H. H. Brown workers prepare for layoffs

Weather has been factor in footwear business

By Maurice Crossfield

H.H. Brown shoes in Richmond is undergoing a restructuring that could see as many as 80 people laid off before March.

"We don't think it will be more than that," said H.H. Brown president Paul Brennan Thursday. "We're expecting it to be less than that actually. We're looking at that as the worst case scenario."

Brennan said 1998 was a tough year in the footwear industry, and in the last month Richmond's largest employer has seen a marked decline in its sales to the Canadian military and in its private label shoe sales. The lack of cold weather has also cut into sales of winter footwear.

In response to this, H.H. Brown has been on a work slowdown since July, with most of its 400 employees working three weeks each month and drawing employment insurance on the fourth week. In December, 34 manufacturing workers were laid off, with the remainder of the layoffs expected to take place between now and the beginning of March.

The layoffs will mostly affect those who have worked at the plant for less than five years. The workers that remain will then return to a full work week. Brennan said this is particularly important for those who have worked there for the last 25 or 30 years.

Brennan said H.H. Brown is in the process of closing down its "C" plant and consolidating its operations in its "B" plant. The closed plant will then be used as a storage facility, and could be reopened if sales rise.

"We can't see it coming back so we made the move," he said. "But if it does come back we have the option to gear it up again."

At the beginning of March the plant will be closed for two to three weeks while the two plants are combined. The details of the restructuring were outlined in letters given to employees Monday when they returned from the New Year's holiday.

"We are hoping the changes will not be too drastic," said Michel Aubé, president of the workers union at H.H. Brown. "We were waiting for a reaction from the company."

I usually don't even brush off the snow

My automotive career has earned another first

By Charles Bury

It was some-time after 5 a.m. when Richard called. "The Record's burning down. It's a big fire. Everything's finished. You better come down."

Get out of bed, wake True Love. "The Record's burning down. Want to go over with me?" She works there too.

Ugh. Inside the house it's chilly. Outside, chilly doesn't cover it. The temperature's about 35 below on one scale or the other. Down there it doesn't make much difference anyway. Minus 35 is extreme cold in Fahrenheit or Celcius (does anyone else remember centigrade?).

We got dressed, TL let the dog out while I bundled up, put my mitts on and went outside to start the truck.

Now I don't know about you, but for me letting the truck warm up is a rare and special thing. I belong to the don't-plug-it-in, get-going-right-away school of thought, and in 25 years of snow-belt driving this method has always served me well. Until now, that is.

I'm the kind who's too lazy to bother going back inside while the vehicle warms up, and too itchy to sit on my freezing hemorrhoid doing nothing. Hell, I usually don't even brush off the snow unless it's frozen on the windshield. And driving through the middle of nowhere offers plenty of time for the precipitation to blow off before there's any traffic to annoy with a man-made mini-blizzard or flying chunks of ice.

But it was too cold for snow, the dog did what he had to do, and after four or five minutes we got under way. The motor was hesitating a bit; I figured it was just a touch of ice in the gas line. We turned onto Route 108 and headed for town. That's when things went from bad to worse. My mind was already at the Record. I was there just last night. What would it look like? Was everything destroyed?

A couple of miles down the highway the hesitating started to get worse. A new noise. Thump thump thump thump thump.

Red light comes on.

Clang clang clang CLANG CLANG. BANG.

Stop. Dead. Out on the highway. Thirty-five below. Windy. Still dark.

The only sound is the theft alarm, which wouldn't shut off, and was wailing away like the entire Hell's Angels were trying to steal my wheels. I wish.

Right now, please? Steal it. Here are the keys.

A big full moon is out to guide me. Guide me? Guide me where? What the bleep do I do now? We could freeze out here.

"I guess we can go to Uncle Ray's," says True. She's always thinking of these things. "It's just back there."

Uncle Ray is Ray Maguire, who just happens to live about 200 feet down the road. He's an expert on cars; he'll know what to do. At least he'll let us in.

Turns out Ray's friend and neighbour is the local tow truck guy. Half an hour later I was climbing up into the cab. It was well warmed up. Was there a message here?

A plaque on the dash says that back in 1994, Alain Bouchard and this truck won the beauty prize at the Granby truck rodeo. I'm impressed. Before long, and after a gloomy lesson on the price of replacing an engine, we're in the yard at Sherbrooke Nissan.

By the time I got to the Record the fire was almost out - not that it made any difference, except to confirm my reputation for sometimes being a little bit late.

Never mind that. It was Saturday and there was nothing to do about the truck but wait. Monday I called the garage to see what they could do. The service man had to shout over the noise of - get this - a theft alarm driving everybody nuts. "Is that my truck making that noise?"

"Oui monsieur." They couldn't shut it off either.

"The spare control is in the glove box," I said.

"Okay," he replied. A couple of minutes later it was quiet. "Sorry to leave you like that but that thing was really loud."

It turned out my truck had "thrown a rod" - something that used to happen quite often, say, 30 years ago, but is now quite rare. The service manager said he had never seen such a thing, especially on that model, which is supposed to be built to take abuse. Me neither, said the parts manager, shaking his head. What I had done was a first.

That's me all right. Another first, another trophy for my wall. I'm way ahead of the pack. And maybe that's why they call that truck the Pathfinder - boldly going where no truck's gone before.

Back home that night, I'm contemplating a big repair bill and a future without food. I blame it on the dog. I told him, too, but he just laughed and pointed at the moon.

Reports of the Record fire have made vague references to an explosion, and that has led some to wonder what it was. The forklift had two features. Atop the safety roof a stuffed moose head sometimes rode, complete with ear protectors and a red ribbon, while the stern sported a 15-pound propane fuel tank. One of the two - you guess which - got so hot it blew up. The neighbours found parts of it on their back lawn the next day.

Number of jobs to hold around 400

Magnola to be biggest in the world: Bedard

By Stephen McDougall
SPECIAL TO THE RECORD
ASBESTOS

The Magnola magnesium plant being built here will be the biggest in the world, vice president Michel Bedard boasted Wednesday.

"There are about 14 such plants in the world under construction right now, and another three in operation," he said at a press conference.

"The biggest one now is in Becancour, Quebec operated by Norsk Hydro of Norway. When we finish construction by the year 2000, we will be bigger."

The Magnola plant is being built here because of the mountains of asbestos waste tailings from the local open-pit mine.

The plant will extract magnesium from the tailings and sell it as a lighter substitute for steel.

Bedard said Magnola will produce 60,000 tonnes of magnesium annually. He said the company hopes to double production in the future.

"Our main markets will be the North American car industry," he said.

"Right now, the average car has only

1.5 kilograms of magnesium.

That is not much, but with demand continuing for lighter cars, the use of magnesium in each car will increase about 20 percent per year."

He said as demand for the metal increases, so does the competition. That is one reason, he said, Magnola plans to spend over $730 million to get this plant in operation.

"Right now, about 350,000 tonnes of magnesium is being produced worldwide. If we don't fill the demand, the market will turn to other materials as substitutes. This is the metal of the future, and we must make it here."

But he added that even if the production from the plant does double, the number of jobs will not.

Since most of the operations will be automated, he said only about 50 extra jobs would be created in the future.

"We don't see there being more than 400 jobs here. But for the short run, as we get started, there probably will be more people working here than just 350. Then as the operation gets going, it will adjust to that 350 level."

Bedard and other Magnola managers took reporters on a tour of the construction site which measures roughly on square kilometre carved out of unused forest land.

The last time Asbestos saw such a large construction project was with the building of Mill Six at the JM Asbestos mine in the early 1970s.

Construction director Jean-Pierre Landry said when the Magnola project ends, there will be 30 buildings on the site.

He said of the $120 million spent so far in 1998 on construction of the plant, $50 million was spent in the Eastern Townships hiring local contractors for everything from sand and gravel to concrete and steel girders.

One expense they emphasized was environmental testing and control.

Alain Bergeron, head of the Environment department, said his total budget will top $68 million.

"We will be constantly testing the air, water and ground to see if our operation is giving off too many harmful substances," he said. The plant will require 100 cubic meters of water per hour, to be taken mostly from the nearby Nicolet river. He added all the water used will be treated and rain water will be collected in a large basin for future use.

One of the substances they will be testing for is chlorinated hydrocarbons. Bergeron estimated the plant will emit less than a gram per year. He said testing sites will be set up to monitor those emissions.

"We have already set up many testing sites in from Richmond to Danville and Asbestos to Tingwick to establish background standards to base future test results on."

He said Magnola will also work with the Quebec Farmers Union to make sure area cows are not affected.

"The best way to know is by testing the milk. We will ask local farmers through the union to help us with our tests. If the milk fat contains too much contaminants, we will have to change our process so that less is emitted from the plant."

He said the company is serious about area pollution because neglecting the environment is bad for business.

"A lot of our clients are auto firms, which are getting more and more conscious of environmental issues. If they see us as a polluter, they could remove us from their list of suppliers."

New guide book for seniors

Linking local citizens to their community

By René Bruemmer
MAGOG

Senior citizens looking for information on services available in the Memphrémagog region have a new guide to show them where to go.

Officials launched the 1999 Directory of Services to Seniors on Thursday in Magog. The 16-page, bilingual guide, which doubles as a calendar, lists and describes organizations providing services to seniors in the regional municipality of Memphrémagog.

The table of contents directs readers where to find help for needs ranging from health and nursing care, dietary requirement, legal aid and financial advice to golden age clubs and transportation.

The listing for loneliness, for example, details nine agencies seniors can call to find help and companionship.

"It's an excellent tool to help bring together the 65-and-older population in Memphrémagog," said Paul Martel, community organizer for the Centre d'hébergement hospitalier de Magog. "And we're very happy with the new format of the guide, which is thinner so people can hang it on their walls or closet doors, and it's easier to read."

The directory, which Martel says is the only one offered in any MRC in the Townships, is in its third year of production. Three thousand copies will be distributed for free to the 5,500 seniors in the region at senior's homes, caisses populaires Desjardins, agencies for the aged and the Francis Robert pharmacy. The guide was created at a cost of $5,200 by the Committee on services to seniors in the Memphrémagog MRC, and paid for by local advertisers and the Association for the defence of the rights of the retired and pre-retired.

Directory creators show off their finished product... Manon Thibault, director of the Rediker Centre, Louise Hébert, of the Carrefour de Partage de Magog, Annie Fortin, Transport des Alentour, Paul Martel, community organizer with the La Providence hospital, Angelle Laplume, of the Eastern Townships Citizen Advocacy, and Vicki May Ham, of the AQDR.

Expansion will allow new business opportunities

Staff

Drummondville's Rivalair has announced a $2 million investment which will see its plant modernized and the purchase of Pro Metal.

Rivalair specializes in the production, repair and treatment of metal parts destined primarily for recreational vehicles and household appliances. Along with its subsidiary Rivatex, the company employs 150 people.

Some $750,000 in investment money was put up by the Acces Capital Centre du Quebec and another $1.25 million by Rivalair Pro Metal. That plant specializes in piping and industrial mechanics and employs another 30 people.

"The acquisition of Pro Metal will allow Rivalair to grab on to new business opportunities," said Laury Harvey, director of the ACCQ.

Serge Morin, director general of Rivalair, called the investment "...an important vote of confidence in our business."

Important notice for tenants

Staff

The Régie du logement is reminding landlords and tenants that if they have leases running out on June 30, the deadline for notification of rent increases is March 31.

Prior to then landlords must inform their tenants, in writing, of any increases in the cost of rent and any other changes that would be added to the lease for the following year. The landlord must also notify the tenant that they have one month after receiving the notice to refuse the modification and announce that they are leaving at the end of the lease.

The notices must comply with the Quebec Civil Code. If not they could be void and the landlord would not have the right to change the cost or conditions of the lease.

Forms for notifying tenants and for tenant's responses can be picked up free of charge at your local office of the Régie du logement. They can also be downloaded from the Internet at www.rdl.gouv.qc.ca.

Part of the decline in sales for H.H. Brown has also been due to the increased presence of cheap footwear made in countries like China. Brennan said his company has felt it the most in the areas of work and safety footwear, which until recently was the almost exclusive domain of domestic manufacturers.

Last September cheap foreign footwear flooding the Canadian market was blamed for about 50 layoffs at the Greb plant in Acton Vale and the moving of some work to the Santana plant in Sherbrooke.

The administration of the company is not expected to be affected by the restructuring, Brennan said.

Brennan said the Richmond footwear factory hasn't been at full capacity since 1994. The slowdown in sales of the last year finally forced the company to reorganize.

"There comes a point when you have to say 'I don't need all of this capacity because it's not going to come back,'" he

Natural disaster forces sale of fourth-generation sugar bush

Farmer's outlook forever changed by ice storm

By Sylvia Warden

Disasters change people. Last January's ice storm no doubt left many Townshippers feeling differently about the land that surrounds them and the people who live next to them. For David Mastine the past year has seen many changes.

Mastine, a farmer in St-Felix-de-Kingsey, could only watch last January as millimetre upon millimetre of freezing rain pelleted down, encasing his sugar bush.

The sound of falling limbs was deafening. "All you could hear were snaps like shot guns going off," said Mastine, one year later.

Mastine knew there would be damage but the level of destruction was devastating. Forestry officials estimated 66 per cent of the bush's 3,200 taps were ruined.

"It was damaged so bad there was no way we could sugar this year," said Mastine. Those same forestry officials told Mastine it would take eight workers six weeks to clear the bush of all the fallen limbs. It took Mastine and his father 11 days just to clear the half-mile road from his farm house to the bush. The fourth-generation to sugar that patch of bush, Mastine said the decision to sell it was agonizing. "When you sit down with a pencil it was easy but when you think about it emotionally it was very hard."

Almost all of the 60-acre bush borders a river where Mastine and his three brothers and two sisters spent many summer days frolicking in the water, fishing and playing. He speaks in endearing terms about the bush, referring to it as more than a tool to yield profits but as a close friend or favoured relative. Mastine and his wife Erika sold many cans of syrup and pounds of maple butter from their front door.

Mastine took over running the sugar bush eight years ago, but said for as long as he can remember he has had something to do with it.

A year removed from the storm Mastine doesn't have to think long when answering what he remembers most about being without electricity for 16 days.

"The chores were endless," he said with a laugh. "Choring by flashlight doesn't work too well." In addition to the sugar bush, Mastine operated a sheep farm. During the 16 days without power 120 lambs were born. The barn's temperature and conditions had to be monitored constantly to make sure the animals remained healthy. Mastine said his herd came through almost unscathed.

"I only lost about a half-dozen lambs. It could have been worse." Gravity-fed water to the barn and his home eased some of the worry and put off the necessity for a generator. The family home was heated by a wood stove. "When we realized we needed one, you couldn't get your hands on one." A friend, whose own power returned, loaned the family his generator for the last four days.

"The first week we tolerated it well, but after that it was hard."

Sugaring is not usually a lucrative way for a farmer to earn a living, but Mastine said his "good quality product" accounted for about half of the family's income. A 300-head sheep farm makes up the rest.

"Sugaring is a lot more time consuming than people realize. It takes a lot of wood to boil syrup, almost 50 cords of wood."

Now Mastine has turned all his attention to expanding his sheep farm in order to replace income lost by the bush. With 80 mothers expected to lamb in the coming weeks, Mastine anticipates increasing his herd to 400 this year.

"In a bad year the average is 1.5 lambs apiece. In a good year, it's about 1.8."

Programs to help farmers recover have been slow to process claims. "We received no government compensation until two weeks ago so we lost a whole season." When the cheque finally arrived, Mastine said it covered about two and a half production seasons.

With the bush sold, Mastine remains optimistic the family will once again work that bush. He says perhaps his two-year-old son Callum could one day buy it back. "May be in forty years."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Interest in Record is widespread

DEAR EDITOR:

Sharon et al,
 Congratulations on your first post-fire editions. I've been following the news with much interest to find out what's been happening, and what's going to happen. I'm very heartened, though not surprised, to see the local concern for The Record. The very wide interest from outside the Townships has been especially interesting. In all your interviews and news reports, don't hesitate to promote that web site a little more; your days out of print left me searching unsuccessfully on the Internet. Also, we're all still wondering what caused the fire; any news?

I was very happy to see the letter from former colleague Dan Hawaleshka, and I'd appreciate it if you would send me his email address.

Good luck rebuilding!

Three wishes for Record

DEAR RECORD,

Congratulations on a great comeback! Something good comes out of every crisis: in this case, your move to Lennoxville is very good news. You have been coming into our homes for a long time, and it is only natural that you would move to the heart of the community that you serve. Let us make three wishes to the Record for the new year: a permanent move to this town, an even better coverage of local events, and a brand new printing press very soon!

Jane Irwin and Marc Bolduc, Lennoxville
 PS: We want a profile on Mrs. Evans!

Bon Courage

Salut,

Ancien Sherbrookoise (Polymédia, agence de publicité), je suis fort attristé de ce qui vous arrive. Je sais cependant que vous saurez surmonter cette épreuve pour revenir plus fort encore dans la mission qui est la vôtre : informer vos lecteurs.

Un Québec fort ne peut se construire que sur des minorités fortes, informées et heureuses de leur sort.

Et je suis heureux de constater que de nombreux Québécois de langue française non seulement travaillent chez vous, vous lisent et sont conscients de l'importance de votre existence, mais encore, qu'ils sont prêts à vous venir en aide pour que vos objectifs soient atteints.

Votre place au soleil est vôtre!

Il faut propager cet état d'esprit pour que tous, un jour, puissent s'épanouir et se réaliser pleinement.

Encore une fois bravo et bon courage!

Waiting til midnight for Record

DEAR EDITOR

As a former resident of Sherbrooke I think it is terrific to see the Record on line. I was sorry to hear about the fire you had, but can only hope that it will be something that will prove to be a benefit in disguise.

I am sure you will attract many people to your web site. I have met people who wait every night until midnight to check up on the next day's issue of their hometown paper via the web.

All the best to the whole crew for 1999.

What about archives?

DEAR EDITOR

Sorry to hear of the fire. Hope you get back in production soon. A lot of English residents of the Townships relied on the Record as their source of information and regional news.

The news of the fire came with irony for me. My parents will celebrate their 60th wedding anniversary this year, and I was trying to locate your WEB address to see about getting a copy of the August 12, 1939 (or closest date) edition on archive file. I fear now that the fire may have destroyed this. Could you please confirm your status?

What the heck happened?

DEAR EDITOR,

News of an explosion at the Sherbrooke plant made it all the way out here to Calgary...hope everything and everyone is all right and that the Record continues to publish....the news report I heard said there was some doubt as to whether the paper would come out. WHAT THE HECK HAPPENED?

Here's hoping all's well, safe and sound there.

Family in the Townships

DEAR EDITOR

I was sorry to read about the fire in my local paper but was glad to find out that you had a web site.

I still have family in the Townships and hear about different articles in your paper.

Hope the paper gets running again soon and I am bookmarking your web site.

DEAR EDITOR

It is with regret that the Eastern Townships Alzheimer Society learned about your misfortune but we know that you will come out of this tragedy stronger.

My family and I were happy to receive our copy of The Record on Wednesday since we are a subscriber of your paper now since last September. We truly enjoy reading the Record and we hope you will continue for a long long time your good work.

Ice Storm '98: A harrowing journey continues

By Susan C. Mastine

Jan. 10 - 9:30 p.m.

We've just returned from supper at Marilyn's and Lawrence's (my sister's in Shipton) - it was a harrowing trip there - very icy roads, but the temptation of a hot full-course meal, and the offer that we have showers there overcame our reservations. Mom and Dad (from Richmond) have been staying there since yesterday, Auntie Margaret and Ray (from Danville) since this a.m.

The landscape is mutilated everywhere. Hardwood trees look like the remnants of a forest fire with only three or four broken branches left in the air. Evergreens look glued - as though a giant child covered the branches with glue and pressed them next to the trunks. White birches are so laden the tops are bent over touching the ground. Eerie, spooky, and very sad-looking indeed - not a tree nor shrub seems untouched.

We returned via Danville and Kingsey falls. There are power lines down in many, many places, poles broken. When will we ever have electricity again??

It's now snowing, giving us some respite from falling sounds that threaten to shatter our nerves.

Luckily, the grocery store in Danville was open and we were able to buy some film and a few staples.

It's very cozy back home now with the wood fire and lots of candles lit and the boys playing music - Justin, his guitar and Adam alternating between the accordion and the piano. Is this the silver lining in these many storm clouds over so many days?

We've played lots of Monopoly, Scrabble, cards, memory games to help pass the time. The past two days, the boys have also gone sliding.

So far, the swing and the pheasant pen have survived.

As I was going through piles of papers today, I came across a note I'd made a while back about a spinster farmer who, it is said, once took incubating eggs to bed with her when the power went out and stayed in bed with them until they hatched!

Adam just told me about his male pheasant's ice-coated tail... (no visible harm caused).

Jan. 10

The crashing has decreased in frequency - now it's mostly ice falling.

Yesterday Russell had shovelled the ice chunks and tiny branches out of the driveway so we could get the car out. Today I went taking pictures and had to walk on 4-5 inches of ice chunks. A very odd experience, like walking on ice cubes!

Viewing the damage to the woods in the swamp and at the (sugar) camp is distressing. At first, we thought we wouldn't be able to sugar this year. In fact, Dad said to me last night, "Maybe you and I'll be out of a job this Spring." Now, I'm wondering if we'll ever sugar again. It will be surprising if Dad ever gets to sugar again, but, perhaps David's (formerly my Dad's) bush isn't as stricken.

The stress and distress we've been experiencing is far from minute. We had another break today, visiting Jim and Hélène (my brother in Windsor). The boys have stayed over, happy to have access to electricity and food that is hot.

Tomorrow Jim and Hélène will bring them back. We need to have others see and share and believe the immensity of this storm - the ice storm of 1998, the worst of the century it is being said.

Miraculously, the (lawn) swing has been spared, but what will become of the amputated trees and the plants that have lived in the shade....

Jan. 15

I went into work Mon., Tues., and Wed. The first two days I had my camera and wanted to take photos of the devastation in Mr. Deslandes's maple bush and pine plantation, the ice-coated page-wire fence along the road to St. Félix, and the power pole broken and on the side of the road in downtown St. Félix - but for some reason, I just couldn't take my camera out of the bag to focus and shoot.

Yesterday, when I got to the highway (255), Mr. Deslandes was photographing his house and the much-damaged woods behind it. I stopped the car, rolled down the window and chatted. I told him he had a lot of courage, that I had wanted to take photos but hadn't been able to. For 35 years, this man had nurtured his forest and plantation. Now he's having it clear-cut - "raser", as he put it.

Kindness abounds. Julie at The Record offered a team to come and help us do anything any time. Perhaps when it thaws and we start to pick up branches on the lawn and hill....

Comfort food has taken on a special significance during this disastrous week and a half. Heather Barrie was telling me this a.m. how delicious the macaroni casserole they cooked at her brother's last night was. 10-12 people are staying there. they are getting tired of barbecued meals and boiled the macaroni on the barbecue, cooking the hamburger in an electric frying pan run on a generator.

On Tues., Heather had taken laundry to her son Steve's apartment in Lennoxville, up four flights of stairs. In the midst of the washing, she found out that the rinse and spin cycles were broken in the upstairs machine. Then part way through its washing, a load of jeans in the basement machine came to a sudden stop due to the Lennoxville-Sherbrooke power outage. She had to wring the clothes out and take them back to Richmond and hang them in Bruce's basement to dry.

Jan. 17

The crisis caused by the ice storm continues. No power yet. The sunshine today is most welcome and will boost spirits that have grown taunt and weary.

CBC news (which just quoted the latest info from Hydro Quebec) has us off the map - there are still 266,000 clients without electricity - Laurentians, South Shore, and the Beauce. Now just where do Kingsey Falls, St. Félix, Danville, South Durham fit in? Richmond got its power back night before last, 40 percent of Danville the day before (Wednesday).

It's difficult to be sociable and energetic at this point. But the sun helps immensely as well as visits and calls. Two QPP officers and one of our councillors came by to see how we're coping and invited us to the school in Kingsey Falls for food and showers and an escape. We're going to Barb's for supper today. Last night she had sent a crockpot casserole (that kept warm) home with me from the Record's office.

Sun, showers and socializing are very important to us these days. The lack of light, and limited activity is hard on the morale.

Jan. 19

We put on a brave face and try to act as tho' all's well, but it's tough to be calm and patient, emotions are high, nerves tight. There are stories of more isolated areas not getting power back until Jan. 25 or Feb. 2.

Ricky Bushey brought us a generator two days ago - a few lights on for a few minutes in the evening makes a world of difference. Reading and writing via candlelight are nigh unto impossible.

Tonight the boys had their first showers at home since Jan. 7 - this thanks to the generator. Showers previously had to be taken at other locations.

Laundry has been done by Hélène except for two loads we put in at Barb's Sat. night past.

It is good to get out, but Russell and the boys have to pry me out against my will.

It's early to bed for all with no electricity

Jan. 20

It's early to bed every night for all of us with no electricity - yet I still feel very tired and unrested. It's hard to keep positive and in good humour. Today I called Marc Bolduc about lunch.... Strangely, he said that he had been unable to call us after he heard that the storm hit here - for fear of seeming to pity us - it's like the hesitation many have when someone is diagnosed with a serious illness or loses a loved one. The question "to call or not to call" most often is answered by inaction.

We've been surprised by some calls - as from Bertha Beard Beckwith who called from Woodstock and Barbara, Carolyn and Denyse calling almost daily. The non-calls also surprised me. No word from several friends.

Aunt Jean has called several times and Eddie Baker phoned last night at his dad's (Walter's) request.

The African violets continue to bloom beautifully and bountifully, unaware of the drama outside.

Still we have no power, although Hydro workers were by, marking where new poles are needed. Mailhots and Girardins (next door neighbors) got their electricity reconnected yesterday. (Relatives and friends in St. Felix), the hamlet of Trenholm and many country people are still in the dark.

There are people who have now been in shelters for two weeks and will have to wait another week or more for power - I cannot imagine the stress and difficulties they are going through.

Carolyn just called again and at the end of a very long conversation mentioned noting the number of trees that had bent completely over touching the ground on the other side versus those that had broken. One of life's lessons, she says, if you can't bend and be flexible, you break.

Our doorway is now serving as the fridge - the only place cool enough, yet not too cold to store milk, juice and cold meat for sandwiches. The ice cream in the freezer in the garage was getting soft so Russell put it in a coffee can and packed it in snow but it never refroze so we had soft, very soft ice cream for dessert.

I am writing by candlelight (of course) - nine candles of varying heights - the light is calming and the dripping wax intriguing. No two candles have the same drip pattern.

Jan. 22

Two weeks plus a day with no electricity - we've starting to get fed up. Marilyn and Lawrence are supposed to get their power back this p.m.

Russell drove me into work after problems getting the generator started - it was low on oil and he had to wait for the garage to open to get some.

Marc and Yves had a care package waiting for us - delicious cookies, three kinds of comfort food, yum! Especially the chocolate ones with rainbow speckles in the beautiful cookie tin. Also in the package were 12 'D' batteries. Yes! We can listen to the radio more often without fear (of killing the batteries) and if the flashlight continues to fade, we can make it bright again.

CBC radio has been asking people what the most memorable moment of the storm is - what answer would I give?

- the memorable Thursday 8th crashing
- calling CBC in the wee hours of the a.m.
- playing board games with the boys
- hot meals at the homes of relatives and friends
- meals on paper plates and paper towels
- warming food in our double stove oven
- melted wax from candles on the kitchen table and bathroom counter
- thawing out and keeping thawed the water pump for the barn via kerosene lanterns
- the icy sheen on everything in the landscape, even two weeks after the storm
- the CARE package of cookies and batteries?

I can't wait to run the vacuum cleaner

Jan. 23

A difficult drive home from work, lots of snow and wind. I tried to imagine how I'd spoil myself once the power comes back - take a long, lingering hot shower, have a session of watching favorite movies on the VCR - Pretty Woman, Out of Africa, Black Beauty, (snack food included) hide all the candles, make an easy Wok dish, have a party - maybe sometime in January years from now, we'll have a "no power" party with food prepared without electricity, no electric lights, etc. - but it won't be for awhile.

As I approached St. Felix, there were signs of hope for our power restoration. Three hydro trucks at the corner of Rte 243 into Bob's road, two in the village at the restaurant, one at the crossroad heading to Doug and Marion's.

I turned off 255 towards home and could only get a car length, onto the road - the snow plow blocked my path. It finally pulled ahead. Then, joy, oh joy, these were two Hydro trucks at home with new poles - there's hope!

We're planning changes due to this powerless life we've be living - buying a generator like the one Rick lent us, getting a kitchen style wood stove for the basement, keeping kerosene (which has been essential for lanterns put into the well to keep the barn's water pump from freezing) and 'D' batteries on hand.

I must think of a sign I can make so my co-workers know when we finally get our electricity back, something like this, maybe:

NO LONGER IN THE DARK

Jan. 24

It started as a short simple sortie to the box to get the newspapers - the Tribune with its front page story of the 15 Holsteins electrocuted in the Nelson's barn in Kingsbury yesterday a.m. I took my camera to take a shot of the low Hydro lines in front of the barn propped up with sticks wrapped in yellow and red ribbons marked 'DANGER.'

It was cloudy, yet refreshing. I began to wander, taking photos that I hadn't yet taken in the 48 exposures previously snapped - mostly because I hadn't had the heart.

Before I knew it, there were tears rolling down my cheeks, freezing below the corners of eyes and I was sobbing, feeling the pain of the ravaged trees, the strain put on maples, birches, beeches, lilacs, the butternut trees, the two oaks Russell's grandfather planted, many of which may not be able to recuperate - and the apple trees in the orchard.

Our optimism after yesterday's visit weekends, when there's day light - reading by candlelight strains my eyes. Pouring water out of a jug to wash our hands. No vacuuming. Using paper plates or paper towels instead of plates.

Instead of the sign I'd thought of designing when the lights come on, I'm thinking of what is appropriate for the moment:

- * No power yet
- * Powerless still
- * Without electricity for 17 days

by Hydro workers has plummeted. All's quiet today, there's no sign of wire or workers yet and it's almost noon. Spirits are low and while I was walking, I thought that maybe I should take one of the 'danger' ribbons and put it up on the front porch to warn visitors of low spirits and tense nerves.

Warmer temperatures and lots of birds at the feeders and in the centennial crab apple tree are a blessing. Russell has figured out a way to do a load of laundry using the generator.

The forecast is for freezing rain so we cannot accept Paulette's kind invitation to her home for showers, laundry, food and entertainment. It would have been a great boost to our spirits, too bad they live so far away.

Adjustments we've had to make are - no pancakes for breakfast, eggs rarely (scrambled once on the wood stove), no fridge - thus having to buy milk in 2 litre vs 4 litre jugs, so they will fit between the ?inside and outside kitchen doors along with orange juice. Cold meat for sandwiches is hung from a bag on the door knob. Little reading, except on

- * Day 17 and still counting
- * Hydroless, but not powerless
- * Power to the countryside!
- * Will someone please turn on the lights!
- * Farmers need power too
- * Rural folks need electricity for their livelihood, their sanity, their well-being
- * Power to the masses = power for people & farm animals

Jan. 27

Day 20 with no power - this deprivation is starting to take its toll - frazzled nerves and short fuses.

Those with electricity continue to offer showers and a place to sleep - Cathy Watson, Nancy Davidson, David, even a stranger - Elaine Macmillan from Bury.

What people don't realize is that what we really need are visits, telephone calls, hot meals, comfort food, help with laundry.

Jan. 28

Time to think of others struggling to keep it together as they enter their fourth week with no electricity....

Yesterday, at the shopping centre, I was stunned by my reaction at seeing racks of bathing suits in the mall. I had an impulse to knock them all over or rip them up. These brought images of sun, sand and carefree times and the finances to experience them - so far from our reality.

Jan. 30

Guess what - still no power!

Also at the shopping centre Wed. - there were t-shirts on sale with the French equivalent of "I survived the ice storm of '98". "Grrr," I thought, "- not yet."

Tonight I was in O'Donnell's hardware store with posters for the pot luck lunch. Lo and behold, (someone) implied that the storm and power outage were old news. Most people have no idea what it's like waiting to get electricity back - the juggling to get hot water for showers, to use water to flush, to do a load of laundry or to take a shower. Our diet is restricted because we have only the double stove and the barbecue. No baking is possible. Telltale signs of candle wax. The loud hum of the generator.

Oh for something light and delightful to write about! Memories of our trip to PEI?... When was life ever carefree?

Max (our dog) is still gone - he disappeared when I was on that walk last Saturday, with no sign or sound from him for almost a week now....

Jan. 31

There's hope, hope, hope! A small Hydro truck is working on our road pulling wires out of the snow. I spoke with one of the workers who said we'd get our power back today or tomorrow, probably tomorrow.

What a change that news makes in the depths of my soul. Sighs, deep sighs of relief emerge. I want to dance with joy! I can't wait to run the vacuum cleaner - whoever, thought that I'd be saying such a thing - and boil an egg, have Russell's or Adam's pancakes again! Hear the tension ease in our neighbors voices!

POWER'S BACK at 10 p.m.!

We have lights and hot running water electric heat and a functioning oven!

Store not profitable, Chapters says

Liquidation sale at Librairiesmith

By René Bruemmer
SHERBROOKE

Sherbrooke's English-language bookstore Librairiesmith will soon begin moving stock from its present location in the Carrefour de l'Estrie to a new spot in the mall for a three-month liquidation sale.

Regional manager André Boileau said yesterday the exact location was not yet known, but the temporary space should be open in about two weeks. The original store remains open through the weekend while stock is moved.

Parent company Chapters is still in negotiations with the mall to try and find a smaller, less expensive space within the shopping plaza, Boileau said. In the meantime they've signed a three-month lease to liquidate their stock.

Chapters announced last summer it would not renew its lease for its present location in the mall because it was no longer profitable. The bookstore chain said it wants to remain in the mall, but after five months nothing has been found.

The liquidation sale will include any stock that could not be returned to publishers or redistributed to other stores within the chain.

Long-horned beetle an expensive, dangerous pest

Canada bans bugged wood imports from China

By Ryan James
SUN MEDIA

Most of us don't like bugs. In fact, they're so unpopular that we usually call them "pests."

But for bugs like the Asian long-horned beetle, "pest" is an understatement.

Even though it's only three centimetres long, it poses a gigantic threat to Canada's $11-billion hardwood industry, including the nation's signature maple tree and maple syrup industry.

And that's why, starting tomorrow, tough new regulations aimed at keeping the beetle out of Canada go into effect which could wreak havoc among unprepared importers.

All wood-crated goods from China and Hong Kong must have a certificate of fumigation or risk being turned away, authorities say.

The beetles have wiped out entire forests in their native China and according to the Canadian Food Inspection Agency, it could happen here.

"The Asian long-horned beetle is the most serious threat to Canadian trees in a long time," said Ken Marchant, area program officer of the CFIA.

They make their homes by burrowing deep inside the trunks of hardwood trees.

"It lives there until the tree dies," said Warren Quan of Toronto Parks and Recreation.

And to make matters worse, their preferred host is one of our national icons — the maple tree.

An outbreak of the Asian long-horned beetle would cut into Canada's hardwood products industry, worth $11 billion annually; and our maple syrup industry, worth $100 million annually.

They're known to arrive in wooden packaging material from Chinese imports.

When the wood hits North American warehouses, the beetles can spread to nearby forests if they're not contained.

They burrow deep enough to keep away from pesticides. And with no natural predators, they're almost impossible to control once they spread.

The only way to deal with an outbreak is to keep it from getting even worse — by slashing and burning the affected area.

The Asian long-horned beetle made its first Canadian appearance last summer, when it was discovered in warehouses in Vancouver and southern Ontario.

They were contained before they could spread. But their mere presence caused the CFIA to take action.

Starting tomorrow, all wood cargo coming from China and Hong Kong must arrive with a certificate to confirm that it has been put through either heat or chemical fumigation.

Any wood crating from China or Hong Kong that has not been treated could be incinerated, and the cargo could be sent back at the cost of the importer.

Or, in some cases, uncertified cargo will be stripped, the wood fumigated on site and then allowed across the border.

"We'll apply some flexibility within the first month," said Judi Fingh, associate director of the forestry section of the CFIA.

The U.S. has passed similar legislation, after Asian long-horned beetles destroyed $5 million worth of trees in New York and Chicago.

The CFIA hopes to have the same control on imports from all other countries in the world by next year. They're taking it one step at a time — and China and Hong Kong are the first step.

"We have known for a while that some wooden packaging material from China tends to be low-quality," said Fingh. "We consider it to be the highest risk."

The directive was passed urgently in November, giving importers less than two months to comply before it came into effect.

According to Hong Kong authorities, it was too hasty a decision.

"We feel that there should be more talk," said Frank Chuan, chief information officer of the Hong Kong Economic and Trade Office.

He says that the Asian long-horned beetle is not at all present in Hong Kong, or the southern Chinese provinces surrounding it.

The wood packaging used by Hong Kong exporters comes mainly from these southern provinces, so Chuan says there is no cause for alarm when it comes to Hong Kong wood.

"Hong Kong is not a risk," he said. "It should not be included in this legislation."

Other authorities feel that the CFIA was generally fair in dealing with importers, but echoed some of the same sentiments.

"We're concerned that the smaller Asian importers are unaware of the directive," said Melissa McCormack, director of trade committees and publications of the Canadian Importer's Association.

The group has published articles and sent memos to its members to let them know what is expected of them under the directive.

Robert Armstrong, president of the Canadian Importers' Association, met several times with the CFIA to discuss the matter before the directive was passed.

"We tried to make sure that importers' interests are best represented," McCormack said. "We expect about a 75% compliance rate," said the CFIA's Fingh.

And in case some of the beetles are able to burrow through the border, local officials will be ready.

"We haven't seen anything yet," said Toronto Parks and Recreation's Quan. "But we're training all our staff to identify the beetle. That's the first step."

The Record: Happy to be back

Kentucky fried rats and naked unconscious men in Superman capes

The power and the myth behind urban legends

By Sharon Oosthoek
SUN MEDIA

A group of AIDS-infected dance club patrons is making the rounds of Hamilton bars armed with syringes filled with their own blood, sneaking up behind fellow club-goers and pricking them with the needles.

Okay, everybody relax. The most important thing to know about this story is that it's not true, it's an urban legend - the kind of yarn that spreads faster than gossip around the office water cooler.

Urban legends, otherwise known as FOAFs (friend-of-a-friend stories), are the horrible things that always seem to happen to your hairdresser's friend's brother's accountant.

Whether it's the one about the Kentucky fried rat, the naked, unconscious man in the Superman cape or the lover's lane madman, we can't seem to get enough of them.

"Urban legends appeal to two great instincts," says David Mikkelsen, who along with his wife Barbara, runs a California-based Website cataloguing legends (www.snopes.com/).

We always want interesting stories to tell people and we like being quite adept at telling people they're wrong."

It turns out there's more to urban legends than you might think. They play on our deepest fears and warn us against risky behaviours by pointing out what supposedly happened to others who did what we might be tempted to try.

Think of them as mini morality plays. "It shows people are plenty frightened about a lot of things. We wouldn't be making up stories about innocently contracting AIDS if we weren't afraid," says Mikkelsen.

The AIDS pinprick legend obviously speaks to our fear of contracting the virus, but more than that, it's a warning against the assumed loose morals associated with the club scene.

Spectator crime reporters take several calls a month from people who insist a friend of a friend was pricked with an AIDS-infected needle at a local club.

Alleged victims vanish when reporters try to verify the facts.

Hamilton-Wentworth police, who also receive their share of such calls, say there's nothing to it.

Still, the story won't die. Memorial University folklorist Mikel J. Koven says the pinprick legend is just as popular in the bars of St. John's, Newfoundland as it is in the clubs of Hamilton. Koven, who teaches urban legends as part of his folklore class, says the story is doing the rounds all over North America.

But where there's smoke, sometimes there's fire.

In this case, the legend's credibility is bolstered by news stories about kids jokingly stabbing classmates with needles and robbers threatening victims with loaded syringes.

Combing through back issues of newspapers, magazines and old news videos, the Mikkelsens have done the research on this one. What they found was that for a few weeks in the fall of 1989, a group of black teenagers terrified New Yorkers by running about randomly jabbing pins into the necks of 41 white women. News reports repeatedly suggested the pins were tainted with AIDS.

When the teens were arrested about a week later, police discovered there was no basis to reports of the AIDS virus being part of the attacks. It was just a fun game to run up to a white woman, stick her with a pin, see her reaction, then run off.

While the pinprick story is a new kid on the block when it comes to urban legends, The Bloody Hook is a granddaddy. It's one that almost anyone who was ever a teenager will remember.

"It was the very first one I ever heard," recalls Mikkelsen. "My sister told it to me when I was a little kid. The hook would make it today. The ones that stick in your mind are the ones that are scary or funny."

For the uninitiated, it goes something like this: a teenage couple parks on a dark country road to listen to the radio and fool around. Suddenly, the music is interrupted by an announcer who says there is an escaped convict in the area who has served time for rape and murder. He is described as having a hook instead of a right hand.

The girl, frightened, insists on being driven home immediately. The boy, frustrated, floors the accelerator and takes off.

When they arrive at the girl's home, the boy goes around to open the car door for her only to discover a bloody hook hanging from the door handle.

This grisly gem has been making the rounds for decades. It even appeared in a 1960 Dear Abby column.

The moral here of course is that teens shouldn't have sex. But more than that, it is because the girl cuts the necking short that the couple is saved - it's up to the girl to apply the brakes.

University of Toronto sociologist Walter Podilchak, a specialist in popular culture, says such legends serve to reinforce existing social structure which blames women for sexual seduction.

"The hierarchies in society are re-legitimized in the re-telling of the story," he says.

But it's also possible the story was prompted by real life murders of amorous teenagers. Certainly the people of Texarkana, a city straddling the border of Arkansas and Texas, can be forgiven for warning their young people about the dangers of backseat shenanigans.

In 1946, townsfolk were horrified by a series of grisly lover's lane killings.

News stories about those events probably mutated into cautionary tales against parking and petting. And like a game of "telephone" in which the event is embellished in each new telling, the hook eventually became part of this chilling tale.

Horror of course is fertile ground for such stories and the recently-released movie Urban Legend helped resurrect some of our more terrifying tales.

In the movie, a series of murders are deliberately planned to re-enact famous urban legends. To wit, a female motorist grows frightened when the fellow who runs the gas pumps tries to lure her inside the station. She hits him over the head and escapes back to her car - too late for him to warn her there's an axe murderer hiding in the back seat.

In an unsavoury twist to this particular tale, the axe murder is usually said to be black.

"Telling the story can be a way of agreeing with prejudice while not openly admitting it," notes Mikkelsen.

Then there are the legends that say more about how certain groups view themselves rather than how they view others.

Koven points to stories about the large number of babies supposedly conceived during last winter's debilitating ice storms in Northern Ontario. Koven maintains that whether more babies were in fact conceived during the storm is not as interesting as what the story says about people living in Northern Ontario.

"In an area devastated by an ice storm, with no power, no heat, no light, these sturdy Ontarians made the best of a bad situation and made sweet loving."

It says when the going gets tough, we know how to make a bad situation bearable," says Koven.

That the story places these sweet loving couples in Ontario and not Quebec, where the effects of the ice storm were just as devastating, intrigues Koven, though he has yet to develop a theory to explain the oversight.

But he says that when it comes to urban legends, regional variations abound.

The AIDS Mary story is a case in point.

The standard yarn is about a young man who meets a woman in a bar and brings her home. The couple enjoy an incredible night of lovemaking but when the man wakes in the morning, the woman is gone.

He goes to the bathroom but is stopped dead in his tracks when he sees written in lipstick across the mirror "Welcome to the world of AIDS."

The Newfoundland variation on this story has two young women who save up for years for a once-in-a-lifetime trip to Florida. The one falls in love with a local man and after a whirlwind courtship he proposes marriage.

Convinced this is the man for her and secure in the knowledge they will be married, the woman agrees to spend her last night in Florida with him. The next day, he gives her a small box and tells her not to open it until she gets home.

The woman can't contain her excitement and she opens the box on the plane.

Inside, she finds a tiny wooden coffin inscribed with, you guessed it, "Welcome to the world of AIDS."

Koven says it is a story that speaks volumes about Newfoundlanders.

"This was a good girl. She didn't do anything wrong. When she did decide to give up her virginity, they were going to be married. AIDS entered Newfoundland from without. It's not our fault. It exonerates Newfoundlanders," says Koven.

Then of course there are the kind of stories we tell each other because . . . well, because they're really gross. Like the one known in urban legend circles as La Cucaracha.

It's about a poor, unsuspecting girl who eats a chicken soft taco at Taco Bell with disastrous results. A few hours after her meal, she notices her jaw is tight and swollen. By morning, the swelling is much worse and she goes to her doctor who diagnoses it as an allergic reaction and gives her cream.

She can hardly move her jaw after a couple days and her doctor runs some tests on tissue samples from the inside of her mouth.

The tests confirm that the girl has swallowed a pregnant cockroach along with her taco. The eggs have worked their way into her saliva glands and she is incubating them in her mouth.

The girl's doctor removes a couple of layers of her inner mouth to get all the eggs out - just in time to discover the eggs are close to hatching.

Again, the Mikkelsens say they have looked into this one and pronounce it unfounded. Whether it's a yarn about Kentucky fried rats or McDonald's hamburgers containing worm meat, almost all large fast food chains have been the target of such legends.

"We're supposed to take this as yet another warning about the lurking dangers of fast food prepared by faceless automatons working for monolithic corporate chains. To wit, the lack of attention and cleanliness allows icky bug stuff to get into our food," the Mikkelsens write on their Web site.

Those of you who have been taken in by such stories may find some comfort in the knowledge that even science is not immune to urban legends.

Winning streak needed to finish at top of QUBL Gaiter women look for sweep in b-ball action at home

By Mike Hickey
SPECIAL TO THE RECORD
LENNOXVILLE

The women's team will not be satisfied with anything less than a sweep of Carleton and Ottawa. They finished the first semester of play with a 2-3 league record and head coach Rod Gilpin knows the Gaiters must put a winning streak together if they hope to finish in first place in the Quebec University Basketball League. "We played a tough league schedule in November with away games against Laurentian and Toronto," Gilpin explained. "We have four home games in a row against teams that we should beat, that we need to beat if we want to be one of the better teams in the country."

The Gaiters are coming off one of their strongest games of the season, a decisive 71-53 exhibition win over the Saskatchewan Huskies last Saturday at the Mitchell Gymnasium.

Neither the Gee-Gees or the Ravens boast a line-up that compares with the Gaiters, but the Gaiters have suffered letdowns in the past when playing less talented teams.

"Over the last four years we have improved to the point where we feel that we are potentially one of the better teams in the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union," Gilpin said. "To be a top team we need to separate ourselves from the weaker teams. If we really are among the CIAU's elite then we will win the next six games. We want to go into the Laurentian game on a seven game winning streak."

Angie Smith, a second-year post from Ottawa, agrees with Gilpin's assessment of the team's progress.

"In the past we had a tendency to look past teams like Ottawa and Carleton," said Smith. "But our focus for this weekend has been good and we are ready to play some good basketball."

After this weekend the Gaiters will host McGill, winless in league play, and Concordia next Friday and Saturday. The Stingers are presently in first place in the QUBL.

Ruiter may be ready to play Gaiters host Ravens, Gee-Gees this weekend

By Mike Hickey
SPECIAL TO THE RECORD
LENNOXVILLE

The Bishop's University men's and women's basketball teams return to league play this weekend as they host the Ottawa Gee-Gees Friday night and the Carleton Ravens Saturday. The women's games will start at 6 p.m. both nights, followed by the men's contests at 8 p.m.

For head coach Eddie Pomykala the two games represent an opportunity for the Gaiters to get back on the winning track. Bishop's returned Wednesday from Nova Scotia where they finished fourth in the Rod Shoveller Tournament. Despite the 1-2 record Pomykala felt the Gaiters gained some valuable lessons playing against some of the better university teams in Canada.

"Everyone wants to win but a coach has to be concerned about player development and the overall picture," Pomykala explained. "We learned a lot this weekend but sometimes learning can be painful. When a team is used to success it is hard to lose two games in a row the way we did in Halifax. But as Jack Donohue used to say 'failure is the first step towards success'."

It shouldn't be a walk in the park for the Gaiters since both Ottawa and Carleton have powerful line-ups. The Gee-Gees will field a team with four players 6'8" or taller, while Carleton's Brian Leonard is one of the top players in the country and a former member of the Canadian National Student Team.

The Gaiters are hopeful that forward Kris Ruiter will be available for the weekend games. The 6'5" veteran suffered a knee injury Nov. 20 and has been in rehab since. He practices with the team for the first time Wednesday but his condition remains uncertain day-to-day.

"I am very anxious to get back playing and helping my teammates on the court," Ruiter stated.

"For the last five days I have been putting in 3-5 hours a day on therapy with Steve King with the aim of playing this weekend. Personally I would like to be able to dress tonight and be able to get 10-15 minutes of playing time," said a hopeful Ruiter.

Canucks dominate scoring, all stars at juniors

There's nothing wrong with Canadian-style game

By Al Strachan
SUN MEDIA
WINNIPEG

If you listen to the critics, you'll be told that Canada's overtime loss in the world junior hockey championship can be attributed to a lack of skill.

What else could they say? They've been writing for so long that Canadian hockey is in terrible shape that they have to continue with the charade, even though anyone who watched the tournament with an open mind knows this is not the case.

If Canadian hockey is so lacking in skill, then how is it that Canada earned half the spots on the all-star team? Ten teams share six spots, and three of them go to Canadians.

NO SKILL?

Two of those three, by the way, Brian Campbell and Daniel Tkaczuk, are from Ontario, the most maligned of all provinces when it comes to hockey programs.

If Canadians are so lacking in skill, how did they nail down five of the top 17 spots in the scoring race? The noble Swedes, at whose knees we are supposed to grovel in the hope that they'll teach us some of their dazzling artistry, had three scorers in the top 17.

The Americans, creators of the program that the critics hold up as a model for Canadians to emulate, had two - on the way to an eighth-place finish. The defending-champion Finns had one. And the Russians, who played extremely well in the championship game and knocked off a tired, battered Canadian team, had three.

At the other end of the rink, Canada's Roberto Luongo was the best goaltender in the tournament.

So what the critics want you to believe is that even though Canada dominated the all-star team and the scoring race, even though they have the best offence and the best goaltending, they were beaten because they lack skill.

Conveniently ignored in this argument is the fact that five more allegedly skill-challenged products of our junior system happened to be unavailable because they were too valuable to the National Hockey League teams for which they play.

Is it that unreasonable to believe that with five NHLers added to the roster, Canada might have managed to beat Russia instead of losing in overtime?

The Canadian system is not perfect. It does have some flaws. What organization of that size doesn't? And in any large organization, there is always room for remodelling and reshaping.

No one is suggesting the system is above criticism. But at the same time, it doesn't deserve the degree of criticism it has received. It doesn't deserve the mountains of abuse that have been heaped on it over the past year because of two out-of-character results - the eighth-place finish by the juniors in Helsinki and the fourth-place finish by the Olympic team in Nagano.

In hockey, as in any sport, results are cyclical. A team moves to the top; others examine the way in which it became successful and adopt the formula.

The Finns were world champions last year. This year, they didn't make it to the medal round.

But everywhere except Canada, the Canadian system is recognized as the one worthy of study, whether our team has won that year or not. This year, every country but one sent its teams to North America early to follow the Canadian training-camp formula.

When it comes to technology, player development and teaching, Canada is acknowledged by all the other countries as the world leader. But not in Canada.

If some individual stars are developed in other countries, is that necessarily a cause for major concern? Russia has a population of 175 million and a long-standing hockey tradition. Naturally, it is going to produce some stars.

61 PER CENT OF ALL NHLERS ARE CANADIAN

"Yes, but they're not sufficiently skilled," say the critics, as they trot out selected statistics. But the ability to play with heart and courage is also a hockey skill, one that is fully appreciated by those who not only write about the game but also understand it.

Canada lost on Tuesday to a team that was better on that night, a team that had arrived at the gold-medal game by an easier road. With a bit of extra rest, Canada probably would have won, but they didn't. They lost in overtime.

They were beaten up and battered and they simply ran out of gas. But the heart was there. The desire was there. The pride was there. And, the skill was there, too.

Megantic County W.I. holds semi-annual meeting

The semi-annual meeting of Megantic County W.I. was held on Nov. 25th in the Kinnear's Mills Community Hall.

The president, Audrey Allan opened the meeting and everyone repeated the Collect, Salute to the Flag and Oath of Citizenship. There were six members from Kinnear's Mills and four from Inverness. Audrey read a poem, entitled Tea. The secretary, Mildred Robinson read the minutes of the last meeting. Anniversary cards and pictures were circulated. It was reported that three pupils from Thetford Mines School had won prizes in the W.I. Essay Contest. It was moved by Margaret Dempsey and seconded by Natalie Wintler that a book be given to the school in recognition. Mildred Robinson agreed to carry this out. This year the Education Convener was appointed to look after competitions. It was moved by Audrey and seconded by Pauline that a donation be made for the filing cabinet. Audrey displayed the Quebec Tartan, which is recommended for Scottish costumes for the year 2003.

Donations for Willows Project must be turned in by February.

Some W.I. members from Kinnear's Mills had attended an Institute meeting in Bury. Pauline Nutbrown explained the jewellery cleaning demonstration, which they had observed. A delicious lunch and pleasant conversation had been enjoyed.

Margaret Dempsey reported having conducted a fund-raiser for the month of October. Ice storm donations are to be sent to Morgan Aboratum. The annual convention will be held on May 13th and 14th, 1999.

For W.I. in Community, 2000 magnets are to be sold for millennium. The roll call at next board meeting is to be one new member. The Novisi Porject, consisting of a new formula, designed for weaning mothers in Ghana, was introduced.

County Treasurer, Helen Lowry gave her report and took up the collection. It was moved by Mildred Robinson and seconded by Natalie Wintler that a donation of $25.00 be given to the county. Mildred won the drawing. A nominating committee comprising of Lois Marshall and Pauline Nutbrown was appointed to draw up the slate of officers for 1999. Audrey closed the meeting with the following poem:

You have brains in your head,
You have feet in your shoes.
You can steer yourself
Any direction you choose.

The Kinnear's Mills ladies then served a delicious lunch.

Lois Marshall
County Publicity Convener

Golden Agers hold Xmas party

On Dec. 9 the Danville Golden Age held its annual Christmas Party. When people entered St. Augustine's Church Hall you were greeted by lovely piano music by Jack Hobbs.

Approximately 80 people ventured out that night enough thought we were getting our first very light dusting of snow.

Barbara and Doug Livingstone, along with her elves, Sue and Charlie Coburn, Isabel Mosher and Annette Mercier put on a lovely buffet supper, consisting of turkey, ham, salads, meat pie, rolls and the choice of apple or raisin pie.

Door prizes were donated by different business in Danville as well as some of the guests. Door prizes were won by Enid Goodfellow, Jack Hobbs, Laurent Girard, Annette Mercier, Mme. Marchand, Rev. Ruth Matthews, Rusty Carr, Jeanne Girard, Ethel Mastine, Kaye Brock, Mr. Boucher, Mavis Frost, Mildred Carr, Joyce Perkins, Ray McMorine, Marie Demers, June Lodge, Bonnie Laxson, Charlie Coburn, Marion McCallister, George Horan, Lil McMorine, Betty McKenna, Dorothy Perkins, Pauline Pellerin, Mme. Leroux M. Leroux, Dorothy Lockwood, Aleta Cleveland, Eileen Wadleigh, Joan Brotzman, Margaret Blake, Roland Mayette, Alfred Perkins, Bob Allen, Mrs. Rioux, Helen Healy, Therse Noble, Mme. Boucher, Vraig Brown, Ronnie Evans, Dorothy Evans, Freda Perkins, Janet Gillim, Dorothy Frost, Simone Girard, David Brown, Don Millen, Ernie Lockwood, Ron McDougall, Pearl Goodenough, Douglas Livingstone, Richard St. Dizier, Evelyn Leet, Roy Carson.

On December 11 Golden Rule Lodge #13 celebrated their Christmas party at the A.D.S. Elementary School.

Approximately 40 people attended. Carl Horan gave the blessing and everyone sat down to a delicious turkey supper that Dorothy Bushey accompanied by her elves, Roy and Ricky Bushey and Hazel Pezzi, had worked very hard at preparing for everyone. Speeches were given by Past Noble Grand Don Campbellton, and Noble Grand Edwin Baker.

Tickets were sold for a half and half. Half of the proceeds went to the Community Welfare. Congratulations goes to Carl Horan who was the lucky winner of the other half.
