Flashing light unseen by high-speed boaters

After dark hit-and-run causes Brome Lake drowning

By Charles Bury

BROME LAKE — One man drowned and another was rescued by witnesses late Saturday after a late-night hit-and-run collision between two boats on Lake Brome.

The boat the victims were fishing in was rammed by a larger motorboat whose driver apparently failed to see their lantern or hear their warning shouts.

Neither victim was wearing a life jacket, police said.

Dead is Réjean Foisy, 49, of Ville d'Anjou, owner of a cottage on Rock Island Bay. Foisy's son Michel, 22, is in a state of nervous shock after he narrowly escaped death when he was pulled from the water by witnesses.

The victims were apparently fishing from a small boat powered by an electric motor off Maple Lodge on Rock Island Bay at about 10:45 p.m. Saturday when they heard a more powerful boat approaching at high speed.

"They took their lantern, which had a flasher going on it, and waved it back and forth while they shouted to attract the attention of the bigger boat," Brome Lake Chief of Public Safety Jean Grenier said in an interview Sunday.

"When it got close and they saw they were going to be hit, the Foisys jumped out," Grenier said. "The father couldn't swim. He drowned."

"There were some people having a campfire along the shore," Grenier said. "They heard the boat coming, saw the light, heard the crash and heard the screaming after the boats hit. Some of them went to call in an alarm, while others went out to rescue the Foisys and one went after the other boat, which did not stop."

"It was a hit and run," Grenier said.

"The citizens rescued the son," Grenier said, "but the father had already gone down."

FIREMEN RECOVER BODY

Volunteer firemen Dave Dawes and Jim Trihorn rushed to the scene with the Brome Lake Public Safety rescue boat. "They went out to try and rescue the victim," Grenier said, "but they ended up pulling his body out."

Grenier said the fishermen's flashing lantern, lying on the bottom of the lake, led the firemen to Foisy's body. "It was still going strong after about an hour in 12 feet of water," he said.

Ministers can't agree on key issues of spending, Quebec

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and the 10 premiers head back to the bargaining table this week to untangle a snag that developed when their officials couldn't agree on a final draft text of the Meech Lake constitutional accord.

Federal and provincial officials ended talks Saturday with an incomplete version of the wording they were supposed to submit Tuesday to the first ministers' meeting here.

Instead, the leaders will be given a series of options in two key sections of the accord — one recognizing Quebec as a distinct society and other limiting federal spending power in provincial jurisdictions.

"The officials weren't mandated to negotiate," chief federal negotiator Norman Spector told reporters after Saturday's day-long session ended in an impasse.

"But what this allowed us to do was to reduce to a minimum the number of issues where there were ambiguities."

The setback capped a week of growing opposition to the tentative pact, led by former prime minister Pierre Trudeau, who attacked the accord designed to bring Quebec into the Constitution.

ECHOED PUBLICLY

His scathing indictment of the deal as an attempt to divide Canada and strip federal powers in key areas was soon echoed publicly.

Eugene Forsey, a leading constitutional expert and former senator, has backed Trudeau's call for more discussion and debate about the Meech Lake accord. In an essay in today's Toronto Globe and Mail, Forsey said there must be "unhurried public discussion and debate" on the accord to prevent Canada from "landing in a bog we can never escape." He said the accord has ambiguities that could be dangerous unless cleared up.

Prominent social lobby groups, led by the Canadian Council on Social Development, said the accord would permanently change the balance of power between the federal and provincial governments and lead to the erosion of national social programs.

But Senator Lowell Murray, minister for federal-provincial relations, said in a statement published Saturday the agreement "will reinforce the attachment of all Canadians, including Quebecers, to the institutions and values that form the foundation of the Canadian federation."

In the government's rebuttal to Trudeau's claims, Murray said the accord will bolster the "fundamental unity" of the country.

Ottawa and the provinces still have some tough hurdles to overcome in efforts to seal the deal.

Problems requiring attention by the premiers this week include Quebec's desire for a so-called judicial guarantee of the distinct-society clause, Spector says.

And Quebec Liberal Premier Robert Bourassa has called a special cabinet meeting in Quebec City to consider the constitutional question before meeting his provincial colleagues Tuesday.

Bourassa said Sunday the province wants to make sure its cultural security won't be jeopardized by a court interpretation of the wording in the final accord.

Manitoba's NDP premier, Howard Pawley, has expressed concerns that the accord must be clarified so provinces opting out of national social programs can receive federal compensation only if provincial programs meet national standards. But on Saturday, he applauded the greater powers given to the provinces on native affairs.

Bomb rips through helicopter killing Lebanese PM Karami

BEIRUT (AP) — An bomb explosion ripped through a military helicopter today, killing Prime Minister Rashid Karami and wounding several others on board, a presidential palace source said.

The source, speaking on condition of anonymity, told The Associated Press arrangements were being made to take the body of the 66-year-old veteran prime minister, a Sunni Moslem, from a hospital in Byblos north of Beirut.

Military sources said the bomb was concealed in an attache case under Karami's seat and went off as he was travelling to Beirut from a 10-day stay at his summer residence in Bqaa Sefrine, about 100 kilometres north of the capital.

The military sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Interior Minister Abdulla Rassi, a Christian, suffered "critical wounds" in the mid-morning explosion.

SUFFERS WOUNDS

Maj. Antoine Bustani, pilot of the stricken Puma helicopter, suffered minor wounds but managed to make a forced landing at the Halat military airbase in the Christian heartland north of Beirut, the sources said.

Karami, Rassi and the other victims were rushed to Saint Martin hospital in neighboring Byblos, 30 kilometres north of Beirut, the sources said.

Radio reports said President Amin Gemayel, a Christian, went to the hospital and ordered an "immediate investigation to determine the cause of the explosion."

Karami, who became prime minister for the 10th time in April 1984, said last month he was resigning because of the failure of his half-Christian, half-Moslem cabinet to deal with Lebanon's economic crisis brought on by 12 years of civil war.

However, he later said he would not submit his resignation to Gemayel as required by the constitution, and the president refused to accept it.

He had refused to talk to Gemayel ever since the president scuttled a Syrian-brokered peace plan for Lebanon in December 1985.

Weiner gets flack on new immigration bill

MONTREAL (CP) — Opponents of the federal government's proposed legislation on refugees gave Gerry Weiner, the junior immigration minister, a rough time at a weekend meeting of a national refugee support group.

Weiner told a meeting of the Canadian Council for Refugees that the bill introduced May 5 in Parliament isn't perfect "and that's why we are having public discussions to get the necessary amendments."

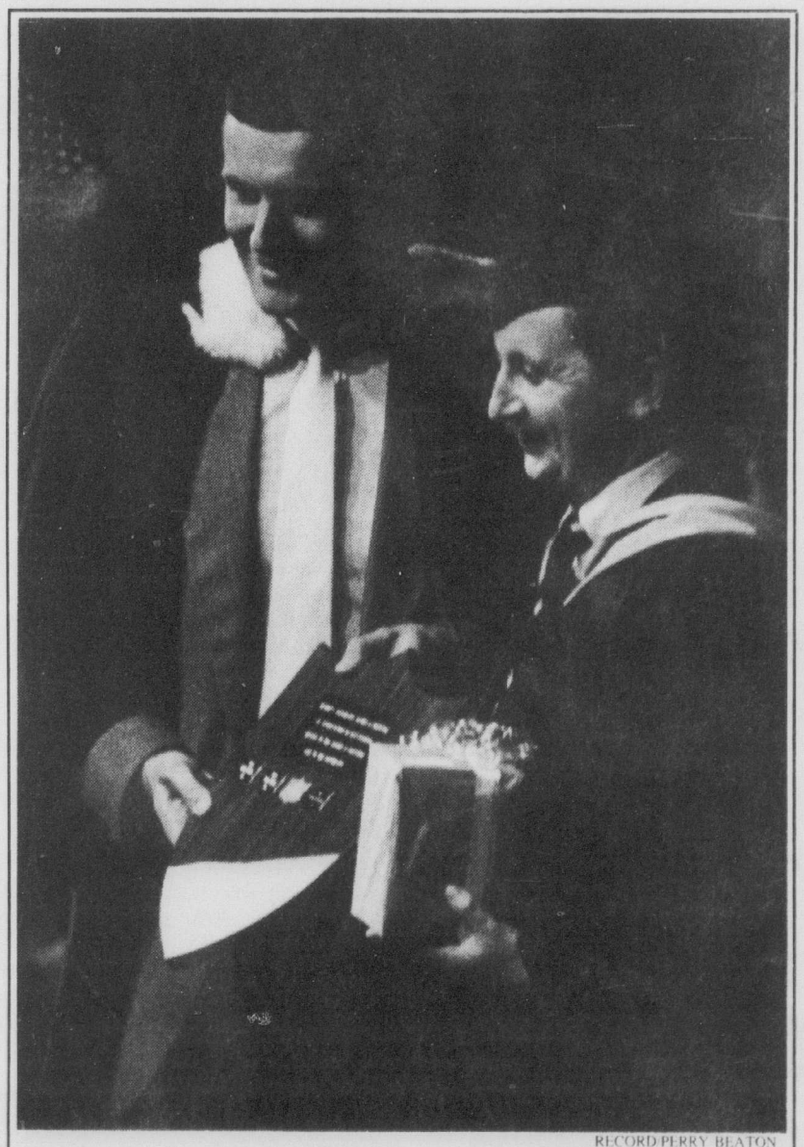

He said the government wants an equitable system that would handle refugee applications more quickly, and Canada would not send any refugee back to a country where that person's life would be in danger.

But his repeated insistence that the legislation is aimed at helping genuine refugees drew an angry response, as many of the 150 people at the Saturday meeting spoke out one after another against the bill.

Members of the group — which included observers from Britain, the United States, West Germany and the Netherlands — reminded Weiner of the encouraging terms he used when he spoke to the council last fall in Winnipeg.

Under the bill, claimants coming from a country where they had refugee status or a reasonable chance to get it will be turned away.

When Weiner rose to leave without making any other comment the audience began singing the civil rights anthem, We Shall Overcome.

Deal must guarantee cultural security — Bourassa

MONTREAL (CP) — Quebec wants assurance that its cultural security won't be jeopardized by a court interpretation of the Meech Lake constitutional accord, Premier Robert Bourassa said Sunday.

He said Quebec can't afford to take chances with its cultural survival in view of the province's declining birth rate and the minority status of the French language in North America.

Bourassa, in his weekly broadcast on the Radiomutuel network, said Quebec has no intention of reopening the agreement-in-principle reached by Ottawa and the provinces April 30 at Meech Lake, Que.

"Quebec simply wants to be assured, among other things, that its cultural security cannot be affected by an eventual interpretation by the courts of the new constitutional arrangements.

"The accord is clear on that point but drawing up a legal text which will provide security for the future is a technically demanding task," he told the French-language network's listeners.

Bourassa, who plans to attend a meeting in Ottawa Tuesday between Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and the premiers, has said he won't sign unless the deal lives up to the Meech Lake principles.

Bourassa said the Meech Lake pact recognizes Quebec as a distinct society and he hopes that the accord will enable Quebec to regain its place as a major partner in the Canadian Confederation.

Government still won't divert civil service pensions

OTTAWA (CP) — A national feminist group is demanding immediate reforms to pension rules covering federal civil servants after an Ottawa woman was denied a share of her ex-husband's pension even though she has an Ontario court order.

"There is a real loophole here," said Louise Dulude of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, an umbrella group representing dozens of women's organizations.

"The only solution is for the government to change the legislation so that women can get their share of pensions without having to go to court or hire lawyers." Federal officials confirm that pension diversion rules affecting the pensions of 180,000 retired public service, military and RCMP personnel haven't kept up with family law reform in many provinces.

The rules recognize court orders for support, maintenance and alimony, but not those that divide the family assets.

The 47-year-old Ottawa woman, who asked not to be identified, stayed at home for 24 years to raise three children while her husband was in the armed forces. Her divorce last spring was among the first to be considered under new Ontario family law legislation that calls for the division of family assets, including pensions.

She got a court order in July 1986 awarding her almost half the pension benefits of her former husband.

But he has refused to pay the $471 per month. And despite several hearings, the courts have been unable to get the man to pay or the federal government to divert a portion of his pension payments.

"I thought all my problems were settled when I got the court order," the woman says. "But I've been at complete standstill for the last 10 months."

Federal legal experts say the women's only recourse is to seek her share of pensions through traditional court orders for support, alimony or maintenance payments.

But Dulude said it is ridiculous to have women exercise their property rights under provincial law and then ask judges to turn back the clock so that the asset is turned into a support payment.

Lt. Col. Michel Crowe, who handles the legal affairs involved in diverting military pension benefits under court support orders, said he receives several phone calls monthly from across the country about asset division. He said most calls refer to British Columbia, which has had asset-splitting legislation the longest among the provinces.

Iran attack considered as Reagen proposes increased Gulf patrol

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pentagon officials are planning a larger U.S. naval presence in the Persian Gulf as President Ronald Reagan tries to avert a showdown with a skeptical Congress over his proposal to protect Kuwaiti oil tankers from Iranian attack.

Defence Department officials said they are making plans to move an aircraft carrier and an advanced Aegis cruiser into the gulf region, but neither Reagan nor his aides have said exactly what steps they would take if Iran attacks vessels sailing under U.S. protection.

The prospect of such an attack is causing concern in Congress, where bills are expected to be passed this week requiring Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger to report within seven days on Reagan's plan to put U.S. flags and captains on 11 Kuwaiti tankers and to defend the vessels.

Reagan's aides said he would sign the bills, thereby averting for the time being formal invocation of the War Powers Act. That act, passed in 1973 after the Vietnam War, curbs the president's powers to send troops into conflict.

ESCORT VESSELS

While the first of the Kuwaiti tankers could sail under the U.S. flag as early as Wednesday, Assistant Defence Secretary Richard Armitage said the the navy would not begin escorting the vessels for several weeks.

Talks are to start soon with Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Bahrain and friendly Arab states for landing rights for additional U.S. fighters, tanker aircraft and surveillance planes, Pentagon sources said. But the sources, speaking only on condition they not be named, said there is little optimism for success.

One source said on Saturday the Pentagon is drawing up plans for a "significant" U.S. naval presence in the gulf, augmenting the half-dozen light destroyers and frigates there now with the Aegis-class cruiser and an aircraft carrier to be stationed in the Gulf of Oman to the south.

Also envisioned are stepped up reconnaissance flights by navy P-3 Orion and air force early warning surveillance planes, flying out of existing detachments in Oman and Saudi Arabia, the sources said.

Congressional Democrats, meanwhile, aren't ready to jump on Reagan's bandwagon.

RESERVE JUDGMENT

"Until we have consulted on (Reagan's) plan, I reserve my judgment on whether I can support the administration's course of action," Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd of West Virginia said, voicing a common sentiment in Congress.

Senator James Sasser (D-Tenn.) echoed Byrd's words of caution on Saturday, saying the administration's plans to protect Kuwaiti tankers could risk U.S. involvement in the Iran-Iraq war.

Sasser, just back from a fact-finding trip to the Persian Gulf and making the Democratic response to Reagan's weekly radio address, said Iran "will not be cowed into submission by a simple show of U.S. force.

"Clearly this is not the time to be thoughtlessly tempting a country itching for an opportunity to again humiliate the United States."

An agreement reached on Thursday by Byrd, Weinberger, House of Representatives Democratic Leader Jim Wright of Texas and National Security Adviser Frank Carlucci temporarily checked sentiment that had been growing in Congress for invocation of the War Powers Act after an Iraqi plane attacked the USS Stark on May 17, apparently by accident, killing 37 U.S. sailors.

Under the agreement, the administration will take many of the steps called for in the act, principally reporting to Congress on the need to send forces into a potentially hostile zone.

But by manoeuvring around the act, Reagan will avoid the 60-day limit set by the law on the use of U.S. forces in a hostile situation. He also will be able to continue voluntary consultations with Congress, rather than the mandatory ones required by the law.

Liberals in uproar over Meech Accord

MONTREAL (CP) — Jean-Claude Malepart, a federal Liberal backbencher from east-end Hochelaga, threatened Saturday to resign from his party if it refused to endorse Quebec's right to special status in the Constitution.

And he said a party frontbencher, Raymond Garneau, would do the same.

"If the party ever changes its position on Quebec's special society, it will have to choose between David Berger and Donald Johnson or lose Raymond Garneau and Jean-Claude Malepart," he said in an interview published Saturday.

Garneau was not available for comment. Berger and Johnson are Quebec Liberal MP's whose serious doubts about the Meech Lake constitutional agreement have been echoed recently by former Liberal prime minister Pierre Trudeau.

"I am convinced," Malepart said, "that Mr. Turner will not change his mind despite the pressure he is under," adding that he supports "100 per cent the constitutional demands of Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa."

WILL QUIT

If Bourassa's proposals are not accepted by the federal Liberal caucus, he said, "I will go to another party or I will go home."

Malepart said all Liberal MP's are talking about the Meech Lake agreement but "as far as Quebec's special status is concerned, we are keeping an eye on things. We're making sure that nobody questions it too loudly.

"It was we in Quebec who fought in the referendum when those guys (in the rest of the country) wanted Quebec to remain in Canada.

"We put our heads on the block at Mr. Trudeau's orders when we told the people to vote to keep Quebec in Canada by promising to change the constitution, a reform which would not put Quebec down but raise it up."

Malepart said he understands Trudeau's point of view "but he (Trudeau) thinks all Quebecers are at his level and don't need constitutional protection.

"He doesn't know Mrs. So-and-so from the east-end of Montreal who hasn't had the luck to get Trudeau's education or IQ."

Montrealer missed death camp by a day

MONTREAL (CP) — For Diane Fenster, the trial of Klaus Barbie in France is tearing open old wounds.

Fenster, 47, says she was only a little girl when she missed by one day being sent to a death camp by Barbie, the Nazi secret police chief who was nicknamed "the Butcher of Lyon."

She can't remember why she happened to be absent when 44 other children at Izieu, a village 64 kilometres east of Lyon, were carted away but that doesn't make her feel much better.

"Somehow it bothers me more now than ever before," said Fenster, of Montreal. "Maybe because I became a grandmother and I look at my two grandchildren and think, 'How could any human being, Nazi or not Nazi, take a child and kill it?' "

As a child, Fenster spent a few weeks in Izieu, a hiding place during the Second World War for Jewish youngsters whose parents had been deported to Adolf Hitler's concentration camps, or whose families were seeking a safe place in the countryside.

GAVE OUT SECRET

A huge house in Izieu had been transformed into a Jewish safe place until an informer blew its cover.

On April 6, 1944, Barbie's men — including, Fenster said, Barbie himself — rolled in and loaded 44 children and seven guardians from the house onto trucks. All of them, except for one child who was not Jewish, were sent to death camps.

A day earlier Fenster had been taken from the safe house.

Fenster said all she knows about her stay at Izieu and her childhood is what she learned from books and from the Paillares, a Catholic family from the south of France who took her in after her parents were sent to the Auschwitz death camp in 1942.

Paulette Paillares and her brother Guy worked with the children in Izieu. Fenster was sent with them to spend a few weeks in the country in the summer of 1943.

She was told she and Paulette were in Izieu again in April 1944, just before the Gestapo came.

FATHER ESCAPED

Fenster stayed with the family until her father, who had escaped from Auschwitz, came back to reclaim her in 1948. Her mother died in Auschwitz, and Fenster came to Montreal with her father and his new wife in 1951.

Paulette Paillares, who is to be a principal witness at Barbie's trial, recently returned to Izieu for the first time since the war, Fenster said.

"She walked through, inside the house. Nothing has been touched since they took the children away," said Fenster.

"She still could remember who was lying on the bed and she told me the last time she walked through she tucked the children in and talked to them.

"It was horrifying for her to be there with the empty beds, knowing what had happened to them."

Other agenda to the table?

MONTREAL (CP) — British Columbia Premier Bill Vander Zalm blamed Manitoba on Sunday for a snag that he says casts doubt on final agreement on the Meech Lake constitutional accord, The Gazette reports today.

"It seems that (Manitoba officials) brought a whole other agenda to the table," Vander Zalm said in an interview with the newspaper after federal and provincial officials failed to draft a final text of the agreement on the weekend for the first ministers' meeting on Tuesday.

The newspaper reports that officials developed a series of options on two contentious clauses, leaving Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and the premiers almost back where they started at Meech Lake on April 30.

Hertz returns home

MONTREAL (CP) — Ken Hertz, a Montreal poet stricken with Parkinson's disease, returned home from Mexico City on the weekend, hoping to return there within five months for experimental surgery to ease his condition.

Following a series of tests, Mexican doctors told Hertz, 42, last week that he is too weak to withstand the two-hour procedure, but said they would consider him again for surgery if he can strengthen his breathing through medication and exercise.

Provigo hits New York

MONTREAL (CP) — Distribution giant Provigo Inc. announced at a splashy annual meeting Friday that it will list its shares on the New York Stock Exchange, raise its dividend, and split its shares two-for-one.

A total of 636 shareholders attended the meeting in a vast hall of the Montreal convention centre, with muted lighting, fast-paced background music, and a giant screen for two films and closeups of chairman Pierre Lortie as he spoke.

Applause broke out as he announced that Provigo would become the "first home-grown Quebec company" to list on the Big Board. Other Montreal-based companies such as Canadian Pacific Ltd. and Bell Canada Enterprises Ltd.

Territories against accord

TORONTO (CP) — The Northwest Territories, in a full-page advertisement, is asking Canadians to rally against the federal-provincial accord to bring Quebec into the Constitution.

"We are being made second class citizens by the Meech Lake agreement," says the ad in today's Toronto Globe and Mail.

The Open Letter to the People of Canada from the People of the Northwest Territories is the latest action in a campaign against the accord by the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Lightfoot's producer dies

TORONTO (CP) — Art Snider, a musician and record producer who helped launch Gordon Lightfoot's career, has died of cancer. He was 60.

Snider, who died Tuesday, played piano in Toronto dance bands in his teens and began coaching pop performers in 1946.

He started and operated Chateau Records from 1956-61, releasing 30 long-playing records and 60 singles by the Allan Sisters, Tommy Ambrose, Trump Davidson, the Hames Sisters, Pat Hervey, Lightfoot and others.

Another of his proteges was comedian Rich Little.

Pro—life recruiting ?

TORONTO (CP) — An American author and pro-abortion feminist contends anti-abortion groups recruit members by exploiting women who are dependent on men.

Barbara Ehrenreich told members of the Canadian Abortion Rights Action League that homemakers and women who rely on men for their livelihood are the unsuspecting prey of pro-life groups.

"The anti-choice movement exploits financially dependent women," she said. "These women fear that, if more and more women are on their own and independent, what will happen to the status of the homemaker?"

She said most pro-life group members are homemakers who fear that some men will go along with easier abortions and eventually not accept the responsibility to provide for wives and children.

Condom use on the rise

TORONTO (CP) — Homosexual men who had been exposed to the AIDS virus still had many sex partners and often did not use condoms last year, says a major Canadian study to be released today.

But the study of more than 600 homosexual men in Vancouver shows they had fewer partners in 1986 than they did two years earlier, said Dr. Martin Schechter, an epidemiologist at the University of British Columbia.

The study, to be presented in Washington, D.C. at the Third International Conference on AIDS, found 50 per cent of the men said they usually used condoms, compared to only four per cent in 1984.

Algom miner found

ELLIOT LAKE, Ont. (CP) — The body of a 34-year-old father of two children was found late Sunday by searchers who dug through tonnes of rock for more than two days trying to locate the uranium miner, a Rio Algom Ltd. spokesman said Sunday.

Jim Buchanan said Kevin Grondin, of Elliot Lake, was pronounced dead about 5 p.m. but doctors at the scene said he was killed instantly when a cave-in sent about 2,000 tonnes of rock down the mine shaft Friday afternoon.

Grondin was operating a rock-bolting machine to reinforce the ceiling of a tunnel into Rio Algom's Panel Mine when the accident occurred near the bottom of the half-kilometre-deep shaft.

The death is the ninth mining fatality in Ontario this year. Six miners have been killed in nearby Sudbury, four of whom died in a single accident at an Inco Ltd. mine.

Victorious Women alive

SASKATOON (CP) — Members of the defunct Saskatoon chapter of Real Women have formed a new organization.

Victorious Women of Canada will carry on the work of Real Women in Saskatoon, chairman Gay Caswell said Friday. Saskatoon members had no option but to form the new organization after they were kicked out of Real Women.

"We didn't have a choice. It was either waste time in organizational squabbles or get down to work," Caswell said.

"We decided to let Real Women sort out its own problems. If they don't want some of the organization's most active members in Canada's fastest growing city, that's their misfortune."

She rejected Real Women president Gwen Landolt's assertion that the Saskatoon group was a "maverick" chapter.

Dangerous Dog Act

RED DEER, Alta. (CP) — A provincial judge has ordered a female pit bull terrier destroyed after it chased people here a week ago, biting one of them.

Provincial Court Judge Ben Casson ordered the dog be destroyed under provisions of the Dangerous Dogs Act after the dog's owner, Chuck Coleshill, pleaded guilty on Friday to a charge of failing to keep his dog under control.

The dog, Torra, will be given a lethal injection by a veterinarian.

Meanwhile, a male pit bull involved in the incident and which had run away has returned home to Coleshill.

Torra and the male pit bull frightened several people May 22, biting one woman and forcing other people to run for safety.

Party turned ugly

EDMONTON (CP) — A Stanley Cup victory party that started out quietly for 30,000 fans on the streets of downtown Edmonton turned ugly in the early hours of the morning when some revellers refused to quit celebrating.

Police said three officers were taken to hospital and several people received cuts and sprains when angry fans started throwing rocks and bottles at two policemen making an arrest.

Dogs were brought in and the fire department was called in to use hoses to disperse the crowd estimated by police at about 1,500. Dozens of arrests were made.

The night had started boisterously, with fans savoring Edmonton's 3-1 victory over the Philadelphia Flyers in a seventh and deciding game.

Give the man a ship

NEWPORT, R.I. (CP) — Nova Scotia yachtsman John Hughes was recognized for seamanship, stamina and sportsmanship on Saturday as the BOC Challenge committee honored finishers in its around-the-world solo yacht race.

Prizes of $15,000 each were given to defending champion Philippe Jeantot of France, winner of Class 1 for 15- to 18-metre-long vessels, and Mike Plant of the United States, winner of Class 2 for 12- to 15-metre-long craft.

Hughes won the Spirit of BOC Challenge award for exemplifying the qualities sought in the race. His prize was a four-metre-long replica of a 12-metre yacht.

British election tactics

LONDON (Reuter) — Britain's Opposition Labor party, recovering in opinion polls from attacks on its non-nuclear defence policy, has changed election tactics to focus on Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's tough leadership style.

Polls still favor Thatcher's governing Conservative party over the left-wing Labor party in the June 11 general election.

Thatcher's dominant, controversial personality was brought into the limelight at the start of her bid for a third term in office, when she announced that she wanted to go on and on to win a fourth term.

"Her arrogance alienates people, her obsessions, particularly with nuclear weapons, frighten people," Labor campaign manager Bryan Gould said Sunday as he launched the attack. "Her lack of compassion and understanding repels people."

Greek leftists march

ATHENS (AP) — More than 10,000 leftists chanting "Out with the bases of death" called for the removal of U.S. military installations from Greece in a rally Sunday outside Parliament.

About 1,000 of the participants had marched from Marathon, the starting point of the original Olympic long-distance race, to take part.

The demonstration ended nine days of anti-nuclear protests around Athens organized by the Communist-backed Greek Committee for International Peace and Detente.

Greece is home to four U.S. military bases — two near Athens and two on the island of Crete.

Solidarity members detained

WARSAW (AP) — Police detained Solidarity activists in at least six cities during the weekend, warning them against organizing anti-government protests during next week's visit of Pope John Paul, opposition sources said Sunday.

The warnings were part of a police action to deter supporters of the outlawed trade union from staging demonstrations during the visit by the Polish-born pontiff, who arrives June 8.

The sources said the police action also was aimed at preventing activists from attending a meeting in Warsaw on Sunday with Solidarity founder Lech Walesa.

Walesa met with several dozen opposition intellectuals and union activists to draw up a statement on the situation in Poland before the papal visit and their proposals for "solving the country's problems," said a Walesa aide, contacted by telephone at Walesa's apartment in Gdansk.

Botha asks for help

JOHANNESBURG (Reuter) — President P.W. Botha has asked western leaders to help end violence in South Africa, state-run television reported Sunday.

The South African Broadcasting Corp. said Botha, who declared a national state of emergency 11 months ago to curb black unrest, made the appeal in letters to heads of seven western governments — including Canada — attending this week's economic summit in Venice.

The South African Broadcasting Corp. gave no details of the letter and the government has not published a text, but the pro-government Beeld newspaper listed three main points.

Botha said western countries must break any relations with the African National Congress, the black nationalist guerrilla group that Pretoria blames for much of the violence racking the country.

MRC hears Magog outcry: People say they don't want zoning changed

By Laurel Sherrer

MAGOG — This time organizers had the foresight to set up extra chairs.

A conference room at the Magog town was filled to overflowing for the second time in two weeks Saturday as more than 250 Magog and area residents showed up with their questions and comments on planned zoning changes affecting the area around the northern end of Lake Memphremagog.

The changes would, among other things, create a 15-metre wide public walkway along the edge of the lake westward from Merry Beach to Cabana Point, and across Cabana point to the municipal beach. There is currently no way to get from one beach to the other along the lakeside without trespassing on private property.

The changes would also permit buildings up to nine storeys high in the area of the Cabana Lodge Motel, and that has some area residents upset.

There was standing room only when the city of Magog called a meeting May 21 to explain the changes. At least as many showed up again Saturday to hear the Memphremagog regional municipality (MRC) further explain the changes.

RECEIVED MAY 16

Any zoning change to the lakefront in Magog has to go through the MRC, said prefect Roger Nicolet. The MRC received the town's proposals for zoning change May 16 and they will go before the MRC council for approval June 10.

"The problem is delicate" for the MRC, said Nicolet, because it concerns an area that is the "key" to making the region's tourism a year-round industry instead of being primarily based on the ski hills.

It's also a problem for the MRC because there are certain points of divergence between the city's plans and a regional zoning scheme the MRC worked on throughout 1982, '83 and '84. This scheme has yet to be sanctioned by the Ministry of Municipal Affairs.

The MRC has agreed, he said, to study the affects of zoning changes along with the city.

ALLOW NINE STOREYS

The MRC's interim zoning by-law permits buildings up to two storeys high on Cabana Point, progressing up to six stories in the area of the Cabana Lodge.

The city wants to permit three- to four-storey buildings on Cabana Point, and nine storeys where Cbana Lodge is now located. Any building higher than four storeys would have to be pyramidal in shape, with each storey having only 95 per cent the floor space of the floor below it.

At neither meeting did city or MRC officials refer to a hotel-condominium-spa complex proposed by French developer Sergio Botella (see separate story this page), which is to have nine storeys and a pyramidal shape. But citizens did make the connection.

"Everyone knows that in the background is the project of Mr. Botella," said one man.

"People are against the fact that the city of Magog is giving a blank check to a promoter," said another to thunderous applause. "People are against the kind of building that doesn't respect the human element. People don't want a Miami-style beach."

The $130 million complex would provide 150 hotel rooms and 150 apartment-style hotel suites, along with a conference centre, a spa with the latest in German equipment, restaurants and a movie theatre.

IS NEGOTIATING

Magog Mayor Paul-René Gilbert told the citizens not to confuse the zoning changes with the Botella project, although the city is in the midst of negotiations with the developer.

Colette Beaudoin, a teacher at the La Ruche high school in Magog, said the increase in public "green space" beside the lake would amount to nothing once all the proposed hotel rooms and condominium units are occupied.

"You can't talk of accessibility," she said. "It will be public, but we won't be able to set foot on it because there will be too many people."

In two days, Beaudoin said, she had collected 250 signatures on a petition asking that the whole area at the head of the lake be declared a "Green Zone".

Penny Beaudinet, president of Memphremagog Conservation Inc., said the organization is "very worried" about the zoning changes, particularly since hundreds of volunteer hours have been spent studying the MRC's interim zoning by-law over the past four years.

"If today, because of a developer, by-laws are going to be changed, then why in the world have you bothered to make the by-laws to begin with?" she asked.

COUNCILLOR SUPPORTS

Magog city councillor Denis Lacasse was the only member of the audience to speak out in support of the zoning changes, saying that most Magog citizens are strongly in favor of a major project to create jobs.

"The tourism potential of the city of Magog no longer has to be demonstrated," he said. "It's enormous and everyone knows it. A major tourist development can't be done without some inconveniences." However, he said, it's hardly an inconvenience to be given increased public access to the lake, which is what the proposed zoning changes offer. The amount of space to be zoned public was even increased from the original zoning amendment after the city heard the public protest at the May 21 meeting.

Others countered by saying that the kind of jobs that will be created will be "poor people's jobs" paying minimum wage, while the hotels and restaurants will be run by outsiders.

MCI director and Magog Township environment inspector Stewart Hopps protested the apparent lack of concern for the environment in the plans for development of the Magog end of the lake.

"I don't see many studies on what will our lake take; when will it come to the saturation point?" he said.

MRC prefect Nicolet said what most of the 18 people who spoke at the meeting wanted was a "Zero Option", making the land at the head of the lake purely public. This would be difficult, he said, since much of it is private already, and the city, with a $15 million deficit, can hardly expect to increase the taxpayer burden by purchasing more land.

To inquiries about looking for provincial funding, Nicolet responded "this is not very popular with the present government."

Some Magog area residents say even though proposed zoning changes would create more public space near the lake, there would still be overcrowding caused by people moving into a hotel and condominiums planned for the waterfront.

Botella claims environmental concerns number one

Memphremagog Conservation Club backs Tonic-Tropique plans — president

By Laurel Sherrer

ORFORD — French developer Sergio Botella is in the avant-garde when it comes to considering environmental concerns before proceding with real estate development, says the president of the Memphremagog Conservation Club.

That's why, says Serge Leblanc, the club invited Botella, president of Tonic-Tropique Inc. to speak Sunday at its "Conservation Breakfast" at the Orford golf course.

"It's very rare that we can have negotiations with a promoter," said Leblanc. Botella has not only given promises, he said, but even guarantees that measures will be taken to protect the ecology as well as the social and cultural environment at the head of Lake Memphremagog as he embarks on a $130 million project to build a nine-storey hotel-spa and condominium complex.

Sergio Botella... the public is not opposed.

"We knew from the beginning that we were going into a sensitive area; an area that's vital for the conservation of the good quality of the waters of Lake Memphremagog," Botella said in his talk.

CONSERVES MARSH

Rather than risking destruction of the ecological systems associated with the marsh on the land to be developed, Botella and his planners decided to conserve the area as a nature observation centre, he said, making no changes except to provide trails for visitors.

Botella also plans to integrate a fishing park and a fish farm into his project.

The project also exhibits a consideration for the environment, he says, by making the architecture of the building conform to the natural visual elements of the region (that is, making the buildings pyramid-shaped, to mirror the image of Mount Orford, rather than hiding it).

It's also important that such a project take the social and cultural aspects of the region into account, he continued. The Tonic-Tropique project has done so, said Botella, by designating a space along the Cherry River as a fishing park. This is an area where people are often seen fishing now.

The project will not only respect current social habits of area residents, but will add to Magog's cultural life by providing a movie theatre, a conference centre which can also be used for theatrical productions, and possibly a museum to acquaint tourists with the history and ecology of the lake.

"No social experience will be eliminated by our project," said Botella. "It will only add to the social experience."

PAYS HALF

Tonic-Tropique will pay 50 per cent of the cost of establishing the fishing park and the fish farm, while the Conservation Club will take care of the rest. Club president Leblanc says the club has the clout to get government grants to fund its part of the project.

Following his talk, the club presented Botella with a wooden duck carved by a local artist in appreciation of his concern for the environment.

But not everyone at the meeting was happy with Botella's explanations. In an interview, well-known local environmentalist Stewart Hopps said he's worried that the project is not respecting the lake.

"If you build on any flood land you're going to create a certain amount of environmental damage," he said. Plenty of studies have been done to determine the economic impact of touristic development along the lake, he said, but there hasn't been enough study of the possible effects on the lake's ecology.

Hopps also said he fears the 15-metre space along the lake in front of Botella's hotel will eventually revert to private use.

"I can't believe that that piece of land between his building and the lake will always be kept public," he said.

In an interview, Botella said he had observers at a public meeting May 21 where Magog area residents expressed opposition to his project and to the zoning amendments required to accomodate it. But he said he believes the majority of Magog residents support him.

NO OPPOSITION

"For the moment we don't have the opposition of the Magog people," he said.

His observers found that only 40 to 50 per cent of the people at the meeting (attended by more than 250) were Magog residents. Only 15 people spoke up against the project, and "15 people out of 30,000 is not a majority".

Only one or two people who called in to an open-line show on the local cable television station were opposed to the project, "but that's normal," he said.

"It's normal that people be worried," he said. "If you're not worried, it means we can do whatever we want."

People don't realize that the kind of nine-storey, pyramid-shaped building he's planning will be less disruptive to the scenery of the area than a regular six-storey building (permitted by current zoning by-laws) would be.

"If we construct six floors like that it's horrible," he said. "It's like a Berlin wall."

It would be a scandal, he said, to construct nine full storeys, he said, and that's why the artists and architects working with him have decided on the pyramid style, which would complement, rather than hide the mountain in the background.

Club honors groups for conservation efforts

ORFORD (LS) — The Memphremagog Conservation Club honored five organizations for their efforts in conservation at its "Conservation Breakfast" Sunday.

The Radio-Canada program Le Point was singled out for providing a quality program dealing with environmental concerns and encouraging Quebecers to change their destructive habits.

The Estrie chapter of the Association Québécoise des Techniques de l'eau was honored for 25 years of working toward a better quality of potable water for Townshippers.

The Memphremagog regional municipality (MRC) received an award for its zoning plan, which gives environmental concerns high priority.

Honorable mentions went to the Association pour la protection et l'amenagement du Ruisseau Castle for its work on cleaning up the pollution of the Castle Brook, and to Eco-tiers, a La Ruche high school program to collect recyclable material and contribute profits from recycling to Third World development projects.

Dobrin: University degree a 'road map'

By Melanie Gruer

LENNOXVILLE — While Bishop's University's 1987 graduates will remember the emotion as Mitzi Dobrin told them to, they will undoubtedly remember the heat as well, as they collected their degrees in uncomfortable surroundings Saturday.

About 280 graduates assembled at the John H. Price sports complex in the 30 plus degree weather to be presented with their degrees by Chancellor R.A. Bandeen at the university's spring convocation ceremony.

Dobrin gave the address and told the students there was opportunity all around them. There were enough success stories around to provide ample evidence of that.

Dobrin, until recently executive vice-president, legal and corporate affairs of Steinberg, Inc., was one of four, with Professor James Mallory of McGill University, Dr. Gerard Gardner, a specialist in the Canadian North, and William Ian Mackenzie Turner Jr., chief executive officer of Consolidated Bathurst Inc., who received honorary degrees. Two professors, H.M. Dutton and W.F. Van Horne were named Professors Emeritus.

Dobrin told the graduates that when she received her law degree from McGill University, she felt the chancellor was handing her a "sort of road map".

"In the course of time I learned education does not provide a map but a compass," she said.

You have to use your own ingenuity in finding the way out, she said.

"We need opportunity, a positive attitude and a little bit of love to make it successfully into the 21st century," Dobrin told the graduates. "There is opportunity everywhere around us," she said. "An opportunity that is yours and that's what awaits you."

The generations that have proceeded us shaped the world for us, she said. It was the commitment and creativity of those that have left us a legacy, she added.

Dobrin told the graduates that ten years ago 32 per cent of the employees worked in the professional field and better than two-thirds worked in manufacturing. Nine years later, one third worked in the manufacturing field, she said, and that shows a "capacity of social concerns with those of a social nature."

"It comes down to a positive attitude. To work is to grow," she said.

'The biggest problem', says Chief Grenier. 'They think they can swim'

Drowned fisherman wasn't wearing his life jacket: 'That's why he died'

"We started an investigation right away," Grenier said, and the Quebec Police Force was called in."

The next morning, Grenier and Brome Lake Cst. Pierre Laplante went back out on the lake, while their colleague Cst. Denis Brazeau spoke to the witnesses. "The citizen who had chased the boat brought Denis right to the boat, and to where the three people he had seen in it could have been."

Jean Grenier... 'People are foolhardy. They say they can swim.'

"So we found the three 'important witnesses' and the damaged boat they had been in," Grenier said.

SIGNED STATEMENTS

Although the three, one man and two women in their mid-20s, had not come forward voluntarily to tell their story, Grenier said, "once we had them they were very cooperative. We have pictures and signed statements and turned it all over to the QPF, Cst. Robert Lapointe."

Grenier said the Foisys' small boat was struck in the rear. "It was hit in the motor," he said, "and was not damaged that much. It stayed afloat."

The boat which hit it was larger, "about 16 feet, with a 50- or 60-horsepower motor," he said. The larger boat was also slightly damaged, Grenier said.

Crown prosecutor Henry Keyserlingk will be shown the police reports today and decided whether the three who fled the scene should be charged.

SAME LAWS AS CARS

According to the Criminal Code boaters are subject to the same laws as drivers of cars. Among possible charges are reckless endangerment, leaving the scene of an accident, and criminal negligence leading to a death (manslaughter). "That's all up to the prosecutor," Grenier said.

Two of the "important witnesses" said they thought their speedboat had hit a rock, Grenier said. The third told police he thought they had hit another boat. "They didn't seem to be drunk or drugged," Grenier said. The trio are from Outremont, he said, and also own a cottage on Brome Lake.

The Brome Lake Public Safety department has its own rescue boat and has patrolled the lake regularly since 1976. "We have a well-equipped boat, with rescue equipment, first aid, and materials for boaters in trouble," Grenier said. "Mainly the firemen use it but also the police."

"We have problems on the lake all the time — sailboarders, sailboats and small motorboats," said the chief. "Sailboarders especially give us a lot of problems these days. People get on those things and they don't know how to handle them. They ditch and they can't get in off the water."

DON'T WEAR LIFE JACKETS

Grenier said Lake Brome's worst problem is boaters who won't wear their life jackets.

"We do a lot of prevention and safety checks," he said. "In the 11 years we have had it, the boat has been invaluable. We have saved quite a few lives, helped dozens and dozens, and prevented a lot of accidents — especially people without lifebelts."

"The belts are the biggest problem," Grenier said. Saturday's victim Réjean Foisy had a lifebelt but it was still lying in the bottom of his boat when police recovered it after he drowned. "He didn't have it on. That's why he died."

"People are foolhardy," Grenier said. "They say they can swim and don't need a life jacket. They don't put it on, they drown."

"I've never seen one drown who had a life jacket on."

Biker killed in Route 55 crash

MELBOURNE — A Sherbrooke motorcyclist was found dead beside Route 55 here Sunday afternoon, after what police said was apparently a loss of control.

Dead is Pierre de Lafontaine, 25. Police said there were no witnesses but that he apparently lost control of his motorcycle, hit a guardrail and left the roadway sometime in the pre-dawn hours Sunday. A passing trucker spotted Lafontaine's body several hours later.

Hunter's body found in river

SHERBROOKE — A body found in the St. Francis River Saturday has been identified as that of Sherbrooke fireman Luc Valance, missing since a hunting expedition Nov. 6.

The badly decomposed body, was discovered near Hemming Road in Drummondville, some 60 miles downstream from Sand Hill, where Valance went missing.

Valance's wallet and an ammunition bandolier were found on the body, which has been sent to Montreal for an autopsy.

Valance was declared dead April 24 following a request by his widow.

Police said Valance apparently drowned and was carried away in the river after he tried to cross it on foot while chasing a deer.

Looking for a hero biscuit

You can't teach an old dog new tricks and you certainly can't teach him any new lessons either. Take Ronald Reagan, for example.

After 37 American sailors died on board the frigate USS Stark May 17, one would think the president would have pulled out of the Persian Gulf in order to save more lives and prevent further battles.

But no, sadly enough, having 37 men die when the ship was accidentally hit by an Iraqi missile didn't teach the old dog any lessons. He's gone back to the drawing board in order to maintain Kuwait's defence in the name of America. And what has he come up with? A plan that will only end in the loss of more lives, whether they happen to be American lives or not.

Officials at the Pentagon are planning an even larger U.S. naval presence in the Persian Gulf. The Defence Department plans to move an aircraft carrier and an advanced Aegis cruiser into the gulf. There will be more U.S. flags and captains on 11 Kuwaiti tankers in order to defend the vessels.

What makes the situation terrifying is that the old dog won't say exactly what steps they would take if Iran attacks vessels sailing under U.S. protection. Can't you just see what's coming? If the missile that hit the Stark was Iraqi — a country which is allegedly on the same side as the U.S. — what action will the enemy, Iran, take when the increased American defences move into the gulf?

Anyone with even the smallest amount of brain cells can foresee a major battle coming in the gulf. Reagan is acting just like a taunting child, waiting for someone to hit him so he can hit back. Those ships on their way to the gulf don't look at all like American or Kuwaiti defences. They look more like the carrot dangling in front of the horse's mouth.

Iranian officials have already confronted the challenge by calling the president mentally unbalanced and saying that the U.S. may be setting itself up for 'another humiliation' in the gulf.

But there may be a major showdown on Pennsylvania Avenue first. Congress is skeptical of the plan, just as they are skeptical of Reagan's motives in Nicaragua. The prospect of such a foreseeable attack is causing concern in Congress, where bills are expected to be passed this week requiring Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger to report within seven days on the president's plan to put the increased defences in the gulf.

Reagan's aides expect he will sign the bills, thereby averting, for the time being, formal invocation of the War Powers Act. The act, passed in 1973 after the Vietnam fiasco, curbs the president's powers to send troops into conflict.

It's logical that the Americans have to defend themselves but the Persian Gulf is hardly American territory. With his efforts to help the Contras in Nicaragua and now his efforts to help Kuwait in the Gulf, it seems Reagan is looking for a hero biscuit before the end of his term. How appropriate.

But this old dog doesn't deserve a biscuit or any pat on the head for the shenanigans he's pulled during his term in office. Being caught doing all kinds of nasty things in Nicaragua hasn't taught him anything at all and obviously having 37 American men brutally slaughtered hasn't shown him the error of his ways either. He doesn't deserve any positive recognition since he can't learn any lessons from having his nose rubbed in his mistakes.

Anti-drug fight: New routes, new laws and death

By The Associated Press

Narcotics is a growth industry worldwide, a multibillion-dollar business sensitive to the trends of international economics and politics.

Headlines in the United States focus on Wall Street cocaine rings and basketball drug scandals. In the Middle East, meanwhile, governments have decided to execute drug traffickers. In Latin America, narco-assassins operate with near impunity. Elsewhere political leaders are increasingly alarmed by the spread of the drug empires.

"The abuse of drugs ... now affects virtually all countries and menaces all segments of society," the International Narcotics Control Board, a United Nations body, reported earlier this year. "Illicit production and manufacture ... takes place in a growing number of countries."

In response, the United Nations will sponsor a major conference in June in Vienna to generate international action against the drug trade.

Here is a wrap-up of narcotics developments in several parts of the world:

Saudi Arabia's clergy, in a blow against the "merciless plague" of drugs, has decreed that narcotics traffickers will be beheaded. Neighboring Qatar has done the same and other Moslem states are expected to follow suit.

Convicted drug dealers will be flogged publicly on their first offence and their heads will be chopped off on the second, said a decree announced in March by the Saudi interior minister, Prince Nayef.

As the homeland of Islam, Saudi Arabia's example carries religious weight with other Moslem states.

Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's Islamic regime in Iran has executed hundreds of drug traffickers since it came to power in 1979. Malaysia, which has a Moslem majority, also executes narcotics smugglers.

The 1970s oil boom brought large expatriate communities, many of them Asian, to the Persian Gulf — and with them more drug smuggling and addiction. In recent years, small Gulf states stiffened the maximum penalty for drug smugglers to life imprisonment. Qatar was the first to follow the Saudi example and decree the death penalty, and regional police sources say they expect other governments to do likewise.

TOUGHEN LAWS

In Bangladesh, the government organized a national anti-narcotics committee in February and promises tougher legislation to combat what it views as a growing drug problem in the impoverished south Asian nation.

"The laws will be toned up with provisions for a long jail term and other punishments," the youth affairs minister, Sheikh Shahidul Islam, said in an interview. He provided no details or timetable.

Drug dealers in Bangladesh currently are subject to jail terms of up to two years and modest fines. At least 25 suspected dealers were reported arrested in Dhaka, the capital, in one recent six-week period.

An official at the Narcotics and Liquor Department said Bangladesh is believed to have up to 50,000 drug addicts and the number "is rising every day." He listed opium, heroin and hashish as the most popular drugs.

Unauthorized opium dealing has been illegal since the 1940s, but the use of opium was not made a crime until 1984. The government has also decided to prohibit production and sale of hashish beginning in 1989, a ban that will affect an estimated 20,000 growers in northern Bangladesh and 20,000 traders, currently able to sell the substance openly.

TRAIL IN BRAZIL

On March 8, Brazilian police discovered a sophisticated laboratory used to process cocaine in the city of Sao Paulo. Two days later, 19 people, many of them current and former Pan American World Airways employees, were arrested in the United States and charged with smuggling almost 6,800 kilograms of cocaine over the past six years from Brazil.

Brazilian authorities said coca was flown into Bazil on small planes from other South American nations, processed into cocaine at the Sao Paulo lab, sent by car to Rio de Janeiro and from there flown on Pan Am flights to New York.

Marcelo Itajiba, operations director of the Brazilian federal police narcotics division in Sao Paulo, said in an interview that easy access to ether and acetone — chemicals essential to cocaine production — has attracted international drug rings to Brazil.

In 1985, Brazilian authorities began tightening up on ether and acetone shipments to South America's three big cocaine-producing countries — Colombia, Bolivia and Peru.

"As a result of our success in controlling these shipments, traffickers have recently changed tactics by smuggling in cocaine paste to be refined in laboratories located mainly in Sao Paulo, where most of the acetone and ether is produced," Itajiba said.

DRUGS IN INDIA

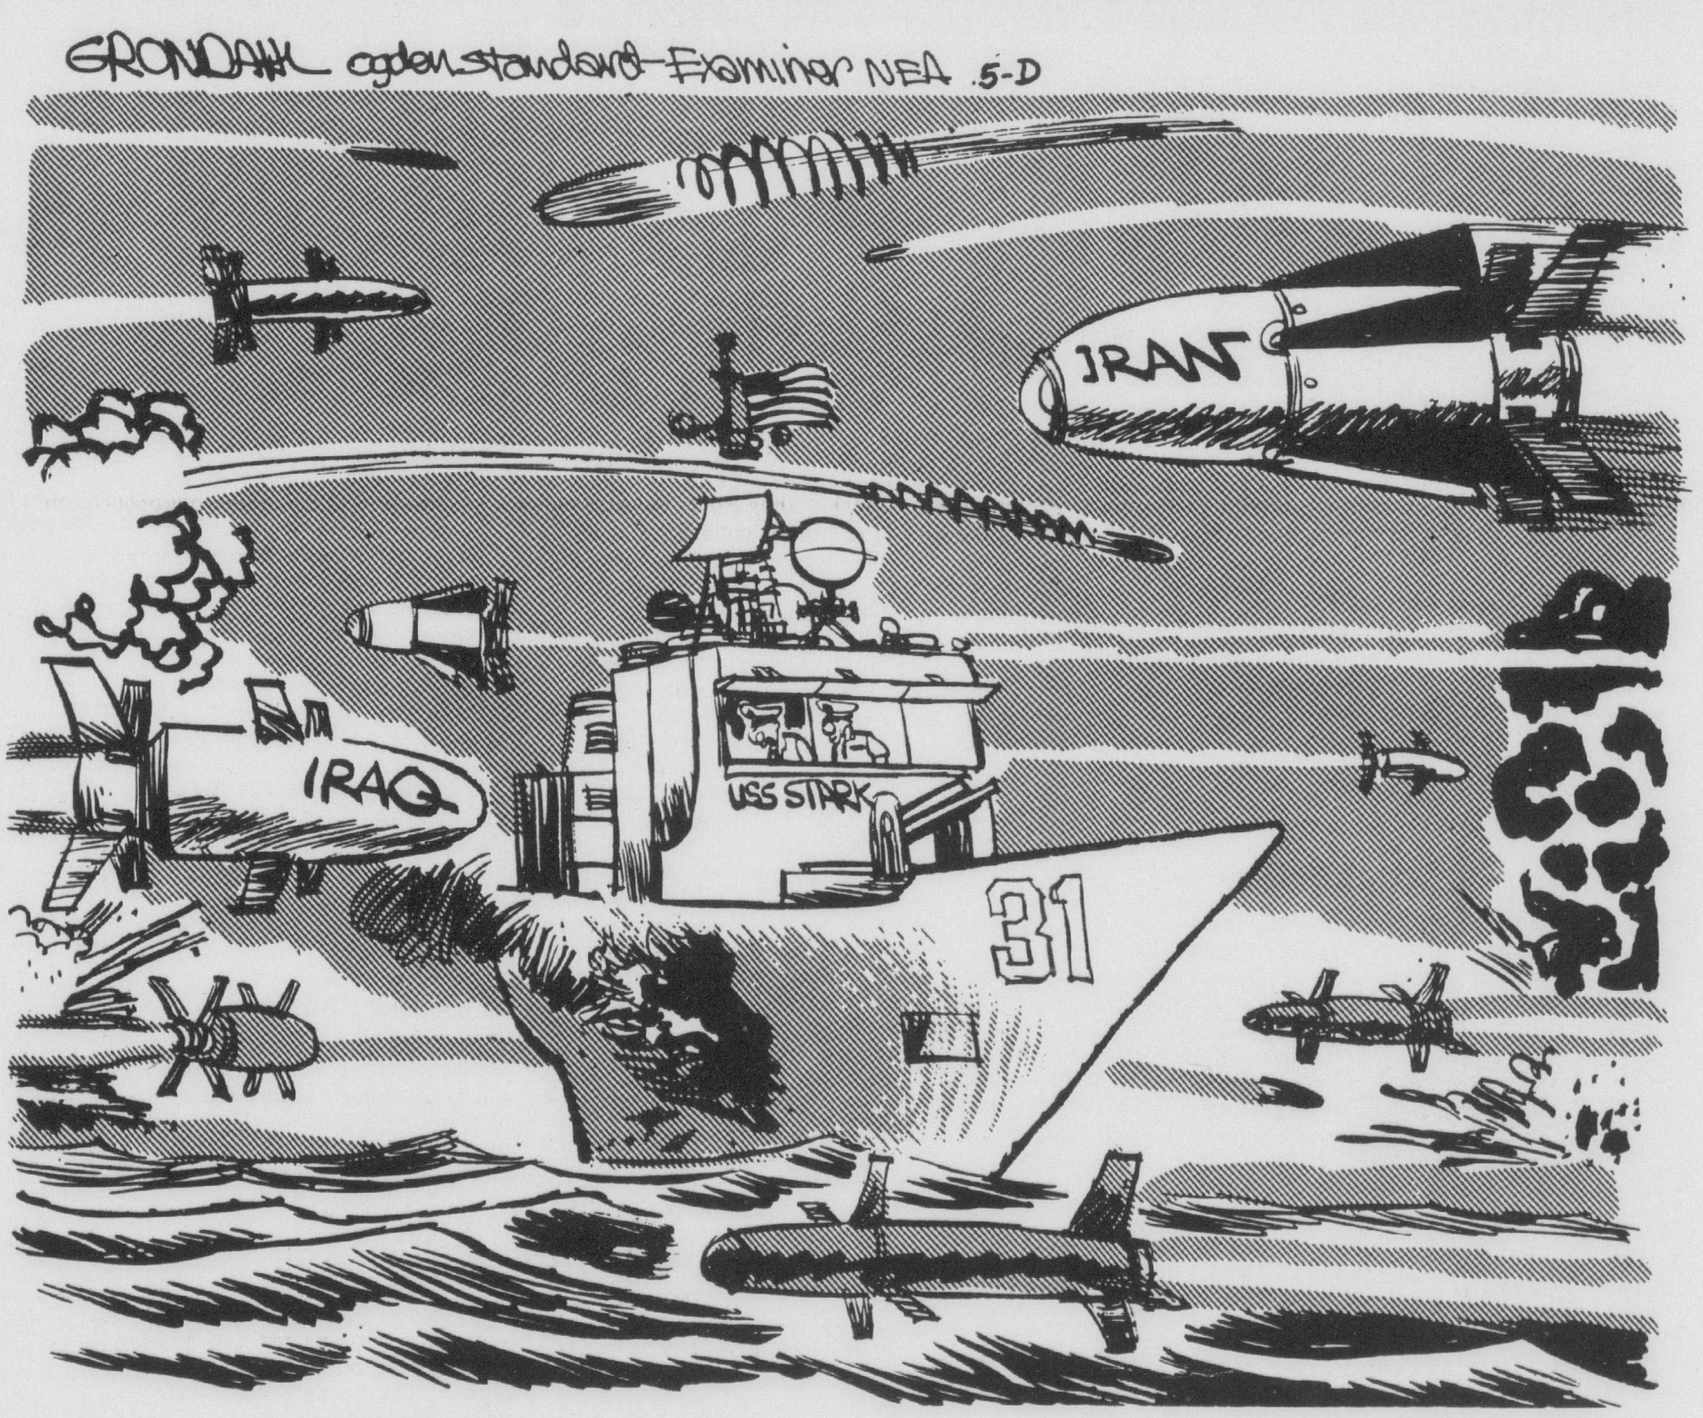

War has heightened the drug threat in India.

The 1979 Soviet military intervention in the civil war in nearby Afghanistan disrupted the traditional "Golden Crescent" heroin networks in Afghanistan, Iran and Pakistan. South Asian narcotics traders eventually looked to India for safer transshipment points.

"The India route began as an emergency exit, but it now has become a major transit country because the drug kings found it works," B.V. Kumar, director general of India's new Narcotics Control Bureau, said in an interview.

In 1982, Indian agents seized 28 kilograms of heroin. Last year the figure was 2,500 kilograms. Police estimate the addict population has exploded to a total of 600,000 in India's four largest cities — New Delhi, Bombay, Calcutta and Madras.

New drug laws, which took effect in India in November 1985, provide a minimum 10-year and maximum 20-yer prison term for drug pushers.

"Now, how did that happen?"

Inventor scours ditches for materials

CLIFFORD, Ont. (CP) — John Picoski is a familiar figure along the rural roads of Normanby and Culross townships, his black beard bristling in the wind as he rides horseback to his job in town as a machinist.

He's a bit of a character at home, too, coming up with inventions and sundry innovations on his tiny farm with its old log house in this community 70 kilometres northwest of Kitchener.

Picoski, 38, calls his latest invention the Kan Krusher, a contraption he designed to — you guessed it — crush cans.

The Kan Krusher, basically a space-saver for people who have piles of beer cans cluttering up homes, reduces the cans to one-fifth their original bulk and makes them easier to dispose.

The cans are still returnable for five cents if they're scrunched and more of them can be stashed into a box, bag or the trunk of a car that way.

Picoski says the Kan Krusher — which he still hasn't patented — also works with aluminum soft-drink cans. He says he had to scour local roadside ditches to find soft-drink cans for demonstrating "because we never drink soft drinks around here."

The inspiration for the Kan Krusher was Picoski's own logjam of beer cans.

"I had so many beer cans piled up in the back room it was getting hard to move around back there. I just decided to make something to crush them."

Made from a collection of metal tubing and plating welded and bolted together, the device looks and works like on an old-fashioned water pump.

Picoski says he could make a more sophisticated Kan Krusher, probably substituting a motor for muscle power, but that would push the price past the point most drinkers would want to pay.

Born and raised in Waterloo, Picoski says he always felt stifled by the city and longed for a freer life. He got the opportunity eight years ago when he found the 2.5-hectare farm and house that's so old no local folks know much of its history.

Esperanto boasts eight million supporters

Take my word

By BOB TAYLOR

If the Esperantists in our midst are flaunting the green star in their buttonholes with more than usual pride this year, it's with good reason. This is the 100th anniversary of the birth of Esperanto.

It was in 1887 that a Warsaw oculist named Lazarus Ludwig Zamenhof produced his universal language, hoping it would promote world peace and understanding.

Today it boasts eight million supporters, is taught in 750 schools in 40 countries, has been used in 8,600 books and is the subject of 145 periodicals.

Artificial languages are not new. By modest reckoning, 700 have been devised since that highrise project at Babel ended in chaos.

Promoters have included the 17th-century philosopher Rene Descartes, who sketched the outlines for one in 1629.

SING OF LOVE

In 1817, another Frenchman, Jean-Francois Sudre, devised another, which he called Sobresol, based on the musical scale. Using only the syllables do, re, mi, fa, sol, la and ti, it could be played, sung, spoken and written. "I love you" came out as "Dore milati domi."

Someone else came up with Timerio, which was written entirely in numerals. In this system, 1-80-17 stood for "I love you."

Alwato, Balta, Blaia Zimondal, Chabe Abane, Communia, Dil, Idiom Neutral, Kosmos, Langue Bleue, Monoglottica, Pantos-Dimou-Glossa and Veltparl were a few of the other synthetic languages.

Until the symbolic green star of Esperanto rose in the east, the best was Volapuk, created about 1880 by a German priest, Johann Schleyer.

He based its vocabulary on English, though of a peculiar variety. Nouns had Germanic endings and verbs a bewildering array of affixes to show tense and ood.

EVEN IN CHINA

Even so, the cumbersome Volapuk was an overnight success and after five years claimed 200,000 speakers in Europe, the United States, Mexico, South Africa, China and Australia.

But in 1889, when delegates to a Volapuk congress in Paris suggested ways of improving the language, Schleyer said no, schism resulted and the movement rapidly declined.

Many turned to the newcomer Esperanto, named from its inventor's pen name, Doktoro Esperanto, meaning Dr. Hopeful.

Russians quickly adopted the new language, then Scandinavians, followed by continental Europeans.

Its merits are grammatical simplicity and a vocabulary based mainly on words common to the major European tongues. Its alphabet has only one sound for each symbol.

All nouns end in -o, with a plural in -oj; all adjectives in -a, with a plural in -aj; all adverbs in -e. The present tense of all verbs ends in -as, the past in -is, the future in -os, the infinitive in -i, the imperative in -u. The definite article is always la.

BOOKS GALORE

Esperantists say theirs is the only living artificial language, pointing to the millions who speak it and a considerable literature of thousands of works, original as well as translated, fiction and non-fiction.

Around the world, over 100 newspapers are published in Esperanto. Radio stations in a dozen countries regularly broadcast Esperanto programs.

Over 100 international conferences and meetings are held annually in Esperanto, without translation or interpreters.

There are even songs in Esperanto. A reader sent along a 45-r.p.m. recording of La Vie en rose in translation. It's a performance that Edith Piaf wouldn't have sniffed at.

Here, courtesy of another reader, is a sample of Esperanto for you to try:

La inteligenta persono lernas la interlinguon Esperanto rapide kaj facile. Simpla, fleksebla, praktika solvo de la problemo de universala interkompreno, Esperanto meritas vian seriozan konsideron.

The love of money can be the root of neuroses says author

By Shawn McCarthy
The Canadian Press

Like God fashioning Adam, we all "create money in our own image," says Toronto psychologist Norm Forman.

Most people see money as a means to satisfy their physical and emotional needs, but some people can become neurotic about it — valuing money for what it represents rather than what it buys, Forman says.

Books, newspaper columns and workshops on how to manage your money are increasingly popular. "But if you are unaware of your money neuroses and how they undermine and sabotage your behavior, you will be unable to take advantage of what you have learned," Forman writes in a new book, Mind Over Money: Curing Your Financial Headaches with Moneysanity.

FIVE NEUROSES

Forman, who has more than 20 years of counselling experience, lists five pecuniary ailments: the miser's misery, the spendthrift syndrome, the tycoon's trauma, the bargainer's bug and the gambler's grippe.

Each has its symptoms and each can lead to financial ruin as well as marital breakdown. Each, he argues, is in turn a reflection of a more deeply rooted personality problem.

Most people show traits of at least one of the categories, but what Forman describes as neurosis arises when money creates "unresolved conflicts that are associated with fear and anxiety, and that lead to maladaptive or self-defeating behavior."

He suggests several methods of coping with the problems, but the first step is "to recognize and acknowledge the illness, then the hard work begins."

DESCRIBES FIVE

Here are descriptions of Forman's "money neuroses."

Miser's Misery: The symptoms include an obsession for accumulating money; exaggerated fear of losing funds or being taken advantage of; and a constant inability to enjoy the benefits of what money can buy.

For seriously afflicted misers, hoards of money are equated with a sense of security — though they then feel vulnerable to losing their stash.

Many people with compulsive or obsessive personalities in general also suffer from miser's misery, says Dr. Jeremy Safran, a psychiatrist at the Clarke Institute in Toronto.

"People with obsessive styles tend to have a tremendous need to do everything perfectly and because of that they're very hesitant to commit themselves to any course of action for fear of making a mistake," Safran said.

In money management, that trait shows itself as a reluctance to spend any money, even on minor purchases, the psychiatrist added.

MUST BUY

The Spendthrift Syndrome: Excessive buying is "almost always an attempt to compensate for some lack or deprivation," often experienced in childhood, Forman writes.

Forman says these people turn around philosopher Rene Descartes's famous statement: "I think, therefore I am," to "I spend, therefore I am."

It's the "rush" they get from shopping, rather than the goods themselves, that provide the pleasure.

Many people who don't feel good about themselves try to buy self-respect and love, said Safran. In today's market of easy credit, people can attempt to buy more respect than their means would permit, driving them into personal bankruptcy.

MEANS POWER

The Tycoon's Trauma: The tycoon shares traits with the miser in that both want to amass hoards of money — but for different reasons.

For the miser, money means security; for the tycoon, it represents power.

In one case study, Forman describes a man who worked 80 hours a week and whose marriage nearly ended in divorce, just so he could prove his superiority to his businessman father.

The Bargainer's Bug: Typically, the memory of how he outwitted the sales clerk is more important than the actual purchase for the obsessive bargain hunter.

He'll spend $5 on gas to save $3 on shoes and often buys things he doesn't need just because they were on sale.

"By acting aggressively in his purchases, the bargainer protects himself from possible rejection," Forman says.

"In the past, he felt helpless to avoid the psychological pain of rejection. Now he outsmarts others as a way of lowering his anxiety level."

USE MONEY

The Gambler's Grippe: Compulsive gamblers "are always seeking to prove that life's odds are in their favor," Forman writes. "It's as if they are using money to tell their fortunes."

Paradoxically, he adds, psychologists generally agree that the pathological gambler's unconscious aim is to lose in a spectacular show of self-destruction.

Forman quotes from a novel by Russian author Fyodor Dostoyevsky, an inveterate gambler, in which the character has just won at roulette: "I should have left at that moment, but a strange feeling came over me to challenge Fate. It was the wish to give Fate a punch in the nose and show her my tongue."

The 19th-century novelist himself gambled until he had lost everything.

Fresh strawberries in September?

By Judy Creighton

TORONTO (CP) — Strawberry lovers who mourn the short-lived domestic harvest when the season ends each June could soon be enjoying the luscious fruit all through summer, a University of Guelph professor says.

Prof. Alan Sullivan of the university's horticultural science department is leading a research team in trying to stagger the berries' appearances over several months, which would extend Ontario's strawberry season to as late as September.

Sullivan said in an interview Thursday he and the researchers believe a proven European growing technique called the "waiting bed" system could result in fresh, local strawberries all summer long.

The team began growing specially prepared plants last May in beds wih a high concentration of plants. The runners were trimmed and then cultivated in the waiting beds with close attention to fertilizing, irrigation and weed control, to promote large or multiple crowns.

By early November, when fall dormancy arrived, the researchers had vigorous plants with high-potential yield for the next season, Sullivan explained. The plants were then dug out of the waiting beds and put into cold storage.

"All we have to do now is take them out of cold storage at various intervals this spring and summer and plant them in normal cropping beds," he said. "As they mature, we expect they'll provide a continuous supply of fruit well past the usual June-bearing season."

STEADY SOURCE

Sullivan said an extended season would give commercial processors of frozen, canned and preserved strawberries a steady source of produce all summer, which would pave the way for growth in the industry.

"Right now, processors can only run their production lines for a short time because of the berry's brief appearance," he said. "This technique would maximize the use of their equipment and make it more worth their while to develop a product."

However, Sullivan said it may be difficult to persuade growers to try his method because most "don't want to extend the season of any one crop because they are now programmed to move on to cultivating raspberries, vegetables, apples and other crops and don't want to overlap."

He said strawberries grown in waiting beds will cost more to produce because of the additional fertilizer, but he expects they will be competitively priced with imports from California.

"And by the time they reach market, they'll only have travelled a fewmiles, not 4,000 or 5,000."

U.S. protectionist laws won't let Canada benefit in free-trade

By Shawn McCarthy

TORONTO (CP) — The Canadian government is "dreaming" if it expects to gain an exemption from U.S. protectionist laws through free-trade negotiations, a prominent Washington trade lawyer said Thursday.

Prime Minister Brian Mulroney has said a critical objective in free-trade talks is Canadian exemption from the punitive trade laws that allow the U.S. International Trade Commission to slap countervailing duties on foreign industries judged to be subsidizing exports.

"The fact is, you ain't gonna get it (the exemption)," Donald deKieffer, a former counsel to the office of the U.S. Trade Representative, told a conference of business economists.

"It's astonishing to us, not that the issue is on the table, but that your government has made it an indispensible condition of the deal. Even if the administration promises some sort of exemption, there's just no way Congress is going to allow it."

DeKieffer said protectionist sentiment is raging in Congress, as evidenced by two tough trade bills that have been passed by the House of Representatives and the Senate. Those bills will now be sent to a joint committee to be fashioned into one.

The House bill would require retaliation against any country that had built up an unacceptable trade surplus with the U.S. through unfair trading.

"You were lucky to get the capital punishment provision out of the bill," the lawyer quipped.

SEES COMPROMISE

DeKieffer said Canada might get a deal on some aspects of U.S. countervail measures, perhaps a non-binding, bilateral committee that would serve as a "clearing house" for complaints.

"But to expect success on a direct frontal challenge is just dreaming."

His views were supported by Claude Barfield, an economist at the American Enterprise Institute in Washington, who said it would be "difficult for the administration to make an exception for Canada due to the political climate in the U.S. today."

But Canada must win an alternative to the "highly political" trade commission to settle disputes, Donald Macdonald, former federal Liberal finance minister, told the conference.

Macdonald, who is campaigning with former Alberta premier Peter Lougheed in favor of a free-trade agreement, said any deal must define what is an unacceptable subsidy and what is acceptable.

He said regional development policies must be protected, noting the U.S. has its own regional subsidy program in the form of its huge defence budget. But he criticized federal programs that support "economic losers," such as Cape Breton's Sydney Steel Corp.

NEED TRIBUNAL

Macdonald said there must be a "bi-national tribunal to settle differences.

"If the Americans say no to this, that's the point to get up and walk away from the table," he said.

DeKieffer also listed U.S. objectives in the talks, including elimination or reduction of tariffs, elimination of non-tariff barriers, reduction of subsidies, freeing the cross-border trade in services and improved protection of intellectual property.

The U.S. is particularly anxious to "achieve an open and secure environment for foreign-directed investment" in Canada, he said. That is the Americans' "deal buster."

Canadian Trade Minister Pat Carney said last week the government welcomes foreign investment in Canada, but "there are certain sensitive areas in the economy that require protection, such as cultural industries."

DeKieffer said Canadian officials keep threatening to bring back the tough Foreign Investment Review Agency — which the Mulroney government scrapped for the more welcoming Investment Canada — if a trade deal is not reached.

"With a thin-lipped smile, they say 'watch out for FIRA,' " he said.

Seaway must be rebuilt — shipper

By Gary Regenstreif

QUEBEC (CP) — The St. Lawrence Seaway should be rebuilt to accomodate a growing trend toward wider ships and help stem a potentially disastrous decline in Canadian shipping, the president of the Dominion Marine Association said Thursday.

The "shortsightedness" of seaway architects before construction began in 1954 should be corrected or businesses will use other routes or modes of transport to ship goods, said Norman Hall of the association that represents shipowners in eastern Canada.

Hall also told a conference of mayors of cities on shorelines along the St. Lawrence River and Great Lakes that they should lobby their MPs on the proposal because their communities would suffer financially as shipping into their ports declines.

A new seaway "would be big and expensive," he said. "But think of the benefits or better still of the alternatives.

"We run the risk of allowing an intrinsically efficient mode — the inland waterway — to be overtaken by other modes that will progress technologically and by cause and effect attract more investment to the detriment of the waterway."

REPLACES LOCKS

A new system he hoped would open by 2020 would replace eight locks at the Welland Canal and seven others between Montreal and Lake Ontario.

He estimated in an interview later that a new system could cost close to $4 billion, most of which would be borne by Canada since only two of the 15 locks are American-owned.

Decreased traffic sparked by the recession at the beginning of the decade coupled with high toll fares and too-narrow locks spell bad news for the future of the seaway, he said.

Shipowners in the association moved 72 million tonnes of cargo last year, down from 95 million tonnes in 1979, he said.

The dimensions of the seaway locks now are about 265 metres by 25 metres and should be 330 metres by about 35 metres, the approximate size of the locks at the Panama Canal, he said.

"We can't do a darn thing to increase our revenues because of the size of the locks."

Of 221 bulk carriers on order at world shipyards, only 32 will be physically able to penetrate the Lakes, he said.

DEVELOP PLANS

He called for the establishment of a task force of industry officials to develop a long-range plan for the seaway after examining forecasts for world trading and the impact a free trade deal with the United States might have on the lakes.

Hall, repeating previous efforts to combat seaway tolls, also recommended an immediate 50-percent reduction in tolls to remain in effect for five years in a bid to encourage shipping over other methods of transport.

Such a reduction would mean an approximate loss to the seaway of about $25 million a year, he said.

Hall said he could not estimate how much more business the seaway would realize if it were rebuilt or if tolls were reduced.

But he said it was unfair that Ottawa subsidized the railways for grain shipments at a time when high seaway tolls are forcing many businesses to find cheaper alternatives.

For example, he said, some grain producers in the American midwest have turned to barges on the Mississippi River while other U.S. steel producers now use railroads.

40th wedding anniversary celebrated with friends and family

Friends and family gathered at the Bellevue Golf Club on April 24, 1987 to honour Elsie and Ray Woods on the occasion of their 40th Wedding Anniversary.

Upon entering the Golf Club, the bride was presented with a lovely corsage of red roses and baby's breath by her oldest son, Brian; and the groom was presented with a boutonniere of a single red rose by his youngest daughter, Kimberley.

An enjoyable afternoon and evening were spent reminiscing and getting reacquainted with friends and family, many of whom the bride and groom had not seen for several years.

After forming a receiving line to greet the guests numering over 200, Elsie and Ray were escorted to their place of honour at the head table.

Donna, the oldest daughter, introduced the guests who were seated at the head table. They included Leila and Fredrick Fleming, Leslie and Gwen Booth, Kay and Arnold Beattie, Doris and Garth Burrill, Iona Carter, Iris Woods, and jack Johnston.

Randy, the youngest son, had the privilege of proposing a toast to his Mom and Dad. Prior to the guests being invited to enjoy the buffet lunch, Rev. Shaver was called upon to give a blessing to Elsie and Ray.

Brian, the eldest son, had prepared a humorous rendition of the past forty years Elsie and Ray have shared.

On April 26, 1947, Elsie and Ray were wed with a reception being held at the Melboro Consolidated School House. The first part of their lives together, they resided in Waterloo where Brian was born. Larry, their second son, was also born in Waterloo.

In 1954, Elsie and Ray purchased tneir present home where Donna was born. Three years later, they had a third son, Randy and the youngest daughter, Kimberley became the final member of the family.

Larry had the honor of thanking Janet Banfill for the delicious lunch and to Marjorie Dobb who made and decorated the 3-tier wedding cake. Thanks were also expressed to Harry Charlton who supplied the music and to the photographer, Eddie Fowler.

For this special occasion, the five children had an oil painting done of the family home which was presented to the Bride and Groom of 40 years. Two wine goblets delicately engraved with "40th Anniversary" and the guest book were given by the children for precious momenteus of this day.

The honored couple were showered with numerous gifts, flowers, telephone calls, as well as gifts of money. Special congratulations were also received from The Right Honorable Brian Mulroney, as well as John Turner, Alain Tardif, and Carmen Juneau.

Elsie and Ray personally thanked all those in attendance, especially their sons and daughters for the very fond memories that were created that day.

Friends and family in attendance to help Elsie and Ray celebrate this event were from Connecticut, U.S.A.; Edmonton, Alberta; Long Sault, Ottawa, and Lynn, Ontario; as well as Isle Perrot, St. Lambert, Howick, Pierrefond, Kahnawake, Granby, Sherbrooke, Montreal, Richmond, Melbourne, Kingsbury, and surrounding areas.

THANKS TO YOU, FROM US

For forty years we've shared married life
And the best job we've had as husband and wife
Was to see our five children grow and care
Through joy and sorrow and to help us share
In good times and bad, they were always there.

With many thanks to our son Brian
We'd turn to him when times were trying
He'd always smile, look at us and say
"It's ok, together, we'll find a way."

Larry who is our second born
And when our faces showed we were tired and torn
Helped us to create loving, warm memories
By just being there and eager to please.

Donna who never seemed angry or blue
And when things bothered us, she always knew
Just the right thing to do or say
Which made the sunshine come back our way

Randy who is our fourth born child
He showed us how to be gentle and milk
In sickness and health, good times and bad
With him around you never could be sad

Our youngest daughter, Kimberley
Made our future as bright as could be
How do we say Thank You and be sure you see
It comes with love from your Dad and Me.

We must not forget the younger voices around
Who perk up the silence whenever we're down
To Alyssa, Tommy, and Chad,
We're sure proud to be Grandma and Granddad.

Love Mom & Dad

Sibling fighting drives worried mother crazy

Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: I am a 33-year-old married woman with two children. The boy is 9 and the girl is 11.

The problem is that these two kids fight constantly. It doesn't matter where they are, they are always at each other's throats. Most of the fights involve hair-pulling, slapping, pushing, name-calling and occasionally biting.

I try not to show partiality, but when I praise the girl, the boy will practically stand on his head to get attention. If I praise the boy, the girl will do something gross so I will punish her and stop focusing on him.

My friends who have youngsters the same ages as mine say this is natural — that their kids do it, too. They assure me that it's part of growing up and I shouldn't be concerned.

But I am truly worried. I want my children to be friends when they grow up, but from their behavior now I don't see much chance of friendship blossoming. In fact I'm afraid to leave them alone for fear they will kill each other. Raw hate is what I see here and I am ashamed of them both.

If you can come up with some suggestions on how to help me get some peace in the house I would be eternally grateful. — A Tired Referee in Raleigh

Dear Ref: Have I got a book for you! It is exactly what you've been praying for. Title: "Siblings Without Rivalry: How to Help Your Children Live Together So You Can Live Too." Authors: Adele Faber and Elaine Mazlish. Publisher: Norton. Price: $14.95.

This book explains why children bicker and fight and what can be done about it. The language is simple, direct and you'll think it was written for you. Run, don't walk, to your nearest bookstore. If they don't have it, shame on them.

Dear Ann Landers: I have been divorced from my wife for six years. We both have remarried. Our son chose to live with his mother and her husband, which we agreed was the best thing for all concerned. His stepfather is a rabbi.

We are planning the boy's bar mitzvah and it is creating a lot of problems. For example, how should our names appear on the invitations?

The really serious difference in opinion centers around the reception. My ex-wife and her rabbi husband insist that the reception be held at his temple after the bar mitzvah service and that all members of the congregation be invited.

Since my family will be traveling a great distance there will be only about 25 members present. How should we divide the expenses?

I consider it unfair that they expect me to go 50-50 in view of the fact that the great majority of the guests will be members of the congregation who are unknown to me.

It is very important that I maintain an amiable relationship with my former wife and her husband. We all want the day to be a pleasant and happy one for our son. Please advice. — Somewhere in the East

Dear Somewhere: The invitation should read:

Mrs. (her name) and Mr. (your name) invite you to attend the bar mitzvah of their son (his name). Date, time and place.

My advice is be a mensch and pay half of the reception expenses. Five years from now you won't know the difference and you will be glad you did. Mazel tov!

Dear Ann Landers: In response to Nat, who said real men don't read advice columns: I am 44 years old, 6 foot 3, and weight 225 pounds. I spent nine years in the Marine Corps, was a platoon sergeant in Vietnam and worked many years as a foreman of a logging operation in northern Michigan and have been a heavy equipment operator for 14 years. I also share in the cleaning, cooking and laundry, since my wife works full-time outside the house.

It's too bad that the fragile male ego won't let him admit he reads an advice column for fear of damaging his macho image. I'm not ashamed to admit if the Detroit Free Press isn't on time in the morning it spoils my whole day. Your column is the first thing I read in the paper and I've been a great fan for years. I think you are just great. — Longtime Admirer

Dear L.T.A.: And I think you're great, too. Incidentally, I don't pay a lot of attention to those statements of denial. Nearly one-third of my mail comes from men. If that many are writing, some of them must be reading.

RICHMOND — The Richmond Hill W.I. held the May meeting at the home of Lillian Johnston.

The President Bernice Beattie opened the meeting by all repeating the Collect. Motto: Treasure your friends, they make your life. Roll Call: A new cookie recipe was answered by 12 members and two guests, Dolly Sloane and Matty Banfill.

Secretary Marjorie Hawker read the minutes of April meeting, which were accepted as read. Treasurer Lillian Johnston gave the financial report. She reported the social evening a success.

Winner of the blanket was Selina Aulis; second winner, Douglas Smith, Kingsbury; third, Brenda Dubois of Richmond.

ACW-UCW hold joint meeting

WAY'S MILLS — "Praise" was the theme of Way's Mills ACW-UCW's May meeting held at 2 p.m. on the 13th in the home of Lloyd and Mildred Standish.

Due to Alyce Pope's absence, her prepared worship service was conducted by Marion Mayhew. "The Thought of the Month" was from the Song of Songs 2:12 - "The flowers appear on the earth, the season of glad songs has come, the cooing of the turtle dove is heard in our land."

The president Jane McIntyre welcomed everyone and spoke of those unable to attend because of illness in their families.

Minutes of the April 15th meeting, read by Lorraine Harrison, secretary, reminded all that thankoffering was being observed.

Correspondence included a letter of thanks from Rev. Richard Spies, Convenor of Quebec-Sherbrooke Presbytery Camp, also a note from Pauline Standish who is now home from hospital but unable to attend the meeting.

Reports were received from Community Friendship and Visiting Christian Development and Church in Society. The Sunday School students, together with their friends and parents, have been invited to a picnic at the end of June. Another cone of handy-twine is to be ordered in May, as volunteer knitters are ready to prepare more bandages for Supply and Welfare, Africa.

Plans were finalized for Way's Mills ACW-UCW sales table at the Flea Market to be held Saturday, June 6 in Legion Hall, Rosedale St., Ayer's Cliff.

During the social hour a game, "Name the Tree" proved of interest. Refreshments were served by the hostess, assisted by her daughter and granddaughter.

Shirley Hunter will be hostess for the June 10 meeting at her home on the Roy Road.

Guild sponsors salad-bar tea

SHERBROOKE — The annual Easter Salad-bar Tea, under the auspices of the St. Agnes Guild of the Church of the Advent, was held recently in the Church Hall in a beautiful setting of spring flowers.

The stage was banked with Easter lilies and chrysanthemums. Bud vases of yellow daisy mums and pussy willows decorated the individual tables, and a lovely arrangement of lavender daisy mums, given in loving memory of Violet Lemay, Gwen Middleton and Doris Price by the Guild, centred the tea table, which was presided over by Donalda Price, Chris Blick, Irene Decoteau and Myrtle Sage.

The salad-bar table, with its many tempting salads, was looked after by Mrs. Vera Lemay and Mrs. Florence Wark. The gift and craft table articles were sold by Mrs. Vivian Hutchison and Mrs. Ivy Richardson.

The waitresses, in the charge of Catherine Wark, were Jennyfer Beaudry, Sandra Beaudry, Betty-Lou Grimard, Esther Trussler, Madeline Trussler and Jennifer Young.

In the serving room were Winnie Gillam, Karen Jackson, Bella Lavalliere, Helen Nutbrown and Frances Varney.

The food table, sponsored by the St. Margaret's Guild, was in the charge of Mrs. Mary Carrier and Mrs. Jennie Bench.

Miss Margaret Darby acted as cashier.

Canusa Unit holds regular meeting

ROCK ISLAND (IH) — Betty Perkins was hostess for the Stanstead South Church Canusa Unit held the evening of May 13 in her home here.

Bertie Darby, president, presided and Betty conducted the opening devotions. This was followed by reports from the secretary and treasurer.

It was voted to share expenses with the Helping Circle Unit for renovations in the church office. They also discussed the concerns of the church dishes, silverware etc. and a report will be given to the Helping Circle.

The closing of the season banquet will be on June 10 at the Ashley's restaurant in Lyndon, Vt. However, before this date, another workshop on crafts will be held in preparation for the November 14 Christmas luncheon and sale.

The meeting adjourned to meet for business again in September.

Betty served delicious cherry cheese cake and beverages.

25th anniversary of United Church Women celebrated

SOUTH DURHAM — The 25th anniversary of United Church Women (UCW) was celebrated at the South Durham United Church on Sunday, May 10 with service at 3 p.m. by Rev. W. Glover, sermon, "You are my witnesses".

President Ruth Mountain gave a summary of the UCW from 1962-1987. In 1962 the Ladies Aid and the Women's Missionary Society joined to become the United Church Women. We are generally referred to a minute's silence in memory of those deceased.

Our first President was Amy Montgomery who started us off with her very capable leadership. During tat time we bought the school. Keeping up two buildings proved to be too much and we sold it about 1967. With the money and a lot of help given by some of the men of the congregation, we refinished the basement of the church so that it was reasonably handy in which to work.

The first big event held in the newly refinished basement was our Centennial Celebration in 1967.

During the past 25 years, one of our most ambitious projects was the publishing of a cook book, the other a centennial quilt. To raise money, we sold hasti-notes, commemorative plates, catered to weddings, lunches, etc. when requested held teas, card parties, auctions, food sales and other smaller projects within our own group.

We have supported the Sunday School, C.G.I.T., Bible Society, Sherbrooke Hospital, Richmond Agricultural Society and many others. We have also redecorated the sanctuary of the church, laid new carpet and improved the heating system. The Manse committee and the church were always supported in a monetary way. The profit from our Fall suppers was turned over directly to the treasurer of the church.

Later in our anniversary year, we expect to honor three past presidents, namely Freda Coote, Margaret Coote and Patsy Millar with life membership pins.

We worked on, although our numbers are smaller now with the enthusiasm of the young and a little wisdom of the "old". I hope, we shall survive!

After the service, everyone was invited to the basement where a delicious upper was served by the younger members of the U.C.W.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Strive to do more than just think about your plans today. Small steps taken at this time are the springboards for large leaps in the near future.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You should do well in an arrangement you have with an older individual today, especially if it's a joint financial venture.

A lost opportunity

By James Jacoby

Traditionally, a strong jump shift shows 17 or more high-card points. The practical player knows it can be done on much less, with a good long suit and a hand that must play at least in game. South's strong jump response of two hearts is an example. North raised, and after the back-and-forth cue-bidding of the club ace and diamond ace, South bid Blackwood for aces and then kings, and finally settled in six hearts.

Are you curious about why South cue-bid the club ace first? He was afraid that bidding three spades would discourage North from showing the diamond ace with a minimum hand and relatively weak clubs. Nor did he wish to discourage West from leading a spade against an eventual slam contract.

Declarer won the diamond ace and played the heart king. Eventually he took a club finesse. East won the queen and played a diamond to set the slam. South missed the elimination play available when either defender has the singleton heart jack. The correct sequence of plays is diamond ace, spade ace, heart to the ace and ruff a spade; then a heart to the 10 and ruff the last spade. Now exit with a diamond. Whoever wins that trick must either give declarer a sluff and a ruff or lead a club. If the club lead is from West, South will lose a club only when East holds both the queen and the 10. That line offers a 75 percent chance of making the contract, much better than the 50 percent chance that West holds the club queen.

STARGAZING
JUNE

The Brightest Stars

In the late evening, Arcturus is high in the south near the meridian; Regulus is above the western horizon; and the bright stars of the Summer Triangle, Vega, Altair, and Deneb are rising in the east. Ruddy-hued Antares sweeps above the southern horizon, and Spica, situated midway between Regulus and Antares, is the only bright star in the southwest. Capella, sparkling near the northwestern horizon, is the one remaining brilliant star in the June sky.

Starry "Tresses"

Faint star groups are at their best on clear moonless nights. Two of them represent (of all things!) heads of hair. First, there is the Corona Borealis, a lovely semicircle of seven rather faint stars. Although it is usually referred to as "the Northern Crown," the constellation is also called "the Coiled Tresses of Ariadne." Nearby lies a much fainter constellation called Coma Berenices, or Berenice's Hair, a cluster of stars almost too faint for naked eye viewing.

The Northern Crown

The Corona Borealis, a beautiful little semicircular or diadem-shaped group of seven stars, lies between Arcturus and the faint stars of Hercules. The constellation's familiar name is "the Northern Crown" and its brightest star, Alphecca, is called "the Pearl of the Crown."

The Corona Borealis is a celestial reminder of an unhappy love story. According to Greek legend the Crown belonged to Ariadne whose beloved, Theseus, was one of a number of youths sacrificed to appease the Minotaur, a terrible monster, half man, half bull, confined to a labyrinth. But Theseus was determined to survive. Using a sword given to him by Ariadne he slew the Minotaur. Then, by retracing a path he had marked by unwinding a spool of thread she had given him, he was able to find his way out of the labyrinth. Although they married, Theseus carried Ariadne off to a faraway island where eventually he deserted her. In pity, the gods bestowed the Crown on Ariadne and placed it among the stars after her death.

Berenice's Hair

According to legend, the constellation represents the tresses of the celebrated beauty, Berenice. Fearful when her husband Euergetes set out on a long and dangerous voyage, Berenice offered her lovely hair to the goddess of beauty in exchange for his safe return. The god Jupiter was so impressed with the sacrifice that he had her tresses placed among the stars.

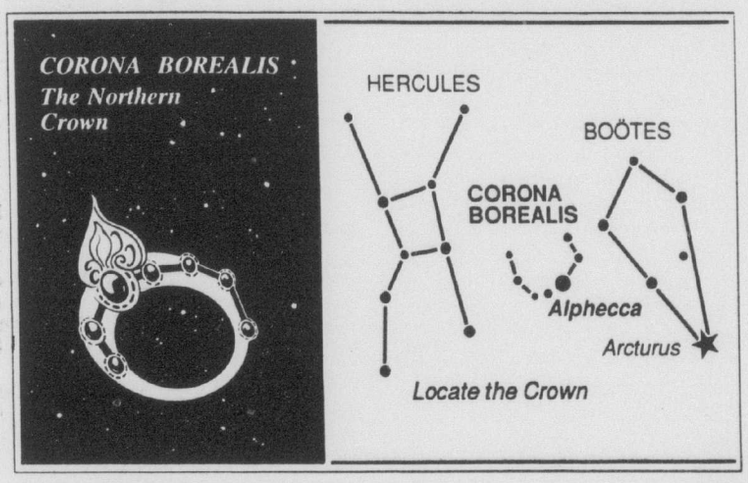

To locate Coma Berenices' faint stars, locate Leo. Then extend the line joining Regulus to the star at the top of the triangle representing the hindquarters of the Lion about an equal distance.

Planets

Mercury is above the western horizon at sunset early in the month, and Mars all month. Mercury is the brighter of the two. Mars is in Gemini near Castor and Pollux. Watch its movement relative to the "Twin" stars throughout the month. Saturn is now in the sky all night, rising in the east as the Sun sets and setting in the west as the Sun rises. The morning "star" in the east before sunrise is Jupiter. Venus too is in the east at sunrise, but very close to the horizon where it will be seen with difficulty, if at all.

Lennoxville-Ascot Historical and Museum Society

The May meeting of the Lennoxville-Ascot Historical and Museum Society was held in the historic Capelton area on Monday evening, May 11. Our hostess was Mme Cupeau of Ferme des Hirondelles. The members took a variety of casseroles, rolls, salads and desserts for a pot-luck supper at 6 p.m. in the renovated barn close by Mme Cupeau's gardens. The food was good and obviously much enjoyed. Weather was damp and cool.

The business meeting, chaired by Muriel Brand, included reports on two useful museum workshops attended by several members, and possible participation by this group in the cultural village to be held this year at East Angus in July.

Attention was drawn again to the upcoming June boat trip to Newport, to an ice cream social in Melbourne in July, a walkway tour of Danville later and a Quebec City meeting which will feature workshops and guided tours.

Michel Thibault, programme chairman, invited suggestions for next year's programmes which he hopes to have set up by September.

Following the business meeting, Anne Speatt, on behalf of Mme Cupeau, gave a short history of the property. The Hyatt family had lived in this mining area before moving to Sheerbrooke. The original seventeen room house, built in Capelton in 1839 had served as boarding house and post office for a century. In 1927 the property of 350 acres, house and barn was purchased for $1800.

Following a fire on the night before Easter Sunday in 1938, the present home was built on the same site of cement blocks made on the premises. After several changes of ownership, it was bought by M. and Mme Cupeau. They are particularly interested in cultivated flowers, wildflowers, and birds. These they share with friends and passersby.

Last year they had 230 varieties of flowers. Up to three generations of local families cultivate garden plots. The names chosen for the various gardens do hommage to people in the music world. Already the gardens are bright with red and blue and yellow flowers.

We signed Mme Cupeau's guest book. Some of us will assuredly return. Her dream is to establish a research cntre here for wildflowers and birds. Meantime her hospitality is heartwarming, and her flowers, crafts and birds a delight.

St. Paul's Guild

The May meeting of St. Paul's Guild was held in the Parish Hall on the regular date. The meeting was conducted by the president, Violet Ross, with an average attendance of members, 3 visitors, 3 little girls and Canon Westman. Irene Fisher was in charge of the Devotional period with several members participating with readings.

Several thank you notes were read from people who had been bereaved or ill.

Mrs. Westman gave an interesting report of the meeting several members had attended in Hatley on May 2nd.

A few sales were made from the work table and a drawing held with Violet Ross being the winner.

Monetary donations were made to the Sherbrooke Hospital Foundation and Marney Patterson. Mrs. Westman suggested that members be on the look out for articles for the Seamen's boxes while shopping during the summer.

The meeting closed in prayer by Canon Westman with special mention of Howard Grey and Lillian Cook.

A delectable lunch was served by the hostesses, Fern Pehleman and Dorothy Harper, and a social time enjoyed.

Sher-Lenn, Sher-Mont little league kicks off with festivities

The excitement at the 37th official opening of Sherbrooke area little league on Saturday was enhanced by a crowd of 300 to 400 people eager to see the youngsters strut their stuff. Lennoxville mayor Duncan Bruce, Sherbrooke councillor Laurier Custeau, and Fleurimont councillor Paul Bourque were among the spectators watching the festivities at Champs de Mars park in Sherbrooke. Sherbrooke is set to hold the provincial tournament this year so baseball spirits are said to be high this year in the eight-team league from Sherbrooke, Lennoxville and Fleurimont. The scores on the Saturday afternoon affair were: Lennoxville Yankees 4 Les Expos 1, Les Elans 6 Richelieu 6, Les Aranis 9 Les Lions 1, and Les Optimist de Fleurimont 4 Les Optimist de Sherbrooke 0. Danny Scalabrini of the Yankees and Philippe Jélineau for Les Lions smacked homers.

Rodgers lets Wallach pitch in crushing defeat

Tim Wallach, usually known for his glove and bat, had the chance to show off his arm.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — It was one of those rare baseball games where everyone was smiling at the end.

Right-hander Kelly Downs and a 17-hit attack that featured home runs by Robby Thompson and Jeffrey Leonard carried the Giants to an 8-0 victory Sunday, but the Expos hardly were downcast as the three-game series concluded.

Expos manager Buck Rodgers injected some humor into the game by allowing slugging third baseman Tim Wallach to make his pitching debut in his 884th major league game.

Wallach faced the minimum three batters in a scoreless eighth after the Giants battered Expos starter Bob Sebra, 3-5, and reliever Jay Tibbs to snap an eight-game losing streak at Candlestick Park.

"Tim's been bugging me to let him pitch for three years," Rodgers said. "He had a lot of his family and friends at the park, so why not? You've got to have some fun in this game, too.

"This was the Giants' day all the way. They pitched, hit and fielded better than we did, so they deserved to win. But we went 6-3 on this road trip, so I'm not complaining."

While Rodgers was being philosophical about a decisve defeat, Giants manager Roger Craig was pleased that his club put everything together to end a five-game tailspin.

HAD FUN

"You'd love to have a game like this every day," Craig said. "After what we've gone through lately, this was especially nice. I had a good feeling coming to the park that we'd do something."

The Giants did everything. Downs fired a five-hitter and tied for the National League lead with two shutouts and three complete games. Candy Maldonado now shares the major league lead with seven game-winning RBI.

Catcher Bob Brenly drilled four singles in five trips to raise his average from .214 to .253. Leonard had three hits to regain the NL batting lead with a .364 average.

"We did all the little things today," noted Downs, 4-2, who hadn't won since May 8 — the last time a Giants' starter posted a home victory. "I just took the attitude to hold them close and that we'd eventually score some runs."

Downs was prophetic.

After Maldonado's single created a 1-0 lead in the third, the Giants errupted with four runs in the fifth and added three more in the sixth. Leonard hit his 12th homer in the sixth.

Lendl's serve doesn't come through for him

PARIS (AP) — The serve is the ultimate weapon in tennis. The server holds the advantage, in both the scoring and the mind.

The server can dictate the pace. The server can move an opponent around and pick the point of attack. The server is supposed to have the edge.

After dropping the first set to Sweden's Joakim Nystrom 6-2 in the fourth round Sunday, Ivan Lendl, defending his title in the French Open, won the second set 6-1 and was serving to wrap up the third.

Thirty-six times Lendl served with a 5-3 lead. Eleven times he reached set point. Never did the edge fall his way.

Nystrom, who beat Lendl at the Italian Open in Rome, always came up with the shot to turn back Lendl and eventually won the set, 7-5.

Later, darkness joined Nystrom in at least temporarily denying Lendl a place in the quarter-finals. The match, suspended after three hours, 17 minutes, was to resume today on centre court, with Lendl leading the fourth set 4-0, and serving.

The women's quarter-finals were to start today, with No. 2 Steffi Graf of West Germany meeting sixth-seeded Manuela Maleeva of Bulgaria and seventh-seeded Gabriela Sabatini facing Aranxa Sanchez, 15, of Spain.

The suspension of the Lendl-Nystrom match ended a long day in which defending women's champion Chris Evert and top-seeded Martina Navratilova easily advanced to the women's quarter-finals and two more seeded players were upset.

Evert, seeded third and bidding for a third consecutive French Open championship and eighth overall, beat 12th-seeded Katerina Maleeva of Bulgaria 6-3, 6-1.

Like Evert, Navratilova put togther a second consecutive overpowering performance, ousting 15th-seeded Sylvia Hanika of West Germany 6-0, 6-2.

Evert next plays Raffaella Reggi of Italy, the 14th seed, who beat fifth-seeded Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia 6-3, 4-6, 6-2.

Navratilova's quarter-final foe will be another West German, eighth-seeded Claudia Kohde-Kilsch, who eliminated unseeded Nathalie Tauziat of France 6-1, 3-6, 6-0.

In men's matches Sunday, Karel Novacek of Czechoslovakia ousted 10th-seeded Martin Jaite of Argentina 7-6, 6-4, 6-7, 6-3.

In the quarter-finals, Novacek runs into an old friend, Czechoslovak Miloslav Mecir, the fifth seed and the winner of every set he has played in the tournament.

The winner of the Lendl-Nystrom match faces 10th-seeded Andres Gomez of Ecuador, who came back from two sets down and match point to beat Emilio Sanchez, Aranxa's brother, 5-7, 1-6, 7-6, 7-5, 6-4.

Celtics, with help of Bird, knock Pistons out

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics had mystique, playoff experience, homecourt advantage and luck on their side.

The Celtics, with Larry Bird scoring 37 points, beat the Detroit Pistons 117-114 Saturday and won the NBA Eastern Conference final in seven games.

Boston overcame playoff injuries to starters Kevin McHale, Robert Parish and Danny Ainge and sweltering temperature in Boston Garden.

"We've got a lot inside of us that says, 'We don't want to lose,' especially to this team," said McHale, who had 22 points and 10 rebounds despite an injured right foot.

The Pistons went home Sunday unconvinced the best team was advancing to the NBA final against the Los Angeles Lakers.

"We didn't win the series, but I believe we're the best basketball team," Isiah Thomas said.

"We were two evenly-matched clubs," Piston centre Bill Laimbeer said. "A bounce here or there decided it."

Except for six bounces of the ball, it might have been the Pistons instead of the Celtics opening the championship series against the Lakers on Tuesday night at Inglewood, Calif.

The first bad bounce for Detroit came late in the third quarter when Adrian Dantley, the Pistons' leading scorer in the series, was carried off the court with a concussion. He collided with teammate Vinnie Johnson when both dived for a loose ball.

Five more balls bounced in the Celtics' direction late in the game, turning it their way.

With the score tied 99-99, the Celtics missed five consecutive shots and got the rebound each time before Ainge hit a three-pointer with 3:05 left, giving Boston the lead for good.

"We got some lucky bounces," Bird admitted. "But we were hustling out there, and after three or four misses, you always think the next shot is going in."

"We had Rodman, John Salley and Laimbeer in there and they're all good rebounders," said Joe Dumars, who scored a career-high 35 points for the Pistons, 11 more than his previous best. "But we couldn't get our hands on the ball."

The Celtics have won 84 of their last 86 games at home.

The victory kept alive Boston's hopes of a repeat title, a feat that has not been accomplished in the NBA since the Celtics did it in 1969.

To win their 17th NBA title, the Celtics will have to beat a Los Angeles team that went 65-17 during the regular season and 11-1 in the first three rounds of the playoffs, including a four-game sweep of the Seattle SuperSonics in the Western Conference final.

IMPROVES RECORD

Boston, improving its record to 13-2 in seventh games at Boston Garden, was forced to seven games by Milwaukee and Detroit.

"I definitely think we're the underdogs," said Ainge, who scored nine of his 18 points in the final 3:05 against Detroit.

"We're not going to lay down and die. Everyone on this team thinks we can beat L.A.".

"I look for some close games here," said Bird. "But out there I'm sure they're going to look to blow us away because we haven't been playing that well on the road. What we've got to do is go out there and try to get the first game."

"Someone asked me who I thought would give the Lakers a better series and I said we would," McHale said. "We may get beat by 41, but we'll come back the next night and play hard for 48 minutes.

"Other teams would pack it in, but we won't quit. We're going to play hard for 48 minutes every game."

Tyson knew Thomas would tire by at least seventh

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Mike Tyson got the picture from watching films of Pinklon Thomas' fights.

Then Thomas got the message in the form of a barrage of power punches in the sixth round of his failed attempt to wrest the World Boxing Council and World Boxing Association heavyweight titles from Tyson Saturday night.

"I knew from watching his previous fights, that he tended to get tired around the seventh round," Tyson, 20, said.

Tyson sensed after five rounds that Thomas, 29, was fading, and while he waited for the sixth round to begin, he told trainer Kevin Rooney, "One more round. One more round."

Midway through the sixth round, of the scheduled 12-round fight, Tyson hurt Thomas with a right uppercut to the jaw. He then smashed a right to the body, then lifted Thomas off the floor with a left hook to the head.

Thomas reeled. Tyson attacked with a flurry of punches that dropped Thomas on his back.

Just before referee Carlos Padilla reached the count of 10, he noticed Thomas' trainer, Angelo Dundee, in the ring and stopped the fight.

Now it's on to an Aug. 1 fight for the undisputed championship against Tony Tucker (35-0).

Tucker succeeded Michael Spinks as the International Boxing Federation heavyweight champion by stopping James "Buster" Douglas in the 10th round on the same Saturday card outdoors at the Las Vegas Hilton.

TITLE STRIPPED

Spinks was stripped of the title for refusing to agree to a mandatory defense against Tucker when he was ranked No. 1 by the IBF. Douglas was ranked second.

While Tyson, a 5½-1 favorite, knew he was in control against Thomas, he also admitted to brief concern.

"I almost had two bum fights in a row," Tyson said. "That's not good financially."

On March 7 here, Tyson, who was paid $2.5 million US for Saturday's fight, won the WBA title on a unanimous decision in a dull 12-round match against James "Bonecrusher" Smith.

Tyson's career of 30 victories in 30 fights, 27 by knockout, spans only 27 months.

It was the second loss for Thomas, who has 29 victories, 24 by knockout, and one draw. He earned $650,000 and weighed 217 3/4 pounds, one pound less than Tyson.

Douglas, a 4-1 underdog, controlled his scheduled 15-round bout against Tucker with a hard left jab for the first seven rounds. Then he tired.

A little more than a minute into the 10th round, Tucker, who weighed 222¼, hurt Douglas, 227¼, with a right to the head.

After about 20 more punches to the head, during which time Douglas did not punch back, referee Mills Lane stopped the fight. The time was 1:36 of the round.

Edmonton takes Stanley Cup for third time in four years

Speedy Oilers prove too talented for spirited Philadelphia

By John Korobanik

EDMONTON (CP) — The Edmonton Oilers continued their flirtation with greatness Sunday, combining opportunistic scoring with a surprisingly-effective defence to win their third Stanley Cup in four years.

And this one, achieved with a heart-stopping 3-1 win over the Philadelphia Flyers in an emotional seventh game, was the sweetest of them all.

"This is the best ever," said defenceman Paul Coffey. "As a team we ... were criticized throughout the season, there was so much stuff said about us.

"This was the hardest one but also the sweetest."

That was the feeling echoed by every Oiler, particularly those who had suffered through the humbling experience of losing to the Calgary Flames in the seventh game of the quarter-final last year.

"That was such a long summer, a long, tough time," captain Wayne Gretzky said of the months following the shocking defeat that occurred when the Oilers were said to be on the verge of a dynasty.

HAVE HEART

While the Flyers had the heart, they didn't have the talent to match the Oilers and they simply had too many injuries to continue the battle.

The Oilers — who finished first overall in the regular season and had advanced steadily to the Stanley Cup final — took a 2-0 leadin games against Philadelphia but then lost three of four games, blowing two-goal leads in all the defeats, to force the seventh and deciding game. It was the first time since 1971 that the final went seven games.

"This is ever sweeter because of the way we did it," said defenceman Kevin Lowe. "In seven games and grind it out.

"We were criticized for defensive lapses ... but we felt confident playing with the lead."

The Flyers scored the opening goal for the first time in the series when Murray Craven beat Fuhr with Philadelphia enjoying an early two-man advantage. It was only the second first-period goal the Flyers had scored.

It turned out to be their last goal.

MAKES SAVES

"I think that Grant (Fuhr) made a lot of key saves tonight in the first period," said Oiler coach Glen Sather. "To come back when you're down 1-0 is tough. But it's a lot tougher for a goaltender because he knows that if he lets in a second shot, it's probably all over with."

The Oilers tied it in the seventh minute on Mark Messier's goal. Jari Kurri scored the winner on Flyers netminder Ron Hextall, who was the winner of the Conn Smythe Trophy for the playoff's most valuable player.

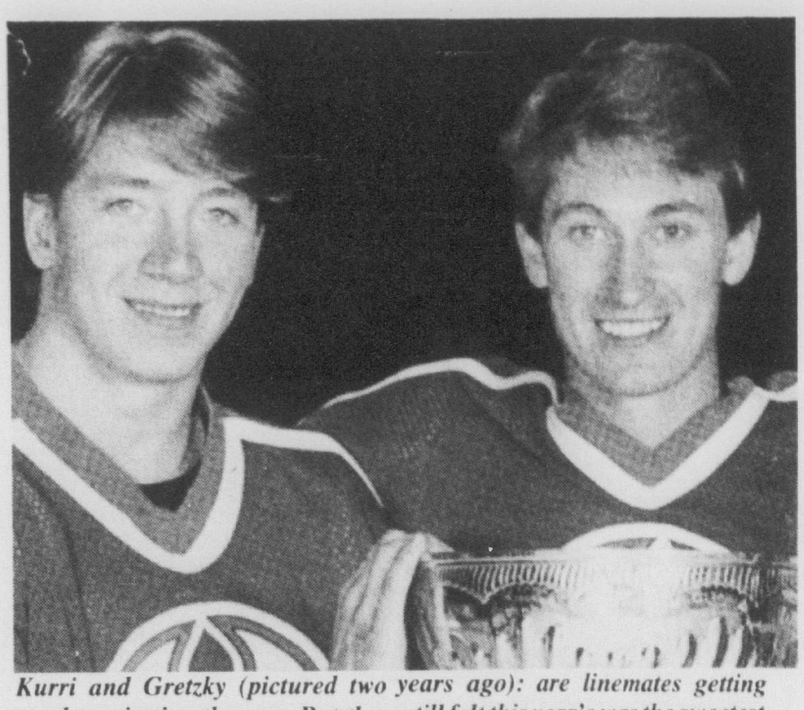

With 2:24 left in the game, Glenn Anderson clinched the championship with his goal.

In the final 20 minutes the Oilers, the most explosive offensive team in NHL history, demonstrated their ability to play defensively as well. They checked the Flyers to a standstill and allowed them only two harmless shots on goal.

"The Oilers played a fabulous hockey game and you have to give them credit for the way they checked in the third period," agreed Flyer coach Mike Keenan. "They just didn't give us an opportunity to get to the net at all."

When the final buzzer sounded the Oilers were all over each other. None was more excited than Gretzky who couldn't wait to get his hands on the Stanley Cup.

"The greatest rush of my life is when I get my hands on the Stanley Cup," he said.

Kurri and Gretzky (pictured two years ago): are linemates getting used to winning the cup. But they still felt this year's was the sweetest.

Oilers shed tears over sweet win

By Mark Lisac

EDMONTON (CP) — Kevin Lowe carried the Stanley Cup off the ice and into the Edmonton Oilers dressing room shouting "Yeah! Yeah!"

Kent Nilsson, tasting an National Hockey League championship for the first time with the team that adopted him this spring in the twilight of a wayward career, marched in sobbing, a fist at his eye wiping away the tears.

Steve Smith, the goat of last year's disastrous playoff against the Calgary Flames, wiped away a drizzle of sweat and said of the Oilers 3-1, seventh-game victory Sunday night over the Philadelphia Flyers, "I can't see anything getting any better than this."

It was the Oilers' third Stanley Cup championship in four years but, to a man, they were more excited about this one.

Team captain Wayne Gretzky, the most honored player in NHL history, the leader of the Oilers' two previous Cup-winning teams, faced the cameras of six television networks and told the world: "I have to rate this one No. 1. It's the greatest day of my life as an athlete."

It was sweet.

MISSES MUCH

"This was the best ever," said defenceman Paul Coffey, who missed much of the season with back spasms.

But that wasn't why Coffey called this Stanley Cup win the best. The Oilers came into this Stanley Cup final with something to prove.

Last year they were supposed to take a third straight Cup but were dumped by the gritty Calgary Flames. The surprising loss got them cast as cocky underachievers.

It made for a rough year, Coffey said.

"Personally, I took a lot of ... from management, from the fans. It was a very tough season."

The whole team put up with abuse and pressure, he said.

"We were criticized throughout the year and we were put in a position that we shouldn't have been in all season."

BLOWS LEADS

After blowing leads to the Flyers in the fifth and sixth games of the final, it looked as if the Oilers could be setting themselves up for another ignominious fall.

But coach Glen Sather told reporters after the game the Oilers had nothing to prove to him.

"I told the team I didn't particularly care whether they won or lost because they're a great hockey team," he said. "But if they wanted to really win they were going to have to push themselves a bit harder."

Missing from the pandemonium was Mark Messier. The big centre scored the first Oilers' goal of the game and kept the Flyers offbalance with hard hits and dangerous rushes.

One leg wrapped in tape as a result of third-period run-in with Flyer defenceman Kjell Samuelsson that left him grimacing in agony, Messier sat on a table in the trainer's room, joking with a handful of teammates and their wives, declining to meet reporters.

End of dream hits Flyers hard

By Walter Krevenchuk

EDMONTON (CP) — The Philadelphia Flyers discovered Sunday that even their heart wasn't big enough to overcome injuries and the Edmonton Oilers' talent.

Facing that reality did not come easy. The Flyers locked themselves away in their dressing room for 30 minutes after losing the Stanley Cup to the Oilers.

"There were a lot of tears shed in here," said defenceman Mark Howe.

Some players were still in tears, unable to gain comfort from the fact the Flyers had done the unexpected and forced the Oilers to the National Hockey League championship limit of seven games.

"It's tough to swallow, really tough," Howe said of the Oilers' 3-1 victory. "It's going to take some time to get over it."

The Flyers, decimated by injuries through the playoffs, rallied from a 3-1 deficit in games to force the first seven-game final since 1971. In each of their victories they had to overcome two-goal deficits.

The never-say-die attitude that had carried the Flyers through a record 26 playoff games was not enough in the face of an outstanding Oilers' effort.

'WE COULD WIN'

"The magic seemed to be with us," Howe said. "We really felt we could win tonight.

"It was a good battle down to the end, but the Oilers played the best 20 minutes of hockey in the last 20 minutes of the game and closed us out."

For defenceman Brad Marsh, forcing the Oilers to a seventh game was not enough to wash away the bitter taste of defeat.

"We gained some respect along the way, but in the end we didn't win anything. We aren't any better off than some of the other teams. Our goal was to win the Cup, and we came up short."

Philadelphia coach Mike Keenan said he was proud of his team, which suffered playoff injuries to 10 players, nine of whom came back to play in the final.

"I've watched a group of young men mature a great deal, mature more than I expected, and to reach a level that will strengthen the organization for years," he said.

Philadelphia players were unanimous in their praise of goaltender Ron Hextall, who won the Conn Smythe Trophy as the most valuable player in the playoffs.

"He's the reason we were here," said defenceman Doug Crossman. "He stood on his head for a lot of hockey the last couple of months."

Even Philadlephia fans are dejected

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Edmonton Oilers cancelled a parade, stymied a mayor's prediction and left souvenir hunters with novelty items proclaiming a Philadelphia Flyers' Stanley Cup championship that never happened.

Many Philadelphians spent Sunday looking forward to victory celebrations that would accompany the NHL team's third Stanley Cup win, but the Oilers' 3-1 victory dashed those hopes.

"I'm disappointed," said Ed McCash, 22, who watched the game at a tavern in northeast Philadelphia. "I thought they were going to go all the way. If they had played the last game in Philadelphia, they would have won."

In the event of a Flyers win, a victory parade was scheduled for downtown, with a rally at JFK Stadium..

"The Flyers are going to win," Philadelphia Mayor W. Wilson Goode proclaimed prior to the game.

Goode wagered three dozen Philadelphia-style pretzels, cheesesteaks and hoagies with Jan Reimer, Edmonton's deputy mayor, on the outcome of the series.

BET BEER

In return, Reimer bet a variety of six packs of Canadian beer and two prime Alberta beefsteaks. Edmonton Mayor Laurence Decore was visiting China and missed Game 7.

By late afternoon Sunday, vendor Al Finnimore said he had sold a grocery cart filled with "Stanley Cup Champion" T-shirts and pennants, and Flyers' hats.

In northeast Philadelphia, residents hung black and orange crepe paper, T-shirts and other Flyers paraphernalia from their homes in preparation for the big game. Wayne Gretzky was hung in effigy from one row house.

Police Capt. Joseph M. Parson said some officers scheduled for the midnight to 8 a.m. shift would be on the streets early Sunday night. He would not say how many extra officers were assigned.

No incidents involving Flyers fans were reported in the half hour following the game, police spokesman Edward Steen said.

"We are totally surprised but not disappointed," Steen said. "I guess everybody's just crying in their beer."

Ron Hextall pleased but not happy

By John Korobanik

EDMONTON (CP) — Ron Hextall, the combative rookie goaltender of the Philadelphia Flyers, became the fourth player from the losing team to win the Conn Smythe Trophy as the most valuable player in the Stanley Cup playoffs.

Hextall — who finished with a record-tying 15 victories, a record-breaking 26 appearances and a 2.76 goals-against average — was named winner of the award Sunday after the Flyers had lost the seventh and deciding game of the championship, 3-1 to the Edmonton Oilers.

"Hextall was without question the best player in the playoffs this year," said Philadelphia coach Mike Keenan. "You can't really describe the effort that he gave, the leadership he showed, the expertise with which he played and the level at which he played throughout the playoffs."

The 23-year-old from Brandon, Man., who was not even expected to make the Flyers' NHL roster this season, is the third goaltender to win the award in his rookie season.

Montreal's Ken Dryden did it in 1971 and Patrick Roy was named last year. The other players from losing teams to win were goaltenders Roger Crozier in 1966, Glenn Hall in 1968 and Philadelphia forward Reg Leach in 1977.

WINS SMYTHE

Hextall is the second Flyer goaltender to win the Smythe — Bernie Parent, now his goaltending coach, won it twice, in 1974 and 1975 — but none of that impressed the emotional young puckstopper.

"It's an honor to win the Conn Smythe but I'd trade it for a Stanley Cup any day," he said. "This would mean a lot more if we had won the Stanley Cup."

Hextall was beaten once in each period Sunday but he kicked out 40 other shots with a strong performance that kept the Flyers close until the final few minutes.

"He was like God out there," said teammate Rick Tocchet. "The guy I feel sad for is Ronnie Hextall. I mean that guy, he was unbelievable. I thought fate was going to give it to him tonight."

Even the Oilers — who were frustrated by his goaltending at times and angered by his stickwork, his chippy play around the goal and his vicious two-handed slash across the back of Kent Nilsson's leg in the fourth game — had praise for Hextall.

"He's a great goaltender," Wayne Gretzky said of the player largely responsible for the injury-riddled Flyers getting past the New York Islanders and the Montreal Canadiens and forcing the Oilers to the maximum limit in the final.

"Hextall's the best goaltender I've ever played against but I've never played against Grant (Fuhr)."

Pooley ends sluggish spell at Memorial

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — It had been seven long years since Don Pooley had won a professional golf tournament.

He had made a comfortable living and become a respected member of the PGA Tour, but when they finished every Sunday his name was never at the top of the list.

"It was frustrating at times," Pooley said. "Any time that you go that long without winning, you have thoughts.

"There were a lot of tournaments that I should have won and didn't. You just start wondering if it's ever going to happen."

Then came Sunday, the culmination of a month of Sundays for Don Pooley, and the final round of the Memorial Tournament at the Muirfield Village Golf Club.

Pooley had a final-round 2-under-par 70 for a 72-hole total of 16-under-par 272 to come back from a four-stroke disadvantage at the start of the day.

Dave Barr of Richmond, B.C., a winnner last week after a long drought, closed with a 71 for a 288 total, eight shots behind. He won $12,222.

Pooley caught third-round leader Scott Hoch on the front side, hung around near the lead through the middle of his round, and then birdied the last two holes to win by three shots over Curt Byrum.

The victory was worth $140,000 to Pooley, who was winless since the 1980 B.C. Open. He did it with rounds of 70, 67, 65 and 70 over the 7,104-yard, par-72 Jack Nicklaus-designed layout.

TAKES LEAD

Pooley took the lead for good when Byrum, the first-round leader with a record-tying 64, bogeyed the 15th hole. Then Pooley put the championship out of reach by hitting a 15-foot putt from the back fringe at 17 for a two-shot lead.

Byrum finished at 13-under 275 and earned $84,000, double his previous best paycheck on the tour.

"You have to give Don a lot of credit," said Byrum, who is still seeking his first victory. "Down the stretch he didn't miss a shot."

What was a dream for Pooley became a continuing nightmare for Hoch.

Hoch piled up the gaudiest number ever at a Memorial through three rounds. After an opening 67, he also shot a 64 for a record 36-hole total of 13-under, 131. A third-round 67 left him with a 54-hole record of 18-under 198 and a four-shot bulge over Pooley.

After going a tournament-record 55 holes without a bogey, Hoch made up for lost time.

Four holes into the final round, Hoch and Pooley were even. Hoch eventually struggled home with a 6-over 78 to tie with Chip Beck and Denis Watson for third place at 12-under 276.

The guest preacher was The Rev. Bro. Dennis Dwyer, whom many will remember from his Mansonville days. Before returning to Knowlton, Mr. Morson and Mr. Seaton met with Bob Farnam, Albert Whitehead and Carl Steinbach, who had also attended, for a splendid dinner at Kenny Wong's.

Her parents had previously prepared a sumptuous cold buffet luncheon, to which everyone did full justice! Patti was the happy recipient of many cards and gifts for this happy occasion.

Stephen Morson would at this time like to express his very deep sorrow and regrets for the cancellation of the Bedford District Masonic Divine Service, which had been scheduled for St. Paul's Church, Knowlton on Sunday afternoon May 17. However, it is to be hoped that this service will take place early this fall, at a date, time, and place to be announced in advance.

He and his lovely wife Molly sang many solos and duets of Country and Western hits. It is suggested that it was a "kick-off" to their Country and Western tour of the southern United States.
