Mrs. W. J. Murphy is spending some time the guest of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Houver, Cowansville, Que.

On Friday afternoon, July 7th, four cars of members, responding to a kind invitation from the W.M.S. there, journeyed to Chateauguay Basin where ,after enjoying a fine programme of vocal and instrumental music and recitations, put on the pageant, "The Voices of the Women" and a very happy afternoon was spent and everything was done by the hostesses to make all wish to go again.

On Tuesday afternoon, July 18th, members and friends wended their way to the lawn at the St. Paul's manse where the Howick United W.M.S. was entertained. Altogether about one hundred were present. The president, Mrs. Pollock was in the chair and in her own kind way welcomed all to her home. Miss M. Bazin had charge of the devotional exercises and afterwards a short business meeting was conducted and reports received. The work committee reported holding an all day quilting when six quilts were done and several donations of goods received and the treasurer reported sending over $100 to the Presbyterial Treasury.

The Howick president, Mrs. Templeton was invited to preside and after a few appreciative remarks she called on Miss Morrison who gave a very fine paper on Mission at Home, touching on the various nations represented in our own country who are in need of the gospel message to make them good citizens. A solo by Mrs. (Rev.) Moore was sweetly sung, followed by a wonderfully fine history of Korea by Miss Morrsi, who began over 200 years B.C. and followed its doing up until the present time, giving a synopsis of government wars, education and religious beliefs and throughout showing what a fine character is possessed by those people who live in a small country and have such a system of cultivation that 18000 acres feeds 15 million people. Some interesting landmarks there are an altar 4,000 years old; an observatory built by a woman over 3000 years ago; battlement arounds the city of Seoul 13 miles long and 20 and 30 feet high, also 3000 years old; and many more very interesting things. A duet was sung by Mrs. L. Gruer and Mrs. Bennie, after which the singing of "Blest be the Tie" and a unanimous vote of thanks closed the meeting. A social time was then spent and refreshments served.

REV. T. ST. AUBIN AS MINISTERIAL ASSN. ESSAYIST

Reviews Book on Liberalism and Christianity—Association Met at Dundee

The July meeting of the Frontier Ministerial Association of the United Church was held on Tuesday, July 18th, at the home of Rev. and Mrs. C. A. Haughton, Dundee. There was a large attendance, nearly every member being present. Rev. Nathan Sproule, D.D. of California, Rev. Louis Abran, Principal of St. Johns School-home Quebec, and Rev. F. S. Morley, Ph.D. were introduced to the meeting and welcomed as guests and the privileges of the gathering extended to them. The paper of the day was given by Rev. T. S. St. Aubin of Valleyfield. He had chosen for his subject a review of the book "Liberalism and Christianity" by Rev. Prof. J. Gresham Meachin of Princeton University. The book is a strong defence of what is generally known as Fundamentalism, and a setting forth of the errors of Liberalism sometimes called Modernism. The essayist was in perfect agreement with the positions that the book takes and in a masterly essay he set forth the fundamental doctrines of Christianity which he held the Liberal either disregards or denies. Following down one after another what he claimed were the essential doctrines taught by Paul, by Jesus and other New Testament authorities, the essayist claimed that only those who held and taught these doctrines had a right to call themselves Christians, any other teaching was another brand of religion. The discussion on the paper was opened by Rev. A. McKinley Rose who differed from the standpoint of the essayist, and suggested that neither in the paper or in the book reviewed had the Liberal position been set forth in its true light. He maintained that the Fundamentalist position was too dogmatic and bigotted, and deplored the classification under names that had a sinister meaning of those who differed with us in thought. The three visitors were asked to contribute to the discussion, which they kindly did, being in accord with the paper of the day. Rev. Dr. Morey contributing the important thought that we need in our preaching a note of assurance and authority, and if we are to preach Christ we must have a living experience of Him. An expression of appreciation for the masterly paper given was presented to Mr. St. Aubin and the meeting adjourned to the social hour, when the host and hostess expressed their welcome in providing a delicious repast. Their hospitality having been acknowledged, adjournment was made to visit the new church building. Those who remembered the beautiful building that for so many years had stood on that corner and the serious disaster caused by the fire of less than two years ago were very pleased to see the beautiful modern building that has risen on the old site, and congratulations were extended to Mr. Haughton and his people on their heroic achievement in overcoming the disaster caused by the fire.

COUNTIES GET RETURNS FROM NEW BEER TAX

Franklin County's Share Given as $6,385.95—Grand Total to be Distributed is $1,759,242.26 Principally License Fees

Franklin County will receive $6,385.95 in the first distribution of beer revenues ordered today at Albany. Clinton County wil get $6,524.73 and St. Lawrence $12,712.09 Morris S. Tremaine made the distribution to all counties. The funds will be redistributed by the county treasurers to their respective localities on the basis of population.

The distribution to counties was made on the basis of collection figures furnished by Mark Graves, president of the State Tax Commission.

Total collections in the state for the period ending June 30, consisting principally of license fees, amounted to $3,519,771.01. Under the law, half of the total revenue from beer is retained by the state and the other half distributed throughout the state on a per capita basis.

After much astronomical calculation, Comptroller Tremaine's auditors determined that this first distribution of beer revenue amounted to $1,759,242.26.

The total distribution amounted to $1,759,242.26, of which $968,562.88 went to Greater New York and $790,679.38 to the other counties.

The total is somewhat less than half of the total collections, because the law requires the Comptroller to retain a sum calculated to be sufficient to satisfy claims for refunds in cases where applicants are refused licenses and where overpayments of taxes are made. Besides, $1,286.49 of the collections reported today was for revenue from wine, and the law provides that the state retain all revenue from that source. (Malone Telegram)

White is Popular

White leads, and will continue to be the most popular of all light shades throughout the season. Pink and yellow are next in order. Dark-colored blouses are used with pastel and white suits. For sports wear, "string" a color bordering on the natural, is high style, and important, owing to its adaptabiltiy in combinations.

Papal Blessing for Hôtel-Dieu Given by Mgr. Andrea Cassulo

Apostolic Delegate Receives Great Ovation Upon Arrival at Valleyfield with Senator L. A. Wilson on Saturday Evening—Grand Procession Formed to Accompany Delegate to Bishop's Palace

Saturday evening, July 22, marked the second visit of Mgr. Andrea Cassulo to the City of Valleyfield. Arriving by the Canadian National Railway at 7.55 p.m. (Daylight Saving Time) the Apostolic Delegate was met by an enthusiastic crowd, all anxious to receive the Papal blessing granted by the Delegate. Immediately on his leaving the train, the welcome of the City to Mgr. Cassulo was expressed by the Mayor, Philorum Billette.

The Delegate, accompanied by the Bishop, J. A. Langlois, proceeded by carriage to the Hôtel-Dieu. The procession was made up by the Valleyfield Band, the Bellerive Band, the Garde Champlain, the Zouaves and numerous citizens in automobiles. A fellow passenger with Mgr. Cassulo was Senator Lawrence A. Wilson, who has been a great friend to the Valleyfield people and their enterprises in the past.

Sunday, at 7 a.m., Mass was celebrated by Archbishop Cassulo in the Chapel of the Hôtel-Dieu for the personnel of the institution. At 10 a.m. he proceeded to the cathedral to assist in the celebrating of High Mass. During the course of this Mass, the Bishop, J. A. Langlois presented the homages of his parishioners, to which the Archbishop made a suitable reply.

At 2.30 in the afternoon, Benediction was given by the Archbishop, assisted by Bishop J. A. Langlois, followed by prayers by Canon J. D. Nepveu, rector of the Cathedral, and by other canons and priests of the local churches. Musical selections appropriate to the occasion were rendered by the Valleyfield choir under the direction of Rev. L. Belanger and his brother, Mr. R. Belanger, City Engineer.

Following the selections by the choir speeches were made from the west balcony of the Hôtel-Dieu. The Rev. Canon J. D. Nepveu being chairman for the occasion, introduced the following speakers: His Excellency Mgr. Andrea Cassulo, Apostolic Delegate, Philorum Billette, Mayor of Valleyfield, Mgr. Sabourin, curé for the parish of Rigaud, Hon. Honoré Mercier, Minister of Lands and Forests, Senator Lawrence A. Wilson, Mr. Maxime Raymond, M.P., for the district of Beauharnois, Mr. Gontran Saintonge, M.L.A., and Dr. S. W. Laroche.

Dr. Laroche, the last speaker on the programme, on behalf of the Hôtel-Dieu, thanked all who had been instrumental in the building of the necessary new Hôtel-Dieu, thanking especially the Government who have promised a grant for the next few years and also those who had made donations to the comfort of the rooms in the hospital.

After the speeches, the public was admitted to the institution, all parts of the hospital being open to inspection. In the main parlour of the Institution, the Apostolic Delegate received the homages of these visitors who took the opportunity to meet with the representative of the Pope.

When the visitors had dispersed, a supper was tendered at the Hôtel-Dieu to the visitors and notables of the city.

Senator Lawrence A. Wilson ordered that Sunday be a Tag Day in Valleyfield, and that the proceeds go to the new hospital. This Tag Day was organized by Mrs. Gontran Saintonge who is to be congratulated on acquiring the sum of $114. from these tags.

ATHLETICS TO PLAY MALONE ON MONDAY

Appearance of Connie Mack's Great Baseball Team on Malone Diamond Offers Rare Treat

Baseball fans of Malone and the North Country will be offered a rare treat when Connie Mack brings his Philadelphia Athletics to Malone for a game with the Malone Stars on Monday, July 31. The appearance of the big leaguers on a local diamond is forecast as one of the greatest events Malone has experienced in years.

Lefty Grove, rated as the greatest pitcher in the major leagues today, will be among the players, for the Athletics are bringing their first string team to Malone for the contest. Also there will be Jimmie Foxx, outstanding home run hitter of the season and present major league leader in batting.

Fans throughout the North Country have become enthused at the prospect of the game and reserved seats have already been ordered in advance. The reserved seat sale is at George Clark's store and will continue each day from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. up to the day of the game. Reservations may also be made by phoning or writing E. T. Rider, manager of the local team.

General admission to the game has been fixed at $1 to place attendance at the event within the the reach of the public. Three thousand five hundred seats on the grandstand will be reserved.

In preparation for the big game, the diamond circle at the local ball park on the fair grounds is being enlarged ten feet to conform with specifications of big league diamonds.

The local management has taken $1,000 rain insurance as a safe-guard against heavy financial loss in the event of rain.

Salesman—Have you seen the latest fountain pen? Absolutely impossible for ink to escape from it anywhere.

Business Man—Huh, I've tried to write with that kind for years.

Father—Trouble with dyspepsia in school today? Why, that's a strange thing for a boy to have.

Johnny—I didn't have it; I had to spell it.

JOS. LANDRY'S BARNS BURN

Z. Coupal of Roxham Injured by Cattle When Thrown on Cement Floor

On Wednesday night, July 19th, Mr. Joseph Landry's barns and all outbuildings except the milk house and dwelling house were completely destroyed by fire. Mr. Landry had just finished haying and he had about forty tons of hay in the barn, which was burned, also his machinery, consisting of plows, and harrows, and his buggy, and all machinery that is used first in the spring. Everything was packed away and they were unable to save anything. The hen-house and hens were also burned. They do not know the origin of the fire unless it was caused from overheated hay. Mr. and Mrs. Landry were awakened about 10.30 at night by some people who were passing by in a car and saw the flames leaping from the barn. Help was quickly summoned, but to no avail. Mr. Landry had just remodelled his barn last year and everything was nicely painted. Some insurance was carried in the Parish Insurance Co. Much sympathy is extended to Mr. and Mrs. Landry in their loss.

On Wednesday night, Mr Z. Coupal was quite badly injured while turning the cows out of the stable. One of the cows knocked him down to the cement. It was thought he had fractured some bones and Dr. George Gonyea of Champlain, N. Y., was immediately called. He found him badly shaken up but no bones broken. Mr. Coupal is well up in years, and this is the third accident he has had in the last year or so.

Baseball

On Sunday Huntingdon defeated the strong Beauharnois baseball team on the Huntingdon diamond in a well played exciting game. Although it was extremely hot, this did not prevent the Beauharnois team from bringing 150 supporters to cheer them to victory. There were practically no local people in attendance.

This is the ninth game that Huntingdon has played on the home diamond, where they have yet to be defeated.

Beauharnois were using their star battery of Griffin and Perron, Schuyers and Faille performing for Huntingdon. The visitors scored in the first inninig on three consecutive singles. There was no further scoring until the fifth, when Richard and Carthwright started the inning with singles. Primeau and Curry went out to the infield, but Lafrance came through with a timely single, scoring two runs. Perron lifted a high fly to Gavin, which the latter dropped. Leduc lifted a short fly between centre and right, which Gavin took after a hard run. Gavin, first up for the locals, grounded out to second. Kerby then hit cleanly for Huntingdon's first hit. Faille walked. O'Connor grounded to short, who threw to third for a forceout but Frappier let the ball get away from him and Kerby scored. Lyle Elder then picked out one to his liking and drove it far over the centre fielder's hed for a long three bagger, scoring Faille and O'Connor. McIntyre was hit by pitcher. Cecil and Lyle Elder then pulled a perfect squeeze. The pitch was high but Cecil bunted up the third base line, and Lyle was over the pan almost before the ball touched the ground. So well placed was the bunt that Cecil made first safely. Watson lifted a short fly back of third, and Frappier made a fine one handed catch. Schuyers then forced Cecil Elder at second, ending the inning. Huntingdon now leading by one run. In the first of the sixth, Frappier flied out to Watson in left, Griffin singled and stole second, going to third on a wild pitch, and scoring when Richard hit a hard grounder between first and second. Lyle Elder made a sensational stop of this hit, getting the man at first. With two down Carthwright singled and took second when the ball was badly handled, scoring on Primeau's single. Curry went out to Elder unassisted. Beauharnois were now leading by one run.

For Huntingdon, Gavin and Kerby singled. Faille struck out, then O'Connor, Lyle Elder and McIntyre singled successively sending over three runs. Cecil Elder hit a hard grounder to second, and Lyle was caught at the plate. Watson ended the inning by grounding out to third.

In the seventh, Beauharnois went out in order. For Huntingdon, Schuyere grounded out, Gavin singled and Kerby drove the ball over centre fielder's head for a double, but Gavin was caught at the plate on a close play. Faille struck out to end the inning.

Beauharnois scored in the eighth. After Frappier had flied out to centre, Griffin singled and stole second, going to third on a passed ball. Richard grounded to Lyle Elder, who easily caught Griffin at the plate. Carthwright singled to right and when the ball got away from O'Connor in the rough ground, Richard scored Beauharnois' last run. Primeau flied out to centre to end the inning.

O'Connor drove a hard grounder through Primeau at second. Lyle Elder was out on strikes. McIntyre sacrificed O'Connor to second. Cecil Elder was safe on Frappier's error, O'Connor making third, from where he scoed when Watson hit the ball over centre field's head for a double. Schuyers struck out to end the inning. In the ninth, Curry lifted a foul near the Huntingdon bench which L. Elder took with one hand after a hard run. Lafrance drove to Kerby, and the crowd started to leave the stand. Perron hit a high bounder at Schuyers, who knocked the ball down and recovered in time to make the play at first and a well played ball game was over.

Jackie Kerby, playing his first game with the regulars played sensationally, both afield and at the bat, getting three hits, and accepting seven chances, most of them difficult, without error. Lyle Elder played his usual brilliant game at first, and hitting when hits were needed. His first hit, a long three bagger, came with two men on, and Huntingdon two runs behind. In the next inning, his single figured in the scoring of the three runs that put Huntingdon in the lead. The boys are playing consistent, scrappy ball, and are deserving of much better support than is accorded them. A game is being arranged for next Sunday, when it is hoped tha more local people will be in attendance.

A woman of 76 years of age had not enjoyed a refreshing swim in the Chateauguay for many years, although she resided by its banks. On Thursday last she wended her way to Clay Bottom, accompanied by other members of the family. Like a duck she took to the water and swam the width of the river and return, feeling only so much more refreshed. Contrary to this experience a young bank clerk went to the Port Lewis wharf with a number of friends. The clerk knew he had not learned how to swim but deliberately walked off the wharf into deep water. He made no move to try and swim, until his companions fished him out. Fortunately he too was none the worse of his experience, which might have proved fatal.

Last evening the second play off game for the Town League championship took place at the park. Although poorly played, the game was exciting and interesting, keeping the large crowd on its toes until the last of the sixth, in which inning McCrimmon obtained an eight run lead.

The Canadians, first at bat, started off with a bang, when four hits, which included a home run by Jean Lefebvre, netted five runs. They obtained another, in the third and two in the fourth. In the meantime McCrimmon's team could not seem to get going. However, in the fourth, after two were out, Tedstone popped up to the infield, and the fly was dropped. This seemed to upset the Canadians, and when the dust cleared up, seven hits, including a home run by McCrimmon, combined with three errors netted nine runs. The Canadians went scoreless in the fifth while McCrimmon obtained four. However, in the sixth the Canadians came back strong, seven hits netting them six runs, and they were now leading by one score. McCrimmon also came back strong, five hits, four errors and a fielder's choice netting nine runs. The best the Canadians could do was one run in the seventh, and the game was over.

Messrs. D. Faubert, Mayor of Huntingdon; W. J. Sherry, mayor of Godmanchester; James E. Barrett, Godmanchester secretary; and Alderman Derochie, of Huntingdon met with the Minister of Roads, in Montreal yesterday. The delegation requested that the Roads Department build the mile of road west of Huntingdon this season. Although nothing definite was stipulated by the Minister, the party came home feeling favourable progress had been made, and that the road will be given some attention this year.

Chief Chavalier paid his official visit to Huntingdon on Tuesday to inspect the fire equipment for the Town of Huntingdon. Upon his arrival in town he rung in a fire alarm in order to test out the volunteer fire brigade. The response was excellent for in four minutes the volunteers took the hose from the Fire Station to the Leach Textile mill, there connected it to a hydrant and had the water running. The Chief heartily approved of the town's purchase of the fire hose auto truck. At the Fire Station, upon the return from this drill-test he gave the volunteers some helpful advice and demonstrations in connection with the fighting of fires.

Tackling The Train Freight Problems In and about Western Ontario the Canadian railways have made an attempt to tackle the package freight problems that they are confronted with, due to the truck transports. The railways inaugurated the new system last March whereby in southern Ontario the railways would pick up all small freight shipments at the place of business and ship them by train to their destination, and there arrange to deliver them to the consignee. The freight charge was a flat rate, no cognizance of the established rates being adhered to. The scheme worked and now the railways have arranged to extend the area where this system of freight transportation is to operate in. Literally speaking, it is that portion of Ontario west of Toronto to Georgian Bay.

The railways have regained trade, and if the experiment with a larger territory works out as satisfactory as the railway officials hope for, it is quite likely the freight transportation change will be further extended. Trucks will find they have an opposition that they will find hard to compete with, for the well equipped trains offer services and assurances that the trucks do not attempt.

Who knows but perhaps the milk trucks will be up against it, and they will if the railways start collecting milk to ship by train in refrigerator cars to the cities. The farmer looks for economies, and so does the railway, and perhaps this is one way of economizing, by getting full loads for the regular trains.

Who Is Ruling The United States The ruler of the British Empire is King George and his parliamentarians. But who rules the United States and its 125,000,000 of people? Is it Roosevelt? Not if we read between the lines in some of the reports in magazines and newspapers of the U. S. A. Roosevelt talks and sanctions a certain amount legislation, but after all said and done is it not most important that policies be formed, and one man alone can not do all that.

Last week Premier R. B. Bennett intimated that if Uncle Sam wanted to save itself President Roosevelt should close the New York Stock Market. Immediately this statement was announced the Stock Markets flopped and more paupers were created. The Canadian Premier in this instance was ruling the United States.

President Roosevelt has not consented to fit in with the World Economic Conference agreements, so the nations will continue to play ball with one another and Britain will again continue to make strides at the expense of the U. S. A. Had the Conference been a success, Britain would have perhaps made still greater strides, trading with all the civilized countries of the world on a larger scale than is the case today.

Now let us look at the United States legislation recently enacted whereby beer is sold and brewed. Who is brewing the beer south of the 45th line? From a good authority we learn that much of it is being brewed by the racketeers. If you want a job go to one of these companies and you may be offered a crooked job; if you will be crooked for them. If the first job offered is not rotten enough ask for another, you may not be disappointed. President Roosevelt has not given the Americans so much beer legislation as have the racketeers conquered, and the racketeers will not give the American Treasury so much revenue as they might lawfully be expected to do. That type of individual does not customarily do things just that way.

Some Americans are getting wise to themselves and are now writing articles showing weaknesses in their legislation laws. They uphold the Criminal laws of Canada, and particularly the judgments that have been handed out in connection with bank robberies. Canadian Judges are appointed for life, whilst the American Judges are elected. We all know what elections mean—vote catching graft. Can a man who been elected a judge—possibly obliged to hand out graft—give fair judgment upon a man whom he may have at one time bought, or used to buy votes of others?

In regards to laws we find our American cousins upholding the laws of Canada. They have statutes but Canadians have fair laws. In 1929 Canada had 26 known murders; in 1930 there were 17 murders. In the year 1931 there were convictions in 60.3% of the jury trials in Canada. In five of the cities of the U. S. there were 6881 felony trials and only 1532 convictions. In regards to the thieving of autos we find that in Canada 96% of the autos stolen are recovered.

When The Law Fails At the present moment Canadian newspapers seem to be particularly busy writing editorials about the desperate situation that faces the United States people at this time in the matter of law and order. The special form of crime that is appalling at the moment in the United States is that of kidnapping. In the course of a week or so no less than four wealthy or prominent persons in the United States were kidnapped, tortured, held for ransom, and the authorities seem powerless to do anything about it. Five hundred families of importance in the United States are said to be protected by special guards to avoid the danger of the active kidnappers. Even the family of the president of the United States is not considered out of the danger line. In all this, Canadian newspapers see much food for moralizing. Yet among the daily newspapers commenting on the epidemic of kidnapping in the United States, The Toronto Globe is the only one that touches on the one true moral so far as Canadians are concerned. "Let us see to it that the crime of kidnapping is not allowed to pass the border," is the plea of The Globe. It might have been well for The Globe to have extended on the idea and exhorted all good Canadians to assure themselves safety from the malice of the kidnapper by seeing to it that the same conditions in regard to law and order that obtain in the United States are not tolerated in this country. For years past the United States newspapers have thrown a glamour on crime and the authorities have coddled their criminals. Sneak thieves have been called Robin Hoods, and degenerate rogues and murderers have been dignified by such terms as bandits. The courts have failed to do their duty. The authorities have been lax and venial. But the real cause has been the attitude of the people themselves. There has been a sickening consideration for every cheap tramp and every half-witted thief and cowardly murderer, while there hasn't been any sympathy or notice or justice or protection left for the common honest loyal citizen. It would be well for Canada to guard against the vicious tendency to place the criminal's interests beyond those of the common good citizen. Sam Behan's crooked speech recently at the trial of the convicts for disorder and damage at Portsmouth penitentiary showed how Canadians need to steel themselves against silly appeals to sentiment by thugs and the gold-brick artists with their tongues in their cheeks. Sam said he longed for Sing Sing with its comfort and privileges and pleasures, rather than the monotony and irksomeness of Portsmouth. This fellow should have been impressed with the fact that Canada has no desire to make its prisons more attractive than the living places of its good citizens. The guard for Canada against the lawnessness of the United States rests chiefly in the proper attitude of the people. The one chief consideration should be the comfort and happiness of the law-abiding and the loyal. Those who will not play the game should be given to understand that their breach of the rules will be penalized. Law and order are nothing but the rules agreed upon so that all good citizens may have fair chance for safety and security. The common good should be the chief consideration. The law already guards the interests of the criminal to a paint that it is not altogether to the advantage of the decent citizen. It is not too much to say that the criminal is not treated brutally in any of the Canadian prisons. If the plea of the Bucks and Behans and some of their sympathizers outside are heeded, the criminals will be a specially favoured class. That has been the case in the United States. That has been the real cause of the trouble with law and order in the country to the South. When the people in the United States are honestly determined that the only favoured class shall be the honest and the law-abiding, law and order will soon right themselves. In the meantime Canada may well reserve its scorn for United States laxity until there is assurance that the same false sentimentality and perverseness of outlook are not planted in the minds of the people here. So long as Canadians respect the laws they make themselves and the authorities they appoint themselves, this country need fear no outbreak of crime beyond control.

A Combination Play Of Faith Father and mother both regard their sons and daughters as the wisest children on earth. Children that would not be tempted to be hazardous. Sure, that is the faith that every father and mother has in their youth. It is a lovely thought, and one that is to be hoped will long be preserved. Mother and father must remember though, that exceptions do occur, and sometimes from the most unexpected children.

Trace your memory now, dear readers, and recall how often you have heard of a boy or girl in Huntingdon, or along the course of the Chateauguay River that was drowned, or nearly so. Was it not Lawrence Hooker who saved the son of Mrs. Arthur Lefebvre from drowing at the mill dam. It was Jos. Duval who saved Willard Allen during a spring flood from drowning. Irving McWhinnie also proved himself a hero at Ormstown when he saved a small boy who fell in the river. Only a few years ago a near fatal swimming accident took place at Russel's Island in which Rose Maxwell figured. And so the list might be continued, and made more complete.

How is it best to overcome these drowning accidents? We surely can't tell the children they must not go near the water. We want them to learn how to swim, so that they will not only enjoy that healthful pleasure but be able to render assistance when necessity demands their attention towards life saving.

We firmly believe the best move would be for Huntingdon to provide a swimimng pool. A swimming pool is not an impossible thing to hope for, because a river lends itself to such a municipal asset.

A fine swimming pool might be built that would not only serve a useful purpose and provide safe swimming for boys and girls, but would provide accomodations that are today very much lacking. Were a pool built a great many adults not now swimming would become regular patrons of a pool. The question of financing a pool is one that can be considered from many angles.

If the building of a pool would save the life of one youngster, a parent who lost a boy or girl would pay the price of a pool to have the son or daugther restored. A municipality such as Huntingdon, phenomenally owns all its citizens, therefore it might be reasonable to believe Huntingdon town might build a pool, or at least make a healthy contribution towards it. Again, private subscriptions and a $500 gift from the Board of Trade might be a factor in bringing it about. Perhaps the City Gas & Electric Co. would consider the building and operating the pool on their property for an annual consideration from the Town. If our Board of Trade would investigate such a possibility we firmly believe a great many former citizens of Huntingdon would consider it a pleasure for them to contribute $10, or $25, or even more towards such a cause. Many of our former boys and girls know right well what a swimming pool means to their new adopted homes, where a lifeguard is present daily and their children go swimming with a reasonable degree of safety.

Air Travel Becoming Safe The disaster of the Akron last spring, the fatal accident that befell General Balbo's 25th plane at Amsterdam, on their trip to Chicago, and now the mishap that befell the Flying Mollisons at Bridgeport tends to deviate one's mind away from being flying minded. The disasters appear to be many, but after all said and done they are no more greater than other modes of travel. For instance in 1857 after the railways had been in operation for 30 years in Britain and a billion people had been transported, a cry was raised calling for a ways and means being provided to prevent railway accidents.

In England and Wales statistical figures tell us that the average of 20 people per day lose their lives due to road traffic. 27% of these people lose their lives when crossing roads.

The day of railway fatalities is practically past, for in Canada during the year 1926 there were but 20 fatalities and in 1931 three fatalities. In 1926 42,000,000 people were transported by trains in Canada, in 1931 the number of passengers travelling by train was reduced to 26,000,000. These figures indicate that people are not considering safety of travel as much as they do the methods involving greater risks. We all appreciate the fact that more people are travelling by autos and bus in Canada than by train. The fatality figures for auto and bus passengers in 1926 in Canada reached 606, and in 1931 the figures rose to 1,314.

Probably travel by ocean steamship is regarded by the public as the safest method travel, yet the catastrophes in marine history are without equal in the records of transportation.

The "Titanic" with its loss of 1,517 lives, the "Empress of Ireland" with a loss of 1,024 and in recent years, the story of the French Liners, these and many others could be cited as affording evidence of risk in steamship travel, yet we find that steamship travel was never so popular as it is to-day.

The supporters of "Travelling by Air" have gathered statistics about air travel risks. They inform us that in 1932 the death rate in Canada from cancer was 9,886 whilst the deaths due to autos numbered 1,121. The average person who has taken up with flying will fly 50,000 miles in his or her lifetime. An average of 2,000 miles per year or if 24 people decided to fly 2,000 miles a year they could reasonably expect to go for 25 years without an accident.

Flying is becoming safer every year, and the severe flying tests being provided by such armadas as that from Italy, under General Balbo, or the flight by the "Flying Mollisons" are having beneficial effects.

Groom Dies on Honeymoon

On hour after Arden Brown of Waterbury, Conn., and Miss Marie Goodelle of Homer, a teacher in a Summit, N.J., school, were married here by the Rev. George E. Merriam, pastor of the Congregational Church, at Homer, N.Y., Brown dropped dead at the steering wheel of the automobile in which they were starting on their honeymoon. He and Mrs. Brown had gone to a tearoom immediately after the ceremony for dinner, then Mr. Brown went to his wife's room for her luggage and loaded it on the car. She had just taken her seat in the car and he sat down at the wheel. She turned to see him slump over it. When medical aid arrived he was dead.

Big Ben's Big Brother

A remarkable clock just erected on the Grand Buildings, Trafalgar Square, London, is claimed to be the largest in the British Empire. Its face is 759 sq. ft. in size, whilst Big Ben is only a little of 400 sq. ft. The minute hand is really a huge girder 17 ft. long. The clock is illuminated day and night by neon and the size of the largest letter is 8 ft. 9ins., the smallest being 2 ft. 6ins. Nearly 600 ft. of neon tubing was used in making the letters, and the electical connection required 99¼ miles of wiring. The clock mechanism is contained in a box only 3 ft. wide, one foot from back to front and 18 ins. high. The clock, synochronized with Greenwich, never requires winding, being worked directly by electricity, and Londoners now set their own watches by it. Over 14 tons of steel were used in the construction of this tremendous timepiece. The clock was erected for the proprietors of a patent medicine.

A Lucky Robin

Despite the fact that the average through train is a traveling hotel on wheels, sometimes an unusual passenger list is to be found. This particularly applies to "freights." The other afternoon J. F. Pringle, General Superintendeat of Transportation, Canadian National Railways received the following wire from A. MacNab, agent at Peterboro: "C.N., 403,102 shipped by Quaker Oats Co., for Plessiville, Que., has robins nest under running board of car. Arrange for supply of worms at terminals. The mother is in charge." It was reported that when the car was shunted for loading to the regular freight train, the mother robin refused to desert her fledgings and stayed bravely by her nest.

Tucks Away 50 Eggs

Defending his egg-eating championship of Rhode Island, Peter Freeman, of Wichford, ate 50 eggs boiled 3 minutes—two more than his nearest competitor. Some friends then presented Freeman with a handsome, hand-painted hog trough.

Fake Fires Pay

In Chicago Robert Brace and Fred Cobar are in the hands of the law for swindling insurance companies out of fire damages 20 different times. The two men own a set of well-scorched household furniture. Their scheme was to interest householders in need of cash to have a fake fire and collect insurance damages to be split with the "promoters." Whenever a prospect fell for their game they would move out his furniture and put in their own fire-damaged pieces. Then with folded newspapers as torches they scorched walls enough to make it appear there had been a fire, then call on insurance company for an adjustment. After payment was made, the phoney furniture was moved out, the owner's set moved back and another "customer" was hunted up.

12 Rooms for Rent—Free

No one has accepted the offer of the governors of Jesus Hospital in Rothwell, England, to let, without rental charge, to any deserving family 13 rooms in the sixteenth-century alms-house. The rules of the house may be the cause. These include a 10-cent fine for missing church on Sunday, a nine o'clock curfew, a ban on calls at public houses, a night in a cell for disobeying the principal, and an obligation to take turns at tending the founder's tomb in the parish church. In addition, each male member of the family would have to wear one of the hospital's ancient top-hats and a brass-buttoned jacket on Sundays.

Loses Whistle—Sues

Among the things for which Winthrop Williams asks damages in a $25,000 suit filed in the Wyandotte county district court is his loss of ability to whistle. Williams, an entertainer, alleges his lips were so badly lacerated in a motor car accident he no longer can pucker them.

Woman Tears New Shaw Book

Walking into a bookshop in Plymouth, England, a woman asked for a copy of George Bernard Shaw's "The Adventures of the Black Girl in Her Search for God." When it was handed to her she deliberately tore out the leaves until every page lay on the floor. Then, throwing down the empty covers, she paid the astonished clerk in full for the book. "In a dream," she explained, "I received a call to go to the nearest bookseller, obtain a copy of the book and destroy it. I have fulfilled the direction given me."

Blue Shirts in Scotland

Following the "Black Shirts," "Red Shirts" and "Green Shirts" in Europe, the "Blue Shirts" are being organized in Scotland. The full name is the "Falcon Blue Shirts," and the organization is socialistic in its aims. It is growing rapdly among young men.

Fat Insures Disease Immunity

The American Institute of Homeopathy was told by Dr. G. W. Boericke of Philadelphia, that immunity to disease depends upon fat particles in the blood. And lean persons, he said, are quite as apt to have these particles as are fat individuals. Dr. Boericke is professor of therepeutics at Hahnemann Medical college at Philadelphia.

Horseshoe in Sea

Sharp eyes of a British airman flying off the Egyptian coast of the Mediterranean, saw what is said to be one of the most important archaeological discoveries in recent years. It looked lika a horseshoe beneath the sea. A diver was sent down. He ascertained that the horseshoe is made up of columns of marble and red granite and the foundations of ancient buildings. Among relics brought up is the head of a marble statute of Alexander the Great. Experts believe the ruins may be those of Canopus, a fashionable seaside resort during the Roman rule in Egypt.

Live Rent Free

Hounded by Cromwell's troopers, a clergyman was cornered in a cellar beneath the gounds of an old house in Clapham, England, and left there to die by the Roundheads. Today, 300 years after his death, the inhabitants of a house built over the grave of the unfortunate priest are terrified by the sound of tramping up and down the corridors at dead of night. Five families who live in the ancient house have been disturbed in their sleep by ghostly footsteps and low moans. The landlord of the house disappeared several years ago and since then none of the families have paid rent. Despite this, they would gladly move, but they are poor people and cannot afford to make a change. An old man whose family has lived in the district for years tells the story of the tragedy. "My grandmother, who was an authority on the legends of the place," he said, "often spoke of the man who was left to die by the Roundheads. He had led a violent religious sect in Clapham, and when the troops went to arrest him he fled to his under-ground chamber and was never seen again. "The story runs that he could not get out again. Whether the entrance was closed deliberately or accidentally will never be known." One of the occupants of the house said that at times the ghostly footsteps are so threatening that she has got out of bed with a poker. "But when she investigated she never found anything," she said.

Swell for Noses

Australians, says Sculptor Paul Montford, at Melbourne, have two notable characteristics—large noses and small jaws. He attributes the prominent noses to the hot dry climate. Men breathe faster and deeper there, hence their noses develop.

Wooden Postcards

Wooden postal cards are being used in Ecuador, Balsa, a smooth close-grained wood, is being cut into thin strips. Half-tone prints and advertising cover one side of the card. Ecuador has the largest supply of balsa in the world. The postal card idea originated with the country's largest sawmill, which experimented with the wood, found the scheme feasible and then interested the public.

Pump—or Perish

Probably there are no people in the world who have had to work harder than the people of Holland. Much of their land has been won from the sea, and they have had to fight an endless battle to keep it. From this and other causes they learnt long ago the art of working willingly and well. But in Holand, as everywhere else, there have always been some lazy folks, and there used to be one good (and amusing) way of dealing with some of them—particularly tramps and beggars who tried to live at the expense of those who were more worthy than themselves. Quite often they were seized and put into a pit. Above this was a water-pipe with a tap, and at the bottom was a pump. When the idler was safely in, the tap was turned on, and the pit began at once to fill with water. The man inside it might grow angry, and shout, but he could not climb out or stop the water. So before long he had to chose between letting himself drown and doing a spell of what he hated most—hard work. He chose the latter, of course, and was kept at it for a couple of hours or so. At the end of that time he was pulled out, wet and very weary, and told to go. And he always went—quickly.

Husbands in Revolt

Hen-pecked husbands are in revolt at Tzaribrod, Jugo-Slavia. Fifteen members have sworn to keep to the followinig rules: (1) No member shall do any housework whatever, save in the event of his wife's illness; (2) Each member must come out alone at least once every week to spend an evening with his friends, male and female; (3) No report of how the evening has been passed shall be given to his wife on his return home; (4) Members shall insist on their wives breakfasting with them and if possible, make the wife prepare the breakfast herself. Meetings have so far been secret.

Will Find Own Target

A robot torpedo that works in silence and "thinks" for itself, is the latest terror of naval warfare—an instrument which would spell disaster to enemy shipping. This self-directing torpedo, when fired from a submarine, will automatically find its own target in the engine room of an opposing ship. Fitted with infra-red ray detectors which are connected to the rudder of its mechanism, it can pick up the heat rays from the funnels and engine room of a ship, and no matter how often the ship alters its course similarly and speeds on as if attracted by a giant magnet until it explodes against the hull of the vessel. It can also detect the heat of an airplane engine flying at a height of 4,000 feet.

Holy Robe Returned

A holy robe on which is inscribed the whole of the Koran, the sacred book of the Moslems, has been donated to the University of Aligarh, India, through the agency of Marquis of Lothian, former under-secretary for India. The robe was taken out of India in 1857, at the time of the Indian Mutiny, and has been in the hands of an English family since that time. It was at the instigation of the family that Lord Lothian was enabled to return the robe.

Howick by Mrs. J. R. Younie

The Howick W.I. have accepted an invitation from the Aubrey W.I. to a garden party held at the home of the Misses Morris on Thursday, Aug. 3rd. It is hoped that the Howick branch will attend in large numbers.

The lawn social given by the Georgetown W.M.S. on the church grounds on Friday evening was a splendid success. The evening being ideal, a large number gathered and listened to a very interesting programme. Mr. Watson, in his able manner, acted as chairman. Mr. Adams, of Montreal West, gave several Irish selections which were much appreciated also Mrs. W. T. Stewart and Messrs. McCaig, Simpson and Walters entertained the audience with instrumental music. Refreshments were sold during the evening. Proceeds amounted to $88.00.

Mrs. Thos. Stewart was a patient for three days last wek in the Hotel-Dieu Hospital, Valleyfield, when she had her tonsils removed. Drs. Stalker and Moore performed the operation which was successful.

Mr. Adam Easton is enjoying a short trip to Old Orchard Beach, Beach, Portland, Maine.

Mr. and Mrs. Cameron MacDonald of Massena, N.Y., spent the week-end with his parents.

Mr. and Mrs. John Hough and daughter, of Southhampton, Mass., and Miss Dorothy Mahoney, of Verdun, were visitors on Friday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Welch.

Mrs. Wm. Easton and little son and Miss K. Giles were week-end visitors at "Fairview Cottage," the home of Mr. and Mrs. Adam Easton. Mr. Norman Easton also spent a couple of days with his parents last week.

Miss Elizabeth Roy, of Ormstown, spent a few days last week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Roy.

Mr. and Mrs. Robt. J. Roy spent a few days last week with relatives at Bainsville, Ont.

Mrs. Smith, of Strathmore, spent the past week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Brown.

Miss Hammond, of Lachute, has been a guest for the past week at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Percival.

Her Mother: "Yes, dear, the second look."

"I want a separation from my husband," sobbed the young wife. "He actually swore at me, and I was learning to drive just to please him, too."

"What did he say?" asked the magistrate sympathetically.

"He sat there in the ditch"—another burst of sobs—"and he said, 'Holy cats, woman, didn't you see that lorry?'"

Lord Atholstan

BORN on the 18th of July, 1848—Alive, vigorous, vibrant and full of zeal—

Hugh Graham, Baron Atholstan, passes his eighty-fifth milestone today. Ever a militant journalist, always a follower of ideals, His Lordship has for three score and three years been the voice of Montreal.

He is the founder, owner ,director and spirit of the Montreal Star, a newspaper which he started on a meagre capital some sixty-three years ago. Never a day since has his hand been absent from the helm.

It is a long career, a notable career, and he has been blessed with a success which has served his pleasure in doing good.

A born leader in accomplisnment, the philanthropic career of the venerable journalist has found that in doing good he has found ever-present youth. It always embarrasses him to talk of the many movements which he has headed. His activity, when once his interest is aroused, has the touch of originality and genius.

Though I have known Lord Atholstan now for forty years, known him first at Hugh Graham, then as Sir Hugh, and afterwards as the possessor of the highest honour given to a Canadian by His Majesty, his friendly spirit has never changed. It will be for the better of Canada should he remain as the guiding spirit of Canada's greatest newspaper for another decade. Canada needs such men. The call is for men who can cast aside parochial or partizan attachment, and decide a public need with the power and fervour of a statesman, such as he.

One of life's privileges to me has been the knowing of Lord Atholstan, and being for many years admitted to a friendship which asked nothing or seeks nothing but the welfare of our common craft. Both of us enjoy our freedom, and Lord Atholstan sought his when he was twenty-one.

In his beautiful home at Cartierville, to the north of the Isle of Montreal, or in one of the old-time mansions of that city when everybody chowded into the center to be near the heart of the city, Lord and Lady Atholstan will toeday celebrate the eighty-fifth anniversary of His Lordship's birth in the wee village of Athelstan, near Huntingdon. Here, about a century ago, Lord Atholstan's father settled on a farm, and the first twenty years of the journalist's life were spent in gaining that sturdy constitution which only the wide open spaces can give to man.

My friends will gather from these few words that the Editor is proud of his Montreal friend, and would do homage to this descendant of the Scottish Athol and to his Edinburgh bride, yet whilst both are in the heyday of a long and useful life.

Money: Who Lost?

A COMMERCIAL traveller entered an hotel in a small town in Ontario and, on registering, he handed the landlord a one-hundred dollar bill and asked him to keep it for him, remarks the Glasgow "Forward."

The traveller kept about 25 dollars in his possession for immediate requirements.

Just at the salesman left the desk, the local butcher came in, and the landlord called him over and handed the 100 dollar bill to him in payment of an account to that amount.

The butcher, on leaving the hotel, met the local doctor and paid him the 100 dollar bill for services rendered.

The doctor entered the hotel and going to the desk, handed over the 100 dollar bill in payment of his account to the landlord; the latter putting the bill in the safe.

The next day the traveller returned to the hotal and asked for his account and paid it from what he had left of his 25 dollars. He then asked for his 100 dollar bill. On receiving it he tore it up, remarking as he did so: "It is only a dud anyhow. I gave it to you just to give you confidence in me while I was about my business in the locality."

Dangers of Lightning

THE shocking tragedy of Sunday afternoon, when a happy picnic party seeking shelter from a storm under a lonely tree beside the Ottawa river above Britannia was overwhelmed by a stroke of lightning, carries an emphatic moral.

Experts who know something of the incalculable and resistless energy stored up in a lightning flash, who have studied the ways of electrical storms, once more point to the danger of seeking refuge under a tree. Get into a house if possible, or if necessary stay out in the open, but keep away from trees, they say. If in the open, and the storm is very severe, lie down flat on the ground. Lightning, seeking the easiest path into the earth, seizes upon the highest point in an area, and a human bein standing erect may be that point.

An automobile is a safe place in a storm, its tires providing perfect insulation, but the car should not be parked under a tree nor driven beside large trees during a storm, to encounter the perils of falling limbs.

The mortality rate from lightning is very low, but it is a danger thoughtful persons will not ignore. Better a wetting in the open than the risk of tragedy in the sketchy shelter of a tree.

Let's Go Down Cellar!

WE were recently surprised with the possibilities of the cellar as a summer resort. Visiting a friend the other day, we spent some time looking over the garden, under the blazing rays of the sun, which warmed us to a fine glowing temperature. We admired the flowers, we admired the geometric neatness of the plots, but most of all we admired the persistency and ardor of the sun.

It was with extreme thankfulness —and some apprehension—that we agreed to our friend's hasty suggestion, "Let's go down cellar!" Most cellars are full of coal ashes and the accumulated debris of living. And we expected this cellar to be no exception; though we felt sure it would be cool. There might even be some refreshments tucked away unobtrusively on a corner shelf.

We clattered down the stairs, in a mixed mood of relief and curiosity—and thirst.

And lo! we came upon a fairy land! A true oasis in a desert of heat. A summer resort of comfort and coolness. The breath of the Arctic seemed to have found a retreat and lingered. We sat on rustic benches, before a rustic table, and clinked the ice in the tall amber glasses. No sylvan glade was more appreciated.

And when we went home, we thought of the possibilities of our own cellar; how they could be developed; and now there is another home-made summer resort in preparation!

Stirring up the Apathetic

APATHY has been the downfall of many people, history reveals. Governments have been overthrown in every age because the thinking people would not stop and consider the handwriting on the wall. They would not be aroused from their indifference to face the problems and rouse the people generally to the necessity of sound, sane, government. For years there has been growing in this country various groups who have been planting their propaganda. It has been sown carefully in our collegiates, universities and in centres where the soil has been very fertile. Thus, today we are being roused to a realization that new parties are forcing their ways, ideals and plans upon communities and large influential groups. Certain classes of people are being reached and the work is going on, spreading like fire. Governments are in danger. People are ready and anxious to catch hold of even the proverbial straw, hoping to keep their heads above water. Such are the conditions now facing all.

Is this not the time for all people, who have the knowledge to rise and lend their weight to the solving of the needs? Yes, the need of the hour is, strong men and women who have had the experience and know what constitutional government means and know economics, and know social conditions, to rise and give the benefit of their knowledge, to guide the people. People want something and are ready to follow the lead of those who have something to offer. Our governments are to be commended for the work that they have done. Few people take the time to make a study of the accomplishments and the leadership that has been given. In times of election only 30% even bother themselves about going to the polls. Thus, a group or section can swing the election. It is the duty of every thinking person to arouse themselves and take a part in this moulding public opinion in the right channel.

Wheat Acreage Reduction

EVERY day you hear people saying that a rise in the price of commodities and things indispensable to life will bring about the end of the crisis and the beginning of prosperity for everyone.

These people applaud Mr. Bennett when, at the World Conference, he joins Mr. Roosevelt in favoring inflation and augmenting the cost of living. They applaud Mr. Bennett for taking the money of the Canadian people to buy 140 million bushels of wheat at from 40 to 50 cents a bushel and resell it to us at a dollar or more. They admire him now for allying himself with Mr. Roosevelt and with the Communist, Litvinoff, to reduce wheat production so that the unemployed and the indigent may be obliged to pay three times its value for this wheat which has been purchased with their money.

The Psychology of Crime

MR. JUSTICE Wilson announces no new fact when he says that crime is ninety per cent an affair of youth.

He averages the crime age at twenty, with which calculation Lombroso and other famous criminologists agree, setting the peak of greatest violence between twenty and thirty.

After that, crime seems to lose its heat and become a matter of cool deliberation for more elderly persons who make fraud their business.

It is a sad truth that the murderers and highway robbers are, generally speaking, very young men and their object is money.

Crimes of passion are comparatively few.

The more dignified motives—if there can be any dignified motive for wickedness—such as love, hatred, jealousy, revenge, are conspicuously absent.

In the final analysis all this youthful crime come back to money—money to spend on vicious pleasures, money to keep the gunman's "moll," money to buy high-powered cars, money to squander on all sort of luxurious extravagances.

Money to be acquired not by tedious labor and length of time but all at once by bold and, if necessary, bloody adventure.

Crime is the ultimate expansion of the gospel that youth will be served, the twentieth century translation of which is that youth will not wait to earn money but will take it by force and right away.

This reasoning goes right back to laxity in the home where children are not taught that what cannot be afforded on the spot must be worked and waited for with patient industry.

Time was when children were indoctrinated with the idea that the measure of reward is the measure of endeavor, and that what is worth having is worth toiling for.

Unfortunately this healthy view is too often obscured.

The criminal youth of today is too impatient to be honest.

He wants to pay not at all—he prefers to rob and murder as a quicker and more profitable transaction.

Mr. Justice Wilson might have well gone on to apply the moral that if there is to be less crime there must be more discipline, more watchfulness; to sum it all up, more religion in the home, if the children are not to drift into habits that will bring the grey hairs of their fathers and mothers in sorrow to the grave.

Scary Mothers

THERE are many mothers in the world of ours who seem to forget how eager they were to play when they were young.

Boys of twelve, thirteen or fourteen who are anxious to join some organization like the boy scouts often report in a shame-faced way that their mothers will not let them join.

In plan words, motners are fearful of camping trips, nights in the open and all those things that go to make boy life so enjoyable. They keep their boy from joining his local troop until he is fifteen or sixteen years of age —and by that time he probably does not want to join.

Mothers forget that accidents among the boy scouts while engaged in their properly-supervised scout activities are few and far between. They forget that accidents on city streets during vacation months and over weekends are many and serious. In other words in their fearfulness they keep their boys at home where they are forced to play in the heart of danger, rather than allowing them to go out in the fresh air where they are properly supervised.

This fondness on the part of mothers causes them to seriously handicap their boys. Boy Scouts play all of the games that other boys play, but they do many things that other boys never learn to do. Furthermore, the young business men of today are largely the boys of fifeen or twenty years ago who were Scouts. More and more the question is being asked applicants for positions "Are you a Boy Scout?" The answer has much to do with whether or not the position is obtained.

Do not be a stumbling block to your boy.

Creating New Traditions

THOSE who may have thoughts of accepting as true statements frequently made, for political purposes, that Canada is a country where oppression prevails, where there is "one law for the rich and another for the poor," should read the opinions of those familiar with conditions here and able to make comparison with those elsewhere. An editorial in a leading United States magazine, has the following:—

"Canada may well pride herself on the honest and able law-enforcement bodies employed to bring the criminal to justice. She has cause for equal satisfaction in the intelligence and integrity of her judges and jurors. But all these agencies of justice would be impotent were it not for the outstanding characteristic of her people—respect for Canada's traditions. Many nations have recently developed the habit of ridiculing their older traditions. Other peoples have abandoned older traditions altogether in a revolutionary urge to adopt entirely new ones. Canada has been busy creating new traditions during these past few years—never too busy, however, to forget to pay homage to her older ones. We watched, quite unobserved by those beneath, this little scene on Armistice Day in a great Canadian city. Four men in a dingy back alley were loading refuse on a garbage truck. It was one minute before eleven o'clock. One could not help but feel that Life's glory had trailed by leaving them all untouched. And then the first strokes of the bell of peace pealed out to hush the city's glamor. The four drab workmen no longer existed. There, in the driving rain, heads bared and proudly erect, stood four heroes in their stead. They fancied they were all-alone as they stood there. They were wrong. There were the shadowy forms of a thousand hero comrades standing stalwartly beside them. There were a hundred generations of men who had faced death—or, braver still, faced life for their country with the same lights in their eyes as had these four. We no longer gazed on four men. They had become the symbols of a great tradition. They embodied a spirit of national idealism which had surged onward from generation to generation. Canada has unexplored riches beyond human comprehension in her natural resources. But her greatest treasure house is in the hearts of her people Canada is destined to aspire and to achieve greater and loftier objectives."

Can do no Wrong

THOUGH Siamese scrapped the divine rights of their smart little King Prajahhipok last year he managed to keep his throne, popped out of the revolution a constitutional monarch (Time, July 4, 1932). Last week His Majesty and curvesome Queen Rambai Barni startled Bangkok. Despite bickering in the Siamese Army which led to the sudden resignation of four high officers, Their Majesties announced serenely that next January they will leave Siam on a leisurely second visit to the U. S.

Another cataract must be lifted from the royal eyes. Siamese surgeons again shirk the job. Presumably it will be done by famed Manhattan ophthalmologist Dr. John Martin Wheeler who operated successfully on King Prajadhipok in 1931.

Last week Siamese court gossips buzzed excitedly a little known tale. When Dr. Wheeler sat down two years ago to bill His Majesty he could not decide what fee to ask. An Oriental potentate must be charged neither too little nor too much. Finally Dr. Wheeler had an idea, took a sporting ophthalmologist's chance. To the Royal Treasurer he sent a bill in blank, wrote on it modestly "The King Can Do No Wrong."

Siamese courtiers swear that King Prajadhipok, when consulted by his puzzled treasurer, ordered promptly sent to modest Dr. Wheeler a check for $250,000—which to Siamese meant the staggering sum of 587,000 bahts.

THE Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, whilst in London has been manifesting considerable amity for the Americans. The press agencies in fact, are ceaseless in reporting his constant good offices as an intermediary between the United States and Europe and to save the London conference from failure. Mr. Bennett has put some water into his wine. The American contacts today do not inspire him with the repulsion he professed for them three years ago. Canada will be greatly indebted to him if he will utilize his present amenities to effect the repair at least of part of the work resulting from his past uncompromising attitude and direct his efforts to a reopening of the markets that were closed in the torment which drove all the countries into so many protectionist follies. The disposition of President Roosevelt is all in our favor and amities are valid exchange. Why not utilize all this, capitalize our mutual sympathies and coin them into excellent and durable treaties? The London conference has no other purpose for the sixty-four nations who have sent their delegates to London. Canada will obtain considerable profit if it succeeds in rescuing from the wreck of the discussions several planks which will help to an economic reconstruction and to the renewal of national activities which were interrupted by the crisis."

Legends Cluster About World-Famous Pearls

Since the time of Cleopatra pearls of great value have figured in romantic as well as commercial history. Pliny records probably the two most famous, those that Cleopatra wore in her ears, and it is a well-remembered story of how she dissolved one in wine and drank it to win a wager with Antony. In the Sixth century the Peroz pearl was even then valued as high as $25,000. Charles the Bold in the Fifteenth century owned another valuable and famous pearl, while ranking with it were the Tararequi and Oviedo pearls and the celebrated "La Peregrina" (the incomparable) belonging to Philip II and which came from Panama. The pearls of Mary Stuart, of Queen Elizabeth, together with those of the great moguls and shahs have their counterpart in such famous American collections as the Morgan-Tiffany and the Gould pearls; another famous collection, the Van Buren pearls; a gift from the Imam of Muscat, is in the National museum. —Washington Star.

Badly Scorched

If you have badly scorched a cotton fabric, try this method of getting the mark out. Dip the article in cold water and hang dripping wet in the sunshine. As soon as it dries, wet it again, and repeat the process again and again. It may take a couple of days and a night's exposure but it is a cure that will not in any way injure the wearing quality of the material and only means a little patience.

HEALTH by [illegible] M.D.

A HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES IN CANADA

GOOD FOR BOTH

An interesting observation which may frequently be made is that mothers who have a very good understanding of the health needs of their children, and who see to it that these needs are met ,fail to give reasonable attention to their own health requirements.

It is of course desirable that the children receive proper care. We appreciate that it is through such care that the foundation for adults health is laid. But what is the use in laying a good foundation if the whole health structure is endangered by carelessness with the superstructure? What would today's mother think if her child, for whom she so well provides, were, in later years, to lose the advantages she has given him by carelessly disregarding the simple rules of healthy living? Yet ,this is exactly what so many mothers are doing today.

Proper food, sufficient rest, exercise, fresh air, sunshine and regular elimination are just at necessary for the health and well-being of the mother as they are for her child. The child may, and likely does, show the ill effects of neglect more quickly and more definitely than does the adult. Nevertheless, lack of sleep does make the mother irritable, and she does not digest food well when she is tired, nor is her health favoured by constipation.

We do not live for health, but health goes far in making life more worth-while. A sufficiency of sleep may make the world seem a much brighter place. Properly-fitted shoes will improve the temper of most people. Time spent in the sunshine helps to dispel the gloom of life.

We also notice that the mother who has her baby regularly supervised by her doctor in order that she may have advice on keeping the little one well does not, as a rule, ask her doctor to extend the same care to herself. The routine periodic health examination is of value at all ages. The mother may have unsuspected disease, or there may be some abnormal condition of the body present; she may need to have some deviation from the normal corrected. Above all, she likely needs the helpful advice of her family doctor, who, detecting errors in her habits of living, directs her into more healthful channels so that she may preserve her health and not feel ashamed when she is compared with her own child.

A Nice Manicure

For the average business girl and housewife, nails shaped to the contours of the fingertips are the most harmonious. Oval nails of a medium length not only harmonize well with the occupations of such women, but also present a neat and well-groomed appearance. The nails should be filed first with a long, flexible file, and then shaped with an emery board should be used on the nails daily to keep them always smooth-edged, and of the correct and harmonious length.

The Beaver by "Nancy Lee"

Mr. and Mrs. Maitland Platt entertained a number of friends to a delightful birthday party in honor of their son Clarence on Friday evening, July 21st. All report a good time.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Kerr and son, Hugh, Montreal, were week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Cameron.

A young man stammeringly proposed to the daughter of the house, and was accepted. A few minutes later the girl's mother, a powerful woman, bore down upon him, and with a proprietorial smile, remarked, "So you are going to become my son-in-law, are you?"

"Good heavens," said the young man, in a scared whisper, "I hadn't thought of that."

Valleyfield Council

Met July 19th. Present, Mayor Philorum Billette, Ald. Art. Barrette, Nap. Lapiante, W. Laberge, Chs. Paré, Nap. Poirier, Gontran Hebert, and M. Chatel.

A complaint was received from Daniel Dion to the effect that his property was not drained any more by the continuation of the works on Salaberry St. This was referred to the engineer, who was also asked to repair the sidewalk at the side of the store.

A letter was read from Art. Tremblay regarding an automobile accident on the 9th of July, claiming a sum of $56.05. The Engineer was asked to make a report.

A letter was read from E. M. Brownlee, asking for a sidewalk in front of his property on Anderson St. Referred to the Engineer for report.

A letter was read from Mrs. Cyrille Deschamps, asking for the admission of Rene and Alcide Deschamps under the Public Assistance law. The Mayor was asked to consider the case on receipt of a favorable report from the Chief.

A letter was received from the Can. Council of Child Welfare, Ottawa, asking for details on the parks, etc.

A letter was read from the Minneapolis Railroad, asking if the City wished to invite American industries to Valleyfield. Filed.

A letter was read asking for the admission of Christian Benz, 30, to the Hôtel-Dieu, at Valleyfield, under the Public Assistance Law. Referred to the Chief.

A letter was read from the Bell Telephone Co., re joint poles on St. Louis St. This letter was left on the table.

A letter was read from Ste. Cecile on the same subject.

A letter was read from Quebec, approving the by-law No. 339.

By-law No. 341, for the amendment of the business tax law, was read for a second time. Votes for: Ald. Chatel, Hebert and Barrette. Votes against: Ald. Paré, Laberge, Poirier, Mayor Billette voted for it, and the resolution was adopted.

Ald. Barrette proposed that the drain on Sullivan St. should be taken as from the special drain fund. Adopted.

Ald. Barrette proposed that the Engineer make a list of the unemployed and a list of the projected works for the unemployed, that the Council should consult the roads department for the road south of the canal continuing St. Laurent and Canal Cts.; that he make estimates for the bettering of the fire station, that the Engineer should communicate with T. J. Lafraniere and the Provincial Department of Hgiene, so that demand might be made of the Hon. H. Mercier for the passage of 2000 cubic feet of water through the Montreal Cottons Canal.

Ald. Chatel proposed that Alfred St. should be made the same as the foundation of St. Joseph St., at a cost of $400 by resolution No. 288. Seconded by Ald. Hebert. A discussion followed this proposal. A vote was taken, the resolution being adopted 6 to 1.

Ald. Chatel gave a report of his interview with the Superior of the Hospital and Mr. Anderson, two lamps being placed in front of the hospital.

Duties of Registrar of United States Treasury

treasury are such as are required of him in connection with the public debt and such further duties as may be prescribed by the secretary of the treasury. These include usually the signing of any official record, certificate or other document. No person appointed to the office of the registrar may directly or indirectly be concerned or interested in carrying on the business of trade or commerce, or be owner in whole or in part of any sea vessel, or purchase by himself, or another in trust for him, any public lands or other public property, or be concerned in the purchase or disposal of any public securities of any state or of the United States, or take or apply to his own use any emolument or gain for negotiating or transacting any business in the Treasury department other than that which is allowed by law.

The speaker at the United Church, Sunday morning, was the Rev. N. Sproule, D.D., of New Jersey. Mr. Sproule took for the basis of his sermon, "Comfort." Mr. Sproule, after spending the winter in California, motored 9,000 miles to visit his nephew, Mr. J. St. Aubin, in Montreal and his brother-in-law, Mr. S. St. Aubin, in Valleyfield.

Masonic Service at Chateauguay.—

Sunday evening the members of the Valleyfield Masonic Lodge No. 75, journeyed to Chateauguay, to hold a church service in the St. Andrews United Church of Canada. The service was conducted by Bro. Rev. W. T. Prittie.

Among the contestants at the Caledonian Games held Saturady afternoon at Lachine were the following boys from Valleyfield: Don Whalley, E. Burgess, and Dick Whitehead. Whalley and Burgess participated in the 100 yds. and the 220 yds. sprints, and Whitehead in the mile. Burgess ran a close third to Frank Simpson and Nap. Bourdeau, while Whalley was beaten by Greene and Klasper by a narrow margin in the 100 yds. The same hard luck seemed to follow the boys in the 220 yds., when both ran in the same heat, where Whalley beat his team-mate by scant inches although both failed to place.

Dick Whitehead set a new Junior mark in the mile run, beating the old mark by six seconds. At the start of the last lap the local boy was 15 yards behind Kirkwood of the Royal Rovers. At the half-way mark, Whitehead drew even with Kirkwood and they raced neck and neck for 75 yds., when Whitehead started a sprint which carried him to the tape six yards in front of the Montreal boy. This was run in the time, 4 min., 52 sec.

Don Whalley also competed in the Boy Scout Relay race for the Riverside Troop of Montreal against the Royal Rovers of Montreal. He ran a good anchor dash, beating Smallcombe of the Royal Rovers in his lap.

We are pleased to see that we have such talent in this town, and we sincerely hope that they will continue to represent Valleyfield in good form at future games in the city.

Franklin Centre by Mrs. W. Price

Late Mrs. Robert Dunn

There passed away in the early hours of Saturday morning, July 15, one of Franklin's oldest and most esteemed residents in the person of Mrs. Robert Dunn. Before her marriage she was Miss Janet Speck and was a life-long resident of this place. The deceased had been in failing health for some time and was tenderly cared for by her daughters. Her husband having pre-deceased her 31 years ago. The funeral service was held at her late home on Sunday afternoon and was largely attended, testifying to the esteem in which she was held. Her pastor, the Rev. T. F. Duncan conducted the service. Interment taking place in the Dunn cemetery. The floral tributes were numerous and beautiful.

Mrs. Dunn leaves to mourn her loss ten children, five daughters, Mrs. C. Harvey, Mrs. Fred Gamble, and the Misses Mary, Effie and Margaret Dunn and five sons Robert, Richard and George of Medicine Hat, Jerry of Irvine, Alberta, and Willard of Franklin Centre. C.G.I.T.—

Five members of St. Andrew's C.G.I.T. have spent two weeks at the Cedar Lodge Camp, on Lake Memphramagog, and returned on Saturday, July 22nd. The fortunate young ladies were Miss Edith Brereton, Miss Girlie Dixon, Miss Dorothy Barrow, Miss Ethel Holmes and Miss B. Cook. All arrangements were made by the C.G.I.T. leader, Miss Jean Jack, who unfortunately could not accompany the girls to camp. The girls have only the higest praise for Cedar Lodge Camp and the treatement given them by Miss Yeomans and her able asistants. They also expressed their great appreciation of Miss Jean Jack's hard work and atention to detail in order that her girls would receive the benefits of this outing. Messrs. Allan Gentles and John Wylie kindly loaned their cars for the round trip, while Messrs John Bonnell and Allan Jack did the driving and the girls were duly thankful to these gentlemen for the assistance given.

Hospital Picnic.—

On July the 22nd, Mr. Peter Dance held his anual picnic for the children of the Julius Richardson Convalescent Home. Nine cars, driven by their owners, took the children and nurses to the picnic grounds at St. Timothy and the refreshments were supplied by the ladies of Chateauguay. Mr. Dance reports that a good time was enjoyed by all present and the great treat it was to see smiling faces of the kiddies on their return and the care taken by the nurses of their charges. Mr. Dance takes this opportunity to thank all those who made the picnic a success. These children come from all kinds of homes in the great city and have every care bestowed upon them during their stay at the Home. Mr. Dance deserves great praise for the manner in which this anual event is carried out.

Stag Picnic.—

The Heights Stag Bridge Club held a picnic at the Wigwam beach, which is in the Indian Reserve, on the banks of Lake St. Louis. About 28 cars left the Bowling Green at 2:30 o'clock and transported the 160 persons who attneded he outing. At four o'clock games were started and gave a lot of pleasure to those competing. The results were:

Girls, sir years and under: 1, Olive Tooth; 2, Audrey Noon. Boys, six years and under: 1, Malcolm White; 2, R. McGregor.

Girls, 12 years and under: 1, Vera Walton; 2, Lorna Herbert. Boys, 12 years and under: 1, John Harding; 2, Angus Dixon.

Girl, 16 years and under: 1, Lucille Walcott; 2, E. Harding. Boys, 16 years and under: 1, E. Tucker; 2, O. Breen.

Young Ladies: 1, M. MacDonald; 2, G. Taylor.

Young Men: 1, G. Dixon; 2, G. Tucker.

Married Ladies: 1, Mrs. Ritchie.
Married Men: 1, Mr. Noon.
Fat Ladies: 1, Mrs. Barrow.
Fat Men: 1, Mr. W. Maxwell.
Three legged race, mixed: 1, Mrs. F. Ritchie and Mr. K. Bonnell.

Slow Motion Race—(Prize donated by Mr. R. S. Muir): 1, Miss G. Taylor.

Girls Swimming Race: 1, Miss N. Walton. Boy's Swimming Race: 1, Ashton Brazier.

At six o'clock, the races being over, the baskets were brought out and full justice was done to their contents. Everybody went home soon after 8 o'clock and expressed their opinion that a very good time was had. The committee, consisting of Messrs. Barrow, McNair and Dance thank all who lent their cars and contributed to the success of the picnic.

Masonic Divine Service.—

A Masonic service under the auspices of the Valleyfield Lodge, No. 75 A.F. & A.M., R.Q., was held in St. Andrew's United Church, Chateauguay Basin, on Sunday, July 23rd., Wor. Bro. W. A. Walsh in charge. The members of the Lodge and their friends from other neighbouring lodges and from Montreal, assembled in the Julius Richardson School Hall and then marched to the church. Some eighty masons were present, among those noticed were Brothers Walsh, Bridcut, Sugden, A. V. Gurnham, Pomfret C. W. Gurnham Walker, Hagen, and others of the lodge, while Dr. McLaren, of Ormstown, Messrs. James Meldrum Fred Benn, H. Walton, G. Brazier, F. Jackson, J. Harries and Joseph Mitchell, of Montreal were present. Mr. Joseph Mitchell is the oldest mason in the province of Quebec and has held many important Masonic offices, among which may be mentioned Past Master of the Zetland Lodge; the Montreal Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; the Richard Coeur de Lion Preceptory of Knight Templers and a member of the Karnac Temple of Shriners. Mr. Mitchell, who celebrated his 90th birthday on July the 3rd last, is in wonderful health and lives with his daughter, Mrs. James Seath Smith, during the summer months at Chateauguay and in the winter in Montreal.

Trail Rangers.—

The Trail Rangers of St. Andrew's Church put on a very creditable entertainment in the Church hall on Monday, July the 24th, the proceeds going towards defraying expenses to camp Kanawana, where they will spend ten days or two weeks. Mrs. and Mr. J. R. Dickenson helped out with the programme and the boys staged two very humorous plays. The first of these was "A Debate in Squiginville," with the following cast: The president, Edwin Gilbert; Jim Smith, Fred Rowe; John Jones, Allan Herbert; Boy, Russell Higgins. The second was "A Frightened Lodger," and was played by Malcolm Price as Hezekiah Schuggins, the Lodger, William Yarnell as Alexander Addison, one of the guests who came to the crowded hotel during the "Fair Time", and who wanted Hezekiah's room; Pat Mulvaney, another guest after the room and played by Bruce Herbert, and the landlord played by Charlie Rowe. Both plays were, deservedly, well received by the numerous audience. Mr. Ernie Rowe looked after the make-up stage. After the chairman, Rev. Mr. Prittie, who acts as Mentor for the group and takes the boys to camp, had thanked those helping out, the entertainment was brought to a close with the singing of the National Anthem.

Mrs. A. C. Lockhart has as her guests, Mr. and Mrs. Merril and two children, Anne and Jack, of Wooster, Mass., and Mrs. Fraser of New York.

Russian Villages

Between Nijni-Novgorod and Mother Volga are little Russian villages which should never be missed by those fortunate enough to visit Russia. Some of them, where wood carving is the home indoor occupation, or where the old ikons used to be painted, are veritable museums of quaint beauty. Vases, flower stands, snuff boxes, tartar boots and home utensils are now decorated instead of ikons, but after you have passed a few score garden encircled homes, with geraniums in the windows, you lose one more old and wrong idea of Russia and its people.

Report of Zion United Church Social.

Ideal weather on Friday evening assisted in making most successful and enjoyable the lawn social which was held at the hospitable home of Mr. H. B. Gardner and Mr. and Mrs. Earle Gardner, where all needed accommodation was provided for comfort and pleasure for such an occasion. The lawn was well lighted with gaily colored electric lights, while an abundance of good things to eat were provided by the ladies of the congregation. The program, which was given later in the evening was also an especially good one, including recitations from Miss M. Sadler of Ormstown, Miss Santamore, of Fort Covington, Miss F. Cushman, of Ft. Covington; brief addresses were given by Rev. J. H. Miller, of Huntingdon, Rev. J. H. Woodside, of Kensington, Dr. J. C. Moore, M.P., Huntingdon and Mr. Martin Fisher, M.L.A., of Hemmingford; a duet by Mrs. W. J. McMillan and Miss Elliott, of Dundee and instrumental and vocal music by Mr. Kenneth McMillan of Chateauguay Basin. The Board of Management of Zion Church, under whose auspices the social was held were gratified with the financial returns, which amounted to $88.65. Rev. C. A. Haughton, pastor and chairman voiced his thanks and appreciation and also those of his congregation to the Gardner family for their hospitality and generosity in giving the use of their home and grounds and also their time and many efforts to help make the social such a success. To all who assisted in the program or any other way a vote of thanks was also extended by Mr. Haughton and his congregation.

Dundee Softball Club.—

The Dundee Softball Club, which has ben organized during the summer have met for practice, semi-weekly in a field near the Community Hall, on the farm of Mr. W. J. Fraser. The club have been most fortunate in securing the services of Dr. Morley as manager. Mr. Cecil McNicol has been appointed president and Mr. Albert Fraser secretary-teasurer. Twenty-two members are now enrolled. They met the Kensington soft ball team on the latter's grounds on Tuesday afternoon for a friendly game. An unfortunate accident occurred at this game which marred its pleasure. One of the spectators was painfully injured by being hit in the face by a soft ball bat. An all Canadian Washer made in Montreal. It is a lifetime quality machine which stands every test, meets every condition and defies all competition. The graceful lines of the Playmayd and the beautiful all enamel finish makes the entire Washer distinctly appealing to the eye, but the Playmayd excels in performance as well as in appearance. It is simple and as easy to operate as pushing an electric light button. It washes the heaviest garments or sheerest lingerie without damage to fabrics. It does not pull off buttons, wear, tear or tangle the articles being washed, and the wringer will wring a blanket or a handkerchief equally dry without adjustment of the wringer rolls. Wonder value.

Thursday

Frank P. Spellman, veteran promoter of fairs and other outdoor amusements, disclosed on Thursday plans for what he described as a "permanent world's fair in New York City to begin April 1, 1935." Mr. Spellman said that he represented "twenty-five of the leading industrialists in the country who are willing to sink $100,000,000 in the project" and that he is merely managing the project. He refused to divulge the names of his backers, explaining that such an announcement must come from them.

Amusement leaders along Broadway, although admitting the possibilities, were inclined to be skeptical of the project. Following so close on the heels of the Chicago exhibition, they believed, another world fair even in New York city, could not be successful. Mr. Spellman, however, seemed untroubled by this possibility.

Industrialists in the country, he declared, are interested in the project because they see the advertising possibilities. "All of the better industrialists," he said, "realize the importance of injecting showmanship into their advertising. A permanent exhibition in this city would also serve as a showroom where buyers of the world could come and inspect products of all kinds."

A majority of the states, besides the large industries, Mr. Spellman said, will have buildings and permanent exhibits in the fair while the Federal Government has been asked to erect a $1,000,000 building as its contribution.

The St. Lawrence Bridge Commission organized at a meeting in Washington on Friday, and retained the Philadelphia firm of Kodjeski, Masters and Chase, consulting engineers, to draw up plans on which will be based an application for a loan of $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 from the Federal Public Works Administration for a bridge across the St. Lawrence River between Ogdensburg, N.Y., and Prescott, Ontario.

The commission will visit Ottawa soon to open negotiations with the Dominion Government.

Officers elected were: John L. O'Connor, chairman; John T. Howard, vice-chairman; Franklin R. Little, temporary secretary, and John C. Tulloch, counsel. All are from Ogdensburg.

The World Economic Conference adjourns Thursday, July 27, after dragging on for nearly a month since President Roosevelt's message made it clear no progress could be made on the base problems of currency, credit or tariffs.

Those who opposed immediate adjournment when the President's message was received were actuated by three motives.

They thought that if the conferenc were adjourned immediately the concentration of responsibility for its failure upon America would cause tension between Europe and America unfavorable to other negotiations.

Apart from that they believed that a dramatic and sudden termination of the Conference would cause a greater shock to public confidence and discredit individual delegates more with their Parliaments than a more gradual ending, in which anger and disillusionment would be mitigated by sheer weariness and boredom, and by the diversion of the public mind to the thought of the August holidays.

It was hoped thirdly that useful work might be done on secondary questions—on the regulation of the production of certain commodities such as sugar, wheat and coffee; private indebtedness; restriction of subsidies; indirect protectionism through administrative devices; a connected policy of public works expansion; perhaps some limited agreement on policy and methods of raising the price level, and at least some agreement on a way in which the gold standard should ultimately be made to work satisfactorily.

By some it was even thought that a conditional agreement might be reached on tariff reductions to become effective as soon as currency stability was assured.

None of these tasks was necessarily made impossible by uncertainty as to currencies. But in fact practically nothing has been accomplished.

Returns Friday night indicated overwhelming acceptance by American industry of President Roosevelt's bold plan to lift buying power through a universay agreement on higher wages and shorter hours.

The President's gratification at the co-operative spirit shown by industry was expressed at the White House.

Telephone boys tumbled over one another bearing messages of approval to the office of General Hugh S. Johnson, National Recovery Administrator. Telegrams came at the rate of six a minute. General Johnson said that there is a possibility of putting 6,000,000 people back to work through the recovery program.

Because of the magnitude of his task, he explained, he would have to leave largely to industry the classification of labor under the voluntary agreement scheme.

Although final figures were not available, it appeared Sunday night that the Nazi German Christians had won a complete victory in the general church elections and that German Protestantism thereby had been delivered into the hands of the Nazi Government.

The elections, in which all persons over 24 possessing baptismal certificates showing them to be Protestants were eligible to participate, was for the choosing of approximately 400,000 church elders and members of church governing boards. These in turn will select provincial synod delegates who will choose delegates to a national synod. A Reichs Bishop will be named by the national group.

The issue had been considered hardly in doubt since a speech by Chancellor Adolf Hitler in which he told Protestant Germany that he wanted the results of the election to be in support of the present regime.

"The Church expects protection from the State, which in turn is entitled to expect allegiance from the Church," said the Chancellor.

At the last moment fusion lists, on which Nazis predominated, were adopted in various centres of the country. These lists rendered balloting unnecessary.

Amy and Jim Mollison, Great Britain's flying family, crashed their frail biplane into the marshlands bordering the Bridgeport airport Sunday night about half an hour's flying distance from New York, their transatlantic objective.

Both suffered cuts and abrasions, but the injuries of neither were serious. The plane appeared wrecked.

"I was so tired I didn't know where I was headed," said Mollison, whose gasoline supply ran short after 39 hours out of Pendine, Wales, from which they took off Saturday morning.

The finding of a key which fits into the lock of the door leading to the apartment of Mrs. Marie Ange Guerin, 22-year-old bride of three months ago, living with her husband at 362 Murray street, Montreal, who was found murdered on Friday morning, with more than half of a dish towel stuffed down her throat, may lead to the solution of the crime. The key was found in the possession of someone whose name the police would not divulge for the present. Meanwhile, Fernand Guerin, brother-in-law of the dead woman, is still being held at Detective Bureau.

Following a thorough investigation made by the police over the week-end it was announced that jealousy was the motive for the brutal crime and, the police say, examination of the woman's clothing revealed that she had been attacked. Inspector Victor Foucault, who is supervising the investigation, stated on Saturday afternoon that in his opinion the murder was not committed deliberately. He said that the towel had apparently been placed in the woman's mouth in order to prevent her from raising an alarm. The intruder then took the contents of the woman's purse ($18) in order to make believe that robbery was the motive for the crime.

Police and federal authorities united today in a widespread search for Charles F. Urschel, wealthy oil operator, and two men who kidnapped him in a daring raid on his home late Saturday night.

Bearing machine-guns, the two broke up a sun porch bridge game in which Mr. and Mrs. Urschel and Walter Jarrett, a neighboring oil man, and his wife, participated.

"Which one's Urschel?" demanded the leader.

Receiving no reply, he said:

"Well then, come along, both of you."

Both were spirited away in a large black sedan. Jarrett, however, was released about 10 miles outside the city limits, after the abductors checked billfold cards to ascertain the identity of their victims. They took $60 from Jarrett.

Far from dead, the World Economic Conference may live many years as a result of Monday's decision by the steering committee to remain in permanent session in London, although the conference will take a recess on Thursday.

Premier Ramsay MacDonald insisted that this action should be taken. The decision calls for the original members of the steering committee to attend meetings.

The nations whose delegates on the steering committee will not be in London will be represented by their ambassadors.

Right Hon. Stanley Baldwin, former Prime Minister, always noted for his great caution in making statements in public, told a big gathering of agriculturists on Saturday:

"I can say without undue optimism that I believe that our feet are now on firm foundations and that the worst of the depression is over.

"The outlook today is more hopeful than it has been at any time in the past two or three years."

In the past year not only have nearly 1,000 new factories been completed, many of them for foreign owners—one effect of the change-over here from Free Trade to a tariff policy—but a great deal of money has been expended in other classes of construction.

In travelling in and around London, it is surprising to find literally hundreds of new industrial buildings, ranging from one-man affairs to really large groups of industry, incidentally many of them bearing the names of American industrial concerns and in every direction new groupings of small homes are springing up.

Both Senator Arthur Meighen, who will open the show, and Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, leader of the Liberal party, will reach the city for the official opening on the 25th. Three provincial Premiers—Hon. S. F. Tolmie of British Columbia; Hon. J. E. Brownlee, of Alberta, and Hon. Dr. J. T. M. Anderson of the host province of Saskatchewan, are in attendance.

Weir to be Present

Hon. Robert Weir, Federal Minister of Agriculture, heads the representatives of the agricultural ministries of the Dominion. Included were Hon. Adelard Godbout, Quebec; Hon. T. A. Kennedy, Ontario; Hon. George Hoadley, Alberta, and all the Saskatchewan department heads. Prof. E. E. Elton, of the Nova Scotia Department of Agriculture, was among the guests from the Maritimes.

Official delegates came from nearly a score of countries to inspect the exhibits and take part in the conference discussions. They were joined by tillers of the soil from all over Canada and the United States, and practical farmers from many of the countries with competitive and educational exhibits. C. Edson Smith, of Cornvallis, Mont., winner of some of the main prizes at shows in Chicago, was included among the visitors from south of the international boundary.

Judging of the various wheat classes was expected to be concluded first. They included decisions for hard red spring wheat, white spring, hard red winter, soft red winter, white winter and durums.

Placing of the awards is being made not only on the sample itself, but on the product of the sample after planting. Tests of growing the grain have been made at Indian Head Experimental Farm and examination of the grains has been made by the judges.

Y.P.S.—

The July meeting of the Presbyterian Young People's Soc. was held on Friday night at the home of Mr. Thos. Ross, with the president, Ralph Lavery in charge and was the largest meeting held this year. After the opening devotional exercises, several items of business were discussed. First it was decided to produce the play, "The Young Country School m'am" and a committee was appointed to select the characters and supervise the rehearsals. The young people then made arrangements for holding a basket picnic at St. Anicet this coming Saturday afternoon, and all wishing a ride will meet at Elder's Grist Mill at one o'clock, as the autos will start from there. The educational part of the program was a word building contest. As the weather was so very hot, games were played on the lawn, instead of the ones provided by the committee. The August meeting will be held at the home of Mr. J. J. Lumsden.

A Canadian Story by Frank Giolma

CHAPTER 1

As soon as the SS. Princess Mary, southbound from the mining town of Stewart, tied up at the pier in Vancouver, Jack Hilton picked up his suitcase, stepped ashore, and going into the nearest public telephone booth, rang up headquarters of the famous Interprovincial Police.

He was put through to the desk-sergeant.

"I want to speak to Constable Hayden Cartwright," Hilton said.

"Constable Cartwright's not here yet," came the reply.

"What, not on duty and it's nearly eleven o'clock," Hilton exclaimed. "When do you expect him, before lunch?"

"Constable Cartwright's been on night duty all this week," the sergeant replied, "and won't report back until tomorrow morning."

"Like my rotten luck," Hilton answered. "I've just come down from Stewart specially to see him; nothing to do with the police you understand. He's an old tillicum of mine, and I haven't seen him for nearly eighteen months."

"Wait a minute," the desk-sergeant replied, "and I'll put you through to his rooms. It's not quite according to regulations, but if he doesn't want to speak to you he can ring off." Then some five seconds later: "There you are," the desk-sergeant said, his words being immediately followed by: "This is Constable Cartwright of the Inter-provincial Police speaking," in a most official and impressive tone.

Jack Hilton kept silent for a few seconds. Again came the words: "This is Constable Cartwright of the Interprovincial Police speaking. Who is there?"

Hilton almost laughed into the telephone, then putting his mouth very close to the transmitter, said:

"Bon jour M'sieur. Is zat ze lance-corporal Addie Cartwright who made ze love to ze beautiful Annette?"

"What's that?" Cartwright exclaimed, but Hilton continued, ignoring the interruption: "Ah, it is ze brave garcon. I know 'is voice. I am ze glaid man for Annette and the children; they are what you call a big handful on ze boat and ze train. But now I ave found you and so I wash my 'ands of them."

"What the devil are you raving about? And who are you, anyway?" Cartwright exploded.

"Moi?" Hilton answered. "I am your Annette's brudder. Annette, she marry ze Sergeant Belfort apres la guerre. But he die, leaving her with six infants. At first ze insurance company refuse to pay ze money for him to Annette. They are canaille and say that perhaps Annette has poisoned the sergeant. But bah, Annette is the clever one and they can prove nothing.

"Then Annette she sad till she remember her lance-corporal Addie Cartwright. Then she is happy again, for she say she promise to marry you apres la guerre and now she can do so. Then she gets le cure to write letters and so finds you have come to Vancouver city in ze British Columbia, so we spend ze insurance money to come to you and here we are.

"And now as Annette's brudder, I have done my duty, so I put Annette and ze six little ones in ze taxi and they come to you.

"Of course, Annette is a little older and, what shall I say? not so thin, as when last you see her. But mon dieu, ze years go on for all of us.

"Ah, I seem to see ze joy in your eyes and ze ardor in your heart because your Annette is so near to you and you will meet her in a minute. You are too full for ze words is it not? You do not answer, ze words fail you, ah."

There was a laugh at the other end of the telephone.

"Not so bad for you, Jack," Cartwright said. "I'm not up yet; only half awake, and I couldn't make out what it was all about, Annette? Was there an Annette, Jack? If so, I'm afraid she's slipped my memory. But it was great stuff. Where the devil are you? At the docks? Well, wait there five minutes and I'll have my car down for you. Hotel be damned; of course, you're coming up here. This will be your home in Vancouver. There's a spare room all ready, and everything set just as if you had taken the trouble to drop a line to say you were coming down. See you in five minutes. I'll hop into the tub right away. So long," and Cartwright rang off.

Hilton was sauntering leisurely towards the street when a diminutive but smart chauffeur darted up to him, asked if he were Mr. Jack Hilton, took his suitcase and led him to the very latest thing on four wheels, and in less than four minutes, deposited him in the main hall of the Dorset Flats. Here he was, put into the charge of a liveried janitor who, without asking questions, ushered him into an elevator and, stopping at the third floor, stepped across a heavily carpeted hall, and opening an oak panelled door, announced:

"Mr. Hilton, sir."

"Thanks, Bingham," Cartwright replied from some inner room. "Just put Mr. Hilton's things in the spare room. That will be all. Oh, ask Mrs. Cripps to serve breakfast in about twenty minutes. Thanks."

As Bingham left, Cartwright appeared in the doorway of the bathroom arrayed in a rather bizarre dressing-gown. He held a safety razor in his left hand and the lather was still thick on his right cheek.

"Hallelujah," he exclaimed, "but I was glad to hear your voice. Annette and ze six children! Jack, I'll swear you haven't altered a bit. Not high noon and you can put over a yarn like that. No," looking at Hilton critically, "you haven't altered a bit. What is it, one hundred and eighty-five? And all bone and muscle at that. A six-foot Peter Pan who refuses to grow up. Snow-tanned bone and sinew. Why, you're just ripe for the next war.

"And look at me, or rather don't look, for I can not bear the comparison. Five-foot six, and one hundred and forty pounds of bone and soft tissue, but mostly bone. Jack, such boisterous health as you enjoy is almost disgusting. Eaten yet? No, I thought not. Well, food will be up in a few minutes. Meanwhile, here's your room," opening a door as he spoke, "so you had better look around and see if everything's o.k. and I'll get on with my shaving. Give a call if you want anything."

One glance round showed Hilton easy chairs, an open fire, a big brass bedstead and a door leading to a private bathroom. Having washed his hands, he lounged back into the sitting-room and dropped into a deep-seated leather-covered chair, drawn up before a big open grate in which fir logs were burning. Other leather-covered chairs, some deep-seated, others straight-backed, stood here and there, with a heavy dark oak table occupying the centre of the room. The walls were wainscotted in dark oak, relieved by old colored prints and a few oil paintings. Along two walls, rising to a height of some six feet, were shelves filled to capacity with books, some looking like government reports and legal volumes, these latter, of course, bound in brown calf, others obviously ephemeral volumes, seemingly novels.

"I'll be with you in a couple of minutes," Cartwright called out from his bedroom. "What do you think of this place?"

"Fit for a prince, Haddie," Hilton answered. "And all I can say is: if you do this on your pay, the Interprovincial Police is the force to work for. If not, then the New York, Chicago, Montreal and Boston forces better send delegates or a commission, or somebody, over here to see how you get away with it and take a lesson from you in the gentle art of grafting."

"Don't talk rot," Cartwright answered, coming into the room and sitting down before the fire. "Why my pay, Jack, doesn't keep me in cigarettes. But you remember how it was in the C.E.F.? Well, it's just the same today, a smart, ambitious young man spoiled and ruined by a rich father and a doting mother. The dad's always making money and asking me to spend more and more. And the mater can't see what I want to be playing at farming or manufacturing or mining for and now being a detective when I can have all the money I want and even more.

"Yes, Jack," he continued, stretching his legs comfortably towards the blaze, "you see before you a young man blighted by kindness and generosity. Take the Interprovincial Police for example. I joined up as a constable, nobody knowing who I was except what was in the necessary testimonials regarding my honesty and sobriety. Jack, I got into the force by myself entirely off my own bat, not because I was my father's son, and he's a millionaire who is still liked by a lot of people. Of course, you can't understand what that means to a fellow. Those first three weeks were among the happiest in my life. I was chivvied about just like any other recruit, and was given work helping to track down a couple of yeggs and went with a sergeant on an up-country murder mystery.

"Of course that's what I joined up for. Real police work you know. See all those books on those shelves? They're all about crime and criminals and famous murders. There's a copy of every worth-while treatise on criminology, and there's not a detective story written, I mean, you understand, the clever original ones, but it's there, and I've read it.

"You remember my idea was to become thoroughly proficient in police work as the policeman knows and practices it, and then to combine that knowledge with theoretical detecting as explained in the stories. I felt that if I could do that I should be in a good position to make a name as soon as a good case came my way.

"But I had to let the mater know what I was doing—she'd have worried herself to death if I hadn't—and, of course, she told dad. Then the strings were pulled and I was sent for by the chief, and appointed as kind of assistant secretary, which simply means that I am taken away from the real work and can loaf my life away if I want to.

"But darn it, Jack, that's just what I don't want to do. I want to do something by myself, to succeed off my own bat and dad won't let me.

"I have my own income of twenty thousand, which is more than I need, yet dad's always pushing more on to me. And yet, what can I do? He's the finest father a fellow ever had, and I believe it would break his heart if I told him I didn't want his help or his money. And as for the mater, I'm still her baby boy who's got to be reminded to 'ne'er cast a clout till May be out' or whatever it is, and to be sure to thoroughly air pyjamas and socks back from the wash. Ah," he exclaimed, as a middle-aged woman dressed in the severely plain garments of the professional housekeeper and a waiting maid, entered with covered trays and dishes, "here is Mrs. Cripps with one of her famous breakfasts. Mrs. Cripps, Jack, is the lady who devotes her life to looking after the wants of the ungrateful people who inhabit these flats. This gentleman, Mrs. Cripps, is one Jack Hilton, my old army tillicum and, of course, a rear rank private just like yours truly. He arrived from the Frozen North this morning and is eager to do justice to your cooking, about which he has already heard." Then as he proceeded to lift the covers of the different dishes: "Listen, Jack. Real Scotch oatmeal porridge, not ready-made, but cooked here by Mrs. Cripps for seven or eight hours. Ah, a mixed grill, kidney, bacon, fried eggs and little pork sausages. And you certainly must taste Mrs. Cripps' hot-cakes. They might well be held up for emulation before all your present wives and many old ones also. Then, of course, we'll finish up with toast and Oxford marmalade. Mrs. Cripps, when Mr. Hilton has done justice to these good things, he will agree with me that you have only one rival, and that is yourself."

Mrs. Cripps turned with a good-natured motherly smile to Hilton: "Was Mr. Cartwright like this in the army?" she asked.

"Oh yes, only much worse," Hilton answered joyously. "Nothing could silence or depress him."

"Then it's a wonder to me how we ever finished, let alone won the war at all," Mrs. Cripps replied. "But I dare say you know him better than I do, and will not let your breakfast get cold listening to his talk." With a glance at the clock on the mantelpiece: "Why, it's nearly twelve. You must be famished. Will you be dining in tonight, Mr. Cartwright?"

"Yes, at seven. I've got a night off, and am going to spend it en famille with Mr. Hilton. We will fight the war over again, eh, Jack?"

"Sounds good to me," Hilton answered.

"Anything special you fancy, sir?" Mrs. Cripps asked.

"Mrs. Cripps," Cartwright replied, "you know our tastes better than we know them ourselves, so we'll leave dinner entirely in your hands."

"Very good. Please ring if you want anything," and Mrs. Cripps and the maid left the room.

"She's a wonderful woman," Cartwright remarked as he and Hilton settled down to the meal, "a really first-class housekeeper and cook who doesn't want to linger and talk. And that seems to remind me that we've talked about Mrs. Cripps and myself and never a word about you, Jack. What have you been doing for eighteen months up north in the land of gold and snow? Yes, it must be eighteen months since you went up to Stewart to make your fortune. For the love of Mike, Jack, tell me you've failed hopelessly and want a loan. I mean it. I'm much too human to hope you've succeeded while I've been messing about doing nothing down here in Vancouver. The more dismal your story, the better I'll like it."

"You're out of luck, Haddie," Hilton answered. "Although for most of the time I've been away, things were black enough, I guess, even to suit you. As you know, when I went north, I didn't know anything about mining. Up in that country a man should be an expert, but to succeed he's got to have luck. I wasn't an expert, and it certainly did not look as if I had any luck at all. I tried to buy this claim and that; in fact, any that sounded promising but the owners always asked more than I could give. I had the better part of the five thousand you'd loaned me, and I determined to get a claim for that or not at all."

"Why didn't you wire me for more?" Cartwright asked. "You know you'd have got it."

"Nothing doing," Hilton replied. "You had loaned me five thousand on my face, and I was determined to win with that or not at all. And sure enough, at last I picked up a claim, or rather four claims, called the Golden Rock Mine.

"It was on the side of a mountain that was all rock all right, but why 'golden' I couldn't for the life of me understand. Anyway, we couldn't find any trace of gold or anything else but rock, although the old prospector, Billie Jake, who advised me to buy and was to help me work the claim, was sure the gold was there. So I paid over three thousand dollars and prepared to find my millions.

"The previous owners had begun to drive a tunnel into the face of the mountain and we carried on the good work. Hand drills and dynamite you understand. We worked hard, but the rock was harder, and we got down to our last dollar and then our last grub and last sticks of powder, and still no signs of anything but rock and rock, harder than it seemed to me when we first began.

"As a man can't live up in the north on hope alone and winter was coming near, we decided to own we were beaten and pull out. We were actually starting when we found five more sticks of dynamite and just for devilment, tamped them down in a hole we'd drilled at the end of the tunnel and shot the lot.

"At first we weren't even going to take the trouble to go and see what had happened, but curiosity made me turn back and take a peek. I ran out and called in Billie Jake, and I thought he'd go crazy with joy. As I said, just now, I don't know anything about mining, but I could see the streaks of yellow and white that might be silver and gold, but even if they were, I didn't know whether the ore was rich or not. But Billie Jake knew, and with tears running down his dirty beared face, swore it would run as high as eight or nine hundred dollars to the ton. Of course, I didn't believe that, but thought it might be saleable. It seemed to me, you see, that if I had been willing to buy a mine that showed nothing, it was reasonable to hope I might find somebody willing to pay a little more money for a mine in which silver and gold could be seen.

"Anyway, we took samples into Stewart and as luck was mine, ran right into a Colonel Roberts who had just come up to Stewart on behalf of Canadian Metals Incorporated. That's one of the really big concerns, you know.

"He looked at the samples, went out and examined the mine, said he was interested, and wanted to know my price. It took nearly a whole night of talk to come to an agreement. But it's all fixed up now. They have the Golden Rock Mine and we have twenty thousand dollars. Here," pulling out a pocket wallet, "is your cheque for ten thousand, all correct. Mind you, I feel you ought to take more, but—"

"Hold on a minute," Cartwright exclaimed, holding the cheque in his hand, "a cheque for ten thousand? What are you talking about?"

"Well, wasn't that the agreement?" Hilton answered in surprise.

"It certainly was not," Cartwright answered. "I loaned you five thousand for you to do what you liked with. It was an extra five thousand dad had sent me, and I didn't know how to get rid of it. I gave it to you to lose for me and you're certainly not going to hand it back on me with another five as well. No, Jack, that's your money, you keep it. So far as I'm concerned, I'll show you how I feel about it." As he spoke, Cartwright got up from the breakfast

"The Hidden Chateau"

A Dramatic Story of Vancouver Island

By Frank Giolma

Hayden Cartwright, the son of an Eastern Canadian millionaire, is ambitious to be a detective. Having read all the famous detective stores he has joined the Vancouver branch of the unique Interprovincial Police Force of Canada with the idea of combining his theoretical knowledge with practical experience.

He and his friend, Jack Hilton, are detailed to attend the winter festivities of an exclusive country club taking place in their forest clubhouse, "The Hidden Chateau," situated upon a mountain plateau in the heart of Vancouver Island.

Although ostensibly sent to take part in a play they are also to discover what they can about one of the club members who is suspected by the police of being a blackmailer.

While struggling through a snow-storm along the snow-covered trail to "The Hidden Chateau" they find the suspected blackmailer's body in the trail cabin. He has been shot. On arriving at "The Hidden Chateau" they discover that the murderer must be in the chateau, which is now entirely cut off from the outside world by heavy snow. From this point the scene of the story is confined to the chateau, the whole action taking place within three days in this unique setting. Dramatic developments follow one another quickly, the action gaining in speed and intensity as the story moves swiftly and directly to its final thrilling climax.

table, and stepping over to the fire, crumpled up the cheque and threw it into the flames. "Of course, that's a bit melodramatic," he said, with a laugh; "but I want you to get my meaning clear."

"It's very good of you, Haddie," Hilton answered. "And I was afraid you'd do something like this. But, I wish you'd take the money. It doesn't seem right."

"One minute," Cartwright interrupted. "Listen, Jack: You say it was decent of me to lend you the five thousand, don't you?"

"Of course," Hilton answered.

"One decent turn deserves another, doesn't it?"

"Absolutely," Hilton replied.

"Well, the decent turn you can do me, Jack," Cartwright continued, "is to keep this money and never mention it again, and when you want some more, just let me know. So that's that, and finished.

"And now here's another decent turn you can do me: suggest something new for me to do."

"You're not going to leave the police, are you?" Hilton exclaimed, in surprise.

"Yes, I am, Jack, for since the chief heard from dad, I'm just a passenger. Right now the force has its best men working night and day on two murder mysteries and tracing down a gang of three holdup men who've come into British Columbia from San Francisco. Clever men who have fooled the U. S. police and are sure to shoot to kill before they're taken. Lots of real work, Jack, and the kind of stuff I joined up for. Every sergeant and even some of the newest recruits have been doing special duty on these cases, everyone in the force, you might say, who's got a head as well as a pair of feet, except Constable Hayden Cartwright. The best they can do for him is to put him on duty down at the docks to see that no undesirable characters are going across to Victoria or Nanaimo these days."

"Why, what's happening on Vancouver Island?" Hilton asked.

"Oh, nothing; but the Hidden Chateau Club is holding some kind of a do, and a lot of the members have been going over this last week."

"What's that, a golf club?"

"No, a very special country club away up on a plateau in the heart of Vancouver Island. It's a summer club, really. Snow and ice, I should think, up on the plateau at this time of year, but they're putting on a real old Christmas time. You know the kind of thing, Yule logs and country dances and wassail—yes, wassail.

"A lot of the members of the Hidden Chateau Club are really, I suppose, more important than many of the people whose names are continually appearing in the press. At least that's what I understand, and that is why I've been told off to watch the steamers on which they're going over to the Island.

"But I can't see what good I'm doing, and between you and me, Jack, I believe the job's just been made by the chief to keep me out of possible danger. I tell you, dad butting-in, has crabbed my chances with the Interprovincial Police so hopelessly that I've decided to quite and go into something else. Can't you suggest some mad scheme, the madder the better? How about tracking down the Spanish prisoner who spends his time writing letters about buried treasure, or sailing to Cocos Island in search of somebody or other's hidden doubloons! I'm fed up, Jack. Colonel Richards, he's our chief, is a white man and one of the best. But when I asked him to give me a chance to capture the holdup gang and he said he was sorry, but he couldn't take me off special dock duty, I almost resigned right then.

"I'll bet you aren't thinking of retiring on the twenty thousand you have, especially, as you were only figuring on ten. What are you planning, Jack? And remember, you've got to let me in if it's anything with action."

Hilton was silent for a few seconds. Then he said, speaking slowly: "As a matter of fact, unless I've stumbled on to a pipe-dream, I've got partly on the track of one of the wildest yarns ever told, even on the Pacific Coast. And so far as I've been able to check up on it, it seems true. But I know so little about it yet that I hadn't meant to mention it, and wouldn't now if—"

Suddenly the telephone rang, three short and two long. Cartwright jumped up quickly and took the instrument off the table. "That's the chief's call," he said. Then in his official voice: "Constable Cartwright speaking. Yes, sir . . . Yes, sir, an old friend, Mr. Hilton, has just called in. He came down this morning from Stewart . . . I don't know, sir, but I believe he would . . Just about my age and fit as a warrior, sir . . . Yes, from 1914 to the end and never a scratch . . . Front line all the time . . . I certainly will, sir. At two o'clock. Thank you, sir." As he put the telephone down, Cartwright turned to Hilton: "It was the chief, all right. He's got some special job he wants me to do. I've got to report at two," looking at the clock. "Half-past twelve, now. He asked me if I had anyone staying with me, and I told him you were, and he asked me if you'd like to give a hand. At least he asked me your age. You heard what I said and he wants me to bring you along. It's a go, isn't it?"

"Anything you say," Hilton answered.

Cartwright seemed lost in thought.

"I hope it's something worth while this time," he said, as if speaking to himself. "Something full of action with a dash of danger."

"Don't be blood-thirsty," Hilton remarked.

"I'm not. But a fellow gets fed up with nothing but office routine day after day and week after week. I like the chief; he's a white man, but if he goes trying to put me on to another tame cat lay, like this watching the docks, his wife will be a widow."

"All of which sounds very fine and is in the best style of Haddie Cartwright, late rear rank private in the C.E.F. and now constable in the Interprovincial Police. But how about little me? Did I understand you to tell his nibs that I was ready to join up for some desperate deed or deeds? If so, think again, Haddie, when I took off the khaki I said 'never again' and that stands good."

"That's a point," Cartwright remarked impersonally. "Yes, if it had been another rotten safe job, the chief wouldn't have suggested I bring you or anyone else along."

"If that's the case then you can ring him up right away and say I'm sick or left for Europe or something," Hilton replied. "I've no ambition to sacrifice myself for the honor and glory of any police force. Life looks too good to me just now, so you can count me out."

"Well, you can tell all that to Colonel Richards when you see him," Cartwright answered with a grin. "Then if we don't like the job you can tell me about this mad scheme you have up your sleeve."

"No," Hilton answered. "I'm not going to say another word about that, at least not until I've got further into it myself. And that goes, Haddie."

"Good. Then may the colonel's job be full of murder and sudden death," Cartwright replied, with a happy smile.

CHAPTER 2

The Dossier of Arthur Selwyn

Cartwright said if Hilton did not mind, they would walk to headquarters. It was only twenty minutes away, and he always walked there. He explained he thought it was not the thing for a mere constable to drive up in a private car with a chauffeur, and it would denote lack of moral courage to drive to within half a block and then walk.

As they went along, Hilton was quickly convinced that Cartwright was devoted to the Interprovincial Police despite all his threats to resign, and that it only required for him to be given some real police work to wed him to the force for life. And Cartwright was such an enthusiastic and eloquent advocate of the Interprovincials that Hilton began to think that there might be worse jobs than one in the famous force.

"Of course," Cartwright remarked. "All police work should be rather the prevention of crime than its detection and bringing the criminal to justice. You see, if the preventive methods are successful there is no need for detection or the catching of criminals because no crime has been committed.

"All other police forces are crippled and hindered in their efforts at crime prevention by a hundred rules, laws and regulations, but the Interprovincials seem to be answerable to no outside body. Discipline is strict, as strict as in the British Navy, but there's always a long waiting list of applicants and so the force can always pick and choose its recruits. If a dud happens to creep in, he's soon spotted and let out.

"Really we don't do ordinary police work at all. You'd be surprised to hear of some of the jobs we've had given us and some of the things we've got away with. I tell you, Jack, the force is no respecter of rank or title. Why, I've seen princes made to toe the line and even politicians forced to see the error of their ways, and you'll agree we must be some body of men when we can do that to even cabinet ministers and senators in Canada."

"I'd never heard of it till you told me you'd joined," Hilton answered. "Then, of course, I began to ask quesitons here and there. What struck me most was the fact that everyone spoke well of the Interprovincials. I mean men who hadn't much use for law and order in a general way. Yes, your outfit certainly stands high with everyone."

"And we deserve to," Cartwright answered with the frank pleasure of a boy accepting praise for the school team on which he happens to be.

"Tell me, Haddie," Hilton asked, "Who started the force?"

"I've never been able to learn," Cartwright answered. "I asked the chief one day and he said he didn't know. All I can say is you'll find the force in every province in Canada and Dominion headquarters at Ottawa. We work with the police in the States and England almost as closely as if we were one and the same force. Our official motto is: 'Law and order for high and low,' but our popular one is: 'not much uniform and less routine.' Of course, I've got an outfit, but I haven't had it on once for more than six weeks; just use it for official occasions and high feast days. A silent force that acts without drawing attention to itself. See that building half way down the next block? I mean the one that looks like the meeting place of a semi-religious body, if you understand me, an architectural cross between a modern apartment block and a very modern theatre. Stucco and clinker brick with a very neat little green lawn in front, and a box bush clipped and cropped on each side of the path to the main door? Nothing about, eh, to suggest secret dossiers and human sleuths and all that kind of thing. But it's the British Columbia headquarters of the Interprovincial Police all the same. Come on in and we'll hear what the chief has to offer. And may it be something worthy of our steel," Cartwright added as they crossed the road, mounted the five broad stone steps leading up to the main entrance and passed through the open door into a large hall to be immediately but seemingly casually confronted by a smartly set-up young man who rose to accost them from a comfortable chair by an open fire. Although he nodded familiarly to Cartwright, he quietly barred Hilton's advance until Cartwright explained the chief wanted to see them. Then he stood aside, twice pressing an electric button on the wall, presumably to notify somebody of their arrival.

Cartwright led Hilton through the hall and along a main passage past a number of rooms, from the open doorway of which came the tick-tick of the telegraph, the rattle of typewriters and the hum of men talking. At the farther end of the passage they came to a closed door outside of which a constable in the olive green uniform of the Interprovincial Police was sitting.

"Appointment?" he asked Cartwright.

"Yes, for two o'clock," Cartwright answered. "The chief wants to see Mr. Hilton and me."

The constable glanced at his wrist watch.

"Right on the dot," he said. Then he got up, shook himself like a terrier, pulled down his tunic, stood erect, knocked at the closed door, waited a couple of seconds, opened it and entered, shutting it behind him. He reappeared almost immediately and standing aside, ushered Cartwright and Hilton into the presence of Colonel Richards, chief constable of the Interprovincial Police in British Columbia.

The colonel was sitting in a straight-backed chair at a large flat-topped desk. He was a man of some fifty summers, rather slight in build, but what he lacked in natural physical strength, one look at his well-tanned alert face and bright eyes suggested he more than made up for the outdoor recreations of one kind or another. He had the high forehead of the clear thinker and the firmly-set lips of a man used to thinking for and commanding others. He rose as Hilton and Cartwright entered, and held out his hand to the former.

"Mr. Hilton, I presume!" he said. "Sit down, both of you, please," he continued. "Do you smoke?" offering a silver cigarette case. "By the way, Mr. Hilton, are you any relation of the man who was mentioned for special and conspicuous bravery on the Somme in 1916?"

"Why, Chief," Cartwright answered before Hilton had time to open his mouth. "That was Jack himself."

"I did nothing more than any other rear rank private," Hilton replied. "Only somebody in authority happened to see me."

Colonel Richards threw up his hands in mock dismay. "Another rear rank private a breed that was the despair of the sergeant-major on parade and the backbone of the battalion in the front line.

"Some day we must have a chat together over our experiences in France. I don't know how much Cartwright has told you about my short conversation with him over the telephone, so perhaps I had better explain matters. Of course, you'll understand that we do not discuss matters regarding our work with people who are not members of the Interprovincial Police unless we feel very sure of them. In this instance I am accepting you because you are a friend of Cartwright's, and he vouches for you Also, I like to think I am a judge of character.

"It's quite possible that when you hear more about the special duty I'm detailing Cartwright to, you may not wish to go with him. If so, all I ask is that you forget all about the matter, including what you will hear at this interview. If, on the other hand, you decide to go with your friend, you will be sworn in temporarily for special duty. Oh, you need not be afraid. This is no 'for the duration' enlistment."

"I quite understand," Hilton answered. "And as for the job; why, if Cartwright wants me to go along with him, it's all right with me."

"Good!" the Colonel commented. "Now," he continued, getting up and standing with his back to the open fire. "Have either of you ever been to the Hidden Chateau? You, Cartwright, of course, have heard of the club, but you, Hilton?"

"I've never been there," Cartwright replied. "And I don't think Hilton had heard of it until I mentioned it to him this morning."

"That's right," Hilton said. "If Cartwright hadn't told me, I'd have said it was somewhere in France, or possibly Quebec."

"Yes, it doesn't sound like British Columbia, does it?" Colonel Richards answered. "But as Cartwright, I expect, told you, it's in the heart of the forest over on Vancouver Island. Right in the heart of the mountains and cut off from civilization as surely as if it was a thousand miles from the nearest settlement, and yet probably not a hundred miles, as the crow flies, from this very room. It's really a summer, spring and early fall hunting and fishing club, but this year some of the members are going to enjoy a real old-fashioned Christmas. You know the kind of thing, an attempt to reproduce today the atmosphere of Christmas as depicted by Addison and Washington Irving. They have certainly the proper natural setting for such festivities, and judging from what I know of the club they'll make the whole affair a real success.

"Now, how would you both like to run over there for three or four days?"

Hilton saw a look of disappointment on Cartwright's face. Before he had thought what to answer, Colonel Richards continued:

"The trip won't be exactly a holiday, although you will both be guests of the club and will, I am sure, have a royal time.

"I have had many extraordinary requests made to me as chief constable of the Interprovincial Police, but the reason for this trip to the Hidden Chateau Club is probably one of the most bizarre.

"This morning, Mr. Skeuse, he's the club secretary, got me on long-distance, and asked two favors. He wanted us to arrange with the Government Employment Service to send over a first-class waiter, as one of their extra men has been taken sick. That, of course, was a matter for the Employment Bureau, who state, by the way, that they can not send the first-class man required as such short notice. But Skeuse did not ring me up for that reason.

"So far as I gather, as part of one evening's entertainment, they are acting or staging a mock murder mystery. I suppose the members, like the rest of the world, have been saturating themselves in detective and murder mystery stories and now want to have on visualized.

"I understand from Skeuse that the victim will be found shot under extremely mysterious circumstances, but that there will be certain clues which the club members will know of. Now, what they want is a real policeman to come on the scene and trace down the murderer exactly as he would have done if a real crime had been committed.

About Appreciation

It is easy to take kindness for granted. We often receive kindness which we do not really deserve, for all our taking it for granted The value of appreciation of kindly service done is far from being always measured truly, particularly by young people in their treatment of older people. We are all eager in youth to scale the heights, and some of us seem to imagine that we are the first to make that ambitious and important attempt, and do not pause to think what we owe to the work done by our elders.

Polo Old Pastime

Polo was known in Persia in very ancient days. In fact there is a story to the effect that when Alexander the Great was still a young man the shah of Persia sent him a ball and polo stick as a hint that he should concern himself with nothing more serious than the game. Alexander replied that the polo ball, in his case, represented the earth, and the stick himself, and future events justified this.—(Kansas City Times).

The New York Times says that a certain Lije Williams had been haled into court to answer a complaint that rose out of a broken bargain. Among the witnesses called to give evidence was one Steve Collins.

"Mr. Collins," said the examining lawyer, "you know the defendant in this case, do you not?"

"Oh, yes," answered Mr. Collins.

"What is his reputation for veracity?" continued the lawyer. "Is he regarded as a man who never tells the truth?"

"Wal, I can't say that he don't never tell the truth," replied Steve, "but I do know that, if he wanted his hogs to come to dinner, he'd have to git somebody else to call 'em."

Fear Spread of Cancer Through Tarred Roads

The system of tarring roads has come into great vgoue throughout France and several objections have been raised. In the first place, it is said that the dust arising therefrom gradually strangles the trees along the roadside, but a more serious matter is that Doctor Forveau of Courmelles has uttered a cry of alarm and awakened the fear that tarred highways may cause an increase of cancer. He bases his fears on the existence of experimental cancer in mice succeeding local applications of tar on the skin and on cancers observed in workmen who handle tar.

Doctor Forveau fears that the dust of the road, when composed of siliceous granules with sharp points and edges, and impregnated with tar, may cause traumatisms of the mucosae of the respiratory and digestive tracts, capable of producing cancer, just as pulmonary tuberculosis may be facilitated in cutters of millstones by the siliceous dust that they inspire.

Made Handsome Income by "Hurry Up" Weddings

One of the most famous marriage brokers of history was Rev. Alexander Keith, who, about the middle of the Eighteenth century, did a flourishing trade in clandestine marriages in the Mayfair district of London. He used to celebrate as many as 6,000 a year and charged a guinea for each ceremony. He was publicly excommunicated and in return proceeded to excommunicate the bishop of London, Judge Andrews, who tried him, and the rector of St. George's.

James, fourth duke of Hamilton, was married to the beautiful Miss Gunnings at the Mayfair chapel with a ring from a curtain at 12.30 a.m. In 1753 the marriage act put an end to Keith's hasty weddings and he retired to private life.

Move by the Calendar

When we think of nomads we invariably picture in our minds a people who wander from place to place picking up a living here and there as they go. Yet this is not a correct idea of nomad life as it was lived in Asia. It is true that in many parts of Asia, as well as in many parts of other countries, there are certain small tribes of gypsies and nomads who lead this kind of an existence. But in Asia, for centuries, thousands and thousands of Tartars, Armenians, Kurds and Yezidis have migrated from the lower regions to higher places for the summer. Allagos is a great mountainous mass in the western part of Armenia, and the favorite summer resort of these people. Although they live in tents, their life is just as real as their winter life in villages. Babies are born, grandmothers die, gardens are made and sheep and cattle are fattened.

Profitable Begging

The swarms of beggars in Vienna streets who are generously supported by the sentimental Viennese, despite the obviously business-like methods by which they set about the business of begging themselves through life, have now begun to cause interest to Viennese newspapers.

The latest development is for the Vienna beggar to open a bank account and request his patrons to pay into it their "contributions" to save him postage.

One beggar in a Viennese suburb has three girl secretaries whom he keeps hard at work all day dealing with his correspondence. A recent case in the courts developed the fact that the familiar figures who go from table to table of Vienna cafes offering stationery, court plaster or matches to the public who generally pay readily enough, are in this man's employ. His income easily exceeds that of a high state official.

The Vienna police look with a very lenient eye on beggars, and there is even a class of disabled beggars who receive licenses and proudly inscribe themselves in official documents as "professional beggars."

In nearly every shopkeeper's cash register is a bowl containing copper coins of very low value. On Friday, the "beggar's day," this bowl is put out on the counter and every beggar is allowed to help himself to one or two of the coins.

Now we hear of a west side lady who says she'd hate to claim that she made a man of her husband, but she's done her best, sister; she's done her best.

"I must request you not to dance like that in here."

"But this is interpretative dancing."

"Then I must be interpreting it the wrong way."

SECOND APPLE MAGGOT SPRAY

The second spray for Apple Maggot or Railroad Worm is due and the law requires that all apple trees be sprayed between July 28th and August 1st. Any person owning apple trees is asked to cooperate in order to control this insect pest which is causing so much damage to the fruit.

Use the following spray mixture:
2-3 gallon lime sulphur; 1½ lbs. Lime Arsenate, or 2 lbs. Lead Arsenate; 1½ lbs. Hydrated Lime; 40 gallons water.

Where only the railroad worm sprays are being applied the lime sulphur may be omitted.

The law also requires that all fallen fruit be destroyed and that any apple trees not properly sprayed shall be cut down.

Fire Blight

Dr. Gussow, the Dominion Botanist, who has charge of Fire Blight investigation work in Canada and Mr. Racicot, Plant Pathologist, investigating control methods in this province, visited this district on Monday and Tuesday of this week and were alarmed at the Fire Blight developments. These experts pronounced the situation as serious. Dr. Gussow said that unless immediate action was taken to control this disease it was possible for it to develop to such an extent that entire orchards would be wiped out. He recommended a cooperative effort among all those who have affected trees as the only way to meet the situation.

An annual meeting that will be of particular importance to many farmers will be that of the Quebec Fruit Growers Society. The meetings are to be held at Peru, N.Y. on August 17 and 18. All apple growers who would like to attend these interesting sessions, which will also provide a fair share of entertainment, should communicate with one of the following parties: Charles Waller, Mark Sample or Phillip Smith.

"Rastus, what's an alibi?" "Dat's provin' dat you wuz at a prayer meetin' whar you wasn't, in order to show dat yo' wasn't at the crap game whar you wuz."

Obituary

The Late Nealy M. O'Meara

Death occurred on Monday, July 17, of Nealy M. O'Meara, on the Frontier road, near Churubusco. The deceased was a son of the late Edward and Kate (McGill) O'Meara. He was born March 10, 1882. Educated at Chateaugay and St. Laurent College, Montreal. Had a genial disposition, a sincere friend to rich and poor alike. Being an accomplished musician, he took an active part in the social affairs of the entire community. He was identified as a member of the K. of C., Holy Name Rosary Society and of St. Philomena's Church at Churubusco.

His wife Gertrude Sweeny predeceased his in 1918. The five children, two sons and three daughters, survive viz: Mrs. Leward Monette, of Mooers; Arthur of Idaho; Marion, Rose and Robert, residing at home.

Havelock

Mrs. Flossie Stevens sailed this week for France. Mrs. Stevens is one of the Gold Star mothers who the State are sending overseas to visit their sons' graves.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Mayhew and little daughter Beverley and Miss Annie Sayers left on Sunday to visit Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Miller at Napanee, Ont. Little Irwin Miller returning with them after spending two weeks with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. H. Sayers, also Mrs. V. Miller.

While Mr. C. Carson and son Norman were driving home the past week with the mowing machine hitched to the buggy the cutting bar caught on a post, upsetting the wagon and throwing the occupants out. Mr. Carson escaped with slight bruises but Norman had his ear badly cut, which necessitated several stitches. Mr. Carson met with another accident Saturday night by falling downstairs hurting his back but is able to be around.

Rev. Mr. Heeney and son of Winnipeg were recent guests of Mr. C. Carson.

Miss C. McQuaig of St. Urban was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. John McComb the past week.

Miss Jessie Frier and Mrs. H. Patenaude of Rockburn were the guests of their mother, Mrs. J. Frier Sunday last.

Mr. J. Murphy of Peru, N.Y. called on friends through here on Wednesday last.

Mr. Jas. Costello's sugar shanty and contents were burned during an electric storm the past week.

The Beaver by Nancy Lee

Mrs. S. Cameron entertained 15 little friends of her son Franklin to a picnic on their lawn Tuesday afternoon.

Dairy Commission—
Mr. Marc Hudon, secretary of the Quebec Dairy Commission was in Huntingdon on Tuesday. He met the District Agronomes and several milk producers who have rather serious complaints regarding the operation of recent orders of the Commission. Mr. Hudon, in making this personal inquiry, indicated that legislation of a much more drastic character would be invoked in order to enforce positive adherence to rulings of the Board.

Valleyfield Exhibition—
Mr. Gosselin, Agronome for Beauharnois, called on local cattle breeders on Tuesday, rounding up the entries for the Valleyfield show. Indications are that cattle classes in all breeds will be well filled.

Holstein News.—
Reports from Brantford state that the registrations for the first two weeks in July this year are over 1,000 ahead of the same period in 1932. The rush of work has overwhelmed the office staff and it is estimated that it will be well into August before the accumulated registrations can be completed.

The Quebec representatives on the National Dairy Council are meeting in Montreal to-day.

Electric Pipeless Organ

Capt. Richard Ranger of transoceanic radiophotograph fame invented the electric pipeless organ. It is both pipeless and reedless and responds to a series of electrical switches, tone generators and amplifiers when its standard pipe organ keys are played by an organist. The sounds are generated in groups, each group consisting of a series of alternators in simple ratio, controlled by one motor. Each tone is amplified and transmitted to the speaker when the corresponding musical key is depressed.

Howick

The Georgetown Y.W.A. was entertained at the home of their president, Miss Lois Elliot on Wednesday, July 19th. Dainty refreshments were served at the close of the meeting.

Howick, Que., July 1933
The Huntingdon Gleaner,
Gentlemen:—

"If light why not power"

Mrs. W. L. Carr's letter: "Let there be light," so ably expressed, has caused the writer to add his protest to the multitude who would gladly sign a petition to hand to the electric light barons. Anyone who has stood on the bridges of that great canal, which has its power house at Beauharnois must be impressed with the vast amount of power flowing past, power which belongs to the people of Canada and especially to the district of Beauharnois and the Chateauguay Valley where there are countless homes in semi-darkness. The writer lives on a highway where there is a high voltage transmission line of 22,000 volts and very likely with surplus power to spare.

It should be possible for farmers or others to get this power at a pay for what you use rate, or at least a reasonable flat rate, and so use some of this surplus white coal with which this district is so abundantly supplied. I consider that electric light and power are the premier public utilities in any progressive district.

D. W. FISKIN,
Howick

Fellow Enthusiasts

Pleasant portrait of the law in a moment of relaxation: Walking along a lane in a southern suburb of Manchester I noticed in front of me several small boys grouped about a policeman, who had got off his bicycle to speak to them. They carried pickle-jars and tattered muslin nets, and were gazing at him with awe. "Poor kids," I thought, "surely the law is being overzealous in this case." As I passed the group I saw that the policeman was holding his hands in front of him two feet apart. "It had funny-colored scales," he was saying, "and it was that big."—Manchester Guardian.

Beautiful Birds Not Singers

A natural history explorer in San Salvador says of the birds of that country: "You will listen days for one sweet song and when you hear it you'll find it coming not from a native bird, but from some songster which has migrated there for a season. The quetzal is a rare trogan which is seldom seen, because it lives high among the mountain peaks, like our eagles. It is a mixture of golden green and carmine colors, with long, airy tail coverts which spray out two feet beyond the tail. Many ornithologists regard it as the most magnificent bird in the world. The Guatemalans use it on the coins and seals as U. S. does the bald eagle."

Few Wood-Carvers Left

As far back as 4000 B. C. we know that people liked to cut designs in wood with a sharp instrument, and excavations in Egypt have shown that people of that ancient time were skillful at the art. From that date on, in almost every land, carving has been a widespread and popular art.

But today, in most parts of the world, wood-carving exists only in the hobby or pastime of whittling. The hand working of wood is too slow for slow for this rapid machine age. Only in Switzerland, France and, to a lesser extent, England, does the art hold its place among other occupations, and even in these countries there is little demand except for the work of the most famous carvers.

Spiced Rhubarb

Seven pounds diced, unpeeled rhubarb, 6 pounds of sugar, 1 pint of mild vinegar, 2 tablespoons whole cloves, juice and grated rind of 2 oranges, juice and grated rind of 1 lemon, 1 tablespoon bits of stick cinnamon.

Combine the other ingredients, add the spices tied in a bit of cheese cloth and simmer until thick like marmalade about ¾ of an hour. Transfer to sterilized jars and seal with sterilized rubbers and caps.

BOWLING HONORS WELL DIVIDED

Valleyfield Adds Another Win in Bowling League Fixtures

Lost a game, tie a game, and win a game was the result of the Huntingdon-Valleyfield bowling league fixture last evening. The aggregate score was in favour of the Cotton City Club, the score being 48 to 39. Geo. Robb played R. Wilkinson's four, a perfect gentleman's game, the score being 15 all at the end of the game of 15 ends. Harry Whitehead handed Cecil Stark a trouncing to the tune of 23 to 9, whilst Lloyd Kelly reversed the scales with a modest score of 15 to 10 in favour of Huntingdon. The teams were:

Starving Lions Rescued

For an entire week no one fed 80 lions and tigers which formerly belonged to a travelling circus and they were in danger of dying for want of food. They had been held on the railway siding at Strasbourg, France, and every day thousands of children and their elders came to look at the wild beasts, but no one offered to supply the enormous amount of food needed. George Palmer, at his home in England, heard about it and wrote the mayor, saying that as a lover of animals he was deeply affected on learning that the beasts were dying of hunger. He asked the mayor to see that the animals were fed at his expense and said that, if necessary, he would buy them.

Romance of Brownings Throve on Mere Words

By modern standards, says David Loth in "The Brownings," Robert Browning and Elizabeth Barrett starved their love cruelly. A handclasp was beyond all Robert's daring. A kiss was something mentioned in poetry but never attempted in real life. However, they derived a certain pleasure from the realization that their love could thrive on a diet of mere words. And of words they were prodigal indeed. Over the exchange of a lock of hair they lavished enough of ingenuity and lyrical expression to have made a trunkful of the kind of plays Robert wrote.

His letter suggesting that she trust him with a wisp of black curl was a masterpiece of dignified pleading worthy of a request for a couple of dukedoms and a principality. He felt greatly daring, and well he might. An admirer of Ba's poetry had only three weeks before made a similar though not so elegantly phrased plea.

"I am too great a prude for such a thing," she answered.

An old gentleman met a little boy wearing the uniform of a wolf cub. "Well, and what was your good deed for the day, my little fellow," he asked.

The boy looked thoughtful.

"There was only one dose of medicine left in the bottle," he said, "so I let my little brother have it."
