Basle. The soldiers were in a railway train bound for the Picardy front and standing at the Cologne station. Panic reigned in the city for twelve hours, the streets were deserted and the population hid in cellars. One report says that a major was killed.

OPERATION OF M. S. A. DEFENDED BY PREMIER IN EXHAUSTIVE DEBATE

Crowded House Hears Criticism and Defence of Act and Comment on Quebec Riots — Sir Wilfrid Laurier Attacks new Orders—House Sat Till Small Hours

Special to The Star from Our Own Correspondent.

OTTAWA, April 6.—The expected field day on the Quebec riots and the operation of the Military Service Act took place before a mass of people in the House of Commons yesterday, extending into the early hours of this morning.

The debate was introduced by Col. Currie, of North Simcoe, a veteran of the First Canadian Army Corps, who moved the adjournment of the House to discuss the question just after Sir Robert Borden had informed the Commons of two orders-in-council that had been passed in order to provide ready military authority for the suppression of disturbances arising from the operation of the Military Service Act.

The Speaker permitted considerable latitude for the debate. As a result, it followed two main lines—criticism and defence of Quebec for that province's part in the war, and criticism and defence of the Government for the form and operation of the Military Service Act, both in Quebec and throughout the country.

Col. Currie's right to introduce the question was secured by a standing vote, twenty-one members on the Government side, mostly from Ontario, voting him the necessary power to speak after the Speaker called for a pronouncement on this point.

Speaking subsequently, they claimed that the time had come to fairly and squarely face the issue, and that the best place to have it threshed out was on the floor of Parliament.

Sir Robert Borden and Sir Wilfrid Laurier both made important speeches, the Premier defending the initiation and operation of the compulsory service law, pointing out that fifty thousand men were already obtained. Sir Wilfrid Laurier deplored the new orders-in-council, which, he said, were ill-conceived, and he attacked the minor officials used to put the law into operation in Quebec.

The general tone of the speeches made was unusually moderate, considering the tenseness of the situation. The western contingent, with few exceptions, held aloof from the debate, but Ontario members insisted on expressing their views and the Quebec stalwarts were not slow to reply. A great deal of ancient history was examined in the course of the evening sesion.

PREMIER READS NEW ORDERS.

As a curtain raiser and with the evident design of forestalling criticism, Sir Robert Borden read the two orders-in-council just passed, one of which gives the military full and peremptory power to replace the civil authority whenever there is riot and insurrection, and provides severe penalties, including enforced military service, and another which aims against idleness, compelling the engagement of every able-bodied man in some useful occupation.

The first order recites, in the first place, the opposition in Quebec to the enforcement of the M.S.A., and intimates that the civil authorities made no request for military assistance. It affirms the legality of the military intervention which actually took place, and for the future authorizes the officer commanding a military district to intervene with troops under his command, and to "use such force as he may determine to be reasonably necessary to quell and suppress rioting, insurrection or civil disturbance, and to restore the peace, whether or not any requisition be made upon or order given to such officer, or to any military authority, by any civil magistrate or civil authority."

CAN REPLACE CIVIL AUTHORITY.

The order-in-council stipulates that, also:—

"In the case of any riot, insurrection or civil disturbance which takes place while the Military Service Act, 1917, is in operation, if the general officer, or the officer commanding any military district of Canada, order any troops on service, or on active service under his command, to be called out for the maintenance of public order, or for preventing obstruction to the due enforcement of the Military Service Act, 1917, and the regulations thereunder, the Governor-in-Council, may, within the affected area which he shall by order designate, supersede or supersede to such extent as he may specify until his further order, the jurisdiction and powers of the civil courts, and declare that within the said area the orders of the general officer or of the officer commanding the troops shall in all respects be obeyed by the civil population, and that offenders against the law, or persons disobedient to such military orders, shall be tried and punished by court-martial constituted in the manner hereinafter provided; and consequent upon any such order of the Governor-in-Council the provisions of the two next following paragraphs shall until his further order, have effect:—

"(A)—All persons within the said area shall be subject to military laws, and the civil tribunals shall continue to exercise within or in respect of the aforesaid area only such powers and jurisdiction as shall not have been superseded or suspended by the Governor-in-Council; and the general officer or the officer commanding the troops, may constitute courts-martial for the purpose of trying any person who is charged with any offense against the law, or with disobedience to military order, within the said area;

COURT-MARTIAL'S POWERS.

"(B)—The Constitution, powers and the procedure of any court-martial so constituted as aforesaid, shall be the same as the Constitution, powers and procedure of either a general or a field-general court-martial; and any such court-martial shall have the power, in addition to the ordinary powers possessed by a court so constituted, to impose any sentence which might be imposed in a like case by any civil court of the province; provided that a sentence imposed by any such court-martial shall not be executed until affirmed by the Governor-in-Council;

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the Habeas Corpus Act, or in any other law or statute, and notwithstanding any right or remedy of habeas corpus proceeding by way of habeas corpus, all persons in military custody within an area which shall have been designated as aforesaid, and all persons who may be captured, arrested or taken into military custody, whether within or not within any such area during or in consequence of any riots or insurrection, shall be held, detained and remain in such custody without bail, inquiry or main prize until released by direction of the Minister of Militia and Defence, or delivered by his order to the civil authorities.

WILL BE AUTOMATICALLY ENROLLED.

"Any male person who takes part in any riot, insurrection or civil disturbance, incited, instigated or caused by way of opposition to the enforcement of the Military Service Act, 1917, or the regulatitons thereunder, shall if declared or found guilty of so doing by sentence of a court-martial or of a competent civil court, be deemed to have been called out for military service under the said Act, whether or not he be within any class of persons which had been called out for military service by proclamation, or within any class of persons to which the said act or regulations apply, or withing any of the exceptions of the schedule of the said act; and he shall by reason of such offence forfeit any exemption or claim to exemption to which he would otherwise be entitled, and be liable forthwith to military service in all respects as if finally selected therefor and required to report for duty under the provisions of the said act and regulations; provided that if any male person be captured, arrested or taken by military authority during the continuance of any such riot, insurrection or civil disturbance, while taking part or having taken part therein or while being present thereat to encourage, or assist the rioters, he shall be liable forthwith to such military service aforesaid without any further or other warrant or proceeding than the certificate of an officer in command of the body of militia effecting the capture, arrest or taking that he was so captured, arrested or taken in the circumstances aforesaid.

WARNING TO RIOTERS.

"Any male persons who—

"(a) Wilfully prevents, impedes or obstructs, or attempts to prevent, impede or obstruct, or engages or takes any part in any riot, insurrection or civil disturbance, or breach of the King's peace, against the enforcement or carrying out of the Military Service Act, 1917, or any of the provisions of the said act, or any regulation thereunder; or

"(b) Wilfully, with violence, or attempted violence or otherwise, obstructs, assaults, intimidates or interferes with, or attempts to obstructs, assaults, intimidates or infere with, any officer or person, or the property or premises occupied by any officer or person charged with the Military Service Act, 1917, or any regulation thereunder; or

"(c) Incites, counsels, encourages or assists any person to disobey or to refrain from executing any lawful order or direction made under or in pursuance of the said act, or any regulation therender; shall, upon conviction of any such offence, in addition to any other penalty therefor by law provided, thereby ipso facto become liable to military service under the said Military Service Act to the extent and in the manner provided in the fourth section of these regulations, and as if finally selected for military service and required to report for duty under the provisions of the Military Service Act, 1917, and the regulations thereunder."

COL. CURRIE MOVES DEBATE.

J. A. Currie (North Simcoe):

"Mr. Speaker, I have the honor to ask leave to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the rioting, agitation, disturbances and non-observance of the law in Quebec, together with all the circumstances, conditions and causes near and remote having any bearing on or connection therewith.

"It is with a great deal of difference that I have brought this motion forward. Everyone is conscious no one in this House more than myself—that we have had disturbances in the city of Quebec, and in the province of Quebec generally. I have not brought the motion forward, as has been suggested, for the purpose of self-advertisement in any manner, shape or form. I have not raised it for the purpose of stirring up any political trouble or faction; and as far as I am personally concerned, my discussion of this subject will be as mild in character as any discussion that has ever taken place in this House. But it must be noticeable to every person, it must be common knowledge to everyone, that if there is anything that this House should discuss, it is this very matter which I have brought before you today.

"I hope to lay my statement of the case clearly before the House, and then the Ministers of the Crown, as well as other members of the House, will have the opportunity of discussing it fully and freely.

SAYS THINGS FORMERLY SUPPRESSED.

"Now the question might not have been of very great importance, because every member who sits in this House, certainly all the old members, know that during the last session of the House there were frequent outbursts of this character in the province of Quebec. The matter was suppressed by the newspapers, and nothing was said about it in this House, because during the last session of the House every member felt under a great deal of restraint. They could not criticise anything openly and above board, for the simple reason that voluntary service was the method then in operation for securing men for the war, and if a man spoke out his mind here on any of the public questions at that time it would have been said that he was injuring recruiting. In fact, on more than one occasion at that time matters were raised in the House which the public press declared were injurious to the cause.

"LIPS NEED NO LONGER BE STILL."

"As one man who has taken a little part in the war, and whose whole heart is in the war, I desire to see that our brave troops at the front are supported in every possible way. As I sat in the House last session, there often occurred to me the words of Robert L. Stevenson in one of his famous essays, where he said that the greatest lies are told in silence. I heard things said in this House, which, had they been uttered outside, and I had been free from any responsibility in connection with voluntary service, I would have spoken to the public on those questions. But now the Military Service Act is in operation, and we are taking men for the war under the form of conscription, the lips of men in this House, and in the country, need no longer be still for fear of injuring voluntary recruiting.

"Now this question might not have come before this House at all. A little bit of rioting might not have mattered very much, but what do we find? The condition of affairs so far as this war is concerned—because this country is at war and at war very seriously, although a great many people do not realize it—the condition of affairs at the front at the present moment is critical. We have been asked by the leader of the Government in England to send reinforcements to our brave troops at the front.

SAYS NOTHING NEW IN ORDERS.

"From the orders-in-council that have been brought down today, we are going to see more pep in the recruiting campaigns carried on in that province, and there is going to be a stronger hand maintained there from now on. But there is nothing contained in those orders-in-council which is not to be found set forth in the laws of the country, the military laws, today, except one thing.

"In the first place, under the common law the military authorities of the country have a perfect right to do exactly what these orders-in-council say they shall do. They are Government measures to subdue riots, and, if necessary, to shoot, but the military authorities are at liberty to do all that under the King's regulations and orders.

"However, the whole question we have to discuss here is a question which dates remotely back in this House to the time that the idea of bringing on a new form of recruiting was decided."

REVIEWS VOLUNTARY EFFORTS.

Col. Currie reviewed the circumstances leading up to the adoption of conscription, criticising national service and national defence schemes.

Continuing, he said:—

"The late Government introduced into this House the Military Service Act, and the Military Service Act that came before this House was not such a Military Service Act as that Government would have produced had there not been certain elements in the Government which were opposed to compulsion of any kind in order to send men to the front. We all know of the trouble that occurred. Ministers resigned and left the Government. Finally we had this law brought down by which a hundred thousand men were going to be secured by means of what is called the draft.

SAYS M.S.A. A JOKE.

"Everybody in the corridors knew that it was a joke, that that law which was brought down was not the law that was generally required, but it was the law, and as such it was shot full of holes. The enforcement of the Act was virtually left to the lawyers and judges and officials. If they not wish to enforce it rigorously, every man in the country could avoid coming under its provisions.

"I have nothing to say against my good friends in the Province of Quebec. Men from that province fought with me in the trenches in the greatest battle in the whole war, and I want to testify to their courage, devotion and bravery, because no braver men ever lived. Had they been properly managed by their leaders; had they not been misled and misrepresented, I firmly believe in my heart that no part of Canada would have taken part in the war more joyfully or gladly than the people of the Province of Quebec.

If Quebec has not done its duty, it is not on account of the people of that province, it is on account of the so-called leaders of that province.

WANTS MORE DRASTIC MEASURES.

"I should not bring this question forward today did not feel that unless some drastic steps are taken—more even than have been mentioned in the House today—Quebec will not be conscripted until after the war.

"Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, why I say that. Up to the present time, the Province of Quebec has given about 5,000 men under the Military Service Act, and of that number fully 3,500 are English-speaking.

"In the Province of Quebec, 60,000 appeals under the Military Service Act are pending, and only about six hundred of them have reached the Central Appeal Judge. Six months after the passing of the law, 1,500 men can be secured in the Province of Quebec, I leave it to members of the House to figure how many years it will take to obtain the balance. I now wish to discuss the matter of who is to blame for this state of affairs."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier—"Hear, hear."

LIKENS BOURASSA TO BOLO.

Mr. Currie—"I will take my friends first. I believe—I have the evidence right here—that the Government, in trying to enforce this Act with caution and moderation in the Province of Quebec, have given aid and comfort to those men who are doing everything in their power to create disturbance in that province. We all know that the man who is the prominent figure in all this anti-British trouble in Quebec is the editor of the newspaper called Le Devoir, Henri Bourassa. When the war broke out Mr. Bourassa was in Belgium or Stratford, or some place over there, and he managed to sneak out under the protection of the British flag and escape to this country.

"No sooner had he reached this side than by some strange process he started to carry out that very policy which Paul Bolo tried to pursue from his headquarters in the United States as well as in France—that of creating trouble and causing dissatisfaction, doing everything in his power to prevent the people from sustaining our part in this war.

"I say without reservation that he has constantly preached sedition in the columns of Le Devoir. During the troubles in this House over the passage of the Military Service Act, he was very silent because the public mind was inflamed then, but at other times he has constantly preached sedition in his newspaper.

"Now, I can understand a patriot of the old school who fought for 'liberty, equality or fraternity' preaching sedition against autocracy. I would do it myself. But that is not the case with this man. He does not want liberty, equality or fraternity; he wants reaction. His gospel is the gospel of reaction.

COMMERCIALIZED SEDITION.

"I say, further, that he has commercialized sedition to sell his paper to the poor dupes who will read it; I repeat that that is his chief aim and object, and also to get a little cheap popularity for himself. He is the leader of the Nationalist party. We, on this side of the House, have had our trouble with the Nationalists. We knew all about that, but we are rid of that trouble now, we hope. Why was not Le Devoir suppressed, and why was not Bourassa interned?

"At Sault Ste Marie, the speaker said a paper had been suppressed for criticizing recruiting. To his mind the editor was a much better man than Henri Bourassa.

He continued: "It is sometimes said that Bourassa may be more dangerous locked up than at large. The men who are the fathers or the sons or the brothers of the boys who went over Vimy Ridge are not afraid of any cheap agitator in Quebec or anywhere else, whether locked up or free. In the United States men better than Bourassa are being locked up and have disappeared from ken, and they will remain out of sight and unheard of until the war is over. But what do we find in the case of Bourassa? In this same paper are our columns of Government advertising, whole pages or it.

"This is a serious matter. How can any French-Canadian who reads the views of the editor of this paper escape the conclusion that as far as French-Canadians are concerned, they are outside the wall altogether, and the Government does not intend to do anything with them.

"Now, I come to somebody else,—Mr. Lavergne.

Some hon. members—Col. Lavergne.

WON'T CALL LAVERGNE COLONEL.

Mr. Currie—"I do not intend to call him colonel. Why has he been travelling around Quebec with the stars of a colonel on his shoulders, when right from the beginning he has been opposed to the war, and stated so while I was at Valcartier. This man, who has been virtually accepted as the leader of the Nationalist party in the province of Quebec, should have been interned. Col. Currie criticized the calling in of Mr. Lavergne to settle the Quebec riots.

He referred to the punishment of an officer at Toronto for saying soldiers were drunk as contrasted with the immunity of Lavergne for saying worse things.

"Lavergne should have been utterly ignored," he declared, "in fact he should have been the first man placed under arrest in Quebec when the riots broke out."

The effect of the agitation and of the disturbances was to affect the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, said the speaker.

Col. Currie here read part of one of Sir Wilfrid's 1889 speeches, in which Laurier referred to the pain felt by French-Canadians at the loss of Alsace-Lorraine.

The speaker said Sir Wifrid had given ground before the Nationalists. He advocated placing all men in uniform as classes are called who cannot show reason for being exempted, and closed with an eloquent appeal for support of the men in Flanders.

MUST BE IMPARTIALITY.

H. H. Stevens, of Vancouver, following Col. Currie, agreed with the former as to the duty of the House to discuss the question. He dwelt upon the fairness and impartiality of British justice. "But we have this condition in Canada today, that with the same law and the same constitution of courts, we have an entirely diverse interpretation of this Act of Parliament, the Military Service Act. In one province it is viewed from one standpoint, and you have a certain application of it, in eight provinces we have a directly opposite application. The law must be impartially administered in all parts of the country."

Mr. Stevens contrasted the severity with which the Military Service Act was enforced in British Columbia with the manner in which it was "winked at" in Quebec. He warned the Government against calling out the second class under the Act before the first class all over the country had been made to do its duty. Mr. Stevens suggested removing the administration of the law from the Department of Justice which, he said, had always been regarded as a place for embalming embarrassing questions. He wanted a department to take up the matter which would show some energy in enforcing the Act.

He approved of the new amendments to the Act, but pointed out that what the country faced was passive resistance, which the amendments did not cover.

Amidst some disorder, he asserted a member of the last Parliament told him of operation of French-speaking tribunals in the member's constituency, which exempted all the French-speaking men and put all the English-speaking men into class A.

LAURIER TAKES UP DEBATE.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in opening, referred to the long time, forty years, during which he had represented Quebec East. From his acquaintance with the people he knew them to be sensitive to injustices.

Sir Wilfrid continued: "The mover of this motion was kind enough in his remarks to say that at one time he had some regard for me, though I have sadly fallen from grace in this respect. May I say also to him that on the present occasion he has sadly disappointed me. I thought he moved his motion to discuss the riots and the disturbances which took place recently in the city of Quebec. He discussed altogether another question than that. He discussed the enforcement of the Act, the action of the tribunals, but of the riots in the city of Quebec he hardly said a word."

Some Hon. members: "Hear, hear."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier: "I think it my duty, Sir, to speak of the riots that have taken place in Quebec. I have the honor today, as I said two or three days ago, to be the member for the constituency in which these riots took place. That honor I have enjoyed now for upwards of forty years. I know the people well, and I repeat what I said on a former occasion, that there was not to be found in any part of Canada a more peaceable or law-abiding people. I think I may also add that they are a sensitive population, sensitive to resent injustice, and perhaps more sensitive yet to resent a harsh act and an unkind word.

SAYS HE KNOWS RIOTS' CAUSE.

"It was my duty, upon learning of the disturbances that had taken place in Quebec, to try to inform myself as to what were the facts, they being so little in accordance with what I know of that constituency of Quebec East. I wished to inform myself as to what were the causes which could have brought a condition of affairs so utterly at variance with the character of the constituency as long as I have known it. Sir, I think now I pretty well know the genesis of the disturbances which took place.

He continued: "I said on a former occasion to the Prime Minister that if the Act had not been enforced as rigidly as it might have been, if there had been disturbances of that kind, the fault was largely with the men who were entrusted with the duty of enforcing the Act. I do not complain at all of the high officers of the district. So far as I know them, they are men of honor and have tried to do their duty. But, Sir, I have to say that as to the men who were entrusted with the duty of putting into force section 15 of the M. S. A., a more unfortunate selection could not have been made."

"INQUISITORIAL POWER."

The law cited by the Prime Minister states that section 15 of the Act empowers any officer of the law to ask any man whom he meets for his papers. This is an inquisitorial power, and everybody knows, and in saying this I am sure that I place myself in the judgment of every member of this House, that these inquisitorial powers, to be effective and not to be resented, must be executed with proper regard to the dignity and honor of the man who is subject to it.

Sir Wilfrid went on to describe the men accosting young men on the streets as low and brutal characters. They had refused to let Mercier telephone home for his papers, and ha

SECRET SOCIETIES AT WORK.

He continued: "The following day, the riots were continued, and they are of far greater consequences. And I must say that upon this my conclusion is, after having investigated the matter for my own sake, and having been in communication with my friends in the city of Quebec, my constituents, that the trouble which took place on Friday, the 29th of March, was caused by secret associations of some kind. What they are, I do not know. I am sure of one thing, the origin of those associations is not in the city of Quebec. The leaders of the trouble that resulted are not Quebec men.

Some Hon. members: "Hear, hear."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier—They are not Quebec men. I asked my friends and constituents to tell me who were the leaders of these riots, and one and all tell me that they did not know them. It is known, it is a fact, that on that Friday evening there was a motor car in which there were four persons, who appeared to be the leaders of the movement, and these four persons do not belong to the City of Quebec, so far as my information goes at the present time. Who were these men? That the movement was organised is undoubted. Who were behind it? My impression is—I have not information upon this, but I will give my reasons for believing what I am going to say—that it is the same gang which attempted to terrorize the City of Montreal last summer.

SAYS LEADERS MONTREAL MEN.

Sir Wilfrid described the Montreal gang as criminals, who had been released from jail, where they should have been kept. He attacked Desjardins, the detective, as the instigator of all the trouble that had occurred in Quebec. This was the gang which, he believed, had bene operating in Quebec city, as the placards posted in Quebec were the same as used in Montreal.

He continued: "The trouble is not all on one side. There semes to be an inclination somewhere to put the blame on the civil authorities of Quebec; to establish that on the part of the French-Canadian population there is a disposition to evade or to break the law.

Sir Wilfrid here quoted a wire from Sir Lomer Gouin in denial of a statement in the press that there was friction between the civil and military authorities in Quebec City.

He complimented the Government for employing General Lessard at Quebec, but said the general should have been used there much earlier in the war. He advised letting the civil and military authorities work together, and then there would be no further trouble at Quebec.

READY TO OBEY THE LAW.

He proceeded: "Speaking with what authority I may have as representative of Quebec City, and as holding the position which I now occupy, I can say that in Quebec the people are prepared to accept three things. First that the law must be obeyed, second that property must be respected, third that peace must be preserved. This is the spirit in which I intend to discuss this matter. Heaven is my witness that on this occasion I have no intention of endeavoring to create further difficulty or further trouble. What I want is what I have always wanted in this war, to help so far as I can to win the war.

The member for North Simcoe (Col. Currie) a moment ago was kind enough to refer to some ideas which I expressed in the City of uQebec many years ago. These ideas, sir, I never departed from, not even in the position which I took in this House against the conscription bill. Since my hon. friend was good enough to quote from a remark which I made in Quebec, he might have quoted also from the last speech which I delivered in that city, when I opened the political campaign of the last election. Did I there say anything at all to which he can take exception? Did I encourage the people of Quebec not to respect the law? On the contrary, I said that the law must be respected, must be obeyed.

My hon. friend asked me why I did not continue the course which I previously adopted; why I opposed the policy of conscription. He linked my name with that of Mr. Bourassa.

DISCLAIMS BOURASSA AND LAVERGNE.

Sir Wilfrid said he had long since broken definitely with Burassa and Lavergne.

Sir Wilfrid said his opposition to conscritpion in Canada was due to his knowledge of human nature. The people of Quebec had too much Celtic blood not to resist compulsion. The thing to do was to appeal to their heart and imagination. This he had tried to do, but unsuccessfully, because he had to fight the jingoes at one end and the Nationalists at the other. He claimed the results of compulsory service proved that the voluntary system should have been retained. He claimed British precedents, Lloyd George, John Bright and others for his stand against "the popular passion of the moment" in opposing conscription.

Sir Wilfrid criticized the order-in-council introduced by the Premier giving the authorities power to place men in military service for active resistance to the Military Service Act. He contended that the Governor-in-Council had not power to pass this law, and that it was an invasion of the rights of British subjects. He attacked the order-in-council giving the military the right to interfere regardless of the civil authorities as liable to do more harm than good in Quebec.

Premier Borden Defends Government Application of Act

Right Hon. Sir Robert Borden—"Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to what has been put forward in this debate. I shall not pretend, in making the few observations that I have to make, to follow precisely everything that has been alleged by all the speakers. My hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Currie) has gone into these matters with a good deal of detail into which perhaps it is not necessary that I should follow him.

"I would not care to commit myself absolutely to his conception of events that occurred during the last session of Parliament. He and the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) as well seemed to be impressed with the idea that the Military Service Act has been enforced with too great moderation in the Province of Quebec, and my right hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is impressed with a contrary appreciation of the situation in that province. I shall come to that in a moment.

"There were some observations made in regard to the newspaper press of the country, and particularly the newspaper press in the Province of Quebec. The general principle of the British Government, and that principle has received no stronger illustration than in the United Kingdom itself, has been not to interfere with the right of free speech unless it is absolutely necessary by reason of a great emergency.

NO KNOWLEDGE OF LE DEVOIR ADVT.

Any one who has seen men, even during this war, airing their opinions and criticisms in Hyde Park will realize the truth of what I am saying. I do not know anything about the advertisement which is alleged to have been inserted in Le Devoir.

"I presume the hon. gentleman who brought it to the attention of the House is right in his conception that these matters have been left to some business agency, apart altogether from any consideration on patronage, and that the advertisement has found its way into the columns of Le Devoir in that way. I do not know of any other explanation.

"Reference was also made by the hon. member for Simcoe to Col. Machin's interview with Col. Lavergne. I have documents under my hand to show that the interview which took place, I think at the suggestion of Mr. Taschereau, was not an interview by Col. Machin in any official capacity, and he so explained it to Col. Lavergne at the time."

Replying to Col. Currie's suggestion that the members of Class A should be put under drill at once, Sir Robert said the principle of the Act as approved by the people was to find out whether a man could best serve the country in his regular occupation or in military service. He went on:

NO DISCRIMINATION SHOWN.

"The hon. member for Vancouver, if I gathered his meaning correctly, seemed to be under the impression that there had been one application of this law in eight provinces of Canada, and an entirely different application of it in the Province of Quebec. So far as the efforts of the Government are concerned, I must take the strongest possible objection to such a statement. There has been nothing of the kind. The effort of the Government has been to enforce this law impartially, firmly and without any distinction whatever in every province of Canada. That has been the purpose, and it has been carried out to the best of our ability.

"I want to say in justice to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) that no man could have worked more indefatigably to give that Act effect than he has during all the time that he has had it under his administration.

"Hon. gentlemen who are suggesting that the Government have been lax in the enforcement of this law in Quebec should recollect that it has been enforced with sufficient firmness in that province to bring about the unfortunate conditions which have prevailed in the City of Quebec during the past week. On the one hand we were told that the disturbances in the City of Quebec are due to the fact that we have enforced this law too rigorously and too sternly—"

Some hon. members—"No, no."

Sir Robert Borden—"And on the other hand, we are told that the law has been enforced in a very lax manner in that province."

Mr. Stevens—"That is not what I said. What I said was that the way in which the Act was being administered in the Province of Quebec was entirely different from the way it was being administered in the other eight provinces."

Sir Robert Borden—"I am very glad of the correction of my hon. friend, and I shall come to that in a moment. What step did the Government take when this Act was first proclaimed?

Sir Robert told of the formation of the Military Service Council, to whom he paid a tribute.

QUEBEC DIFFICULT PROBLEM.

"I realize perfectly that the conditions in the Province of Quebec have made it difficult not to endorse the Act, but to enforce it with expedition which the Government and the country would have desired.

"I entirely understand and appreciate that, but I would like the House and the country to understand that there are some misrepresentations abroad as to what the total result of that Act has been up to the present time. My Right. Hon. friend told us a moment ago that he would have had better results in procuring reinforcements for the overseas service if we had adhered to the voluntary system. He did not give us any evidence in support of that, and I venture to say that his view on that subject cannot be supported by any evidence. (Hear, hear).

"In the months of August last we recruited 3,117 men. In the month of September last, we recruited 3,588 men, and there is not the slightest doubt that a good many of these men came to the colors for the reason that they knew that compulsory service was about to be enforced.

47,000 MEN TO DATE.

Sir Robert Borden: "Without that Bill before the House there is no question that the number who came forward in that way would have been very much smaller. What have we done during the last seven weeks? August and September comprise nearly nine weeks, but in the last seven weeks, by means of the Military Service Act, we have brought to the colors 16,000 men.

"I venture to say with the utmost possible confidence, that no such results, no results anything like that, could have been attained if we had continued the system of voluntary service. I would like to say, further, that since the first day of October last, which is about the date on which this Act was proclaimed, 50,000 men have joined the Canadian colors, 18,000 of these have been recruited in the United States and 32,000 have been recruited under the Military Service Act.

"I would like to say, further, that from the first day of October, 1917, to the thirtieth of the present month of April, if our responses for the present month are carried out, as I have no doubt they will, we shall have sent overseas to the support of the gallant men who are fighting our battles there, about 47,000 Canadian soldiers."

Some Hon. members: "Hear, hear."

WHOLESALE QUEBEC EXEMPTION.

Sir Robert Borden—"Now with regard to conditions in the Province of Quebec, I have stated publicly, and I state here again, that in some portions of that province, in many parts of that province, exemptions were granted almost wholesale, there is no doubt about that, by the tribunals of first instance. What was the result? The Government had given its pledges to the people of Canada that it would see to it that the Act was enforced fairly, impartially and firmly in every province.

"What then was our duty? Our duty was to see to it that by appeals we brought these cases up to the Central Appeal Judge, so that in the end there would be a fair and just and impartial administration of that Act for all the provinces and all the people of Canada.

Some Hon. members: "Hear, hear."

Sir Robert Borden: "We have done that. A great many appeals have already come up from the Province of Quebec to the Central Appeal Judge—appeals asserted by the Government of this country, and necessarily asserted by them, in order that there might be a just and fair enforcement of the Act. I believe that there are at the present time about thirty thousand appeals which have been disposed of by the appelate tribunals in the Province of Quebec, and which are being brought forward to the Central Appeal Judge as rapidly as possible."

J. A. Currie: "Is it true that only six hundred of these appeals have reached the Central Appeal Judge?"

MUCH WORK IN APPEALS.

"I am not prepared to state how many have reached him. I say that number is ready to come forward. In order that they may be brought forward, they have to be classified. Information has to be procured, the case has to be stated for the Central Appeal Judge, and eventually when the appeals begin to come forward in increasing numbers in the immediate future, it will probably be necessary that the Central Appeal Judge, in order that the appeals may be expeditiously disposed of, shall have the assistance which he can have under the terms of the M. S. A.

"But besides that, as I understand, there are about thirty thousand other cases in the Province of Quebec which have been appraised upon, I believe for the most part, probably altogether, by the tribunals of the first instance, but which have not yet been passed upon by the appelate tribunals. Of course it was the duty of the Government, with so heavy a mass of appeals in that province, by every possible means in its power, to expedite the hearing of those appeals, and that the Government has done.

"The Minister of Justice, since he returned to Ottawa, made a personal visit to the City of Montreal, saw the Chief Justice and other judges of the courts there, and urged upon them, in the national interest, the absolute necessity that they should lay everything else to one side and expedite these appeals.

ALL POSSIBLE EXPEDITION MADE.

He had an interview also with Sir Francois Lemieux, chief justice of the court in the Quebec district. He urged the same thing upto him, and he found on the part of all these judges an absolute disposition to lend themselves to the enforcement of the act in this way. They have been disposing of these appeals very rapidly indeed in the city of Montreal, and, I believe also, in the city of Quebec. They have been disposed of at the rate of about two thousand a week in the former city, and indeed I am informed that all the civil business of the province has been put to one side by the courts, and that the courts at the present time are occupying themselves absolutely and solely with the enforcement of the M.S.A.

"Under these circumstances, I venture to question whether under the terms of the act as it stands today it would have been possible for the Government to have taken any measure which has not been taken. I also venture to believe that within the present month, results will come from the enforcement of the act by the disposal of these appeals which will be highly satisfactory to the Government, to Parliament and to the people of Canada.

"My right hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, has spoken upon this question, sometimes with a good deal of warmth, and I desire to devote a few moments to certain observations which he has made. He stated in the first part of his remarks that the population of the district which he represents in Parliament, and in which these riots occurred, is a population highly sensitive to injustice. I do not know that the population there differs in that respect from any other part of the population of this country. (Hear, hear.)

ALL CANADIANS LAW-ABIDING.

"All the people of Canada are sensitive to injustice, and all the people of Canada, I hope, are law-abiding to as great an extent as the population he represents.

Sir Robert said the Mercier incident at Quebec had been repeated all over Canada without causing riots. As to the subordinate officers enforcing the act, he said these could not be too polite and refined having to work amongst an unsympatheitc populace. He saw no justification for the charges made by Sir Wilfrid and thought some of the latter observations particularly unfortunate.

"My right hon. friend says that the leaders in these disturbances were not Quebec men. I hope that is so," said the Premier.

Sir Sam Hughes—"That they were not from Quebec city."

Sir Robert Borden—"That they were not residents of Quebec. I hope that is so, I do not know. But I do regret that if they were not citizens of Quebec, the appeals which they made produced so great an effect upon the population there."

As to General Lessard, Sir Robert said the General had refused, when war began, an offer to take charge of recruiting in Quebec.

The Premier defended the orders-in-council attacked by Sir Wilfrid, as absolutely necessary to meet the emergency. As to the use of the civil authorities, urged by Sir Wilfrid, where were they when the Quebec rioting began? Their failure to act made federal action imperative, the War Measures Act having empowered the Government for just such a case. All over Canada, he said, the Government would see that the M.S.A. was enforced and that the King's peace was kept.

LAPOINTE CALLED TO ORDER.

Continuing the debate at the evening session, Ernest Lapointe, of Kamouraska, was called to order by the Speaker for heated references to Col. Currie's "insults." He warmly defended the people of Quebec against charges as to disloyalty and provincialism. The congestion in the Quebec courts due to appeals under the M.S.A. he explained by saying there were only 36 judges in Quebec to hear appeals, as against 91 in Ontario. Mr Lapointe protested bitterly against the alleged injustices in the operation of the M.S.A., and denounced the Government's action by orders-in-council instead of through Parliament, because the French-speaking people of Quebec were not represented in the administration and their feelings could not be expressed except on the floor of the House. He closed with an appeal to Quebec for moderation and a hope that better times were coming.

SIR SAM ON THE FLOOR.

Sir Sam Hughes, the next speaker, told an interesting story of early efforts at recruiting in Quebec and the Ottawa Valley. He mentioned Col. de Salaberry's failure to raise men in the Ottawa Valley, explained by the Colonel as due to opposition by the clergy.

In part General Hughes said: "Everywhere there was the hidden hand. Take the case of the 42nd Battalion. We had to enlist 5,000 men to get 1,100—I think that is about the number. We enlisted nearly 5,000 men and they gradually melted away and finally we got about 1,100 to go over. I don't know the cause. I am telling facts as they occurred. And hon. gentlemen can look for the cause themselves. I suspected at once a German agency. I communicated that thought to some of my colleagues, but we had no proof of it at the time. I want to make another statement here of a fact which will not be denied. These clergymen were expatriated from France, for violation of the French laws, I suppose. I am not going to discuss that, because I do not now. But they were in the city of Quebec, and eight of these clergymen were found with a collection of German propaganda circulated from the United States, coming into this country, and I did not have them arrested.

GERMAN PROPAGANDA IN QUEBEC.

"I simply refer you to the fact, but if you doubt it, ask Inspector Green, a good Irishman, who was inspector of the Post Office, and I left it for him to settle with them.

"One of these gentlemen went to the United States and has since died. I think others followed, but they were all busily engaged in circulating German propaganda through Quebec. It is not much wonder that these splendid boys, who would be only too glad to have upheld the honor of France, of Canada and of the Empire, and humanity in this great war were influenced, many of them by teaching such as that. Some of them said to me: 'There is an officer at the front, Col. J. G. White, Hawkesbury Lumber Co. He will raise a battalion inside of a week.'

"Colonel White came home and got a large number of the foremen together and said: 'I want each of you to get me a few boys, and in a few days we will have a battalion. Inside of two weeks the colonel came to me and said: 'The jig is up, we cannot raise the men.'

SAYS CLERGY STOPPED RECRUITING.

"I am not going to turn a corner. We may as well face the facts and thresh it out and know where we stand. Col. White said: 'These foremen came to me and say the men will not enlist. The clergy, these old country clergymen have disseminated the teachings that this is a just judgment on France for having expatriated the Church.' And he could not get enough to form a corporal's guard in the whole of the Ottawa Valley. I gave Col. White command of an English-speaking battalion.

"In the meantime, Col. White said, 'they say that the advice of the clergy to them is to let the English-speaking people go to the front. You can go up into Ontario and get their jobs. Stay at home and earn good money and if they get killed you will retain their places.'

"This is the second time in my presence that the leader of the Opposition has seen fit, after he was corrected, to say that if General Lessard had been sent in he would have done wonders. He knows, and General Lessard will not deny it, that the Prime Minister and I gave him the the opportunity, although General Fiset and I told him that he was not the man for the job. I went farther, I did myself the honor of attending the memorial service in Notre Dame Church, Montreal, when Archbishop Bruchesi delivered a most magnificent oration. I had the honor of meeting Archbishop Bruchesi in the vestry, and he told me that he was heart and soul with the Allies in this great cause, but he was not at liberty to give the reasons why he was powerless to help in the cause. What he said, however, was satisfactory to me.

"I got Sir William Price to go with me to Cardinal Begin in Quebec in his own palace, and I laid the matter before him. I wanted him to appoint chaplains in every county, and offered to put them in uniform, to give them every dignity, and do everything that we could in that direction, hoping that they would help us to raise men, but for some reason the plan did not succeed. I challenge anyone from the Province of Quebec to show where any young men from that Province worthy of a commission failed to get it.

"HIDDEN HAND" AT WORK.

"Notwithstanding all the random nonsense that has been talked about, I maintain that every preference has been shown towards them, that kindly treatment has been accorded them, but there is the hidden hand, and for some unaccountable reason, unless boys were wildly enthusiastic, they did not materialise in the ranks. I offered to train the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boivin), who occupies the chair in front of me tonight, and I also offered to train other gentlemen on that side of the House if they would go out and raise battalions. I left no stone unturned to get these splendid boys into harness. Therefore, I say that the cry of Ontario prejudice and Orangeists will not do. No men ever had a fairer opportunity given them than the boys of Quebec, but the hidden hand was behind and stopped it all.

ALLEGES UNFAIR TREATMENT.

Mr. George Parent, of West Quebec, who followed, differed from Sir Sam Hughes as to the treatment accorded Quebec under the voluntary system. He charged that the Military Service Act had been aimed directly at Quebec. He gave a detailed description of the riots at Quebec from personal observation, asserting that the ringleaders were unknown in the ancient Capital. Like Sir Wilfrid, he criticized the Government for employing bad characters to enforce the Act, and gave several instances of alleged injustices.

Mr. MacKie, of Edmonton East, centred his attack upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and said the ideal of Quebec was evidently apart from that of the rest of the country.

Captain Charles G. Power, Quebec South, a returned officer, opened his speech by saying that, at this very moment, there were from twenty-five thousand to fifty thousand Quebeckers bleeding, perhaps dying, on the plains of Picardy.

A Government supporter interrupted: "There are not half as many

"Covers Canada Like a Blanket"

The Audit Bureau of Circulations divides the Dominion of Canada into four zones for the purpose of giving advertisers a standard basis of comparison and analysis of newspaper circulations.

The number of subscribers THE FAMILY HERALD and WEEKLY STAR has in each zone, taken from the Audit Bureau of Circulations' statement for the six months ending September 30th, 1917, is as follows:

1. Western Provinces:—British Columbia, Yukon and Northwest Territories	13,987
2. Central Provinces:—Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba	49,436
3. Eastern Provinces:—Ontario and Quebec	41,956
4. Maritime Provinces:—New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and including the Dominion of Newfoundland	34,384
Total	139,763
British Possessions, United States and Foreign	10,597
Grand Total	150,360

These figures explain why THE FAMILY HERALD and WEEKLY STAR is known as the NATIONAL home and farm journal of Canada.

In comparison it is well to observe that the next largest publication of similar character in Canada has an entire circulation less than 40,000.

THE FAMILY HERALD and WEEKLY STAR is the only publication of its class which has a representative distribution in every province of Canada.

THE FAMILY HERALD and WEEKLY STAR is endorsed and supported by leading advertisers and advertising agencies in the United States, Great Britain and Canada, as the greatest business producer in its class in Canada.

$5,000 provision for your home

— plus —

$50 a month indemnity for yourself

Guaranteed to You Under Our New Special Indemnity Plan

It safeguards your income—

—protects your home, and—

—if you become permanently disabled—

—pays you $50 a month for life, and guarantees $5,000 to your family.

Whatever your income may be, a certain part of it is vital to your existence. Let us suppose that vital sum is

$50 a Month

That you must have.

But---

If some day, before you reach age sixty, you should become totally and permanently disabled through accident, paralysis, nervous break-down, blindness, rheumatism, or any mishap or illness that would leave you without an income and unable to earn a living—

How Could You Get Along?

From a financial standpoint that would be worse for you, for your family, and for your business than the loss of your life because, while your income would stop, your expenses would go on just the same.

Suppose, however, now that you are in good health, you take out a Canada Life Special Indemnity Policy—

Your Problem is Solved.

The Canada Life would become responsible for sending you $50.00 a month (or more, as you may have arranged) for the rest of your life.

When totally disabled you cannot earn premiums, so the premiums cease.

You will also need immediate funds. By allowing your dividends to accumulate for a few years you would have a substantial cash sum at your credit ready for an emergency.

The Policy will go on earning dividends which will be paid to you in addition to your income.

What Then?

It makes no difference how long you may live and continue to draw the monthly income, the Policy still carries the full $5,000 payable to your beneficiary. In other words, not one dollar of all that you receive in monthly payments will be deducted from the amount of the Policy.

Nothing Left to Chance.

This is the Policy you will want when you know how completely it does away with hazards that you are now taking. The premium required for all these benefits is very moderate.

BURNS STILL AFTER FRANKIE FLEMING

Joe Burns thinks he is being badly treated.

He wants Frankie Fleming to give him a match before Frankie leaves for the flying fields of France, and, although Frankie during his brief visit here said he would do so, Burns seems to doubt him, strange as it may seem.

Burns, in fact, while he does not say so outright, intimates in a roundabout way that Frankie is afraid of him, not physically afraid of course, but afraid, that he, Burns, has improved so much of late, that he will beat him, particularly as the match should take place in Toronto before a lot of soldiers, who have not the personal interest in him that so many Montrealers have.

Burns and his friends almost go so far as to say that the mental support of Fleming's friends in Montreal, not the ring they used to rock for him, had a great deal to do with handicapping his opponent.

They are prepared they say to let Burns meet Fleming, in Toronto, or in any army camp under any fair conditions, the proceeds to go to any patriotic fund that may be named.

"Billy Sunday Was Better Than Cobb"

NEW YORK, April 6. — Old Cap. Anson is an incurable booster of the old time ball players as against the stars of the present day. Anson has made various statements about the relative merits of the players of the past and the present which do not find favor with us. Perhaps his latest declaration, that Billy Sunday of the old Chicagos was the superior of Tyrus Cobb as a fielder and a base runner, is the most flagrant faux pas the captain yet has made. Anson says that Billy could run rings around Cobb.

"I always have contended that the players of the present do not put up the article of ball that was seen in the old National League," says Anson. "Of the present day pitchers Mathewson was the greatest. Alexander and Johnson are first class performers. Johnson has as nice a delivery as any pitcher I ever watched. He gets great speed, a wicked curve, and should last for many years.

"In the olden days we had a dozen stars, and there are not over two now. Collins is probably the greatest, with Cobb a close second.

DESERVED HONOR.

"When I picked my all time all star team I gave all the places to the old timers, and they deserved them. Before we had professional ball there was a period of twenty years in which the players were in the making. The best of the lot were taken for the show. Later we replenished our supply by taking the cream of the American Association.

"Billy Sunday, in his prime, could run rings around Ty Cobb. Where are the players of nowadays who compare with Buck Ewing, Fred Dunlap, Fred Pfeffer and Biddy McPhee? Buck Ewing was the best catcher who ever worked behind the bat. John Clarkson was probably the best of the old time pitchers. The Boston club paid Chicago $20,000 for Mike Kelly and Clarkson, and they were worth the money.

"I had to wreck my old Chicago team in much the same way that Connie Mack has wrecked the present day Athletics. My team was just as much ahead of the other teams of my day as Connie Mack's championship Athletics were better than other teams of the American and National leagues a few years ago.

TOOK A RUN.

"One reason why the old time pitchers got more speed on the ball than the present day crop was because they were allowed to take a run before throwing the ball. Amos Rusie had more speed than any other pitcher. Clark Griffith would probably have been the best if he had had the speed. He had control developed as no other pitcher ever had, and knew every batter in the league.

"When we took our first trip around the world we had intended to go only as far as Australia. The Prince of Wales, later Edward VII, agreed to attend our games if we went to England, so we took a chance on the long trip from Australia to the British Isles.

"A. G. Spalding asked the Prince how he liked baseball at one of the games played at Buckingham Palace, and his Highness replied, 'Fine game, but cricket is better.'

"I was the first manager who had a chance to sign Walter Johnson. When I was running a semi-pro team in Chicago I heard of the great Weiser, Ida. pitcher from a travelling man, but things were not going well with me then and I would not take a chance on paying his expenses to Chicago."

HOUSTON, Tex., April 6.—The Houston Texas League club today boasted of three victories out of four games with the world's champion White Sox. The score yesterday was six to nothing with Red Wolfgang the only Chicago Athletic to get a hit.

CELEBRATED TRAP-SHOOTERS OF THE UNITED STATES

William H. Heer is as good a trapshooter as ever held a trapgun. He showed the professionals the way in the averages in 1910 with .9775 and again in 1913 with .9730 and after three years lay off came back in 1917 and outclassed the amateurs with an average of .9741. He was the maker of the largest run in 1913 with 278.

SPORTING ANSWERS

Almo, Montreal.—Register to address is Eugene Godin, 511 St. Catherine street west. The champion athletes you refer to probably got exemption through some one little blemish in their make-up no one suspected till they were examined. Edouard Febre, the famous Marathon runner, strange as it may seem, was exempted because he had flat feet, but Tom Longboat, on the other hand, who suffered from the same ailment, was accepted, and has since done great work overseas, the latest heard at the front. Ottawa advices state that under new conditions all men of reasonable age, hockey, lacrosse, baseball players, runners, swimmers and tennis, cricket and football players will be called up again, as, although they may be deficient in one thing, their magnificent physique, which enables them to take part in the strenuous games in which they have shone, will make them very valuable in many different branches of the army.

Wilbur F., Quebec.—The late John F. Scholes boxed four rounds with the late Charley Mitchell thirty-three years ago in what was known in Toronto as the Toronto Curling Club Rink on West Adelaide street. It was a friendly bout.

Ed. Lawrence, Montreal.—A "Fungo hit" is when a ball is tossed in the air by a batsman and also hit by him.

J. Boyle, Montreal.—Charley Mitchell sent a son to the front, but it is not known if the latter was killed. His son-in-law was.

AQUATICS

The annual meeting of the Lachine Rowing Club, held at the Windsor Hotel last night, showed that the work of the executive during the past season had been devoted to the development of the younger men. The majority of the active senior members of the club are now on active service and the only competitions held last summer were for juniors.

Officers elected were:

Hon. presidents, C. R. Hosmer and Hon. R. Bickerdike; president, Lieut.-Col. W. D. Birchall; vice-president, G. M. Bosworth; second vice-president, H. G. Dawson; secretary, J. Baker; treasurer, A. B. Cooper; executive, T. R. Rennie, H. D. Jack, J. V. Owen, H. Lawson, and J. H. B. Christie.

Willie Halligan, the Rochdale forward and Irish International player, has been much sought after by the leading clubs in Ireland. He was reported to have signed for Belfast Celtic but so far, he has not appeared for that club.

C. GILBERT

TO COMB SPORT CLUBS FOR MEN

It is understood that the Registrars of the Military Service Act, and the Military Service Act Police will shortly introduce a new measure to secure some of the best material for the Army that thus far has escaped through influence of some sort or other from the athletic youth of the country. While the majority of amateur athletes and a considerable percentage of professional athletes volunteered nobly at the beginning of the war, and many of both classes have since then accepted being drafted, there seems to be still a large percentage of men perfectly fit who have managed to sidestep the service, or who after having served for a short time have managed to get out of khaki through special influence on the plea that there was some one particular thing wrong with them, a thing which even if it did not fit them for Class "A" would certainly not unfit them for some of the other classes.

ASKED TO REPORT.

Under the advertising appeals that have been made to citizens to report to the registrars any cases where men have escaped service on technicalities or through influence or by paying money or giving other considerations to doctors or exemption officers, many complaints have come in about athletes of the first rank, who have escaped the draft or have managed to get out of uniform while their comrades, not half as brilliant in athletic feats have been compelled to serve. Some of these cases are said to have been so glaring that it is really a wonder they have not been reported till now, cases where the men must be in almost perfect physical condition to perform the feats of athletes which they have been performing during the last two or three years, and where no one is depending on them for support.

It is therefore understood that all athletic and aquatic clubs will be asked to furnish the military authorities and police with a list of men known as active competitors in games and sports who for some reason have escaped being allotted to any of the existing classes, with the idea that they may be summoned to be examined anew.

BIG BOUT VEERING TOWARDS DENVER

NEW YORK, April 6.—There is every reason to believe that Denver will be the scene of the championship bout between Jess Willard and Fred Fulton on Independence Day, and Colonel J. C. Miller will promote the event himself. While there has been no official announcement to this effect, it has been learned from an authoritative source that Miller had virtually decided upon Denver before he left this city for Chicago to confer with Willard.

While in this section of the country, Miller learned there are few, if any, promoters who are willing to bid $100,000 or more for the bout and permit Miller to promote it—in other words, to pay that much for the privilege of sharing in the net profits. It is too big a risk from any angle, except that of Miller's, and, naturally, the promoters are not looking at it from Miller's position.

DECIDED ON WEST.

Therefore, Miller left here fully convinced that if the bout is to be held, as per schedule, he will have to shoulder the burden himself and the logical place for Miller to put the bout on is Denver. Oklahoma is out of the reckoning. The authorities there have openly opposed the bout. Baltimore, too, is antagonistic and, despite reports to the contrary, Connecticut will not stand for it. Denver is the most accessible place—in fact, it seem to be the only place where Miller will have a chance of "getting out" with anything to spare after all the expenses are paid.

It is reported here that Miller has guaranteed Willard $50,000 for his share, with the privilege of taking seventy-five per cent of the net profits.

QUESTION OF TERMS.

It is reasonable to assume that some such arrangement has been entered into. It is improbable that Willard agreed to accept seventy-five per cent of the net profits without any guarantee, when he was fully awake to the fact that any one of several promoters were prepared to pay him a flat sum of $50,000 to meet Fulton in a twenty-round bout for the title. Miller's proposition must have been better than this, or Willard would not have entertained it.

Just when Miller can be expected to make a formal announcement is not known. It was generally believed he would do so before leaving this city, but since Willard has insisted that he be a co-promoter in the affair, it is probable that Miller has gone to Chicago to consult the champion in the matter and procure Willard's assent before openly declaring that Denver will be the scene of the fight.

FRANK PATRICK IS BACK HERE AGAIN

Frank Patrick, president of the Pacific Coast Hockey League, got back here yesterday and will remain here until Sunday night. Patrick said that in future the Stanley Cup series should be limited to three games instead of five.

Five games in any one city, in one series, are not in the interests of hockey, and also too severe on the players. He favors the adoption of a uniform set of rules, but would reserve the right to conduct their own league and play under any rules which they considered best for the game in the West.

In regard to a conference with the directors of the National League, he reiterated what he said in The Star before: "What would be the use of holding one under the present conditions. Neither of the leagues may be in existence next winter, and a meeting would be a waste of time just now."

GOLFING NOTES

The course of the Beaconsfield Gold Club will be opened this afternoon to members, when the ten lower greens will be ready for play. Jimmie Black, the professional of the club, said yesterday there had been no winter kill this season, and the course is in better condition than in any spring for several years.

This will be the earliest that the course has been opened since it was laid out. In former seasons it has never been ready for play before the end of April.

"TOMMY" LIEUT. PERCIVAL C. TUCKER

Well-known M.A.A.A. Rugby player promoted at the front. Was wounded but went back. Son of Henry Tucker, advocate.

TWISTED ANKLE DID NOT STOP ALEXANDER

NEW YORK, April 6.—Frederick B. Alexander displayed the sort of sporting grit that is the chief ingredient in the making of champions on the courts of the 7th Regiment Armoury. The famous Davis Cup star and the hero of a thousand battles at the nets injured his ankle badly in the second set of his match in the second round of the national indoor championship lawn tennis tournament.

Despite the pain of his twisted ankle, which compelled him to limp and hop about the court, Alexander gamely stood to his guns. With Dr. William Rosenbaum, his partner in the doubles championship, at his side, Alexander finished out the contest a winner and gained a place in the semi-final round.

This match in the doubles, and it was the only one decided, brought Alexander and Dr. Rosenbaum opposed to William J. Gallon and R. B. Gatcomb. The latter pair hit hard and furiously in the rallies. Gallon's cannonball service and his wonderful smashing forced the first set to deuce games. Alexander and Dr. Rosenbaum steadily forced an assault at the net in the second set. They led at 3—0 on games. Then as Alexander turned quickly to chase an alley shot he twisted his ankle. He was so badly hurt that it was possible for Gallon and Gatcomb to score six games in a row for the set.

DISPLAYED METTLE.

Alexander displayed his mettle in the third set. His ankle had received some attention and every time he stepped on the left foot the veteran seemed to be in agony. He was up on every rally, however, playing at his tremendous pace to finish off his own service. The score was 8—6, 3—6, 6—3.

Three lively matches in the singles, which held the centre of the stage part of the afternoon, resulted in Alexander, S. Howard Voshell, the champion, and King Smith gaining places in the semi-final round. Alexander was at the top of his game in his contest against his doubles partner, Dr. Rosenbaum. The latter took the latter of the smashing encounters at the net in the first set, so that he scored at 8—6. That was his limit, however, for Alexander whipped his volleys and crossing shots across so fast in the two remaining sets as to allow Dr. Rosenbaum only one game. The final score was 6—8, 6—0, 6—1.

Voshell more than held H. H. Manchester at the mid-court game. The final set was a series of brilliantly played rallies which forced the games to deuce.

The summary follows:

Men's National Indoor Championship Singles (fourth round)—Frederick B. Alexander defeated Dr. William Rosenbaum, 6—8, 6—0, 6—1; S. Howard Voshell defeated H. H. Manchester, 6—3, 7—5; King Smith defeated Herbert L. Bowman, 6—4, 6—4.

Men's National Indoor Championship Doubles (first round)—Charles Chambers and C. A. Anderson defeated Gustave G. Grenz and partner by default; Samuel R. Mecalliater and Herbert L. Bowman defeated E. Casilo and Harold L. Taylor by default.

Second round—Frederick B. Alexander and Dr. William Rosenbaum defeated William J. Gallon and R. B. Gatcomb, 8—6, 3—6, 6—3.

STAGE A.A.U. MEET IN BIG NAVY DRILL HALL

CHICAGO, April 6.—The great indoor meet of the year for this section of the country started this afternoon before one of the most unusual crowds in the history of the A.A.U. The Central A.A.U. meet for 1918 is being held in the great drill hall at Camp Dewey, Great Lakes.

Charles Dean, president of the A.A.U., today said the hall is one of the best in the country for the purpose. Much of the special work of construction was done by jackies from the training station, which boasts experts in almost every trade. The building accommodates 10,000 and early indications were that it would be filled to capacity, mostly by sailors.

The meet, generally held in the evening, was set for this afternoon to enable city crowds to get back to Chicago.

JOE RIVERS

Noted Mexican boxer, who joined Army and was torpedoed on Tuscania.

MAJOR GEO. McNAMARA

THAT BIG MYSTERY, WHY IS A SOUTHPAW?

NEW YORK, April 5—Why is it that left-handed athletes compared on a percentage basis with right-handed men, make far the best showing? The records prove it so—particularly in baseball.

Jeffries was left-handed. So were Ketchel, Dal Hawkins, Charley White, K. O. Brown, and Al McCoy. Fred Fulton, who is matched with Willard, is a southpaw, and Lew Tendler, the latest sensation among the lightweights, is another. Alfredo De Oro, the famous Cuban pool and billiard player who has won many world's championships, holds his cue in his left hand. August Kieckhefer, who recently won the world's three-cushion billard title from De Oro, also billard title from De Oro, also champion Irish handball player, is a southpaw; and so is Eddie Groden, who holds the championship at the American style of play.

Tennis offers several left-handed stars, the most famous of whom are Ichiya Kumagae, the Jap, and Lindley Murray, the national indoor champion. One of the leading women players wields her racket with her southern arm. C. S. Titus, retired champion at sweeps and sculls, could row either port or starboard. Many famous football stars kicked with the left foot.

THE BASEBALL ONES.

And in baseball—well, look! Cobb, Sisler, Speaker, Jackson, Chase, Daubert, Ruth, Roush, Kauff, Robertson, Vaughn, Wilber Cooper, Leonard, Plank, Marquard, and many more — in fact, most of the stars.

Statisticians state there are six left-handers to every ninety-four right-handers in the world—that is, 6 per cent of us are left-handed.

In baseball, basing our figures on the major leagues, the average is almost 20 per cent, despite the fact that there are four positions on the diamond that left-handers cannot play—second base, shortstop, third base and catcher. The National League is the most left-handed of the two, averaging 19 per cent, while the American League is 17 per cent wrong-sided.

When we figure only the positions which left-handers are permitted to play—namely, pitcher, first base, and the outfield, the percentage of left-handers mounts astoundingly.

Here are the last official figures for the two major leagues: American League: First base, 43 per cent; pitcher, 30 per cent, and the outfield, 30 per cent. National League: First base, 50 per cent; pitcher, 34 per cent, and the outfield, 22 per cent.

"The subject of left-handedness is one of the classic controversies of medicine. Authorities differ. However, it is generally accepted that we are not born left or right handed; in this instance all laws of heredity seem to go askew. The phenomena put in appearance when the attention of the child first begins to concentrate on different objects.

"Some authorities claim right-handedness is a consequence of prehistoric and early historic usages—a development of the days of counting with the fingers of the right hand, of the days of shields and spears. The left hand, thanks to its ability to better protect the heart, became the holding hand or shield hand, the right, the spear or active hand. The majority of our ancestors were right-handed—why, I will soon explain to you—and the left-hander, still more in those days than now, was an object of curiosity to be scoffed at, to be set aside as out of the ordinary. Even up to the present day, mothers will force a naturally left-handed child to become an "artificial" right-hander by tying the left hand, by punishment, and by using other compulsory methods. This is a grave mistake.

CAUSED BY EYES.

"Gould claims it depends on vision. A child can see before it can differentiate between the adaptability of either of the two hands. If the left eye of the young child is visually and anatomically more nearly perfect than the right, that child will become left-handed; vice-versa, if the right eye is structually better, the child becomes right-handed. As it happens, in about 94 per cent of all eyes, the right one is the better. This coincides, too, with the statistics of the percentage of right and left handers.

"This difference in the quality of the eyes leads to the development of Broca's convolution in the right hemisphere of the brain of left-handers; and in the left hemisphere of right-handers. Thus, right or left-handedness begins with the coincident function of the respective eye and hands. The child sees better with the right eye in 99 per cent of all cases, and, incidentally under the primary impulse of having a better right eye in 94 per cent of all cases, and, incidentally, under the primary impulse of having a better right eye than left, the majority of us become right-eared, right-footed, and, most important of all, right-handed!"

ALEXANDER demands bonus of $10,000 for playing with the Cubs. Good opening here for a nice slam at the Cubs but we haven't the heart to take advantage of it. Instead

Twinkle, twinkle, baseball star;
Ain't you going pretty far
When you say they gotta pay
You a bonus, just to play?
Think, old top, now it would seem
If there was no baseball team
And, like any other turk
You should hafta go to work.
Then they'd lamp your husky arm
And release you to a farm
Where, with other worthy hicks
You'd be pitching hay or bricks.
Twinkle, twinkle, baseball star,
But don't go too frugeous far.

MIKE GIBBONS ASKED TOM TO GUARD TITLE

Special to The Star by H. C. Hamilton, United Press Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK, April 6.—Tom Gibbons, the most neglected middleweight or light heavyweight the country knows today, has slipped overnight into the shoes of his more illustrious brother, Mike, so far as the middleweight championship is concerned.

The sporting editor of The United Press has at hand a letter from Eddie Gane, manager of Tom, in which Eddie says Mike has gone into the business of training young men for the war that it is very doubtful if he ever engages in a real fight again. And Mike has turned over his laurels to Tom to defend. Keeping it in the family is Mike's idea and he is positive Tom will prove a better defender of what belongs to the fighting Gibbonses than Mike did.

Tom Gibbons has been fighting longer and with more results than many boxers of less real ability who are getting more praise for their efforts. Perhaps the secret lies in the fact that Tom has absorbed a little light killing stunt of his brother's—letting his opponents stay, for the most part without bothering his head to try for a knockout.

WEARS MIKE'S SHOES.

Any how, Tom has Mike's shoes and is wearing them. Whether he will be unceremoniously yanked out of them some of these fine days by one of the many middleweights and promising light heavies remains to be seen. Fact is, though, that none of the light heavies nor middles has been able to separate Tom from a victory in many and many a day.

Mike's devotion to the army through his connection with it as a boxing instructor at Camp Dodge, Iowa, amounts to almost a mania. Always thorough when he was learning to box and all through his career as a star of his weight, Mike has gone in for this bayonet stuff with both hands—and feet. He is rated far above most bayonet experts.

"I believe Mike will end up with high honors in the army," Kane declares in the letter which bears the news of Mike's retirement.

Mike has tried hard and long to get the public to accept Tommy Gibbons as an honest-to-goodness fighter of the old Gibbons type, but somehow the publicity that always attended everything Mike did, simply wouldn't attach itself to Tom for Mike. Now that Mike has ducked the thing and turned Tom loose on the world there may be a different story to tell, for there are many stars of the middle and light heavy division who can kick up sufficient interest for Tom to get credit. Mike O'Dowd and Harry Greb are two of the huskies that Tom will have to down before he can sit up and howl that he's it.

She started golf not long ago and turned out for her first round very spick and span. After the game she was asked by a friend: "What did you go round in?"

"Just what I've got on," she replied seriously. "Wasn't that all right?"

THE world's great evening-up process is never more manifest than in the increase of the ice-cream soda output as soon as the skating ice diminishes.

CELEBRATED TRAP-SHOOTERS OF THE UNITED STATES

Joy Graham won the amateur trapshooting championship of the world in the Olympic games held at Stockholm, Sweden, in 1912. He is the holder of the amateur long-run record of 417 straight made at Chicago, Ill., August 30 and September 1, 1910; won the Columbus Cup in the Southern Handicap in 1911; won the professional championship at doubles in 1913 and was also the high average doubles shooter of the year. He won the post season tournament for amateurs in 1910 and 1911.

SAFE BET WILLARD WANTS TEN ROUNDS

NEW YORK, April 6. — Now that Jess Willard and Fred Fulton, the two most ponderous heavyweights, have entangled themselves by a set of articles agreeing to battle for the world's heavyweight championship, it is to be suspected that Jess is looking around for a soft spot to light. Ten round and eight round laws, according to past performances of the heavyweight title holder, should offer very attractive purses, for they probably will be given a great deal of consideration. If a no-decision clause is hooked onto the law or the commission rules, so much the better—for Jess.

Willard would wind up a career of pacifist principles in an age of fighting should he agree to meet Fulton in a no decision, short bout. The only series he has engaged in since he dethroned Jack Johnson was one of that kind or fiasco, and it was just as unsatisfactory as it is possible to make a bout. There is no reason to believe that another of the same length and description should prove any more thrilling to the fistic fans.

MAY SMELL A RAT.

As a matter of fact, based on a comparison of records, Fulton is fully capable of knocking out the big champion inside ten rounds, but the public will smell a rat if the fight is finally held under that provision. The public long-suffering at times probably will reach the conclusion that Jess and Fred are going to fight for the honor of staging a longer bout at some other day. Jess has stated he wants no camouflaged mill when he takes on his chief contender, but really wants to go into action for the purpose of defending the title against the best of the big men. The public certainly has started pulling for Willard to make his word good with a long fight and a decision tacked onto the end.

The fact is the public is tired of Willard's throne-keeping. The fans want to see someone else on the crest of the white hope brigade. Jess has been too much of a pacifist and circumnambulator to suit the fight follower. He wants more action. That's why a majority of the men who patronize the glove game are pulling hard for a long fight, with a decision. They figure that Fulton can knock out Willard inside twenty rounds, or outbox the champion so far that there will be no question of his superiority.

Encouraged by the success of his efforts last summer, Captain P. F. Warner has arranged for charity matches at Lord's on June 29 and July 13. Military teams will, of course, be engaged, the matches being English Army vs. Australian Army, or some such title.

ACCORDING to a communication received from the International Committee of the Red Cross at Geneva, who have made exhaustive inquiries, "Sandy" Turnbull was wounded on May 2 last and afterwards fell in the fighting.

ROSEMOUNT WINS CHURCH CARPET CUP

The season of the above league has been brought to a close, and the trophy has changed hands and passed into the keeping of the Rosemount club, after a very exciting game with St. Simon's club.

These two clubs had both scored 32 points for 9 matches, so that the concluding match was started on level terms.

The trophy holders (St. Cuthbert's) came well up to the front, although they had tied in 6 matches, and it looked as though a three-cornered tie would be the result of the season's play; but a carpet of Rosemount club, well skipped by E. J. Gunn, saved the situation. On this particular carpet a very interesting match was played with Skip McKenzie for St. Simon's, and it was not until the last end was played that St. Simon's lost the match.

On the other carpet, with Skips Joslin and Dunnett, the game seemed to be all in Rosemount's favor, ends 3 and 5 giving the home team a big lift as 6 and 4 points respectively were scored at these particular ends, which gave them a lead at the fifth end of 10 points.

Another match which was played on Tuesday night was St. Cuthbert's vs. St. Giles', and it was very evident that the former club were in great form, and were making a bold bid to have the three-cornered tie, as, if Rosemount and St. Simon's had had a drawn game, this would have been accomplished.

On one carpet Skip Reid beat his opponent, Skip Williams, by 23 points to 3, while on the other Skip McMat managed to struggle through with the narrow margin of 10 points to 8 against his opponent, Skip Hull.

Submit New Boxing Bill for Am. Bouts

NEW YORK, April 6.—An effort to have amateur boxing bouts where an admission fee is charged legalized in this State was instituted by Senator Robert F. Wagner, Republican, of Brooklyn, and Assemblyman Charles D. Donohue, Democrat, of this city, who introduced bills in the Legislature at Albany providing for the promotion of the amateur ring sport, independent of the professional sport. The bill is an amendment to Section 1,710 of the Penal Code, which prohibits boxing where an admission fee is charged in this State.

President Frederick W. Rubien of the Metropolitan Association of the A.A.U. with the assistance of the local organization's Legislative Committee, drafted the new bill. President Rubien declared that he was confident the bill would meet with the approval of both houses and subsequently of Governor Whitman. The Governor has several times declared favorably for the amateur sport, and this is taken to presage favorable action on the new bill.

Amateur boxing, since the repeal of the Frawley law, has increased in favor and has been promoted on a much larger scale. At all the local clubs, however, care has been taken to eliminate the admission fee, and in its place a voluntary form of subscription to end of a number of war relief funds has been made.

The proposed amendment to Section 1,710 of the Penal Code is as follows:

"This section shall not apply to boxing contests or exhibitions between amateurs of not more than four rounds of three minutes' duration each, with gloves not less than five ounces in weight, when such contests or exhibitions are regularly sanctioned by the Amateur Athletic Union or the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America."

JOHN L.

The years fly swiftly, and we know the dawn
Of graying age—for Sullivan has gone!
Our thoughts are ranging far along the track
Of the great Past, and memories come back—
Tales that men told at night around the fire
Of the strong youth who gained his heart's desire—
Higher ambition than the lust of gold—
A champion's laurels to achieve and hold—
A youth who laughed at wealth's insidious lure,
But scattered it among the weak and poor—
A warrior who, with gripped and sinewy hands,
Asked only, "Show me where my foreman stands—"
He drank delight of victory to the full!
The picture changes, and upon the brink
Of dark disaster, winecups dance and clink
Young, and yet old—still champion in the fray,
Mol of all, he goes his chosen way.
Rising from sloth, he re-assumes his crown,
A newcome foe—Fate marks relentless score—
Conquered, defeated—beaten in the ring
He still lived on—high-honored as a king!
He was our Champion—and an icy blast
Struck to our heartstrings as the Champion passed!
The years fly swiftly, and we know the dawn
Of graying age—for Sullivan has gone!

"Well, so I was," said No. 2. "It's like this 'ere. 'E gives me 'is sticks to carry, and then 'e takes one and puts a lil'l white ball on top of a bit o' sand and, my word! 'E catches that ball a fair swipe. Mus' 'a' gone miles. Then 'e turns to me and sez, 'Did yer see where that went to?' So I sez, smart like, 'Out o' sight from the moment of himpact, sir.' And 'e sez, 'Go back on board, ye blinkin' fathead.'"

"How long have you been in the chicken business?"

"John," said the clergyman to his new man, "do you—er—ever employ strong language?"

The new man blushed self-consciously.

"Well, sir," he faltered, "I—I may be a little careless-like in my speech at times."

"Ah," murmured the clergyman, "I'm sorry! But we will converse on that at some more fitting time. Just now I want you to go to Jenkinson & Blenkinson and settle this bill for repairing my summer house. And you might talk to them, John, as if it were your own bill, in a careless-like sort of way. Will you, John?"

Customer—I finished it while waiting for my change.

The last solar eclipse in Germany. On the evening before the colonel of a regiment of infantry sent for all the sergeants and said to them:

"There will be an eclipse of the sun tomorrow. The regiment will meet on the parade ground in undress. I will come and explain the eclipse before drill. If the sky is cloudy the men will meet in the drill shed, as usual."

"Tomorrow morning, by order of the colonel, there will be an eclipse of the sun. The regiment will assemble on the parade ground, where the colonel will come and superintend the eclipse in person. If the sky is cloudy the eclipse will take place in the drill shed."

TO SETTLE CASE

The trouble over the appointment of C. A. Chenevert, K.C., Geo. W. Parent and L. A. Bedard as arbitrators to pass upon the claims of the residents of a certain section of Hochelaga ward where the street levels were changed by the city, will be definitively settled on April 10, by the Superior Court. It will be remembered that the appointment of Messrs. Chenevert, Parent and Bedard, sanctioned by Mr. Justice Bruneau, was objected to by the property owners who threatened to take injunction proceedings against their appointment. These property owners, 127 in number claim that the changes in the grading of the streets has caused them damage estimated at $1,400,000; the city in accordance with a resolution adopted by the Board of Control offered them $35,000, at the most. In view of such a big difference in the estimated damages, the interested parties resolved to place the matter in the hands of arbitrators to be appointed by the Superior Court. Justice Bruneau appointed Messrs. Chenevert, Parent and Bedard and the proprietors objected.

Wednesday afternoon, Charles Laurendeau, K.C., chief attorney for the city, appeared before court and asked that the matter be finally fixed for April 10, so as to allow the new civic administration to take cognizance of the affair and deal with it according to their judgment.

MAN WAS ROBBED OF NOTICE ABOUT MILITARY SERVICE

More Petitions Come Up Before Judge at Afternoon Session

The first came from Deguire Nantel on behalf of Romeo Ladeucer. Ladeucer stated that he had received a notice from the registrar to appear at a local tribunal on a certain date. On the night of the receipt of this notice, he was attacked and held up and among the articles stolen from him was the notice. Following this loss, Ladeucer did not appear before the local tribunal. He now wished to have a rehearing. His Lordship thought that perhaps it would be better that Mr. Nantel see the registrar and have the record sent to the court for inspection.

The next petition was for an appeal to Ottawa from Mr. Justice Lane's decision in the case of A. J. Macdonald, who was allowed exemption till June 1. Macdonald claimed exemption in the national interest as he was assistant manager of the Whyte Packing Co. The application was presented by P. E. Lefebvre and was taken under advisement.

A CONFUSED CASE.

The last petition was that of C. H. Desjardins on behalf of Jos. Noel, whose case was confused. Noel lived in the county of Portneuf at the time he lodged his exemption claim. He moved to Montreal and said that he informed the registrar at Quebec of this. His claim was refused, but the notice did not reach him till some twelve days later. He filed an appeal with the registrar here, but was told that it was too late. In the meantime he received a notice to report to the barracks. His counsel's claim was based on the fact that as Noel had not received the notice in the proper manner his application for an appeal should be granted. His Lordship advised him to see the registrar and to endeavor to have the record sent to the court.

Cairo Carmen advanced family suppport and national interest reasons for exemption. His parents and seven sisters were at present living in Italy on a small farm. Carmen explained that the Government commandeered half of the produce and if it had not been for his aid, his father would not have been able to pay the taxes. He also said that he had a brother in the American army and one in the Italian army. A letter written in Italian was exhibited from the brother in the American army. Carmen is a motorman in the employ of the Tramways Company, and Robert Taschereau, K.C., who appeared for the company, asked for his exemption in the national interest. Judgment was reserved.

JUDGMENTS SUSPENDED.

Ovila Beauvais was a farmer-plasterer, that is he worked on his father's farm in the summer and at his trade in the winter. His father was a plasterer also and they usualy left the farm at St. Faustin to come into the city in the winter. Beauvais stated that his parent was in poor health and as there were younger children he was supporting them. Judgment was suspended.

Jos. H. Laurin, a policeman, asked to be released by reason of his connection with the force. He exhibited a letter from Chief Campeau stating that he had bene a member of the force since 1914. Judgment was not rendered.

H. Desjardins appeared before Mr. Justice Marechal in khaki accompanied by a military policeman from the barracks. A rehearing had been granted and he pleaded his case on domestic grounds. The case was taken en delibere.

KILLED YOUNG CALVES; FINED

For conducting an illegal abattoir, T. Corbeil was sentenced yesterday by Recorder Geofferion to a fine of $40 and costs. Corbeil was caught killing a number of young calves in the cellar of a horse-stable on his premises—and was promptly taken to court.

Mederic Archambault was also fined $40 and costs for the same offence.

CHARGED WITH PROFITEERING.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Charging that the American International Shipbuilding Corporation sought excessive profits for the work at Hog Island, Wm. Denman, former chairman of the Shipping Board, yesterday told the Senate Commerce Committee that had the original contract been adhered to, profits of from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 would have resulted. Mr. Denman testified that the officials of the Shipbuilding Corporation apparently endeavored to obtain as much money as possible out of the work.

Basic Facts About Belting

AND PARTICULARLY

Dunlop "Gibraltar RedSpecial" Frictioned-Surface Transmission Belting

A Worthy Product

Years of careful study of the high-power belt problem have enabled Dunlop Laboratory experts to create "Gibraltar RedSpecial" Belting, the original Red Face Rubber Belting of Canada—a product worthy of the Dunlop Factories and of the quarter-century record of success back of them.

"Gibraltar RedSpecial" Virtues Are Real

Dunlop "Gibraltar RedSpecial" Belting is to-day widely used in a multitude of ways in the many varied industries in this country. It owes its success, not to any illogical deductions or fantastic analyses, but to the simplest causes—causes so simple that they are now, always have been, and always will be, in our opinion, the bedrock of success in belt-making—Power, Speed, Service—in actual use as well as in the test-room.

Permanent Elasticity Means "Life" In Belting

In producing this new, this original, this master, red belt, our object has been to have the friction coat of rubber between the plies such as will retain its life indefinitely, and to have a quality of rubber with long "fingers," and not a quality of rubber the elasticity of which has been sacrificed to obtain the so-called high-pulling test.

That "Friction Pull"

When you are informed that such-and-such a belt has a "friction-pull" of abnormal poundage, do not imagine that you are getting a quality friction. What you have to secure in a belt is a friction full of elasticity. There must be between the plies of duck only a certain class of rubber to give uniform strength and pliability.

Resilient Quality Must Not Be Sacrificed To Excess of Friction Strength

To obtain high figures, such as referred to above, in belt frictions you have to take away from the elasticity of the friction; hence, there is a happy medium, and this medium we have obtained through our laboratory experts. It ensures for you a belt, the friction of which will hold the plies together and will be sufficiently elastic in its properties to allow for the give and take necessary in rounding the pulleys.

Duck Finest Obtainable, Made to Highest Specifications

A highly important feature of "Gibraltar RedSpecial" is the duck which enters into its construction. Only the finest quality of specially-selected duck, having the proper tensile strength in the right direction, is used. And this, in combination with a superior rubber friction between the plies, ensures absolute uniformity of service.

Universal Recognition of "Gibraltar RedSpecial"

To cite the names of users of this famous, red frictioned-surface belt would necessitate the use of much space. We have on file recommendations from almost every type of industry requiring "Gibraltar RedSpecial" Belting in widths varying from 1½" to 48. These testimonials are available for your perusal at any time.

Fills The Bill

"Gibraltar RedSpecial" Belting is to be found in practically every industry in Canada, and if it is Power, Speed and Service that you want, then it is "Gibraltar RedSpecial" Frictioned-Surface Belting that you require for your work.

The Original "Red"

"Gibraltar RedSpecial," as noted previously, is the Original Red Rubber Belt—and like most things that are original, its success is of the kind that endures.

ANADA CAN AID ALLIES GREATLY BY GROWING FLAX

itain Looks to Dominion to Take Russia's Place

BRE USED FOR AEROPLANE WINGS

eland Needs Vast Stocks for Linen—Ontario Supplies Lot

ecial to The Star.

TTAWA, April 6 — Aeroplanes st have wings. The war will be n from the air.

lax fibre is absolutely necessary the construction of aeroplane gs. Flax is therefore a vital unition of war.

Before Russia retired from the con-t, five-sixths of the flax fibre ed by Great Britain in making roplane wings, came from the land Bolsheviki. Some came from lgium, but very little comes from t stricken country today.

Great Britain looke to Canada to ke up the flax deficiency caused the defection of Russia. A letter ceived in Ottawa from B. Tarn-ll, secretary of the Flax Control ard of the Imperial War Office, vs:

"I am directed to refer to the sub-t of flax production in Canada and this connection am to inform you at owing to the situation in Rus-and to the greatly increased pro-am of aeroplane construction in is country the Flax Control Board ve found it necessary to take every ssible step to increase the produc-on of flax within the British Em-re in order, as far as possible, to et the danger of the very serious ortage of this fibre with which this untry is faced. In these circum-ances my board regard it as a mat-r of the most urgent national im-rtance that as large an area as ssible in Canada should immedi-ely be put under the cultivation of re producing flax, and I am, on half of my board, to express the pe that you will be enabled to co-erate with them to the fullest pos-ble extent in achieving this object."

NT. AND QUE. RECKONED.

Western Ontario has responded to e cry from overseas, and in 1918 ians to put 8,000 acres under flax. aspe County, Quebec, where the est flax fibre can be grown, is being ommunicated with, while the farm-rs of the Annapolis Valley, long oted for its apples are expected to ake a good showing this year.

And flax seed from Canada is eeded in Ireland where the linen in-ustry is threatened with grave cur-ailment due to the inability of the lax growers to obtain proper and fficient seed. Western Ontario has lready sent Ireland 30,000 bushels f seed, but much more is being asked or even this year, and vastly more will be required next year. The best flax seed can be raised in Quebec, Nova Scotia and Ontario. If British Columbia hurries it may have a share in this great Imperial endeavor, for its soil and climate are exactly suited to flax production for both fibre and seed.

Ontario has developed a flax business that in 1917 had a total value of $2,000,000.00. The Counties of Old Ontario west of Middlesex are best adapted for flax growing. In 1914, 2,000 acres were under crop. In 1917, 6,000 acres produced 1,800 tons or 2,-600,000 lbs. of fibre and 48,000 bushels of seed. Thirty-three flax mills operated. One quarter of the flax seed yield in the British Empire is in Western Ontario, and this seed is shipped to Great Britain. 1 1-4 bushels of seed would plant an acre of ground, two tons of flax straw come from each acre, and sell for $20.00 a ton at the mill.

THE LABOR PROBLEM.

The problem in Western Ontario for increased flax acreage is one of labor. Hitherto Indians have been employed, but with the plan to increase the acreage by 2,000 acres this year, the demand for labor will be greater than the visible supply. As many Indians as ever will be available and some Y.M.C.A. camps have been offered at which the boys younger than those who will join the S.O.S. for the season, may do war work with flax. It is now also suggested that women be used after the manner of berry-pickers as pulling flax is no harder than picking berries. The women of Ireland have been pulling flax every year for generations.

The Irish linen trade has guaranteed £500,000 with which to experiment with this common Canadian flax seed obtained from the Prairie Provinces, and which will be planted on 5,000 acres of land leased by the trade. This acreage will be over and above the increased acreage arranged for by the Irish farmers.

ALLIES WANT MEN

NEW YORK, April 6. — General Leonard Wood, just returned from the battlefront, believes the war will be long and hard. "It is wicked to mislead our people into believing that it will be an easy war," he declared here. "It is going to be a war that will try our very souls."

He said that inefficiency in connection with making war is treason, and means that Americans will lie in heaps among the unnecessary dead. Denouncing profiteers, triflers, and politicians, Gen. Wood asserted:

"Our Allies want men, not words."

THE CIVIC ADMINISTRATION.

THE new board of civic administration for the city of Montreal appointed by Sir Lomer Gouin is not as weak as we feared it might be and not as strong as we hoped it would be.

Sir Lomer had a difficult task. The men he should have wanted were unwilling and most of those who were willing he did not want.

This is not the time to carp.

It is the time to hope and trust.

It is the time to give the Commission freedom of action and to point out that honesty, efficiency, impartiality and progress are what the public will hope to see realized.

Efficiency as the imperative necessity in every branch of the service.

Impartiality towards all races, classes and creeds.

The protection of life and property in this city has been in jeopardy from thieves and other rascals, while the city's health itself has not been cared for as it should.

The new Commission has unlimited opportunities. It is placed above the clamor of the mob. Let us hope it will succeed.

AT HOME AND OVER THERE.

HERE is a letter written by a Montreal to mother 80 years old to her son at the front. We print it in this column as a sermon of patriotic inspiration.

"Dearest.—You are one of the best boys in the world. We were so pleased with your long letter dated 17th, so glad to know you are well clothed, and comfortable as possible so far, and hope before this reaches you, you will have received your Christmas Box with the few additional comforts. I am sure you need all we can do for you but it does not seem any use to send much at a time as it is so hard to take care of them. I have another good warm pair of socks for you but will wait till the rush of Christmas is over, will then send them on with another pair of mitts, which if of no use to you perhaps they will keep another poor boy's wrists warm. I know, dear, they are not worth much but it is the best I can do, so don't laugh at them.

"We are wondering if the weather is very cold with you; it might be better than the dreadful mud. The big lump comes in my throat when I think of it and yet, dearest, I think God that you are well and strong enough to be doing your part in this great struggle for right. I would not like to see you go as a conscript. I do not like to be made to do anything myself, and am only sorry I can do so little. If I were twenty years younger I would certainly be with the workers.

"Well, dearest, Christmas is nearly here and I hope your Box has found you. I wish I could see you open it; we did the best we could. I did not make you a pudding as I could not get the materials, but I know you do not care for Christmas pudding. There are so many things we (who are not rich) cannot buy. Everything is dear, bread 12 cents a 1 lb. loaf and things which used to be 5 cents are now 15 cents. We are told living is dearer here than in England. I am not complaining, dear. We have ALL we NEED.

"If all is well we are to spend Christmas Day at —. We shall talk of you, dear, but this will be old news by the time this reaches you and the New Year will have commenced. What will it bring? We can only toil, and pray, and wait, trusting in God who is our Refuge and Strength, a very present help in trouble. The outlook is gloomy but Hope must be our Watchword, and I pray that He will bless and guard you from all dangers, and send you safely home before another year has passed away.

"I always seem to leave so much unsaid but I must not omit to say how pleased we women are with the result of our vote. You see, dear, we are all trying to do our bit, and would certainly finish the Kaiser if we could only get at him."

The boy who received this letter and sent it to us, says, "You might care to put it in print as an example to other mothers who have sons still have not seen fit to let them go. I am the youngest son. My brother was killed on the Somme."

We print it with pride. Thank God for such mothers and such sons. No power of evil can prevail against the spirit that fills them. The nation that bred them shall never fail.

A High Court judge hearing appeals on exemption cases states that there are more conscientious objectors in Hamilton than in any other Ontario city he had been in. Said judge will be well advised to keep away from the Ambitious City for some months to come.

Cheer up, even the Misses Romanoff are working in the garden this spring.

THE WAR.

AWAKENING RUSSIA.

WHILE our attention has for the last two weeks been centred exclusively on the tremendous drama of the Western front, much water has flowed under the bridges of Russia. The news from that country, particularly during the last few days, has become increasingly interesting.

Germany has showed her hand openly by an active military policy in Finland. Hitherto she has contented herself with the seizure of the Aland Islands and an announcement that her object in doing so was the familiar one of restoring order. On Thursday, however, she landed troops on the mainland near Helsingfors "to give help to Finland." It will be surprising if this action does not stir up a hornets' nest. Finnish opposition can scarcely be serious, at least at first, but the Finns are among the most democratic and freedom-loving people in the world. They have tasted the fruits of bitter oppression at the hand of the notorious Bobrikoff in the days of the old regime, but the ultimate terrors of reaction could not stamp out the love of liberty among them. Germany may hold Finland as she has held Alsace-Lorraine, but she will have to do it at a price which will make the province come too dear.

Wednesday brought the report of a very significant speech by Trotsky. The real head of the Bolshevik movement declared at Moscow that the Bolsheviki could not consider their power lasting and that the time had come for "reorganization and creative work." What does this mean? Is it going too far to assume that it presages a new orientation in Russian affairs?

* * * * *

Gradually, we are told, Russia is realizing that the devil can often be put to rout by the use of his favorite element and that the way to meet German force is by Russian force. On Thursday despatches from Moscow were published containing the news that a Russian army of a million and a half of men "not inferior in power and equipment to the Germans and Japanese" will be formed. The Assistant Secretary of War, who made the announcement, went on to point out that no Russian army could be effective unless properly trained, that is to say, without the old officers.

We must not overlook the significance of this. The "democratization of the army" was the first and probably the greatest of the many gigantic blunders which followed the driving out of Kerensky. With discipline gone and the soldiers who knew how to direct and command either murdered, driven away or reduced to the ranks, the army disintegrated like a sand heap before the advancing tide. The particles of which it was composed were still intact but they were scattered far and wide.

And there is very little use in attempting to bring them together again unless they can be cemented into one coherent organization and the only cement which can hold is discipline. The most rabid Bolshevik in Russia knows today that an army which puts it to the vote whether or not it shall charge is no protection against "imperialistic" Germany. There must be discipline, and iron discipline at that. Some of the dearest tenets of Bolshevism must be scrapped for the time being if the fundamental principles of it are to be saved.

Russia does not want to fight today any more than she wanted to fight three months ago when her leaders made their ingenuous attempts to seduce the German proletariat by a vast deal of speechifying and many pamphlets. Russia does not want to fight any more than revolutionary France wanted to fight a century and more ago. She is being spurred and goaded into it by external forces just as revolutionary France was spurred into the Napoleonic phenomenon by the combined cupidity and stupidity of the continental powers of that day.

We hope the news is true of a gradual dawn of a better understanding between the Western Allies and Russia. For the Allies must never despair of Russia. To do so, to abandon Russia intellectually to Germany as we have—force perforce—abandoned her militarily would be a blunder of the most colossal proportions. President Wilson gave us an excellent lead in his message to the All-Russian Soviet Conference at Moscow. Unfortunately we did not follow his lead with a similar assurance.

* * * * *

Russia wants our aid; wants it worse than she has wanted it at any time since she drove the Romanoffs into exile in Siberia. The great new army of which Podvoisky prophesied is the first tangible evidence of this awakening. We cannot assure that it is being raised to fight Germany. We have too often let the wish be father to the thought where Russia is concerned. Neither may we imagine that an army of a million and a half is raised, equipped and trained by a simple proclamation.

But what we want, what we need, what we must have if we are to avoid the post-bellum spectacle of the Russian bear with a German ring in its nose, is an understanding with Russia. There must be not one but many bonds of sympathy between us beyond the possession of a common foe. German agents are at work throughout Russia from Volhynia to Irkutsk. They offer peace and order to the distracted country—at a price, and it does not lie with us, knowing, or rather only guessing at what Russia has gone through, to be unduly critical if the bargain is not too shrewdly made. Germany has already upon her side important financial, social and economic interests and if she can impress the peasant with the belief that she alone can be the apostle of law and order in Russia she will have at least their tacit support when they discover that anarchy and the peaceful possession of the land are incompatible. It has even been hinted that there exists already an understanding between certain of these interests and the invaders for the restoration of the monarchy under certain conditions.

It may not be possible for us to give Russia military aid at this time; it is doubtful whether it would be a wise policy to attempt to do so until the general confusion in the country abates, even if we could spare the shipping necessary to convey troops and munitions to her. But what we can and should do is to impress Russia with the assurance that, in spite of all that has happened in the last six months, we still consider her an ally, not an outlaw. If we cannot counteract German military aggression in Russia by armed men in khaki, we can and we should at least attempt to counteract German peaceful penetration by peaceful penetration of our own. Now, if ever, is the time for our propaganda in Russia.

Blackwood's: Are you sane, healthy, sound of nerve, and verging upon Army age? If so, I submit the herewith advice in all sincerity—become an Air Service pilot. Have you a soulful craving for some ambushed job that will allow you to wear a protective uniform? If so, for Heaven's sake pass on; your uncle, the retired General, will no doubt find you something unstrenuous in one of the commandeered hotels.

An Ecclesiastical Coincidence.

London Daily Chronicle: The Archbishop of York's text for his first sermon in America, was, by a coincidence, the same which a predecessor of Dr. Lang made memorable. Among the great sermons of the Victorian era was Dr. Magee's on "They beckoned unto their partners which were in the other ship, that they should come and help them." It was preached at the time when the Disestablishment of the Irish Church was dividing public opinion. The sermon was Magee's most eloquent effort, and impressed Disraeli with his power.

A Kansas Preacher's Prayer.

New York Sun: The patience and forbearance of "a humble Methodist minister in Topeka"—our informant, the Kansas City Journal, neglects to give his name—becoming exhausted, he prayed at his morning service:

"O Lord!
Thou knowest
That if this German Kaiser,
His war lords and officers
Shall all be slain tomorrow
We shall rejoice
And Thou wilt not be sorry."

No one has accused that Kansas preacher of a lack of Christian spirit.

Wait for the Third Act.

Chicago Evening Post: "The first act is ended," says Von Hindenburg. The gentleman is in error. It is the second act that has ended. In the first act, if we have not forgotten our melodrama, the diabolical plot is conceived, the villain makes his plans and vanishes, with every prospect from the hero's standpoint seemingly full of promise. In the second act the villain puts his plans into execution; the curtain falls upon the hero about to perish beneath an onrushing train, or to be blown to pieces by a bomb. Vice is triumphant and the villain gleeful. It is this act that we have just witnessed, with Von Hindenburg rubbing his hands and chuckling as he looks upon the success of his work. But the third act is the act where the villain "gets his." And the third act is to come. Wait for it.

Looking to the Next War.

The Times: We have by no means exhausted the arguments that might be advanced in support of our blockade policy. There is, for example, the next war to be considered. We happen to be fighting in this war; but in the next war we may be neutrals. The Great Powers in the next war will probably be those which have been neutral in this war. Denmark, Sweden, Holland, and Switzerland will be Great Powers owing to the wealth we have enabled them to accumulate, and when they engage in a war among themselves they will not be able to cite from our conduct of the blockade any precedent which they might effectively use against our commerce with their enemies. This is an argument which, we understand, has great weight among the far-sighted lawyers of our Foreign Office.

"Passing the Buck."

Christian Science Monitor: "Passing the buck" is a pure Americanism, and one that is entitled to precedence over "Let George do it." It has been practised in American civil life for many years, and now, it seems, some of the more observant of the men in khaki have discovered its insidious workings in the new army. Thus, as one of them points out in homely verse:

The Colonel tells the Major
When he wants something done,
And the Major tells the Captain,
And gets him on the run.

So started on its way, the "buck" passes from the captain to the first and second lieutenant. Then to the trusty sergeant, and

The Sergeant calls a Corporal
To see what he can see,
So the Corporal gets a Private
And the one he gets is me.

As to Lord Jellicoe.

London Daily Mail: The fact is that Sir John Jellicoe was removed from his post at the Admiralty not because he was criticised in "The Daily Mail"—as he undoubtedly was criticised by Admiral Henderson and other competent authorities—but because his handling of affairs proved that the estimate which we had formed of him was well founded. His own acts and omissions forced Sir Eric Geddes reluctantly to the conclusion that he was not the right man in the right place. This was made abundantly clear by Mr. Bonar Law and Sir Eric Geddes himself. He was removed because the Prime Minister, the First Lord of the Admiralty, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer—to whom the facts were made known—were convinced that "it was essential in the public interest that there should be a change in the First Sea Lord." History will, in due course, fully justify their action; and at no distant date.

Their First 100,000.

Boston Transcript: Ours is the fault, not theirs, that they are our first hundred thousand and not our first million; that they are dependent upon their Allies for battleplanes, artillery, and much of their equipment. They have done their best "over there." We have not done our best "over here." While we waited they have been hard at work. They have drilled in the rain and the snow; they have endured many hardships, but each one cheerfully. They have spurned "the sneaking hope" that the war would be won without their help. They have been longing and pleading for the day when they could prove themselves and their people in the eyes of the world. And now that day is at hand—they are going forward, singing as they go. Their numbers are not large enough to turn the tide of battle; they are only the vanguard of the American armies that are to follow, only the symbol of our Allies of the reserves upon which they can rely. But they are none the less pathfinders of victory, because they are the embodiment in the flesh of the spirit of the nation that stands behind them. As they fight "over there" shoulder to shoulder with the British and French, surely our first hundred thousand, by the spirit of their service and the example of their sacrifice, will awaken us "over here," quicken the conscience of the country, stiffen its leadership, speed up its every effort, and teach a might nation anew the almost forgotten less that Life is no life to him that dares not die,

And death no death to him that dares to live.

Prayer.

Those who in their hearts have known
The living God's eternal throne,

Who have beheld the flaming sword
Leap in the flash of human word,

Who carry in their deep set eyes
Quiet immortalities,

Whose feet have walked with scarce a sound
Wonder haunted homely ground,

For whom each feathered throat that stirs,
Is one of heaven's choristers,

Who look and look and always see
Men's hearts beneath their mummery,

Whose thoughts are instant everywhere.
What need have such as these for prayer?

AN EMPIRE CALENDAR

April 6—It is more on account of the desperate nature of the fighting and the splendid courage of the storming troops that the capture of the fortress of Badajos by the Duke of Wellington, which occurred one hundred and six years ago today, is memorable in the annals of the British Empire From the military point of view its capitulation did not seriously affect the Peninsula campaign although the fort occupied a commanding position less than four miles from the Portuguese border Yet the name Badajos, emblazoned among the "honors" of many famous regiments, notably on the colors of the Fighting Fifth, the Royal Welsh Fusiliers and the Inniskillens, is one of the proudest awards of the British army. The history of Badajos is a history of strife, even the cathedral being built in the form of a fortress It was by trickery and the bribing of the Spanish commander, Jose Imas, that it fell into French hands. Three attempts were made by the British to capture it during 1811 but each attempt was abandoned although the attack led by Beresford was within an ace of success. It was on March 17 of the following year that, before Soult had time to bring ip reinforcements, Wellington began the investment of the fortress which finally capitulated twenty-one days later. The official records of the battle show that 72 officers and 963 men were killed and 306 officers and 3,483 men were wounded during the assault. This was in the days before high explosives and machine-guns and hacking and clubbing took the place of flame-throwers and poison gas. So complete was the victory that Philippon, the French general and his whole army surrendered on the following day.

French-Canadian Views

La Canada—There were a number of absentees in all the provinces. They were sought for with discretion and were put into the ranks without scandal. But in Montreal and Quebec they organized raids on theatres, moving picture houses, concerts, etc. They forced the young men to prove that they had not broken the law and if they did not have their exemption papers they were taken to the barracks. And now it is proposed to amend the Military Service Act in such a way as to send to the various depot battalions all the young men who have opposed the law and disregard all their rights of exemption. The Montreal Star gives the purport of these amendments in these words: "These amendments will naturally be of a general character, but their application will be principally in Quebec, the seat of all the difficulties." Under these conditions is there an impartial man who will be astonished at the fact that the application of the Military Service Act in Quebec has exasperated the people of the province. We have the right to ask that the act be applied in the same manner and by the same methods in all the provinces. We are British subjects like our fellow-citizens of the other provinces and we desire to be treated on a footing of complete equality. That is our right and our representatives in Parliament should see that we get it.

FORGETTING HISTORY.

Le Devoir—American newspapers, doubtless forgetful of the history of their own country, abuse the whole French-Canadian race these days because of the events in Quebec. It may be well to remind them that, at the establishment of conscription in the United States during the Civil War, there were in New York and other northern cities bloody disturbances in which hundreds and hundreds of lives were lost. Some historians speak of as many as 3,000 victims. These journals would do well to occupy themselves with removing the American mote (beam) before exaggerating the measure of the Canadian hay.

FROM THE STAR FILES

THIRTY YEARS AGO.

(From The Star Files, April 6, 1888.)

New York.—Within two or three weeks the graphophone, or perfected phonograph, will be ready for the public. The stock in this new invention is now held at $5, with a par value of 10, but there is none of it in the market.

London.—The Miller again urges British millers to form a syndicate for the purchase of No. 1 hard wheat direct from the North-West farmers. The wheat would have to be stored in elevators, but it is claimed that such a syndicate would further the interests of the wheat producer as well as the British miller.

London.—A Cabinet Council was hastily summoned yesterday by telegraph. Many of the ministers came from a long distance to take part. It is supposed that the subjects discussed were the German crisis (connected with the rumor of Bismarck's resignation) and the proclaiming of Nation League meetings in Ireland.

Montreal.—A large audience assembled in Queen's Hall last night for the twenty-third season's concert of the Mendelssohn Choir. The choir's work was, as usual, of the best description; and a large share of the credit belongs to Mr. Joseph Gould, the conductor, and to Mr. H. A. Hilton, the accompanist.

TWENTY YEARS AGO.

(From The Star Files, April 6, 1898.)

Montreal.—The Mallors' Institute new building, at the corner of Place Royale and Commissioners street, was opened yesterday. Mr. Charles Alexander, vice-president, presided. An orchestra was in attendance and Miss Maria Hollinshead sang.

Montreal.—Windsor Hall has been crowded twice daily all this week to see the excellent moving pictures of the Passion Play.

SHADE TREES THREATENED.

The Editor, Montreal Daily Star.

Sir,—Judging by the demand for garden seeds this season, there will be greater activity than ever amongst Montreal gardeners. Naturally insect pests will be correspondingly active and we should use all possible means to induce a greater number of birds to summer within our city. Another reason why we should encourage the birds, recently pointed out by Mr. Swaine, Assistant Dominion Entomologist, is that the foliage of Montreal's shade trees is threatened by the tussock moth. The white egg cases of this moth are unusually abundant, and, as noted by Mr. Swaine, are unaccompanied by the parasitic insects that prey on the caterpillar. Another significant fact is that many egg cases are in the top branches of trees, out of human reach.

A powerful spray would be required to reach these, and this would only be effective immediately prior to and following the hatching of the eggs. Even should the city purchase the requisite spraying apparatus, we would still benefit by the co-operation of the birds. They attack the insect in all its stages, the eggs are eaten by warblers, chickadees, and others; many species prefer the larva or caterpillar, while the swallows and flycatchers catch the adult or winged insect.

Ideal conditions for the average bird are, sufficient food and water, absence of enemies, and safe nesting places. Our gardens harbor sufficient insects to assure a food supply during the summer. Water should be supplied. Any shallow vessel with one to three inches of water will suffice for drinking and bathing purposes.

As to enemies, if we were to eliminate cats and human interference the birds would have less to fear than in the woods and fields, where they have to contend with foxes, birds of prey, and other native enemies.

There remains the domestic sparrow. Much has been written about the bad habits of this alien, often to the entire neglect of certain useful traits it has developed. We could do without it, but apparently it will remain a feature so long as their is waste food. However, in this province at least, we may hope to overcome the effect of the sparrow's quarrelsome nature, by making it worth while for native birds to remain in the city and fight for their rights.

Now is the time to start erecting nesting houses and otherwise preparing to retain the spring migrants. Anyone interested can obtain further information in a booklet issued by the Province of Quebec Society for the Protection of Birds, by writing to the hon. secs., Mrs. W. R. L. Dyer, at No. 12 Willow avenue, Westmount.

MARRIED MEN, SINGLE MEN AND THE DRAFT.

The Editor, Montreal Daily Star.

Sir,—Why should a single man 18 to 24 years be exempted from military service on account of being a munition worker, farmer, in business for himself or in the National interest? Every single man thus exempted is escaping service to the sad detriment of the married men's families. When the single man is employed in the National interest, he should be replaced by a married man in the interest of the nation. Think of it — there are over 400,000 single men in Canada and thus far only 30,000 have been drafted, because a large number are exempted on the above grounds. Because a married man is not a farmer, munition worker, etc., and is the more fortunate single man, is there any reason why he cannot replace such a lucky single man?

Before this state of affairs continues much longer, please have the Military Service Act reconsidered; and, for the sake of Canada, do not compel the married man to leave his family when he can easily and most willingly replace the single man in the various employments of National interest. The breaking up of happy married men's homes caused by the compulsory drafting of married men is most assuredly not in the National interest. Woe unto the statesmen who would be responsible for such a serious affair. They could never give an acceptable account of themselves before God. Why should clergymen be exempt? Surely the country could get along without those between 18 and 24 during the war, particularly the priests who have no children depending upon them. It is unbelieveable that a married man will be drafted before a priest or clergyman who is single or before any other single man who is physically fit. MRS. E. G. JONES.
Montreal.

THAT MOVING DAY.

The Editor, Montreal Daily Star.

Sir,—If it is possible, for Heaven's sake let us get up a petition, as your correspondent suggests in The Star, on Feb. 27th, and signs himself "A Winter" to try and release ourselves from the "landlord's rope." From the standpoint of health alone the arrangement of everybody moving on the 1st of May, is about one of the filthiest and most repulsive arrangements any decent creature could be subjected to.

As he says, the inconvenience, we are put to, is an abomination that the Government should put an end to.

People having to trail and travel the city in any weather, to find a flat, and then if you get one, being compelled to move on a certain day whether it is pouring rain or whatever is happening. Is an arrangement that one could have understood better if it had have been arranged for the 1st of April, "April Fool's Day."

This law might have filled the bill beautifully a hundred years ago. Today we are living in a civilized country, then let us live and act, with a certain amount of common decency and if for instance, a family have had sickness, in the house, give the new tenant an opportunity to clean, and disinfect the house, and not to have to go in to other people's dirt and disease as if we were pigs instead of people. One would have thought that a suggestion of this kind would have come long since from the Medical Officer of Health. If it was only to check the awful increase of tuberculosis and other terrible diseases.

What are the doctors doing that they don't speak. DISGUSTED.

...xposes Danger of the Peace Strategy Planned by Germany

...RMANY AT BAY, by Major Haldane Macfall, with an Introduction by Field-Marshal Viscount French (Toronto, Cassell and Company, Limited).

There is no time to be lost if ...tain and America are to awake ...the appalling danger that lies ...ead in the making of Peace," ...ites Major Macfall in an intro...tory note. He addresses his ...k, which leading English critics ...l as one of the outstanding vol...es on the war,—if not the best ...r book yet written to the "Man...the-Street," praying him to study ...e situation and to "sit down and ...ve a good square look at the ...hole thing." Major Macfall con...ues, "The strategy of the war is ... easy to understand as a novel," ...d warns the Man-in-the-Street ...ainst the hideous dangers that ...k in German plans for peace. In ... this, Major Macfall (whose mil...ry career is distinguished) has the ...dorsation of Lord French, who re...mmends the "Germany at Bay" to ...e civilian and says:

It is vital to our future that the plain man should lose no time in coming to grips with the significance of the war, and understand its broad strategy; for his voice, not the voice of the military commanders, will determine the peace. It is in his peace strategy, as Major Macfall here points out, that the German has entered upon his most dangerous phase of the war . . . . No man of any common sense should remain ignorant of the fact that if Middle Europe comes out of the peace a German Empire, the war has been fought in vain. And if such a catastrophe should befall us, we shall have to wipe out the stain on our valor and our sanity with another great war.

First, says Major Macfall, the Man-in-the-Street must understand, try to understand, the enemy's psychology; must know what the warring peoples are driving at and what is driving them. Next, the enemy must be wholly destroyed as a fighting force; for the enemy, not wholly beaten, surrender a part of his design to puatch up peace, "then look to yourself or you will become his tool and plaything." Finally: it is the Man-in-the-Street, beware of Germany's peace plans, of what she will try to accomplish when she comes to the peace table, for

If Germany be defeated in the West, if Belgium be given back to the Belgians, if Northern France with Alsace and Lorraine be restored to the French; if the Kaiser be deposed; but if the Pan-German map remain German, no matter to what humiliation the German bows, then the German has won his war.

Outlining the rise of the German menace, Major Macfall passes to contemplation of the kultur in which German strategy is rooted, a kultur representing the whole German practical system of affairs. He touches upon essential points in German history and explains German strategy and kultur as feeding upon the theories of Gobineau, Nietzsche and Treitschke.

Next Major Macfall takes up the German War-machine, "The Fall of the German War God" and "The Siege of Germany." In the chapters bearing the last two titles, which consume a large part of the book, he advances opinions which present the campaign in France and in Belgium in a novel light. "The Germans were defeated on the Marne and have been in defeat ever since," he declares, and then began the siege which Germany has not yet succeeded in lifting. Siege need not be the fate of people in a fortress or in a city, he explains; the German army in France has besieged, by reason of its position and defeats as ever an army was. Here Marshal Joffre and Lord French come in for the highest praise. Joffre lured the Germans on and on until he was ready to turn and strike, doing this "with a skill and mastery that place the Great Retreat amongst the supreme triumphs of human endeavor." The single German strategic achievement was that of von Kluck in saving the Germans from annihilation; and but for the fact that part of the French forces struck too soon, the war would have been brought to a speedy termination. Then, at Ypres, the genius of Sir John French shone in the victory that "put the crown on the victory at the Marne."

* * *

Germany's scheme for subjugating Britain and America and establishing herself as mistress of the world involved first and second plans of campaign. The first was to trick the English-speaking peoples while France and Russia were being smashed and then to turn attention to the conquest of Britain. The second was to increase the efficiency of the war-machine by creating a vast Pan-German Empire from the Baltic to the Atlantic and to the Persian Gulf. This solid Central Europe was to be used as a "magnificent jumping-ground off which to leap to her mighty adventure." The Serbian "affair" was not a mere excuse for the war, once Serbia was overthrown, the Pan-German Empire became a reality and this success has been Germany's one strategic victory. Now, her first plan of campaign wrecked, Germany could only perfect the second plan and then spring "Peace" upon the world. The campaign against Russia was turned repeatedly against Germany by the skill and valor of her foes and the next move was the completion of the Pan-German map. Serbian gates alone barred the way and Major Macfall is outspoken in his stricture of the Allied Embassies in not sensing the gravity of the situation, saying:

The Allied Governments dawdled and were befooled and botched the whole sorry business. . . . We were trying to wring concessions out of Serbia and Greece, on behalf of Bulgaria, while Bulgaria was betraying us and had betrayed us before the first shot was fired. . . . The loss of Serbia is our most disgraceful defeat—and the only disgraceful defeat—in the war.

This brings Major Macfall's arguments to their climax, viz: that Germany's peace strategy is "The most deadly peril that has loomed upon us since the memory of living man" and that the danger to the Man-in-the Street is that he may be caught napping. Germany would now leap at peace on the conditions of restored Belgium and returned Alsace-Lorraine "because she would have won her War" on the basis of the Pan-German Empire extending through Middle Europe and occupying geographically the highest point of vantage. He repeats:

"Victory or Defeat depends upon the Peace Map of Europe" and "Upon the making or unmaking of this Map today depends the whole of Civilization."

Canadan Songs by Jesse Middleton in Very Patriotic Vein

SEA DOGS AND MEN AT ARMS, by Jesse Edgar Middleton (New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons).

The sub-title is "A Canadian Book of Songs." With one exception, a piece called "Moods" and suggested by a Debussy sonata, the songs rhyme frankly and easily. The ballad form suits Mr. Middleton best and he pours into it an ardent and patriotic spirit. His vigor and breeziness are well exampled in the first verse of "The Ballad of Jack Munroe," the story "miners tell of a fighting-man who set out for Hell."

Oh, this is the tale of Jack Munroe,
With arm of iron and first of brass,
Who fought a Champion long ago!
(The glittering years! How swift they pass!)
And his back was broad and his eyes were bright
And his soul was square and his spirit light.

Mr. Middleton has a poem for the "silent Engineer" who is the battleship's "intelligence;" and rings in tributes to great men of the past and present. He harks rather persistently upon death as a corollary to battle and service, but brave notes are struck repeatedly, as in "A Christmas Carol," of which the first verse is appended.

God rest you, merry gentlemen,
Let nothing you dismay.
The living Son of Mary stands
In the listening post today.
And if you fight for weaker folk,
For babes upon the breast,
Then have you fought full gallently
And bayonets may be blest.

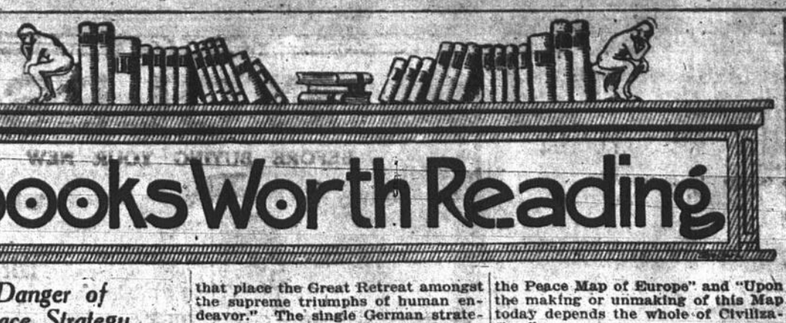

The Salonica Army and its Brave Deeds

THE STORY OF THE SALONICA ARMY, by G. Ward Price.

Mr. Price was official correspondent with the Allied forces in the Balkans. He gives a detailed account of the doings of the Salonica force, its composition by division, brigade and regiment, tells the tales of its battles, successes, failures and retreats, its hardships and its courage.

One reviewer finds the book "alive with a sense of warm sympathy, embellished with a thousand little intimate personal touches that lend verisimilitude; and there need be no doubt of its accuracy in so far as it was possible for the author to see what was doing. He saw much and was aided by official reports from headquarters, to which he has given the personal touch that transforms them from dry facts to a living narative."

"Long Ever Ago," by Rupert Hughes, consists of ten pleasant little sketches of Irish character. All but four of the stories have to do with members of the Morahan family of New York. The fierce-spoken and gentle-hearted Michael Morahan has four sons; one is a priest, one a policeman, one a fireman and the fourth is a building inspector.

Legislature Discusses Important Measure to Facilitate Transformation

URGE WIDENING RAILWAY GAUGE

Claims Soldiers' Land Scheme Federal, Not Provincial Measure

Special to The Star.

CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I., April 4.—The Provincial Legislature has been in session for about a week, but beyond making some progress in the debate on the Draft Address, little business has been done.

A number of changes have taken place since last year's session. Hon. A. E. Arsenault succeeds as Premier Hon. J. A. Mathieson, who was appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. A. P. Prowse succeeds as Speaker the Hon. John S. Martin, appointed a member of the Government without portfolio. There are two new members, J. D. Stewart, who takes Mr. Mathieson's seat in Georgetown, and Dr. R. J. McDonald, Conservative, who succeeds the late J. D. McInnis, Liberal, of St. Peter's Bay. This last Conservative gain, made during a bye-election, leaves the parties now eighteen to twelve.

This session is expected to proceed more smoothly than that of last year. The new Premier is far less aggressive than the former one, and naturally will not invite such strong attacks from the Opposition.

The new legislation outlined in the speech from the Throne, comprises amendments to the Prohibition Act to conform with the new Dominion Statue, some changes in the Election Law and in the School Act, and further provisions for assisting farmers in under-drainage of the land. The action of the Government in voting a sum of money to the Halifax sufferers will be ratified.

Mr. Bell, Opposition leader, during the debate on the Draft Address, criticised the Government for cutting off the grant to the provincial exhibition this year. He pointed out that no exhibitions are being held in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, because buildings are not available, and that, therefore, an exhibition on the island would draw a large patronage from the other side. He urged the Government to apply to the Dominion Government for an increase in the grant, and to throw the exhibition open to all Canada.

SOLDIERS' LAND SCHEME.

The provincial land settlement scheme for soldiers was also strongly opposed by Mr. Bell. According to a provincial measure passed last year, returned soldiers are to be given unoccupied lands and a grant towards assisting them in starting farming. Mr. Bell's contention was that this is a matter for the federal, not the provincial Government; that soldiers would not take readily to farming, and that the cost to the island would be $400,000. Moreover, he contended that the Government had no power to expropriate lands, unless it was for the purpose of public use.

WIDENING OF GAUGE URGED.

One matter in which both parties are solidly united upon, is the necessity of widening, without delay, the gauge of the Prince Edward Island Railway. The boards of trade of the province are also taking the matter up, and will proceed to Ottawa shortly to wait upon the Government. The cost of transferring freight from the wide gauge to the narrow gauge cars on the island side is about $60,000 a year, which will go a long way towards paying the interest on the capital sum required to have the gauge standardized.

The Dominion Government is asking for an appropriation of $40,000,000 for rails and rolling stock, and the Island is surely entitled to a share of this money. As a war time measure the standardization of the gauge is a very important one, as it means facilitating the movement of food stuffs from this province. There are now over a million bushels of potatoes here tied up because they could not be moved last winter.

TIED UP RAILROAD.

Owing to the lack of power on the railroad a portion of the line was tied up by snow for a fortnight. With the widening of the gauge, the locomotive power of the mainland would be at once available for keeping the Prince Edward Island road open.

The snow fighting bill this year alone would about pay the interest on the cost of widening the gauge. With a few exceptions the locomotives are played out, and they were utterly helpless in charging the snow drifts. The line had to be cleared almost entirely by shovellers. Up to the first of March, the snow fighting bill was $61,000, and it is safe to say that it will be over $100,000 for the season.

The provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia should be just as much interested in having the gauge widened as this province, as there is a large trade between the three.

The Legislature will not only send a joint memorial to the federal Government asking for the widening of the gauge, but they will emphasize the necessity of putting a suitable steamer between Charlottetown and Pictou, to assist trade with Nova Scotia and Cape Breton and other Eastern points until the railroad is standardized.

MILITARY OFFICIALLY DECLARE QUEBEC RIOTS HAVE BEEN SUPPRESSED

No Further Disturbances Expected, But All Necessary Precautions Taken—Public Thanked for Kindly Attitude Toward Troops

By Canadian Press.

QUEBEC, April 6. — The military authorities issued an official communique yesterday announcing that the riots had been suppressed The communique also states that no further disorders are expected, though all precautions have been taken to check trouble.

The people of the city are advised to remain indoors at night for a few days.

The thanks of the military to the people of Quebec "for their warm appreciation and their sympathetic attitude towards the soldiers" are also announced.

"Sir R. L. Borden, Prime Minister, Ottawa, Ont.:

"The report laid before the House of Commons on Quebec riots, and the report submitted by Colonel Machin, as published in this morning's Quebec Chronicle, I regret to say are incomplete and inexact on several points. Regret that my duties as mayor of the City of Quebec do not permit me to be present in the House of Commons. Hope debate will not close before I may have the opportunity to correct the said statements.

"(Signed).—H. E. Lavigueur, M.P., Mayor of Quebec."

In an editorial, Le Soleil says that the authorities should have established some kind of a censorship on the news going out of Quebec concerning the recent disturbances in Quebec City. It says that certain press reporters sent out stories grossly exaggerated which have not only harmed Quebec, but also were liable to produce trouble elsewhere.

GEN. LESSARD'S PROCLAMATION

The return of peace, as far as the authorities are concerned, is indicated in the following official report which Major-General F. L. Lessard, issued yesterday.

"The military authorities desire to express to the citizens of Quebec their warm appreciation for their attitude during the last few days. As the enquiry continues, the conviction grows that the troubles were fomented by several agitators and that the people of Quebec as a mass regret these disorders. The troubles are now suppressed. The military authorities do not expect any further trouble, but if anything occurs all precautions have been taken to put a stop to them.

"The military authorities ask all citizens who are not obliged to go into the streets at night to continue to remain in their houses for several days yet. Despite the inconveniences which will result, the authorities are confident that the public will understand that the aim of this measure is only for the purpose of maintaining order and protecting the lives and property of the citizens."

JUDGE LANGELIER'S COMMENT.

Judge Langelier, in dealing with the cases before him yesterday, said that he felt it necessary to explain certain legal principles so as to prevent any further friction between civil and military authorities. He remarked: "The military authorities have been requested to help the civil authorities in virtue of the Militia Act of Canada, section 80, and section 88 says that in such circumstances the special soldiers are merely acting as special constables.

"Now, what are the powers conferred by the law in the case of riot on the military authorities? I find them explained in the manual of military law issued 1914 by the War Office in England to point out the military duties.

"At section 4, page 1, it is said: 'The rioters or insurgents are wholly under ordinary civil law, and in no respect subject to the military law.'

"Rioters are an enemy only while actually resisting, and when force has to be used the rioters, whether prisoners or otherwise, are dealt with respect subject to the military law.'

"Section 34 of the same manual also says: 'Soldiers when acting as aid to the civil power in no respect differ in the sense of the law from armed citizens,' and section 35: 'The primary duty of preserving public order rests with the civil power.'

"This is sufficient to show that the civil power maintains its authority, and if delinquents are arrested it is the duty of the military power to bring them before a magistrate to be tried according to the civil law and the military are responsible for anything which they may do in opposition to the law.

"That is truly established in Dicey, the law of constitution, page 268, where it is said: 'It is also clear that a soldier has, as such, no exemption from liability to the law for his conduct in restoring order. Officers, magistrates, soldiers, policemen and citizens, all occupying in the eye of the law the same position.'

DEFINES MARTIAL LAW.

"There seems to be quite a misunderstanding about what we call the martial law. Here is what we find in Dicey, at page 268: 'Martial law in the proper sense of the term, is that which it means that suspension of ordinary law and the temporary government of a country or parts of it by the military tribunals, is unknown to the law of England.'

"The assertion, however, that no martial law exists under our system of government may lead to some misunderstanding, unless everything is carefully weighed. The error in which an uninstructed reader is likely to fall and into which magistrates and officers have from time to time, and notably in the Gordon riot of 1718, fallen is to suppose that the effect is negatives as well as positive, and, therefore, cannot be employed without the fulfilment of the conditions imposed by the definition this notion is now known to be erroneous.

"However, as to the kind of martial law, we should always have in mind whether the forces employed was necessary or excessive, more especially where death has occured. and this is to be determined by a judge and a jury."

BABES BURNED TO DEATH.

TORONTO, April 6.—The bodies of Louise, aged three years, and John, aged four, children of Private Wm. Hoskins, overseas, were found in the ruins of their home, on Struthers street, Mimico, yesterday afternoon. A third child, Willie, aged six, escaped from the house when the flames broke out, about noon, totally destroying it. The mother of the children was absent in the city, and the little ones were playing with matches.

JAPANESE LAND AT VLADIVOSTOK

Naval Forces Undertake Protection of Life and Property

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Landing of Japanese naval forces at Vladivostok to protect life and property was reported to the State Department yesterday by the American consul there.

The action followed an attack on a Japanese office by five armed Russians, who upon being refused money, killed one Japanese and wounded two others. The force landed was said to be small and only sufficient to prevent further disorders.

It was learned officially that the American Government attaches no political significance to this incident. In other words, it is not regarded as being connected in any way with the much discussed possibility of Japanese intervention in Siberia. The landing party was from a Japanese cruiser stationed in Vladivostok harbor.

Since the return to Japan from Russia of Baron Uchida, the Japanese Minister to Petrograd, the Japanese Prime Minister has indicated clearly that Japan does not intend, at present at least, to enter Siberia in a military way without reference to the wishes of the Russian Government, unless some extreme emergency should arise.

TROUBLE IS PURELY LOCAL.

It has been assumed here that such an emergency would be organization of the German military prisoners in Siberia into an armed force designed to seize control of the country, or the taking possession by factions hostile to the Entente Allies of the great quantity of military stores accumulated at Vladivostok.

Neither of these contingencies has arisen at Vladivostok, and the State Department's information indicates that the trouble at that port is purely local and such as might be expected to occur at any point where disorderly elements were gathered without any strong local authority in control.

While the Bolshevik element predominates at the port, it never has been able to assert its authority and preserve order. Consequently, the attack upon the Japanese is regarded as indicating the existence of such a situation as, under the general principles of international law, would not only warrant but demand the active intervention of any foreign naval force which might be present.

IDLENESS NOW BECOMES CRIME

Important Order-in-Council Passed by Dominion Government

By Canadian Press.

OTTAWA, April 6.—Idleness in Canada is now punishable by penalty. An order-in-council, read in the House of Commons by the Prime Minister yesterday afternoon, enacts that "all persons domiciled in Canada shall, in the absence of reasonable cause to the contrary, engage in useful occupations."

It declares that the "regulations are not intended to affect any right of members of organized labor associations to discontinue their work in the employment in which they have been engaged when such discontinuance is occasioned by differences actually arising between the employer and the employed. The purpose is to prevent persons capable of useful work from remaining in idleness at a time when the country most urgently requires the services of all human energy possible. The regulations provide that:

(1) Every male person residing in the Dominion shall be regularly engaged in some useful occupation.

(2) In any proceeding hereunder, it shall be a defence that the person is

(a) Under sixteen years or over sixty years of age.

(b) A bona fide student proceeding with his training for some useful occupation.

(c) A bona fide student in actual attendance at some recognized educational institution.

(d) Usually employed in some useful occupation and temporarily unemployed owing to differences with his employers common to similar employes with the same employer.

(e) Physically unable to comply with the provisions of the law, as herein enacted.

(f) Unable to obtain, within reasonable distance, any kind of employment which he is physically able to perform at current wages for similar employment.

Violations of the regulations imposes liability to a penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars, or, in default, to imprisonment not exceeding six months "in any common gaol, or in any institution or any farm owned by a municipality or province and declared by by-law or order-in-council respectively to be a public institution or farm for the purposes of this law, which said institution or farm for the purposes of this law shall be a common gaol."

Where proceedings are instituted at the instance of a municipality, the fine goes to the municipality; where instituted by a provincial officer, to the Provincial Treasurer.

FEARED ANOTHER OUTBREAK.

QUEBEC, April 6.—The closing of the bars here two hours earlier than usual gave rise to rumors of a further outbreak of disorders here last night. No trouble took place or was expected, the military authorities announced. The closing of the bars was a precautionary measure, applying to civilians and military alike.

MASQUERADER WILL BE COURTMARTIALED

BOSTON, Mass., April 6. — Percy Seymour de Willoughby, who recently served a prison term here for forgery after masquerading as a captain in the British army, has been taken to Ellis Island to await deportation. It became known today that immigration authorities in this city were asked by the British military intelligence bureau to send the prisoner back; and it was said hat he would be taken to England to be tried by court martial on a charge of desertion. Previous to his arrest de Willoughby had been entertained extensively by society people in the United States and Canada and was in demand as a lecturer at war meetings.

SINN FEINER ARRESTED.

NEW YORK, April 6. — Thomas Welsh, alleged to be a Sinn Feiner messenger, was convicted in the Federal Court here yesterday of violating the Trading with the Enemy Act by bringing a written communication into the country without making use of the mails.

MADE FLYING OFFICERS.

LONDON, April 6.—Lieut. J. A. Dickie, P. Waters and H. C. Young are gazetted flying officers.

SPRING EXHIBITION AT THE ART GALLERY BOTH SAFE AND SANE

Nothing Startling, Nothing Alarming—Plenty of Promise in Work Shown—Only a Few Freaks —Established Men Measure Up Well

IT is not always an easy thing to hold a successful picture exhibition in time of stress, such as war. That the thirty-fifth spring exhibition at the Galleries of the Montreal Art Association, now open on Sherbrooke stree, should prove as satisfying as it is in the special strenuous circumstances is a matter for quiet congratulation. It is true that the exhibition contains nothing startling, nothing alarming. On the other hand, it produces only a few freaks, and there is a cheerful absence of sheer trash. A more severe pruning would doubtless have eliminated a good deal of material that cumbers the walls, but the judges have doubtless erred wisely on the side of charity. They will be forgiven their errors by exhibitors, and as for the general public, it can only be thankful that it is not invited to gaze upon eyesores that have in the past marred this annual event.

* * *

Let us get over the unpleasant things first. John Lyman, who still persists in covering canvas, shows two characteristic "works." One is a "Portrait" (231), coarse in drawing, and coarser still in coloring. The other is a "Portrait of the Artist" (321), well drawn, and atrociously colored. After all, if Mr. Lyman loves his hair and his moustache green, that is his own affair. But why hang abortions in color? This sort of thing is not art. It is simply preposterous.

* * *

Fortunately there are pleasant things to look at also, and the flavor of dirty green is easily eliminated. For instance, there are the scholarly and, in more respects than one, notable works of Mr. Suzor-Cote and Mr. Maurice Cullen. These two artists go on their way year by year, advancing, making sure and certain headway along sure and certain lines, always holding before them the true artist's ideal— beauty of color, perfection of composition, charm of line, and atmospheric truth. Any one of their pictures is worth a galleryfull of posturing freaks.

* * *

Mr. Cullen shows three oils and five pastels. He is a master in the pastel medium, but this year, strangely enough, it is not a winter scene that claims priority of praise, but an autumn scene. "North Mount," (72) is one of the most beautiful things Mr. Cullen has ever exhibited. The rich autumnal tints glow in this pastel. And how freely, yet how sparingly and with what certainty of stroke and economy of material, he employs his colors! Nothing, however, could be more convincing, in the aggregate, "Habitant Farm" (69) is a little gem — ruthless in its chill atmosphere, but faithful and vigorous in its truth to the subject. Among the oils Mr. Cullen adheres to his winter scenes, and once more he gives us snow that is neither pasty nor dirty nor woolly—just snow—snow that makes you feel cold, snow that impresses you with a sense of the artist's profound grasp of the atmospheric values of a Canadian winter landscape. There are not half a dozen artists living who can achieve this thing.

* * *

One of them, however, is Suzor-Cote. This artist has been as faithful to his ideals as Mr. Cullen, and as successful in his achievements. "Le Vieux Pommier" (337) is a notable example of his mature work. His method is individual, but in his massing of medium there is no actual waste. There is method in the utilization of pigments. He would have made a marvellous exponent of pointillisme if he had elected to specialise in that particular form. But he is above all a great colorist.

He places his colors with a dexterity that compels admiration, and even though one may not always see with him in regard to actual texture, one cannot deny the force and the power of his technique. The snow in this picture is undeniably clever in handling.

"Une Rue a Trois Rivieres," (388), in a lower tone, tells just as clear and just as impressive a story. "Matinee de Septembre," (340), is magnificent in its richness of coloring. And in "Etude de Type Canadien," (341), Mr. Suzor-Cote has given us another of those splendid studies of habitant types that will perpetuate his name among the Canadian artists who have reached definite achievement and definite greatness.

* * *

Mr. Cote shows also two examples of sculpture. One wishes he would do more. Not for years have I seen any work from a Canadian artist that is more appealing than his companion study to that "Vieux Pionnier Canadien," which charmed all some time back. Here is an old woman, leaning back in her chair, knitting. Utter simplicity of subject, and utter simplicity of treatment, but sufficient detail to emphasise the type beyond all question of doubt. The face is in itself a masterpiece. Mr. Cote handles this medium with the subtle mastery of touch that comes of inspiration alone.

* * *

Mr. Brymner, of whose return to health all will learn of with keen pleasure, has not yet lost his cunning. A water-color done some years ago, however, is his principal exhibit, "Givernay, France" (40)—a study in cool greens that pleases the senses and refreshes the eye.

Charles de Belle sends a few of his inimitable studies of childhood. What simplicity, and what a profound sense of the spiritual, this artist manages to convey. How, one scarcely knows. His work is elusive, imaginative to a degree, yet imbued with rare beauty of line, invariable masterly coloring, and a subtlety in composition that defies analysis. No painter of Canada today can typify and glorify the beauty of childhood as he can. And in his imaginative—I had almost written fantastical—work he is still a master. Look at "Recollection" (83) if you want to see how an idea can be conveyed in water-color.

* * *

It is with a sense of profound regret that one learns that two of the des Clayes sisters have left Montreal for Boston. These gifted, sincere and charming artists have given Montreal their best work while they have been with us, and, as the present exhibition testifies, they have not wasted their years here.

Miss Berthe des Clayes shows two oils, two water-colors, and a pastel—the latter a fascinating study of marshland (100). Of the water-colors, "The First Primrose" (101), is a gem of free technique, quiet, masterly coloring, and charm of drawing. She seems, mewever, to be equally at home in all mediums.

Miss Alice des Clayes has bent her skill to winter studies, not always with equal success, but invariably succeeding in revealing to us something we would otherwise have missed—some hidden beauty in snow, or sky, or nightfall.

Miss Gertrude des Clayes, the portrait painter, would have earned our gratitude had she exhibited nothing else but "Anna Dale" (104), one of the most delightful studies of childhood the galleries have seen. Her technique is free, sure, always broad, never loose. Her coloring is unfailingly a thing of beauty, both to look at and to study. Her pastels are equally successful. She is a notable draughtswoman, and she always paints sympathetically. There is no coldness, no lack of humanity, in her portrait work.

* * *

Wilfrid Barnes allows ambitious work—progressive work, too. His "Woodland Pool" (6) marks a very big advance on his previous efforts. The lighting is cleverly and feelingly handled. In "Hay Field" (5) also he has tackled a big subject with no little genuine artistic success.

Georges Delfosse has three pictures, of which one is a genuine triumph. It is "College de Montreal" (90), and, in my opinion, it is the best thing he has ever shown. The treatment of hot sunlight falling on hoary walls, filtering through foliage, is so good that one wonders what he has been doing all the time until now. However, this picture establishes his claim to be considered an artist who can see beauty and transfer it convincingly on to canvas.

J. C. Franchere shows a portrait, "Marcelle" (132), which is more freely handled and more sympathetically drawn than his previous portrait studies. The coloring, too, is more than good.

* * *

L. M. Kiplin covers a variety of subjects, and just misses distinction. Mabel H. May is ambitious, and has a keen sense of composition, but mars her work by splashy utilization of paint, and a supreme disregard of juxtaposition in colors that jars badly. She will succeed, however—unless she allows herself to be led away by the farceurs in paint.

Joseph St. Charles shows two portraits, both entitled "Young Lady," one in pastel (315) and the other in oil (316). The pastel is his best work. The oil is his freest study. Both are worth looking at.

Regina Seiden is by no means mistress of her medium, but she at least possesses imagination and the courage to endeavor to lend it attractive expression.

* * *

Among other features of the exhibition I must not omit Mr. Percy Woodcock's landscapes. Mr. Woodcock is one of the most satisfying artists exhibiting here. His technique is refined, his composition masterly, his coloring always a delight to the eye, and his sense of atmosphere so acute that one feels he has got "inside" his subject in every instance.

Miss Kyle is a student of miniature sketches, and she succeeds in giving us miniatures that are also full of life. Her tiny sketches have sound color, clever composition, and a feeling for beauty that is none too common.

* * *

It is obviously impossible, within the limitations of a brief review, even to mention many pictures that are deserving of mention. Those detailed above seem to me to be the salient features. I would add that a trifle in sculpture, "Le Bain" (372), by Ivan Jobin, seems to me to give promise out of all proportion to the actual achievement.

* * *

There is a plethora of commonplace material. This is unavoidable, but we can at least give thanks that we seem within measurable distance of escape from that blight of fatuous rioting in distorted drawing, obscene coloring and ghastly composition that seemed to be threatening us a few years ago.

REGULATIONS FOR WEARING GOLD BRAID

Returned Soldiers Must Obtain Certificate from Headquarters

TORONTO, April 6. — To be allowed to wear gold braid on their sleeves, signifying that they have been wounded, returned officers and men must secure a certificate from district headquarters. If they desire to have this braid on their civilian clothes a certificate must also be secured.

Hereafter, soldiers who return from overseas must not be discharged after medical treatment, if their physical condition leaves them in a category suitable for any form of service. A special medical board will examine and place them in various categories, and they will be attached accordingly to their physical fitness. If fit to go overseas again, they will be placed in an overseas unit.

A further regulation tends to make desertions more difficult. All men, on reporting for service, must fill out descriptions and particulars of themselves, to be filed with the military authorities. A refusal to do this will call for a court-martial.

800,000 AMERICANS TO BE CALLED OUT

President Prepared to Launch Second Great Draft

He is expected to issue a proclamation this week, notifying 800,000 registered men that they must hold themselves in readiness for service.

The first great call to camps under the second draft will approximate 150,000 men, to start moving the latter part of this month. There will be a continuous stream of men to camps thereafter under present plans, and probably 300,000 or 400,000 will be called before July first.

PASTOR RUSSELL BOOK LEADS TO MORE SEIZURES

Plates of a Pamphlet Seized by Dominion Police— Was An Open Letter

"The Finished Mystery" which was banned by the Canadian Chief Censor as a publication which gave comfort to the enemy, and which was issued by the International Bible Students Association, is not finished with yet. Attempts are being made by some of the members of the Association in Montreal to enlist public sympathy for Pastor Russell's publication. A raid that was carried out a day or two ago by the Dominion Police here resulted in the seizure of the plates of a four page pamphlet which had been prepared, as an open letter to the Hon. Martin Burrell, Secretary of State, quoting from the book and advancing arguments why the ban should be removed.

When "The Finished Mystery" was banned, the Federal police authorities here seized a large number of the books at the headquarters of the Association, while many members of the Association voluntarily yturned in to headquarters the copies of the book they had, as there was a fine of $5,000 liable to be inflicted on anyone having a copy, after the banning order was published.

The secretary of the local branch of the organization said this morning that he thought the seizure of the plates was really a mistake, for the same plates had been used in the printing of the pamphlet which was distributed all over the country. Furthermore, he declared that the British censor had allowed the book, "The Finished Mystery," to be sold in Great Britain, while the ban had also been lifted off it in the United States, after three pages only had been eliminated and the letter to Mr. Burrell was simply arguments in favor of Canada following the course adopted by other countries.

The No. O Hercules Spring Bed is made both with and without a Basket Edge. The Basket Edge accomplishes many things. Amongst others, it prevents the mattress from sliding and also from becoming spread and sloping over the edges of the bed. Also the bed clothing may be tucked in securely, so that children, invalids or uneasy sleepers cannot possibly kick themselves uncovered, etc., etc. Once you use the No. O Hercules Spring Bed with the Basket Edge you wouldn't be without the improvement if it cost ten times its small price.

OFFICIAL WAR OFFICE REPORTS

BRITISH

By Associated Press.

LONDON, April 6.—The War Office statement issued last night read:

Since dawn this morning the Germans have delivered heavy attacks north and south of Dernancourt, southwest of Albert and in the region of Moyenneville.

At Dernancourt and southwest of Albert they succeeded in getting a footing in our defences. The situation at Albert was restored by a counter-attack.

In the region of Mesnil and Beaumont-Hamel our line has been heavily shelled, and some infantry fighting has taken place near Mesnil, but without advantage to the enemy. Enemy attacks on Moyenneville were repulsed.

An attack carried out by our troops southeast of Gommocourt resulted in the capture of 120 prisoners.

On the British front south of the Somme the situation has been quiet.

Aviation—Rain and mist greatly interfered with aerial operations Thursday. Our airplanes, nevertheless, repeated their activity during the battle south of the Somme, and fired into the enemy troops. Of the German machines which appeared on this part of the battlefront, six were brought down by airplanes and one was shot down by anti-aircraft gun fire. One of our machines is missing. Two machines reported missing during the last two days have returned.

About mid-day Friday our airplanes dropped 22 heavy bombs on the railway station at Luxemburg. Many were seen to burst on the railway, and a very large fire was caused. Anti-aircraft gunfire was considerable, but all our machines returned. nauu. 13'dhuvR2 y1 shrdlu shrdlu ul

An earlier statement said:

This morning the activity of the enemy's artillery and trench mortars increased north of the Somme, and was folowed by a series of strong infantry attacks along all of that portion of the battle front which lies between the Somme and Bucquoy. The latest reports indicate that these attacks met with virtualy no success anywhere and have resulted in further heavy casualties to the enemy.

On the same front our troops carried out sucessful attacks in the neighborhood of Hebuterne. They took some two hundred prisoners and a number of machine guns.

South of the Somme, there were no further attacks made on the British front by the enemy today. It is confirmed that the fighting yesterday on this front was of a most severe and persistent nature, the enemy making repeated assaults on our positions east of Villers-Bretonneux.

FRENCH

By Associated Press.

PARIS, April 6.—The War Office statement issued last night said:

The Germans did not resume their attacks on the front north of Mont Didier during the course of the day. Our troops have vigorously counter-attacked the enemy and have succeeded in improving their positions at several points, notably in the region of Mailly-Rameval and Cantigny, the north and west outskirts of which towns are in our hands.

The activity of both artilleries betwen Lassigny and Noyon has been continuously violent. A further gain of ground was realized this afternon north of Mount Renaud.

Aviation — On Wednesday we brought down five German airplanes and one captive balloon was destroyed by fire. During Tuesday night and Wednesday our bombing squadrons made numerous sorties, 23,000 kilograms of projectiles were dropped on cantonments, stations and enemy establishments. Fires were caused, notably in the stations at Laon and St. Quentin. It is confirmed that from March 31 to April 3, five other enemy airplanes were destroyed by our pilots.

Eastern theatre, April 4.—Many enemy reconnaissance parties were dispersed in the British and Serbian front north of Monastir. Our artillery has carried out a heavy bombardment upon enemy batteries. The Allied aviators have dropped 1,500 kilograms of explosives in railroads at Vardar, Seres and Drama. An enemy airplane was shot down.

An earlier statement said:

"The Germans continued their attacks during the night with undiminished violence, throwing fresh forces into the battle. We have identified fifteen divisions on this part of the front, seven of them fresh ones.

"Notwithstanding the marked superiority in the strength of the enemy forces, which the Germans used up recklessly, they did not obtain their objective, which was the railway from Amiens to Clermant, as is shown by documents found on prisoners.

"French regiments, resisting step by step and counter-attacking energetically, maintained their line in its entirety and inflicted cruel losses on the enemy.

"Meanwhile in the north the French withdrew their positions to west of Castel. They ejected the Germans from Arriere Cour Wood, west of Mailly-Bameval. South-east of Grivesnes a brilliant counter-attack gave the French the St. Aignan Farm, which they held against all assaults.

"Between Montdidier and Noyon, the artillery fighting became very intense. French troops attacked the German lines and obtained possession of the greater part of Epinette Wood, 600 yards north of Orvillers—Sorel. All efforts of the Germans to dislodge the French were vain.

"Further east a local operation enabled the French to enlarge their positions north of Mont Benaud, which the Germans, notwithstanding their false statements, were never able to take from the French."

GERMAN

By Associated Press.

BERLIN, April 6.—The Army Headquarters official statement issued last night said:

There have been artillery duels and local infantry engagements on both sides of the Somme. Strong French counter-attacks failed on the western bank of the Avre.

There has been lively artillery activity before Verdun.

An earlier statement said:

After a hard struggle we have taken, between the Somme and the Luce rivers, Hamel and also the wooded districts northeast and southeast of Villers-Bretonneux and the castle, and Mailly on the west bank of the Avre.

We attacked yesterday south of the Somme and on both sides of Moreuil and threw the enemy out from his strong positions. English and French reserves advanced against our troops. Their storming attack broke under our fire.

The enemy showed desperate resistance on the whole of the front. His losses are consequently unusually severe. We took several thousands of prisoners.

According to a completed calculations, the number of prisoners brought in by the army of General von Hutier in the period from March 21 to March 29 amounts to 51,218 and the captured guns to 729. With these captures the whole booty up to the present has risen to more than 90,000 prisoners and more than 1,300 guns.

By way of reprisal for the continual bombardment for some days of our shelters in Laon, we have taken Rheims under our fire.

In the Champagne and on the east bank of the Meuse successful thrusts have brought us prisoners. Before Verdun the artillery battle which had increased during the day was also lively during the night.

Eastern theatre—In the Ukraine we took from enemy bands on the Poltawa-Constantinograd railway 28 railway cars loaded with French rifles and ammunition and more than a million artillery shells.

AUSTRIAN

VIENNA, April 6.—The official Army Headquarters report issued yesterday said:

In Venetia we repulsed a night attack made by the Italians south of Fontana Secca. Enemy enterprises against our advance lines at Devoli, in Albania, failed.

ITALIAN

By Associated Press.

ROME, April 6.—The official War Office statement issued yesterday said:

Along the mountainous portions of the front the enemy carried out a persistent harassing fire against our lines on the Asiago Plateau. We dispersed enemy parties on the western slopes of Mount Ortler, and our artillery engaged marching troops and transport movements in the rear of the lines from Susegagna to Conegliano. Our patrols carried out reconnaissance work, capturing a few prisoners in the Larsa valley. We also put to flight the garrison of an outpost, and repulsed by rifle fire hostile patrols in the Fener area.

Along the Piave River the activity of the opposing artilleries reached remarkable intensity at intervals. The fire of our batteries caused a conflagration in the neemy's positions and destroyed gangways built by the enemy opposite Grav.

British aviators brought down three enemy machines above Olsmon and a fourth was compelled to land near Strigno.

Notre Dame de Grace Starts Practical Patriotic Movement

The proposition to encourage pig raising by supplying garbage for pig feed to farmers near the city has found favor in Notre Dame de Grace. This was evident at the meeting held last evening in Kensington School under the auspices of the Notre Dame de Grace Housewives' League.

The League proposes to arrange that the edible garbage in the district shall be available for collection. A farmer within a mile of the city limits has agreed to add fifty pigs to the small herd which he has at present, the fifty to be fed from Notre Dame de Grace garbage.

The farmer will buy and own the pigs and will reap the profits. The League is not concerned with money making; it is interesting itself in the production of food and for that reason alone will put itself to the trouble of a house to house canvass of Notre Dame de Grace in the interests of the pig owner.

PRACTICAL PROPOSITION.

Mr. McLaurin, of the Animal Husbandry Department, Macdonald College, spoke at last evening's meeting on the possibilities in pig raising. He pointed out that the raising of hogs was one of the speediest methods of producing food, both because the pig comes to maturity in six or seven months and because a sow ought to produce twelve or fourteen pigs in a year.

He considered that one pig kept in a back yard was a more paying proposition than a herd, because of the individual attention that the one pig received.

Mr. McLaurin spoke on some detail of the feed required by a pig. He considered that pigs might be raised readily on garbage alone. If other food was used it must be mainly shorts for the first few weeks after weaning, graduating by the addition of grain, to a feed composed eventually of three parts grain to one part shorts.

Mr. McLaurin, described the back yard pig pen as it should be, and was careful to emphasize that the pig is not the unclean animal it was held to be, if properly cared for.

COST OF PURCHASES.

Pigs were difficult to procure this year, he said, owing to the great demand for them. The cost of a young pig would be $6 or $7. If fed entirely on garbage its food would cost nothing. At Macdonald College, where the pigs are fed on a diet consisting partly of garbage and partly of meal, the cost of feed amounted to 8½ cents for every pound of pork eventually produced.

Miss Philip, of Macdonald College, spoke of the food value of fat and of its other uses, such as in soap.

Canadian Widows Pay Heavy Probate Duties in Britain

THE MONTREAL STAR OFFICE, 20 Cockspur street, London, April 6.—Sir George Perley informs me that no reply has yet been received from the British treasury to the Canadian representations respecting the heavy probate duties charged upon British war bonds held by widows of Canadian soldiers. These duties in some cases amount to 22 per cent., and returns show that up to the middle of 1917, 4,343 Canadians invested 250,000 dollars. This total is greatly swollen by later British issues, to which large numbers of Canadians patriotically subscribed rather than to the Canadian victory loans. If the Treasury is unable to forego these probate duties the bonds will probably be sold with some loss of capital value.

Officers of Disbanded Fifth Division are Awaiting New Places

THE MONTREAL STAR OFFICE, 20 Cockspur street, London, April 6.—Colonel Hodgetts' resignation from the Canadian Records Office is deeply regretted. He worked hard and well, giving himself no rest since 1914, with the result of overstrain. A successor has not yet been decided on.

The future of some prominent officers of the disbanded fifth division are still undecided. General Garnet Hughes remains in London awaiting employment. Colonel John Cooper expects to go to Canada with the rank of Major.

Colonel Purney, election officer, is preparing to return to Canada. Colonel Wayland is also returning on a flax mission.

Sir Thomas Robinson, Fish Commissioner, is endeavoring to complete arrangements with the British Government for the immediate shipment of a million pounds weight of frozen fish now at St. John, New Brunswick. WINDERMERE.

GOV. HAS NO POWER AGAINST LYNCHING

WASHINGTON, D.C., April 6. — Until the Federal Government is given power to punish persons making disloyal utterances, Department of Justice officials fear more lynchings, such as that of Robert P. Prager, at Colinsville, Illinois, last night. This was the first report reaching here of such extreme mob violence to a German, although officials who have observed the general feeling against Germans, have feared such occurrences.

The Government has no authority to take action against the lynchers. Officials of the Department of Justice deplored the act and expressed the hope that State or local authorities would speedily punish the lynchers.

BRITISH VIEW OF BANK MERGERS---STOCK LIST FEATURES

SPECIAL FEATURES OF INTEREST IN LOCAL MARKET OPERATIONS

As the nervous tension created by the German drive on the western front died down in the stock market there was a distinctly better tone, and prices enjoyed moderate rallies from the depression of the preceding week.

This kept on until Thursday, when the better feeling culminated in the best market experience in some time. It was not only broader, but stronger, than any since the nervousness over the drive developed.

On Friday came the renewal of the heavy fighting and a resumption of nervousness resulting in a much quieter market and a slightly easier tone in the general run of stocks. Some specialties like St. Lawrence Flour and Quebec Railway worked higher, but the steel leaders were off a little.

The distinguishing feature of the market was the buying of Steel of Canada, induced by the strength of the company, as displayed in the recent annual statement. This week it has a three point rise to 60½. This is five points better than the low of a couple of weeks ago. Steel of Canada preferred has also made a good record this year, moving up from 85¼ to 91 on moderate dealings, which from January 1 to date only amount to 316 shares. In view of the splendid earnings recorded, the participating character of the preferred is beginning to be mentioned as a factor. It is frequently overlooked that it participates rateably with the common in any dividends above the 7 per cent preferred rate. That is to say if 8 per cent is paid on the common the preferred would also have to receive the same.

The upward movement in Steel of Canada resulted in what was regarded as a demonstration of sympathy in Dominion Iron, when it rose from 60¼ to 61½, keeping slightly ahead of Steel.

The most striking price change was the rise of 13 points in St. Lawrence Flour in little more than a week on talk of a dividend increase. Quebec Railway also worked up 3 points to 19.

The range of prices for the week was as follows:

MERGERS ARE DEFENDED BY BIG BANKERS

LONDON, April 6.—The policy of banking fusions was defended at recent meetings of shareholders to ratify the amalgamations of Parr's Bank with the London County and Westminster and of the National Provincial Bank of England and the Union of London and Smiths Bank.

Sir Felix Schuster, presiding at the Union of London and Smiths Bank meeting, pointed out that it is not true that "two separate banks can do as much as if they were amalgamated into one" where large amounts are involved and rapidity of decision is essential, and, moreover, that "in the future development of the country and the process of reconstruction that will follow after the war, banking must play a more important part than it has ever done before, and for this reason it is essential that banks should be placed on a strong basis." In this connection, Sir Felix drew attention to the fact that the reserve fund in the Union of London and Smiths Bank amounted to only 32 per cent of the paid-up capital, whereas in the amalgamated bank it will amount to 73 per cent.

As for the suggestion that amalgamations tended to monopoly or to lack of enterprise, he cited the experience of Scotland, where in 1819 there were 36 separate banks, but the number had been reduced to 24 in 1844, 11 in 1877 and 10 in 1890; yet nobody, he said, considers that Scottish banking is less efficient or that competition in any good sense has declined. As against the lament sometimes raised about the disappearance of local private banks, the fact remains, Sir Felix pointed out, that in 1872 there were 2,924 separate bank offices in the United Kingdom, and in 1916 there were 9,367. In the last 35 years the National Provincial Bank's branches and agencies increased from 166 to 459 and those of the Union Bank from 10 to 227, and Sir Felix stated that there will be no reduction now in that respect.

Further banking alliances were foreshadowed by Walter Leaf, presiding at the meeting of the London County and Westminster Bank. He said in part:

"The main public ground on which bank amalgamations have been opposed, so far as I have been able to ascertain, is that they tend to the creation of what is vaguely called a 'money trust,' with a consequent restriction of competition, to the prejudice of customers. If that were to be the result I should myself view such concentrations with more than suspicion. I shall show you presently that our amalgamation at least does not tend in that direction. But I should like to make one preliminary remark. It is commonly supposed in the city—I shall be glad to be corrected if I am wrong, as I have no personal knowledge—that the Government, through the Board of Trade, is actively engaged in the encouragement of combinations—'trusts' is the American name, 'Kartell' the German—in various branches of our great industries, in the belief that in such close unions lies the most effective weapon against foreign competition.

"That there is an immense economy in the working of business on the large scale, and that by such economies business can be most effectively carried on under modern conditions—so much at least is obvious, and may be taken for granted. And is of course, the driving force which has been bringing about the large amalgamations of the last year, alike in shipping, in shipbuilding, in insurance and in banking. Some unification of interest is indispensable, if we are to hold our own after the war. And I do not see on what grounds the banks should be specially deprived of facilities specifically fostered in other important businesses. But for the trust system in its full power a monopoly of the home business is essential.

"Whether such a state of things is desirable in the industrial aspect I do not pretend to say; that is not my province. But I do say most emphatically that, to anything like a financial Kartell, a 'money trust,' I am uncompromisingly opposed. It would, I feel sure, lead to disaster, if for no other reason than because it would inevitably end in one great State bank with entire control of all the finance of the country, and I am sure that the experience we have had of business management by Government departments during the last two years is not such as to lead us to look on such enormous interests, under the control of an amateur bureaucracy as anything but a national catastrophe.

"The problem before us, then, is to see if we cannot obtain the advantages of economy by extension without the dangers of monopoly—a monopoly which can only mean State control. Consolidation must come; the public interest is that it should come in a way which should lead to a group of banks of approximately equal power, stimulated by a competition which will keep them alert as well as strong and ever on the lookout for their own interests, which, in these circumstances, will be intimately bound up with those of the State. For their own interests, as against their competitors, can only demand every facility to their customers and the furtherance, by every means in their power, of British trade alike at home and abroad. That is the national function in which the banks serve the State.

"The real danger of a money trust lies, I am sure, in the possibility that one bank might, by extension of its connections, obtain such a position that the facilities it would be able to offer to its customers would inevitably act as a magnet to attract a quite preponderant command of trade finance. We have all learned the meaning of peaceful penetration, and we are on our guard lest by our failure to meet the needs of the day we find our own business being sucked dry. Competition between banks must be kept alive, and not undermined, and it is in the spirit of this policy that we ask you to approve the step which we have taken in the common interests of the shareholders, our customers, and the country. We are not aiming at a reduction, but at an increase, of competition. I can assure you that since I have been concerned with banking competition between banks has never been so keen as it is today. We are not afraid of competition—it is a good thing for everybody; but it is essential that we should provide ourselves with the means to make it effective.

PRODUCTION OF SILVER CONTINUES ON BIG SCALE

Special to The Star.

COBALT, Ont., April 6.—The production of silver from the Cobalt camp during March approximated upwards of 1,500,000 ounces. The average price of silver during the month was 88.4 cents per ounce. In the majority of cases, the mining companies were able to receive about two cents per ounce in advance of the official market quotations and it is estimated at least an average of 90 cents per ounce was received for the product. The March output, therefore had a value of well over $1,300,000.

The Kerr Lake is maintaining its big yield of around 7,000 ounces per day and all sources of ore appear to be continuing, keeping pace with development work. The Kerr Lake company have dropped their option on the Mondeau group of claims in the Boston Creek district.

The Coniagas is producing silver at a rate slightly over 100,000 ounces per month. Ore reserves, including old tailings and slimes are estimated at upwards of 5,000,000, thereby constituting approximately four years reserves. On its Ankerite and Maidens-McDonald property in Porcupine the Coniagas is meeting with very satisfactory results, the shaft now being 300 feet with commercial ore continuing.

A special report is being made on the outlook at the Temiskaming mine around which considerable controversy recently centred, and the control of which passed from Frank C. Cullen to J. P. Bickell interests. The new report is being made by Alfred R. Whitman, one of the best geologists of the country. It is understood Mr. Whitman holds out considerable hope for encountering ore on the Temiskaming. Unofficial reports are in circulation to the effect that the Temiskaming may soon acquire control of the Kirkland-Porphyry.

The Nipissing report soon to be issued will show the year 1917 to have been one of the most profitable in the history of that company. It is expected, however, a slight decline in ore reserves will be shown. The decline will probably be offset by the higher price of silver. Last year ore reserves were estimated at about 9,000,000. During 1917 between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 ounces of silver were produced. Considerable new ore was opened up and in the north it is expected reserves will be in the neighborhood of 8,000,000 ounces.

Encouragement is being met with at the Violet property of the La Rose company. Reports of consistent high grade values, however, appear to be exaggerations. The development has the appearance of being more or less important. At least it is very interesting. Until further work is done it can scarcely be said to be a new source of revenue to the La Rose.

HOLLINGER'S POSITION.

PORCUPINE, Ont.—The Hollinger Consolidated with upwards of $1,250,000 in its treasury, made a profit of around $550,000 during the first quarter of the current year. During the last month of 1917 the company's profit amounted to only $111,000. It is estimated the March profits were not far under $246,000, the amount requisite to pay one per cent every four weeks. With the treasury in strong condition, and earnings running high, and increasing every month, the Hollinger is expected to resume dividend disbursements within the next couple of months, or so.

The Dome Mines have not yet announced any change in their policy. Last fall it was officially intimated milling operations might be resumed this spring. Considerable ore is already broken down ready for milling.

The McIntyre-Porcupine has about concluded working option arrangements with the Newray interests for control of the latter property. The property will be explored on a comprehensive scale. Meantime on the McIntyre property the work of carrying operations below the 1000-foot level has commenced. The main drive along the 1,400-foot level now is several hundred feet over on the Jupiter section of the property and will connect up the two workings within the next month or so.

At the Porcupine V. N. T. drifting toward the Thompson-Krist is proceeding at the 400-foot level. Also development work is being carried on at the 600-foot level with encouraging results.

KIRKLAND LAKE, ONT.

In the Kirkland Lake camp the Tough-Oakes is increasing production and is wiping out the operating loss of 1917. The Lake Shore and the Teck Hughes are both producing. There appears to be a probability of the Kirkland Lake Gold Mines, Limited, being reopened this spring.

In the new prospect fields of Fort Matachewan and Lightning River considerable interest is being shown and enthusiasm seems comparatively keen.

DYE TRADE IS SCORING AN ADVANCE

LONDON, April 6.—A striking view of the great development of the dye industry under war conditions was given at the annual meeting of the Bradford Dyers' Association by Milton S. Sharp, chairman of the board of directors.

In citing the need for co-operative action in Great Britain, Mr. Sharp pointed out that all the German color and chemical works and allied branches of trade had been combined in one organization, with a capital of £57,000,000. In the United States, he added, £35,000,000 had been invested in the dye industry. To meet the competition certain to come, he advocated aid by the British Government and co-operation on the part of the great gas and alkali companies.

An important private company has been registered under the title of the British Cellulose and Chemical Manufacturing Parent Company, with a capital of £8,500,000. It is understood that the concern is prepared to spend £5,000,000 on the construction of works.

The board of directors includes Herbert McGowan of Nobel's Explosives, Sir Trevor Dawson of Vickers, Ltd., and Grant Morden of the Canada Steamship Lines. Mr. McGowan recently joined the board of Levinsteins, Ltd., which company it is rumored, is about to merge with the British Dyes Company.

It is also reported that Brunner-Mond and Castner-Kellner, both chemical manufacturers, together with certain gas companies, are regarded as desirable co-operators with dye firms, including the Bradford Dyers' Association, acting together with explosives manufacturers to contend against German chemical competition after the war.

It is believed that important schemes are under consideration, not necessarily involving complete mergers, but certainly a fusion of interests.

Judging from the latest developments in the British and American dye manufacturing the Hun can say goodbye to his extensive markets in those countries after the war.

The story of how dependents on German dyes set to work to conquer the deficiency after 1914 is now an old story.

The growth of the industry in England may be inferred from the following cable:

"It is understood that fusion negotiations are under way between the British Dyes Company, which is Government supported, and Levenstein's, whose dye works have increased enormously since the war began. The latter's ten pound shares, which were almost unsalable four years ago, are now quoted at 120. The merger is considered a desirable one, as strengthening the industry against post-bellum competition. Additional capital is required. American dye interests have made rapid strides stating in a circular:

"A few statistics from the department of Commerce records will show the rapid development of the dye industry in the United States since 1914. In that year American manufactured dyes were valued at $16,000,000, whereas in 1917 the dyes produced in the United States were valued at $32,000,000. These figures prove conclusively the field which German dyes had on the American field. But besides this remarkable growth in three years, whereby we have increased our production to meet our own demands, we have built up an export trade with allied and neutral countries amounting to $16,000,000 during the past year.

"This wonderful growth of the dye industry adds another link to the chain of products that is helping to make the United States entirely self-contained and independent of any other nation."

One manufacturer says: "Today we are using a Bismarck Brown of our own manufacture that has all of the good qualities of the imported brand and is costing us less than when we purchased from German manufacturers."

WINTER WHEAT PROMISES 565 MILLION BUSHELS; SEEDING NEWS FAVORABLE

By Joseph F. Pritchard, regular correspondent of The Montreal Star on the Chicago Board of Trade.

CHICAGO, April 6.—A winter wheat crop of 565,000,000 bushels is promised, compared with a harvest of 418,000,000 bushels last year.

The B. W. Snow crop report, which has just been made public, placed the April 1 condition of winter wheat at 79.3, against an official return of the same figures last December and an April condition of 63.4 last year. The average decline between December 1 and April 1 for the past ten years has been 5.7.

This season there has been a very marked improvement in all the winter wheat territory east of the Missouri river but a sharp loss of prospects has occurred in Nebraska and Oklahoma since December, and there has also been a small decline in Kansas and Texas, which at least partially offsets the good improvement elsewhere. Since these local returns were made widespread and fairly satisfactory rains have been experienced in the southwest, so that the actual prospects at this date is doubtless better than these conditional figures would indicate. Average winter kill is the smallest reported in many years. Based upon previous experience, the present condition of the winter wheat and the crop prospects are much better than at this time last year.

The present season is much earlier than normal and oats seeding is under almost perfect weather and soil conditions. This work has been largely completed as far north as northern central Illinois and central Iowa. Because of labor shortage, farmers have taken advantage of the opportunities to seed a crop which requires no labor for cultivation and the oats acreage therefore shows a material increase over that of last year. The crop is reported as up with a good stand as far north as Southern Illinois and Central Missouri.

P. S. Goodman, a local statistician, makes the condition of winter wheat 82.4 against the Government's 79.3 in December and 63.4 last April. Rains in the southwest have improved prospects since the reports were made up. Allowing for an average abandonment, the condition in acreage suggests 650,000,000 bushels to 700,000,000 bushels winter wheat crop on continued favorable weather. A large spring wheat acreage will be seeded. The oats acreage seeded and contemplated is reported at an increase of 4 p.c., suggesting the total of 45,000,000 acres, or 1,500,000 acres larger than last year.

Speculation in corn and oats has varied. The latter has been spasmodic while in the former the business on the whole was confined to local professionals and it was lighter than for several previous weeks. It is expected that, however, with the new mode of trading in corn, there will be a big improvement in the volume of business as it will be more attractive to the outsider as well as to the room trading element.

Canadian advices are quite favorable for a large increase in the crops in that country. Spring weather prevails and seeding is being pushed with a large area ready for the crops with further efforts now being made to increase this. It is expected that the total acreage will exceed last year by more than 10 per cent, and that this will be made up mainly in the prairie provinces. The shortage of labor there has been at least partially overcome by the use of Government-loaned tractors. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Great Northern report conditions surrounding the grain situation as never as favorable at this season as now.

STATES USED MOST RUBBER PRODUCED

A compilation by The National City Bank of New York discussing world and United States consumption of India rubber in the last decade shows that while world production increased from 49,000 tons in 1907 to 257,000 tons in 1917, United States consumption grew from 30,000 tons in 1907 to 182,000 tons in 1917. World production quadrupled in the ten year period and United States consumption sextupled in the same time. In 1917 the United States took 44 per cent of the world's output, and in 1917 71 per cent. A billion dollars of American money has been sent to other parts of the world in the decade ending with 1917 for the purchase of the 700,000 tons of rubber brought into the United States in that period, in part from Brazil, but chiefly in recent years from the Orient.

The bank's statement shows that the world's output of "plantation" rubber has increased from 1,000 tons in 1907 to 204,000 tons in 1917, while meantime the "wild" rubber output of the world decreased some 68,000 tons in 1907 to 53,000 tons in 1917. It was only a decade ago that the rubber plantations established in the Orient by European capital about 1900, came into "bearing" condition, the world's output of plantation rubber having been in 1900 but 4 tons, in 1905 145 tons; 1907, 1,000 tons, and from that on a very rapid increase showing for 1917 204,348 tons according to the latest estimates of the highest world authorities. Meantime Brazilian rubber, produced from forests, showed little change in the quantity produced, the production in 1907 having been 38,000 tons, and in 1917 35,870 tons, according to the estimate of the highest authorities. The other producers of forest rubber, chiefly Central America, Mexico and the Congo Valley, have reduced their output from about 30,000 tons in 1907 to 19,000 tons in 1917, leaving the United States more and more dependent upon the plantations of the Orient. As a result the importation into the United States of plantation rubber from the Orient has grown from about 33,000 tons in 1914 to approximately 150,000 tons in 1917, although we have in the meantime continued to take a very large proportion of the rubber output of our South and Central American neighbors. Plantation rubber now forms about 80 per cent of the world's rubber output.

Rubber imports into the United States in the calendar year 1917 were the largest in the history of that trade, both in quantity and value, the quantity imported for consumption having been approximately 182,000 tons, against 117,000 tons in 1916, the former high record year, and the value in 1917 $333,000,000 against $160,000,000 in 1916. Meantime exportation of manufactures of rubber has grown from $7,000,000 a decade ago to $35,000,000 in 1917, while also reexported in crude form nearly $6,000,000 worth of the rubber imported in 1917.

FOOD CONTROL KEPT PRICES REASONABLE

"The feature of 1917," says the London Economist, "was an ever-increasing interference with and control of commodity prices, especially foodstuffs, by the Government, in spite of which the general level has risen a good deal. It will be seen, however, that cereals and meat actually show a slight decline for the year; prices tumbled down in the late summer, as the chart clearly shows, on the institution of the nine-penny loaf, and controlled beef and mutton quotations. But even this group was creeping up again before the end of the year.

"Subsidiary foodstuffs rose sharply in the period in which cereals and meat fell, but declined again towards the close of the year. The most sensational movement of 1917 was that of textile prices, and was due very largely to the remarkable happenings in the cotton markets. Minerals as a whole (many of the markets being, of course, under official control) ended the year only a trifle higher, while the miscellaneous group was almost always moving upward, and finished 20 per cent higher on the year.

"It is plain to all students of the economic position that, however, numerous the faults of bureaucratic domination, drastic and ever-increasing Governmental control has alone prevented the prices of many prominent commodities from soaring to fantastic heights."

The Catholic School Commissioners of Montreal have been faced with the necessity of providing additional accommodation for the students seeking admission to their schools and are appealing to the citizens to assist them in this most desirable effort by buying their bonds as an investment.

They are offering $2,500,000 six per cent bonds of two maturities. One block of $1,500,000 will mature in five years and the remaining $1,000,000 in two years.

The flotation is being handled by La Banque d'Hochelaga at their different branches where subscriptions may be handed in.

GENERAL C. DUPONT IS HEAD

NEW YORK, April 6. — General Coleman Dupont was today elected President of the Industrial Finance Corporation, which is the organizer and chief stockholder of the Morris plan banks in the U.S. He will be active in the affairs of the corporation.

NEXT WINTER'S COAL; LAY IN STOCK EARLY

WASHINGTON, April 6. — The fuel administration is making a persistent drive to have consumers lay in coal for next winter now. In spite of publicity, however, opinion is still prevalent that full supplies should not be put in householders' cellars early in the season.

This widespread opinion resulted from publication of advices to that effect last year by other governmental agencies than the fuel administration, which did not come into being until much later in the season. Fuel Administrator Garfield has repeatedly denied that he ever issued instructions against purchases for domestic purposes, but his efforts to correct the misapprehension are having slow results. Letters continue to come from all parts of the country asking whether the rules against "hoarding" have been withdrawn and expressing desire to put in the domestic coal supply now if there are no regulations to prevent.

National Coal Association has taken steps to co-operate with fuel administration in stimulating early domestic ordering and thus giving impetus to production. One of its representatives will spend the present week in New York organizing a movement for greater publicity. Special attention will be given smaller papers throughout the country, whereby necessity for early ordering will be brought to the notice of consumers who might otherwise fail to be reached, with the idea of keeping the mines working at full capacity and preventing transportation congestion and a possibility of fuel famine in any section next winter.

COTTON $1 PER POUND

BOSTON, Mass., April 6.—Nine thousand bales of long staple Egyptian cotton, valued around $4,500,000, or nearly a dollar a pound, was being unloaded here today for delivery to New England importers. It was the second large shipment to reach this port since July. The ship also brought 220 tons of gum, which put the total value of the cargo well above $6,000,000.

Dealers said the cotton cost considerably more than the last previous shipment because of the steadily advancing prices and higher rates for ship space and insurance.

RECORD MILK PRODUCTION

SACRAMENTO, Cal., April 6. — Raphaella Johanna Aggie, a Holstein in the service of California at the Napa, state hospital, has broken the world's record for milk production in thirty days, it was announced here today by the State Board of Control. Her record was 3,974 pounds or 1,817 quarts in a month. The previous high figure for thirty days is said to have been 3,767 pounds. The production of the cow at current prices would total $308, for the month.

URGE CATTLE EMBARGO BE LIFTED IN ENGLAND

There is at present considerable agitation in England to have repealed those laws which prohibit the importation of Canadian cattle for other than the purposes of slaughter. There have been several debates in Parliament, and a diversity of opinion represented. While it is strongly urged that the embargo be lifted on the one hand, others state there is no feeling in Canada for its removal. It is necessary, it is said, that before definite action be taken, all agricultural societies in Great Britain be consulted as to their disposition on the subject. The Duke of Marlborough, who desires the lifting of the embargo, said, replying to Mr. Prothero, who first brought up the question:—"It was held that since 1896 when the embargo was laid none of the Canadian cattle had been infected with disease. Mr. Prothero never gave a pledge that because stores were required in this country they must be imported from Canada. The conclusion to which the Government had come was that so far as contagious disease was concerned there was no justification for their refusing to allow Canadian stores born and bred in Canada from coming to this country. In the opinion of the Board of Agriculture, supported by the representatives of Canada and fortified by our own veterinary experts, Canadian cattle were entirely free from disease. No promise had been made to Canada that the entry of Canadian cattle to this country would be permitted, but no change could take place before the Act of 1896 was repealed."

GERMAN STRATEGY AND METHOD IN THE SECOND BATTLE OF THE SOMME :::: By FRANK H. SIMONDS

The first phase of the second battle of the Somme came to an unmistakable pause in the night of Wednesday March 27. The extreme points of German advance there were Albert on the north and Montdidier on the south. Such fighting as followed through the next few days was purely local. The first German blow had spent its force and pending the delivery of a second, there was necessary a period of rest and reorganization to the assailant, who had moved thirty five miles in seven days over torn and devastated country and in the presence of a hard fighting foe.

In these first seven days German strategy and German method as applied to the greatest offensive of the war were fully disclosed and it is possible now to discuss in some detail the fashion in which the latest of all the western operations resembled and differed from the other but less considerable attacks of both groups of nations on the west and on the east front, alike.

First of all it is essential to examine the recent attack in its relation to past efforts and to endeavor to indicate in what manner it proved or disproved the conclusions which had been based on the experience of the other great attempts to break through an entrenched front and transform a war of position into a war of manoeuvre.

A FEW STILL HOPED FOR VICTORY.

The majority of British and French military experts were agreed, as a result of the experience of the Germans at Verdun in 1916, of the French at the Aisne in 1917 and the British at the Somme in 1916 and in Flanders in 1917 that an actual break through of an enemy's position and a return to a war of movement was, if not impossible, yet so unlikely as to make it unwise, given the approximate equality of the numbers of the two forces in the west, to undertake such a gigantic and expensive venture. There was always however, a school in both countries who still believed, despite the failure of Vivelle in April, 1917, that an attack, given adequate artillery preparation, lacking at the Aisne, and made on a sufficiently wide front, might produce the great result so often sought.

Hitherto in all great offensives in the west, Allied and German, alike, the break-through, where there has been one, has been on so narrow a front as to permit the army, whose position was pierced to destroy the spearhead of the advancing foe by concentrated artillery fire from all adjoining points in the line and behind it.

In the first great offensive venture of the war, of positions, that of Champagne in 1915, a brigade of French troops got clear through the German line, but was destroyed after its initial success. The conclusion drawn from this experience, which stood thereafter, was that an attack on a narrow front inevitably results in a steady constriction of the assailant's advancing forces, so that, to take the Champagne example, an attack on an eighteen miles front ended in the penetration by a small force on a front of less than a mile.

After Champagne two ideas are found in major offensives. The first had been expressed by the Germans at the Dunajec, before Champagne where it succeeded and at Verdun after Champagne, where it failed. This was the idea of concentration of guns and men on a narrow front but with such a weight of artillery as to destroy completely all the positions of the enemy in the bombarded sector. The second idea was expressed by the British and French at the Somme, where it failed and again in the Arres and Aisne offensives the following year, where is again failed. This was the idea of an attack upon a front sufficiently wide to give promise that the break, if there were one, would be too wide to be covered by rear and flank fire of artillery.

At the Dunajec the German artillery preparation was concentrated on a front of hardly more than seven miles, the Russian defences were destroyed, and the Germans poured through the gap and began their amazing invasion, which did not end for months, and covered several hundred miles. But at Verdun, with an even heavier artillery concentration, the advance was checked in less than five miles by the concentration of French artillery fire from the batteries and positions flanking the seven miles front which had been broken in. After a week the Germans had to give over the attack on this narrow front and undertake to widen their gap by reducing the flanking defences on Dead Man's Hill, and at Fort de Vaux, and while they were doing this the French had time to recover from the first shock of the onset.

Influenced by the Verdun experience, the British and the French at the Somme, in 1916, planned to attack on a front of some twenty-five miles. But the artillery preparation of the British was insufficient, and on more than half of front on which the British attacked they were held ou before the first German line, while on the balance of their front, they only penetrated the first line. The French south of the Somme, made a long leap forward, but they were checked because their wedge was too narrow, and was further blocked by the Somme River, before Peronne.

The next year the British and French sought to apply their own and the German experiences. They selected two widely separated fronts about Arras and along the Aisne, with the idea that the German reserves would be held before each point, and there would be no concentration of all reserves upon one danger point, as had happened at the Somme and in Champagne. But this time, although the French attacked upon a very wide front, and the French attack was the main thrust, their artillery preparation was inadequate, and they were halted by their terrific losses with only local gains.

A CHANGE IN TACTICS.

After this the French definitely renounced the grand offensive. Petain, who succeeded Nivelle, limited his efforts to a series of admirably successful local operations for fixed objectives, which enabled him to inflict material losses and take useful positions, without suffering heavy losses. The three offensives which unblocked Verdun, and the drive up from the Aisne to the Ailette before Laon were examples of this local offensives for a limited objective.

The British, on their part, stuck to the older idea for the rest of the year, making a series of attacks upon a relatively wide front on the Flanders sector, but they suffered losses far greater than those of Nivelle at the Aisne, and their gains were only local. They set out to clear the Belgian coast of the Germans before winter came. They ended some six miles north of their starting place, having lost upwards of half a million in casualties without achieving any major advantage, although they took many important positions.

Meantime, the Germans, in their attack at the Upper Isonzo, went back to the old idea of the Dunajec and Verdun, and drove a wedge through the Italians, a very thin wedge, and then thrust their troops through this wedge and threatened the rear and communications of all the Italian armies from the Upper Isonzo to the sea. This offensive exactly recalled the Mackensen operation in 1915, but it was largely aided by the disorganization within the Italian army.

THE ONLY UNTRIED PLAN.

In al this time only one experiment had not been made, namely, the wide atack upotn a single sector, the concentration of all effort on one front, but the delivery of an attack upon a very wide front. The British and French attacks at the Aisne and Arras had been, combined, on a front of at least fifty miles, but they were far apart. Despite many arguments neither High Command had ventured to stake all its reserves and resources upon a relatively restricted area on the western front. Yet there were those who argued that thus and only thus, could there be a real break through.

Now this is exactly what the Germans did two weeks ago. They chose the fifty miles of front between the Scarpe near Arras and the Oise in front of La Fere, as their objective. They concentrated against the whole length of this front a reserve of artillery unequalled in the war. Thither they brought all their own and the Austrian heavy guns from Russia, all the heavy and light guns captured from the Italians, and the Russians, and with these guns they prepared to demolish the British lines on this whole front. They undertook to do on a fifty mile front what they had accomplished on a seven mile front at the Dunajec, with great subsequent profit, and at Verdun with only local gain.

The German reasoning was clear, they believed that if the British line could be overwhelmed over a front of fifty miles, it would be impossible for the troops on either side of the gap to extend around the break and rejoin and it would be equally impossible for the artillery behind the British line to close so wide a gap, as German artillery had closed the gap in Champagne in 1915. In a word, the German High Command believed that with sufficient guns and with a willingness to pay the first frightful costs in casualties the British line could be definitely broken on a fifty mile front.

BRITISH DEFENCES DEMOLISHED.

The events of the first two days of the Second Battle of the Somme proved the justice of German reasoning. From the edge of the old Arras battlefield north of the Cambrai-Bapaume-Albert road to the Oise opposite La Fere, the British lines, the whole British trench system, was destroyed by the artillery preparation, or so weakened that the infantry, when it attacked was able to penetrate in irresistible numbers and to reach open ground behind on a front of more than thirty miles. By Friday, March 22, the whole British first line was gone, from the vicinity of Arras, right down to the Oise. The gap, which the Germans had planned to create had been created and at least 750,000 troops were pressing through it.

It will be a matter of months and of expert analysis to disclose all the various circumstances and details of the German method, in their opening attack, which succeeded on March 21 and 22, but, in the large, it is to be recognized as the application of all the lessons of all the other offensives. None of the miscalculations which wrecked all other such undertakings on the western front, both Allied and German, were made this time. The artillery preparation was complete and perfect, the front attacked was sufficiently wide. Nowhere did the British defence persist and hold up the whole front. The thing that all Commanders and General Staffs have dreamed of accomplishing in trench warfare since the beginning, was accomplished by Hindenburg and Ludendorff in the first two days of the Second Somme.

But, in addition to breaking through, the Germans had carefully thought out the advantages which were to be acquired, once the penetration had been accomplished. They had chosen to attack upon the front where the British and French lines met. The Oise was the point of contact. Thus, when the British line collapsed for some thirty miles between Scarpe and the Oise, the Germans were ready with huge forces to push straight into the gap and effect a permanent separation of the two armies.

In a word, German strategy, looking to the time when they should break the British trench lines was strangely reminiscent of Napoleonic strategy in the Waterloo campaign, not in detail, but in conception. Napoleon's plan had been to interpose between the British and Prussian armies, defeat either the British or the Prussian, before the army attacked could be aided by its ally. He did interpose between Wellington and Bluecher and he did defeat Bluecher at Ligny. But Bluecher subsequently succeeded in coming to Wellington's aid at the crucial moment at Waterloo and Napoleon was routed.

Now the Germans sought to drive immense forces right into the gap that had opened between British and French armies, widen the gap as they advanced, take Amiens and then roll the British army back to the north upon the coast and away from the French armies and also away from their own bases at Havre and Rouen. And from Friday, March 22, to the following Wednesday night, when the French halted the thrust outside and west of Montdidier, the Germans were between the British and the French.

In exactly the same way, although this is a minor detail, by comparison, the Germans sought to separate sections of the British armies, isolating and overwhelming them, by interposing between these and the main forces and General Maurice, Director of military operations, has reported that on Saturday March 22, and on the following Monday this almost happened, first north of Bapaume and then west of the Bapaume-Albert road on the old battlefield of the Somme. In both instances the Germans were north and south of considerable British forces, threatening their front, their flanks and reaching for their rear with the purpose of surrounding and exterminating them and thus breaking the British line into fragments.

Friday morning, March 22, the French line ended at the Oise, below la Fere, but thence north for thirty or forty miles, the British line was in confusion and there was no longer any contact between the British and the French lines. Then began an operation recalling that other famous manoeuvre of September and October, 1914, which lives as the "Race to the Sea." The French were called upon, while extending their own front south of the Oise, in order to prevent the Germans from turning their flank, to endeavor to get troops in front of the Germans north and west of the Oise and join hands with the British, thus closing the gap between the two armies. They succeeded in doing this on Wednesday night and at Montdidier, or just outside of it, but in this time, the Germans had got thirty-five miles west of their starting place at St. Quentin.

How the German strategy had conceived that, once a gap between the British and the French had been opened, then the advance of the victors would be so rapid that there never could be a reunion between the two ends of the Allied armies. When this re-union did occur, at Montididier on March 27th, the only chance of immediate and complete German victory was to break down the grip of the two armies, before it had become fast. This explained the severe fighting from Montdidier north to Albert in all the next few days. But from Wednesday to Monday the grip held and there was no further considerable German push westward.

Go backward to the "Race to the Sea" and the parallel illustrates. Then the French and British armies were pushing rapidly to the north toward the sea, facing German armies which were doing the same, meanwhile a Belgian army was coming south along the coast toward Nieuport followed by a stronger German army. The problem then was whether or not the Germans could interpose between the two Allied forces and prevent their flanks meeting to form a solid front from the Sea to Switzerland. The Belgians, the British and the French were able to join hands about Ypres and form the line Then, because the line was very thin the Germans sought to break it, and almost succeeded in the desperate battle of Ypres.

If you think of the German method and strategy in its larger aspects as confined to two purposes, first to break a hole fifty miles wide in the British front, where it touched the French and, then driving great masses through this hope to separate the British and the French permanently and drive the British northward and away from the French, you have the thing in its simplest form. After six days the French and British joined hands in front of the German wedge and it was stopped. To effect this reunion was the main purpose of Allied strategy.

By the time the Allies had restored the continuity of their line, the Germans had advanced so fast and so far, outrunning their heavy guns, and munitions, that they were unable to break the thin line, which held the two ends of the Allied lines together. From Wednesday to Monday they tried this incessantly, but only with local success and, meantime, the French reserves continued to flow up and the line of the Allies at the danger point grew thicker and thicker. But so great a demand was made on Allied reserves that no counter offensive was immediately possible.

In all this time local geographical objectives had little concern for the German. He was not seeking to capture any particular city or height. Even Amiens was important only because, if he arrived at Amiens, he would be on the flank of all the British armies and threatening their vital communications and their rear and if he got to Amiens first the rupture of allied lines would be permanent.

The German was out to destroy the British armies or, at the least, to deal them such a blow that they would be pushed back upon the coast north of the Somme, crippled for a long period of time and, even if they escaped supreme disaster, put out of the running for the campaign. Once this were done he could turn his attention to the French, whose flank would be exposed all the way to Paris, or he could contain the French and continue his blows upon the beaten British. The decision as between the British and the French armies, he could let wait upon the moment when the two were separated and the condition of the British disclosed.

In this First Phase of the Second Battle of the Somme the French played the part with respect to the British ally that the Prussians had played at Waterloo, although without a preliminary defeat such as Blucher endured at Ligny. They came up on the British flank and joined hands with their allies in front of the enemy, temporarily destroying the fruits of his success in the opening stage in interposing between his two enemies, as Napoleon's were destroyed by Blucher's great march from Havre to Plancenoit. As a result the Germans did not succeed in the first phase and with the opening attack in separating the armies of their two foes. They did not get Amiens, although they were stopped hardly more than ten miles from the city. But the Waterloo parallel stops abruptly at this point:

After the first ten days of the struggle there was no longer any real doubt as to the success of the Allies in restoring a continuous front, thereafter the real problem was which of the two contestants could make the necessary concentration of guns and men on the new front to enable him to make the next move. For the French and British won this race, a counteroffensive on one or both the exposed flanks of the German seemedlikely. If the German won, he might resume his drive for Amiens and seek by a new push to interrupt the junction between the armies of his enemies. But this is the problem for the future.

What I have tried to set forth here is how the Germans at least solved the greatest riddle of western warfare and broke through the enemy's trench lines, thus restoring the war of movement. They did it by the extreme care with which they laid their guns and made their artillery preparation by the wonderful training of their shock troops and by an entire indifference to losses.

But although the Germans were able to solve the riddle and break though on a wide front and although they were able to restore the old-fashioned war of movement, they did not last more than a week and the positional warfare was resumed almost at the western end of the old battlefield of the Somme. As I write this article on April 1, the new problem is raised as to whether the Germans can repeat their initial success after new preparation or whether, as at Verdun, the Somme and in Flanders, the defender, having full knowledge of his foe's objective and adequate time to make a counter-concentration, will be able to preserve the war of positions, henceforth.

COMMISSION FOR HALIFAX RELIEF MAY BE POWERFUL

Bill Proposed Would Hand City Over to That Organization

2,000 DEATH ROLL IN BIG DISASTER

Civic Government is Subject of Much Comment Just Now

Special to The Star.

HALIFAX, April 6—This is rumored to be the most English city in Canada. Probably it is. Grumbling is said to be the distinguished characteristic of the English. If so, Halifax is much more English than they. Everybody finds fault with everybody and everything else here. It is an end, not a means, for no one seems willing to undertake the responsibility and trouble of making improvements.

This is our special season for grumbling. The winter of our discontent is now made uproarious by spring. The season of civic elections is at hand. There are mud, east winds and the immutable train service, all the elements of a discontent which makes that of winter, looking backwards, appear to have been a wanton flying in the face of a genial and bountiful Providence.

MUNICIPAL GROUNDS.

The chief of our present discontents, the main source of all our past ones, and the promising base of supply. If these which are to come is the city government. I would spell it with capitals if I did not know that by so doing I should wound the feelings of so many deserving citizens, who believe that it should only be mentioned in the smallest possible letters.

It is not much of a government, I am bound to admit, indeed, like the curate's bride, it is a poor thing, but it is all our own. It is ours because we made it. We made it out of our own heads a few years ago, after a pattern which happened to be fashionable at the time. It was "up-to-date." Some other places had it, and not to imitate them would have been to show lack of enterprise, in the minds of our "progressives." So we got it—in the neck.

JOYS OF THE PAST.

Before that, we had had a fairly decent city council, elected by wards and presided over by a mayor chosen by the city at large. It was not an ideal institution, because most of the elements of the ideal were lacking in its composition. Time was, when public-spirited citizens had occupied seats in it, not for their own, but for the city's good; but ward politicians had gradually eliminated then as cumberers of the ground.

Still, the new civic statesmen were more or less level-headed and desirous of doing what they could, for themselves, if not for the city. They were not paid for their services. They never took to boodling, so their only hope of reward lay in doing their best. This they mostly did, and were constantly grumbled at for their pains; and while they were ardently at work there was always a chance of "something coming their way," which kept them fairly well up to the mark.

THE BOARD OF CONTROL.

Finally the grumbling at the old council reached a crisis. Then the Board of Trade — we have a Board of Trade in Halifax, but that is another story. In short, legislation was procured which saddled us with a Board of Control in addition to the mayor and alderman. A Board of Control, in the case of Halifax, is a quartette of paid persons who get beyond all control as soon as they are elected, and stay so until they are rejected and ejected. But they have been well worth their keep, so far, because of a pleasure which a majority have found in denouncing them, and the joy which a minority have got out of saying "I told you so."

BOARD MAY GO.

At present their existence is threatened by the very powers which created them. It seems a pity, for they have appeared to enjoy their brief but full span of life.

The span of one of them is alleged by those who do not love him to have been all too "full" just after the great explosion which sent the veil in the city hall, behind which the Prohibition inspector had moderately concealed the fruits of his virtuous deeds lest they should lead to misdeeds. Through the self-sacrificing activities of this single controller much temptation is said to have been removed from the path of others who might have discovered the broken door of the city hall booze depository — not repository. But a man does not need to be a controller to help in this good work in Halifax.

The city hall may be, and possibly is the temporary home of the spirits of first men not yet made quite perfect, but it is no abiding place for spirits which in the former days of the flesh and the devil were sold by the glass.

A CHINESE VARIETY.

Even Chinese whisky with a real live snake imported for the purpose and all ready for dissolution in it with a view to denaturing it for medicinal purposes, has been known to take itself wings and flee away from the police station beyond the reach even of a stomach pump. What queer, untutored, unprohibition-like and vain ideas the heathen Chinese can entertain under the spot where his pigtail used to grow! Who but he could imagine, the denaturing whisky by adding there another snake, instead of inventing a means of extracting the snakes from it? But perhaps the Chinese genius runs to homeopathy—the cure of like by like.

UNEVENTFUL LESSON.

The local Legislature is again in session after a short Easter vacation. The present session, which is now drawing to a close has been an uneventful one. It was hoped, for a time, that it might be able to prorogue before Easter.

The Legislative Assembly has not nearly its full complement of members. A number resigned to contest Federal seats in the recent general elections. No writs have been issued for the filling of any of these vacancies. In consequence, many of the "voices" of preceding sessions have been stilled, so far as Nova Scotia is concerned; and the public is making even a more rapid recovery than could have been expected. They were such vociferous "voices," and so unflagging!

The new leader of the Opposition, Mr. Hall, of Queen's, is not a talker for talk's sake. He has already done the Legislature and the country high service by simply being his own quiet, intelligent, self-respecting and well-mannered self. The Assembly has been getting through its work in a business like way without vain wrangling or silly obstruction of any kind. The relief and gratitude of the country is pathetic.

THAW BRINGS GRUESOME SIGHTS.

The unprecedented deep snow of the past winter, which began falling the day after the great explosion, has at last all but disappeared. In going, it uncovbred some gruesome sights. Bodies of men, women and children were found lying where they had fallen. Over them the busy traffic of the street had ben flowing for months. They have not only been found but identified, thus extinguishing the last spark of hope in hearts still buoyed, perhaps, by the lingering expectations always associated with the word "missing." Almost every day of late has witnessed the recovery of the bodies of additional victims of the disaster. The number killed is now definitely known to have been not far from two thousand, the highest estimate made immediately after the disaster, which was then generally believed to be a gross exaggeration. Steadily the list has increased and keeps on growing. The property loss has at last been officially estimated by the Relief Commission at twenty-five million dollars.

TRADE FIGURES GOOD.

The figures of the trade of Halifax for the year of 1917, which have recently been published, tell a significant story of great business and industrial activity. A few of the more important items may be worth noting, in round numbers of values: Exports, $142,000,000; imports, $10,000,000; Customs receipts, $2,500,000; building permits, $900,000; manufactured products, $22,000,000; Post Office receipts, $1,800,000; bank clearings, $152,000,000; civic assessment, $38,000,000. The freight handled was 1,700,000. The shipping tonnage of the port was 17,100,000.

The outlook of the present year is for a considerable increase in all respects. The increase in building will, of course, be enormous. The work of reconstruction is about to begin.

RELIEF WORK CONTINUES.

The Relief Commission is working hard and apparently to good purpose. It is at present seeking incorporation through the local Legislature; and, incidentally is asking for powers which have rather taken the public breath away. Perhaps, should it obtain some of the powers which it desires, it might make a wiser and better use of them than the city authorities. Still, citizens usually prefer self-government or even misgovernment to an arrtrary dictatorship in their local affairs.

WIDE POWERS FOR COMMISSION

The Bill to incorporate the Commission authorizes the Commission to carry on its work almost with a free hand, without regard to the views or rights either of citizens or civic authorities. It enables the Commission to replan the "devastated area" almost at will, and for that purpose gives it almost unlimited power of expropriation. Moreover, the concluding section of the Bill provides that "the Commission may from time to time describe, delimit and define any part of the city of Halifax or the town of Dalhousie and the county of Halifax as the "devastated area." Should this become law it would, in effect, hand over the whole city and its surroundings to the Commission to be dealt with practically at its pleasure. No doubt the Commission is composed of very excellent gentlemen, but very excellent gentlemen have been known to err when entrusted with unrestricted opportunities.

"KING EDWARD'S" BAD LUCK.

Bad luck is not to be questioned. It is simply this, and many a gambler and many a one who is not a gambler can testify. The King Edward Hotel in this city is called in evidence. It is a comparatively new house, situated opposite North Street Station. It had been in operation only a few years when it was burnt to the ground. There was delay in rebuilding, but it had been restored and re-opened when the great explosion wrecked it and killed some of its inmates. It was temporarily repaired and re-opened. A few days ago a violent explosion in a basement occupied as a store-room by the reconstruction people, killed a man and caused a fire which completely destroyed the building a second time. Guests were rescued with great difficulty. The house was inadequately insured. Two explosions and two fires within so short a space of time is a bad-luck record which it would be hard to beat. A mare's nest of "German spies" was discovered in connection with the fire. It consisted, when investigated, of some Russians, landed from a ship on fire, who were guests at the hotel, and who had in their possession, as a curiosity, the casing of a shell which had been fired, a revolver or two and cartridges for the same. There were no executions.

VANCOUVER MAY SEE JITNEY CAR SERVICE OUSTED

Have Had Long Popularity and Hit Street Railway Hard

B.C. CURIOUS AS TO QUEBEC AND M.S.A.

Opinion That Government is Too Easy with This Province

Special to The Star.

VANCOUVER, B. C., April 6.—The jitney problem is one that has vexed the city council for the past few years, but it is now on a fair way to solution. The auto rivalry to the established street railway system has been more pronounced in Vancouver than in many other cities where dual transportation has been in vogue. The absence of snow and heavy grades, with well paved streets, not only in the city itself, but all the way to New Westminster, a distance of about twelve miles, makes conditions favorable to fast motor traffic the year through.

From the start the jitney was well patronized, many citizens using the new system as a protest against the action of the B.C.E. Railway in doing away with six tickets for a quarter, and establishing a straight five-cent fare with the privilege of transfer. The company was also more or less unpopular because of the feeling that the rates for light and gas were too high. The jitney has never given a transfer, but its extra speed has been a popular favorite from the start.

DRIVERS WELL ORGANIZED.

The men in the business, with Ex-Reeve Kerr, of South Vancouver, as their head, organized themselves into an association, which drew up rules and regulations, assigned routes, arranged protective insurance and otherwise put the industry on a business and permanent basis. It was not long until several hundred machines were being used regularly, and the Blue Funnel Company organized a 20-minute service between Vancouver and New Westminster. The city council recognized the jitneys by issuing licenses and insisting that they should cover the same runs as the street cars. Previous to this, the jitney drivers had been picking the cream of the traffic in the central and populous parts of the city and letting the street cars make the long and unprofitable trips into the outlying sections.

Naturally this competition made heavy inroads into the revenue of the street railway company. The jitney receipts in the city alone were estimated at about $800 per day, which meant an imposing annual total. The company protested to the city council, but beyond licensing the jitneys and passing certain regulations, the aldermen did nothing.

This was at the beginning of 1915. The situation rapidly grew worse from the standpoint of the B. C. E. Company, which owns the street railway systems of Vancouver, New Westminster and Victoria, as well as interurban lines running to Chilliwack and Steveston and out of Victoria to Esquimalt and Sidney. Protests were made to the city council, and last spring a tentative agreement was reached, whereby Dr. Shortt, of Ottawa, was to make a thorough inquiry into the whole situation and the council and city were to abide by his decisions. His report was issued last fall, and the tenor of it was that there was not room for both transportation systems, that the jitneys could not be called a standard system, and that a continuance of prevailing conditions was unjust to the street railway. That put the matter straight up to the city fathers, and after several months delay, the council, as a prelude to handing out a knockout to the jitneys, has applied to the Legislature for power to do so under the guise of greater powers for dealing with street traffic. The jitney interests are protesting vigorously, but it appears a reasonably safe prediction at the time of writing that they are waging a losing fight.

B.C. AND THE M.S.A. ACT.

The announcement is made that Capt. F. H. Glover has been appointed chief inspector of Dominion police for the province of British Columbia, and that henceforth there is to be an absolutely strict enforcement of the Military Service Act. While the appointment and its purpose have been received with approval in this city, there is a growing doubt whether the same machinery is being operated in the province of Quebec. British Columbia stands high in its contribution of men for service overseas in proportion to its population among the provinces, and is prepared to do more. The exemption tribunals throughout the province did their difficult task capably and impartially, and the same may be said of the appeal tribunals.

As evidence of their strictness, is the fact that the Central Appeal Judge has allowed quite a number of B.C. appeals. It is the general feeling here that Quebec is not being made to do its share, and that the new Union Government is not applying as vigorous methods there as the situation demands—in other words that the willing horses are being made to pull more than their share.

Little information has come through to the Coast newspapers of late in regard ot what steps are being taken to round up the slackers in Quebec, and how many soldiers are being secured in that province. The West gave the Government an unmistakable mandate to carry through a vigorous win-the-war policy without fear or favor, and if this is not being done, the west will no doubt be heard from early and often.

PROTEST CUSTOMS LAWS.

A joint protest is to be made by the Vancouver Board of Trade, the B.C. Manufacturers' Association, and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association against the unfair handicap under which British Columbia firms are laboring in respect to customs regulations dealing with the importation of material equipment used in the construction of ships for the Imperial Munitions Board. As the situation now stands, local firms must pay a duty of 37 per cent. on most of the material supplied to these yards, providing they place this material in stock and do not order it for direct delivery to the yards.

It is claimed that American firms are thus able to underbid local firms, and have been doing a flourishing business, several of them maintaining representatives here solely for the purpose of securing orders.

A strong protest will be made to Chief Customs Inspector Bushby, who will visit Vancouver shortly. The shipbuilding has secured an important status on the Coast in the past twelve months, over five thousand men being employed in the Vancouver yards alone, and the community is a unit in taking every legitimate step possible to give permanency to the industry.

The Union of B. C. Municipalities has protested successfully against the proposal that the Government should allow the public hospitals of the province to increase the public ward charge from one dollar to one dollar and a half per day. That rate was fixed about fifteen years ago, when the cost of running such institutions was a great deal less than it is today, the increased cost of provisions alone being a serious drain on hospital finances. The municipalities fought a practically united demand from the hospitals for such amendmeut to their charters. The Government contributes a per capita grant to the support of the public hospitals which is on a sliding basis, decreasing to the number of patients increases. The Vancouver General Hospital, which is the largest in the province, receives 45 cents per day per patient, while its per capita cost has reached the high mark of $2.30 per day. Less than fifty per cent of its public ward patients are able to meet their bills, and in fact the free work done last year amounted to the huge total of $160,000. This constitutes a serious handicap in the successful financing of the hospital, and the situation is made worse by the refusal of the Government to make the change referred to above and its inability to increase the per capita grant or otherwise assist its financial support.

The proposed ten per cent industrial tax as applied to mining which the provincial Government proposes to levy, is meeting with strong opposition by the mining interests of the province. This ten per cent imposition is in addition to the prevailing two per cent royalty tax. The legislation does not propose to deal with net income, for in addition to the two per cent royalty tax, it makes no allowance for the exhaustion of the mines, nor does it provide any allowance for money borrowed outside the province, depreciation, expenditure on plant, salaries to directors and managers, or money devoted to exploration and development.

Mining men argue that its effect will be that companies, instead of carrying out intended development plans and policies to the exclusion of dividend payments, will discontinue extension work and pay dividends instead to investors, many of whom reside outside of the province. Most of the big copper properties in the province have not yet paid back interest on their capital actually paid up in cash. It is claimed that even though the Government reduces the tax to a ten per cent profit basis, they will never be able to obtain a return of a reasonable rate of interest for the time their capital had been paid up in past years. No provision is made either for the element of risk which is an important one in the mining industry. Mining operator are almost a unit in declaring they would be satisfied with the Ontario tax regulations. J. Edward Sears, who represented the Granby Company in an interview with theGovernment, put the case in part as follows:

"People believe that because the mines have been spending large sums of money in developments and improvements, that they are making big profits. This impression is not corcorrect," he said. "What the mines have been doing is churning up the ground, turning it into money obtained from the outside, and spreading this money over the province in the way of wages and supply costs. Granby alone has brought into this province over $100,000,000 in cash and spent it in wages and supplies in British Columbia. It has only paid out between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000 in dividends in 22 years. British Columbia has received the benefit of this $100,000,000 directly or indirectly. If the Government does not put mining on a basis almost impossible of successful operation, it should allow deductions for interest, salaries, development, etc., with other deductions at present allowed by the British Columbia Act, and either interest on the capital before imposing the tax, allow for exhaustion as in the Dominion Act."

THRILLING STORY OF AIR WARFARE BY CAPTAIN ALAN BOTT, M.C. ("CONTACT"), WHO HAS WON FAME AS A WRITER AS WELL AS A KNIGHT OF THE AIR

(COPYRIGHT.)

For weeks we had talked guardedly of "it" and "them"—of the greatest day of the Push and the latest form of warfare. Details of the twin mysteries had been rightly kept secret by the red-hatted Olympians who really knew, though we of the fighting branches had heard sufficient to stimulate an appetite for rumor and exaggeration. Consequently we possessed our souls in impatience and dabbled in conjecture.

Small forts moving on the caterpillar system of traction used for heavy guns were to crawl across No Man's Land, enfilade the enemy front line with quick-firing and machine guns, and hurl bombs on such of the works and emplacements as they did not ram to pieces,—thus a confidential adjutant, who seemed to think he had admitted me into the inner circle of knowledge tenanted only by himself and the G.S.O. people (I., II., and III., besides untabbed nondescripts.) Veterans gave tips on war in the open country, or chatted airily about another tour of such places as Le Catelet, Le Cateau, Mons, the Maubeuge district, and Namur. The cautious listened in silence, and distilled only two facts from the dubious mixture of fancy. The first was that we were booked for a big advance one of these fine days; and the second that new armoured cars, caterpillared and powerfully armed, would make their bow to Brother Boche.

The balloon of swollen conjecture floated over the back of the Front until it was destroyed by the quick-fire of authentic orders, which necessarily revealed much of the plan and many of the methods. On the afternoon of September 14 all the officers of our aerodrome were summoned to an empty shed. There we found our own particular General, who said more to the point in five minutes than the rumorists had said in five weeks. There was to be a grand attack next morning. The immediate objectives were not distant, but their gain would be of enormous value. Every atom of energy must be concentrated on the task. It was hoped that an element of surprise would be on our side, helped by a new engine of war christened the Tank. The nature of this strange animal, male and female, was then explained.

Next came an exposition of the part allotted to the Flying Corps. No German machines could be allowed near enough to the lines for any observation. We must shoot all Hun machines at sight and give them no rest. Our bombers should make life a burden on the enemy lines of communication. Infantry and transport were to be worried, whenever possible, by machine-gun fire from above. Machines would be detailed for contact work with our infantry. Reconnaissance jobs were to be completed at all costs, if there seemed the slightest chance of bringing back useful information.

No more bubbles of hot air were blown around the mess table. Only the evening was between us and the day of days. The time before dinner was filled by the testing of machines and the writing of those cheerful, non-committal letters that precede big happenings at the front. Our flight had visitors to dinner, but the shadow of tomorrow was too insistent for the racket customary on a guest night. It was as if the electricity had been withdrawn from the atmosphere and condensed for use when required. The dinner talk was curiously restrained. The usual shop chatter prevailed, leavened by snatches of bantering cynicism from those infants of the world who thought that to be a beau sabreur of the air one must juggle verbally with life, death, and Archie shells. Even these war babies (three of them died very gallantly before we re-assembled for breakfast next day) had bottled most of their exuberance. Understanding silences were sandwiched between yarns. A wag searched for the Pagliacci record, and set the gramophone to churn out "Vesti la Giubba." The guests stayed to listen politely to a few revue melodies, and then slipped away. The rest turned in immediately, in view of the jobs at early dawn.

"Night, everyody," said one of the flight-commanders. "Meet you at Mossy-Face in the morning!"

THE DAWN OF A FATEFUL MORNING.

Long before the dawn of September 15, I awoke to the roar of engines, followed by an overhead drone as a party of bombers circled round until they were ready to start. When this noise had died away, the dull boom of an intense bombardment was able to make itself heard. I rolled over and went to sleep again, for our own show was not due to start until three hours later.

The Flying Corps program on the great day was a marvel of organization. The jobs fitted into one another, and into the general tactical scheme of the advance, as exactly as the parts of a flawless motor. At no time could enemy craft steal toward the lines to spy out the land. Every sector was covered by defensive patrols which travelled northward and southward, southward and northward, eager to pounce on any black-crossed stranger. Offensive patrols moved and fought over Boche territory until they were relieved by other offensive patrols. The machines on artillery observation were thus worried only by Archie, and the reconnaissance formations were able to do their work with little interruption, except when they passed well outside the patrol areas. Throughout the day those guerillas of the air, the bombing craft, went across and dropped eggs on anything between general headquarters and a railway line. The corps buses kept constant communication between attacking battalions and the rear. A machine first reported the exploit of the immortal Tank that waddled down High Street, Flers, spitting bullets and inspiring sick fear. And there were many free-lance stunts, such as Lewis gun attacks on reserve troops or on trains.

The three squadrons attached to our aerodrome had to the day's credit two long reconnaissances, three offensive patrols, and four bomb raids. Six Hun machines were destroyed on these shows, and the bombers did magnificent work at vital points. At 2 a.m. they dropped eggs on the German Somme headquarters. An hour later they deranged the railway station of a large garrison town. For the remaining time before sunset they were not so busy. They merely destroyed an ammunition train, cut two railway lines, damaged an important railhead, and sprayed a bivouac ground.

An orderly called me at 4:15 a.m. for the big offensive patrol. The sky was a darkgrey curtain decorated by faintly twinkling stars. I dressed to the thunderous accompaniment of the guns, warmed myself with a cup of hot cocoa, donned flying kit, and hurried to the aerodrome. There we gathered around C., the patrol leader, who gave us final instructions about the method of attack. We tested our guns and climbed into the machines.

By now the east had turned to a light grey with pink smudges from the forefinger of sunrise. Punctually at five o'clock the order, "Start up!" passed down the long line of machines. The flight-commander's engine began a loud metallic roar, then softened as it was throttled down. The pilot waved his hand, the chocks were pulled from under the wheels, and the machine moved forward. The throttle was again opened full out as the bus raced into the wind until flying speed had been attained, when it skimmed gently from the ground. We followed, and carried out the rendezvous at 3000 feet.

The morning light increased every minute, and the grey of the sky was merging into blue. The faint, hovering ground-mist was not sufficient to screen our landmarks. The country below was a shadowy patchwork of colored pieces. The woods, fantastic shapes of dark green, stood out strongly from the mosaic of brown and green fields. The pattern was divided and subdivided by the straight, poplar-bordered roads peculiar to France.

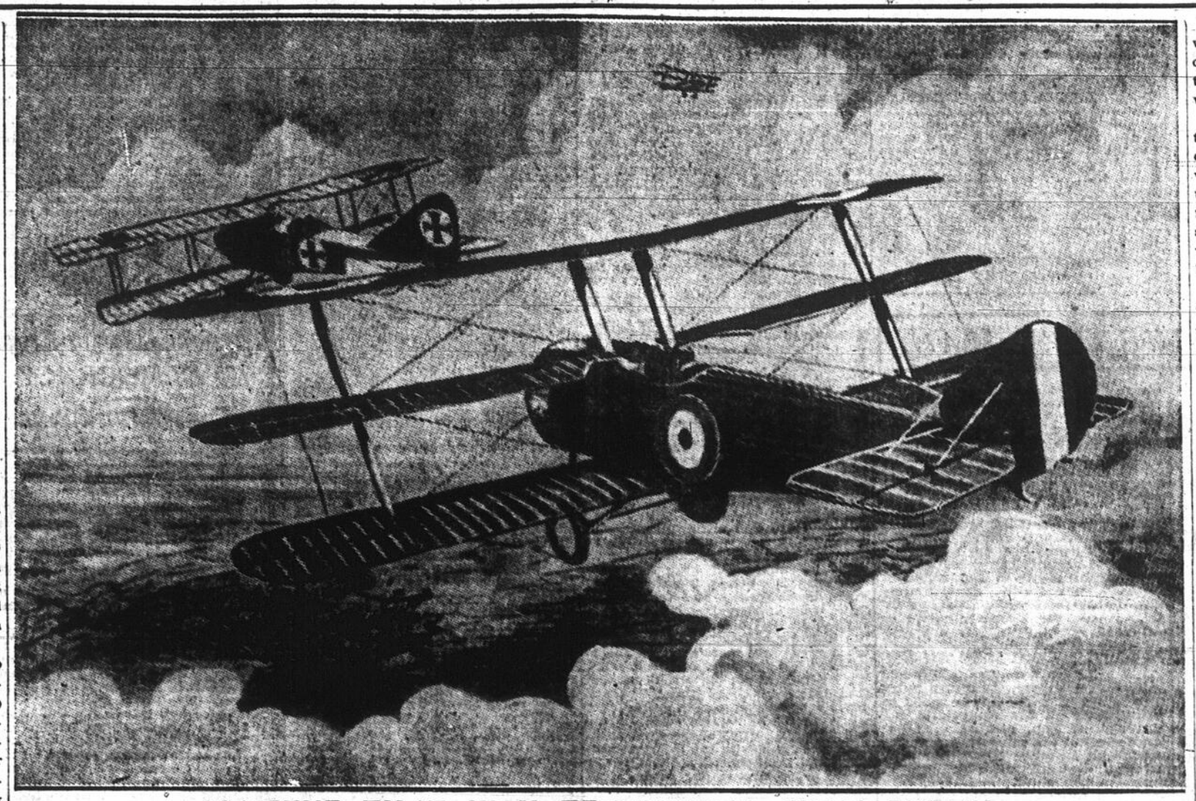

We passed on to the dirty strip of wilderness which is the actual front. The battered villages and disorderly ruins looked like hieroglyphics traced on wet sand. A sea of smoke rolled over the ground for miles. It was a by-product of one of the most terrific bombardments in the history of trench warfare. Through it hundreds of gun-flashes twinkled, like the lights of a Chinese garden.

THE BEGINNING OF A BIG BATTLE.

Having reached a height of 12,000 feet, we crossed the trenches south of Bapaume. As the danger that stray bullets might fall on friends no longer existed, pilots and observers fired a few rounds into space to make sure their guns were behaving properly.

Archie began his frightfulness early. He concentrated on the leader's machine, but the still-dim light spoiled his aim, and many of the bursts were dotted between the craft behind. I heard the customary wouff! wouff! wouff, followed in one case by the ha-a-a-a-a of passing fragments. We swerved and dodged to disconcert the gunners. After five minutes of hide-and-seek, we shook off this group of Archie batteries.

The flight-commander headed for Mossy-Face Wood, scene of many air battles and bomb raids. An aerodrome just east of the wood was the home of the Fokker star, Boelcke. C. led us to it, for it was his great ambition to account for Germany's best pilot.

MACHINE THAT WON TESTIMONIAL FROM ENEMY

The new British fighting triplane in action. It was recently described as "excellent" in a report by Gen. von Hoeppner, Chief of the German Flying Corps.

While we approached, I looked down and saw eight machines with black Maltese crosses on their planes, about three thousand feet below. They had clipped wings of a peculiar whiteness, and they were ranged one above the other, like the rungs of a Venetian blind. A cluster of small scouts swooped down from Heaven-knows-what height and hovered above us; but C. evidently did not see them, for he dived steeply on the Huns underneath, accompanied by the two machines nearest him. The other group of enemies then dived.

I looked up and saw a narrow biplane, apparently a Roland, rushing towards our bus. My pilot turned vertically and then side-slipped to disconcert the Boche's aim. The black-crossed craft swept over at a distance of less than a hundred yards. I raised my gun-mounting, sighted, and pressed the trigger. Three shots rattled off—and my Lewis gun ceased fire.

Intensely annoyed at being cheated out of such a splendid target, I applied immediate action, pulled back the cocking-handle and pressed the trigger again. Nothing happened. After one more immediate action test, I examined the gun and found that an incoming cartridge and an empty case were jammed together in the breech. To remedy the stoppage, I had to remove spade-grip and body cover. As I did this, I heard an ominous ta-ta-ta-ta-ta from the returning German scout. My pilot cart-wheeled round and made for the Hun, his gun spitting continuously through the propeller. The two machines raced at each other until less than fifty yards separated them. Then the Boche swayed, turned aside, and put his nose down. We dropped after him, with our front machine-gun still speaking. The Roland's glide merged into a dive, and we imitated him. Suddenly a streak of flame came from his petrol tank, and the next second he was rushing earthwards, with two streamers of smoke trailing behind.

I was unable to see the end of this vertical dive, for two more single-seaters were upon us. They plugged away while I remedied the stoppage, and several bullets ventilated the fuselage quite close to my cockpit. When my gun was itself again, I changed the drum of ammunition, and hastened to fire at the nearest Hun. He was evidently unprepared, for he turned and moved across our tail. As he did so, I raked his bus from stem to stern. I looked at him hopefully, for the range was very short, and I expected to see him drop towards the ground at several miles a minute. He sailed on serenely. This is an annoying habit of enemy machines when one is sure that, by the rules of the game, they ought to be destroyed. The machine in question was probably hit, however, for it did not return, and I saw it begin a glide as though the pilot meant to land. We switched our attention to the remaining Hun, but this one was not anxious to fight alone. He dived a few hundred feet, with tail well up, looking for all the world like a trout when it drops back into water. Afterwards he flattened out and went east.

During the fight we had become separated from the remainder of our party. I searched all round the compass, but could find neither friend nor foe. We returned to the aerodrome where hostile craft were first sighted. There was no sign of C.'s machine or of the others who dived on the first group of Huns. Several German machines were at rest in the aerodrome.

Finding ourselves alone, we passed on towards the lines. I twisted my neck in every direction, for over enemy country only a constant look out above, below, and on all sides can save a machine from a surprise attack. After a few minutes, we spotted six craft bearing towards us from a great height. Through field-glasses I was able to see their black crosses, and I fingered my machine-gun expectantly.

The strangers dived in two lots of three. I waited until the first three were within 300 yards' range and opened fire. One of them swerved away, but the other two passed right under us. Something sang to the right, and I found that part of a landing-wire was dangling helplessly from its socket. We thanked whatever gods there be that it was not a flying-wire, and turned to meet the next three Huns. We swerved violently, and they pulled out of their dive well away from us. With nose down and engine full out, we raced towards the lines and safety. Three of the attackers were unable to keep up with us and we left them behind.

The other three Germans, classed by my pilot as Halberstadts, had a great deal more speed than ours. They did not attack at close quarters immediately, but flew 200 to 300 yards behind, ready to pounce at their own moment. Two of them got between my gun and our tail-plane, so that they were safe from my fire. The third was slightly above our height, and for his benefit I stood up and rattled through a whole ammunition-drum. Here let me say I do not think I hit him, for he was not in difficulties. He dived below us to join his companions, possibly because he did not like being under fire when they were not. To my surprise and joy, he fell slick on one of the other two Hun machines. This latter broke into two pieces, which fell like stones. The machine responsible for my luck side-slipped, spun a little, recovered, and went down to land. The third made off east.

In plain print and at a normal time, this episode shows little that is comic. But when it happened I was in a state of high tension, and this, combined with the startling realization that a Hun pilot had saved me and destroyed his friend, seemed irresistibly comic. I cackled with laughter and was annoyed because my pilot did not see the joke.

We reached the lines without further trouble from anything but Archie. The pink streaks of daybreak had now disappeared beneath the whole body of the sunrise, and the sky was of that intense blue which is the secret of France. What was left of the ground-mist shimmered as it congealed in the sunlight. The pall of smoke from the guns had doubled in volume. The Ancre sparkled brightly.

We cruised around in a search for others of our party, but found none. A defensive patrol was operating between Albert and the trenches. We joined it for half an hour, at the end of which I heard a "Halloa!" from the speaking-tube.

A BIRD'S EYE VIEW OF THE WAR.

"What's up now?" I asked.

"Going to have a look at the war," was the pilot's reply.

Before I grasped his meaning he had shut off the engine and we were gliding towards the trenches. At 1200 feet we switched on, flattened out, and looked for movement below. There was no infantry advance at the moment, but below Courcelette what seemed to be two ungainly masses of black slime were slithering over the ground. I rubbed my eyes and looked again. One of them actually crawled among the scrapheaps that fringed the ruins of the village. Only then did the thought that they might be Tanks suggest itself. Afterwards I discovered that this was so.

The machine rocked violently as a projectile hurtled by underneath us. The pilot remembered the broken landing-wire and steered for home. After landing, we compared notes with others who had returned from the expedition. C., we learned, was down at last, after seventeen months of flying on active service, with only one break for any appreciable time. He destroyed one more enemy before the Boches got him. In the dive he got right ahead of the two machines that followed him. As these hurried to his assistance, they saw an enemy plane turn over, show a white, gleaming belly, and drop in zigzags. C.'s bus was then seen to heel over into a vertical dive and to plunge down, spinning rhythmically on its axis. Probably he was shot dead and fell over on to the joystick, which put the machine to its last dive. The petrol tank of the second machine to arrive among the Huns was plugged by a bullet, and the pilot was forced to land. Weeks later, his observer wrote us a letter from a prison camp in Hanover. The third bus, perforated by scores of bullet-holes, got back to tell the tale.

C. was one of the greatest pilots produced by the war. He was utterly fearless, and had more time over the German lines to his credit than any one else in the Flying Corps. It was part of his fatalistic creed that Archie should never be dodged, and he would go calmly ahead when the A.-A. guns were at their best. Somehow, the bursts never found him. He had won both the D.S.O. and the M.C. for deeds in the air. Only the evening before, when asked lightly if he was out for a V.C., he said he would rather get Boelcke than the V. C., and in the end Boelcke probably got him, for he fell over the famous German pilot's aerodrome, and that day the German wireless announced that Belcke had shot down two more machines. Peace to the ashes of a fine pilot and a very brave man!

Two observers, other than C.'s passenger, had been killed during our patrol. One of them was "Uncle," a captain in the Northumberland Fusiliers. A bullet entered the large artery of his thigh. He bled profusely and lost consciousness in the middle of a fight with two Huns. When he came to, a few minutes later, he grabbed his gun and opened fire on an enemy. After about forty shots the chatter of the gun ceased, and through the speaking-tube a faint voice told the pilot to look round. The pilot did so, and saw a Maltese-cross biplane falling in flames. But Uncle had faded into unconsciousness again, and he never came back. It is more than possible that if he had put a tourniquet round his thigh, instead of continuing the fight, he might have lived.

A GREAT DEATH FOR PADDY AND UNCLE.

A great death, you say? One of many such. Only the day before I had helped to lift the limp body of Paddy from the floor of an observer's cockpit. He had been shot over the heart. He fainted, recovered his senses for ten minutes, and kept two Huns at bay until he died, by which time the trenches were reached.

Imagine yourself under fire in an aeroplane at 10,000 feet. Imagine that only a second ago you were in the country of shadows. Imagine yourself feeling giddy and deadly sick from loss of blood. Imagine what is left of your consciousness to be stabbed insistently by a throbbing pain. Now imagine how you would force yourself in this condition to grasp a machine-gun in your number hand, pull back the cocking-handle, take careful aim at a fast machine, allowing for deflection, and fire until you sink into death. Some day I hope to be allowed to visit Valhalla for half an hour, that I may congratulate Paddy and Uncle.

We refreshed ourselves with cold baths and hot breakfast. In the mess the fights were reconstructed. Sudden silences were frequent—an unspoken tribute to C. and the other casualties. But at lunch-time we were cheered by the news that the first and second objectives had been reached, that Martinpuich, Courcelette, and Flers had fallen, and that the Tanks had behaved well.

After lunch I rested awhile before the long reconnaissance, due to start at three. Six machines were detailed for this job; though a faulty engine kept one of them on the ground. The observers marked the course on their maps, and wrote out lists of railway stations. At 3:30 we set off towards Arras.

Archie hit out as soon as we crossed to his side of the front. He was especially dangerous that afternoon, as if determined to avenge the German defeat of the morning. Each bus in turn was encircled by black bursts, and each bus in turn lost height, swerved, or changed its course to defeat the gunner's aim. A piece of H. E. hit our tail-plane, and stayed there until I cut it out for a souvenir when we had returned.

The observers were kept busy with notebook and pencil, for the train movement was far greater than the average, and streaks of smoke courted attention on all the railways. Rolling stock was correspondingly small, and the counting of the trucks in the sidings was not difficult. Road and canal transport was plentiful. As evidence of the urgency of all this traffic, I remarked that no effort at concealment was made. On ordinary days, a German train always shut off steam when we approached; and often I saw transport passing along the road one minute, and not passing along the road the next. On September 15 the traffic was too urgent for time to be lost by hide-and-seek.

We passed several of our offensive patrols, each of which escorted us while we were on its beat. It was curious that no activity could be noticed on enemy aerodromes. Until we passed Mossy-Face on the last lap of the homeward journey we saw no Hun aircraft. Even there the machines with black crosses flew very low and did not attempt to offer battle.

Nothing out of the ordinary happened until we were about to cross the trenches north of Peronne. Archie then scored an inner. One of his chunks swept the left aileron from the leader's machine, which banked vertically, almost rolled over, and began to spin. For two thousand feet the irregular drop continued, and the observer gave up hope. Luckily for him, the pilot was not of the same mind, and managed to check the spin by juggling with his rudder-controls. The bus flew home, left wing well down, with the observer leaning far out to the right to restore equilibrium, while the icy rush of air boxed his ears.

We landed, wrote our reports, and took them to headquarters. The day's work had been done, which was all that mattered to any extent, and a very able general told us it was "dom good." But many a day passed before we grew accustomed to the absence of Uncle and Peddy.

And so to bed, until we were called for another early morning show.

THE ARCHIBALD FAMILY.

. . . . . You remark on the familiarity with which I speak of Archie, and you ask for detailed information about his character and habits. Why should I not treat him with familiarity? If a man calls on you nearly every day you are entitled to use his Christian name. And if the intimacy be such that at each visit he tries to punch your head, he becomes more a brother than a friend.

How, you continue, did a creature so strenuous as the anti-aircraft gun come by the flippant name of Archie? Well, once upon a time the Boche A.-A. guns were very young and had all the impetuous inaccuracy incident to youth. British airmen scarcely knew they were fired at until they saw the pretty, white puffs in the distance.

One day a pilot noticed some far-away bursts, presumably meant for him. He was young enough to remember the good old days (you would doubtless call them the bad old days) when the music-halls produced hearty, if vulgar, humor, and he murmured "Archibald, certainly not!" The name clung, and as Archibald the A.-A. gun will go down to posterity. You can take it or leave it; any way, I cannot think of a better explanation for the moment.

Archie has since grown up and become sober, calculating, accurate, relentless, cunning, and deadly mathematical. John or Ernest would now fit him better, as being more serious, or Wilhelm, as being more frightful. There is no greater adept at the gentle art of "putting the wind up" people.

Few airmen get hardened to the villainous noise of a loud wouff! wouff! at 12,000 feet, especially when it is near enough to be followed by the shriek of shell-fragments. Nothing disconcerts a man more as he tries to spy out the land, take photographs, direct artillery fire, or take aim through a bombsight, than to hear this noise and perhaps be lifted a hundred feet or so when a shell bursts close underneath. And one is haunted by the knowledge that, unlike the indirect fire of the more precise guns, Archie keeps his own eyes on the target and can observe all swerves and dashes for safety.

To anybody who has seen a machine broken up by a direct hit at some height between 8,000 and 15,000 feet, Archie becomes a prince among the demons of destruction. Direct hits are fortunately few, but hits by stray fragments are unfortunately many. Yet, though the damage on such occasions is regrettable, it is seldom overwhelming. Given a skilful pilot and a well-rigged bus, miracles can happen, though a machine stands no technical chance of staggering home. In the air uncommon escapes are common enough.

AN AVIATOR'S PREDICAMENT.

On several occasions, after a direct hit, a wounded British pilot has brought his craft to safety, with wings and fuselage weirdly ventilated and half the control wires helpless. Archie wounded a pilot from our aerodrome in the head and leg, and an opening the size of a duck's egg was ripped into the petrol tank facing him. The pressure went, and so did the engine-power. The lines were too distant to be reached in a glide, so the machine planed down towards Hun territory. The pilot was growing weak from loss of blood, but it occurred to him that if he stuck his knee into the hole he might be able to pump up pressure. He tried this, and the engine came back to life 50 feet from the ground. At this height he flew, in a semi-conscious condition, twelve miles over enemy country and crossed the lines with his bus scarcely touched by the dozens of machine-guns trained on it.

One of our pilots lost most of his rudder, but managed to get back by juggling with his elevator and ailerons. The fuselage of my own machine was once set on fire by a chunk of burning H. E. The flames died out under pressure from gloves and hands, just as they had touched the drums of ammunition and all but eaten through a longeron.

Escapes from personal injuries have been quite as strange. A piece of high explosive hit a machine sideways, passed right through the observer's cockpit, and grazed two knee-caps belonging to a friend of mine. He was left with nothing worse than two cuts and mild shell-shock.

Scottie, another observer (now a prisoner, poor chap), leaned forward to look at his map on a reconnaissance. A dainty morsel from an Archie shell hurtled through the air and grazed the back of his neck. He finished the reconnaissance, made out his report, and got the scratch dressed at the hospital. Next day he resumed work; and he was delighted to find himself in the Roll of Honor, under the heading "Wounded." I once heard him explain to a new observer that when flying a close study of the map was a guarantee against losing one's way, one's head—and one's neck.

The Archibald family tree has several branches. Whenever the founder of the family went on the burst he broke out in the form of white puffs, like those thrown from the funnel of a liner when it begins to slow down. The white bursts still seek us out, but the modern Boche A.-A. gunner specializes more in the black variety. The white bursts contain shrapnel, which is cast outwards and upwards; the black ones contain high explosives, which spreads all around.

H.E. has a lesser radius of solid frightfulness than shrapnel, but if it does hit a machine the damage is greater. For vocal frightfulness the black beats the white hollow. If the Titans ever had an epidemic of whooping-cough, and a score of them chorused the symptoms in unison, I should imagine the noise was like the bursting of a black Archie shell.

Then there is the green branch of the family. This is something of a problem. One theory is that the green bursts are for ranging purposes only, another that they contain a special brand of H.E., and a third declares them to be gas shells. All three suggestions may be partly true, for there is certainly more than one brand of green Archie.

First cousin to Archie is the onion, otherwise the flaming rocket. It is fired in a long stream of what look like short rectangles of compressed flame at machines that have been enticed down to a height of 4,000 to 6,000 feet. It is most impressive as a firework display. There are also colorless phosphorous rockets that describe a wide parabola in their flight.

Within the past month or two we have been entertained at rare intervals by the family ghost. This fascinating and mysterious being appears very suddenly in the form of a pillar of white smoke, stretching to a height of several thousand feet. It is straight, and apparently rigid as far as the top, where it sprays round into a knob. Altogether, it suggests a giant piece of celery. It does not seem to disperse; but if you pass on and look away for a quarter of an hour, you will find on your return that it has faded away as suddenly as it came, after the manner of ghosts. Whether the pillars are intended to distribute gas is uncertain, but it is a curious fact that on the few occasions when we have seen them they have appeared to windward of us.

Like babies and lunatics, Archie has his good and bad days. If low clouds are about and he can only see through the gaps he is not very troublesome. Mist also helps to keep him quiet. He breaks out badly when the sky is a cover of unbroken blue, though the sun sometimes dazzles him, so that he fires amok. From his point of view it is a perfect day when a film of cloud about 20,000 feet above him screens the sky. The high clouds form a perfect background for anything between it and the ground, and aircraft stand out boldly, like the figures on a Greek vase. On such a day we would willingly change places with the gunners below.

For my part, Archie has given me a fellow-feeling for the birds of the air. I have at times tried light-heartedly to shoot partridges and even pigeons, but if ever again I fire at anything on the wing, sympathy will spoil my aim.

CONCERNING KISSING

Last week's page carried a number of letters on the subject of kissing. Among them was one from a youth who signed himself "Class D," and who said that unless a girl "came across with the love-stuff," as I think he expressed it, she lost the extreme pleasure of his society, which joy and privilege he transferred to some more complacent young person.

This week girls have written very indignant letters in reply to "Class D," all of which cover practically the same ground, that he is unfortunate in the class of girls he knows, that his type is not worth the powder and shot necessary to blow him to——the German trenches; that—this from a mother, she would not allow him to even meet her daughters; that—this from a man—"Class D is evidently the type that kisses a girl at night, and in the morning, tells the other fellows, 'gee, she's easy. You can have a good time with her alright'—and then the poor, silly girl wonders why men all smile and look as she passes along the street"; that—this from another man—he considers me almost criminally responsible for publishing "Class D" letter.

Why did I do so? Because "Class D" is a type to be found in all large cities. In New York they call him the "lounge lizard"—in England, before the war, they called him something less polite, but there aren't any left there now. In any country, he is a menace to innocent girlhood, and only by publishing his viewpoint, may we combat it. Innocence is not ignorance, and to cover things up with silence is not the best way to fight them. Many times I have been asked by mothers and by women employed in educational and in social service work to explain as fully as possible, within the necessary restrictions imposed upon one by a newspaper, my reasons for my unvarying advice, "do not let a man kiss you unless you are engaged to him."

Girls, too, ask frequently "what harm is there in kissing? Most of the girls I know, and all of the boys insist that you can't get along or have a good time if you're a prude, that it's old-maidish and silly to be so particular."

My belief is that it is impossible to be too particular about whom you kiss. I believe that, for hygienic, as well as moral reasons, a mother should begin from the time her daughter is born to train her not to allow casual acquaintances (male or female) to kiss her.

In the United States, which is quicker to adopt new ideas than is our more conservative nation, babies often have straps of ribbon across their carriages, or on their bibs, which say: "Please do not kiss me."

A mother, who feels very strongly on this subject, had her baby in its carriage, in a shop the other day, when, as she was engrossed at the counter, a woman entered with her husband. Perceiving the pretty baby, the woman began to talk and coo to it, and presently leaned over to kiss it. Blazing with wrath, the mother stepped forward. "How dare you kiss my baby? You are a perfect stranger to me. How would you feel if I walked up and kissed your husband?" The discomfited pair left the shop.

Mothers, begin at the beginning to train your daughters. Train them to say, as soon as they can talk, "My mother does not allow me to kiss strangers."

Don't teach them to say thank you for every little favor with a kiss. It is a pretty idea, but if your child should contract a disease, it wouldn't be quite so pretty, would it? A child may be taught to make a charming and sincere speech of thanks, without the kiss. Teach her that her kisses are valuable, not cheap—not to be bought by every bauble bestowed upon her, or she will grow up with the idea that to pay for a theatre, a dinner, or a supper with a kiss is the proper and legitimate thing to do. Teach them to respect themselves, and they will make others respect them.

I believe that the mother, who does not teach her girl these vital truths, and who lets her sit alone with a boy in dimly-lighted drawing-rooms, or go out night after night to dance-halls and movie, without questioning her choice of company, is much more culpable than the girl, if that girl goes wrong.

And, girls, if you want to know my reasons for advising you as I do, they are three divisions, hygenic, mental and moral. In the first place, I am speaking with absolute sincerity and with unquestionable medical authority behind me when I say that many diseases—and in particular, the most loathsome forms of venereal disease—may be contracted through kissing.

When you yield your mouth to a man of whom all you know is that you have danced half a dozen times with him and he dances beautifully or you like his taste in neckties, you may be poisoning life, not only for yourself but for unborn generations.

If you ask me "why mentally," let me ask you how you feel mentally when you are conscious that you have "made a fool of yourself"? Aren't you burning with shame, wishing that you could crawl into the most convenient hole and pull it in after you? That is how you should feel after an evening of "spooning."

One girl wrote me the other day, "I always let my boy friends kiss me good-night and I don't believe one of them respects me less for it."

Yet a big brother says to his sister, "The first thing you've got to learn, kid, is to call down a fellow when he gets too fresh. Of course he'll go just as far as you'll let him, but a proper little fool he'll think you, if you let him, take it from me."

To be sure, a man has one rule for his own womenfolk—and quite another for all the other women in the world—but he marries the woman he is not ashamed to introduce to his mother.

It is ghastly unfair, of course. A famous French sage, Rouchefoucould, said, "Virtue is harder for a woman than for a man, because she has not only to resist her own inclinations, but the pleadings of the man, as well." Yet a happily-married woman told me not long ago that her husband told her if she had not "turned him down" so decidedly the first time he tried to kiss her—before they were engaged—he would never have asked her to marry him.

And when you do meet the man of men, girls, you'll be oh so sick of yorself when you think of how you've cheapened your kisses. You would be glad to give the world and all to have your lips sweet and fresh and clean again.

Morally, because the kiss is the danger signal, the warning light that stands in the primrose path that invites your feet to dalliance and that grows ever smoother and broader until you have reached the end.

The downward descent is easy, but the woman who climbs back is rare and when she does, her hands and feet are bleeding with wounds and her very soul is sick within her.

I wish it were possible for me to say all that I think and feel. I wish it were possible for me to make my appeal so strong that every girl who reads this would heed the warning. That a warning is necessary, I know, because hundreds of girls have written to me on the subject in the four years I have been conducting this page.

Safeguard yourself by your refusal to lower your standard of personal integrity and once again I say, Don't let a man kiss you unless you are engaged to him.

ABOLISH AFTERNOON TEAS

Mrs. T. W. Crothers Would Simplify Our Social Life

"People eat a great deal more than they need to—and largely from force of habit. It's really nothing more than custom that makes us have three meals a day. I believe in people eating only when they are hungry—like babies and animals. A great deal of food and time and energy might be saved by cutting out afternoon teas and calling around from house to house. Every extra meal should be proscribed. This 'nibbling business' is a shocking source of waste in war-time."

The simplification of domestic life in the interests of greater food production sums up in a nutshell Mrs. Crothers' views on what is demanded of women at the present time.

"Do away with unnecessary 'fussing' in the house," she says. "Save time and energy for productive work. Put away the silver. Store curtains and rugs. Reduce laundry to a minimum. Simplify cooking. In short—so arrange the work of the house that every woman and child may spend part of the day gardening or otherwise helping in the great essential of the hour—food production.

"Women are constantly making the excuse, 'Oh. I'm so tired by the time my housework is done that I have no energy to do anything else.'

"Why should housework be such a bugaboo at any time, and more especially when there is a war on?" asks Mrs. Crothers. "Every hour must be made to count during 1918, and now is the time for women to start making their plans. Everyone should be able to do something this year—even the youngest child."

When questioned regarding her views on compulsory rationing, Mrs. Crothers confessed that she could not see any great benefit in it for Canada now. Too much machinery would be required. In any event, people were beginning to feel a certain sense of moral obligation. They were thinking more of the food question than ever before because they were compelled to. The high prices, if nothing else, made them realize that food conditions were abnormal.

"You know," observed the wife of the Minister of Labor, "I think people eat a great deal more than they need to—and largely from force of habit. It's really nothing more than custom that makes us have three meals a day. I believe in people eating only when they are hungry—like babies and animals. Much of the complexity of modern domestic life is due to this perpetual meal-making, which is out of all proportion to our needs. The habit of wanting food all the time grows. If children were taught to think about it, and if they could be made to realize that in war-time it is a virtue to eat less, a great deal could be saved. Think of the ice cream cones alone that are so thoughtlessly and lavishly eaten here during the summer months!"

Back to the land, women of Canada! says Mrs. Crothers. There is no course of action to equal it now, either for the good of the women themselves or for the sake of their country. She believes that in so far as the city girls are concerned, a large tract of land should be secured outside the city where they could concentrate, rather than be scattered on small plots here and there. They might spend the entire summer in tents near the scene of their labors. In this way no time would be wasted getting back and forth, and they would be "farmerettes" in the true sense of the word.

She believes that everyone can try gardening on some scale or other. As an instance of what can be done, she told of last year's activities along this line in Ottawa. She was Convener of the committee looking after the work done by members of the Ottawa Women's Canadian Club. Mrs. Crothers herself is an energetic gardener, and is particularly enthusiastic about this phase of food production, for she thinks it is the one thing that is within the reach of practically every women.

MRS. T. W. CROTHERS,
Wife of the Minister of Labor.

Girls who had never handled a hoe or rake in their lives before, went in for gardening with great vigor and stuck to it splendidly. Several lots of land, about five acres in extent, were taken over by the Canadian Club, and were worked entirely by women. Many of the Civil Service girls gave up their holidays to help with the work, and the children did their share, too.

Asked what she thought about registration of women for work on the farms, Mrs. Crothers declared emphatically: "I don't think any regulations will be too drastic as far as the women of Canada are concerned. They are ready for anything. My experience is that they will do things quicker than men when they feel the need. No matter what is asked of them, they will try to do it, but they like to be consulted and to go ahead with their eyes open.

"Of course, I think the kind of women we should go to if we want to know what saving really means, are those whom necessity forces to save—the women who, by practical experience and force of circumstances, have to save, substitute and economize."

Mrs. Crothers proceeded to tell of instances that had come under her notice a few years ago in connection with the work of the Household League, when its members carried on a series of cooking demonstrations in homes where there was much suffering from unemployment during the first year of the war. Frequently they learned where they had gone to teach. There was one woman in particular who had sometimes to keep her husband and three children on 25 cents a day.

"These are the women who know what saving means, and their resourcefulness is wonderful", declared Mrs. Crothers. "I think that among the better-off a great deal of food and time and energy might be saved by cutting out afternoon teas and calling around from house to house. Every extra meal should be proscribed. This 'nibbling business' is a shocking source of waste in war-time.

"A woman used to be called 'stingy' if she were over-careful of crusts and crumbs. War has changed our viewpoint in many respects, and especially in this. What was 'stinginess' before is now the right and honorable thing, and it doesn't seem to me that women will ever again be as wasteful and extravagant as they have been in the past. Carefulness will have to outlive the war."

Mrs. Crothers thinks that potatoes might be more generally used than they are at present, seeing that they are among the finest of substitutes for flour. Potato cakes and potato dishes of many kinds could be used to advantage in the war-time menu. Here, again, the garden comes into play. And before anything else, Mrs. Crothers would say to all and sundry: "Garden or farm in 1918."

MAID AND WIFE

The Life Story of a Society Girl

By CAROLYN BEECHER.

CHAPTER XXX.

About eleven o'clock the noise in the outer office quieted down a little. The board boy's voice calling the stock quotations came more intermittantly, and without so much animation. I had long ago finished the simple task Mr. Hunt had given me, and sat idly waiting for some one to tell me what to do.

It was a quarter past the hour when Mr. Hunt came in and immediately came over to me.

"Finished?" he asked laconically.

"Long ago," I answered.

"I understand you can't take dictation," he continued, a frown of annoyance on his face.

"No, but I intend to learn," I responded.

"Um—well Miss Cantor will take my letters."

Then he touched a bell and the dark haired office boy appeared. "Joe, bring a pile of those circulars to Miss Andrews," he said.

Joe left the room and in a minute returned with a big bundle. He laid it beside me. Mr. Hunt took a book from his desk and gave it to me.

"Please fold the circulars and address them to the names you will find in this book."

He had said 'please' and spoken pleasantly to me. I was in a large, quiet, rather handsomely furnished office, overlooking the bay. I glanced out of the window and thought that I should never tire of the ever changing panorama. Then I went to work.

While I had no "speed" as yet, I typed neatly, and I watched the pile of addressed envelopes grow with pride. I worked steadily until twelve o'clock. Then I commenced to fold the circulars and enclose them in the envelopes. At half past twelve Joe came in and remarked in an off-hand way:

"Mr. Hunt told me to tell you to go to lunch."

"Thank you, Joe," I smiled and immediately got ready to go out. I had got up so early to see the restaurant manager that I felt faint. Then, too, I did not know the locality, and would have to hunt for a place to eat.

I walked several blocks without seeing a place which looked as if I could afford to patronize it. Then as time was going by and I was hungry I asked a policeman. He directed me to a place very near the office. I had taken the wrong direction to find a cheap eating house he told me.

I had a cup of tea and a sandwich and hurried back. The old scrub woman was in the lower hall, and smiled at me as I waited for the elevator.

Mr. Hunt was just going out with another, an older man. I knew at once he must be the other member of the firm from the strong resemblance between the two.

They both raised their hats as they passed me. When I told Jennis of it I added that I nearly fainted. Such courtesies are not extended to waitresses in cheap restaurants.

I hurried into my desk, a happiness over my work glowing within me. I would try so hard to please. Every minute out of the office would spened in study. Briskly I set to work to folding circulars until heard a voice say:

"So you're the new girl. Big job you've got folding those things and licking stamps!"

I glanced up, flushing at the tone more than the words. A slight, rather insipidly pretty girl stood at my elbow looking down at me, a half sneer on her face.

Up to this I had not thought of my work as at all beneath me. I had only been grateful and happy that I had secured it. I felt hurt, and for a moment did not reply. Then I got a grip on myself and said pleasantly:

"Perhaps I shan't do this always."

Then I remembered what Mr. Hunt had said about his letters and asked:

"Are you Miss Cantor?"

"Yes. How'd you know my name?"

"I heard Mr. Hunt say Miss Canton would take his letters."

"Can't you take dictation?" she queried.

"No—I am going to learn," I volunteered.

"Got the job on your looks, eh? Well it's an easy place if the boss likes you. The hours are short. But I" give you a tip: Don't let Rogers get down on you. So long as you don't take my job I just as soon tell you things. First I thought you were going to. You never can tell where they're going to turn you off for some other girl."

She finished rather bitterly, I thought.

"Surely they wouldn't do that here. Mr. Hunt seems very kind," I replied, as I again turned to my work, a little of my enthusiasm gone.

FUNDAMENTALS IN DEMOCRACY

By DR. FRANK CRANE

These are axioms of democracy. Think on these things.

1. The whole people is wiser than any group or man in it. Its judgment is sounder, surer. As Lincoln put it, "You can fool all of the people some of the time, and some of the people all of the time, but you can't fool all of the people all of the time."

2. Democracy is not a scheme of voting, a plan for securing rulers; it is a spirit.

3. Remember what Mazzini said, that some day a man would arise to whom democracy would be a religion. He would be the Great Man. (I quote from memory, and may be inexact.)

4. Democracy is run for the benefit of the people in it; Autocracy for the benefit of the people upon it.

5. Autocracy is most concerned about Efficiency; Democracy about Welfare. Autocracy is eager to build the house; Democracy that the builders be happy.

6. Autocracy is a White Passion; Democracy a Red Passion.

7. Autocracy thinks of the State; Democracy of the People that compose the State.

8. Autocracy is abstract; Democracy concrete. The former exalts impersonal aims; the latter aims constantly at men.

9. Autocracy produces Order; Democracy Initiative. Democracy Invents; Autocracy Applies.

11. Democracy is Natural; Autocracy is Artificial.

12. Democracy is its own remedy. The cure for the ills of Democracy is more Democracy. It carries within itself its recuperation. Autocracy prepares its own ruin.

13. Democracy has in it the seed of Evolution; Autocracy in it the seed of Revolution.

14. The Strength of Democracy is Education; the Strength of Autocracy is Obedience.

15. The God of Democracy is the same God the individual has; the God of Autocracy has a different moral code from that of the individual. The Kaiser's God, for instance, approved of the rape of Belgium and the sinking of the Lusitania.

16. The method of Democracy is Light; of Autocracy Darkness. Democracy created the Free Press; Autocracy the Censor.

17. It is complained of Democracy that it debates too much, but only by free debate can the Right be winnowed out.

18. Democracy "washes its dirty linen in public." True, but it gets it clean.

19. Democracy is Dangerous. And there is no Progress without Danger.

20. Democracy is called Vulgar, Common, Cheap. The real truth is that Autocracy is more so, only its defects are concealed and fester, while Democracy's are open and are healed.

21. Democracy is capable of a more perfect Organization and Unity than Autocracy.

22. Autocracy is built upon Caste; Democracy upon Humanity.

23. "The Parliament of Man, the Federation of the World" is only possible in a world of democratic nations. So long as there are Kings, Emperors, and Dynasties there can be no World Unity.

24. Militarism is a function of Autocracy, Democracy functions in Law.

25. Art, Science, and Literature will do better under Democracy than under any protection and patronage they may get from Autocracy, just as plants and people grow better in the air and sunshine than in a closed room.

FOUL BREATH.

"He that hath health is young."

I am asked to discuss offensive breath. In hydrocyanic poisoning the breath may smell of peach kernels or bitter almonds. A garlicky odor is significant of phosperous poisoning. Opium, ether, chloroform, alcohol, all impart their characteristic odor to the breath. Local conditions may be responsible, especially in individuals not acquainted with tooth brush sanitation. All kinds of mouth eruptions have a stale or musty odor; as do also untreated teeth cavities and abscesses, diseased jawbone, scurvy, diphtheria and tonsilitis. There is an unendurable odor with lung gangrene and abscess. A common cause of bad breath is dyspepsia and alcoholic gastritis. In children with stomach disorders there is merely a sour smell. A hot breath occurs with fevers. An ammoniacal odor comes with some kidney troubles. A heavy sweetish odor, like stale beer or overripe apples comes with diabetes. There is a kind of cadaveric smell in cases of advanced tuberculosis. To cure foul breath the cause must in each case be investigated and then removed; this is the family doctor's province. Then a mouth wash composed of a teaspoonful of potassium chlorate and a tablespoonful of glycerine to a pint of water, will be right.

Questions and Answers.

Liver Spots.—Will you tell me the cause of "deranged pigment"; and is there any help for it?

Answer.—I am not sure; but you are probably referring to what doctors call cloasma, an ailment characterised by deposits of pigment, "liver spots," found in connection with ailments peculiar to women, goitre, and chronic digestive disturbances. They have really nothing to do with the liver; and must be called so for the same reason that the Guinea pig is so named, although this little creature is not a pig, nor does it come from Guinea. Localized deposots of pigment may be caused by continual scratching or by the use of counter-irritants (as mustard plasters) or by vesicants (drugs used to raise blisters). Some individuals appear to be unusually predisposed to the deposit of colorine matter in the skin, after the local use of mustard, turpentine, oil of tar, or cantharides—substances used for the purpose of purifying the complexion. The internal prolonged use of arsenic and silver may cause permanent discoloration of the skin. Cloarsma is not always remediable. In many cases nightly washing with hot water and tincture of green soap helps. Peroxide of hydroged painted on once or twice a day has cured in some cases. Or after the nightly green soap ablution the following ointment (which may be had of the druggist) may be applied: Ammoniated mercury and subnitrate of bismuth, one dram each, to one ounce of vaseline. In all such cases the sufferer had best put herself in the hands of the doctor; especially because the skin of individuals varies greatly in texture and sensibility. An application that would remove pigment safely in one case might seriously blister in another.

FRIENDSHIP.

Would you be good enough to publish the underpoted reply to Miss N. K.'s question, "What is Friendship?"

"Friendship," it has been wittily said "is like your shadow: when the sunshine of prosperity is over your life the shadow is very distinct, but when the clouds of adversity come, the shadow flies."

Another tells us, "the friendship of the world is like the leaves falling from their trees in autumn; while the sap of maintenance lasts, friends swarm in abundance; but in the winter of our need, they leave us naked.

True friendship, however, is a far nobler and grander thing than these cynical comparisons would have us believe. Speaking from my own viewpoint—friendship between man and man is just as sacred as love between man and woman. The emotional feelings may be less tender and not so demonstrative, but the affection is every bit as sincere. Friendship doubles our joys and halves our sorrows. In the hour of distress and sorrow, the heart of every mortal turns to friendship; in the hour of gladness and conviviality, what do we seek?—a friend. Friendship—mysterious cement of the soul, sweetness of life, the solder of hearts, the bond of spirits, the charm of social intercourse, the mystic chain of sympathy; its chords unite us in perfect understanding. How exquisite is the pleasure springing from friendship, when mind communing with kindred mind, unfolds its hidden treasures, unlocks the sealed fountains of passion, discloses at ease its warmest aspirations and expands its noblest sympathies. Miss N. K. is right, the word friend is often misused and those to whom we usualy refer as "friends" are really acquaintances. The latter we have in abundance but unfortunately the former are as scarce as hen's teeth."

ROBERT BURNS' BIRTHDAY.

1. What day did Robert Burns' birthday fall on last year?

2. Is the Returned Soldiers' League the same as the Great War Veterans' Association?

3. Who were the founders of the Returned Soldiers' League. Are they still active members?

4. Which is correct, will or would in the following. "We . . . . . be interested to know whether we may have the pleasure, etc., etc.

5. Can you give me the proportions of hydrogen peroxide and ammonia for bleaching hair? Do you think it would be injurious to the skin, as I want to bleach the short hairs on my forearms?

GOUGOW.

Ans.—(1) Thursday. (2) No. (3) Returned Soldiers. (4) "Will" would be best since you are using "may." (5) A few drops of ammonia to pure hydrogen peroxide. Any strong bleaching agency will injure your skin if used too frequently.

FARMERETTE.

(1) and (2) Write to Macdonald College, Ste. Anne de Bellevue. They will be glad to answer your questions free of charge. (3) June 5, 1901, was a Wednesday. (4) There has been a great deal of discussion regarding the registration of women for military service, but so far as I know, nothing has been done. (5) I do not know of any superstition regarding the Aurora Borealis. In some parts of the country they are called "Merry Dancers," from the ever-changing effects of the rays of light. (6) Patna is in British India. (7) Yes, I answer privately if you enclose stamped, addressed envelope. (8) It is somewhat difficult to explain what yeast is without using technical terms. It is a fungus or degenerate plant, produced during the alcoholic fermentation of saccharine fluids, rising partly to the surface in the form of a frothy, viscid matter (top or surface yeast) and partly falling to the bottom (bottom or sediment yeast).

FOR "A DISCOURAGED WIFE."

If I had been Miss Currie, I would have suggested her to take an extra large sheet of paper and a pencil to write down all the complaints she had against him, and on another large sheet of the same dimension his grudge against her for fifteen consecutive days to make comparison with the two sheets, and then, only then, if a serious conversation is impossible. Then to take some more of the writing paper (although it is extravagant in war time spend so much on paper), to write to him very seriously to confess her own failings, and tell him gently of his, and begging him to think over the matter, with his comprehension, if he has any. I used to feel as miserable as she did at a time. My husband and I could not discuss half a minute, both would lose temper, and he would pose as a martyr, and I would also. Now he has not the chance to complain. I do not lose my temper. I give up—or pretend to—even when I am in the right—and after I do as I please I yield to his whims as much as I possibly can, and do myself, as I fancy as long as it does not hurt any one, and if some of my hobbies do not interest him, I enjoy them all by myself. I simply refuse to be made unhappy. Life is too short.

"LADY BETTY."

Ed Note:—Thank you for your letter. No, I am not a man. Sorry you think I was unsympathetic.

"PIGS IS PIGS."

I have kept three pigs all this winter (and for a number of years) and have given the latter abundance of straw for bedding incessantly, but as the saying runs, pigs is pigs.

There is no authority, whatever, for Ex-Farmer's statement about pigs being the cleanest animals there are; person with a little commonsense knows that a pig is the dirtiest animal on this earth, no matter what condition they are kept in.

Our friend is also wrong in his reference to horses and cows, the latter animals are very particular where they lie down.

If Ex-Farmer would buy a text book on the "Habits of Animals," and study same instead of misleading the public, he would be doing himself justice.

I am quite confident of other farmers supporting my statements.

A FARMER.

POLLY.

Your misgivings are quite justified. The most utterly foolish thing a girl can do is to allow herself to drift into an entanglement with a married man. What do you hope to gain by it? He cannot marry you, and if you fall in love with him, as by your letter you seem in danger of doing, are you prepared to waste your life in a vain love for a man who can't even be true to the woman he married? Your reputation will be irretrievably blackened if you continue in your present course, and how do you think your brothers will feel when they return from France if they find you involved in an unsavory affair with a married man? Be a sensible girl and get out before you are hopelessly compromised. The average married man doesn't take a young girl out to luncheon from purely altruistic motives. Better decline all such invitations.

ROSEMARY.

(1) White vaseline is said to make the lashes grow longer but you must be careful not to get any in your eyes, and also you must be prepared to wait a very long time to see any appreciable difference. (2) I will refer this question to the medical column. Look for your answer there. (3) Write to Y. W. C. A., 502 Dorchester street, west, Montreal, for information. (4) I do not know a recipe for making white ink. Perhaps some reader can supply one. (5) This is the first time I have ever been asked to suggest a name for a horse! Someone wrote me the other day and in the course of her letter said she had called two of her animals "Army" and "Navy." Don't you think that rather good?

ONE IN DOUBT.

(1) If a young man takes you home from a party, he would certainly expect to pay your carfare. (2) Yes, there are several places in town where you may get a hat reblocked. Look over the advertising columns. (3) Blackheads are usually caused by insufficient care in washing the face. Try scrubbing your face with liquid green soap and hot water. Press out blackheads, then apply witch-hazel to close pores. (4) Try putting the juice of a lemon in the rinsing water when you wash your hair.

LOYDELL.

(1) I do not know if home canning in tin jam pails would be successful. Perhaps some one who has tried can tell us. I know that small tin cans may be used if the tops are carefully soldered on. (2) Try washing your white chamois gloves with black stitching in almost cold water with salt in it.

MRS. O. L. C.

Taffeta silk does not dye successfully. The dye rots the silk and it splits very quickly. If the dress is unsuitable in its present color, why not make it into one of those pretty, round sofa-cushions that are so fashionable just now.

ECONOMY CORNER

AMERICAN RECIPES.

"He feels his oats,"
We say of the horse
Who frisks his way about;
And so if we
Would frisky be,
We should eat more oats no doubt.

Uncle Sam's Bulletin No. 6, is a dissertation upon the values and virtues of oatmeal. It is headed in black type: "Do You Know Oatmeal?" Do you know that oatmeal makes delicious puddings and other good things? The Scotch people are famously fond of oatmeal, and are a hardy race. It makes excellent puddings, wholesome bread and cookies, an appetizing soup for a cold day, and a baked dish for dinner in place of meat.

OATMEAL PUDDING.

Oatmeal Betty:—2 cups cooked oatmeal; 4 apples cut up smalle; 1-2 cup raisins; 1-2 cup sugar; 1-4 teaspoon cinnamon.

Or

Brown Pudding—2 cups cooked oatmeal; 1-2 cup molasses, 1-2 cup raisins. Mix and bake for one-half hour. Serve hot or cold. Any dried or fresh fruits, dates, or ground peanuts may be used instead of apples. Either recipe will serve five people.

SCOTCH SOUP

(With bread and dessert it is enough for lunch or supper.)

2 1-2 quarts water; 1 1-4 cup rolled oats; 5 potatoes cut in small pieces; 2 onions, sliced; 2 tablespoons flour; 2 tablespoons fat.

Boil the water and add the oatmeal, potato and onion, 1-2 tablespoon of salt and 1-2 teaspoon pepper. Cook for one-half hour. Brown the flour with the fat and add to the soup. Cook until thick. One cup of tomato adds to the flavor. Serves five people.

SPICED OATMEAL CAKES.

The whole family will like these, and they are easily made:

One and one-half cups flour; 1-2 cup cooked oatmeal; 1-4 cup sugar; 1-4 cup raisins; 14 teaspoon soda; 1-2 teaspoon baking powder; 1-2 teaspoon cinnamon; 3 tablespoons fat; 1-4 cup molasses.

Heat the molasses and fat to boiling. Mix with all the other materials. Bake in muffin pans for 30 minutes. This makes 12 cakes.

SCOTCH OAT CRACKERS.

Two cups rolled oats; 1-4 cup milk; 1-4 cup molasses; 1 1-2 tablespoons fat; 1-4 teaspoon soda; 1 teaspoon salt. Grind or crush the oats and mix with the other materials. Roll out in a thin sheet and cut in squares. Bake for 20 minutes in a moderate oven. Makes 3 dozen crackers.

BAKED OATMEAL AND NUTS.

Two cups cooked oatmeal; 1 cup crushed peanuts; 1-2 cup milk; 1 teaspoon vinegar; 1-4 teaspoon pepper; 2 1-2 teaspoons salt. Mix together and bake in a greased pan 15 minutes. This is enough for five people.

FOR "WILLING TO LEARN."

White Bread:—I compressed yeast cake dissolved in 1-2 cup lukewarm water with one teaspoon sugar. Place on back of range to rise. If liquid does not bubble and rise to top of cup within fifteen to thirty minutes the yeastcake is bad. In your breadmixer put 3 teaspoons butter, lard, or margarine, 1 handful sugar, 1 handful salt, then pour over 1 pint boiling water, 1 pint cold water to make liquid lukewarm. Add dissolved yeast cake, then sufficient flour to make a fairly stff sponge, so that your hands do not stick to it. Let rise over night. In the morning cut down, knead into loaves and put into greased bread pans. Let rise again until double in bulk, and bake in a good oven from three-quarters to one hour. Since the war, I always substitute a pint of bran, or of oatmeal or cornmeal for at least one pint of the white flour.

GRAPEFRUIT MARMALADE:—3 grapefruit, 2 lemons. Slice and single and add 3 pints water to a pound of fruit and soak over night and boil one hour. When cold, measure and to 1 pint add 1 1-2 lbs granulated sugar. Boil until thick.

CHEAP FRUIT CAKE.

2 tablespoons butter and lard mixed, 1 cup brown sugar, 1-2 cup molasses, 1 egg, 1 cup sour milk, 1-2 teaspoon baking soda, 1 cup raisins cut fine, 1-2 cup peel, 1 apple cut fine, 2 cups flour, 2 teaspoon baking powder, mix well together, bake in a round pan for three-quarters to one hour slow (good success).

ONE EGG CAKE

1 egg, 3-4 cup brown sugar, tablespoon lard, 1 cup butter milk, 1-2 teaspoon soda, 2 cups flour, 2 teaspoon baking powder, mix all well, bake in a flat pan, you can use 1 cup flour and 1 corn meal.

LITTLE STORIES FOR BEDTIME BY THORNTON W. BURGESS

(Copyright 1918, by T. W. Burgess.)

There's ever a cheerful morrow
Somewhere by the path ahead—
Some day you are bound to reach it
And find your troubles have fled.

It happens so to everybody. It happened so to Jerry Muskrat. One morning he went out to find that it was much farther from the edge of the dear Old Brier Patch to the edge of the water on the Green Meadows than it had been the day before. The next day it was still farther. The same thing was true the next day and the next. There was no doubt about it the water was going down. However, it was still far over the banks of the Smiling Pool, so it was of no use for Jerry to swim over there. There would be no place of safety when he got there.

A new worry took possession of Jerry now. All the water on the Green Meadows would have to go before the Smiling Pool and the Laughing Brook would reappear and he could go back to them. This would mean that he would have to go all that distance across the land to get there, and the thought of it made Jerry shake with fear. You see while it didn't seem like a terribly long distance to Peter Rabbit, whose long legs take him over the ground pretty fast when he wants them to, to Jerry it semed a frightfully long distance. That was because Jerry never had gone more than a few feet on land at one time in all his life. Out of the water he felt dreadfully helpless. If any of his enemies should happen along there would be no way of escape save by fighting.

At last came a morning when the water had disappeared from the Green Meadows. Jerry Muskrat was for starting at once for the Smiling Pool, but his courage failed him when he thought of what might happen if Old Man Coyote or even Reddy Fox should happen along. It was right then that Peter Rabbit remembered something.

"Jerry," he cried, "you don't have to go all that distance right out in the open. You follow me and I'll show you something. I'll show you a way to get back home."

Jerry was quite excited.

Jerry looked at Peter a little doubtfully. Then he looked off to the distant Smiling Pool and a little lump came in his throat. He would run almost any risk to get back there. He turned to Peter.

"All right, Peter," said he. "All right. Go ahead; I'll follow."

..."Jerry," he cried. "You don't have to go all that distance right out in the open."

Peter hopped out of the dear Old Brier Patch with Jerry running at his heels. He turned in quite a different direction from that of the Smiling Pool. Jerry hesitated a second, then went on. Presently, they came to what at first Jerry thought was a little narrow brook. It had banks, and there was a little water in it, but it was perfectly straight, and that is something no brook ever was for any such distance as this. Peter stopped on the nearest bank.

"There," said he, "get down in that and keep in it. It will lead you straight to the Laughing Brook just below the Smiling Pool. I know, because I have followed this bank more than once."

Jerry's Muskrat's eyes sparkled, and he jumped down without any loss of time.

"Thank you, Peter," said he. "I'll never forget how you helped me when I was in trouble. Down in here I won't be afraid to make the journey. Good-by."

Withthis Jerry started off as fast as he could go along the ditch, for this is what it was, a ditch Farmer Brown had dug long, long before to drain the water from the Green Meadows when there was too much. It was called a drainage ditch.

Aunt Jane's Mail

Any girl or boy may write to Aunt Jane. Send the letters to The Montreal Star. Letters should be written on one side of the paper only.

Dear Aunt Jane:

I am writing you a letter which I hope won't bore you.

Of course all girls now do Red Cross work, and I am no exception. Many of the girls in my class do polo caps. Some sew towels and others knit wash clothes. On knitting day all the girls are busy as bees. I am in the last class in Dufferin School, and I expect to graduate in June. We go to cooking school and learn to make many things, but I'm sure the thing all girls know how to make best is candy and cake. Do you like to read books? I sit down and read, forgetting everything till I finish it. I like boys' books sometimes. One day I took out a boy's book called "Eric." It had a beautiful picture on it. I read about a hundred pages and I grew suspicious. I asked one of my friends about my book and she told me that the hero dies, his brother dies, his mother dies, his friend and his mother and father dies, too! That was as far as I let her go. The story might have been a good one with a beautiful moral in it, but there were too many deaths in it for my taste.

ROSIE SALTZMAN.

Ernestine Lawson—It is rather odd that you should be reading "Stalky and Co." just when Rosie Saltzman writes she has been reading "Eric, or Little by Little." Do you remember how unmercifully Stalky and his chums make fun of "Eric" and St. Winifred?

Myrtle Reade—The record of your work is splendid. How many pairs of socks have you knit?

Bernice Merriton—So you are planning already of the good times you are going to have at the seaside in the summer. You speak of going with your family to the sea, but isn't the town you live in on the sea already? I have heard that it is very beautiful there in summer, too.

Janet Mary O'Reilly—So you have a kodak! Have you ever tried to develop your own pictures? I don't understand your question about the birds. Won't you write me again and give me fuller particulars?

THE THREE TOADS.

A tree toad loved a she toad
That lived up in a tree;
She was a 3-toed tree toad,
But a 2-toed toad was he.

The 2-toed tree toad tried to win
The she toad's friendly nod;
For the 2-toed tree toad loved the ground,
That the 3-toed tree toad trod.

But vainly the 2-toed tree toad tried—
He couldn't please her whim;
If her tree toad he were going to wed,
With her V-toe power,
The she toad vetoed him.

THE TOY SYMPHONY.

"Papa" Haydn, as children used to call Joseph Haydn, the great composer, once visited a fair at Berchtesgraden, where he bought several toy instruments. These he took home with him and summoned his orchestra to an important rehearsal. When the players found that they were expected to play a new symphony on such toys, the most experienced musicians in the band failed to keep their time for laughing. The toy instruments used were a cuckoo, playing E and G, a trumpet and drum in G, a whistle called a nightingale, a triangle, a quail whistle in F, a rattle, symbols and bells. The symphony is in C major and consists of three "movements."

THE SOLDIERS AND THE PRINCESS

Once upon a time three soldiers were returning from the war together. One was sergeant, one was a corporal and the third was a private, but they were friends. One very cold night they were travelling through a forest, very weary and cold. They built a fire and laid down by it. The sergeant agreed to do sentry duty while the other two slept.

While he was pacing to and fro an old woman who was bent nearly double came up and said to him: "Please, sir, may I warm myself by your fire?"

"Why, certainly, good mother," said the soldier. "You are welcome to all the heat that you can get." And the soldier rolled a log up by the fire and brushed the snow from it, and then spread his old army blanket across the knees of the old woman.

When the old woman was warm she said to the sergeant: "Thank you, soldier, for your kindness to me. Here is something for your trouble." And then she handed him a purse which seemed to have nothing in it.

"Thank you, but I do not need an empty purse," said the young sergeant with a smile, "and I do not wish to deprive you."

"It may seem empty now," said the old woman, "but take it in your hand and turn it upside down, and while you hold it like that you will see the gold pieces drop from it."

The sergeant took the purse and held it up and a number of gold pieces dropped from it, and he thanked the old woman for her gift and off she went.

The next night the corporal had to play, sentry and guard the fire and his sleeping comrades, and the old woman came again and asked to sit by the fire.

"You are very welcome, granny," he said kindly, and at once he wrapped her in his blanket and tried to make her comfortable.

When she was leaving she gave the soldier a tablecloth and he said: "Thank you kindly, but we soldiers rarely use tablecloths."

"Yes," she answered, "I know all that, but this cloth is a magic cloth and it will give you food to eat. Whenever you spread it out and say, 'Cloth, be covered,' the finest dinner that you can eat comes upon it."

"Indeed, I am grateful to you," said the young man, "for we are often hungry."

And when the old woman had departed the corporal awoke his comrades and said, "Tablecloth, be covered," and instantly a fine dinner appeared upon the cloth.

The next night the private was on duty and the old woman came again, and this time she gave the young man a whistle, and she said: "When you blow upon this whistle a regiment of armed men will appear to help you." And then the old woman departed and they never saw her again.

The three soldiers travelled on and on, and by and by they came to a city where there lived a beautiful princess. Now, this princess was vain of her card playing and she had boasted that no one could beat her, and if any man could win a game from her she would marry that man. Many suitors came from near and far, but the princess tricked and beat them all.

"The sergeant was very proud of his card playing. When he heard about the princess he thought he would try his luck. So he went to the palace and offered to play a game with her, but she said: "What are your stakes?" If I lose I must marry you, but if you lose how will you pay me?"

And the sergeant answered: "I will stake my purse."

"But your purse is worthless; it has nothing in it," sneered the princess.

"It may look that way," said the sergeant, "but see it now." And the soldier turned it over and shook the gold from it.

* * *

The princess then agreed to play for the purse, and she led the soldier into a room where she had a mirror so cleverly placed that she could watch his hand and see all of his cards, and in this way she soon tricked him and outplayed him and so she won the purse very easily.

Now, the princess was so charming in her manner that the sergeant fell in love with her, and when he went back to his comrades he begged the corporal to loan him the tablecloth, and then he went back to the princess and said: "Will you play me for this tablecloth?"

And she answered haughtily: "It may be a beautiful cloth, but it is not equal to me." But when the soldier showed her the food she agreed to play for the magic cloth.

Well, she cheated him again and soon she had the cloth, and then the poor soldier borrowed the whistle from the private and lost it in the same way, but this time he saw that she cheated, and so he was anxious to punish her. He went back and told his friends and they forgave him for losing all their magic gifts, for they knew that he had been tricked.

Then they all went their separate ways, and the sergeant travelled on and on. He was more and more in love with the princess in spite of the way she had cheated him, and he was always hoping he could find some way to force her to love him.

One warm day he came near a bank of a stream and he gathered some figs from some different trees that were growing there. Now, these figs were magic, but he did not know this, and after he ate a black fig he was horrified to find two horns growing on his head like goat's horns. The poor man did not know what to do, but he ate a white fig and, strange to say, the horns disappeared as rapidly as they had come.

The sergeant then gathered a number of the figs, and he sent a basket of the black figs to the princess as a present from one of her admirers. And it was not long after this that a rumor was spread around the city that the princess had two ugly horns growing up on her head, and it was said that she would give anything to the one who would remove them.

So the sergeant went to the palace and presented himself to the princess and said to her: "I can remove your horns, but I want first my purse, my tablecloth and my whistle back." And the princess gave them back.

Then the sergeant gave her the white figs to eat, and at once the horns disappeared from her head, and he took his purse and his cloth and his whistle. But he loved the princess and so he said: "Will you marry me?"

"No, indeed, I will not!" she answered haughtily. "Why should I?"

"Because you cheated and did not win these fairly," said the soldier.

"That is no reason why I should marry you," she replied.

Then the soldier blew upon his whistle and instantly the palace was filled with a regiment of soldiers. And the sergeant said: "If you do not marry me these men shall seize your father and I will take his throne, and you will have to marry me."

Now, when the princess found that she was outwitted she loved the brave soldier for his very boldness, and so she married him and he sent for his old comrades, the corporal and the private, and they were all rich and prosperous, and they all lived happily ever after.

TOYS AND USEFUL ARTICLES THAT A BOY CAN MAKE

By FRANK I. SOLAR

AEROPLANE WEATHERVANE

We are moving very rapidly these days. Civilization is measured by the advancement in every phase of human endeavor and one of the most important branches of development is that of mechanics.

If grown people are thrilled at the sight of an aeroplane speeding through the air, what must be the feelings of the average boy? Right away he wishes to make one.

The model described in this article will provide something new in the way of a weather vane and will give a basis for later experiments in aeroplane construction. Most boys like to make windmills and here is one that is new.

Make out a stock list before starting to get out the different pieces. When this is done you can commence work on any part. Suppose we start on the body. No definite layout is given for the curve of the back of the body. This can be made to suit yourself, but remember there must be sufficient area to keep the weather vane headed into the wind. Do not bore the hole for the screw for the support until the whole plane is assembled.

Next cut out the one-eighth-inch slot for the rudder at the back of the body. This can be done with the back saw, but be careful to get the slot exactly the right size so the rudder can be slipped into place and held without nailing.

Get out all the other pieces now according to the dimensions shown on your stock list. In boring the one-quarter-inch holes in the wheel axle hangers, be careful not to split the pieces. Hold them in a vise crosswise of the grain. The axles can be made from a piece of one-quarter-inch dowel. Put axle in place and nail the hangers to the body. The wheels are easily made by describing a circle one and and three-quarters-inch in diameter. At the centre bore one-quarter-inch holes, then remove stock carefully to the circumference of the circle. Do this with a chisel, paring carefully to the line. Next put the wheels in place.

Now cut the dowels for supporting the long planes. Fasten the planes to the dowels by driving a brad through the plane into the end of the dowel.

For the wiring use black iron stove pipe or picture wire—something that will bend easily. Bore holes with a brad awl and place wires as shown in the drawing. The planes can now be set on the body and nailed in place. It is hardly necessary to caution about using the right kind of nails. Any boy knows that a large nail will split such thin stock. Next make the rudder and place in position. If a good job has been done, it will fit so snugly that no nails will be necessary to hold it into position.

The making of the propeller requires great care. Notice that the thickness is the same the whole length but that the width varies from three-quarter-inch at the centre to seven-eight-inch at the ends. Get out the piece seven-eighths-inch wide at first, then describe a three-quarters-inch circle at the centre, and lay out as shown. Form it with care. A good sharp knife will be the best tool to use. The blades are but one-sixteenth-inch thick and it will be very easy to split them unless attention is given to the direction of the grain of the wood. For fastening to the end of the body a round head screw or a nail with a large head may be used. Bore a hole through the centre of the propeller of a size that will permit it to turn very easily. Put in place with a washer between the end of the body and the propeller.

Next balance the whole weather vane and bore hole for the round head screw at the point of balance. This point should come, for appearance, about four and one-quarter-inch from end of body. Should the point not come at about this distance, balance by fastening a small bit of lead or metal on the lighter end. The model is suspended from any convenient support by means of the stick as indicated. It should turn easily on the support.

Paint the whole machine gray with red, white and blue stripes on the tail. On the upper and lower sides of the planes paint the design as shown. No size for this is given but it should be in good proportion for the space it is to be placed on. Here again I am leaving something for the boy to use his individual initiative on. These colors and their arrangement conform to and are characteristic of Government aeroplanes.

Uncle Jerry's Mail

Any boy or girl may write to Uncle Jerry. Address him at The Montreal Star. Letters should be written on one one side of the paper only.

Dear Uncle Jerry,—

My brother Ernest is going to be a Soldier of the Soil this summer and he will go to Ontario. I wish I were old enough to go too, but anyway I will have a garden at home and I will grow potatoes. My mother says that she will buy the potatoes that I grow. My father has a big garden. He won prizes at the fair last year for tomatoes and celery.

JOHN WHITLEY.

E. Lowry.—I'm glad you were able to make the marble game. Did you enter it at the Boy Scout's Hobby Show. But perhaps you are not a Scout!

Jennie MacManus.—I'm always glad to hear from a niece. So you like boys' books better than girls' books!

Arthur T. M.—There are three maple leaves on your family's service flag, are there? Well done! Yes, write again.

Harold Hetheridge.—So you want to know if Uncle Jerry's a Scotchman. No, he isn't but he likes oatmeal porridge!

Charlie Cooke.—Go to the Y.M.C.A. for information about the Soldiers of the Soil movement. I'm afraid, however, that you are too young, Charlie, to join. Couldn't you have a garden of your own at home and so assist food production.

POLICEMEN OF THE AIR

We may soon see aerial policemen regulating the traffic of the air, just as today they stand guard at busy street crossings. The air lanes in some parts of Europe are so crowded with aircraft that definite rules must be enforced to avoid collisions, says F. A. Collins, in Boys' Life. As our great training aviation fields grow busier in America, the same regulations will soon be enforced. The aircraft, since they fly a mile a minute or faster, require much more room than surface vehicles.

The air traffic rules followed today in Europe have been worked out . . . If two aircraft meet each other end on, each steers to the right so that they will pass each other at a distance of at least 100 yards. If they passed too close to each other, the suction of the propellers might prove dangerous. When one aircraft overtakes another, the machine in the rear is responsible for keeping clear of the forward craft. If it turns to the right to pass, it must steer a course at least 100 yards away, while, if it turns to the left, it must pass at a distance of 350 yards.

An aircraft is not permitted to pass below or above another aircraft, unless the vertical distance separating them is 800 feet. Even when separated by this distance, an aircraft is not allowed to remain persistently above or below another craft. The laws are especially strict in forbidding any aircraft to turn in across the bow of another aircraft or foul it on any way. If one of the aircraft is an airship or balloon, the clearance of 100 yards must be increased to 600 yards.

An ingenious rule has been laid down for all aircraft approaching each other in cross directions. The craft which sights another in what is called its "right forward quadrant" must give way. In other words the pilot must keep a sharp lookout ahead and one drawn at 30 degrees or at right angles on his right side and act accordingly. The other machine is at liberty to continue on its course undisturbed.

The aircraft are not allowed to make long glides or quick rises, except near their landing places, so as not to confuse other traffic. Before an aircraft rises from the ground, it must take note of the position of all aircraft aloft and make allowances for them. A red flag must be displayed before an aircraft rises from the ground, as a signal to the air lanes. The rules advise all aircraft not to fly above cities or towns, except it be absolutely necessary.

BOY SCOUT NEWS

Representatives from the following out of town troops are in Montreal for the Hobby Show: Buckingham, Lachute, Granby, Three Rivers, Beauharnois, Quebec, Abbotsford. Two scouts from the 1st, Lachute troop are competing in the boxing and wrestling department. They will make a strenuous effort to carry a championship back to Lachute with them. F. R. Badge examinations will be held next Friday night at 7:30 o'clock, at the badge rooms, 28 Belmont street. Examinations for ambulance and missioners badges will be held. It is hoped that every boy entered for these badges will be on hand to take his examination.

Entries for the Hugh Paton Ambulance Trophy close on Wednesday, April 17. Are you entering a team?

During the month of March, 104 proficiency badges were earned. Here they are in detail: ambulance 5, buglers' 1; cyclists', 8; electricians 3; firemen's, 27; laundryman's 18; marksmen's, 5; missioners, 14; pathfinders, 8; telegraphists, 14; four King's scout badges were also issued.

SPRING THOUGHTS

HOW TO PUT AN EGG INTO A BOTTLE.

To accomplish this seeming incredible act, requires the following preparation: You must take an egg and soak and soak it in strong vinegar, and in process of time its shell will become quite soft, so that it may be extended lengthways without breaking; then insert it into the neck of a small bottle, and, by pouring cold water upon it, it will re-assume its former figure and hardness. This is really a complete curiosity, and baffles those who are not in the secret to find out how it is accomplished.

THE DIFFERENCE.

"Oh, I must live!" one said and then
Who told him that 'mong living men
His little life was needed?

"Freedom must live!" another said.
As o'er the ridge he bounded.
On its red slopes they found him dead
By his brave men surrounded.

One spared himself, his soul became Dead as a tree, dry, rotten;
One fell—but ah! a country's fame
Is by such deaths begotten.

OH BOYS!

WHO can drive a horse? Who can feed and tend horses? Who can milk cows? Who can hoe potatoes or weed turnips? Who can drive a hay rake or a tedder or fork hay? Who can stook grain or stack or help at thrashing? Who can do any of the thousand and one things that have to be done on a farm, often all day long in the hot summer sun?

Who is willing to do any or all these things to help the farmers of Canada raise more food for our Allies?

Every boy who will join the

S.O.S.

Soldiers Of the Soil

will have a chance to do all these things, and if he does not know how to do them he will soon learn, if he is willing and has the right stuff in him.

It is absolutely necessary that the farmers of Canada shall have not less than 25,000 boys to help on the farms this year.

Boys who volunteer in the Soldiers of the Soil will not only be paid regular wages, but the Government of Canada will present each boy who works for three months, with a Bronze Badge of Honor.

Enlist with your High School Teacher, Scout Master or Y. M. C. A. Secretary. Enlistment will begin April 1 and continue till April 6.

All boys of 15 to 19, inclusive, are eligible.

SHAKESPEARE FOR FOOLS

COMMENT on Shakespeare in American newspapers is usually either cynical or sneering. "Poor old Shakespeare. His day is done. All very well for some people, but the American theatre demands drama with 'pep' in it." That is the gist of the opinions usually presented. However, we are grateful to Mr. Heywood Broun, of the New York Tribune, for a refreshingly novel angle of criticism. Mr. Broun's plaint is that "Julius Caesar" is not a fitting play to select for school study, and he wonders how it comes about that this particular choice is so often made.

Mr. Broun's reasons for protest are remarkable. He finds "Julius Caesar" immoral for young people, who, he says, "experience difficulty in realising that Brutus and Cassius were heroes and Antony a villain." From this somewhat curious preamble he proceeds to a violent denunciation of the funeral oration, which he describes as "a mixture of sophistry, cheap sentimentalism, and base bribery of the proletariat." He expresses the hope that "school teachers will point out that the mob is induced to desert the cause of democracy for seventy-five drachmas."

* * * *

Why, what can be the matter with history—or is it Mr. Broun? I have been cherishing the impression for a good many years now that Caesar and Antony were on the side of Rome's popular party, and that Brutus and Cassius were very far from being leaders of the democratic mob. I have even imbibed the belief that Shakespeare glossed over with a fine hand the assassination policy of the reactionaries and enveloped the gentlemen who "evacuated" Catiline and separated Cicero's head from his torso with the odor of sanctity—but he seems to have arranged that the sympathy of the audience shall lie with Caesar and his avengers.

However, this may be all wrong. The only other alternative is that Mr. Broun is all wrong—and that seems a painful thing to have to suggest. Candor, however, compels me to point out that Shakespeare was no simpleton, but a very subtle man. In this perhaps lies the explanation of Mr. Broun's otherwise inexplicable travesty of history—and Shakespeare, which are not always in accord by a very long margin.

Arthur Hopkins, the New York producer, has just published a book on the present state of the theatre, entitled "How Is Your Second Act?" In this book Mr. Hopkins makes a vehement attack on realistic detail in scenery and properties, to this effect:

"What are mere words against a fine old spinet, or a delicate situation in front of a grandfather's clock that is crying:—

"'Look at me! I am two hundred years old—the real thing! I've survived a thousand better plays than this! Look at me! To hell with the play! Tick-tock-tick-tock—brrrr.'"

"Detail has been the bane of the American theatre for twenty years—detestable, irritating detail, designed for people with no imagination—people who will not believe they are in a parlor unless they see the family album.

"And on the other side of the world the unenlightened Chinese for centuries have been presenting drama to unimaginative people wherein scenes were never changed, and palaces, forest, legions and hordes were summoned by the wave of a property man's bamboo stick.

"The whole realistic movement was founded on selfishness—the selfish desire of the producer or scene painter to score individually, to do something so effective that it stood in front of the play and shrieked from behind it."

* * * *

There is a great deal to be said for Mr. Hopkins' argument. The craze for realism can do the drama no good. But on the other hand, it is conceivable that a certain amount of realism in scenery may at times aid in imposing upon the audience the spirit of the play. Surely this is the case with the Irish Players, for instance.

What Mr. Hopkins is concerned about is that the whole thing is overdone. And he is perfectly right. Far too often we have scenery and properties screeching realism at us,—and acting too pitiful for words. A sane balance between the two, with the play kept always foremost in perspective and importance, is the real road to inspiring dramatic interpretation.

* * * *

Mr. Hopkins, by the way, pays the dramatic critics his respects in a pungent little paragraph when he says:

"Possibly there is no influence more deadly to the development of the theatre in America than indifferent dramatic critics. Once they reach the weary state of mind that robs them of the enthusiasm to assail the spurious and foster the real, the one road for advanced theatre propaganda is closed."

Au contraire. It may be permissible to state, in this connection that it demands a constitution of iron to withstand the onslaughts which present-day drama frequently makes upon one's stock of native enthusiasm. He who can retain his enthusiasms these days is a fortunate individual. Mr. Hopkins has hit the nail on the head and driven it in deep, however, when he says that without enthusiasm there can be no advanced theatre propaganda. What we want is a little elementary theatre propaganda, most of the time.

Live News About Plays and Players

WOULD the forgetful gentleman who, while apparently sleeping through the second act of "Polyanna" on Tuesday night at His Majesty's, thoughtlessly withdrew a hatpin from the hat with which it was intimately concerned, return it to its original owner, and incur thereby the owner's gratitude?

I am requested to make this request in a prominent place, and I hasten to do so, feeling sure that probably the gentleman does not know he is in possession of the pin and may possibly hurt himself, should he meet with an accident getting off a street car while asleep.

"Mary's Ankle," which comes to His Majesty's next week, has to do with three young collegians, a doctor, a lawyer, and a mental scientist. They have no money, but the mental scientist is well endowed with ideas for getting some. He engineers the pawning of the landlady's parrot. Then, when the ill-gotten gains of this venture are taken away from all three by the blandishments of a charming young charity canvasser, the financier, as he calls himself, suggests that the doctor send out announcements to his rich relatives in the West of his forthcoming marriage to an imaginary Mary Jane Smith, of Elizabeth. Undoubtedly any valuable presents, all of them pawnable, will result. The scheme works out well enough, only the presents sent are all clearly intended for the supposed bride.

At this point a real Mary Jane Smith arrives on the scene, and she happens to be the young charity canvasser, with whom the doctor had fallen violently in love. It taxes the inventiveness of all three pals to explain away the lingerie which has come to the doctor as wedding presents, and the arrival of the doctor's rich uncle to congratulate him and his bride adds some very amusing and intricate complications to his dilemma.

Zelda Sears, who appears in "Mary's Ankle," made her first big New York hit as Hettie Canby in "The Nest Egg." Her girlhood ambition was to become a reporter, and she engaged in that capacity on the Fort Huron Times, when she was scarcely sixteen years old. Of Italian-American parentage, she is proud of being the grand-daughter of Angelic Faldi, a noted sculptor and painter, whose name and fame are perpetuated in the rural decorations that adorn the Catholic Cathedral of Detroit.

Ambitious to continue her literary career in a wider field, Miss Sears journeyed to Chicago, and found a place in the Evening News of that city. One of her first assignments was to interview Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, and in order to introduce a touch of human interest in her "copy," she asked Mme. Bernhardt's permission to appear as an "extra lady" in the bill for that night, which was "Camille."

Whether it was her Italian parentage, her grandfather's fame as a sculptor, or that Bernhardt discerned latent dramatic ability in the youthful tyro, will never be known, but on receiving Miss Sears in her dressing room after the performance that night, she advised the girl to give up her reportorial work in favor of the stage.

Walter Jones, the popular rotund comedian, also with "Mary's Ankle," scored his first big hit in the role of a tramp in Edward E. Rice's famous burlesque, "1492." Then, like many another actor who has created a character which stands out above all other similar impersonations, Jones found he had a Frankenstein on his hands. No manager could be induced to give him a trial in any other kind of a role. He grew so tired of being the hobo that he actually let several remunerative engagements go and lay idle for weeks; but what finally determined him to forswear forever the stage habiliments of a Weary Willie was an amusing but at the same time harrowing experience that he had in a small one-night stand in New England.

It seems that the town authorities had decided to get rid of the horde of tramps that had been making their winter quarters there, and notices had been posted in conspicuous places warning every stranger without employment not to let another day's sun go down upon him in that particular city. Jones was doing his well-known tramp impersonation. He had stepped outside the stage door to get a breath of fresh air during the first intermission, and had been attracted to a barn across the alley, where a crap game was in progress. He was recognised by the players and was just about to try his luck for a roll of two when along came the town constable, who looked funnier, Jones remembered afterwards, than any impersonator had ever made up for one on the stage.

The rest of the story need scarcely be told. Despite his violent remonstrations, and with the hearty guffaws of the crap-shooters ringing in his ears, Jones was haled around to a nearby station, and barely managed to make his identity known to the lieutenant at the desk and get back to the theatre in time for his next entrance.

There are legions of people who can talk on any subject "right off the bat," just at a word from you, and a lot of folk who are ready to sing at a nod of the head, but Bob Hall, who comes to Loew's next week, is one of the few men who can compose a poem or a song immediately around any word or thought suggested by any member of his audience. As an extemporaneous spring poet, Bob is in a class by himself. He comes, in addition, with a budget of new songs and parodies.

Talking about songs, there will be a collection of the most popular of them in "Melody Land," the headliner. And some classical selections will be heard from the Misses Parker. Florence and Marguerite have been in Montreal before, but not at this theatre. To celebrate their return they will include in their repertoire a few French numbers. There can be no doubt that vaudeville audiences clamor for music—not popular stuff alone—and the booking office is seeing to it that Loew's patrons are getting what they like best.

The famous "Ziegfeld Follies" are to be exhibited at His Majesty's Theatre for the week of April 15. The newest "Follies" is by George V. Hobart and Gene Buck, with music by ictor Herbert, Raymond Hubbell, Jerome Kern and Dave Stamper. It is in two acts and twenty odd Joseph Urban scenes, all of which have been staged by Ned Weyburn. The cast, which comprises the names of one hundred and fifty entertainers, includes Will Rogers, Bert Williams, Eddie Canter, W. C. Fields, Don Barclay, Officer Russell Vokes and Don. Thomas Richards, Gus Minton, Clay Hill, Lester Ostrander, Addison Young, Arthur Rose, Miss Fanny Brice, Allyn King, Mildred Richardson, The Fairbanks Twins, Doroth Richardson, Doris Lloyd, Elsie Yick, Helen Leisy, Jean Barnette, Virginia Taylor, Florence Kern, Virginia Caldwell, and Lulu Martell.

The Fairbanks Sisters are to shine next season as dramatic stars. They are to be presented by Florenz Zeigfeld in a farce comedy entitled "The Gold Dust Twins." The piece is being written by Lou Houseman, a noted Chicago journalist. The professional rise of the dainty Fairbanks twins has been rather remarkable—they have been appearing before the public less than four years, most of the time in screen plays. Last season they scored in Dillingham & Ziegfeld's production ot the Century Theatre, New York.

Gus Hill, in days gone by the champion Indian club swinger of America, afterwards becoming prominent in cartoon and burlesque entertainment, now has side-stepped and entered the minstrel arena. He will offer at His Majesty's Theatre, for the week of April 22nd, his minstrel performance.

The chief feature of the show is the singing of Will Thompson, who has few equals on the entire minstrel stage. His song, "Somebody Loves You, Dear," brings back to mind his old song, "When the Sun Kissed the Rose Goodnight," sung in the Honey Boy Minstrels.

The second part, an original creation of James Gorman, opens with a scene "somewhere in France," aboard the battleship "Alabama." Next is a musical and comedy act, followed by a singing and talking act. There are also entertaining pickaninnies, a soft shoe dancer, some plantation songs and ensemble dancing, the show closing with the 'Black Politicians," a satire on political appointments, in which all the principals appear.

There never is any doubt concerning the merits of an Arthur Hammerstein musical production. Hence the announcement of the coming to His Majesty's Theatre for the week of April 29th of "You're in Love," another Hammerstein offering and his latest success, is likely to be welcomed.

"You're In Love" owes its triumph to the same author and composer who were responsible for "Katinka," "High Jinks" and "The Firefly." Authentic reports credit it with being considerably richer in point of novelty. The cast of singers, dancers and comedians includes Miss Edna Pendleton, Marguerite Strasselle, Alice Johnson, Raymond Crane, Ralph Whitehead, W. H. White, Harry T. Hanlin, Billy Cotton, and Maxson and Brown, exceedingly clever dancers.

Howard McKent Barnes' problem drama, dealing with birth control, "Her Unborn Child," will play a return engagement at the New Empire Theatre next week, commencing Monday night. Matinees will be given on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

This play has been endorsed by press and pulpit everywhere. During the engagement of "Her Unborn Child" at the New Theatre, the matinee performance will be reserved exclusively for the ladies. No men will be admitted at the afternoon performances.

"Her Unborn Child" will be presented at the New Empire with several members of the original cast. Miss Alice DeLane will be seen in the role of Mrs. Livingston. She is best known for her work in "Madame X."

Nina Payne, to be seen at the Princess next week, was one of the first exponents of descriptive dancing in America. When Mons. Molasso introduced the Apache and French dance pantimime in this country, Miss Payne was his premiere. Her work was so creditable that she quickly became a vaudeville feature in her own right. Her dancing ability, coupled with her originality, has advanced her quickly in her profession.

Those artists who undertake to tell a story in dance almost without exception utilize themes. It may be that fantasy is more classical than reality, but it is probably because the mind accepts more readily the so-called poetic symbolism than it does pictured facts. Therefore, Miss Payne is again a pioneer in descriptive dancing. Her present program contains a group of character studies in dancing. For the most part these are travesties, but each dance tells a story quite as distinctly as though it were printed in a book.

Phil Godel, manager of the Francais Theatre, the playhouse playing "pop" vaudeville, has been transferred by Fred Crow, the local representative of the Canadian United Theatres, to the Dominion Theatre, Ottawa, the theatre which "splits" with the Francais. Mr. Godel will be at the Ottawa playhouse for a number of weeks.

With the closing performance of "The Candy Shop," the musical comedy being presented this week by the Orpheum Musical Comedy Stock Company, tonight the engagement of that company comes to an end. It will be remembered by those who have seen the productions as an excellent stock company, with productions on an exceptionally sound scale. It has suffered most undeservedly from an inexplicable lack of public support.

Zella Russell, with the "Big Burlesque Review" Company, at the Gayety next week, is an accomplished pianist. She is also a humorist, as the following observations from her pen indicate:

"The fact that piano playing is done with the fingers is no reason for refusing to also use your brain while practising."

"The fact that a piano has no conscience is no excuse for your not having one when playing late at night or very early in the morning."

"The fact that the piano bench is wood gives you no right to play as if you were made of the same material."

"War Mystery" is Largest Wooden Steamer Launched

ORANGE, Texas, April 4. — The "War Mystery," said to be the largest wooden steamer ever launched, and which now lies in the Sabina river being equipped with steam engines, will boast its title as the world's greatest for only a brief period. Five other ships of similar design, each with a greater cargo capacity than the War Mystery, are in course of construction here and by the way work is progressing, all will soon enter the water. In addition to these more than a score of smaller wooden vessels are in the local yards, all in different stages of completion and all progressing rapidly under the hands of 4,000 ship builders, most of whom have gathered here within the year.

The War Mystery has a cargo capacity of 4,700 tons while the five great ships to be launched will be able to care for 5,000 tons each.

Nearly all of the lumber that goes into these vessels is grown on the gulf coast, in most instances only a short distance from Orange. Preparatory to the activity in the ship building industry, saw mills were established with a capacity of 650,000 board feet each day. The raw material is floated down the Sabine river from the forests of Texas, handled by the new saw mills and moved right on to the ship yards.

It requires from 1,250,000 to 1,500,000 feet of timber to construct a ship of the War Mystery class and the saw mills are hard pressed to keep pace with the ship builders. Between 4,000 and 4,500 men are at work in shipyards and the weekly payroll is more than $75,000. The lumber mills are using about 1,600 men with a payroll of $10,000 weekly.

NEXT WEEK'S SHOWS AT LOCAL THEATRES

HIS MAJESTY'S. — Farce comedy, "Mary's Ankle," by May Tully, formerly well-known in Montreal, and a graduate of Victoria College. Comes from Bijou Theatre, New York. Has had a successful run, and won considerable popularity. Has an ingenious plot, and will be presented by the New York cast, including Zelda Sears and Walter Jones.

"Pippin."—Your surmise that I am grey-haired, crotchety, afflicted with gout and "probably half-blind" is not correct. I am sorry to have to disappoint your expectations, but candor compels. However, I plead guilty to liking Ibsen. I shall be pleased to lend you any of his plays you would like to read. William Archer's translations are the best.

* * *

"Rub-a-Dub."—I don't mind in the least. You are entitled to your own opinion, of course. Buy why write to me? You should address your letter to the police department. I am not—thank Heaven—a member of the movie censor (ruination) board.

"Investigator."—You seem to be. If you can give me any one reason why I should give you the information you seek, I will do so. My own view is that you have no right to ask. Why don't you write to Miss Adams yourself?

H. A. Baillie.—Chinese drama is the oldest in the world. I believe some of the dramas written ten thousand years ago are still running—the performance has not ended yet.

"Piffle."—It is.

* * *

"Up-to-Date."—I seem to have read something of the kind before. But Shakespeare's reputation will doubtless survive your onslaught, and as for that lunatic Baconian theory, so-called, nobody but buffoons and notoriety-hunters and a few harmless old fogeys with "a tile loose" persists in keeping it alive. If you wish to join the happy throng, all right. Any man who rescribes "Cymbeline" as "tommyrot" ought to see a doctor.

"Forget-Me-Not." — I wish I could, but so long as you insist on sending me the same wall week after week, despite my pellucid hints that it is hardly likely to secure publication before the millenium, how can I?

"Will-o'-the-Wisp." — Elusiveness is sometimes a charm, and occasionally a godsend, but I have yet to learn that Greek is a suitable medium for the expression of concrete ideas on vaudeville. Try it in Volapuk.

LONDON "HELLO GIRLS" HONORED.

LONDON, April 4.—Telephone girls who volunteered for service during recent London air-raids have been awarded a special badge of honor by the government. It is a round badge surmounted by a crown and bears the words, "London Telephone Service. Air Raids," followed by a Latin motto meaning "Love of Country leads them."

The herd of fifty pedigreed cows at the Laurytown Almshouse Farm, Penn., are to have the benefit of steam heat for the rest of the winter according to the decision of the directors. This action was taken because the buildings were cold and consequently resulted in loss of milk production.

ASK ME.

A Goodwin Girl.—Before receiving the reply to your question you must fill out form number 23, giving your name, age, sex, nationality, and state clearly any tendencies toward insanity in the family. As references, two lawyers and one real estate agent are required.

L. B. and C.—Lois Wilson is the star in Alimony.

Blessings be on the head of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company. He has issued an order forbidding the use of 'camouflage," because it has been so overworked as to become a source of irritation to persons who have more than a one-track mind; "intensive," same reason; "psychology," because it is a word used by intensive persons who seek to camouflage their lack of knowledge; "efficiency expert," because there is no such thing; "somewhere in France," because it lacks originality, and "greatest show on earth," because there ain't no sech animal!

TURN EAST, TURN WEST, AND CHOOSE THE BEST IN NEXT WEEK'S FILMS

From among the piles of typewritten tissue paper and strikingly printed press sheets sent in for the instruction, amusement and assistance of the moving picture editor, the program at the St. Denis stands out as next week's compelling attraction.

For why—a really truly picture actress is to appear in person, adding personality and magnetism to her art as depicted on the screen. A tangible actress gives as much life to a photoplay as a human voice does to an orchestra selection, but Rita Jolivet has more to offer than mere bows and smiles.

"Lest We Forget," the screen feature of the week, is based on her experiences as a survivor of the Lusitania disaster. The story follows the experiences of a soprano of the Paris Opera Comique who falls into German hands when her home village is invaded in the first great advance of the enemy. After escaping into Holland, her broken love affair takes her to America, whence she returns on the Lusitania. The main feature of the film is the sinking of the liner, showing the struggles of the drowning passengers and their desperate efforts to reach the life-boats. Miss Jolivet, who is a native of France, made her stage debut in London.

Sessue Hayakawa's popularity is steadily increasing in Montreal, where his dignified Oriental acting is apparently much appreciated. A reprint of one of his earlier pictures, "The Cheat," has been booked by the Imperial for next week and his long list of admirers have already noted the dates.

To a different public possibly will appeal the Imperial's second booking, "La Tosca," a film representation of Sardou's great play. The prospect of seeing Pauline Frederick in the leading role seems altogether satisfactory, as one imagines that her art is well suited to the interpretation of this dire tragedy.

• • •

An Ince production, "The Guilty Man," adapted from the French, will be shown at Loew's. Judging from the title and a condensed synopsis, "The Guilty Man" falls into the class called strong. The leading parts are played by Gloria Hope and Vivian Reed and exceptional photography is promised in the settings.

• • •

"The Price of a Good Time" is the telling title submitted by the Holman. Probably the good time in question wasn't worth the candle, for according to the synopsis there is a fearful explosion on the part of pugnacious brother Dick on the last night of the grand and glorious lark. However, it ends happily as all movies must, so why worry?

• • •

Real people who go to picture plays and write for papers in the United States say disinterestedly pleasant things about Bessie Love, and flattering things about her work. Is she one of the coming darlings of the fans, one wonders? At least it is thoughtful of the New Grand to book her latest photoplay, "The Great Adventure," just when yours blase wanted to see her.

• • •

The Fox Kiddies will continue to be utterly adorable until they become hopelessly spoilt. There are no signs of any such tragedy about young Francis and his playmate Virginia, so off to the Strand everyone and see the babies in "Treasure Island."

• • •

Now "turn to the east and turn to the west and pick out the very one that you like best"—only, don't blame me!

Chatty Notes About New Films and Movie People

William S. Hart, in response to a letter from Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, will start out in the interests of the Liberty Loan as soon as he finishes the picture he is now making at the Ince studios in Hollywood.

• • •

Anita King has a service flag with forty-eight stars in it. Impossible, you say? Not at all. These stars do not stand for husbands; they represent sweethearts who are now fighting on the battlefront. Miss King goes to the Balboa studio every morning with the flag draped across the back of her famous roadster.

• • •

The real sensation of the past week among the scandal mongers at the Lasky studio in California has been the fact that old Bill Hart was seen in the act of pouring tea at a Red Cross benefit. Great fear was expressed that this famous exponent of Western characters will degenerate into a lounge lizard and run around with a rose in his buttonhole, and wear lavender kid gloves to adorn his trigger finger.

• • •

Nothing in Mr. Chaplin's career is funnier than the line which he was careful to have inserted in his contract, to the effect that he was not to be required to do anything that would detract from his dignity as an artist.

• • •

We are accustomed to speak of moving pictures as an infant industry. We talk of happenings of eight and ten years ago as a bit of ancient film history. Vitagraph dates its history farther back than that, and on March 17 celebrated its twenty-first birthday anniversary. This coming of age calls to mind that Vitagraph was formed March 17, 1897, by Albert E. Smith, William Rock and J. Stuart Blackton. William Rock is dead, J. Stuart Blackton has joined the Paramount ranks and Albert Smith of the trio alone remains at the Vitagraph studios.

• • •

Sonia Markova is dead, and in her stead arises one Greta Ahrbin, alias Gretchen Hartman. In the beginning Gretchen Hartman established considerable reputation as a screen actress. Then one day Fox sent out startling announcements of the arrival in this country of Mme. Sonia Markova, celebrated Russian actress. Lo and behold, Sonia was none other than our old friend Gretchen, assuming the Markova camouflage, because of the German sound to Hartman. Now, says the Fox publicity man, there never was a Gretchen Hartman. The lady's real name is Greta Ahrbin and she was born of Swedish parents, so henceforth we shall see Greta Ahrbin on the screen.

• • •

Wallace Reid paints pictures in his spare time. He recently has taken up pen and ink work, and it is said a magazine has asked him for a series of cartoons.

• • •

• • •

Did anyone say dust! Next to the fuzzy atmosphere of certain picture theatres the deplorable condition of metropolitan streets is claiming the centre of conversation. They say a new broom sweeps clean, but alas, not this particular civic broom. More dust accumulates in Montreal roadways the week after election than seven maids with seven mops could sweep up in half a year.

• • •

They are still talking of "Revelation" in New York and we are still grouching because we didn't see it. It appears that the Parents' League has endorsed it specially. Very thoughtless of them not to have consulted our censors.

• • •

Marguerite Clark has the mumps. Of all persons, this daintiest of dainty motion-picture stars has been pounced upon by Fate with an affliction, which, temporarily at least, distorts her well-known comely features. Fear is the only expression which has been "registered" by Miss Clark's face of late. Fear that she may not be able to be present in Philadelphia today, when, right after the unveiling of the replica of the Statue of Liberty by tiny Nona Martin, the four-year-old granddaughter of Secretary McAdoo, she is scheduled to sell Liberty Bonds at the principal booths.

New Plays at the New York Theatres

Special Cable to The Star.

NEW YORK, April 6.—Now that Holy week is past, the theatrical producers are again busy with new productions. Five new productions appeared in addition to two feature pictures, the opening of the Century Theatre roof under new management, Laurette Taylor's debut in Shakespeare at a matinee, and the removals of three plays to other theatres. The list of new offerings included two comedies, a musical comedy, a drama and a war melodrama.

Monday night Henry Miller opened his new playhouse, Henry Miller's Theatre, in West 43rd street, with "The Fountain of Youth," a comedy by Louis Evan Shipman. Mr. Miller heads the company, which includes Olive Tell, Lucile Watson, Frank Kemble Cooper, Hilda Spong, Lillian Cooper, Frank Sylvester, C. Leslie Austen, Robert Ames and Lewis Sealey.

Mr. Miller plays an American who has been so busy with his East Indian plantation that he has overlooked the joys of life. He comes home with a fortune and seeks the fountain of youth, his adventures making the play.

The new theatre is one of the handsomest in New York. The color scheme is old ivory and gold, the seats in brown and blue, and the carpet is black, with a pattern in colors. The curtain is beautiful, of walnut gold-figured damask, and over this there is a wonderfully embroidered and painted valance. The house seats about 1,000.

• • •

"The Fountain of Youth" proves an ideal medium for the expression of Mr. Miller's art, and was a fitting baptismal piece for his new theatre. The audience was one of the most brilliant of the season, and expressed its delight in terms which inspired Mr. Miller to an appreciation that rivalled in wit some of the best lines in what, on the whole, was a clever play.

"The Fountain of Youth," however, is only clever. It has nothing original to offer in the way of conception or character, but it sparkles almost all the time, and occasionally it flashes with surprising brilliance. Much of the credit for the general impression of satisfaction which it produced upon the audience was due to the direction and the glamor which the personality of Mr. Miller and Miss Tell threw over it.

Penrod, Booth Tarkington's small boy character, made famous by the Penrod stories, is to be seen on the stage. Klaw and Erlanger and George C. Tyler announce the forthcoming production of a play based on these tales. The play has been written by Edward E. Rose, and among its characters are nearly all the precocious youngster's companions, including Herman and Verman, Sam Williams and Georgie Bassett. The juvenile roles will be played by children. The play will not be seen here until August.

• • •

Laurette Taylor made her debut in Shakespeare at the Criterion Theatre, playing Juliet in the balcony scene from "Romeo and Juliet," Portia in the trial scene form "The Merchant of Venice," and Katherine in a condensed version of "The Taming of the Shrew."

Her leading men were O. P. Heggie as Shylock, Jose Ruben as Romeo, and Shelley Hull as Petruchio. In the casts were Frederick Perry Edward Mackay, Hubert Druce, Leonard Mudie and Lynn Fontanne. These special Shakespearean matinees will be given on the four Fridays in April, and will not interfere with the run of "Happiness."

• • •

Annie Hughes, who is as much at home in comedy, drama or musical plays as she is in the classical plays, will have her next Broadway appearance in a dramatic role in a musical play.

Iden Payne has added a new and most interesting production to the Ethel Barrymore repertoire in "The Off Chance," which, at the Empire Theatre, is one of the comedy successes of the season.

"The Orangeman," by St. John Ervine, is being considered for production by the Theatre Workshop of New York. It was Whitford Kane, the Irish actor, who played this little comedy with such skill in England and gave it its first taste of public success.

• • •

Edith Randolph, a virile American emotional actress, who was one of the first American players to leave for France, has returned to the United States, where she has transferred her activities. She is heading a company of players to present at the American camps a program of short plays.

Margaret Nybloc, a diminutive but adaptable and versatile comedienne, is the latest to contribute her artistic services to the cantonment cause. She has accepted an invitation to play with the company located at present at Camp Gordon, near Atlanta, and this week is acting in "It Pays to Advertise."

• • •

Oliver Morosco promises New York a view of "Mary's Way Out," by Ashton Stevens, dramatic critic of the Chicago Examiner, in September. Bertha Mann, who created the leading role in Los Angeles a few weeks ago, when the play received its premiere, will be entrusted with this part for New York.

• • •

Some of the plays that continue are: "Oh, Look," at the Vanderbilt Theatre; "Toot-Toot" at the derbilt Theatre "Toot-Toot" at the Cohan; Mme. Nazimova in "The "Wild Duck," Plymouth; "The Squab Farm," at the Bijou; "Going Up," at the Liberty Theatre; "The Off Chance," at the Empire; "The Copperhead," at the Shubert; "Sinbad," at the Winter Garden; "Oh, Lady, Lady!" at the Princess; "Seventeen," at the Booth; "Why Marry?" at the Astor; The Cohan Revue, 1918, at the New Amsterdam; "Happiness," at the Criterion, and "Seven Days' Leave," at the Park are crowding houses. "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" is filling the Republic. "Tiger Rose" is at the Lyceum, and "Polly With a Past," at the Belasco, "A Tailor-Made Man" is still at the Cohan and Harris; "Business Before Pleasure," at the Eltinge; "Jack O'Lantern," at the Globe and "The Little Teacher" at the Forty-eighth Street. "The Eyes of Youth" is at the Maxime Elliott; "Oh Boy," Casino; "Lombardi, Ltd.," Morosco, and "Yes or No" Longacre; "Flo-Flo," Cort; and "Cheer Up," Hippodrome; "Chu Chin Chow," Century; "Under Pressure," Norworth; "Her Country," "Punch and Judy," and "Maytime," Forty-fourth Street. The "Garden of Allah," Manhattan; "Sick-a-Bed," Gaiety; "A Cure for Curables," Thirty-ninth Street and "Let's Go," at the Fulton.

At Fox's Terminal Theatre, in Newark, on Sunday, the crowds which were waiting to gain entrance to the performance were so great, that they finally broke through the police lines, and smashed their way through the main doors of the theatre. THE concert scale which tipped far over to violinists at the beginning of the season is to dip towards the singers' side from now on, a junction of the violin and vocal recitals being effected next Friday evening in the Gluck-Zimbalist concert in the Monument National. The list of famous visitors closes with the names of Amato and Martinelli, baritone and tenor respectively of the Metropolitan Opera in New York; but Mr. Zimbalist will not be the last violinist to come by any means, since the amazing young Heifetz returns for a second concert, and Miss Isolde Menges, a musician of distinction, is due on the nineteenth.

The Dubois String Quartet will give its last concert of the season next Tuesday evening in the ladies ordinary of the Windsor Hotel.

Alma Gluck believes that wanting to accomplish a thing and being destined to accomplish it are two distinctly different matters. "When I see the hundreds of singers who are striving for a career; and when, as frequently happens, I grant a hearing to some aspirant for concert or operatic honors, the truth of the old old saying, 'artists are born and not made' impresses me more and more," said the famous soprano in a recent interview. "Because you want to be a singer or feel that a career awaits you is no reason at all to believe your talents will make you famous. Unless singing or playing is the greatest thing in your life, whether that knowledge is conscious or not, no amount of study nor ambition will avail. On the other hand, I do not believe any obstacle can interfere for very long in the achievement of great success if a person has the 'divine spark of genius.' I have never yet seen an artist of mediocre ability who did not blame a lack of opportunity or a lack of 'pull' for her failure to win fame. And, also, I have never met an unsuccessful artist who would admit that he or she had any faults."

* * *

In a recent interview Efrem Zimbalist offered the following advice to students of the violin: "Never practice more than an hour at a time; better half an hour with an interval of ten or fifteen minutes' rest, and then half an hour again. Hold the violin up, up, up! Nine pupils out of ten do not do this, and their bow can not be drawn straight across the strings, consequently the tone is not good. Spend more time practicing bowing; few young players appreciate the fact that the bow is as important as the fingers. Keep plenty of rosin on your bow, and buy the best strings you can afford."

* * *

Piano music by Greig, Debussy, Cyril Scott and MacDowell will be played at the concert to be given in the Ritz-Carlton on April 19 for the benefit of the Red Cross Society. Students taking part will also play some "Pagliacci" excerpts arranged for two pianos.

* * *

Arrangements for the annual concert of St. Andrew's Church, Westmount, on April 22, are now complete. The augmented choir and orchestra will number eighty-five under Mr. Whiteley as conductor, assisted by F. H. Blair at the organ, Miss Marvie Muse Bee, at the pianoforte and Mr. Reichling, orchestral leader. Cowen's cantata, "The Rose Maiden" will be the principal item.

* * *

The annual concert of the Young Men's Hebrew Association Orchestra will take place in the Monument National on the evening of Wednesday May 15. This orchestra consists of thirty pieces. J. J. Gagnier is the conductor. A portion of the program will be given up to the Y.M.H.A. Mandolin Club, directed by Geo. A. Peate.

* * *

The Apollo Glee Club, under the direction of Merlin Davies, will be heard at a concert to be given in the Central Y. M. C. A. Hall on Thursday evening, April 25.

* * *

Leo-Pol Morin, the Canadian pianist and a pupil of Raoul Pugno, will give a recital in Windsor Hall on the evening of Friday, April 26. He will play new French and Spanish music.

* * *

Missouri is to hold, in the Opera House of the town of Eminence, about Friday, April 1, "one of the biggest, best, longest, and prettiest old-time fiddlers' contests that has ever been held south of the Missouri River or west of Mason and Dixon's line." Old-time fiddlers from all parts of the United States are invited by the organizers to be present, register and participate. There will, of course, be prizes, and the choicest one, as usual, will go to the fiddler who fiddles the longest without a break in the tune.

Claude Debussy is Most Influential of the Modern Writers

"The death of Claude Achille Debussy," writes W. J. Henderson in the New York Sun, "has removed from the world of music the most influential figure of these recent years." Few now are the singers who do not sing his "Mandoline"; and not many are the pianists, professional or amateur, who are unfamiliar with the "Arabesques" at least, if not with Debussy's more intricate compositions.

Debussy was born in 1862. His first important work, "L'Enfant Prodigue," dates from 1884, his string quartet, 1893; "L'Apres-Midi d'Un Faune," for orchestra, 1906; "Pelleas et Melisande," the opera in which Mary Garden shines.

Maurice Ravel, born in 1875, is the most conspicuous follower of Debussy. Scriabine and Stravinsky represent the Russian development of his ideas.

* * *

Debussy's use of the "whole-tone scale," (the device of a flattened seventh), is at the centre of much discussion about his work; and this scale occurs in music known to the Greeks and in chants employed by early fathers of ecclesiastical music. Basing his harmonies on these ancient modes, Debussy obtained effects which when first heard, seemed bizarre and (to some) unpleasant. Another writer says:

"Intangibility is the chief quality of Debussy's orchestral pieces, his songs, his piano works and his string quartet. Most of his music is serious. His opera, "Pelleas," which Lichenberger has described as a perfect example of the wedding of French speech to musical notation, is wholly in tragic mood. But he had the gift of humor, which he displayed effectively in certain of his songs and short piano pieces."

Felix Borowski, the composer, writes in the Chicago Herald:

"Debussy was an original thinker, and much of that thinking which he put into the written word is worthy of consideration. At a time when it was considered sacrilegious to utter words of unfavorable criticism concerning the creations of the masters, Debussy was not afraid ao speak the truth that was in him. 'I have been reported,' he said once, 'as saying things about Wagner, Beethoven, that I have never said. I admire Beethoven and Wagner, but I refuse to admire them in a block just because I am told that they were great masters! Never!'

"'In our time, to my way of thinking, people behave with most unpleasing servility toward the "great masters;" I desire the freedom to say that a tiresome page wearies me, whoever its author was!'"

* * *

"As a composer Debussy always refused to be hurried. His methods were almost old-maidenish in their punctilious order and neatness. His desk was a model of orderliness and this passion for symmetry, for methodical exactness, he carried into his music. He was much annoyed when the ruling powers of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, endeavored to pin him down to a date for the completion of his operas 'L'Histoire de Tristan,' and 'La Chute de la Maison Usher.' 'There are days and weeks and often months,' said Debussy, 'in which no ideas come to me. No matter how much I try I cannot produce work that I am satisfied with. They say some composers can write regularly so much music a day—I admit I cannot comprehend it. Of course, I can work out the instrumentation of a piece of music at almost any time, but as for getting the theme itself—that I cannot do.'"

Eugene Ysaye has played the "Kreutzer" Sonata of Beethoven in public since he was fifteen years old, and among the pianists with whom he has played it are Rubinstein, d'Albert, Pugno, and Busoni, but never until just lately in New York has he played it with a woman. Miss Victoria Boshko.

The Musical Directory of London, England, states that some 1,250 professional singers are resident in that city.

Cadman Uses More Indian Material in His Opera "Shanewis"

The success in New York of Charles Wakefield Cadman's opera "Shanewis" will be heard about with interest by those innumerable students and amateurs who try Cadman's music on their pianos. Possibly no song written to English words has had greater vogue, both in the drawing room and in the concert hall, than "The Land of the Sky Blue Water," unless one gives premier place to "Down in the Forest," by Randon Ronald. Both Ronald and Cadman received, early in their careers, immense encouragement and help from singers of established reputation. It was from Mme. Melba that Ronald got substantial assistance when he was struggling to make himself known. She engaged him as her accompanist and when first she visited Montreal, it was Ronald who conducted the orchestra. Later she sang his songs and the popularity of "Down in the Forest," is largely due to its recurrence on her concert programs.

In Cauada's case, the help came from one of his compatriots, Mme. Nordica. She knew, as well as Cadman, the thorns growing about the path of the aspirant to musical fame and Cadman has spoken with intense gratitude of what he owes to her. Convinced of his talent, she brought his music to the notice of others and once she was satisfied of its worth, never gave a concert without putting one Cadman song on her program.

* * *

In "Shanewis," Mr. Cadman has taken some Indian material and some material of his own concoction for his thematic stuff, and has treated the matter according to the conventions of the modern lyric theatre.

Shanewis is a beautiful Indian girl of musical promise, who has been educated at the expense of Mrs. Everton. Mrs. Everton's daughter, Amy, is engaged to Lionel Rhodes; but when Lionel sees the Indian girl and hears her sing about the Robin Woman and the Ojibways, he forgets his blonde sweetheart and makes ardent love to Shanewis, who returns his love. She promises to marry him if he will go with her to her home on the reservation and see if his love will survive the test. When Lionel visits the Oklahoma reservation, the Indians are enjoying their pow-wow festivities. Harjo, an Indian in love with Shanewis, gives her a poisoned arrow once used by a girl of the tribe to avenge herself on her white lover. She does not know that Lionel is engaged to Amy, but finds it out when Amy arrives with her mother, bent on checking Lionel's infatuation for the Creek girl. Instantly her love turns to scorn, and she denounces him and the whole white race. The arrow, however, she throws away. It is picked up by Harjo, who shoots it into Lionel's heart.

* * *

Of the score of "Shanewis," the New York Sun said:

"Mr. Cadman has handled his material with no mean amount of skill. He has shown a greater command of the technic of opera than any of his predecessors among the American composers introduced at the Metropolitan, and while his music is not always distinguished, it is by reason of judgment in its treatment never, or rarely at any rate, without direct and simple effectiveness.

"Good declamation, continuous flow without irrelevant instrumental interruptions and clear, varied and very discreet orchestration are some of the most valuable traits of the score. The orchestration though simple, is not bald. It is full of color, but transparent."

Dr. Vaughan Williams, whose "Sea" Symphony has lately been performed at the Albert Hall, London, is at last coming into his own as one of the finest of living British composers, says an English exchange. His "London" Symphony, after nearly four years of neglect, was revived at Queen's Hall so successfully a short time ago, that it was soon repeated. Like other British composers of over military age, Dr. Williams volunteered for military service, and joined the R.A.M.C. early in the war. Another British composer, William Wallace (who wrote "Villon" and the "Freebooter's Songs") also joined the R.A.M.C. Even Sir Edward Elgar, who is now in his sixty-first year, has insisted on doing his soldiering in the Volunteers, as well as being a special constable.

Announcements and pictures for this department should be received by Thursday to ensure publication.

Madame Clara Butt Claims More People are Demanding Music

In the opinion of Mme. Clara Butt, the great contralto, more and more people, not only the rich but those with less money, are demanding music. Interviewed recently in London by a representative of the Christian Science Monitor, Mme. Butt said:

"Unquestionably, I find an increased appreciation and keener perception of the importance of music wherever I go. And this is strikingly evident in big industrial towns. My own experience is that instead of getting shorter, queues grow longer; and people seem willing to pay not only for a ticket, but, in addition, the price of waiting long hours outside a concert hall.

Asked what, in her opinion, were the reasons for the increased interest in music, Mme. Butt replied: "The conditions under which we are all living. There exists, as never before, a need of the solace and refreshment that art brings. In every human being is a latent love of beauty and truth, and today many are awakening to their heritage for the first time. Another reason is purely economic. Large classes, particularly in the industrial areas, are now earning higher wages; and that, of course, means greater spending capacity.

"Yet another reason, I think, could be found in the numberless concerts given to soldiers. They are helping enormously to raise the general standard of musical taste. The men have a hearty aversion to so-called patriotic songs and the wishy-washy sentimental ballad — anyone who knows uncensored versions of their own ditties will understand that—and prefer to listen to the songs that they themselves cannot sing. My husband tells me that in France, as far as his experience goes, one of the most popular isa song by Vaughan Williams."

* * *

(It should be explained here that Mr. Kennerly Rumford, Mme. Butt's husband, has been at the front practically ever since the war started; and that Vaughan Williams is a British composer of the modern school whose music is now much to the fore in England.)

* * *

Speaking of her own personal preferences in music, the singer said: "I adore Debussy and am tremendously interested in the work of moderns, like Ravel, Stravinsky and Schonberg. I was present at Queen's Hall when the 'Six Orchestral Pieces' of the last-named were hissed. Personally, I think the bewilderment felt by many people in listening to the new music is largely self-created; and I cannot understand how, if the hearer is free from prejudice, such music is found difficult to grasp. After all, what these composers are saying tomorrow, or the day after. Should it not be easier to listen to new conceptions of musical art than to those worn threadbare by repetition?

"Some, of course, find pleasure in platitudes, musical and otherwise; but, for many of us, when platitudes come in at the door, interest flies out of the window. It sounds like dreadful heresy, but frankly, Mozart annoys me. Mozart in his time was wonderful, but surely superficial. I cannot sing tragic words to pretty, tuneful music."

Sir Charles Santley celebrated his eighty-fourth birthday very quietly at home, says a London paper. He is still a marvel in vigor and, happily, he is passing on his well-tested methods of singing to pupils. One recalls a concert in the Albert Hall, whereat Sir Charles Santley, Mme. Patti (seventy-five last month), and Mme. Albani sang not so very long ago with a superb power that made young singers envious.

FATHER-AND-SON WEEK TO BE HELD IN MONTREAL NOW

Special Meetings Arranged to Strengthen Bond of Union

CHURCHES AND Y. M. CAMPAIGN

Father and Son and Co. Little Firms Which Canada Needs Many of Fathers, do you know your sons?

Sons, do you know your fathers?

You may both think you do, but do you really? Is there a bond of union between you, such as there should be, or are you merely just members of a household on intimate terms?

The Y.M.C.A., all over America, having decided to answer the above questions—or others like them—so far as in their power, will next week investigate the standing of the family firms throughout Canada and the United States. In doing so they will have the aid of the churches and other religious organizations and it is hoped that the result will be the creation of a number of firms—Father, Son and Co., whose headquarters are in the home. Father, having weathered the storm and stress of boyhood, should naturally be the head of the firm. By right and experience he is an authority on man making. He puts up a little money, a lot of experience and sympathy and some advice, but not too much. Son is the junior partner and supplies the raw material, while the "Co." is composed of mother and sister and the "gang," and other agencies that are necessary in the building operations.

Canada needs many thousands of such firms, all the partners of which are active in increasing the quality of their product.

WHAT THE WORK IS.

The National Father & Son Week which is to be held April 7th-14th will be by far the most extensive effort that has been made in establishing a close relationship between fathers and their boys. It is being promoted by the National Advisory Committee for co-operation in boys' work which is composed of official representatives of the various Protestant churches, the Sunday school associations and the Y.M.C.A. and its function is to correlate and standardize work with boys throughout the Dominion. This movement has formerly been pushed by the Y. M. C. A. who have only about seventy associations in Canada, but this year has the official endorsation of, and is being actively promoted by the great church organizations in Canada as well as the Y.M.C.A.

WHAT MONTREAL WILL DO.

In many of the Protestant churches tomorrow special sermons will be preached upon this subject. Then in each evening of the week there will be somewhere a Father and Son supper, when Mothers and Sisters will serve and then retire to allow the fathers and sons to talk together, to sing together, to yell together and grow close to each other. Here are the dates so far as obtainable:—Monday, Westmount Y.M.C.A.; Tuesday, Central Y.M.C.A.; Thursday, Northern Y.M.C.A.; Friday, Lachine Methodist church

There will also be dinners at St Matthew's Presbyterian church, Joint St Charles; at Rosemount Presbyterian church; and at All Saints, Anglican church The dates for these will be announced from the pulpits on Sunday.

BETTER UNDERSTANDING.

It is hoped that these reunions will result in a better acquaintance between fathers and sons and in many a joint open air Saturday afternoon during the coming summer, as well as the revelation to many a father of what is in his son's mind. Canadian young men have gone overseas by the thousands, and Canadian boys must take their places. Canada's young men are dying for their country Canadian boys must be taught to live for it. Father and Son Week will be a mighty stimulus in this task, not only because of the efforts of that week, but because of all it will set in motion. Many indifferent fathers will be awakened to a sense of duty of parental but of national and patriotic responsibility; new relationships between fathers and sons will be established.

Communities and churches will be aroused to the value of boy power. Aspiration will come to boys, and family and national life will be the richer because of the National Father and Son Week of 1918.

MOTOR NOTES AND NEWS

Of course the new city government will have plenty to do, if it does no more than undo what has been done in the last four years, but there is one elementary thing that presents itself as of first importance, and that is the use of the watering cart. All the filth of the last six months, at a conservative estimate, is now being blown into the eyes and noses of the long-suffering dwellers in this city. Isn't it time for the city's annual bath?

• • •

The motorist who has not yet taken his driving license had better step lively. The fee was due March 1, and the authorities are getting after delinquents. Several arrests have been made and more are likely in the near future. The unlicensed motorist is about as safe just now as a man of draft age without his exemption papers. The new number plates are being taken out much more rapidly. Apparently most owners have them, though there are still a number of the old red-figured plates of last year to be seen. Speeding is another offence that is under a strict ban. There have been a number of arrests and some fairly stiff fines on this score of late. Looks like a law-abiding year for motorists.

• • •

In connection with fines for speeding, there has been a great deal of dissatisfaction over the way the present procedure has worked out. There have been many cases of mistaken reading of number plates, with consequent summoning of an owner who was guilty of no offence, and of cars driven beyond the speed limit while in the possession of some one other than the owner or his authorized agent. The Automobile Club of Canada therefore is planning to recommend to the Government the adoption of a new system for penalizing speeders. The plan is to have two officers, separated by a stated distance along the road, to time machines, and a third who can be signalled when the legal limit is exceeded, and who then can stop the car, explain the offence and levy the fine. This plan, the club believes, will prevent delays, mistakes and arguments and will place the blame where it belongs. If the driver is the owner or the owner's agent, he is caught. If he is not, and is in possession of the car without authorization, he is in so much the worse position. Finally, the plan would do away with the summoning of owners days after an offence of which he may or may not have had knowledge. But it will be necessary to watch the credentials of the officer who holds you up; for the scheme offers a wonderful opportunity for the bogus representative of the law.

• • •

It is now definitely decided that the Laprairie dyke, the only unimproved section of the King Edward highway between here and the border, will be completed. Assurance that the work would be done this year was given this week by the Hon. F. B. Carvell, Minister of Public Works, who viewed the stretch for himself. The decision is particularly gratifying in view of Mr. Carvell's announcement that he expected to spend little money on public works this year. The Laprairie dyke has been a tire-sore for years and repeated attempts to have it rebuilt have been unsuccessful. Since last year a plank road has been necessary to permit of traffic passing. The completion of the highway proper will be of great benefit to American tourists, to the people of the South Shore and to the province as a whole.

• • •

The latest good road agitation calls for a better highway from south of Laprairie to Valleyfield, Beauharnois and Huntington. From Huntington to Malone the road is in good shape. So enthusiastic for the improvement are some of the people with summer places in the district that it is likely a prize will be offered for the municipality having the best road work done this season. With this stimulus, it is hoped that civic pride may be stirred until something tangible is accomplished.

• • •

The touring season in the province of Quebec isn't quite opening yet. The Montreal-Chambly road is quite passable, but not too good. The Quebec highway will not be suitable for motoring for ten days or so, depending on the weather, and the same may be said of the King Edward highway south of Laprairie.

• • •

Some interesting and important topics will be dealth with in the papers to be read at the good roads congress of the Canadian Good Roads Association, in Hamilton, May 7 to 10. Among them will be "Roads and the Farmer," in which a professor from an agricultural college will outline the benefits secured to the farmer by good roads: "Who Should Pay for the Road?" offering a full exposition of the much mooted question; "The Efficiency of the Highway in the Present Transportation Difficulties;" "The Most Important Consideration in Road Construction—Drainage;" "The Results of Tests with Various Types of Pavements," by W. H. Corwell, who built the service test road near Philadelphia, in which twenty types of pavement were used in a stretch of fifteen miles; "English and American Practise in the Construction of Tar and Concrete Roads," "Abatement of the Dust Nuisance;" "How the Good Roads of France are Helping to Win the War," by an officer who has actually built military roads in France; "The Roads of the Common People—Gravel and Macadam," and "Labor Shortage Solved by Efficient Machinery."

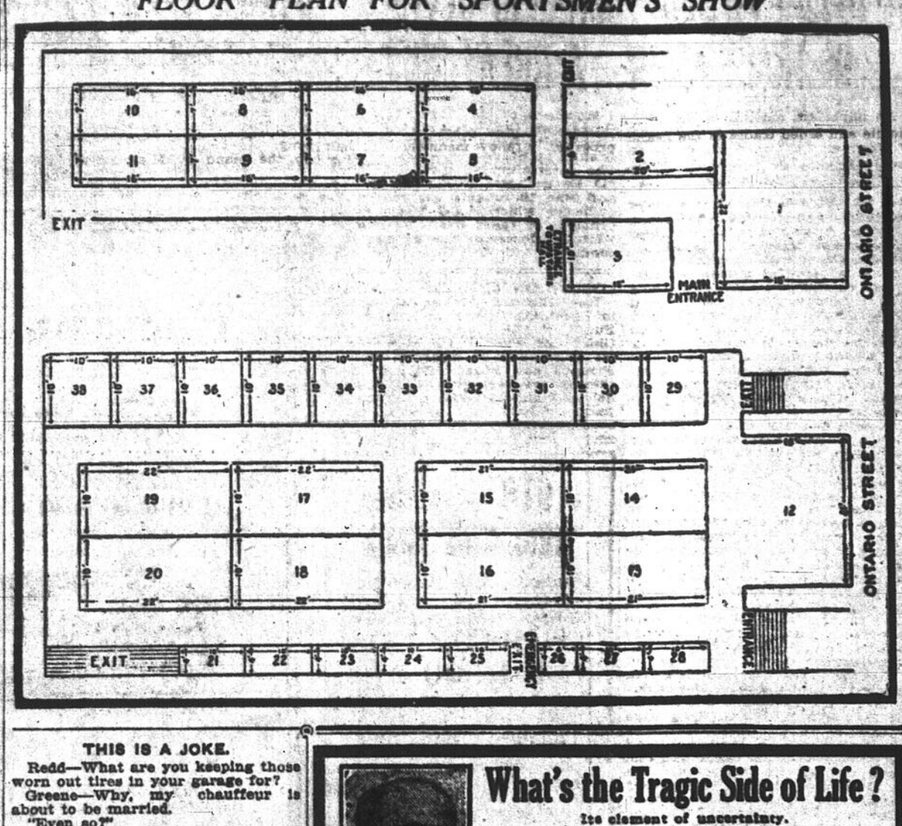

• • •

Because of the shortage of transportation space, due to the demands on the railways for war material carriage, there will be few heavy exhibits this year at the congress. Most of the exhibits will be either small models or photographs of the actual machinery.

A DIAGNOSIS OF THE CLIMATE.

Sir,—It's automobiles, the tires; I mean the air in them. When you think of all the automobiles in this country, each with four or six tires on them stuffed full of air, and then think of all the millions of barrels of air that are taken out of free circulation and squeezed into these tires, it's bound to upset the balance and cause trouble with the weather. I'll tell you how to fix it. Have Garfield or Hoover or someone declare an airless day, and about noon on this day make every one let the air out of his tires. Not all of a sudden, but easy, gradual like, and let the atmosphere spring back to normal again, and then see hat happens.—Prof. Clearus Mud in Chicago Tribune.

FLOOR PLAN FOR SPORTSMEN'S SHOW

THIS IS A JOKE.

Redd—What are you keeping those worn out tires in your garage for?

Greene—Why, my chauffeur is about to be married.

"Even so?"

"I want to throw a couple of old shoes at him."—Yonkers Statesman.

The British are making use of the passenger automobile for home defence. Instead of waiting for the Home Guards to march to a threatened spot they are whisked thither in motor cars. With a machine gun and four riflemen, this is a very formidable little fighting unit in case of a landing by airship or submarine.—Milestones.

CORONER DISPOSES OF FOUR INQUESTS

At the inquest held yesterday by Coroner McMahon into the death of Francis Xavier Gioutney, 858 Champs de Mars street, who fell downstairs at 149 Panet street, while under the influence of liquor yesterday and broke his neck, a verdict of accidental death was returned. A like verdict was returned in the case of Thomas Haines, who was killed while at work in a Longue Point munitions plant last night.

While talking to his sister and a friend on City Hall avenue, yesterday, Napoleon Huot, fifty-five years of age, of 1011 City Hall avenue, fainted and died a few minutes later of heart failure. The coroner found death was from natural causes. The case of Francis Kennedy, who died suddenly this morning after returning home to 1114 Berlioz street, after a night's work, was similarly disposed of.

Frank Hastenauth of Detroit, saved his turkey gobbler from a cannibal fight recently. Hearing a noise in the barnyard he investigated, find the gobbler fighting its reflection in the back of a motor car. The bird was only slightly scratched, but the gobbler was nearly exhausted.

What's the Tragic Side of Life?

The Quality Goes Clear Through

Building the GRAY-DORT—assembling the chassis.

If Money Matters

A FEW men can afford to buy a motor car for fancy's sake, no matter what the price. Such men are not interested in the Gray-Dort. But if money matters to you—if you seek good value in a motor car, consider carefully the claims of this car.

65 years ago Wm. Gray began building buggies for men who wanted heaping value, good workmanship, honest quality.

The Gray-Dort car is built for just such men as bought Gray buggies. Men who demand a good car, first—a car that will give them powerful, speedy service. Men who want a sturdy car—one that will stand hard driving for a long time. Men who want a comfortable car—roomy, easy-riding, smooth motored, well cushioned. Men who demand a handsome car—a car they will own with pride. And men who must have a car reasonably-priced. Such men are coming to Gray-Dort cars.

Proper balance, a refined motor, light weight—these combine to make Gray-Dort gasoline and oil consumption low. Tire mileage is unusually high. Repairs and replacements are almost unknown to careful drivers.

The new Gray-Dort embodies all the good features that won instant success for former models. The 4-cylinder motor is a triumph of smooth, economical speed and power. The chassis is sturdy and quiet. The springs are long. The upholstery is deep. The equipment is absolutely complete from electric starting and lighting to the tools. New lines of beauty have been given this model. The five-passenger touring car is $1,125; the three-passenger fleur-de-lys roadster is $995; the Gray-Dort special, beautifully finished and with extra details of equipment, is $125 above the list. All prices are f.o.b. Chatham.

ARTICLE NO. 4—A UNIQUE HOSPITAL

WITH THE CANADIAN ARMY IN FRANCE.—When I visited number 13, veterinary hospital for wounded and disabled horses in the lines of communication, the first impression was how extraordinarily human and like a soldiers' hospital the establishment was. Perhaps it was the atmosphere of sympathy for these dumb soldiers who have more than done their bit in a war that was done of their making—combined with a quite amusing similarity between the arrangements made for their well-being and those in other hospitals. There are wards and operating rooms, slightly different from the usual type it is true, but still an operating room where anaesthetics are administered, a pharmacy and stores department and even a bathroom, where an unsuspecting gee suffering from skin disease may be gently slid into seven feet of warm water and calcium sulphide and be obliged to swim through it till he emerges to be scraped, dried, fed and bandaged like the infants all soldiers are when they are wounded.

When I first saw the hospital the December sun was brightening the long lines of corrugated iron hut wards opened on one side. On each post was fastened a ration of yellow hay and the gleam of the polished chains and the identification disc tied to every horse's tail made points of light in the long perspective.

EIGHTEEN SUCH HOSPITALS IN FRANCE.

There are eighteen of these hospitals for wounded four footed soldiers in France. In number 13, 2,000 horses are cared for. They come down every day by train from the front, about 280 of them, nearly all wounded either by shrapnel or gunshot. They go first to the reception ward to be tested and passed clear of contagion and are then taken to the surgical, medical or lame wards according to diagnosis A strict account of every horse is kept. A number is given to each one and the sergeant in charge keeps tally with his identification disc and the unit of the mobile section he was evacuated from, so each horse can be traced back to his original unit.

The O. C. of the hospital is Major Scott-Nimo, a veterinary surgeon of old standing in the regular army. Under him is a staff of 625 men including A.S.C. drivers, transport, signallers, engineers, etc., etc. Among the eight officers is one Canadian, Lieutenant Hall, of Quebec. Each squad is a little unit in itself consisting of an officer, a squad sergeant, a stable sergeant and 175 men. The staff often has to face the difficulty of having to start all over again with new and ignorant recruits. At first they were all picked men but belonging to Class A, they evidently had to leave and give place to Class C. The latter, however, work with a will and are lectured every day by their officers with the result that in three months they do their work well, in six months a man can be taught to do nearly everything wanted at the front in connection with the care of horses, and in nine months or at the most a year he is a thorough expert.

Visitors were quite unexpected that morning, yet the immense camp was swept and garnished as if the staff were awaiting royalty. The long lines of horses in their immaculately neat stables were a pathetic enough sight.

THE HOSPITAL DIET.

In the surgical ward these battle-scarred veterans were bandaged with care; the sick horses have a diet of carrots, turnips and linseed cake and everything is done to make them as comfortable as possible. Of course I looked out for Canadian horses and saw several from Alberta which the O. C. assured me are the best gunner horses both from strength and shape. The excellence of the treatment they receive at Number 13 Veterinary Hospital is proved by the fact that 80 per cent. recover from their wounds sufficiently to be sent back to the front. As soon as they are convalescent they are evacuated like their masters to a convalescent hospital.

There is a story for the truth of which I will not vouch, of a German horse that was captured and sent down to hospital but the other horses objected so strenuously to sharing the stable with an enemy horse that he had to be put in a shed by himself.

The operating room was an interesting place with a huge leather covered mattress, big enough to hold two animals to be operated on at the same time. An operation was going on when I looked into the room and one was reminded of Gulliver's experiences by the sight of the quantity of chloroform necessary to anaesthetise a patient of such proportions. The surgeon did his work with as much sympathy and skill as if he were dealing with a human being and one was glad to learn that the horses differ from their masters by never feeling any disagreeable after-effects.

STAFF WELL LOOKED AFTER.

There were many things to admire in this unique camp with its farriery, saddlers and tailor shops and splendid organization for the elimination of waste which saves as much as £110 a month, not a bad record for one establishment and one of which the O. C. is justly proud. One of the most striking features of the camp is the special attention paid to the comfort and moral well-being of the large staff. Their lodging, food and entertainment is all carefully provided for. Convenient bath houses have been built where the men may have the luxury of Russian steam baths as well as the ordinary shower bath. The commissariat department is excellent and in the dining-room prettily decorated for Christmas, one noticed vivid army regulations pointing out the dangers of uncooked shellfish, unboiled water and a lenient attitude towards the common house fly.

The R.S.P.C.A. is one of the warmest friends of these hospitals for wounded horses and have generously helped in the establishment of more than one. Apart from the utility of refitting valuable animals for more work at the front, every lover of horses will rejoice to know of the care and sympathy as well as the skilled attention received by these faithful friends who are playing such a useful part in helping us to win the war.

CAPT. THE REV. JOHN McNEILL

DR. J. MacNEILL AT ST. ANDREW'S

By arrangement with the Y.M.C.A. the Rev. Dr. John MacNeill, who has just returned from France, where he has been associated with Major Gerald Birks, will be the preacher at St. Andrew's, Westmount, Sunday night, April 7.

Dr. MacNeill has been in France for two years in the field service of the Y.M.C.A. and was with the Canadians when they went over the top at Vimy Ridge and on other famous battlefields. He was formerly minister of the Walmer Road Baptist Church, Toronto, and is widely known as a gifted preacher. The Y.M.C.A. however induced his congregation to release him for the period of the war to take up work in France with the Canadians.

His activities have brought him into close touch with life at the front both on and back of the firing line, and as he has just left the men in the trenches he has a story of thrilling and absorbing interest at this critical time. The service begins at 7.30 p.m. and will be preceded by another of the musical preludes, beginning at 7 p.m. The soloist Sunday night will be Miss Olive Atcheson.

KNOX CHURCH MUSIC.

The program of music at Knox Church, Crescent street, tomorrow evening will include the following numbers: Organ prelude, Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; sentence, "On Wings of Living Light," Matthews; anthem, "When the Sabbath was Past," Bartlett; offertory anthem, "The Ressurection," Shelley; postlude chorus, "Awake Thou That Sleepest," Stainer. C. Versel Chamberlain, the organist, will give a short organ recital, commencing at 6:40.

TO DECIDE FUTURE OF TRADE ASS'N

An important meeting of the automobile and allied trades of the Island of Montreal is being called at an early date by the directors of the Montreal Automobile Trade Association for the purpose of considering the future policy of the association. Although it was practically decided at the annual meeting to suspend active operations until after the war on account of there being little possibility of the annual motor show being held in January, 1919, it is felt by a large number of the shareholders that it would be very bad business policy to close down and in view of this feeling the Association's offices are being kept open and the executive staff fulfilling their duties, as usual. The following statement is made by T. C. Kirby, the manager:

"Now is the time of all times that the true facts must be made plain and the public are realizing the importance of the motor car as a vehicle of utility more today than ever before. Not only in relieving congested traffic conditions and in distributing food, but by increasing the efficiency of the owner, be he a business man, farmer or professional man, does the motor vehicle show its true value to the nation in time of emergency. In displacing horses with light trucks, tractors and passenger cars, work has been done more quickly, its scope broadened and valuable acreage saved to the growing of food for human beings.

"But while the motor car is giving its service to the country the manufacturers and agents likewise are doing their utmost to help. They have repeatedly offered their facilities voluntarily to the Government and are imbued with the most patriotic desire to help the nation win the war. They are confirmed in the belief that the motor car is an important factor in carrying the war to a successful conclusion, whether it is used at the front or at home in helping to relieve the freight congestion and in speeding up manufacturing and commercial activities."

SPECIAL MUSIC AT CALVARY

On Sunday evening the Calvary Church choir, under the leadership of George W. Cornish, will give a special musical evening at 7 o'clock, mainly from the works of Sullivan, Noble, Parker and Chadwick. The soloists are Mrs. Howard Foster, Mrs. Stuart and Mr. Allare McGarry.

The Calvary Neale Quartette, Messrs. Clibbore, Pashley, Ingersoll and Vallance will render selections.

At 11 a.m., Rev. T. W. Davidson will preach on "The Spiritual Side of Life," which will be followed by the Communion Service.

MUSICAL REVUE A GREAT SUCCESS

Members of the Canadian Pacific Recreation Club presented a capital program to fellow members and their friends at Stanley Hall last evening. The entertainment, entitled a "Musical Revue," was of a varied nature, and was thoroughly enjoyed by the audience, which included some of the officials of the C.P.R. During the winter a successful dancing class was conducted at the Recreation Club rooms, Windsor Street Station, under the direction of William Gibbs, and it was under his direction that the revue was produced last evening.

The program included the following items: Sergt. Pearson, comic songs; L. Peers and pals, song, "Wild Wild Women"; George Shea, "A Little Bit of Ireland"; Dot Andrews and Guy Suckling, valse, classic dance; Miss Rose Dumas and Hazel Wharry, song, "As You Like It," accompanied on the piano by Miss Phyllis McLean; Guy Suckling and chorus, song, "A Peek into Rubeville"; Miss Ruth Blair, dance; M. Foley, P. Horan, W. O'Brien and H. Craven, St. Ann's Quartet, vocal selection; Miss Rose Dumas, Guy Suckling and chorus, song, 'Some Sunday Morning"; Miss Jessie Murphy, solo; L. Peers and W. Gibbs, modern dances; Miss E. Miller and Tom Cox, duet, "Have a Heart." The orchestra was under the supervision of J. Drouin. The entertainment was opened with a chorus of the entire company of contributors and closed with a patriotic finale.

PATRIOTIC FINALE.

DOMINION CHURCH SERVICES

Rev. Richard Whiting will preach in Dominion Church at 11 and 7 on Sunday. His subjects are "The Glory and Peril of the New Era in Religion" and at night "Canada's Friends and Foes." Both of these themes are requested and include delicate and difficult questions. A patriotic half hour will follow the evening service.

For Ton Trucking Purposes

Ford

ONE-TON TRUCK

BUSINESS men everywhere who have hauling or delivering problems to consider—whether operating a wholesale business, a retail store, or a farm—will welcome the arrival of the Ford One-Ton Truck.

PRICE $750 F. O. B. FORD, ONT.

Supplied as chassis only

Heretofore, the Ford user who wanted to carry loads up to a ton found it necessary to get one of several special attachments or extensions which were on the market. Now the standard Ford truck is available—a car that can withstand the drudgeries of commercial use, and yet lacks superfluous weight, and is easily handled.

The truck differs from Ford passenger cars in that it is specially designed throughout in proper pattern and strength for heavy-duty service. It has a final drive of the worm gear-type, so that all gears are enclosed. Rear wheels are equipped with solid tires. Front tires are pneumatic. Standard Ford motor, transmission and ignition.

The Most Beautiful Car in America

EFFICIENCY—that is the watch-word of today. It means speed. It means the elimination of all waste in time and effort. It means the co-relation of brain and muscle in making each minute a productive minute.

If we are to win the Great War, we must introduce this doctrine into every phase of our daily life. As a nation, we must learn to challenge each tick of the clock and insist that it register Action.

In this connection, please remember that the automobile is one of the most efficient Time and Labor saving devices that has ever been developed. It has become the pace-maker of modern progress and to eliminate it would mean to turn back the calendar a quarter of a century.

In every profession and every field of business you will find the motor car performing its work with economy and dispatch.

It carries thousands of executives to and from their offices each day. It permits them to keep appointments on the dot. It multiplies their usefulness and broadens their scope of activities like no other form of transportation.

So, by all means, buy a motor car—but get a good one while you are about it. Look for a manufacturer's reputation rather than four wheels and a painted body. Look for enduring quality—that is all we ask—and you will be led irresistibly to the Paige.

REAL ESTATE AND BUILDING NEWS
BY R. H. P.

What is it that has caused the change to come about in the habits of the people in regard to living outside of the big cities as far as possible? I am prompted to ask the question because of an article I read yesterday in the National Real Estate Journal entitled "The Developer of the Suburbs," in which the writer puts all the credit for the development of the outskirts of the big cities on the automobile. Now I am very partial to the automobile, and believe it has done a great deal to encourage people to live out in the country and to take advantage of the fresh air and live in healthy surroundings. But I do not think the automobile is entirely the reason for the growth of the suburbs of Montreal, because there are thousands of people who are moving every year into the outside districts of the city who have never thought of owning an automobile, and who have no expectations of ever burning gasoline in their own car. They went out into the suburbs because they were thoughtful for the health of their families, and because they had the opportunity of purchasing a home on such easy terms that it was cheaper than paying rent in a stuffy city flat.

• • •

Another reason for the development of the suburbs was the provision of transportation by the steam and electric railway companies. They have not provided all the transportation they should—there are many lines on which the service is absolutely rotten—but still there are known instances where a fairly decent timetable has been adhered to more or less, and as a consequence a lot of people have ventured out into the "wilds" and struggled along in the best way they can, putting up with any inconveniences for the sake of the fresh air and bit of garden they get. And the tramways people are also doing their part, slowly but surely, in developing real estate around Montreal. Some weeks ago there was published a list of the extensions that are going to be made when the new Tramway Commission is named and gets into working order. They affected building lots in every section of the city, and undoubtedly were responsible for any little movement that took place in the handling of lots during the depth of winter.

• • •

I hear that there is a prospect of even another tram extension which has never been made public as yet, but which will be as important as any that are announced. It will, I understand, be an extension of the line that runs to Montreal West, and will go down into the Cote St. Luc road, and connect up with the line that runs round the mountain. Whether this is likely to be carried out this year I do not know, but certainly there is a vast tract of land out in that district which would be developed to a considerable extent if there was a system of transportation within easy reach of settlers there. I have not been in that district for a long time, but if memory serves me rightly there is already one or two flourishing little townships out that way which, if they had electric car service, would quickly boom. The people who are interested in this part of the city are accordingly anxiously waiting the naming of the Tramway Commission, so that they may put the arguments in favor of the connecting loop strongly before them. Perhaps I may have something about the great boulevard scheme from Montreal to St. Anne de Bellevue, which will be named the Queen Alexandra Boulevard I understand, and the building of which will undoubtedly have a great effect on the property through which it will pass. Then the arguments that are advanced in the article to which I referred at the outset, will perhaps have some bearing for, with a boulevard road stretching mile after mile into the country and along the lakeshore, lots of people will have their houses further away from Montreal than they would otherwise put them, for, as the writer of the article said, the automobile is the annihilator of distance, and takes one from here to there surely comfortably and quickly, and has solved the suburban problem for the real estate salesman. The article goes on to say:

• • •

The automobile is the revolutionizer of the real estate field. It has lifted the suburban home from a far-away, inaccessible retreat, up to a popular, easy-get-at-able, all-the-year-around proposition. It has lifted it from a doubtful sales quantity to a safe and sound investment. Suburban homes nowadays offer much for little. They make a wide appeal to real people who are tired of the eternal grind, the artificial life of the city. Real people look ahead. They want their children brought up in a healthful atmosphere, and they pick a good suburban home to accomplish this. The automobile is the greatest little co-operator on earth when it comes to getting all there is out of suburban life. The business man jumps into his car in the morning and drives to his office with a clear brain made keener by the crisp, cool, country air. At night he gets home quickly and easily and in comparatively the same time as many city people.

• • •

To him choosing the suburban home meant considering the growing sons and daughters. Here the automobile was his best ally. With a car the youngsters were "sold" on the suburban idea. Son a "movie" fan, but he didn't mind the distance a bit, because he could hop into the car, pick up a few friends and be in town in no time. To mother and daughter the social end was an important question. The automobile solved this problem. Its ground covering capacity enables them to keep up their church and social connections. They can always go and come quickly—that is the big point.

• • •

Look at it from another angle—from an investment standpoint. For a modest sum you can buy one hundred feet in a first-class suburb. This gives you breathing room on each side with ample space in the rear for that ever important garden. You can have bushes and flowers around the house and a side drive for your automobile. You don't feel cramped for room. You get the sunshine and the air plus the advantages of being by yourself, although within easy calling distance of your neighbor. The same width frontage in the city would, in most instances, be prohibitive; and the city home cannot, by any possibility, equal the suburban for real living.

• • •

Bankers are big boosters of suburban realty. They know that a healthy community means a prosperous community; that men stick to their work better when home conditions are inviting. Bankers give the automobile full credit for the present suburban growth and predict that suburban development in the next few years will grow by leaps and bounds, due to the automobile. As a real estate operator, just think of conditions today without the automobile. Suburban property would be about at a standstill. As it is now, the man with the automobile is the real estate man's friend. He is a live prospect for suburban property. And the fact that he has a car means that he is 50 per cent. sold on the suburban idea before you approach him. He knows something about the country. He realizes the joy of the outdoors. He has the fever for digging in his own garden—the automobile planted this germ in his system.

• • •

The automobile has developed a desire for suburban homes, put a new meaning into country living, and shown us the good things of life through the God-given blessing of sunshine and fresh air. It has been the biggest factor in enabling the office-confined business man to keep well and fit. It has put new meaning into the word "home" and enabled the family to take from each day huge blocks of real enjoyment. In getting us back to the soil it has given us a firmer grasp on the everyday principles of right living. Robust health and sturdiness are synonymous with the automobile and suburban home. Red-blooded men and women and those who need red blood are reaching out for these things. Suburban life is on the upgrade with the automobile the big dominant factor behind it all.

The reports of the building activity of the Dominion for the month of February show that there has been a falling off of over half a milion dollars as compared with 1917, while for the first two months of the year the decrease in the estimated cost of building work, as indicated by building permits in 35 big cities, shows a decrease of six hundred thousand dollars. The total building done in February last in these cities amounted to $901,933, as against $1,657,217 in February of 1917. The total for the two months of January and February for this year reached $2,464,570, as compared with $3,056,384 for the corresponding two months of 1917. As usual, Ontario headed the list for the month of February, having $492,492 worth of buildings undertaken, while Quebec was next with $134,692. This latter figure, however, shows an enormous falling off as compared with the return for twelve months ago, when the total reached $553,390. The figures for the past February were made up of as follows: Montreal, $77,045; Quebec, $25,147; Three Rivers, $17,000, and Westmount, $15,500, with no return from Maisonneuve. The figures a years ago were: Maisonneuve, $500; Montreal, $402,565; Quebec, $145,725; Three Rivers, $2,700, and Westmount, $1,900. It will thus be seen that the decrease was general and very important, and it is difficult to understand the reason for this.

Twelve months ago the first two months of the year produced building permits for the erection of buildings in the province of Quebec which were estimated to cost $1,161,835, the first two months of this year only produced a total of $302,174, a decrease of over $800,000, more than half of which was due to the falling off of the Montreal building work. The first two months of this year produced building work totalling $193,155, as compared with $652,460 for the corresponding two months of last year. In Westmount there was $17,000 worth of building undertaken in the first two months of this year, whereas twelve months ago there was only $6,515 worth of building done in that city, which shows that there is a vast amount of intelligence in the city's western neighbor, and that in the building trade, as in all war matters, there is a fine spirit of optimism, which I hope will one day spread eastward. In Maisonneuve there has been no return made for the two months under review, which accounts for a decrease in the total, as last year the return gave $120,500 for that city, which is now part of Montreal. Quebec for the first two months of this year had $55,719 worth of building, as against $263,663 for the same period in 1917. In Three Rivers there was $36,300 worth of building done in January and February this year, as against $114,700 for the corresponding period of last year. The only provinces in which there was more building done during the first two months of this year than was undertaken in the same period twelve months ago were Nova Scotia, where there was much rebuilding done in Halifax, Alberta, where Calgary did over half a million dollars worth as against $8,00 a year ago, and British Columbia, where there was much activity in Victoria.

• • • • •

Somebody has mentioned to me the honeymoon story published last week. Here is a culled extract along the same lines—"It wouldn't be a bad plan to give some attention to a couple's mental qualifications when they apply for a marriage license. Eugenic marriages are theoretical successes, but if a mental test was applied the plan would go well in practice. One of the first questions to be asked applicants, under the mental examination, ought to be: 'Do you own your home?' Second: 'If you do not, do you intend to buy a home during the first year?' If either question is answered in the affirmative, the license should be granted!"

• • • • •

A goodly number of inquiries are being made of the firms who make a specialty of the "Own Your Own Home" system with reference to the prospects of getting any building put up during the present spring. The investigation that they have made into the cost of building materials and labor has convinced them that it is no good postponing the happy day when they will be the owners of their own homes, and they are anxious to get things settled to their own satisfaction as speedily as possible. In every district there are builders who are ready to undertake construction work, just as there are architects and others who, from a short-sighted vision, declare that this should not be done. They point to the fact that a house built now will have to compete with a house that was built before the outbreak of war, and therefore the return from it would not be so great. But this is a poor argument to use, for prices will be the same for years to come, and there will be a new standard ruling for many years to come. What should be done is not to compare the prices of four years ago with those that prevail today, but to take today's prices and accept them as a minimum, and calculate how much one would save by building now, instead of waiting for another year and then being forced to build at current prices, which will be a great deal higher. "Do it now" is a very good motto to adopt for anyone who is really desirous of becoming a home owner, and I am glad to hear there are some people who are disregarding the pessimists and going ahead. Their common sense should be an example and an encouragement to the timid.

How Long Life is Built into Beaver Board
First big logs of spruce, then strong clean spruce fibre and finally sturdy panels without a crack, knot or blemish, make Beaver Board.
That's the right way to think of Beaver Board and when you think of it as knotless, crackless manufactured lumber you will realize why it is so satisfying on walls and ceilings, why it is warmer in winter and cooler in summer than lath and plaster and why it cannot crack.
When once used, other good qualities appear. On your walls it is as permanent as the woodwork you'll never have the job to do over again.
Our Department of Design and Decoration will gladly assist you in the planning of your home decoration. Write for booklet, "Beaver Board and Its Uses."

Montreal's Real Estate Market

The Way to Rent Business Property

There are no two opinions. The best way is to tell every business man in the city looking for accommodation. And, through the only medium—THE MONTREAL DAILY STAR—that will do it. For as little as one per cent of the average rental a series of illustrated advertisements that will soon find a tenant may be had in these columns. Or, even for 25 cents a property may be listed more modestly, of course, in the want ads.

The John Murphy Company Limited

FINED FOR SELLING ROTTEN OYSTERS

Local Firm Had Disposed of Them to a Retail Dealer

As the result of recent investigations into food conditions in Montreal and the consequent seizures of large quantities of fish and other articles of food by Dr. Hood and Inspector Provost, of the Food Inspection Department, at least one conviction has been secured, not on a charge of hoarding, however, as the civic authorities are not as yet empowered to take action, but on a charge of selling food unfit for human consumption.

The conviction in question was secured yesterday in the Recorder's Court against the John Caldwell Company, 611 St. Paul west, fruit merchants, who also handle large quantities of oysters on a commission basis. Twelve barrels of these oysters were seized by the food inspectors on March 9, and after examination by Dr. St. George, were declared unfit for human consumption, being in a state of advanced putrefaction.

The information against the Caldwell Company was laid by Wilfrid Marcil, who had himself been fined $5 and costs for selling a quantity of oysters which he swore he had bought from the Caldwell Company. He bought twenty-eight barrels, he declared while giving testimony this morning, and paid $10.

The defence, represented by J. Coglin, admitted that the company was technically guilty of an infraction of the by-law, but produced several letters to show that the demand for oysters this year had been the poorest in many years. The market was glutted with Canadian oysters and the company had been unable to dispose of them before they had spoiled. This, he declared was an extenuating circumstance. He expressed the opinion that the costs of the prosecution should be sufficient punishment for the offense.

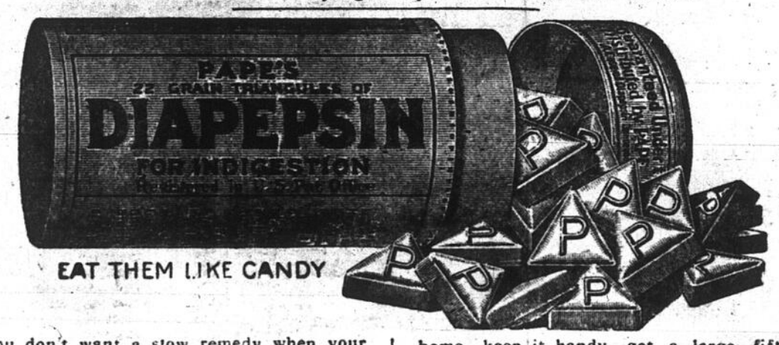

Recorder Geoffrion took an opposite view, however. "The defendant has offered for sale rotten oysters," he said. "This is a very serious offense against a company and their only explanation is that they had the oysters for sale and that they were very hard to sell. This is no excuse to offer for selling rotten food. $40 and costs."

ANOTHER WAY OUT OF IRISH TROUBLE.

LONDON, April 6. — Irish opposition to conscription, which is the main obstacle in framing the Man-Power Bill which is to be placed before Parliament next week, might be appeased, the Evening Standard believes, by associating the Irish units in the field with the French and Americans rather than the British.

UNION NOW IN MINISTERS' HANDS

Constitution to Be Submitted to Presbyterian Churches Soon

The proposed constitution of the new Presbyterian Union under which the Presbyterian ministers and office bearers of Montreal and its vicinity are to be organized, is now in the hands of the various ministers.

The constitution, which is subject to amendment, will be brought before the various church sessions at an early date.

The adjourned meeting of the union will be held on Tuesday evening, April 23.

CONSTITUTION OF UNION.

The constitution defines the objects of the union as follows:—

"To promote a spirit of fraternity among the congregation of the church in the Montreal area; to increase the efficiency of the church as a witness to Christ; to provide a common meeting place for conference and prayer, regarding the church's life and work, and to emphasize the duty of Christian leadership in civic and social affairs."

Other provisions of the constitution are:—

"The officers of the union shall be a president, to be chosen from the lay membership, two vice-presidents, and a secretary-treasurer, who shall be nominated by the council and elected by ballot at the annual meeting and serve for one year, until their successors are chosen.

"There shall be a council consisting of nine members, of whom six are to be laymen and three are to be ministers, who shall be elected by ballot, at the annual meeting, in three classes, one-third of the members in each class: class A to serve for one year, B for two years and C for three years. For succeeding elections all members of council shall serve for three years.

"The council shall have general supervision of the union's programme and interests, and shall control its funds to the approval of the body."

NEW PASTOR AT MESSIAH CHURCH

The Rev. Dudley Hays Ferrell, the new pastor of the Church of the Messiah, will assume his duties as pastor next Sunday, and will conduct the service at 11 a.m. Mr. Ferrell has recently been the guest at some remarkable demonstrations at Brockton, Mass., the citizens there of all walks of life joining in banquets and meetings to do him honor upon the occasion of his departure from that city.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Ferrell received many valuable gifts, not only from members of the Unitarian Church, but from the citizens who, headed by the mayor of Brockton, participated in a popular reception in their honor.

Mr. Ferrell, who is a graduate of Princeton University, took a prominent part in Brockton's civic affairs and is a director of the Brockton Chamber of Commerce. Mrs. Ferrell is a well-known concert singer and has made several records for the Edison Company.

BANK IS ROBBED IN FULL DAYLIGHT BY BOLD BANDITS

Two Clerks Held Up at Point of Revolver by Strangers

$5,000 MISSING AFTER THEIR VISIT

Acting Teller Suffers Slight Wound in Defending Property

Quietly entering the branch of the Royal Bank of Canada at 1800 Cote des Neiges Road at 1:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, two gunmen held up the only two clerks in the place and decamped with about $5,000, which lay on the teller's desk. The loss is covered by insurance.

The bandits are described as looking like Americans, but speaking French. One was masked, but before the other had time to put on his mask the clerks took mental note of his features. He had a crooked nose and large mouth with uneven teeth. Both were tall, stoutly built, and clean shaven.

In the absence of the regular teller, J. Anatole Bertrand, aged twenty, was taking his place. Working with him was Gaspard Miron, seventeen years old, a ledger keeper.

A SERIOUS JOKE.

"Hands up!" ordered the bandit, but the boys, thinking it was a joke, did not move. A few emphatic explanations and the hands of the bank men were above their heads. While one of the thieves covered them with his revolver, the other demanded the bank revolvers and was soon in possession of one that had been lying out of reach all the while on a shelf in the teller's box, and of another from the manager's desk. Ordered by his companion to hurry he gathered up all the coin, bills and papers available.

"Turn your backs," was the next command, swiftly followed by a blow on the back of Bertrand's neck from the butt end of a revolver, which snapped in two pieces. He was temporarily stunned, but did not lose consciousness.

With the loot safely in their pockets, the gunmen prepared to decamp by cutting the telephone wires and thrusting the clerks into a room at the back. They endeavored to lock the door, but failing to find a key, sought rope to bind them. The only twine available was not strong enough, and so, not willing to risk the danger of staying longer, the bandits took their departure, evidently as nonchalantly as they had come. Without visible haste they quitted the building and presumably left the locality by tram car.

The distance thus covered is about half a mile, their path running through the main thoroughfare and past Lumkin's Hotel.

ESCAPED BY WINDOW.

Meanwhile Miron had got out of a side window. From a neighboring house he telephoned the police and the head office of the bank on St. James street. Four detectives under Detective Crowther were immediately despatched in an automobile by Chief Detective Charpentier to the scene of the hold-up.

A doctor was called in to attend to Bertrand, who had received a deep cut. When the wound was dressed he was able to go home, and is in no danger.

The general description given by the clerks to the police coincided with the appearance of two men who were seen to board a Cote des Neiges street car bound for the city shortly after 2 o'clock, and it is considered practicaly certain that they were the robbers. Nothing definite is announced by the police as yet, but it is believed that they are on the trail of the bandits.

This is the first occasion in several years that a bank has been openly robbed in broad daylight in Montreal. It is strongly suspected that an organized gang of bank robbers is responsible for the present crime, as the police were informed a few days ago of a robbery planned against an East End bank that failed to materialize.

Captain Power—"I said Quebecers, not French-Canadians."

Referring to Armand Lavergne, Captain Power said that Col. Machin (Director of the Military Service) had invited Lavergne to meet him at the Chateau Frontenac. Lavergne was then asked what he could suggest to put down the riots. Lavergne suggested that he should speak to the rioters, and he was given "God-speed," and told that what he did would be acceptable.

"It was the largeness of the order which surprised me," Captain Power assented.

The next day, Captain Power went on, Lavergne returned to the Chateau and was congratulated by Col. Machin, the representative of the Militia Council.

Major-General Mewburn — "Col. Machin has nothing to do with the Military Council."

"He is not my representative," rejoined the Minister of Justice.

Here Sir Sam Hughes entered the discussion. "I hope sincerely that the Government will not go back on Machin," he remarked.

Mr. Doherty—"Col. Machin was the representative of the Military Service Council, and we have no apologies to make."

Capt. Power—"Col. Machin represented something or somebody, because the Prime Minister read a report from him. He congratulated Armand Lavergne on his good work on the evening of Sunday, March 31st."

ALLEGES JUDGES BRUTAL.

As an approximate cause of the trouble, Captain Power cited the rehearing of appeals under the Military Service Act For this, he said, a Judge had been brought down from Three Rivers, who acted "with all the brutality that characterized Judge Jeffries. He would not listen to the draftees, and insulted everyone who appeared in the court."

The Speaker called Captain Power to order, on the ground that such language could not be used in respect to a member of the Bench; and Capt. Power withdrew his remark.

Captain Power argued that dissatisfaction had been created by the action of the Government in passing orders-in-council changing the Military Service Act.

"Should coercion be applied," he said, "and our laws set aside, as is proposed, it will profit honorable gentlemen opposite nothing."

In closing, he stated that if it were going to take two men to get everyone out of Quebec for overseas service, it would be impossible to put forward our best force on the battlefields of Europe It would be necessary, under such circumstances, to have a garrison in Quebec City and the Province of Quebec.

DR. EDWARDS ATTACKS CLERGY.

Dr. Edwards, Frontenac, maintained that the sentiment behind the administration of the Military Service Act in Quebec was not the same as that in other provinces.

The attitude of the clergy in Quebec was also, said Dr. Edwards, a reason for the trouble which had taken place. He was not a man to criticize any Church or creed, but when the Church entered the domain of politics he felt that he was entitled to enter into a discussion with it. In his opinion there was evident, among the Roman Catholic clergy of Quebec, a hostility to the Military Service Act and to the continued participation of Canada in the war.

Lucien Cannon declared that the discussion of the Quebec riots had been introduced by Col. Currie, not in the interests of the country, but because of his petty parochial politics.

"Oh, let him blow off!" said Col. Currie.

Mr. Cannon withdrew anything he had said of an un-Parliamentary nature. He then declared that he was sorry that the discussion had led to attacks on the Roman Catholic clergy and the leader of the Opposition. He felt that he could, in answer to the member for Simcoe, furnish some of the reasons for the recent riots. Le Devoir, Henri Bourassa's paper, he said, should be suppressed, but the Government was afraid to do it. This very paper had been financed by the member for St. Antoine, Sir Herbert Ames, during an election campaign, with money which he had made by selling boots to Canadian soldiers.

LAVERGNE AFFIDAVIT.

Mr. Cannon read a lengthy affidavit from Armand Lavergne, to show that he had been called from his residence to the Chateau Frontenac and requested by Col. Machin to do what he could to avert the trouble at Quebec. The affidavit described in detail Mr. Lavergne's efforts, and stated that he had subsequently been thanked by Col. Machin.

Mr. Cannon declared himself to be opposed to conscription because it is, in his opinion, not the best way to help the Empire win the war.

The people of Quebec, Mr. Cannon said, did not want privileges or favors, but justice.

As J. Arthurs, Parry Sound, was speaking, Mr. Fielding intervened. Mention had been made of the War-Times Election Act.

"The War-Times Elections Act," Mr. Fielding declared, "was not the policy of the present, but of the last Government. It was strongly denounced by some of the members of the present Government."

The debate was continued by T. Vien (Lotbiniere).

MAYOR DILATES ON MANY TOPICS

Thinks a General Election Will Come Soon—Gets Many Letters

Mayor Martin was in a talkative mood yesterday. Rebuked by His Worship the day following his election press representatives had kept away from his "sanctum." This morning he came to them while they were in conversation outside the council's ante-room where the revision of the figures in St. James and Mercier-Maisonneuve ward was taking place.

"I am receiving an immense lot of congratulations," said His Worship, by way of opening the conversation. "It comes from all over Canada. I am leaving for New York and Atlantic City this evening, but I will read all the letters that come during my absence when I come back, and, as usual, will answer them all.

"You would be surprised if you knew what some people who worked hard against me and tried to defeat me are writing now," he continued. He then showed a letter he had received from an M.P. in one of the Montreal ridings.

"We may have Federal elections in a few months," said the mayor. "That crowd of Unionists in Ottawa cannot keep long together. It's too bad about the Quebec riots, but I know these troubles are actuated by an organized gang from across the line or from Ontario. I hope the Government means what it says in trying to catch these disturbers who come to our province and raise our people. Why, look right here in Montreal, these trouble seekers do not care to try their tactics here. Why? because they know very well that we would get them quick. The law is the law."

MAY USE LIQUOR FOR MUNITIONS

Temperance Party Has No Objection to Govt. Taking of Stocks

Local temperance leaders are responsible for the statement that there will be no opposition on the part of the prohibitionists to the Government taking over and using for munitions purposes the $30,000,000 worth of liquor now stored in various Ontario distilleries undergoing the maturing process.

The situation, since the adoption of the federal Government's stringent liquor regulations has been a complicated one for the owners of this vast quantity of liquid. It is impossible to sell it in Ontario, and equally impossible to ship it into Quebec, where prohibition will not be in force until May 1, 1919. In any case the most of the supply will not be matured and fit for use until next year. The distillers were thus left more or less in the air.

The matter was discussed in Toronto recently at a meeting of the Dominion Prohibition Committee, and the result of the discussion was that the temperance people there represented decided they would not oppose the plan of the Government taking over the goods and using them for munitions purposes. The suggestion has been made that the liquor be expropriated by the Government at cost, thus relieving the distillers from a heavy burden. It is said that public opinion in Ontario and elsewhere is favorable to the proposal. John H. Roberts, of Montreal, was one of those favoring the solution of the Government expropriation.

CLOSE OFFICES AT ROCHESTER.

ROCHESTER, N.Y., April 6.—Offices of the Canada Steamship Lines, the principal means of communication between Rochester and the resorts of the St. Lawrence, have been discontinued here, and the company has notified the Chamber of Commerce that rather than build a detention shed costing $2,000 or $3,000, which is required by the United States Government, it has decided to discontinue Rochester as a port of call.

A Perpetual War of Germs

In every human body there is continual strife between the forces of health and disease, while headaches, nervousness and frequent colds means weakness and forerun sickness.

In changing seasons your system needs the oil-food in
