Loving is Everything

By Zachary-Cy Vanasse

You Say Party! We Say Die! are back and busy trekking across Canada in support of their most recent album, XXXX, which was released on independent label Paper Bag Records last month.

The British Columbia band made up of lead singer Becky Ninkovic, bassist Stephen O'Shea, keyboardist Krista Loewen, guitarist Derek Adam and drummer Devon Clifford, are still sounding like their old selves, meaning plenty of new wave influences, pop sensibilities, and big choruses in the vein of fellow West Coast indie scenesters in The New Pornographers. Except now the group sound even more positive.

"Loving is everything," is how they've described not just their new sound, but also their new attitude towards life. After returning from an Asian tour that took them into China and Japan, the group took some time away from music and decided to take a look at their personal lives once more, with the idea that the group would grow from within the individuals. Soon the band members were working with the poor in developing countries, helping to provide care to adults living with disabilities and offering services to the homeless in Vancouver's Downtown East Side.

The group returned to the studio feeling they had taken a refresher course on their own lives, giving them new energy to undertake another album and another tour.

Toby Keith: True blue American redneck

COUNTRY CONNECTION

JESSIE AULIS

Toby Keith has stirred his share of controversy since the release of his 2002 'Courtesy of the Red, White and Blue (The Angry American)', his patriotic reaction to the September 11 tragedy. That song quickly became a political statement easily comparable to Merle Haggard's 'Okie from Muskogee'.

Because of his propensity to express his views bluntly, especially when it comes to political or social matters, many consider him as a true blue redneck. He might be! The critical look he takes at the world, whether it is done in a cynical or humorous way, is always witty, sharp and on the dot.

This leaves country music fans one clear choice to either love Toby Keith or dislike him. We also have to keep in mind that he is a very prolific country superstar whose hard work has kept him on top album after album. He gave us a lot of good country music since he first started.

Right on the heels of 2008's That Don't Make Me a Bad Guy, Keith delivers his sixteenth album titled American Ride. Most of the songs were written or co-written by Toby Keith and Bobby Pinson.

The album's title track is the only song which Keith did not co-write; it was written by Joe West and Dave Pahanish. The story behind 'American Ride' is that the writers gave Keith this song because they considered that he was the only guy in the music industry, who could get away with recording it. 'American Ride' is the first single released and it became Toby Keith's 25th #1.

It is a very upbeat and catchy song, with clever and cynical lyrics. The song looks at American culture, from lawsuits and plastic surgery to terrorism and YouTube. Like it or not that's what goes on today.

Toby Keith: still as good as he ever was

The rest of the album is surprisingly sensitive as Keith sings of broken hearts and the tough life of a musician on the road. It's not easy but well worth it in the end. There's a highly emotional moment on this new album. It comes with 'Cryin' For Me (Wayman's Song)' which is a eulogy for Keith's departed friend Wayman Tisdale, a basketball player and jazz musician.

This farewell is extremely moving and the production, including strings and the sax of Dave Koz, gives it a soft jazz flavour. The lyrics are powerful, written from the heart, and show the softer, more sensitive side of the big man. Sure thing, this is a must hear song!

There's also the catchy pop melody of 'Every Dog Has Its Day', which sounds like classic Toby Keith material. 'Ballad of Balad' is another unique song, which you really need to hear to understand. Here the singer pays a humorous tribute to the troops. This song was inspired by his latest United Service Organization Tour of Iraq.

Rising star: An interview with Howard Shrier

JIM NAPIER

His debut novel, Buffalo Jump, was a strong beginning for the Toronto writer, and I suggested at the time that readers would want to keep an eye out for its sequel. Turned out, that was an understatement. Last June Shrier went to Ottawa to attend the Arthur Ellis Awards; he was there to collect the prize for Best First Novel of 2009. We touched base again recently, and had a chance to discuss his success and his plans.

Your debut novel, Buffalo Jump, was published to great acclaim in 2008. What's happened to you (and it) since then?

It's been an amazing time! After winning the Arthur Ellis Award for Best First Novel, Buffalo Jump sold out its first printing, and a production company acquired the film rights. That gave me more confidence as I was finishing the second book and certainly raised my profile within the crime writing community.

After taking four years to complete your first novel, I understand you promised your publisher the next one in twelve months. Whatever possessed you to commit to that sort of schedule?

My agent and I met with my prospective publishers while they were still considering whether to acquire the first book. They asked if I could keep up the pace of a book a year and, in a classic case of the mouth working faster than the brain, I said yes! The truth is, I did feel up to it. I knew the characters much better by then, and felt I'd honed my craft over four years of writing and revising Buffalo Jump.

Time flies. Almost 18 months have passed since I first reviewed Canadian crime writer Howard Shrier.*

Once you got going, your sequel, High Chicago, took just five months to complete. Would you do it the same way again, or are you planning to take a bit more time with subsequent novels?

My third book required a great deal more research and planning than the others and is taking a bit longer. I'm very close to finishing the first draft, but it won't be ready in time for the summer of 2010.

So you've settled into a pattern of writing now. How do you work? Do you outline or make extensive notes, or just "go with the flow?"

I've found that I need a lot of time at the beginning for ideas to gestate and grow organically. To incubate, if you will. So I research, make notes and slowly build an outline before I start writing the text. I don't outline everything: just enough to know where I'm heading when I set out on the journey. As for my daily routine, I rent a little office in Toronto's Annex neighbourhood. Surrounded by my books, both fiction and reference, I try to write at least 1,000 words every day. Most days I exceed it, sometimes by a little, sometimes by a lot.

Your series features a Toronto-based PI named Jonah Geller. What is his backstory, or personal history?

Jonah is a former soldier, and a martial artist. He was something of a lost soul in his teens and early twenties. His older brother Daniel is everything a Jewish mother wants—a successful lawyer, married with children, a pillar of the Jewish community—whereas Jonah is single and still struggling to establish himself. Jonah was smart but didn't do well at school. He drifted around a bit and, for all the wrong reasons, ended up enlisting in the Israeli army, where his experiences affected him deeply and left him wanting to do some good in the world.

Geller has a female partner, Jenn Raudsepp, but they have a somewhat distant relationship. Will she play a more central role in your stories, or in Geller's life, in the future? And what about Toronto detective Katherine Hollinger? There seem to be some sparks there.

Jenn is Jonah's best friend and business partner, but she's gay, so there is no possibility of romance there. This was a decision I made early on: I didn't want the series to turn into Moonlighting or Cheers—will they or won't they fall into bed one day? I wanted Jonah to be free to fall for other women. He definitely likes Homicide Sergeant Katherine Hollinger, but it's a slow courtship. They were originally going to wind up in bed in book two, but events came up that prevented it from happening. That's how it is sometimes with fiction: your characters or unplanned events spring up and surprise you.

So Geller heads off to The Windy City for his second adventure. But he does- n't sever his ties with Toronto, and in fact calls on a former client to help him out of a jam.

Jonah finds himself overmatched in Chicago, up against a wealthy villain who has seemingly endless resources when it comes to rebuffing Jonah's investigation or making attempts on his life. In Buffalo Jump he makes an unlikely friend in hit man Dante Ryan, and when he realizes how far he's in over his head in Chicago, he knows Ryan's unique skills are exactly what he needs to survive.

So where do you go from here? Tell us a bit about your next novel, which I understand is well underway...

Actually, the third book is a stand-alone thriller, set near Buffalo and told from multiple points of view, about a man who goes into the federal witness protection program to get away from a life of crime and violence, only to find that a corrupt sheriff has other plans for him. Because of the setting and the complexity of the story, and the challenge of writing in a different voice, it has taken longer than High Chicago, but I'm aiming to finish the draft by the end of November.

Combining fast-paced action with well-structured plots, and featuring a complex but likeable protagonist, Shrier's novels are fast winning him legions of loyal fans. If you enjoy contemporary hard-boiled tales with nuanced characters, check out High Chicago; you won't be disappointed.

Resident 'Border' geek loves his gig

Any regular viewer of "The Border" will tell you that there usually seems to be just one person having fun.

And that's Jonas Chernick's character, Heironymous Slade, the computer nerd. Surrounded by sober, gun-toting public servants; slimy careerist agents from Ottawa; and sinister American imperialists, he's the only one who seems to really like his job.

Back for a third season Thursdays on CBC Television, the show deals with a fictitious Canadian Border Services agency that patrols our country's frontiers for everything from terrorists to drug smugglers and gunrunners.

"We do have a lot of fun," says the Winnipeg-born actor. "It rarely feels like work. But, there's no question that it is a serious show in that it's dealing with fairly weighty issues and intense dramatic situations.

"And I think I'm fortunate in that I get to stretch my comedic muscles. I'm the irreverent, more energetic character, and I get to have a lot of fun with that."

Chernick so-stars with James McGowan, Graham Abbey, Catherine Disher, Mark Wilson, Jim Codrington, Grace Park and Sofia Milos.

As Chernick says, it's a cast of "talented actors we've been seeing around for years but who hadn't been given the venue to really show their strokes."

While they're soberly patrolling the airports, borders and ports, he's back in the office with his array of computer screens, thoroughly enjoying his role as government-sanctioned hacker.

And this isn't so very far removed from the way Chernick feels about his place in the cast.

"I'd be happy if this show went on for the rest of my life, I love it so much. First and foremost, I love the stories. I feel like we're telling really compelling and exciting stories.

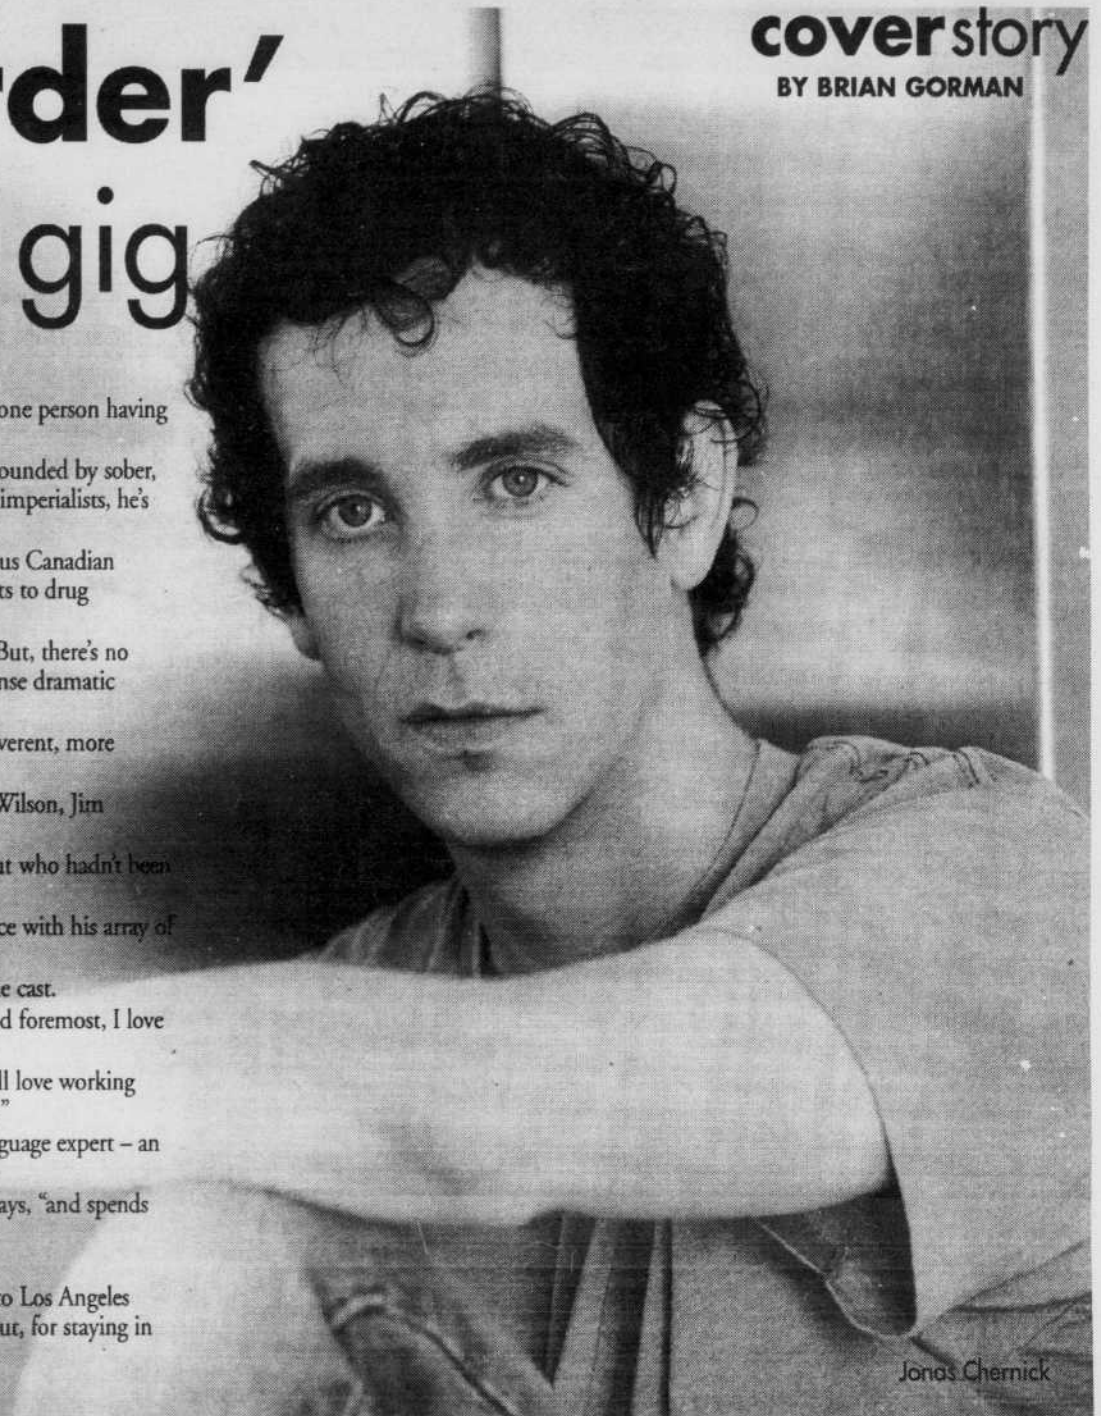

"And the people that I work with are exceptional. It's kind of gross how much we all love working with each other. All the way up to the producers and writers, everybody's really lovely."

This season, Athena Karkanis ("Saw" IV and V) has arrived as Khalida Massi, a language expert – an event that forces Slade into something of a crisis.

"Slade instantly falls head over heels, gut-wrenchingly in love with her," Chernick says, "and spends most of the season trying to woo her.

"Of course, he meets mixed success with that. He does a lot of growing up."

Since "The Border," he says he has been finding less and less reason to head south to Los Angeles every year. He and his wife are expecting their first child – further reason, he points out, for staying in Toronto. Unlike a lot of Canadian actors, however, he says he misses California.

Wanda Sykes takes on late night

The five white male comics hosting late-night and prime-time talk shows often feel interchangeable. Sure, Dave isn't Conan, and the Jimmys (Fallon and Kimmel) have their moments. Jay Leno does, too, less frequently on his new show, but the choices are staid.

Fox hopes to change this with "The Wanda Sykes Show," premiering Saturday, Nov. 7. Heading to the set of CBS' "The New Adventures of Old Christine," where she plays acerbic Barb, and fresh from her latest hilarious HBO special, "I'ma Be Me," Sykes is exhausted from work and caring for the 6-month-old twins she and her wife have, yet exhilarated. The one-hour show hadn't taped at this writing, but Sykes, 45, explains the premise to Zap2it.

Q: Will anything be off limits?

A: No. I told the writers as long as it's relevant, if I can see why we are doing it, it has to be grounded in reality, let's not be mean-spirited. I'm not going to just call somebody fat.

Q: What's the format?

A: I am going to do a monologue. It will be the big story – whatever the hot story is everyone is talking about this week. I have a sidekick, Keith Robinson. We have been friends for over 20 years. He's a very funny comic who opened for me on the road. The audience can see me with my real friends. He pushes my buttons.

Q: So you can riff on anything from reality shows to philandering politicians. Then what happens?

A: Then it's just a big hodgepodge. We're calling it "Wandarama." That will be video clips and photos, doing all of the stories of the week, then a three-minute produced piece, a man-on-the-street or correspondent. This weekend I went to Adultcon, the convention for the porn industry, asking them to go green. What's wrong with a solar-powered vibrator?

Q: That should be rich territory. After the produced piece, what do you do?

A: Then a panel. That's where the drinking begins. There's a bar onstage. And we will have a panel, a pundit or an author and a celebrity and maybe a comedian. Not straight-on interviews, more about whatever pop culture, another pushing the buttons. It will not be interviewing a star about his new movie. It's a little bit like Bill Maher, but not so stiff, more laid-back. Just hanging out with your friends on a Saturday night. Then we have inappropriate games, such as one game we tested and (it) worked – "Gay, Black or Crippled?" We give you a clue and figure out if a person is gay, black or crippled. It sounds like this is just wrong, but it really opens up a discussion. You get to see the guest's thought process, basically how we profile and stereotype.

Sonya Walger

BY JACQUELINE CUTLER

So many people who move to Los Angeles have difficulty adjusting. Sonya Walger of ABC's "FlashForward," airing Thursdays, had the usual troubles.

"I like it tremendously now," she says. "I didn't begin with, I struggled in a way I think lots of people do if you come to London, or any great, great city. It can be very bewildering. L.A. purports to be a city, but is really a collection of villages. The more you realize that and how beautiful the hills are, and how great downtown is, and stop measuring it against other metropolises, the happier you will feel. That and making really wonderful friends here I feel lucky to know and have in my life."

Walger, a native Londoner, camouflages her accent while playing Olivia, the trauma surgeon, on the excellent drama.

"We have to hope that people continue to watch it and continue to enjoy what we are doing," she says. "That is all you can hope for."

Walger relaxes by reading. She studied literature at Oxford and waxes poetic about Henry James. Even as a bookish, urban creature, it wasn't terribly hard to buy into L.A.'s fitness mania.

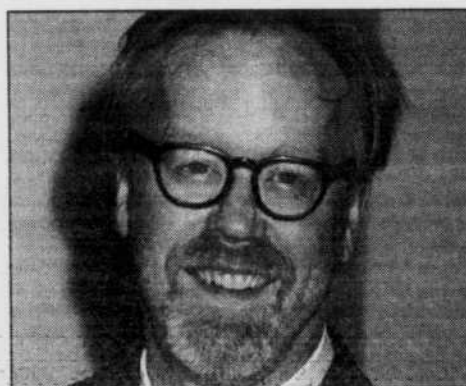

"It's part of the job," she says of keeping fit. "It really is, like having your highlights done. I have wrangled and wailed against it and hated (exercise) in the past. You just have to make peace with it. It's like knowing your lines. I really like being active. I'm not much fun to be around if I have not done something like going for a hike or doing yoga. I'm antsy. It is sort of cathartic in some ways, and the weather here is insanely beautiful. There are canyons throughout the city. Who would have thought you could live in a city and have access to this?"

Birth date: June 6, 1974
Credits: "Lost," "Terminator: The Sarah Connor Chronicles," "Tell Me You Love Me," "Sleeper Cell," "CSI: NY," "Coupling," "The Mind of the Married Man"
Spouse: Davey Holmes, producer and musician
Passions: Cooking and reading. "I like cooking foods that allow me to be with my friends," she says. "I don't cook things that require last-minute assembly. I love making stews and casseroles and lamb shanks that you braise for hours."
Feels at home: Los Angeles, but also in London and Buenos Aires, Argentina, where her dad lives
Languages: Completely fluent in Spanish and well versed in French

"TED Talks: Adam Savage's Obsessions," www.ted.com/talks/adam\_savage\_s\_obsessions.html

The "TED Talks" feature a wide variety of people talking about such subjects as technology, entertainment, design, business, science, global issues and more. In this particular talk, recorded in 2008, the "MythBusters" co-host talks about his fascination with the now-extinct dodo bird and how it led him on a quest to create his own dodo skeleton.

"Tom Green.com: The Channel,"

www.tomgreen.com

The Canadian-born actor, rapper, comedian and media personality first gained national fame on MTV but has moved on to new-media stardom with his own talk show, webcast from his living room in the Hollywood Hills. Guests have included Adam Carolla, Val Kilmer, Pamela Anderson, Xzibit, skateboarder Tony Hawk, Steve-O, Dave Navarro, Crispin Glover, "Weird Al" Yankovic, Andrew Dice Clay, Joe Rogan and Andy Dick. He took a brief hiatus for "The Celebrity Apprentice," but he returned to it after being fired.

OF 'FLASHFORWARD' ON ABC

Q: How does your character feel about his glimpse into the future?

A: As his wife discloses her flash-forward to him, it's a huge smack in the face.

Q: I've read that you enjoy sketching and drawing. Do you still do it?

A: No, the discovery of just how consuming it is, I want it to be professional.

Q: Did you need to learn anything new for this role?

A: I did a lot of gun practice. When everybody is fired up, you want to support your gun. I learned how to handle it. It's good for your confidence. It makes you physically alert.

Q: What do most people not know about you?

A: That I'm a twin.

Q: Do you and your twin have that special bond only twins have?

A: We share about 50 percent of everything. Having shared the womb and bunk beds and birthdays, it doesn't get much more interesting than that.

Q: What's your preferred method of travel?

A: I love motorbikes.

Q: How about a confession?

A: I don't swim.

BY TAYLOR MICHAELS

Q: Could you tell me what Joan Lunden of "Good Morning America" is doing? -G.M. Rech via e-mail

Joan Lunden

A: Lunden, 59, is semiretired and living in Connecticut with her second husband, Jeff Konigsberg, with whom she has four children. She also has three children by previous husband Michael Krauss. Her most recent television work includes appearances on "The Bonnie Hunt Show" and "Rachael Ray." She also serves as host for a series of infomercials for Murad skin-care products.

Q: I had heard that George Eads was involved in a made-for-TV movie about Evel Knievel. Can you tell me if this movie has aired, or will air, or would it be possible to obtain a copy? -Mark Jedan, Mississauga, Ont.

George Eads

A: Eads starred as the flamboyant daredevil and self-promoter in John Badham's 2004 TV movie biography "Evel Knievel" with Jaime Pressly and Lance Henriksen. It aired on the TNT channel in the United States. So far, it has not been released on DVD.

David Tutera and Lauren from 'My Fair Wedding'

Over a lifetime a woman has a closet of important dresses, but nothing comes close to the wedding dress.

For a dress one hopes to wear once, it can be ridiculously expensive. It should be perfect, yet so many are not. That's where David Tutera comes in.

The wedding planner and host of "My Fair Wedding" on WE: Women's Entertainment has been helping brides for 25 years. In the Sunday, Nov. 1, episode, he works with Lauren.

Some of her wedding plans are in such bad taste, her best friends find it hard to tell her. They hate the blindingly bright blue bridesmaids dresses - of different lengths. Her burning-cauldron centerpieces, shields and swords are kitsch, not Renaissance.

Tutera helps pick different dresses. Though one wedding gown certainly does not fit all sizes, Tutera has rules to make all brides look better.

"One of the biggest things is that brides step into a dress and fall in love, and it is 100 percent wrong for their body type," he says. "They need to look for a dress appropriate for their body type. You don't want to be someone full-figured or pear-shaped in a multilayered tulle gown. It will make them look larger."

"Color is another mistake," he says. "There are 200 shades of white. Someone who has a fair complexion - very, very porcelain - is not going to look good in bride white. Someone who is fair needs ivory or antique gold."

Though Tutera has a line of wedding gowns priced between $900 and $1,900, he also steers brides to other designers. For the more expensive weddings, he picks Pnina Tornai. "She has more sparkle - for that bride who is not understated," he says. "Monique Lhuillier is the opposite. She's more organic, softer - for the girl who wants to be understated."

Regardless of the gown, Tutera insists they wear heels.

"I get upset when girls assume you can't see their feet. I tell my brides, 'You are young, you are going to be in the dress for eight hours. You can put your feet up tomorrow and soak in Epsom salts. You are going to wear the most important dress of your life. The shoes need to be broken in. Wear them around the house, so you're not wearing them for first time when you walk down the aisle.'"

Most of the brides he styles wear Manolo Blahniks, Jimmy Choos and Stuart Weitzman.

CLINT EASTWOOD MOVIES

"A Fistful of Dollars" (1964): Not only as the film that brought Eastwood from the small screen ("Rawhide") to international movie stardom, but also as the template for a whole genre, this "spaghetti Western" deserves a spot on this list.

"The Beguiled" (1971): In an image gamble, Eastwood played a Civil War veteran at the mercy of several women.

"Play Misty for Me" (1971): Eastwood proved himself an able debuting director with this "Fatal Attraction"-like tale of a stalked disc jockey.

"Dirty Harry" (1971): A very good year for Eastwood was capped by arguably his most famous role, a maverick San Francisco police detective.

"The Outlaw Josey Wales" (1976): Back in Western mode, Eastwood yielded a genre classic with this saga of a once-peaceable man seeking vengeance.

"Bronco Billy" (1980): Enjoyably playful here, Eastwood had the title role as the operator of a Wild West show whose modus operandi appealed to a stranded, spoiled bride (Sondra Locke).

"Honkytonk Man" (1982): An extremely personal film for Eastwood, this quiet drama cast him as a sickly, small-time musician who gets his shot at performing at the Grand Ole Opry.

"Unforgiven" (1992): Westerns weren't done with Eastwood - and vice versa - thanks to this introspective, Oscar-winning drama of a gunfighter opposing a corrupt sheriff (Gene Hackman).

"In the Line of Fire" (1993): Eastwood played to his age beautifully as a flawed Secret Service agent trying to redeem himself by protecting the U.S. president from a cunning assassin.

"The Bridges of Madison County" (1995): They might have seemed an unlikely pairing, but Eastwood and Meryl Streep were outstanding in director Eastwood's adaptation of novelist Robert James Waller's midlife love story.

"Million Dollar Baby" (2004): Hilary Swank and Morgan Freeman were directed to Oscars by Eastwood, who also starred as a trainer skeptical about taking on an aspiring female boxer (Swank).

"Gran Torino" (2008): Eastwood has said this is the final film he'll act in - and if so, he went out brilliantly as a prejudiced war veteran who develops a very unexpected friendship.

Based on the solid material featured on this album, I think that Keith is an artist who will continue to ride high on the country charts for years to come. His voice is strong and extremely distinctive. Of course he doesn't really care about the so called music industry ethics imposed by Music City but he loves the fans and he knows what they want.

This new album reaches a peak in its softer moments. He croons on the emotional ballad 'Tender as I Want to Be' while he is very convincing on 'Woke Up On My Own' which finds the singer facing his own limitations. Here the guitar work is reminiscent of 70's music.

There are a lot of steel guitars and fiddles with blues-rock flavours on the party song 'Loaded' while the motivational 'If You're Tryin' You Ain't.' offers fantastic gospel-soul back vocals.

The track "Are You Feelin' Me" shows his vulnerability, which is a side of the artist that we don't see too often. Although this album offers a lot of variety, it is not more brilliant than what he has done so far. Indeed, Keith explores new directions but does not re-invent himself.

The man is faithful to his roots and faithful to what made him a success so far. Those who are willing to forget the fact that Toby Keith can at time be bold and that he loves to stir a little controversy are in for a treat because he remains an outstanding singer/songwriter.

Toby Keith Covell was born in Clinton, Oklahoma, in 1961 and grew up on a farm in Moore, just outside of Oklahoma City. The country musicians who played at the supper club his grandmother ran inspired the young man to learn guitar.

He listened to his father's records and fell in love with Merle Haggard's music. You can easily feel Haggard's influence in Keith's music and lyrics.

After graduation, Keith started working in the nearby oil fields.

In the meantime, he formed the Easy Money Band and played country-rock at local venues. After a while, the oil industry hit a major downturn, so Keith went to play semipro football for a USFL farm team.

Following two years as a football player, Keith decided to make music his priority. He cut a few records for independent labels, and his demo tape eventually got him a deal with Mercury.

Keith's self-titled debut album was released in 1993 and made him an out-of-the-box success with its chart-topping single 'Should've Been a Cowboy'. It was the start of a very prolific and lasting career for Toby Keith.
