Here's the Requiem Bach never wrote

Heavenly opus

By Thomas Ledwell

RECORD CORRESPONDENT

The Amadeus Choir will put a different twist on the music of Johann Sebastian Bach at its annual spring concert in Sherbrooke this weekend. The composer's famous cantatas have been arranged into a Requiem.

"I listened to the 200 cantatas, and I found there are a lot of themes that we find in the Catholic liturgy about Requiem, in the cantatas," said choir conductor Francois Panneton, who pieced together certain arias and chorals by Bach to fit the tenor of what he wanted.

"All sacred cantatas by Bach are written in German. I removed the German text, and I put in the Latin text that comes from the regular Requiem."

The Requiem is a Roman Catholic or High Anglican church service where people pray for the salvation of someone who has died. The Latin texts Panneton used to build the Bach one are from the traditional Mass.

"It's writing with pictures of paradise, pictures of redemption, pictures of war. It's very rich," he said of the images conjured by the words.

The Requiem is difficult, but Panneton said his singers are up to the challenge.

"There is choral virtuosity in this. Not all of my choirs can do that, but I know they can. They're so talented," said Panneton, who also directs groups in Montreal and Granby.

"This Sherbrooke choir is my best. I have good sight-readers in the choir, so they work very fast. It's very stimulating for me."

That's high praise for the group, which is composed mostly of amateurs. The members of Amadeus are teachers, doctors, and museum staff, though many have musical backgrounds. Panneton says that's a great advantage when tackling more challenging

American Idol ice cream

Pop culture on a cone

By Misty Harris

CANWEST NEWS SERVICE

Just when you thought celebrities couldn't become any more intrusive, they invade the dairy case. In the last two months, ice cream manufacturers have introduced flavours branded after everyone from Comedy Central host Stephen Colbert to Nashville outlaw Willie Nelson. There's even a line of American Idol ice cream, appropriately featuring tastes such as Hollywood Cheesecake.

Although this year marks the 20th anniversary of mass-market celebrity ice cream — Ben & Jerry's Grateful Dead-inspired Cherry Garcia made its debut in 1987 — the International Dairy Foods Association says the gimmick is only just starting to reach fever pitch. And Kim Lopez-Walters, senior food and beverage strategist at Iconoculture, a Minnesota-based consumer research and advisory firm, says much of what we're seeing is part of the individualization of commercial culture.

"You can personalize the (dessert) experience," she says. Buying your favourite star's ice cream is a way of saying "this is who I am and I'm reinforcing my identity with what I'm eating."

In the last two decades, Canadians' interest in ice cream has dropped by about 26 per cent. According to Statistics Canada and the Canadian Dairy Information Centre, the average per-capita consumption of hard and soft ice cream in 1986 was 12.19 litres; by 2000, that number had sunk to 8.63, rising only slightly in the following years to 9.66 litres in 2005.

Lopez-Walters, a 17-year veteran of the food and beverage industry, believes pop-culture labeling may take the chill off sales, but isn't convinced it will reverse the long-term downward trend.

"I don't necessarily think ice cream is going to see any increases," she says. "You have chocolate, you have Starbucks, you have (U.S. smoothie chain) Jamba Juice — all of these things are competing for that share of stomach and share of craving."

But for sheer publicity, celebrity ties are generally a good bet.

Since Ben & Jerry's introduced Stephen Colbert's AmeriCone Dream in early March, for example, the ice cream has earned nearly 90,000 Google hits, been name-dropped numerous times on Colbert's hit show, and made headlines in media outlets as diverse as Rolling Stone and Access Hollywood.

Ben & Jerry's got even more publicity when they unveiled Willie Nelson's Country Peach Cobbler and Colbert promptly declared war on the rival celebrity's dessert, jokingly sniping that Nelson's ice cream was made from "shredded tax forms and hash."

Coincidentally, the country crooner's ice cream was pulled from shelves shortly after its launch because it contained an unlisted ingredient: not grass, but wheat.

As for Dreyer's American Idol-themed launches, which hit stores in February, the ice cream company tells The Hollywood Reporter the new flavours have already led to a year-over-year increase of more than 20 per cent.

Dreyer's has promised the most popular of its five American Idol flavours will become a permanent addition to the Slow Churned lineup. As for the longevity of fellow pop-culture ice creams, however, an industry insider warns consumers not to hold their breath.

"The majority of novelty flavours are just a flash in the pan," says Miranda Abney, spokeswoman for the International Dairy Foods Association.

"For certain age groups, the label has a lot to do with (purchase decisions). But most people's favourites never change.... Every year, we compile data to see what the most popular types of ice cream are and every year, no matter what changes in advertising, the top spot is always vanilla, second is always chocolate and third is always Neapolitan."

In addition to Cherry Garcia, previous pop culture-powered ice creams have included Festivus, for Seinfeld enthusiasts; Dilbert's World Totally Nuts, for fans of the comic strip; One Sweet Whirled, for

Matthews
Band devotees; Phish Food, in honour of the do-gooding Vermont rock band, and Wavy Gravy, inspired by the Woodstock Festival a l personality of the s a m e name.

Movie money to be donated

By Claudia Villemaire

The Big Picture Project, run by a group of local young adults who are mixing an entrepreneurial education with bringing English movies to the Richmond area, will donate the proceeds from some of April's film showings.

"Now, with the movie project, we are able to first of all prepare publicity, practice our marketing and, most especially, designate three film presentations as benefit showings for specific people," Patrick Plante says.

Money from the Thursday, April 5 double bill, Ice Age 1 and Ice Age 2, are earmarked for the Children's Wish Foundation. Admission, normally $4, is left up to the generosity of the moviegoers. The show begins at 2 p.m.

On Saturday, April 7, Charlotte's Web (the new edition), begins at 2 p.m.

The regular admission of $4, or $3 per person for a family of four or more, is charged this day.

On Tuesday, April 12, The Wizard of Oz is another fundraiser for the Children's Wish Foundation. Once again admission price is left up to the audience.

Saturday, April 14 will be a specially chosen presentation in memory of Sean Patrick, a recent victim of a fatal car accident. This day is a tribute to Patrick, with funds raised going to the Kidney Foundation Canada.

Saturday, April 21 is a tribute day to Arthur Rivard, also the tragic victim of an automobile accident and a friend to this group of youths.

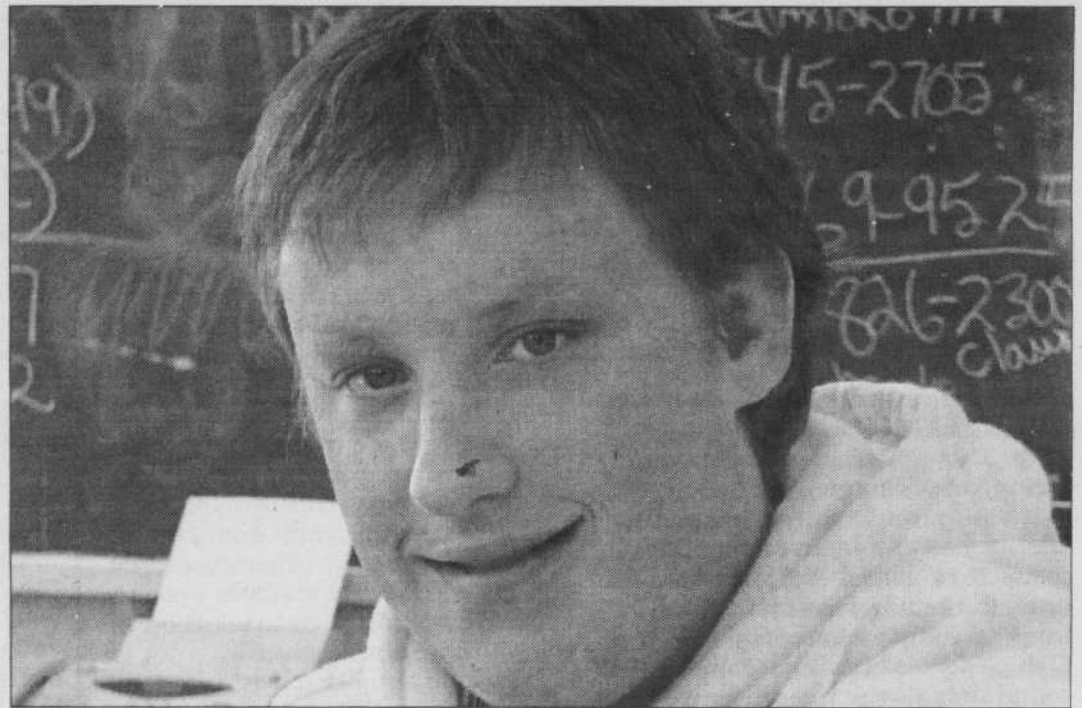

Money raised will go towards a bursary in Rivard's memory. The funds will be added to a bursary awarded annually to a Richmond Regional High School graduate.

The program continues Saturday, April 28 with Monster House, May 5 with the animated Cars and May 12 with Pursuit of Happyness. The curtain rises at 2 p.m. for each movie and snacks and treats are always on sale.

The eight young adults of The Big Picture are honing their skills and expanding their employability. Learning about teamwork and working in partnership with local businesses, the group has made it possible to provide this community with a recreational outlet for the whole family right in their home town. All the movies are shown at Richmond Regional High School.

"We've been visiting just about every organization that exists around here including service groups, businesses and industry," Ben Doyle said.

Big Picture Project was set up with funding by Service Canada, and supported by the Lennoxville and District Women's Centre, Job Links, Carrefour Jeunesse Emploi and the Townshippers' Association.

CLAUDIA VILLEMAIRE

Patrick Plante says the group is mixing a business education with community spirit.

A SLIMMING DIET FOR TRASH

Free Public Lecture

Garbage! According to Mrs Monique Clément, the speaker, we generate an awful lot of it...far too much! In the MRC of Memphremagog alone, nearly 50,000 tonnes of garbage from all activity sectors go to the dump every year. That's more than 60 garbage truckloads per week! When you think that nearly 80% of the content of our garbage bags could be recovered, reused or recycled, there is good reason to think about it.

Contents of the talk:

Based on the principle of the 3 Rs and V (for value added), this talk presents various ways to reduce garbage, whether by recycling, composting, reduction at source or re-use, without forgetting proper management of hazardous household wastes (also called RDDs). The speaker will hand out sheets of reducing recipes for household trash on a diet!

Check out the bus

CJMQ will be providing music for the upcoming Rubbish Pick Up Day, to be held April 14 in Lennoxville. It is the beginning of another season of weekly visits throughout the Townships attending various events.

If you would like CJMQ to attend an event in your part of the Townships contact us at 819-822-9600 ext. 2298.

We also announce all not-for-profit events free of charge.

If you haven't visited our website lately you're in for a treat; it has been complete revamped with many new features. In the interview section, you can listen to complete interviews aired on CJMQ. There is even an archive section containing all the interviews we have done since the inception of the new website.

The schedule and playlist areas have been beefed up with many new features, so be sure to take a look.

The CJMQ bus will sport a new look as of this week. Our logo will be added to the sides, front and back of the bus, giving it new zest.

When you see us on the road be sure to wave; if you see the bus at an event be sure to drop by to say hello. It is always a lot of fun to meet with our listeners.

Our transmitter project is going well, and donations are continuing to come in. Demonstrate your support for English-language broadcasting in the Townships by sending your donation to CJMQ, 2600 College St., Sherbrooke, J1M 0C8. Tax receipts are available upon request. We would like to thank those of you who have already given.

We would also like to wish all of you a very happy and safe Easter.

music. "With an amateur choir that does not read music it takes four or five months at least. With Amadeus it took three."

The singers will be accompanied by a small group of musicians performing flute, violin, bass, and cello.

Bach's music is ordinarily performed by larger orchestras, but Panneton employed a small group of instruments to give an intimate feel.

"My purpose is that the choral world should know that music," he said of the Bach cantatas that are the foundation of the Requiem. "They usually start with a choir, then there are 20 minutes of solo [instrumental] movements."

Panneton said this might well be the first time someone has used Bach's music as accompaniment for a Requiem in more recent times. But he said the great composer himself used his cantatas as the basis for a Catholic Mass he scored.

"He picked up the cantatas and he removed the German text to put in the Latin text. He did it for a Catholic Mass, though we know he was a great Lutheran.

"At the end of his life he felt that he had something to give to the whole world," said Panneton. "It was my inspiration."

The Amadeus Choir will perform The Requiem at the Mary Mediatrix Church in Sherbrooke at 3025 Galt St. W. The performance will take place on Saturday, March 31 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $20 in advance or $25 at the door.

two.

"Somewhere deep inside my head I'm probably doing a lot of these analyses. But when I decide I want to design something, I'll do some research on the shape and the form, and I'll decide how I want these shapes to look. And from that point, it takes about a minute for the finished form to appear in my head, but it's not tangible.

"I still actually have to pick up a piece of paper and start working through it. It's very fluid at that point: I start with a square [piece of paper] and I know where it's going to end up, and then the process is just to figure out how to get there. But the actual design process has actually happened in that first minute."

The most complex figure he has ever done, a dragon, took him about 20 hours of folding. Monday afternoon he was pre-creasing a piece of paper to make a toad, something he was doing for his own enjoyment and that he calculated would take him about three hours of folding.

The rules of origami are relatively simple. A single piece of paper, no cutting, no gluing, no adding on extra pieces (except for one specific type of origami, called modular origami, in which identical shapes are combined to form geometrical figures - the one area of origami dominated by female artists).

"Technical origami, especially, has always been a young man's domain, so the young-man mentality is very strong," Wu says. "The need to show off: That's what has driven a lot of the technical advancement of the art. You get young men [one-upping] one another: 'Whoa, I can do a better whatever than you can. Check out these new techniques I just came up with.'

"There's definitely a place for that because it's given us the ability to do so much more with a sheet of paper - pushing the boundaries of what's possible technically. But the more serious artists in the bunch now are trying to find ways of expression beyond 'Look at what I can do.'"

Wu may have a future origami artist in his own family. His two-year-old son, Michael is showing some interest in folding games with paper. Normally children younger than six lack the manual dexterity for origami. Wu was an exception, starting at three. Perhaps Michael is too, a "next generation" that will bring an ancient craft one step closer to artistic maturity.

"It's very exciting to be at the growth end of an art form," Wu says. "I tell people we're in the renaissance of origami and that this is the time to be doing it. Because we are the ones pushing the boundaries, defining what the art form is and will be. That's really exciting."

Origami bigshot

By Michael Scott
VANCOUVER SUN

Joseph Wu has been folding paper since he was three years old. That's a lot of paper cranes. And rabbits and dragons and frogs and roosters and swans and cellular phones and Volkswagen Beetles.

Hold on. Cellphones and VW Beetles? Wu, who played a lot of Dungeons and Dragons as a kid and was trained as a scientist, is parlaying his early childhood fascination with origami into a successful career as an artist and commercial illustrator. He takes a sculptor's approach to paper folding, pressing hard on the technical limits of what this ancient Japanese craft can accomplish, and the intellectual freight it can be made to carry.

His innovations have earned him international recognition and a steady income from clients such as Volkswagen, Intel, the Nagano Olympics, Stolichnaya Vodka and many other recognized brands.

He has become a celebrity in the world of origami, with one of the Internet's most-visited origami sites (www.origami.as). His commitment to origami as an art form won him a commission to create an origami-themed play for the spring of 2008, tentatively entitled The Life of Paper. Increasingly, he has to rattle a legal sabre at commercial imitators attempting to pass off his designs as their own.

"Origami is growing very quickly, now," Wu, 36, observed this week, in the sunny dining room of his Douglas Park home in east Vancouver. The grey-and-white house on the corner, behind its picket fence, is as precise and orderly as one of Wu's tiny sculptures.

"The Internet has been a big part of that growth. The ability for people to show pictures of their work very easily to a very large audience has sparked interest. The availability of diagrams [systematized instructions for replicating a design] is increasing online as well.

"And definitely, I think the art form is maturing. Actually the maturing of the art has paralleled my own maturity as an artist. When I was younger and I first discovered that there were other crazy people like me, we would sit down and talk about, 'Wow, that's such a cool pattern on your frog, or whatever. Show me how you did that.'

"The younger people in origami now are talking at that level. But those of us who have been working at it longer, there's a bit more maturity now. We're discussing subjects as opposed to techniques. We're discussing things like developing a sense of artistry, as opposed to focusing on ways to achieve more and more [technical] complexity.

Origami is a Japanese phrase that melds the word oru, meaning to fold, with kami, meaning paper. Cultural historians disagree whether it is an indigenous Japanese craft, or if it arose earlier in China, but either way, it is the Japanese village form of paper folding that is best known today. For centuries, it was a modest domestic decorative craft, associated largely with women.

Then in the 1930s a paper-folding Mozart appeared and revolutionized the form.

Akira Yoshizawa, who died two years ago, is considered the greatest origami innovator of all time. He took the quiet craft of folding paper cranes for Shinto ceremonies, and created an art form. His folded-paper figures have a surprising ability to suggest living creatures, a quality that makes his work instantly recognizable. How he did it is hard to decipher. In the same way that a master brush painter can flip a fish into life with a slim stroke of ink, Yoshizawa could animate a folded-paper mouse with a detail as tiny as the way a paw is tilted. Yoshizawa lived to see his work exhibited at the Louvre.

It was one of Yoshizawa's books that got Wu started folding paper when he was three. "I'm looking to find ways to bring more life to what I do," he says. "My goal is to find some of that elusive quickening that Yoshizawa has in his work.

"I'd like to actually say something with my art. Every paper folder makes animals, everybody makes things: I want to do more than that. To this point, as another origami artist has said, we're just model makers. Too many of us are focusing on technique. And even those of us who are trying to push beyond that level, we're not quite sure how to get there."

Clearly the fraternity of origami artists (and it is, still, largely a fraternity, with few women masters) is getting closer to that point of artistic breakthrough.

Wu's best work has a refinement of surface that is compelling: the scaly hide of a dragon, suggested through a minute network of triangular creases, for instance; or the loose hide of a bulldog at play, conjured perfectly by the rounded form of paper that is temporarily wetted during the folding. And there are definitely glimpses of Yoshizawa's liveliness in the bulge of a dinosaur's muscular leg, or the proud posture of a giant toad, or the minute layering of an origami oyster shell.

Wu collects the work of other masters, compelling in different ways. Kansas-based librarian Joel Cooper folds faces and abstract pavement-type patterns known as tessellations. Wu has one of Cooper's heads, a lordly Babylonian with wavy beard, strangely lifelike even though it is clearly made out of folded paper. The mask of Nebuchadnezzar, a Babylonian king, seems to breathe because, as Wu points out, Cooper has included slight imperfections, a crease on side of the face a few millimetres shorter than its twin on the other side, for instance. The intricacy is extreme, and all the more perplexing when one recalls the entire face could be unfolded, back to a single flat sheet of tan-coloured paper.

Eric Joisel is a French artist who uses foil-backed paper to fold a fantasy world of elongated figures. The foil holds the paper in curves and gathered pleats it would not otherwise sustain.

Wu, who says great origami artists generally have obsessive natures and a high tolerance for repetitive tasks, says the best part of the art form for him is the way it merges the mathematical or analytical side of the brain, with the creative side.

"Most origami artists fall into one of two categories," he explains. "There are the ones who do what they call 'doodling.' They just play around with paper until it sort of looks like something, and then they try to make it work.

"The other category is the technical paper folder who will look at the geometries and plan things out. One of the leaders in that is Robert Lang, who's actually written computer programs to help him analyse the geometries of things. And I'm somewhere off in another direction, sort of between the

Art cars Crafts

Vehicles of self-expression

By Peter Kenter
FOR CANWEST NEWS SERVICE

Tom Jones, assistant curator of the ArtCar Museum in Houston, says he can trace the concept of art cars back to a 1902 parade of seven vehicles on the streets of that city.

"It was a horseless carriage parade, with roses in profusion," says Jones.

Art cars can be defined as almost any artistic statement involving vehicles transformed beyond their manufactured condition — even an airbrushed van with a painting of a unicorn splashed along one side.

"An art car is a reaction against the blandness of mass-produced, cookie-cutter cars," says Jones. "It's an automobile augmented by self-expression."

The ArtCar Museum — the "Garage Mahal" of art galleries — was opened in 1998 and has a permanent collection of about 15 vehicles. Exhibits include the apocalyptically flavoured Doom Buggy, the Wrought Iron VW, the wooden Splinter and its sidekick Little Splinter, motorized Easter Bunny Rex Rabbit and the insectoid Roachster.

"Some artists use art cars to promote their other artwork and get it in the public eye," says Jones. "In the past, art cars were often made from used cars, but what they were finding was that, shortly after the cars had been transformed, they were experiencing severe performance issues like the motor blowing up. Today's art car artists often buy low-mileage vehicles or new cars right from the dealerships."

But even art cars need to pass safety checks if they're going to be driven on city streets. The Phantom, a steel-bodied wraith with gargoyle headlights, was built from the ground up using only a Volkswagen motor, transaxle, steering and suspension.

"Everything else from the interior to the brake system was created by the artist W.T. Burge," says Jones. "It's a rock-solid car and extremely functional. It was driven from Houston to San Francisco with no problem."

Art car enthusiasts come from around the world to see the museum, says Jones. "We recently got a call from the airport. Visitors from Japan wanted directions on how to get here directly from their flight."

The art car capital of Canada is Nanaimo, B.C., headquarters of the ArtCar Society of Canada, says founder and executive director Michelle Barkay. The society boasts about 50 members from as far away as Regina and Toronto.

"Art cars are works of art that everybody gets to see for free because an artist wants to share a creative vision," she says. "If an art car drives by, you might laugh out loud hysterically or mutter, 'Oh my gosh! That was fantastic!' Seeing an art car can change a bad day into something special." A VW bus transformed into a giant pink pig and a car that resembles a cathedral, for example.

Like Texas and California, the B.C. coastal climate is a little kinder to art cars than the sand-and-salt roadways that cross the rest of Canada, says Barkay.

"But, unlike the warmer climates, we can't really manage to establish those garden cars with plants growing on them all year long — though people have tried."

Barkay says that moving the society's headquarters from Vancouver to Nanaimo in 2001 wasn't without its adjustment phase.

"One cop wanted to be the big man on campus and made it his personal mission to get rid of all the town's art cars. We're automotive artists, not crazy people. If we stick a wing or a candelabra on a station wagon, we make sure it's siliconed and bolted down as much because we don't want to lose any of this good stuff as to be safe."

One of the society's prized possessions is The Witch's Cauldron, a 1954 Chevrolet believed to be the oldest art car in Canada. "It belonged to an eccentric woman who lived in the Oak Bay area of Victoria," says Barkay.

"Her husband ran the area's first dry cleaning business and she wanted to know where the delivery vehicle was at any given time so the employees wouldn't goof off. She had local artists paint the car orange, yellow, black and white. It was a scary car in more ways than one, because it didn't really have functional brakes."

Sculptors claim to impart a special soul to the material they work with.

Barkay says the same is true of art cars.

"I've created several mermaid-mobiles, but when one of them — a 1978 Volvo Bertone — went to the wreckers, I'd taken all of the cool parts off and pulled the battery. The mermaid-mobile sat at the top of a pile of scrap, waiting for disposal. A grizzled old guy who ran the crusher told me he'd freaked out when, just before the crusher was activated, all of the lights came on and the horn started blasting — one final huzzah from the Queen of the Ocean!"

Top 10 manly friendship flicks

By Jen McDonnell
CANWEST NEWS SERVICE

Nowhere is the buddy system taken more seriously than in Hollywood. There's a long, cherished tradition of pairing by-the-book stiff with hotheaded, mayhem-courting bad boys and watching them develop deep (but totally manly) friendships. Female love interests fade into the film's background, but the chemistry between the two male leads remains as strong and steadfast as their newfound bond.

In honour of Hollywood's latest buddy movie, Reign Over Me, which pairs upstanding married man Don Cheadle with sad-sack Adam Sandler, we're counting down the Top 10 man-love movies.

Tango & Cash (1989)

Best Buds: Sylvester Stallone, Kurt Russell

Premise: Rival narcotics cops Tango (Stallone) and Cash (Russell) must put their differences behind them and work together when a drug lord frames them for murder.

Man-Love Magnitude: Seven awkward hugs out of 10. The duelling duo eventually ends up sharing everything, with Tango even letting Cash flirt with his sister (played by the surprisingly hot Teri Hatcher).

Swingers (1996)

Best Buds: Vince Vaughn, Jon Favreau
Premise: After getting dumped by his girlfriend, Mike (Favreau) is schooled on how to pick up women in bars by his best buddy, Trent (Vaughn).

Man-Love Magnitude: Nine awkward hugs out of 10. Sure, the whole movie is about scoring chicks, but how many guys do you know who call each other "baby?"

Bad Boys (1995)

Best Buds: Will Smith, Martin Lawrence

Premise: Amid director Michael Bay's orgy of explosions, Smith and Lawrence play Miami police officers assigned to protect a witness and recover stolen narcotics.

Man-Love Magnitude: Five awkward hugs out of 10. Smith and Lawrence have each other's back, but Tea Leoni as Smith's love interest keeps the male hoo-ya in check.

Bon Cop, Bad Cop (2006)

Best Buds: Colm Feore, Patrick Huard

Premise: An OPP officer must join forces with a Quebec cop when a murder is committed on the provincial border.

Man-Love Magnitude: Six awkward hugs out of 10. The reckless French cop and the by-the-book English detective begrudgingly grow to respect each other while solving the case.

Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (1969)

Best Buds: Robert Redford, Paul Newman

Premise: With a posse of lawmen hot on their tails, bank robbers Butch (Newman) and the Kid (Redford) flee to Bolivia and attempt to continue pulling off heists.

Man-Love Magnitude: Nine awkward hugs out of 10. Sure, Etta Place stars as Kid's supposed love interest, but neither man seems too heartbroken when she decided to ditch them.

Lethal Weapon (1987)

Best Buds: Mel Gibson, Danny Glover

Premise: Pension-protecting Det. Murtaugh (Glover) is paired with suicidal Det. Riggs (Gibson) in the hunt for a war veteran who is heading a drug smuggling operation.

Man-Love Magnitude: Seven awkward hugs out of 10. The pair soon becomes tight, with Murtaugh even inviting Riggs home to experience his wife's inedible cooking.

Wayne's World (1992)

Best Buds: Mike Myers, Dana Carvey
Premise: The cable access show hosted by Wayne (Myers) and Garth (Carvey) is in danger when a slimy businessman buys the channel, causing tension between the fun-loving slackers.

Man-Love Magnitude: Eight awkward hugs out of 10. As a character sums up in one of the film's multiple endings, "I've learned that platonic love can exist between two grown men." Schwing!

48 Hrs. (1982)

Best Buds: Nick Nolte, Eddie Murphy
Premise: Det. Jack Cates (Nolte) springs Reggie Hammond (Murphy) free from jail for 48 hours and enlists the convict's help in his search for a pair of cop killers.

Man-Love Magnitude: Six awkward hugs out of 10. The crusty detective eventually begins to respect the wise-cracking prisoner, and even lets him spend his final few hours of freedom with a woman before taking him back to the big house.

Rush Hour (1998)

Best Buds: Jackie Chan, Chris Tucker
Premise: Investigating the death of the Chinese consul's daughter, Inspector Lee (Chan) travels from Hong Kong to Los Angeles, where he is paired with a cocky loner cop, James Carter (Tucker).

Man-Love Magnitude: Eight awkward hugs out of 10. Lee and Carter jet off to Hong Kong together in the end.

Beavis and Butt-head Do America (1996)

Best Buds: Beavis, Butt-head
Premise: When their television set is stolen, the cartoon characters embark on a cross-country adventure to get it back.

Man-Love Magnitude: Nine awkward hugs out of 10. Though the boys spend the whole movie trying to "score," they're open to new experiences.

When they misinterpret an offer from a hitman to "do" a guy for $20,000, Beavis responds, "I don't know, Butt-head. That is a lot of money! Maybe we can close our eyes and pretend he's a pretty good chick."

Already planning a summer vacation

'The kids will love it,' she said softly

This is an excerpt from the book Snapshots of Heaven: 40 Funny, Profound, Real-Life Stories About Children, published by Snapshots of Heaven Publishing and written by Ville Saint Laurent author Michael Wells. "The Magic Carpet Ride on Wheels" has an Eastern Townships touch....

By Michael Wells

SPECIAL TO THE RECORD

Leave it to my wife, Laure, to come up with a vacation idea that could both excite and bewilder anyone, even a Tibetan monk. And leave it to her to suggest the idea moments before we ended an exhausting work day.

"Michael," she said, just as I was settling into bed, "I have a great idea for a summer vacation." For a few seconds, I pretended not to hear. "Why don't we rent a motor home for a week?"

Looking straight into her eyes, I yelled, "Are you crazy? Us? Our family? Renting a motor home? We don't even own a tent! We can't go 10 miles without a roadside Hilton! You can't be serious, Laure."

She was serious. Very serious! I continued ranting for a few minutes, then she did it. She always saves the best for last, setting me up perfectly like a set of bowling pins, then tossing the perfect strike.

"The kids will love it, Michael," she said softly. "It will be the adventure of a lifetime. They'll get a real kick out of it. Never mind you, think of them."

"That's not fair," I said. "Now you're fighting dirty." We both laughed and said goodnight. I never told her, but I was awake all night, having nightmares of being eaten alive by mosquitoes, smelling the septic tank back up into our RV, and paying hundreds of dollars for these unique experiences.

Summer rolled around and finally the day came when the kids and I picked up the RV.

They excitedly ran around what would be their home for the next week, fighting over who'd get the top bunk bed. A few hours later, we pulled out of our driveway and headed for Quebec City. Laure had made reservations for all the campsites, but we didn't anticipate one problem. When we finally arrived at the site, it was 3 a.m., but we quickly discovered that it closed at midnight. We parked outside the gate and fell asleep hours later, listening to the rain beating against our new home.

The next morning there was a knock at the door. Surprise! A man handed me a $100 ticket, explaining that we were illegally parked and had never showed up for our reserved spot on the campground. At the moment, all I wanted to do was go home. But one look at my wife and kids told me they were in it for the long haul.

We started driving again. We arrived at the next campsite with plenty of time to relax, build a fire, and have a barbecue. We met a whole world of people and actually started to have fun. It was like we'd slipped into a parallel universe where people become addicted to a whole different lifestyle. Each site is like a summer camp, with a swimming pool, a park, and a central hall where adults play bingo and kids buy candy. Nights were spent playing board games, meeting neighbours, and listening to them play guitar by the campfire.

But, after three-and-a-half days of nonstop travel, I suggested we find a place to sit out the rest of the week. Laure and the kids agreed, so we headed for Granby, Quebec, which supposedly had the best campsite for kids with a 500-mile radius. Granby didn't disappoint and, for me, the real vacation began.

There were rides, pools, games, and hundreds of other children. There was nothing but sunshine and 80-degree weather everyday. We all loved every minute of it.

It was a great time for us as a family. But it was also the first time I saw my nine-year-old son begin to go off on his own, getting his first taste of independence. Every morning, Jeremy would head off by himself for the giant trampoline, and jump and jump, as if he were trying to touch the sky. Then he was off to the shuffleboard courts, where he found lots of new friends, kids his own age.

Ironically, this family outing we'd planned, and which we'd all enjoyed so much as a family, had taken on a new and somewhat unexpected dimension — my son was growing up, and beginning to test his wings.

For seven days we lived in a world we never knew existed. We did things we never did before. Visited places we never imagined — thanks to an RV that only minutes into the ride, I had regretted renting. Like the magic carpet in Aladdin, the RV swept us into a family adventure we would never forget. As we drove home Saturday night, I realized this vacation would quickly become one of our most important journeys. Reminding me, like Aladdin's magic carpet, that it was not and it never is the destination that matters, it's the experience, the magic carpet ride!

My wife's prediction that, "The kids will love it. They'll get a real kick out of it," had come true. Jenna and Jeremy will never forget "The Magic Carpet Ride," and neither will Laure and I. For our family, stopping and staying awhile in Granby is filed in our memory bank under "Snapshots of Heaven."

Still faithful after all these years

Nelson, Haggard, Price

Every week, many albums are being released by the country music industry. Once in a while a true gem surfaces.

This time around we have a brand new release by three of the biggest names in country music. These are singer/songwriters who have paved the way for their peers and are still active and prolific.

We have Willie Nelson, who joins forces with Merle Haggard and Ray Price in a wonderful celebration of the classic country song.

From the production by veteran Fred Foster to the musical support from steel guitarist Buddy Emmons and Texas Playboy fiddler Johnny Gimble, and harmonies from the Jordanaires, to songs from the likes of Harlan Howard, Leon Payne, and Lefty Frizzell, everything is from the old school.

The generation gap, along with their individuality as artists, distinguishes this special project.

Willie Nelson is the old hippie as well as the most conversational vocalist, while Merle Haggard is the poet of the common man, who likes his country with a touch of blues. Ray Price remains the crooner extraordinaire of country music.

The album, Last of the Breed, offers 22 songs on two discs, containing some of the greatest country numbers ever written, although they're not necessarily these three's biggest hits (except for a cover of Price's 'Heartaches by the Numbers').

Most expect an album featuring Willie Nelson, Ray Price, and Merle Haggard to be spectacular, and it is spectacular in every way. Instead of trying to breathe new life into classic songs, this trio lets the songs rejuvenate themselves. While the three icons show their own immense talents, they also show the power of a good country tune.

Ray Price has had the lowest profile of the three over the last 10 years or so, but even at 81 years of age, he is one of the most effective singers on earth.

Folks who are primarily fans of new country (Rascal Flatts, Carrie Underwood) might not enjoy this album as much. But do yourself a favour and take the chance to discover what real country music is all about. This is a double serving of authentic country.

COUNTRY CONNECTION:

Willie Nelson is the obvious anchor here, as he appears on all tracks but two.

The three legends work well together, and obviously enjoy collaborating. Special guest Vince Gill adds his beautiful harmonies to the standard 'Heartaches By the Number', while Kris Kristofferson's duet with Willie and Ray on his own 'Why Me Lord' could be the vocal event of the year. The rest of the songs get carried on their own weight as the three artists simply sing them, and let the tunes be themselves.

The album is aptly titled because these amazing men, with their still-staggeringly superior voices, are very nearly the last of their breed, the last of the real, solid, traditional country music singers who rely on their skill, rather than on studio gimmicks and post-production tricks. These voices are the real deal; they have weathered the years and they're still making magic of their own.

Whether the three companions are harmonizing on Mickey Newbury's 'Sweet Memories' (take a close listen to Nelson's phrasing of the opening) or trading verses on Harland Howard's 'Pick Me Up on Your Way Down', the vocal blend suggests old friends having the time of their musical lives.

There are other highlights, such as the old 'Mom and Dad's Waltz' and Nelson's new song 'Back To Earth' and 'Lost Highway', while 'If I Ever Get Lucky', is a new one by Merle Haggard. There are also two more Cindy Walker compositions, 'Night Watch' and 'Goin' Away Party'.

The music is as timeless and elegant as these three men are. There's also the new song from Haggard called 'Sweet Jesus' that feels vintage. It's a record that reflects the honky-tonk and swing music that shaped their careers.

Price hopes the record will bring back interest in traditional country music, something he thinks is missing from today's country radio.

Haggard, who in 1969 sang the anthem 'Okie From Muskogee', a number which mocked hippie protesters and proclaimed, 'We don't smoke marijuana in Muskogee', has been opening shows for Bob Dylan and the Rolling Stones for a while. He said in an interview that both play a purer form of country music than many contemporary country acts.

At 73, Nelson continues to be more prolific than most artists who are half his age. Last year alone he released two albums, You Don't Know Me: The Songs of Cindy Walker and the Ryan Adams-produced Songbird, which had him covering songs by the Grateful Dead, Leonard Cohen and Fleetwood Mac. Nelson has always been very eclectic.

He already has another album ready for release, one produced by Kenny Chesney.

Last Of The Breed is a two-disc, 22-song collection of newly recorded versions of country classics and a few new songs, by three of the genre most important and influential artists.

Give it a listen and you might just understand where country music comes from and why these singers' fans are still faithful after all these years.
