Judgments Below

Saskatchewan Court of Queen's Bench, [2000] 1 W.W.R. 713

On the preliminary issue of the ownership of the factored accounts, Wimmer J. relied upon the definition of a factoring agreement from Alberta (Treasury Branches) v. M.N.R., [1996] 1 S.C.R. 963, at paras. 30-31. In that case, Cory J. stated at para. 31 that, "A factoring of accounts receivable is based upon an absolute assignment of them. It is in effect a sale by a company of its accounts receivable at a discounted value to the factoring company for immediate consideration."

Digitized by Google

Wimmer J. observed that, according to Alberta (Treasury Branches), an absolute and unconditional assignment of book debts is beyond the reach of the Minister under garnishment provisions. He held further that the assignments from Great West to First Vancouver were absolute and unconditional because, upon completion of the assignments, Great West had no residual rights in the property and could not redeem or recover the accounts and, in that circumstance, Canada Safeway had no liability to Great West after there was a completed transfer of accounts. Although the Minister argued that the assignments were not absolute because under the factoring agreement First Vancouver had recourse to Great West if a customer disputed or failed to pay an account, Wimmer J. noted that the definition of factoring approved by Cory J. contemplated that a factor may acquire an absolute interest in book debts with or without recourse (p. 718). 17 As a result, monies owing on accounts factored prior to February 10, 1999, the date upon which Canada Safeway was served with the RTPs, were not subject to garnishment under s. 224 of the ITA or s. 317 of the Excise Tax Act. However, the two accounts factored after February 10 were effectively intercepted by the RTPs.

With respect to the deemed trust under s. 227(4.1) of the ITA, Wimmer J. applied the reasoning of Burnyeat J. of the British Columbia Supreme Court in Royal Bank v. Tuxedo Transport Ltd. (1999), 6 C.B.R. (4th) 285. Since the Canada Safeway invoices came into existence after the Great West payroll deduction delinquencies arose and were assessed, the invoices were"after-acquired property" not subject to a s. 227(4.1) deemed trust in favour of Her Majesty. Wimmer J. acknowledged that Tuxedo Transport was under appeal. However, he stated that, since the judgment came from a court of comparable jurisdiction, and as he was not satisfied it was wrong, he was prepared to follow that decision.

As a result, Wimmer J. held that amounts owing on accounts factored prior to February 10, 1999, the date upon which the Minister served Canada Safeway with the RTPs, were not subject to garnishment or to a deemed trust pursuant to ss. 224 and 227 of the ITA, or to any claim pursuant to s. 317 of the Excise Tax Act. Consequently, a declaration was made confirming First Vancouver's entitlement to the funds already paid by Canada Safeway to the Minister, with the exception of the funds covered by the two Canada Safeway accounts factored after February 10, 1999, along with costs.

Saskatchewan Court of Appeal, [2000] 8 W.W.R. 386

In a very brief oral decision, the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal dismissed the Minister's appeal, and First Vancouver's cross-appeal, both with costs, finding that the trial judge had not erred in the interpretation of the relevant statutory provisions or in the application of those provisions to the facts of the case.

Issues

A. Is property acquired by an employer after a default in remitting payroll deductions ("after- acquired property") subject to the deemed trust in s. 227(4.1) of the ITA?

B. Does the deemed trust under s. 227(4.1) continue to attach to property which has been sold by the tax debtor to a third party purchaser for value?

Analysis

General Scheme and Background of the Section 227(4.1) Deemed Trust

The collection of source deductions has been recognized as "at the heart" of income tax collection in Canada: see Pembina on the Red Development Corp. v. Triman Industries Ltd. (1991), 85 D.L.R. (4th) 29 (Man. C.A.), at p. 51, per Lyon J.A. (dissenting), quoted with approval by Gonthier J. (dissenting on another issue) in Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 411, at para. 36. Because of the importance of collecting source deductions, the legislation in question gives the Minister the vehicle of the deemed trust to recover employee tax deductions which employers fail to remit to the Minister.

Digitized by Google

It has also been noted that, in contrast to a tax debtor's bank which is familiar with the tax debtor's business and finances, the Minister does not have the same level of knowledge of the tax debtor or its creditors, and cannot structure its affairs with the tax debtor accordingly. Thus, as an"involuntary creditor", the Minister must rely on its ability to collect source deductions under the ITA: Pembina on the Red Development, supra, at pp. 33-34, per Scott C.J.M., approved by Cory J. in Alberta (Treasury Branches), supra, at paras. 16-18. For the above reasons, under the terms of the ITA, the Minister has been given special priority over other creditors to collect unremitted taxes.

This Court had occasion to interpret the deemed trust provisions in Sparrow Electric, supra. At that time, the relevant provisions were ss. 227(4) and 227(5) of the ITA which read as follows:

227. . . .

Every person who deducts or withholds any amount under this Act shall be deemed to hold the amount so deducted or withheld in trust for Her Majesty.

Notwithstanding any provision of the Bankruptcy Act, in the event of any liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy of or by a person, an amount equal to any amount deemed by subsection (4) to be held in trust for Her Majesty . . .

shall be deemed to be separate from and form no part of the estate in liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy, whether or not that amount has in fact been kept separate and apart from the person's own moneys or from the assets of the estate.

In Sparrow Electric, both Royal Bank and the Minister claimed an interest in the proceeds of inventory of the tax debtor. In characterizing the nature of the deemed trust provisions, Gonthier J. (dissenting, but not on this issue) stated at para. 34 that, even if collateral was subject to a fixed charge at the time of a triggering event such as bankruptcy or liquidation, the deemed trust operated to attach the Minister's interest to such collateral as long as it was not subject to the fixed charge at the time the source deductions were made:

Thus, s. 227(5) [now s. 227(4.1)] alternatively permits Her Majesty's interest to attach retroactively to the disputed collateral if the competing security interest has attached after the deductions giving rise to Her Majesty's claim in fact occurred. Conceptually, the s. 227(5) deemed trust allows Her Majesty's claim to go back in time and attach its outstanding s. 227(4) interest to the collateral before that collateral became subject to a fixed charge. [Emphasis in original.]

Royal Bank's interest was characterized as a fixed and specific charge over the inventory of the tax debtor. This had the effect of making the bank the legal owner of inventory as it came into possession of the tax debtor, subject to the debtor's equitable right of redemption. The majority of the Court concluded that, since the inventory was subject to the bank's security interest before the deductions giving rise to the deemed trust occurred, the bank's interest attached to the inventory in priority to Her Majesty's interest under the deemed trust.

However, in reaching this conclusion, the majority of the Court noted at para. 112 that Parliament was free to grant absolute priority to the deemed trust by adopting the appropriate language:

Finally, I wish to emphasize that it is open to Parliament to step in and assign absolute priority to the deemed trust. A clear illustration of how this might be done is afforded by s. 224(1.2) ITA, which vests certain moneys in the Crown "notwithstanding any security interest in those moneys" and provides that they "shall be paid to the Receiver General in priority to any such security interest". All that is needed to effect the desired result is clear language of that kind.

Digitized by Google

In response to Sparrow Electric, the deemed trust provisions were amended in 1998 (retroactively to 1994) to their current form. Most notably, the words "notwithstanding any security interest . . . in the amount so deducted or withheld" were added to s. 227(4). As well, s. 227(4.1) (formerly s. 227(5)) expanded the scope of the deemed trust to include"property held by any secured creditor . . . that but for a security interest . . . would be property of the person". Section 227(4.1) was also amended to remove reference to the triggering events of liquidation, bankruptcy, etc., instead deeming property of the tax debtor and of secured creditors to be held in trust "at any time an amount deemed by subsection (4) to be held by a person in trust for Her Majesty is not paid to Her Majesty in the manner and at the time provided under this Act". Finally, s. 227(4.1) now explicitly deems the trust to operate "from the time the amount was deducted or withheld".

It is apparent from these changes that the intent of Parliament when drafting ss. 227(4) and 227(4.1) was to grant priority to the deemed trust in respect of property that is also subject to a security interest regardless of when the security interest arose in relation to the time the source deductions were made or when the deemed trust takes effect. This is clear from the use of the words "notwithstanding any security interest" in both ss. 227(4) and 227(4.1). In other words, Parliament has reacted to the interpretation of the deemed trust provisions in Sparrow Electric, and has amended the provisions to grant priority to the deemed trust in situations where the Minister and secured creditors of a tax debtor both claim an interest in the tax debtor's property.

As noted above, Parliament has also amended the deemed trust provisions in regard to the timing of the trust. Reference to events triggering operation of the deemed trust such as liquidation or bankruptcy have been removed. Section 227(4.1) now states that the deemed trust begins to operate "at any time [source deductions are] . . . not paid to Her Majesty in the manner and at the time provided under this Act" (emphasis added). Thus, the deemed trust is now triggered at the moment a default in remitting source deductions occurs. Further, pursuant to s. 227(4.1)(a), the trust is deemed to be in effect "from the time the amount was deducted or withheld". Thus, while a default in remitting source deductions triggers the operation of the trust, the trust is deemed to have been in existence retroactively to the time the source deductions were made. It is evident from these changes that Parliament has made a concerted effort to broaden and strengthen the deemed trust in order to facilitate the collection efforts of the Minister.

In light of this overview of the context and operation of the s. 227(4.1) deemed trust, it remains to be determined, first, whether the trust captures property that the tax debtor acquires after the trust is deemed to come into existence, and, second, whether the sale by the tax debtor of trust property effectively releases such property from the purview of the deemed trust.

Does the Deemed Trust Attach to After-Acquired Property of the Tax Debtor?

As noted above, in coming to the conclusion that the deemed trust did not attach to after-acquired property of the tax debtor, the courts below relied on the B.C. Supreme Court decision in Tuxedo Transport, supra. That decision has since been overturned by the B.C. Court of Appeal: Royal Bank v. Tuxedo Transport Ltd. (2000), 79 B.C.L.R. (3d) 1. In that case, Donald J.A., speaking for the court, characterized the trust as follows, at para. 11:

Subsection 227(4) makes the trust operative at the time of the deductions. Subsection 227(4.1) acts to ensure that if deductions are still unpaid when assets come into the hands of the taxpayer, those assets will be deemed to be part of the trust. Beginning with the date the deductions are made the trust continues forward in time and attaches to any property of the debtor as it comes into existence.

Digitized by Google

The Court of Appeal based this conclusion on the plain meaning of the language used in the statute, and was bolstered by its view that, to hold otherwise, would lead to"unacceptable results" (at para. 15), such as the following:

Take the example of a company that makes a payroll deduction one day and receives a large payment the next. The company could carry on business using the unremitted deductions for its operating expenses and the deemed trust could not attach to the monies received shortly after the payday.

I am in essential agreement with the view taken by the B.C. Court of Appeal in Tuxedo Transport. In my view, the plain language of the provisions leads to the inevitable conclusion that the deemed trust attaches to after-acquired property. Most notably, s. 227(4.1) refers expressly to the"proceeds" of property which is subject to the trust and directs that "the proceeds of such property shall be paid to the Receiver General in priority to all . . . security interests [in the property]". In addition, the section states that where, at any time, the debtor is in default to the Minister, that "property of the person . . . equal in value to the amount so deemed to be held in trust is deemed" to be held in trust for Her Majesty (emphasis added). This language implies that Parliament has contemplated a fluidity with respect to the assets of the debtor to which the trust attaches. In particular, reference to the "proceeds" of trust property is an explicit indication that property acquired through the disposition of trust property by the tax debtor after the trust arises is included within the ambit of the trust.

I find additional support for this view in the fact that s. 227(4.1) deems the trust to be in effect "at any time [source deductions are] not paid to Her Majesty in the manner and at the time provided under this Act"(emphasis added). Further, in the event of default, the trust extends back"from the time the amount was deducted or withheld by the person". These words indicate that the intent of the section is to allow the trust to operate in a continuous manner, attaching to any property which comes into the hands of the debtor as long as the debtor continues to be in default, and extending back in time to the moment of the initial deduction. The language Parliament has chosen belies the suggestion that the deemed trust only captures property of the tax debtor in existence at some particular moment in time.

I find no contradiction in coming to the conclusion that after-acquired property can be subject to the trust even though the trust reaches back in time to a point before the acquisition of the property by the tax debtor. This is because the property so acquired will presumably have been taken in exchange for property of equal value which the debtor has disposed of. Thus, the acquired property can simply be viewed as replacing the initial subject matter of the trust. Moreover, since the trust is a deemed statutory trust, it is not governed by common law requirements, and, in this regard, the ongoing acquisition of trust property does not present a conceptual difficulty. I emphasize that it is open to Parliament to characterize the trust in whatever way it chooses; it is not bound by restraints imposed by ordinary principles of trust law.

In addition to being supported by the clear wording of the provisions, this view accords with the purpose of the s. 227(4.1) deemed trust. In this respect, I agree with the B.C. Court of Appeal that Parliament could not have intended an employer who is in default one day and comes into a significant payment the next to thereby largely escape the operation of the deemed trust and continue to use the misappropriated funds in its business dealings. This would not accord with the Parliamentary intention to grant broad powers of collection to the Minister under the deemed trust.

As well, if the deemed trust were limited to property held by the employer at the time of the default, the Minister would have difficulty establishing that any particular part of the employer's property was subject to the deemed trust, and would be forced to engage in a significant degree of tracing. However, as noted by Gonthier J. in Sparrow Electric, at para. 37, one of the purposes of the deemed trust is to eliminate the need for tracing:

Digitized by Google

After considering the matter, it is my view that it is not accurate to describe the mechanism of s. 227(5) as a means of"tracing"; indeed, it would seem that this subsection is antithetical to tracing in the traditional sense, to the extent that it requires no link at all between the subject matter of the trust and the fund or asset which the subject matter is being traced into. . . . [Emphasis added.]

This observation holds true despite the subsequent amendments to the deemed trust provisions. As with the previous enactment of the section, s. 227(4.1) refers to property "equal in value to the amount so deemed to be held in trust" (emphasis added), and states that this property is subject to the trust "whether or not the property has in fact been kept separate and apart". Indeed, if anything, by deeming the trust to be effective "at any time" the debtor is in default, the amendments serve to strengthen the conclusion that the Minister is not required to trace its interest to assets which belonged to the tax debtor at the time the source deductions were made. In this regard, the remarks of Gonthier J. in Sparrow Electric, at para. 31, are apposite:

The trust is not in truth a real one, as the subject matter of the trust cannot be identified from the date of creation of the trust. . . . However, s. 227(5) [now s. 227(4.1)] has the effect of revitalizing the trust whose subject matter has lost all identity. This identification of the subject matter of the trust therefore occurs ex post facto. In this respect, I agree with the conclusion of Twaddle J.A. in Roynat,supra, where he states the effect of s. 227(5) as follows, at p. 647: "Her Majesty has a statutory right of access to whatever assets the employer then has, out of which to realize the original trust debt due to Her". [Emphasis added.]

The reasoning adopted by the courts below would require substantial tracing, as the deemed trust would be restricted to include only property held by the tax debtor on the date the source deductions were made. With respect, this is not in accord with the language or purpose of the deemed trust.

In conclusion, based on the plain language of ss. 227(4) and 227(4.1) as supported by the purpose of the provisions and intentions of Parliament, the deemed trust created by these sections encompasses property which comes into the hands of the tax debtor after the trust arises. As a result, when Great West came into possession of the Canada Safeway invoices, the deemed trust, which had already arisen as a consequence of Great West's default in remittances, successfully attached to those invoices.

Does the Deemed Trust Continue to Operate on Property Which Has Been Sold by the Tax Debtor to Third Parties?

As a preliminary matter, I note that the Minister does not take issue with the chambers judge's holding, following Alberta (Treasury Branches),supra, that First Vancouver is not a secured creditor of Great West, but a third party purchaser of book debts. Thus, the question of the priority of secured creditors does not arise. The issue here is whether the alienation by Great West of the Canada Safeway invoices, which were subject to the deemed trust under ss. 227(4) and 227(4.1), served to release that property from the scope of the trust.

In my view, the scheme envisioned by Parliament in enacting ss. 227(4) and 227(4.1) is that the deemed trust is in principle similar to a floating charge over all the assets of the tax debtor in the amount of the default. As noted above, the trust has priority from the time the source deductions are made, and remains in existence as long as the default continues. However, the trust does not attach specifically to any particular assets of the tax debtor so as to prevent their sale. As such, the debtor is free to alienate its property in the ordinary course, in which case the trust property is replaced by the proceeds of sale of such property.

Digitized by Google

This interpretation finds support in both the words used in ss. 227(4) and 227 (4.1) and the purpose of the deemed trust. In my opinion, s. 227(4.1) explicitly restricts the trust to property owned by the tax debtor by stating that the property of the tax debtor held in trust for Her Majesty "is property beneficially owned by Her Majesty . . . and the proceeds of such property shall be paid to the Receiver General" (emphasis added). This reference to the proceeds of trust property is an acknowledgment in the very words of the ITA that Parliament contemplated that a tax debtor is free to alienate its property and that, when it does so, the trust releases the disposed-of property and attaches to the proceeds of sale. In addition, as discussed above, the trust does not attach to any specific property. Instead, by s. 227(4.1), the trust attaches to "property of the [tax debtor] . . . equal in value to the amount [of the tax debt]". This language indicates, first, that the subject matter of the trust is focussed solely on the tax debtor's property, and, second, that it is anticipated that the character of the tax debtor's property will change over time.

Indeed, it is the logical corollary to my conclusion on the first issue, namely that the deemed trust attaches to after-acquired property of the tax debtor, that the trust also releases property alienated by the tax debtor. In this way, when an asset is sold by the tax debtor, the deemed trust ceases to operate over that asset; however, the property received by the tax debtor in exchange becomes subject to the deemed trust. As such, the trust is neither depleted nor enhanced; it simply floats over the property belonging to the tax debtor at any given time, for as long as the default in remittances continues.

Although it would be open to Parliament to extend the trust to property alienated by the tax debtor, such an interpretation is simply not supported by the language of the ITA. It is significant in this regard that purchasers for value are not included in ss. 227(4) and 227(4.1) whereas secured creditors are. In Pembina on the Red Development, supra, Twaddle J.A. took note of the "long-established principle of law that, in the absence of clear language to the contrary, a tax on one person cannot be collected out of property belonging to another" (p. 46). In Sparrow Electric, supra, at para. 39, Gonthier J. also referred to this principle, stating that:

[T]his provision does not permit Her Majesty to attach Her beneficial interest to property which, at the time of liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy, in law belongs to a party other than the tax debtor. Section 227(4) and (5) are manifestly directed towards the property of the tax debtor, and it would be contrary to well-established authority to stretch the interpretation of s. 227(5) [now s. 227(4.1)] to permit the expropriation of the property of third parties who are not specifically mentioned in the statute. [Emphasis added.]

Thus, in the absence of an express reference to third party purchasers, there is no basis upon which to allow the Minister's interest in the tax debtor's property to continue once such property has been sold to third parties.

Although it is not necessary to resort to policy arguments, in my view it is worthwhile noting that to allow s. 227(4.1) to override the rights of purchasers for value would result in an unprecedented level of uncertainty. In fact, in oral argument, counsel for the Minister conceded that such an interpretation would, in theory, allow the Minister to go so far as to assert an interest in assets sold by tax debtors to ordinary consumers. In my view, it is no exaggeration to say that adopting this interpretation of the deemed trust would have a general chilling effect on commercial transactions.

Furthermore, to allow the deemed trust to attach to property sold to third parties would be more likely to hinder, rather than help, the Minister's collection efforts. For example, in the case at bar, if First Vancouver had thought that it could not purchase Great West's assets free and clear of Her Majesty's claim, it would have been unlikely to have entered into the factoring agreement with Great West. As a result, Her Majesty would not have received the semi-monthly payments of $10,000 from First Vancouver. More generally, the interpretation advocated by the Minister would likely frustrate the ability of a tax debtor to convert hard assets into cash in order to pay "the proceeds of such property . . . to the Receiver General" as contemplated by s. 227(4.1), because prospective purchasers would fear that the Minister would assert an interest in these assets. The practical effect of this would be to freeze the tax debtor's assets and prevent it from carrying on business. In my view, this is clearly not a result intended by Parliament.

Digitized by Google

In summary, the deemed trust does not operate over assets which a tax debtor has sold in the ordinary course to third party purchasers. As such, once the Canada Safeway invoices had been factored to First Vancouver, the Minister was prevented from asserting its interest in these invoices.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Century Services Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2010 SCC 60, [2010] 3 S.C.R. 379 – Company's Creditors Arrangement Act Considerations

> Bankruptcy and Insolvency — Priorities — Crown applying on eve of bankruptcy of debtor company to have GST monies held in trust paid to Receiver General of Canada — Whether deemed trust in favour of Crown under Excise Tax Act prevails over provisions of Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act purporting to nullify deemed trusts in favour of Crown — Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36, s. 18.3(1) — Excise Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. E-15, s. 222(3).
>
> Bankruptcy and insolvency — Procedure — Whether chambers judge had authority to make order partially lifting stay of proceedings to allow debtor company to make assignment in bankruptcy and to stay Crown's right to enforce GST deemed trust — Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36, s. 11.
>
> Trusts — Express trusts — GST collected but unremitted to Crown — Judge ordering that GST be held by Monitor in trust account — Whether segregation of Crown's GST claim in Monitor's account created an express trust in favour of Crown.
>
> The debtor company commenced proceedings under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act ("CCAA"), obtaining a stay of proceedings to allow it time to reorganize its financial affairs. One of the debtor company's outstanding debts at the commencement of the reorganization was an amount of unremitted Goods and Services Tax ("GST") payable to the Crown. Section 222(3) of the Excise Tax Act ("ETA") created a deemed trust over unremitted GST, which operated despite any other enactment of Canada except the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act ("BIA"). However, s. 18.3(1) of the CCAA provided that any statutory deemed trusts in favour of the Crown did not operate under the CCAA, subject to certain exceptions, none of which mentioned GST.
>
> Pursuant to an order of the CCAA chambers judge, a payment not exceeding $5 million was approved to the debtor company's major secured creditor, Century Services. However, the chambers judge also ordered the debtor company to hold back and segregate in the Monitor's trust account an amount equal to the unremitted GST pending the outcome of the reorganization. On concluding that reorganization was not possible, the debtor company sought leave of the court to partially lift the stay of proceedings so it could make an assignment in bankruptcy under the BIA. The Crown moved for immediate payment of unremitted GST to the Receiver General. The chambers judge denied the Crown's motion, and allowed the assignment in bankruptcy. The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal on two grounds. First, it reasoned that once reorganization efforts had failed, the chambers judge was bound under the priority scheme provided by the ETA to allow payment of unremitted GST to the Crown and had no discretion under s. 11 of the CCAA to continue the stay against the Crown's claim. Second, the Court of Appeal concluded that by ordering the GST funds segregated in the Monitor's trust account, the chambers judge had created an express trust in favour of the Crown.

Digitized by Google

Held (Abella J. dissenting): The appeal should be allowed.

Per McLachlin C.J. and Binnie, LeBel, Deschamps, Charron, Rothstein and Cromwell JJ.: The apparent conflict between s. 222(3) of the ETA and s. 18.3(1) of the CCAA can be resolved through an interpretation that properly recognizes the history of the CCAA, its function amidst the body of insolvency legislation enacted by Parliament and the principles for interpreting the CCAA that have been recognized in the jurisprudence. The history of the CCAA distinguishes it from the BIA because although these statutes share the same remedial purpose of avoiding the social and economic costs of liquidating a debtor's assets, the CCAA offers more flexibility and greater judicial discretion than the rules-based mechanism under the BIA, making the former more responsive to complex reorganizations. Because the CCAA is silent on what happens if reorganization fails, the BIA scheme of liquidation and distribution necessarily provides the backdrop against which creditors assess their priority in the event of bankruptcy. The contemporary thrust of legislative reform has been towards harmonizing aspects of insolvency law common to the CCAA and the BIA, and one of its important features has been a cutback in Crown priorities. Accordingly, the CCAA and the BIA both contain provisions nullifying statutory deemed trusts in favour of the Crown, and both contain explicit exceptions exempting source deductions deemed trusts from this general rule. Meanwhile, both Acts are harmonious in treating other Crown claims as unsecured. No such clear and express language exists in those Acts carving out an exception for GST claims. When faced with the apparent conflict between s. 222(3) of the ETA and s. 18.3(1) of the CCAA, courts have been inclined to follow Ottawa Senators Hockey Club Corp. (Re) and resolve the conflict in favour of the ETA. Ottawa Senators should not be followed. Rather, the CCAA provides the rule. Section 222(3) of the ETA evinces no explicit intention of Parliament to repeal CCAA s. 18.3. Where Parliament has sought to protect certain Crown claims through statutory deemed trusts and intended that these deemed trusts continue in insolvency, it has legislated so expressly and elaborately. Meanwhile, there is no express statutory basis for concluding that GST claims enjoy a preferred treatment under the CCAA or the BIA. The internal logic of the CCAA appears to subject a GST deemed trust to the waiver by Parliament of its priority. A strange asymmetry would result if differing treatments of GST deemed trusts under the CCAA and the BIA were found to exist, as this would encourage statute shopping, undermine the CCAA's remedial purpose and invite the very social ills that the statute was enacted to avert. The later in time enactment of the more general s. 222(3) of the ETA does not require application of the doctrine of implied repeal to the earlier and more specific s. 18.3(1) of the CCAA in the circumstances of this case. In any event, recent amendments to the CCAA in 2005 resulted in s. 18.3 of the Act being renumbered and reformulated, making it the later in time provision. This confirms that Parliament's intent with respect to GST deemed trusts is to be found in the CCAA. The conflict between the ETA and the CCAA is more apparent than real.

Digitized by Google

The exercise of judicial discretion has allowed the CCAA to adapt and evolve to meet contemporary business and social needs. As reorganizations become increasingly complex, CCAA courts have been called upon to innovate. In determining their jurisdiction to sanction measures in a CCAA proceeding, courts should first interpret the provisions of the CCAA before turning to their inherent or equitable jurisdiction. Noteworthy in this regard is the expansive interpretation the language of the CCAA is capable of supporting. The general language of the CCAA should not be read as being restricted by the availability of more specific orders. The requirements of appropriateness, good faith and due diligence are baseline considerations that a court should always bear in mind when exercising CCAA authority. The question is whether the order will usefully further efforts to avoid the social and economic losses resulting from liquidation of an insolvent company, which extends to both the purpose of the order and the means it employs. Here, the chambers judge's order staying the Crown's GST claim was in furtherance of the CCAA's objectives because it blunted the impulse of creditors to interfere in an orderly liquidation and fostered a harmonious transition from the CCAA to the BIA, meeting the objective of a single proceeding that is common to both statutes. The transition from the CCAA to the BIA may require the partial lifting of a stay of proceedings under the CCAA to allow commencement of BIA proceedings, but no gap exists between the two statutes because they operate in tandem and creditors in both cases look to the BIA scheme of distribution to foreshadow how they will fare if the reorganization is unsuccessful. The breadth of the court's discretion under the CCAA is sufficient to construct a bridge to liquidation under the BIA. Hence, the chambers judge's order was authorized.

No express trust was created by the chambers judge's order in this case because there is no certainty of object inferrable from his order. Creation of an express trust requires certainty of intention, subject matter and object. At the time the chambers judge accepted the proposal to segregate the monies in the Monitor's trust account there was no certainty that the Crown would be the beneficiary, or object, of the trust because exactly who might take the money in the final result was in doubt. In any event, no dispute over the money would even arise under the interpretation of s. 18.3(1) of the CCAA established above, because the Crown's deemed trust priority over GST claims would be lost under the CCAA and the Crown would rank as an unsecured creditor for this amount.

Per* Fish J.: The GST monies collected by the debtor are not subject to a deemed trust or priority in favour of the Crown. In recent years, Parliament has given detailed consideration to the Canadian insolvency scheme but has declined to amend the provisions at issue in this case, a deliberate exercise of legislative discretion. On the other hand, in upholding deemed trusts created by the ETA notwithstanding insolvency proceedings, courts have been unduly protective of Crown interests which Parliament itself has chosen to subordinate to competing prioritized claims. In the context of the Canadian insolvency regime, deemed trusts exist only where there is a statutory provision creating the trust and a CCAA or BIA provision explicitly confirming its effective operation. The Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan and the Employment Insurance Act all contain deemed trust provisions that are strikingly similar to that in s. 222 of the ETA but they are all also confirmed in s. 37 of the CCAA and in s. 67(3) of the BIA in clear and unmistakeable terms. The same is not true of the deemed trust created under the ETA. Although Parliament created a deemed trust in favour of the Crown to hold unremitted GST monies, and although it purports to maintain this trust notwithstanding any contrary federal or provincial legislation, it did not confirm the continued operation of the trust in either the BIA or the CCAA, reflecting Parliament's intention to allow the deemed trust to lapse with the commencement of insolvency proceedings.

Digitized by Google

Per* Abella J. (dissenting): Section 222(3) of the ETA gives priority during CCAA proceedings to the Crown's deemed trust in unremitted GST. This provision unequivocally defines its boundaries in the clearest possible terms and excludes only the BIA from its legislative grasp. The language used reflects a clear legislative intention that s. 222(3) would prevail if in conflict with any other law except the BIA. This is borne out by the fact that following the enactment of s. 222(3), amendments to the CCAA were introduced, and despite requests from various constituencies, s. 18.3(1) was not amended to make the priorities in the CCAA consistent with those in the BIA. This indicates a deliberate legislative choice to protect the deemed trust in s. 222(3) from the reach of s. 18.3(1) of the *CCAA.

The application of other principles of interpretation reinforces this conclusion. An earlier, specific provision may be overruled by a subsequent general statute if the legislature indicates, through its language, an intention that the general provision prevails. Section 222(3) achieves this through the use of language stating that it prevails despite any law of Canada, of a province, or "any other law" other than the BIA. Section 18.3(1) of the CCAA is thereby rendered inoperative for purposes of s. 222(3). By operation of s. 44(f) of the Interpretation Act, the transformation of s. 18.3(1) into s. 37(1) after the enactment of s. 222(3) of the ETA has no effect on the interpretive queue, and s. 222(3) of the ETA remains the "later in time" provision. This means that the deemed trust provision in s. 222(3) of the ETA takes precedence over s. 18.3(1) during CCAA proceedings. While s. 11 gives a court discretion to make orders notwithstanding the BIA and the Winding-up Act, that discretion is not liberated from the operation of any other federal statute. Any exercise of discretion is therefore circumscribed by whatever limits are imposed by statutes other than the BIA and the Winding-up Act. That includes the ETA. The chambers judge in this case was, therefore, required to respect the priority regime set out in s. 222(3) of the ETA. Neither s. 18.3(1) nor s. 11 of the CCAA gave him the authority to ignore it. He could not, as a result, deny the

Digitized by Google

Crown's request for payment of the GST funds during the CCAA proceedings.

Cases Cited

By Deschamps J.

Overruled: Ottawa Senators Hockey Club Corp. (Re) (2005), 73 O.R. (3d) 737; distinguished: Doré v. Verdun (City), [1997] 2 S.C.R. 862; referred to: Reference re Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, [1934] S.C.R. 659; Quebec (Revenue) v. Caisse populaire Desjardins de Montmagny, 2009 SCC 49, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 286; Deputy Minister of Revenue v. Rainville, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 35; Gauntlet Energy Corp., Re, 2003 ABQB 894, 30 Alta. L.R. (4th) 192; Komunik Corp. (Arrangement relatif à), 2009 QCCS 6332 (CanLII), leave to appeal granted, 2010 QCCA 183 (CanLII); Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 411; First Vancouver Finance v. M.N.R., 2002 SCC 49, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 720; Solid Resources Ltd., Re (2002), 40 C.B.R. (4th) 219; Metcalfe & Mansfield Alternative Investments II Corp. (Re), 2008 ONCA 587, 92 O.R. (3d) 513; Dylex Ltd., Re (1995), 31 C.B.R. (3d) 106; Elan Corp. v. Comiskey (1990), 41 O.A.C. 282; Chef Ready Foods Ltd. v. Hongkong Bank of Can. (1990), 51 B.C.L.R. (2d) 84; Pacific National Lease Holding Corp., Re (1992), 19 B.C.A.C. 134; Canadian Airlines Corp., Re, 2000 ABQB 442, 84 Alta. L.R. (3d) 9; Air Canada, Re (2003), 42 C.B.R. (4th) 173; Air Canada, Re, 2003 CanLII 49366; Canadian Red Cross Society/Société Canadienne de la Croix Rouge, Re (2000), 19 C.B.R. (4th) 158; Skydome Corp., Re (1998), 16 C.B.R. (4th) 118; United Used Auto & Truck Parts Ltd., Re, 2000 BCCA 146, 135 B.C.A.C. 96, aff'g (1999), 12 C.B.R. (4th) 144; Skeena Cellulose Inc., Re, 2003 BCCA 344, 13 B.C.L.R. (4th) 236; Stelco Inc. (Re) (2005), 75 O.R. (3d) 5; Philip's Manufacturing Ltd., Re (1992), 9 C.B.R. (3d) 25; Ivaco Inc. (Re) (2006), 83 O.R. (3d) 108.

By Fish J.

Referred to: Ottawa Senators Hockey Club Corp. (Re) (2005), 73 O.R. (3d) 737.

By Abella J. (dissenting)

Ottawa Senators Hockey Club Corp. (Re) (2005), 73 O.R. (3d) 737; Tele-Mobile Co. v. Ontario, 2008 SCC 12, [2008] 1 S.C.R. 305; Doré v. Verdun (City), [1997] 2 S.C.R. 862; Attorney General of Canada v. Public Service Staff Relations Board, [1977] 2 F.C. 663.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

An Act to establish the Wage Earner Protection Program Act, to amend the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, S.C. 2005, c. 47, ss. 69, 128, 131.

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, ss. 67, 81.1, 81.2, 86 [am. 1992, c. 27, s. 39; 1997, c. 12, s. 73; 2000, c. 30, s. 148; 2005, c. 47, s. 69; 2009, c. 33, s. 25].

Canada Pension Plan, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-8, s. 23.

Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36, ss. 11 [am. 2005, c. 47, s. 128], 11.02 [ad. idem], 11.09 [ad. idem], 11.4 [am. idem], 18.3 [ad. 1997, c. 12, s. 125; rep. 2005, c. 47, s. 131], 18.4 [idem], 20 [am. 2005, c. 47, s. 131], 21 [ad. 1997, c. 12, s. 126; am. 2005, c. 47, s. 131], s. 37 [ad. 2005, c. 47, s. 131].

Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1933, S.C. 1932-33, c. 36 [am. 1952-53, c. 3].

Digitized by Google

Employment Insurance Act, S.C. 1996, c. 23, ss. 86(2), (2.1).
Excise Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. E-15, s. 222.
Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.), ss. 227(4), (4.1).
Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, ss. 2 "enactment", 44(f).
Winding-up Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. W-11.

Authors Cited

Canada. Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy and Insolvency. Proposed Bankruptcy Act Amendments: Report of the Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy and Insolvency. Ottawa: Minister of Supply and Services Canada, 1986.

Canada. House of Commons. Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations, Issue No. 15, 3rd Sess., 34th Parl., October 3, 1991, 15:15.

Canada. Industry Canada. Marketplace Framework Policy Branch. Report on the Operation and Administration of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act. Ottawa: Corporate and Insolvency Law Policy Directorate, 2002.

Canada. Senate. Debates of the Senate, vol. 142, 1st Sess., 38th Parl., November 23, 2005, p. 2147.

Canada. Senate. Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. Debtors and Creditors Sharing the Burden: A Review of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act. Ottawa: Senate of Canada, 2003.

Canada. Study Committee on Bankruptcy and Insolvency Legislation. Bankruptcy and Insolvency: Report of the Study Committee on Bankruptcy and Insolvency Legislation. Ottawa: Information Canada, 1970.

Côté, Pierre-André. The Interpretation of Legislation in Canada, 3rd ed. Scarborough, Ont.: Carswell, 2000.

Côté, Pierre-André, avec la collaboration de Stéphane Beaulac et Mathieu Devinat. Interprétation des lois, 4e éd. Montréal: Thémis, 2009.

Edwards, Stanley E. "Reorganizations Under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act" (1947), 25 Can. Bar Rev. 587.

Insolvency Institute of Canada and Canadian Association of Insolvency and Restructuring Professionals. Joint Task Force on Business Insolvency Law Reform. Report (2002) (online: http://www.cairp.ca/publications/submissions-to-government/law-reform/index.php).

Insolvency Institute of Canada and Canadian Association of Insolvency and Restructuring Professionals. Legislative Review Task Force (Commercial). Report on the Commercial Provisions of Bill C-55 (2005).

Jackson, Georgina R. and Janis Sarra. "Selecting the Judicial Tool to get the Job Done: An Examination of Statutory Interpretation, Discretionary Power and Inherent Jurisdiction in Insolvency Matters", in Janis P. Sarra, ed., Annual Review of Insolvency Law 2007. Toronto: Thomson Carswell, 2008, 41.

Jones, Richard B. "The Evolution of Canadian Restructuring: Challenges for the Rule of Law", in Janis P. Sarra, ed., Annual Review of Insolvency Law 2005. Toronto: Thomson Carswell, 2006, 481.

Lamer, Francis L. Priority of Crown Claims in Insolvency. Toronto: Carswell, 1996 (loose-leaf updated 2010, release 1).

Morgan, Barbara K. "Should the Sovereign be Paid First? A Comparative International Analysis of the Priority for Tax Claims in Bankruptcy" (2000), 74 Am. Bankr. L.J. 461.

Digitized by Google

Sarra, Janis. Creditor Rights and the Public Interest: Restructuring Insolvent Corporations. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2003.
Sarra, Janis P. Rescue! The Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act. Toronto: Thomson Carswell, 2007.
Sullivan, Ruth. Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes, 5th ed. Markham, Ont.: LexisNexis, 2008.
Waters, Donovan W. M., Mark R. Gillen and Lionel D. Smith, eds. Waters' Law of Trusts in Canada, 3rd ed. Toronto: Thomson Carswell, 2005.
Wood, Roderick J. Bankruptcy and Insolvency Law. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2009.

APPEAL from a judgment of the British Columbia Court of Appeal (Newbury, Tysoe and Smith JJ.A.), 2009 BCCA 205, 98 B.C.L.R. (4th) 242, 270 B.C.A.C. 167, 454 W.A.C. 167, [2009] 12 W.W.R. 684, [2009] G.S.T.C. 79, [2009] B.C.J. No. 918 (QL), 2009 CarswellBC 1195, reversing a judgment of Brenner C.J.S.C., 2008 BCSC 1805, [2008] G.S.T.C. 221, [2008] B.C.J. No. 2611 (QL), 2008 CarswellBC 2895, dismissing a Crown application for payment of GST monies. Appeal allowed, Abella J. dissenting.

Mary I. A. Buttery, Owen J. James and Matthew J. G. Curtis, for the appellant.

Gordon Bourgard, David Jacyk and Michael J. Lema, for the respondent.

The judgment of McLachlin C.J. and Binnie, LeBel, Deschamps, Charron, Rothstein and Cromwell JJ. was delivered by

[1] DESCHAMPS J. — For the first time this Court is called upon to directly interpret the provisions of the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 ("CCAA"). In that respect, two questions are raised. The first requires reconciliation of provisions of the CCAA and the Excise Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. E-15 ("ETA"), which lower courts have held to be in conflict with one another. The second concerns the scope of a court's discretion when supervising reorganization. The relevant statutory provisions are reproduced in the Appendix. On the first question, having considered the evolution of Crown priorities in the context of insolvency and the wording of the various statutes creating Crown priorities, I conclude that it is the CCAA and not the ETA that provides the rule. On the second question, I conclude that the broad discretionary jurisdiction conferred on the supervising judge must be interpreted having regard to the remedial nature of the CCAA and insolvency legislation generally. Consequently, the court had the discretion to partially lift a stay of proceedings to allow the debtor to make an assignment under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 ("BIA"). I would allow the appeal.

Facts and Decisions of the Courts Below

[2] Ted LeRoy Trucking Ltd. ("LeRoy Trucking") commenced proceedings under the CCAA in the Supreme Court of British Columbia on December 13, 2007, obtaining a stay of proceedings with a view to reorganizing its financial affairs. LeRoy Trucking sold certain redundant assets as authorized by the order.

[3] Amongst the debts owed by LeRoy Trucking was an amount for Goods and Services Tax ("GST") collected but unremitted to the Crown. The ETA creates a deemed trust in favour of the Crown for amounts collected in respect of GST. The deemed trust extends to any property or proceeds held by the person collecting GST and any property of that person held by a secured creditor, requiring that property to be paid to the Crown in priority to all security interests. The ETA provides that the deemed trust operates despite any other enactment of Canada except the BIA. However, the CCAA also provides that subject to certain exceptions, none of which mentions GST, deemed trusts in favour of the Crown do not operate under the CCAA. Accordingly, under the CCAA the Crown ranks as an unsecured creditor in respect of GST. Nonetheless, at the time LeRoy Trucking commenced CCAA proceedings the leading line of jurisprudence held that the ETA took precedence over the CCAA such that the Crown enjoyed priority for GST claims under the CCAA, even though it would have lost that same priority under the BIA. The CCAA underwent substantial amendments in 2005 in which some of the provisions at issue in this appeal were renumbered and reformulated (S.C. 2005, c. 47). However, these amendments only came into force on September 18, 2009. I will refer to the amended provisions only where relevant.

Digitized by Google

[4] On April 29, 2008, Brenner C.J.S.C., in the context of the CCAA proceedings, approved a payment not exceeding $5 million, the proceeds of redundant asset sales, to Century Services, the debtor's major secured creditor. LeRoy Trucking proposed to hold back an amount equal to the GST monies collected but unremitted to the Crown and place it in the Monitor's trust account until the outcome of the reorganization was known. In order to maintain the status quo while the success of the reorganization was uncertain, Brenner C.J.S.C. agreed to the proposal and ordered that an amount of $305,202.30 be held by the Monitor in its trust account.

[5] On September 3, 2008, having concluded that reorganization was not possible, LeRoy Trucking sought leave to make an assignment in bankruptcy under the BIA. The Crown sought an order that the GST monies held by the Monitor be paid to the Receiver General of Canada. Brenner C.J.S.C. dismissed the latter application. Reasoning that the purpose of segregating the funds with the Monitor was "to facilitate an ultimate payment of the GST monies which were owed pre-filing, but only if a viable plan emerged", the failure of such a reorganization, followed by an assignment in bankruptcy, meant the Crown would lose priority under the BIA (2008 BCSC 1805, [2008] G.S.T.C. 221).

[6] The Crown's appeal was allowed by the British Columbia Court of Appeal (2009 BCCA 205, 270 B.C.A.C. 167). Tysoe J.A. for a unanimous court found two independent bases for allowing the Crown's appeal.

[7] First, the court's authority under s. 11 of the CCAA was held not to extend to staying the Crown's application for immediate payment of the GST funds subject to the deemed trust after it was clear that reorganization efforts had failed and that bankruptcy was inevitable. As restructuring was no longer a possibility, staying the Crown's claim to the GST funds no longer served a purpose under the CCAA and the court was bound under the priority scheme provided by the ETA to allow payment to the Crown. In so holding, Tysoe J.A. adopted the reasoning in Ottawa Senators Hockey Club Corp. (Re) (2005), 73 O.R. (3d) 737 (C.A.), which found that the ETA deemed trust for GST established Crown priority over secured creditors under the CCAA.

[8] Second, Tysoe J.A. concluded that by ordering the GST funds segregated in the Monitor's trust account on April 29, 2008, the judge had created an express trust in favour of the Crown from which the monies in question could not be diverted for any other purposes. The Court of Appeal therefore ordered that the money held by the Monitor in trust be paid to the Receiver General.

Digitized by Google

Issues

[9] This appeal raises three broad issues which are addressed in turn:

Did s. 222(3) of the ETA displace s. 18.3(1) of the CCAA and give priority to the Crown's ETA deemed trust during CCAA proceedings as held in Ottawa Senators?

Did the court exceed its CCAA authority by lifting the stay to allow the debtor to make an assignment in bankruptcy?

Did the court's order of April 29, 2008 requiring segregation of the Crown's GST claim in the Monitor's trust account create an express trust in favour of the Crown in respect of those funds?

Analysis

[10] The first issue concerns Crown priorities in the context of insolvency. As will be seen, the ETA provides for a deemed trust in favour of the Crown in respect of GST owed by a debtor "[d]espite . . . any other enactment of Canada (except the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act)" (s. 222(3)), while the CCAA stated at the relevant time that "notwithstanding any provision in federal or provincial legislation that has the effect of deeming property to be held in trust for Her Majesty, property of a debtor company shall not be [so] regarded" (s. 18.3(1)). It is difficult to imagine two statutory provisions more apparently in conflict. However, as is often the case, the apparent conflict can be resolved through interpretation.

[11] In order to properly interpret the provisions, it is necessary to examine the history of the CCAA, its function amidst the body of insolvency legislation enacted by Parliament, and the principles that have been recognized in the jurisprudence. It will be seen that Crown priorities in the insolvency context have been significantly pared down. The resolution of the second issue is also rooted in the context of the CCAA, but its purpose and the manner in which it has been interpreted in the case law are also key. After examining the first two issues in this case, I will address Tysoe J.A.'s conclusion that an express trust in favour of the Crown was created by the court's order of April 29, 2008.

Purpose and Scope of Insolvency Law

[12] Insolvency is the factual situation that arises when a debtor is unable to pay creditors (see generally, R. J. Wood, Bankruptcy and Insolvency Law (2009), at p. 16). Certain legal proceedings become available upon insolvency, which typically allow a debtor to obtain a court order staying its creditors' enforcement actions and attempt to obtain a binding compromise with creditors to adjust the payment conditions to something more realistic. Alternatively, the debtor's assets may be liquidated and debts paid from the proceeds according to statutory priority rules. The former is usually referred to as reorganization or restructuring while the latter is termed liquidation.

[13] Canadian commercial insolvency law is not codified in one exhaustive statute. Instead, Parliament has enacted multiple insolvency statutes, the main one being the BIA. The BIA offers a self-contained legal regime providing for both reorganization and liquidation. Although bankruptcy legislation has a long history, the BIA itself is a fairly recent statute — it was enacted in 1992. It is characterized by a rules-based approach to proceedings. The BIA is available to insolvent debtors owing $1000 or more, regardless of whether they are natural or legal persons. It contains mechanisms for debtors to make proposals to their creditors for the adjustment of debts. If a proposal fails, the BIA contains a bridge to bankruptcy whereby the debtor's assets are liquidated and the proceeds paid to creditors in accordance with the statutory scheme of distribution.

Digitized by Google

[14] Access to the CCAA is more restrictive. A debtor must be a company with liabilities in excess of $5 million. Unlike the BIA, the CCAA contains no provisions for liquidation of a debtor's assets if reorganization fails. There are three ways of exiting CCAA proceedings. The best outcome is achieved when the stay of proceedings provides the debtor with some breathing space during which solvency is restored and the CCAA process terminates without reorganization being needed. The second most desirable outcome occurs when the debtor's compromise or arrangement is accepted by its creditors and the reorganized company emerges from the CCAA proceedings as a going concern. Lastly, if the compromise or arrangement fails, either the company or its creditors usually seek to have the debtor's assets liquidated under the applicable provisions of the BIA or to place the debtor into receivership. As discussed in greater detail below, the key difference between the reorganization regimes under the BIA and the CCAA is that the latter offers a more flexible mechanism with greater judicial discretion, making it more responsive to complex reorganizations.

[15] As I will discuss at greater length below, the purpose of the CCAA — Canada's first reorganization statute — is to permit the debtor to continue to carry on business and, where possible, avoid the social and economic costs of liquidating its assets. Proposals to creditors under the BIA serve the same remedial purpose, though this is achieved through a rules-based mechanism that offers less flexibility. Where reorganization is impossible, the BIA may be employed to provide an orderly mechanism for the distribution of a debtor's assets to satisfy creditor claims according to predetermined priority rules.

[16] Prior to the enactment of the CCAA in 1933 (S.C. 1932-33, c. 36), practice under existing commercial insolvency legislation tended heavily towards the liquidation of a debtor company (J. Sarra, Creditor Rights and the Public Interest: Restructuring Insolvent Corporations (2003), at p. 12). The battering visited upon Canadian businesses by the Great Depression and the absence of an effective mechanism for reaching a compromise between debtors and creditors to avoid liquidation required a legislative response. The CCAA was innovative as it allowed the insolvent debtor to attempt reorganization under judicial supervision outside the existing insolvency legislation which, once engaged, almost invariably resulted in liquidation (Reference re Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, [1934] S.C.R. 659, at pp. 660-61; Sarra, Creditor Rights, at pp. 12-13).

[17] Parliament understood when adopting the CCAA that liquidation of an insolvent company was harmful for most of those it affected — notably creditors and employees — and that a workout which allowed the company to survive was optimal (Sarra, Creditor Rights, at pp. 13-15).

[18] Early commentary and jurisprudence also endorsed the CCAA's remedial objectives. It recognized that companies retain more value as going concerns while underscoring that intangible losses, such as the evaporation of the companies' goodwill, result from liquidation (S. E. Edwards, "Reorganizations Under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act" (1947), 25 Can. Bar Rev. 587, at p. 592). Reorganization serves the public interest by facilitating the survival of companies supplying goods or services crucial to the health of the economy or saving large numbers of jobs (ibid., at p. 593). Insolvency could be so widely felt as to impact stakeholders other than creditors and employees. Variants of these views resonate today, with reorganization justified in terms of rehabilitating companies that are key elements in a complex web of interdependent economic relationships in order to avoid the negative consequences of liquidation.

Digitized by Google

[19] The CCAA fell into disuse during the next several decades, likely because amendments to the Act in 1953 restricted its use to companies issuing bonds (S.C. 1952-53, c. 3). During the economic downturn of the early 1980s, insolvency lawyers and courts adapting to the resulting wave of insolvencies resurrected the statute and deployed it in response to new economic challenges. Participants in insolvency proceedings grew to recognize and appreciate the statute's distinguishing feature: a grant of broad and flexible authority to the supervising court to make the orders necessary to facilitate the reorganization of the debtor and achieve the CCAA's objectives. The manner in which courts have used CCAA jurisdiction in increasingly creative and flexible ways is explored in greater detail below.

[20] Efforts to evolve insolvency law were not restricted to the courts during this period. In 1970, a government-commissioned panel produced an extensive study recommending sweeping reform but Parliament failed to act (see Bankruptcy and Insolvency: Report of the Study Committee on Bankruptcy and Insolvency Legislation (1970)). Another panel of experts produced more limited recommendations in 1986 which eventually resulted in enactment of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act of 1992 (S.C. 1992, c. 27) (see Proposed Bankruptcy Act Amendments: Report of the Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy and Insolvency (1986)). Broader provisions for reorganizing insolvent debtors were then included in Canada's bankruptcy statute. Although the 1970 and 1986 reports made no specific recommendations with respect to the CCAA, the House of Commons committee studying the BIA's predecessor bill, C-22, seemed to accept expert testimony that the BIA's new reorganization scheme would shortly supplant the CCAA, which could then be repealed, with commercial insolvency and bankruptcy being governed by a single statute (Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations, Issue No. 15, 3rd Sess., 34th Parl., October 3, 1991, at 15:15-15:16).

[21] In retrospect, this conclusion by the House of Commons committee was out of step with reality. It overlooked the renewed vitality the CCAA enjoyed in contemporary practice and the advantage that a flexible judicially supervised reorganization process presented in the face of increasingly complex reorganizations, when compared to the stricter rules-based scheme contained in the BIA. The "flexibility of the CCAA [was seen as] a great benefit, allowing for creative and effective decisions" (Industry Canada, Marketplace Framework Policy Branch, Report on the Operation and Administration of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act (2002), at p. 41). Over the past three decades, resurrection of the CCAA has thus been the mainspring of a process through which, one author concludes, "the legal setting for Canadian insolvency restructuring has evolved from a rather blunt instrument to one of the most sophisticated systems in the developed world" (R. B. Jones, "The Evolution of Canadian Restructuring: Challenges for the Rule of Law", in J. P. Sarra, ed., Annual Review of Insolvency Law 2005 (2006), 481, at p. 481).

[22] While insolvency proceedings may be governed by different statutory schemes, they share some commonalities. The most prominent of these is the single proceeding model. The nature and purpose of the single proceeding model are described by Professor Wood in Bankruptcy and Insolvency Law:

They all provide a collective proceeding that supersedes the usual civil process

Digitized by Google

available to creditors to enforce their claims. The creditors' remedies are collectivized in order to prevent the free-for-all that would otherwise prevail if creditors were permitted to exercise their remedies. In the absence of a collective process, each creditor is armed with the knowledge that if they do not strike hard and swift to seize the debtor's assets, they will be beat out by other creditors. [pp. 2-3]

The single proceeding model avoids the inefficiency and chaos that would attend insolvency if each creditor initiated proceedings to recover its debt. Grouping all possible actions against the debtor into a single proceeding controlled in a single forum facilitates negotiation with creditors because it places them all on an equal footing, rather than exposing them to the risk that a more aggressive creditor will realize its claims against the debtor's limited assets while the other creditors attempt a compromise. With a view to achieving that purpose, both the CCAA and the BIA allow a court to order all actions against a debtor to be stayed while a compromise is sought.

[23] Another point of convergence of the CCAA and the BIA relates to priorities. Because the CCAA is silent about what happens if reorganization fails, the BIA scheme of liquidation and distribution necessarily supplies the backdrop for what will happen if a CCAA reorganization is ultimately unsuccessful. In addition, one of the important features of legislative reform of both statutes since the enactment of the BIA in 1992 has been a cutback in Crown priorities (S.C. 1992, c. 27, s. 39; S.C. 1997, c. 12, ss. 73 and 125; S.C. 2000, c.
30, s. 148; S.C. 2005, c. 47, ss. 69 and 131; S.C. 2009, c. 33, s. 25; see also Quebec (Revenue) v. Caisse populaire Desjardins de Montmagny, 2009 SCC 49, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 286; Deputy Minister of Revenue v. Rainville, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 35; Proposed Bankruptcy Act Amendments: Report of the Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy and Insolvency).

[24] With parallel CCAA and BIA restructuring schemes now an accepted feature of the insolvency law landscape, the contemporary thrust of legislative reform has been towards harmonizing aspects of insolvency law common to the two statutory schemes to the extent possible and encouraging reorganization over liquidation (see An Act to establish the Wage Earner Protection Program Act, to amend the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, S.C. 2005, c. 47; Gauntlet Energy Corp., Re, 2003 ABQB 894, 30 Alta. L.R. (4th) 192, at para. 19).

[25] Mindful of the historical background of the CCAA and BIA, I now turn to the first question at issue.

GST Deemed Trust Under the CCAA

[26] The Court of Appeal proceeded on the basis that the ETA precluded the court from staying the Crown's enforcement of the GST deemed trust when partially lifting the stay to allow the debtor to enter bankruptcy. In so doing, it adopted the reasoning in a line of cases culminating in Ottawa Senators, which held that an ETA deemed trust remains enforceable during CCAA reorganization despite language in the CCAA that suggests otherwise.

[27] The Crown relies heavily on the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in Ottawa Senators and argues that the later in time provision of the ETA creating the GST deemed trust trumps the provision of the CCAA purporting to nullify most statutory deemed trusts. The Court of Appeal in this case accepted this reasoning but not all provincial courts follow it (see, e.g., Komunik Corp. (Arrangement relatif à), 2009 QCCS 6332 (CanLII), leave to appeal granted, 2010 QCCA 183 (CanLII)). Century Services relied, in its written submissions to this Court, on the argument that the court had authority under the CCAA to continue the stay against the Crown's claim for unremitted GST. In oral argument, the question of whether Ottawa Senators was correctly decided nonetheless arose. After the hearing, the parties were asked to make further written submissions on this point. As appears evident from the reasons of my colleague Abella J., this issue has become prominent before this Court. In those circumstances, this Court needs to determine the correctness of the reasoning in Ottawa Senators.

Digitized by Google

[28] The policy backdrop to this question involves the Crown's priority as a creditor in insolvency situations which, as I mentioned above, has evolved considerably. Prior to the 1990s, Crown claims largely enjoyed priority in insolvency. This was widely seen as unsatisfactory as shown by both the 1970 and 1986 insolvency reform proposals, which recommended that Crown claims receive no preferential treatment. A closely related matter was whether the CCAA was binding at all upon the Crown. Amendments to the CCAA in 1997 confirmed that it did indeed bind the Crown (see CCAA, s. 21, as added by S.C. 1997, c. 12, s. 126). [29] Claims of priority by the state in insolvency situations receive different treatment across jurisdictions worldwide. For example, in Germany and Australia, the state is given no priority at all, while the state enjoys wide priority in the United States and France (see B. K. Morgan, "Should the Sovereign be Paid First? A Comparative International Analysis of the Priority for Tax Claims in Bankruptcy" (2000), 74 Am. Bankr. L.J. 461, at p. 500). Canada adopted a middle course through legislative reform of Crown priority initiated in 1992. The Crown retained priority for source deductions of income tax, Employment Insurance ("EI") and Canada Pension Plan ("CPP") premiums, but ranks as an ordinary unsecured creditor for most other claims. [30] Parliament has frequently enacted statutory mechanisms to secure Crown claims and permit their enforcement. The two most common are statutory deemed trusts and powers to garnish funds third parties owe the debtor (see F. L. Lamer, Priority of Crown Claims in Insolvency (loose-leaf), at §2).

[31] With respect to GST collected, Parliament has enacted a deemed trust. The ETA states that every person who collects an amount on account of GST is deemed to hold that amount in trust for the Crown (s. 222(1)). The deemed trust extends to other property of the person collecting the tax equal in value to the amount deemed to be in trust if that amount has not been remitted in accordance with the ETA. The deemed trust also extends to property held by a secured creditor that, but for the security interest, would be property of the person collecting the tax (s. 222(3)).

[32] Parliament has created similar deemed trusts using almost identical language in respect of source deductions of income tax, EI premiums and CPP premiums (see s. 227(4) of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.) ("ITA"), ss. 86(2) and (2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act, S.C. 1996, c. 23, and ss. 23(3) and (4) of the Canada Pension Plan, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-8). I will refer to income tax, EI and CPP deductions as "source deductions".

[33] In Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 411, this Court addressed a priority dispute between a deemed trust for source deductions under the ITA and security interests taken under both the Bank Act, S.C. 1991, c. 46, and the Alberta Personal Property Security Act, S.A. 1988, c. P-4.05 ("PPSA"). As then worded, an ITA deemed trust over the debtor's property equivalent to the amount owing in respect of income tax became effective at the time of liquidation, receivership, or assignment in bankruptcy. Sparrow Electric held that the ITA deemed trust could not prevail over the security interests because, being fixed charges, the latter attached as soon as the debtor acquired rights in the property such that the ITA deemed trust had no property on which to attach when it subsequently arose. Later, in First Vancouver Finance v. M.N.R., 2002 SCC 49, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 720, this Court observed that Parliament had legislated to strengthen the statutory deemed trust in the ITA by deeming it to operate from the moment the deductions were not paid to the Crown as required by the ITA, and by granting the Crown priority over all security interests (paras. 27-29) (the "Sparrow Electric amendment").

Digitized by Google

[34] The amended text of s. 227(4.1) of the ITA and concordant source deductions deemed trusts in the Canada Pension Plan and the Employment Insurance Act state that the deemed trust operates notwithstanding any other enactment of Canada, except ss. 81.1 and 81.2 of the BIA. The ETA deemed trust at issue in this case is similarly worded, but it excepts the BIA in its entirety. The provision reads as follows:

222. . . .

. . .

(3) Despite any other provision of this Act (except subsection (4)), any other enactment of Canada (except the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act), any enactment of a province or any other law, if at any time an amount deemed by subsection (1) to be held by a person in trust for Her Majesty is not remitted to the Receiver General or withdrawn in the manner and at the time provided under this Part, property of the person and property held by any secured creditor of the person that, but for a security interest, would be property of the person, equal in value to the amount so deemed to be held in trust, is deemed . . . .

[35] The Crown submits that the Sparrow Electric amendment, added by Parliament to the ETA in 2000, was intended to preserve the Crown's priority over collected GST under the CCAA while subordinating the Crown to the status of an unsecured creditor in respect of GST only under the BIA. This is because the ETA provides that the GST deemed trust is effective "despite" any other enactment except the BIA.

[36] The language used in the ETA for the GST deemed trust creates an apparent conflict with the CCAA, which provides that subject to certain exceptions, property deemed by statute to be held in trust for the Crown shall not be so regarded.

[37] Through a 1997 amendment to the CCAA (S.C. 1997, c. 12, s. 125), Parliament appears to have, subject to specific exceptions, nullified deemed trusts in favour of the Crown once reorganization proceedings are commenced under the Act. The relevant provision reads:

18.3 (1) Subject to subsection (2), notwithstanding any provision in federal or provincial legislation that has the effect of deeming property to be held in trust for Her Majesty, property of a debtor company shall not be regarded as held in trust for Her Majesty unless it would be so regarded in the absence of that statutory provision.

This nullification of deemed trusts was continued in further amendments to the CCAA (S.C. 2005, c. 47), where s. 18.3(1) was renumbered and reformulated as s. 37(1):

37. (1) Subject to subsection (2), despite any provision in federal or provincial legislation that has the effect of deeming property to be held in trust for Her Majesty, property of a debtor company shall not be regarded as being held in trust for Her Majesty unless it would be so regarded in the absence of that statutory provision.

[38] An analogous provision exists in the BIA, which, subject to the same specific exceptions, nullifies statutory deemed trusts and makes property of the bankrupt that would otherwise be subject to a deemed trust part of the debtor's estate and available to creditors (S.C. 1992, c. 27, s. 39; S.C. 1997, c. 12, s. 73; BIA, s. 67(2)). It is noteworthy that in both the CCAA and the BIA, the exceptions concern source deductions (CCAA, s. 18.3(2); BIA, s. 67(3)). The relevant provision of the CCAA reads:

Digitized by Google

18.3 . . .

Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of amounts deemed to be held in trust under subsection 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, subsection 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan or subsection 86(2) or (2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act . . . .

Thus, the Crown's deemed trust and corresponding priority in source deductions remain effective both in reorganization and in bankruptcy.

[39] Meanwhile, in both s. 18.4(1) of the CCAA and s. 86(1) of the BIA, other Crown claims are treated as unsecured. These provisions, establishing the Crown's status as an unsecured creditor, explicitly exempt statutory deemed trusts in source deductions (CCAA, s. 18.4(3); BIA, s. 86(3)). The CCAA provision reads as follows:

18.4 . . .

. . .

Subsection (1) [Crown ranking as unsecured creditor] does not affect the operation of subsections 224(1.2) and (1.3) of the Income Tax Act, any provision of the Canada Pension Plan or of the Employment Insurance Act that refers to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act and provides for the collection of a contribution . . . .

Therefore, not only does the CCAA provide that Crown claims do not enjoy priority over the claims of other creditors (s. 18.3(1)), but the exceptions to this rule (i.e., that Crown priority is maintained for source deductions) are repeatedly stated in the statute.

[40] The apparent conflict in this case is whether the rule in the CCAA first enacted as s. 18.3 in 1997, which provides that subject to certain explicit exceptions, statutory deemed trusts are ineffective under the CCAA, is overridden by the one in the ETA enacted in 2000 stating that GST deemed trusts operate despite any enactment of Canada except the BIA. With respect for my colleague Fish J., I do not think the apparent conflict can be resolved by denying it and creating a rule requiring both a statutory provision enacting the deemed trust, and a second statutory provision confirming it. Such a rule is unknown to the law. Courts must recognize conflicts, apparent or real, and resolve them when possible.

[41] A line of jurisprudence across Canada has resolved the apparent conflict in favour of the ETA, thereby maintaining GST deemed trusts under the CCAA. Ottawa Senators, the leading case, decided the matter by invoking the doctrine of implied repeal to hold that the later in time provision of the ETA should take precedence over the CCAA (see also Solid Resources Ltd., Re (2002), 40 C.B.R. (4th) 219 (Alta. Q.B.); Gauntlet).

[42] The Ontario Court of Appeal in Ottawa Senators rested its conclusion on two considerations. First, it was persuaded that by explicitly mentioning the BIA in ETA s. 222(3), but not the CCAA, Parliament made a deliberate choice. In the words of MacPherson J.A.:

The BIA and the CCAA are closely related federal statutes. I cannot conceive that Parliament would specifically identify the BIA as an exception, but accidentally fail to consider the CCAA as a possible second exception. In my view, the omission of the

Digitized by Google

CCAA from s. 222(3) of the ETA was almost certainly a considered omission. [para. 43]

[43] Second, the Ontario Court of Appeal compared the conflict between the ETA and the CCAA to that before this Court in Doré v. Verdun (City), [1997] 2 S.C.R. 862, and found them to be "identical" (para. 46). It therefore considered Doré binding (para. 49). In Doré, a limitations provision in the more general and recently enacted Civil Code of Québec, S.Q. 1991, c. 64 ("C.C.Q."), was held to have repealed a more specific provision of the earlier Quebec Cities and Towns Act, R.S.Q., c. C-19, with which it conflicted. By analogy, the Ontario Court of Appeal held that the later in time and more general provision, s. 222(3) of the ETA, impliedly repealed the more specific and earlier in time provision, s. 18.3(1) of the CCAA (paras. 47- 49).

[44] Viewing this issue in its entire context, several considerations lead me to conclude that neither the reasoning nor the result in Ottawa Senators can stand. While a conflict may exist at the level of the statutes' wording, a purposive and contextual analysis to determine Parliament's true intent yields the conclusion that Parliament could not have intended to restore the Crown's deemed trust priority in GST claims under the CCAA when it amended the ETA in 2000 with the Sparrow Electric amendment.

[45] I begin by recalling that Parliament has shown its willingness to move away from asserting priority for Crown claims in insolvency law. Section 18.3(1) of the CCAA (subject to the s. 18.3(2) exceptions) provides that the Crown's deemed trusts have no effect under the CCAA. Where Parliament has sought to protect certain Crown claims through statutory deemed trusts and intended that these deemed trusts continue in insolvency, it has legislated so explicitly and elaborately. For example, s. 18.3(2) of the CCAA and s. 67(3) of the BIA expressly provide that deemed trusts for source deductions remain effective in insolvency. Parliament has, therefore, clearly carved out exceptions from the general rule that deemed trusts are ineffective in insolvency. The CCAA and BIA are in harmony, preserving deemed trusts and asserting Crown priority only in respect of source deductions. Meanwhile, there is no express statutory basis for concluding that GST claims enjoy a preferred treatment under the CCAA or the BIA. Unlike source deductions, which are clearly and expressly dealt with under both these insolvency statutes, no such clear and express language exists in those Acts carving out an exception for GST claims.

[46] The internal logic of the CCAA also militates against upholding the ETA deemed trust for GST. The CCAA imposes limits on a suspension by the court of the Crown's rights in respect of source deductions but does not mention the ETA (s. 11.4). Since source deductions deemed trusts are granted explicit protection under the CCAA, it would be inconsistent to afford a better protection to the ETA deemed trust absent explicit language in the CCAA. Thus, the logic of the CCAA appears to subject the ETA deemed trust to the waiver by Parliament of its priority (s. 18.4).

[47] Moreover, a strange asymmetry would arise if the interpretation giving the ETA priority over the CCAA urged by the Crown is adopted here: the Crown would retain priority over GST claims during CCAA proceedings but not in bankruptcy. As courts have reflected, this can only encourage statute shopping by secured creditors in cases such as this one where the debtor's assets cannot satisfy both the secured creditors' and the Crown's claims (Gauntlet, at para. 21). If creditors' claims were better protected by liquidation under the BIA, creditors' incentives would lie overwhelmingly with avoiding proceedings under the CCAA and not risking a failed reorganization. Giving a key player in any insolvency such skewed incentives against reorganizing under the CCAA can only undermine that statute's remedial objectives and risk inviting the very social ills that it was enacted to avert.

Digitized by Google

[48] Arguably, the effect of Ottawa Senators is mitigated if restructuring is attempted under the BIA instead of the CCAA, but it is not cured. If Ottawa Senators were to be followed, Crown priority over GST would differ depending on whether restructuring took place under the CCAA or the BIA. The anomaly of this result is made manifest by the fact that it would deprive companies of the option to restructure under the more flexible and responsive CCAA regime, which has been the statute of choice for complex reorganizations.

[49] Evidence that Parliament intended different treatments for GST claims in reorganization and bankruptcy is scant, if it exists at all. Section 222(3) of the ETA was enacted as part of a wide-ranging budget implementation bill in 2000. The summary accompanying that bill does not indicate that Parliament intended to elevate Crown priority over GST claims under the CCAA to the same or a higher level than source deductions claims. Indeed, the summary for deemed trusts states only that amendments to existing provisions are aimed at "ensuring that employment insurance premiums and Canada Pension Plan contributions that are required to be remitted by an employer are fully recoverable by the Crown in the case of the bankruptcy of the employer" (Summary to S.C. 2000, c. 30, at p. 4a). The wording of GST deemed trusts resembles that of statutory deemed trusts for source deductions and incorporates the same overriding language and reference to the BIA. However, as noted above, Parliament's express intent is that only source deductions deemed trusts remain operative. An exception for the BIA in the statutory language establishing the source deductions deemed trusts accomplishes very little, because the explicit language of the BIA itself (and the CCAA) carves out these source deductions deemed trusts and maintains their effect. It is however noteworthy that no equivalent language maintaining GST deemed trusts exists under either the BIA or the CCAA.

[50] It seems more likely that by adopting the same language for creating GST deemed trusts in the ETA as it did for deemed trusts for source deductions, and by overlooking the inclusion of an exception for the CCAA alongside the BIA in s. 222(3) of the ETA, Parliament may have inadvertently succumbed to a drafting anomaly. Because of a statutory lacuna in the ETA, the GST deemed trust could be seen as remaining effective in the CCAA, while ceasing to have any effect under the BIA, thus creating an apparent conflict with the wording of the CCAA. However, it should be seen for what it is: a facial conflict only, capable of resolution by looking at the broader approach taken to Crown priorities and by giving precedence to the statutory language of s. 18.3 of the CCAA in a manner that does not produce an anomalous outcome.

[51] Section 222(3) of the ETA evinces no explicit intention of Parliament to repeal CCAA s. 18.3. It merely creates an apparent conflict that must be resolved by statutory interpretation. Parliament's intent when it enacted ETA s. 222(3) was therefore far from unambiguous. Had it sought to give the Crown a priority for GST claims, it could have done so explicitly as it did for source deductions. Instead, one is left to infer from the language of ETA s. 222(3) that the GST deemed trust was intended to be effective under the CCAA.

[52] I am not persuaded that the reasoning in Doré requires the application of the doctrine of implied repeal in the circumstances of this case. The main issue in Doré concerned the impact of the adoption of the C.C.Q. on the administrative law rules with respect to municipalities. While Gonthier J. concluded in that case that the limitation provision in art. 2930 C.C.Q. had repealed by implication a limitation provision in the Cities and Towns Act, he did so on the basis of more than a textual analysis. The conclusion in Doré was reached after thorough contextual analysis of both pieces of legislation, including an extensive review of the relevant legislative history (paras. 31-41). Consequently, the circumstances before this Court in Doré are far from "identical" to those in the present case, in terms of text, context and legislative history. Accordingly, Doré cannot be said to require the automatic application of the rule of repeal by implication.

Digitized by Google

[53] A noteworthy indicator of Parliament's overall intent is the fact that in subsequent amendments it has not displaced the rule set out in the CCAA. Indeed, as indicated above, the recent amendments to the CCAA in 2005 resulted in the rule previously found in s. 18.3 being renumbered and reformulated as s. 37. Thus, to the extent the interpretation allowing the GST deemed trust to remain effective under the CCAA depends on ETA s. 222(3) having impliedly repealed CCAA s. 18.3(1) because it is later in time, we have come full circle. Parliament has renumbered and reformulated the provision of the CCAA stating that, subject to exceptions for source deductions, deemed trusts do not survive the CCAA proceedings and thus the CCAA is now the later in time statute. This confirms that Parliament's intent with respect to GST deemed trusts is to be found in the CCAA.

[54] I do not agree with my colleague Abella J. that s. 44(f) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, can be used to interpret the 2005 amendments as having no effect. The new statute can hardly be said to be a mere re-enactment of the former statute. Indeed, the CCAA underwent a substantial review in 2005. Notably, acting consistently with its goal of treating both the BIA and the CCAA as sharing the same approach to insolvency, Parliament made parallel amendments to both statutes with respect to corporate proposals. In addition, new provisions were introduced regarding the treatment of contracts, collective agreements, interim financing and governance agreements. The appointment and role of the Monitor was also clarified. Noteworthy are the limits imposed by CCAA s. 11.09 on the court's discretion to make an order staying the Crown's source deductions deemed trusts, which were formerly found in s. 11.4. No mention whatsoever is made of GST deemed trusts (see Summary to S.C. 2005, c. 47). The review went as far as looking at the very expression used to describe the statutory override of deemed trusts. The comments cited by my colleague only emphasize the clear intent of Parliament to maintain its policy that only source deductions deemed trusts survive in CCAA proceedings.

[55] In the case at bar, the legislative context informs the determination of Parliament's legislative intent and supports the conclusion that ETA s. 222(3) was not intended to narrow the scope of the CCAA's override provision. Viewed in its entire context, the conflict between the ETA and the CCAA is more apparent than real. I would therefore not follow the reasoning in Ottawa Senators and affirm that CCAA s. 18.3 remained effective.

[56] My conclusion is reinforced by the purpose of the CCAA as part of Canadian remedial insolvency legislation. As this aspect is particularly relevant to the second issue, I will now discuss how courts have interpreted the scope of their discretionary powers in supervising a CCAA reorganization and how Parliament has largely endorsed this interpretation. Indeed, the interpretation courts have given to the CCAA helps in understanding how the CCAA grew to occupy such a prominent role in Canadian insolvency law.

Digitized by Google

Discretionary Power of a Court Supervising a CCAA Reorganization

[57] Courts frequently observe that "[t]he CCAA is skeletal in nature" and does not "contain a comprehensive code that lays out all that is permitted or barred" (Metcalfe & Mansfield Alternative Investments II Corp. (Re), 2008 ONCA 587, 92 O.R. (3d) 513, at para. 44, per Blair J.A.). Accordingly, "[t]he history of CCAA law has been an evolution of judicial interpretation" (Dylex Ltd., Re (1995), 31 C.B.R. (3d) 106 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)), at para. 10, per Farley J.).

[58] CCAA decisions are often based on discretionary grants of jurisdiction. The incremental exercise of judicial discretion in commercial courts under conditions one practitioner aptly describes as "the hothouse of real-time litigation" has been the primary method by which the CCAA has been adapted and has evolved to meet contemporary business and social needs (see Jones, at p. 484).

[59] Judicial discretion must of course be exercised in furtherance of the CCAA's purposes. The remedial purpose I referred to in the historical overview of the Act is recognized over and over again in the jurisprudence. To cite one early example:

> The legislation is remedial in the purest sense in that it provides a means whereby the devastating social and economic effects of bankruptcy or creditor initiated termination of ongoing business operations can be avoided while a court-supervised attempt to reorganize the financial affairs of the debtor company is made.
> (Elan Corp. v. Comiskey (1990), 41 O.A.C. 282, at para. 57, per Doherty J.A., dissenting)

[60] Judicial decision making under the CCAA takes many forms. A court must first of all provide the conditions under which the debtor can attempt to reorganize. This can be achieved by staying enforcement actions by creditors to allow the debtor's business to continue, preserving the status quo while the debtor plans the compromise or arrangement to be presented to creditors, and supervising the process and advancing it to the point where it can be determined whether it will succeed (see, e.g., Chef Ready Foods Ltd. v. Hongkong Bank of Can. (1990), 51 B.C.L.R. (2d) 84 (C.A.), at pp. 88-89; Pacific National Lease Holding Corp., Re (1992), 19 B.C.A.C. 134, at para. 27). In doing so, the court must often be cognizant of the various interests at stake in the reorganization, which can extend beyond those of the debtor and creditors to include employees, directors, shareholders, and even other parties doing business with the insolvent company (see, e.g., Canadian Airlines Corp., Re, 2000 ABQB 442, 84 Alta. L.R. (3d) 9, at para. 144, per Paperny J. (as she then was); Air Canada, Re (2003), 42 C.B.R. (4th) 173 (Ont. S.C.J.), at para. 3; Air Canada, Re, 2003 CanLII 49366 (Ont. S.C.J.), at para. 13, per Farley J.; Sarra, Creditor Rights, at pp. 181-92 and 217-26). In addition, courts must recognize that on occasion the broader public interest will be engaged by aspects of the reorganization and may be a factor against which the decision of whether to allow a particular action will be weighed (see, e.g., Canadian Red Cross Society/Société Canadienne de la Croix Rouge, Re (2000), 19 C.B.R. (4th) 158 (Ont. S.C.J.), at para. 2, per Blair J. (as he then was); Sarra, Creditor Rights, at pp. 195-214).

[61] When large companies encounter difficulty, reorganizations become increasingly complex. CCAA courts have been called upon to innovate accordingly in exercising their jurisdiction beyond merely staying proceedings against the debtor to allow breathing room for reorganization. They have been asked to sanction measures for which there is no explicit authority in the CCAA. Without exhaustively cataloguing the various measures taken under the authority of the CCAA, it is useful to refer briefly to a few examples to illustrate the flexibility the statute affords supervising courts.

Digitized by Google

[62] Perhaps the most creative use of CCAA authority has been the increasing willingness of courts to authorize post-filing security for debtor in possession financing or super-priority charges on the debtor's assets when necessary for the continuation of the debtor's business during the reorganization (see, e.g., Skydome Corp., Re (1998), 16 C.B.R. (4th) 118 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)); United Used Auto & Truck Parts Ltd., Re, 2000 BCCA 146, 135 B.C.A.C. 96, aff'g (1999), 12 C.B.R. (4th) 144 (S.C.); and generally, J. P. Sarra, Rescue! The Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act (2007), at pp. 93-115). The CCAA has also been used to release claims against third parties as part of approving a comprehensive plan of arrangement and compromise, even over the objections of some dissenting creditors (see Metcalfe & Mansfield). As well, the appointment of a Monitor to oversee the reorganization was originally a measure taken pursuant to the CCAA's supervisory authority; Parliament responded, making the mechanism mandatory by legislative amendment.

[63] Judicial innovation during CCAA proceedings has not been without controversy. At least two questions it raises are directly relevant to the case at bar: (1) What are the sources of a court's authority during CCAA proceedings? (2) What are the limits of this authority?

[64] The first question concerns the boundary between a court's statutory authority under the CCAA and a court's residual authority under its inherent and equitable jurisdiction when supervising a reorganization. In authorizing measures during CCAA proceedings, courts have on occasion purported to rely upon their equitable jurisdiction to advance the purposes of the Act or their inherent jurisdiction to fill gaps in the statute. Recent appellate decisions have counselled against purporting to rely on inherent jurisdiction, holding that the better view is that courts are in most cases simply construing the authority supplied by the CCAA itself (see, e.g., Skeena Cellulose Inc., Re, 2003 BCCA 344, 13 B.C.L.R. (4th) 236, at paras. 45-47, per Newbury J.A.; Stelco Inc. (Re) (2005), 75 O.R. (3d) 5 (C.A.), at paras. 31-33, per Blair J.A.).

[65] I agree with Justice Georgina R. Jackson and Professor Janis Sarra that the most appropriate approach is a hierarchical one in which courts rely first on an interpretation of the provisions of the CCAA text before turning to inherent or equitable jurisdiction to anchor measures taken in a CCAA proceeding (see G. R. Jackson and J. Sarra, "Selecting the Judicial Tool to get the Job Done: An Examination of Statutory Interpretation, Discretionary Power and Inherent Jurisdiction in Insolvency Matters", in J. P. Sarra, ed., Annual Review of Insolvency Law 2007 (2008), 41, at p. 42). The authors conclude that when given an appropriately purposive and liberal interpretation, the CCAA will be sufficient in most instances to ground measures necessary to achieve its objectives (p. 94).

[66] Having examined the pertinent parts of the CCAA and the recent history of the legislation, I accept that in most instances the issuance of an order during CCAA proceedings should be considered an exercise in statutory interpretation. Particularly noteworthy in this regard is the expansive interpretation the language of the statute at issue is capable of supporting.

[67] The initial grant of authority under the CCAA empowered a court "where an application is made under this Act in respect of a company . . . on the application of any person interested in the matter, . . . subject to this Act, [to] make an order under this section" (CCAA, s. 11(1)). The plain language of the statute was very broad.

[68] In this regard, though not strictly applicable to the case at bar, I note that

Digitized by Google

Parliament has in recent amendments changed the wording contained in s. 11(1), making explicit the discretionary authority of the court under the CCAA. Thus, in s. 11 of the CCAA as currently enacted, a court may, "subject to the restrictions set out in this Act, . . . make any order that it considers appropriate in the circumstances" (S.C. 2005, c. 47, s. 128). Parliament appears to have endorsed the broad reading of CCAA authority developed by the jurisprudence.

[69] The CCAA also explicitly provides for certain orders. Both an order made on an initial application and an order on subsequent applications may stay, restrain, or prohibit existing or new proceedings against the debtor. The burden is on the applicant to satisfy the court that the order is appropriate in the circumstances and that the applicant has been acting in good faith and with due diligence (CCAA, ss. 11(3), (4) and (6)). [70] The general language of the CCAA should not be read as being restricted by the availability of more specific orders. However, the requirements of appropriateness, good faith, and due diligence are baseline considerations that a court should always bear in mind when exercising CCAA authority. Appropriateness under the CCAA is assessed by inquiring whether the order sought advances the policy objectives underlying the CCAA. The question is whether the order will usefully further efforts to achieve the remedial purpose of the CCAA — avoiding the social and economic losses resulting from liquidation of an insolvent company. I would add that appropriateness extends not only to the purpose of the order, but also to the means it employs. Courts should be mindful that chances for successful reorganizations are enhanced where participants achieve common ground and all stakeholders are treated as advantageously and fairly as the circumstances permit.

[71] It is well established that efforts to reorganize under the CCAA can be terminated and the stay of proceedings against the debtor lifted if the reorganization is "doomed to failure" (see Chef Ready, at p. 88; Philip's Manufacturing Ltd., Re (1992), 9 C.B.R. (3d) 25 (B.C.C.A.), at paras. 6-7). However, when an order is sought that does realistically advance the CCAA's purposes, the ability to make it is within the discretion of a CCAA court.

[72] The preceding discussion assists in determining whether the court had authority under the CCAA to continue the stay of proceedings against the Crown once it was apparent that reorganization would fail and bankruptcy was the inevitable next step.

[73] In the Court of Appeal, Tysoe J.A. held that no authority existed under the CCAA to continue staying the Crown's enforcement of the GST deemed trust once efforts at reorganization had come to an end. The appellant submits that in so holding, Tysoe J.A. failed to consider the underlying purpose of the CCAA and give the statute an appropriately purposive and liberal interpretation under which the order was permissible. The Crown submits that Tysoe J.A. correctly held that the mandatory language of the ETA gave the court no option but to permit enforcement of the GST deemed trust when lifting the CCAA stay to permit the debtor to make an assignment under the BIA. Whether the ETA has a mandatory effect in the context of a CCAA proceeding has already been discussed. I will now address the question of whether the order was authorized by the CCAA.

[74] It is beyond dispute that the CCAA imposes no explicit temporal limitations upon proceedings commenced under the Act that would prohibit ordering a continuation of the stay of the Crown's GST claims while lifting the general stay of proceedings temporarily to allow the debtor to make an assignment in bankruptcy.

[75] The question remains whether the order advanced the underlying purpose of the CCAA. The Court of Appeal held that it did not because the reorganization efforts had come to an end and the CCAA was accordingly spent. I disagree.

Digitized by Google

[76] There is no doubt that had reorganization been commenced under the BIA instead of the CCAA, the Crown's deemed trust priority for the GST funds would have been lost. Similarly, the Crown does not dispute that under the scheme of distribution in bankruptcy under the BIA the deemed trust for GST ceases to have effect. Thus, after reorganization under the CCAA failed, creditors would have had a strong incentive to seek immediate bankruptcy and distribution of the debtor's assets under the BIA. In order to conclude that the discretion does not extend to partially lifting the stay in order to allow for an assignment in bankruptcy, one would have to assume a gap between the CCAA and the BIA proceedings. Brenner C.J.S.C.'s order staying Crown enforcement of the GST claim ensured that creditors would not be disadvantaged by the attempted reorganization under the CCAA. The effect of his order was to blunt any impulse of creditors to interfere in an orderly liquidation. His order was thus in furtherance of the CCAA's objectives to the extent that it allowed a bridge between the CCAA and BIA proceedings. This interpretation of the tribunal's discretionary power is buttressed by s. 20 of the CCAA. That section provides that the CCAA "may be applied together with the provisions of any Act of Parliament . . . that authorizes or makes provision for the sanction of compromises or arrangements between a company and its shareholders or any class of them", such as the BIA. Section 20 clearly indicates the intention of Parliament for the CCAA to operate in tandem with other insolvency legislation, such as the BIA.

[77] The CCAA creates conditions for preserving the status quo while attempts are made to find common ground amongst stakeholders for a reorganization that is fair to all. Because the alternative to reorganization is often bankruptcy, participants will measure the impact of a reorganization against the position they would enjoy in liquidation. In the case at bar, the order fostered a harmonious transition between reorganization and liquidation while meeting the objective of a single collective proceeding that is common to both statutes. [78] Tysoe J.A. therefore erred in my view by treating the CCAA and the BIA as distinct regimes subject to a temporal gap between the two, rather than as forming part of an integrated body of insolvency law. Parliament's decision to maintain two statutory schemes for reorganization, the BIA and the CCAA, reflects the reality that reorganizations of differing complexity require different legal mechanisms. By contrast, only one statutory scheme has been found to be needed to liquidate a bankrupt debtor's estate. The transition from the CCAA to the BIA may require the partial lifting of a stay of proceedings under the CCAA to allow commencement of the BIA proceedings. However, as Laskin J.A. for the Ontario Court of Appeal noted in a similar competition between secured creditors and the Ontario Superintendent of Financial Services seeking to enforce a deemed trust, "[t]he two statutes are related" and no "gap" exists between the two statutes which would allow the enforcement of property interests at the conclusion of CCAA proceedings that would be lost in bankruptcy (Ivaco Inc. (Re) (2006), 83 O.R. (3d) 108, at paras. 62-63).

[79] The Crown's priority in claims pursuant to source deductions deemed trusts does not undermine this conclusion. Source deductions deemed trusts survive under both the CCAA and the BIA. Accordingly, creditors' incentives to prefer one Act over another will not be affected. While a court has a broad discretion to stay source deductions deemed trusts in the CCAA context, this discretion is nevertheless subject to specific limitations applicable only to source deductions deemed trusts (CCAA, s. 11.4). Thus, if CCAA reorganization fails (e.g., either the creditors or the court refuse a proposed reorganization), the Crown can immediately assert its claim in unremitted source deductions. But this should not be understood to affect a seamless transition into bankruptcy or create any "gap" between the CCAA and the BIA for the simple reason that, regardless of what statute the reorganization had been commenced under, creditors' claim s in both instances would have been subject to the priority of the Crown's source deductions deemed trust.

Digitized by Google

[80] Source deductions deemed trusts aside, the comprehensive and exhaustive mechanism under the BIA must control the distribution of the debtor's assets once liquidation is inevitable. Indeed, an orderly transition to liquidation is mandatory under the BIA where a proposal is rejected by creditors. The CCAA is silent on the transition into liquidation but the breadth of the court's discretion under the Act is sufficient to construct a bridge to liquidation under the BIA. The court must do so in a manner that does not subvert the scheme of distribution under the BIA. Transition to liquidation requires partially lifting the CCAA stay to commence proceedings under the BIA. This necessary partial lifting of the stay should not trigger a race to the courthouse in an effort to obtain priority unavailable under the BIA.

[81] I therefore conclude that Brenner C.J.S.C. had the authority under the CCAA to lift the stay to allow entry into liquidation.

Express Trust

[82] The last issue in this case is whether Brenner C.J.S.C. created an express trust in favour of the Crown when he ordered on April 29, 2008, that proceeds from the sale of LeRoy Trucking's assets equal to the amount of unremitted GST be held back in the Monitor's trust account until the results of the reorganization were known. Tysoe J.A. in the Court of Appeal concluded as an alternative ground for allowing the Crown's appeal that it was the beneficiary of an express trust. I disagree.

[83] Creation of an express trust requires the presence of three certainties: intention, subject matter, and object. Express or "true trusts" arise from the acts and intentions of the settlor and are distinguishable from other trusts arising by operation of law (see D. W. M. Waters, M. R. Gillen and L. D. Smith, eds., Waters' Law of Trusts in Canada (3rd ed. 2005), at pp. 28-29, especially fn. 42).

[84] Here, there is no certainty to the object (i.e. the beneficiary) inferrable from the court's order of April 29, 2008 sufficient to support an express trust.

[85] At the time of the order, there was a dispute between Century Services and the Crown over part of the proceeds from the sale of the debtor's assets. The court's solution was to accept LeRoy Trucking's proposal to segregate those monies until that dispute could be resolved. Thus, there was no certainty that the Crown would actually be the beneficiary, or object, of the trust.

[86] The fact that the location chosen to segregate those monies was the Monitor's trust account has no independent effect such that it would overcome the lack of a clear beneficiary. In any event, under the interpretation of CCAA s. 18.3(1) established above, no such priority dispute would even arise because the Crown's deemed trust priority over GST claims would be lost under the CCAA and the Crown would rank as an unsecured creditor for this amount. However, Brenner C.J.S.C. may well have been proceeding on the basis that, in accordance with Ottawa Senators, the Crown's GST claim would remain effective if reorganization was successful, which would not be the case if transition to the liquidation process of the BIA was allowed. An amount equivalent to that claim would accordingly be set aside pending the outcome of reorganization.

[87] Thus, uncertainty surrounding the outcome of the CCAA restructuring eliminates the existence of any certainty to permanently vest in the Crown a beneficial interest in the funds. That much is clear from the oral reasons of Brenner C.J.S.C. on April 29, 2008, when he said: "Given the fact that [CCAA proceedings] are known to fail and filings in bankruptcy result, it seems to me that maintaining the status quo in the case at bar supports the proposal to have the monitor hold these funds in trust." Exactly who might take the money in the final result was therefore evidently in doubt. Brenner C.J.S.C.'s subsequent order of September 3, 2008 denying the Crown's application to enforce the trust once it was clear that bankruptcy was inevitable, confirms the absence of a clear beneficiary required to ground an express trust.

Digitized by Google

Conclusion

[88] I conclude that Brenner C.J.S.C. had the discretion under the CCAA to continue the stay of the Crown's claim for enforcement of the GST deemed trust while otherwise lifting it to permit LeRoy Trucking to make an assignment in bankruptcy. My conclusion that s. 18.3(1) of the CCAA nullified the GST deemed trust while proceedings under that Act were pending confirms that the discretionary jurisdiction under s. 11 utilized by the court was not limited by the Crown's asserted GST priority, because there is no such priority under the CCAA.

[89] For these reasons, I would allow the appeal and declare that the $305,202.30 collected by LeRoy Trucking in respect of GST but not yet remitted to the Receiver General of Canada is not subject to deemed trust or priority in favour of the Crown. Nor is this amount subject to an express trust. Costs are awarded for this appeal and the appeal in the court below.

The following are the reasons delivered by FISH J. —

I

[90] I am in general agreement with the reasons of Justice Deschamps and would dispose of the appeal as she suggests.

[91] More particularly, I share my colleague's interpretation of the scope of the judge's discretion under s. 11 of the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 ("CCAA"). And I share my colleague's conclusion that Brenner C.J.S.C. did not create an express trust in favour of the Crown when he segregated GST funds into the Monitor's trust account (2008 BCSC 1805, [2008] G.S.T.C. 221).

[92] I nonetheless feel bound to add brief reasons of my own regarding the interaction between the CCAA and the Excise Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. E-15 ("ETA").

[93] In upholding deemed trusts created by the ETA notwithstanding insolvency proceedings, Ottawa Senators Hockey Club Corp. (Re) (2005), 73 O.R. (3d) 737 (C.A.), and its progeny have been unduly protective of Crown interests which Parliament itself has chosen to subordinate to competing prioritized claims. In my respectful view, a clearly marked departure from that jurisprudential approach is warranted in this case.

[94] Justice Deschamps develops important historical and policy reasons in support of this position and I have nothing to add in that regard. I do wish, however, to explain why a comparative analysis of related statutory provisions adds support to our shared conclusion.

[95] Parliament has in recent years given detailed consideration to the Canadian insolvency scheme. It has declined to amend the provisions at issue in this case. Ours is not to wonder why, but rather to treat Parliament's preservation of the relevant provisions as a deliberate exercise of the legislative discretion that is Parliament's alone. With respect, I reject any suggestion that we should instead characterize the apparent conflict between s. 18.3(1) (now s. 37(1)) of the CCAA and s. 222 of the ETA as a drafting anomaly or statutory lacuna properly subject to judicial correction or repair.

Digitized by Google

II

[96] In the context of the Canadian insolvency regime, a deemed trust will be found to exist only where two complementary elements co-exist: first, a statutory provision creating the trust; and second, a CCAA or Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 ("BIA") provision confirming — or explicitly preserving — its effective operation.

[97] This interpretation is reflected in three federal statutes. Each contains a deemed trust provision framed in terms strikingly similar to the wording of s. 222 of the ETA.

[98] The first is the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.) ("ITA"), where s. 227(4) creates a deemed trust:

Every person who deducts or withholds an amount under this Act is deemed, notwithstanding any security interest (as defined in subsection 224(1.3)) in the amount so deducted or withheld, to hold the amount separate and apart from the property of the person and from property held by any secured creditor (as defined in subsection 224(1.3)) of that person that but for the security interest would be property of the person, in trust for Her Majesty and for payment to Her Majesty in the manner and at the time provided under this Act. [Here and below, the emphasis is of course my own.]

[99] In the next subsection, Parliament has taken care to make clear that this trust is unaffected by federal or provincial legislation to the contrary:

(4.1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (except sections 81.1 and 81.2 of that Act), any other enactment of Canada, any enactment of a province or any other law, where at any time an amount deemed by subsection 227(4) to be held by a person in trust for Her Majesty is not paid to Her Majesty in the manner and at the time provided under this Act, property of the person . . . equal in value to the amount so deemed to be held in trust is deemed

(a) to be held, from the time the amount was deducted or withheld by the person, separate and apart from the property of the person, in trust for Her Majesty whether or not the property is subject to such a security interest, . . .

. . .

. . . and the proceeds of such property shall be paid to the Receiver General in priority to all such security interests.

[100]The continued operation of this deemed trust is expressly confirmed in s. 18.3 of the CCAA:

18.3 (1) Subject to subsection (2), notwithstanding any provision in federal or provincial legislation that has the effect of deeming property to be held in trust for Her Majesty, property of a debtor company shall not be regarded as held in trust for Her Majesty unless it would be so regarded in the absence of that statutory provision.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of amounts deemed to be held in trust under subsection 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, subsection 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan or subsection 86(2) or (2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act . . . .

[101]The operation of the ITA deemed trust is also confirmed in s. 67 of the BIA:

Subject to subsection (3), notwithstanding any provision in federal or provincial legislation that has the effect of deeming property to be held in trust for Her Majesty, property of a bankrupt shall not be regarded as held in trust for Her

Digitized by Google

Majesty for the purpose of paragraph (1)(a) unless it would be so regarded in the absence of that statutory provision.
Subsection (2) does not apply in respect of amounts deemed to be held in trust under subsection 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, subsection 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan or subsection 86(2) or (2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act . . . .
[102]Thus, Parliament has first created and then confirmed the continued operation of the Crown's ITA deemed trust under both the CCAA and the BIA regimes.
[103]The second federal statute for which this scheme holds true is the Canada Pension Plan, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-8 ("CPP"). At s. 23, Parliament creates a deemed trust in favour of the Crown and specifies that it exists despite all contrary provisions in any other Canadian statute. Finally, and in almost identical terms, the Employment Insurance Act, S.C. 1996, c. 23 ("EIA"), creates a deemed trust in favour of the Crown: see ss. 86(2) and (2.1).
[104]As we have seen, the survival of the deemed trusts created under these provisions of the ITA, the CPP and the EIA is confirmed in s. 18.3(2) of the CCAA and in s. 67(3) of the BIA. In all three cases, Parliament's intent to enforce the Crown's deemed trust through insolvency proceedings is expressed in clear and unmistakable terms.
[105]The same is not true with regard to the deemed trust created under the ETA. Although Parliament creates a deemed trust in favour of the Crown to hold unremitted GST monies, and although it purports to maintain this trust notwithstanding any contrary federal or provincial legislation, it does not confirm the trust — or expressly provide for its continued operation — in either the BIA or the CCAA. The second of the two mandatory elements I have mentioned is thus absent reflecting Parliament's intention to allow the deemed trust to lapse with the commencement of insolvency proceedings.
[106]The language of the relevant ETA provisions is identical in substance to that of the ITA, CPP, and EIA provisions:
222. (1) Subject to subsection (1.1), every person who collects an amount as or on account of tax under Division II is deemed, for all purposes and despite any security interest in the amount, to hold the amount in trust for Her Majesty in right of Canada, separate and apart from the property of the person and from property held by any secured creditor of the person that, but for a security interest, would be property of the person, until the amount is remitted to the Receiver General or withdrawn under subsection (2).
. . .
(3) Despite any other provision of this Act (except subsection (4)), any other enactment of Canada (except the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act), any enactment of a province or any other law, if at any time an amount deemed by subsection (1) to be held by a person in trust for Her Majesty is not remitted to the Receiver General or withdrawn in the manner and at the time provided under this Part, property of the person and property held by any secured creditor of the person that, but for a security interest, would be property of the person, equal in value to the amount so deemed to be held in trust, is deemed
(a) to be held, from the time the amount was collected by the person, in trust for Her Majesty, separate and apart from the property of the person, whether or not the property is subject to a security interest, . . .

Digitized by Google

. . .
. . . and the proceeds of the property shall be paid to the Receiver General in priority to all security interests.
[107]Yet no provision of the CCAA provides for the continuation of this deemed trust after the CCAA is brought into play.
[108]In short, Parliament has imposed two explicit conditions, or "building blocks", for survival under the CCAA of deemed trusts created by the ITA, CPP, and EIA. Had Parliament intended to likewise preserve under the CCAA deemed trusts created by the ETA, it would have included in the CCAA the sort of confirmatory provision that explicitly preserves other deemed trusts.
[109]With respect, unlike Tysoe J.A., I do not find it "inconceivable that Parliament would specifically identify the BIA as an exception when enacting the current version of s. 222(3) of the ETA without considering the CCAA as a possible second exception" (2009 BCCA 205, 98 B.C.L.R. (4th) 242, at para. 37). All of the deemed trust provisions excerpted above make explicit reference to the BIA. Section 222 of the ETA does not break the pattern. Given the near-identical wording of the four deemed trust provisions, it would have been surprising indeed had Parliament not addressed the BIA at all in the ETA.
[110]Parliament's evident intent was to render GST deemed trusts inoperative upon the institution of insolvency proceedings. Accordingly, s. 222 mentions the BIA so as to exclude it from its ambit — rather than to include it, as do the ITA, the CPP, and the EIA.
[111]Conversely, I note that none of these statutes mentions the CCAA expressly. Their specific reference to the BIA has no bearing on their interaction with the CCAA. Again, it is the confirmatory provisions in the insolvency statutes that determine whether a given deemed trust will subsist during insolvency proceedings.
[112]Finally, I believe that chambers judges should not segregate GST monies into the Monitor's trust account during CCAA proceedings, as was done in this case. The result of Justice Deschamps's reasoning is that GST claims become unsecured under the CCAA. Parliament has deliberately chosen to nullify certain Crown super-priorities during insolvency; this is one such instance.
III
[113]For these reasons, like Justice Deschamps, I would allow the appeal with costs in this Court and in the courts below and order that the $305,202.30 collected by LeRoy Trucking in respect of GST but not yet remitted to the Receiver General of Canada be subject to no deemed trust or priority in favour of the Crown.

The following are the reasons delivered by [114] ABELLA J. (dissenting) — The central issue in this appeal is whether s. 222 of the Excise Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. E-15 ("ETA"), and specifically s. 222(3), gives priority during Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 ("CCAA"), proceedings to the Crown's deemed trust in unremitted GST. I agree with Tysoe J.A. that it does. It follows, in my respectful view, that a court's discretion under s. 11 of the CCAA is circumscribed accordingly.
[115]Section 11[62] of the CCAA stated:

---

62 Section 11 was amended, effective September 18, 2009, and now states:
11. Despite anything in the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act or the Winding-up and Restructuring Act, if an application is made under this Act in respect of a debtor company, the court, on the application of any person interested in the matter, may, subject to the restrictions set out in this Act, on notice to any other person or without notice as it may see fit, make any order that it considers appropriate in the circumstances.

Digitized by Google

11. (1) Notwithstanding anything in the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act or the Winding-up Act, where an application is made under this Act in respect of a company, the court, on the application of any person interested in the matter, may, subject to this Act, on notice to any other person or without notice as it may see fit, make an order under this section.

To decide the scope of the court's discretion under s. 11, it is necessary to first determine the priority issue. Section 222(3), the provision of the ETA at issue in this case, states:

(3) Despite any other provision of this Act (except subsection (4)), any other enactment of Canada (except the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act), any enactment of a province or any other law, if at any time an amount deemed by subsection (1) to be held by a person in trust for Her Majesty is not remitted to the Receiver General or withdrawn in the manner and at the time provided under this Part, property of the person and property held by any secured creditor of the person that, but for a security interest, would be property of the person, equal in value to the amount so deemed to be held in trust, is deemed

(a) to be held, from the time the amount was collected by the person, in trust for Her Majesty, separate and apart from the property of the person, whether or not the property is subject to a security interest, and

(b) to form no part of the estate or property of the person from the time the amount was collected, whether or not the property has in fact been kept separate and apart from the estate or property of the person and whether or not the property is subject to a security interest

and is property beneficially owned by Her Majesty in right of Canada despite any security interest in the property or in the proceeds thereof and the proceeds of the property shall be paid to the Receiver General in priority to all security interests.

[116]Century Services argued that the CCAA's general override provision, s. 18.3(1), prevailed, and that the deeming provisions in s. 222 of the ETA were, accordingly, inapplicable during CCAA proceedings. Section 18.3(1) states:

18.3 (1) . . . [N]otwithstanding any provision in federal or provincial legislation that has the effect of deeming property to be held in trust for Her Majesty, property of a debtor company shall not be regarded as held in trust for Her Majesty unless it would be so regarded in the absence of that statutory provision.

[117]As MacPherson J.A. correctly observed in Ottawa Senators Hockey Club Corp. (Re) (2005), 73 O.R. (3d) 737 (C.A.), s. 222(3) of the ETA is in "clear conflict" with s. 18.3(1) of the CCAA (para. 31). Resolving the conflict between the two provisions is, essentially, what seems to me to be a relatively uncomplicated exercise in statutory interpretation: Does the language reflect a clear legislative intention? In my view it does. The deemed trust provision, s. 222(3) of the ETA, has unambiguous language stating that it operates notwithstanding any law except the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 ("BIA").

[118]By expressly excluding only one statute from its legislative grasp, and by unequivocally stating that it applies despite any other law anywhere in Canada except the BIA, s. 222(3) has defined its boundaries in the clearest possible terms. I am in complete agreement with the following comments of MacPherson J.A. in Ottawa Senators:

The legislative intent of s. 222(3) of the ETA is clear. If there is a conflict with "any other enactment of Canada (except the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act)", s. 222(3) prevails. In these words Parliament did two things: it decided that s. 222(3) should trump all other federal laws and, importantly, it addressed the topic of exceptions to its trumping decision and identified a single exception, the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act . . . . The BIA and the CCAA are closely related federal statutes. I cannot conceive that Parliament would specifically identify the BIA as an exception, but accidentally fail to consider the CCAA as a possible second exception. In my view, the omission of the CCAA from s. 222(3) of the ETA was almost certainly a considered omission. [para. 43]

Digitized by Google

[119]MacPherson J.A.'s view that the failure to exempt the CCAA from the operation of the ETA is a reflection of a clear legislative intention, is borne out by how the CCAA was subsequently changed after s. 18.3(1) was enacted in 1997. In 2000, when s. 222(3) of the ETA came into force, amendments were also introduced to the CCAA. Section 18.3(1) was not amended.

[120]The failure to amend s. 18.3(1) is notable because its effect was to protect the legislative status quo, notwithstanding repeated requests from various constituencies that s. 18.3(1) be amended to make the priorities in the CCAA consistent with those in the BIA. In 2002, for example, when Industry Canada conducted a review of the BIA and the CCAA, the Insolvency Institute of Canada and the Canadian Association of Insolvency and Restructuring Professionals recommended that the priority regime under the BIA be extended to the CCAA (Joint Task Force on Business Insolvency Law Reform, Report (March 15, 2002), Sch. B, proposal 71). The same recommendations were made by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce in its 2003 report, Debtors and Creditors Sharing the Burden: A Review of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act; by the Legislative Review Task Force (Commercial) of the Insolvency Institute of Canada and the Canadian Association of Insolvency and Restructuring Professionals in its 2005 Report on the Commercial Provisions of Bill C-55; and in 2007 by the Insolvency Institute of Canada in a submission to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce commenting on reforms then under consideration.

[121]Yet the BIA remains the only exempted statute under s. 222(3) of the ETA. Even after the 2005 decision in Ottawa Senators which confirmed that the ETA took precedence over the CCAA, there was no responsive legislative revision. I see this lack of response as relevant in this case, as it was in Tele-Mobile Co. v. Ontario, 2008 SCC 12, [2008] 1 S.C.R. 305, where this Court stated:

While it cannot be said that legislative silence is necessarily determinative of legislative intention, in this case the silence is Parliament's answer to the consistent urging of Telus and other affected businesses and organizations that there be express language in the legislation to ensure that businesses can be reimbursed for the reasonable costs of complying with evidence- gathering orders. I see the legislative history as reflecting Parliament's intention that compensation not be paid for compliance with production orders. [para. 42]

[122]All this leads to a clear inference of a deliberate legislative choice to protect the deemed trust in s. 222(3) from the reach of s. 18.3(1) of the CCAA.

[123]Nor do I see any "policy" justification for interfering, through interpretation, with this clarity of legislative intention. I can do no better by way of explaining why I think the policy argument cannot succeed in this case, than to repeat the words of Tysoe J.A. who said:

I do not dispute that there are valid policy reasons for encouraging insolvent companies to attempt to restructure their affairs so that their business can continue with as little disruption to employees and other stakeholders as possible. It is appropriate for the courts to take such policy considerations into account, but only if it is in connection with a matter that has not been considered by Parliament. Here, Parliament must be taken to have weighed policy considerations when it enacted the amendments to the CCAA and ETA described above. As Mr. Justice MacPherson observed at para. 43 of Ottawa Senators, it is inconceivable that Parliament would specifically identify the BIA as an exception when enacting the current version of s. 222(3) of the ETA without considering the CCAA as a possible second exception. I also make the observation that the 1992 set of amendments to the BIA enabled proposals to be binding on secured creditors and, while there is more flexibility under the CCAA, it is possible for an insolvent company to attempt to restructure under the auspices of the BIA. [para. 37]

Digitized by Google

[124]Despite my view that the clarity of the language in s. 222(3) is dispositive, it is also my view that even the application of other principles of interpretation reinforces this conclusion. In their submissions, the parties raised the following as being particularly relevant: the Crown relied on the principle that the statute which is "later in time" prevails; and Century Services based its argument on the principle that the general provision gives way to the specific (generalia specialibus non derogant).

[125]The "later in time" principle gives priority to a more recent statute, based on the theory that the legislature is presumed to be aware of the content of existing legislation. If a new enactment is inconsistent with a prior one, therefore, the legislature is presumed to have intended to derogate from the earlier provisions (Ruth Sullivan, Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes (5th ed. 2008), at pp. 346-47; Pierre- André Côté, The Interpretation of Legislation in Canada (3rd ed. 2000), at p. 358).

[126]The exception to this presumptive displacement of pre-existing inconsistent legislation, is the generalia specialibus non derogant principle that "[a] more recent, general provision will not be construed as affecting an earlier, special provision" (Côté, at p. 359). Like a Russian Doll, there is also an exception within this exception, namely, that an earlier, specific provision may in fact be "overruled" by a subsequent general statute if the legislature indicates, through its language, an intention that the general provision prevails (Doré v. Verdun (City), [1997] 2 S.C.R. 862).

[127]The primary purpose of these interpretive principles is to assist in the performance of the task of determining the intention of the legislature. This was confirmed by MacPherson J.A. in Ottawa Senators, at para. 42:

. . . the overarching rule of statutory interpretation is that statutory provisions should be interpreted to give effect to the intention of the legislature in enacting the law. This primary rule takes precedence over all maxims or canons or aids relating to statutory interpretation, including the maxim that the specific prevails over the general (generalia specialibus non derogant). As expressed by Hudson J. in Canada v. Williams, [1944] S.C.R. 226, . . . at p. 239 .

. . :

The maxim generalia specialibus non derogant is relied on as a rule which should dispose of the question, but the maxim is not a rule of law but a rule of construction and bows to the intention of the legislature, if such intention can reasonably be gathered from all of the relevant legislation.

(See also Côté, at p. 358, and Pierre-Andre Côté, with the collaboration of S. Beaulac and M. Devinat, Interprétation des lois (4th ed. 2009), at para. 1335.)

[128]I accept the Crown's argument that the "later in time" principle is conclusive in this case. Since s. 222(3) of the ETA was enacted in 2000 and s. 18.3(1) of the CCAA was introduced in 1997, s. 222(3) is, on its face, the later provision. This chronological victory can be displaced, as Century Services argues, if it is shown that the more recent provision, s. 222(3) of the ETA, is a general one, in which case the earlier, specific provision, s. 18.3(1), prevails (generalia specialibus non derogant). But, as previously explained, the prior specific provision does not take precedence if the subsequent general provision appears to "overrule" it. This, it seems to me, is precisely what s. 222(3) achieves through the use of language stating that it prevails despite any law of Canada, of a province, or "any other law" other than the BIA. Section 18.3(1) of the CCAA is thereby rendered inoperative for purposes of s. 222(3).

Digitized by Google

[129]It is true that when the CCAA was amended in 2005,[79] s. 18.3(1) was re-enacted as s. 37(1) (S.C. 2005,
c. 47, s. 131). Deschamps J. suggests that this makes s. 37(1) the new, "later in time" provision. With respect, her observation is refuted by the operation of s. 44(f) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, which expressly deals with the (non) effect of re-enacting, without significant substantive changes, a repealed provision (see Attorney General of Canada v. Public Service Staff Relations Board, [1977] 2 F.C. 663, dealing with the predecessor provision to s. 44(f)). It directs that new enactments not be construed as "new law" unless they differ in substance from the repealed provision:

44. Where an enactment, in this section called the "former enactment", is repealed and another enactment, in this section called the "new enactment", is substituted therefor,

. . .

(f) except to the extent that the provisions of the new enactment are not in substance the same as those of the former enactment, the new enactment shall not be held to operate as new law, but shall be construed and have effect as a consolidation and as declaratory of the law as contained in the former enactment;

Section 2 of the Interpretation Act defines an "enactment" as "an Act or regulation or any portion of an Act or regulation".

[130]Section 37(1) of the current CCAA is almost identical to s. 18.3(1). These provisions are set out for ease of comparison, with the differences between them underlined:

37. (1) Subject to subsection (2), despite any provision in federal or provincial legislation that has the effect of deeming property to be held in trust for Her Majesty, property of a debtor company shall not be regarded as being held in trust for Her Majesty unless it would be so regarded in the absence of that statutory provision.

18.3 (1) Subject to subsection (2), notwithstanding any provision in federal or provincial legislation that has the effect of deeming property to be held in trust for Her Majesty, property of a debtor company shall not be regarded as held in trust for Her Majesty unless it would be so regarded in the absence of that statutory provision.

[131]The application of s. 44(f) of the Interpretation Act simply confirms the government's clearly expressed intent, found in Industry Canada's clause-by-clause review of Bill C-55, where s. 37(1) was identified as "a technical amendment to re-order the provisions of this Act". During second reading, the Hon. Bill Rompkey, then the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, confirmed that s. 37(1) represented only a technical change:

On a technical note relating to the treatment of deemed trusts for taxes, the bill [sic]

Digitized by Google

makes no changes to the underlying policy intent, despite the fact that in the case of a restructuring under the CCAA, sections of the act [sic] were repealed and substituted with renumbered versions due to the extensive reworking of the CCAA. (Debates of the Senate, vol. 142, 1st Sess., 38th Parl., November 23, 2005, at p. 2147)

[132]Had the substance of s. 18.3(1) altered in any material way when it was replaced by s. 37(1), I would share Deschamps J.'s view that it should be considered a new provision. But since s. 18.3(1) and s. 37(1) are the same in substance, the transformation of s. 18.3(1) into s. 37(1) has no effect on the interpretive queue, and s. 222(3) of the ETA remains the "later in time" provision (Sullivan, at p. 347).

[133]This means that the deemed trust provision in s. 222(3) of the ETA takes precedence over s. 18.3(1) during CCAA proceedings. The question then is how that priority affects the discretion of a court under s. 11 of the CCAA.

[134] While s. 11 gives a court discretion to make orders notwithstanding the BIA and the Winding-up Act,
R.S.C. 1985, c. W-11, that discretion is not liberated from the operation of any other federal statute. Any exercise of discretion is therefore circumscribed by whatever limits are imposed by statutes other than the BIA and the Winding-up Act. That includes the ETA. The chambers judge in this case was, therefore, required to respect the priority regime set out in s. 222(3) of the ETA. Neither s. 18.3(1) nor s. 11 of the CCAA gave him the authority to ignore it. He could not, as a result, deny the Crown's request for payment of the GST funds during the CCAA proceedings.

[135]Given this conclusion, it is unnecessary to consider whether there was an express trust. [136]I would dismiss the appeal.

APPENDIX

Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 (as at December 13, 2007)

11. (1) [Powers of court] Notwithstanding anything in the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act or the Winding-up Act, where an application is made under this Act in respect of a company, the court, on the application of any person interested in the matter, may, subject to this Act, on notice to any other person or without notice as it may see fit, make an order under this section.

. . .

(3) [Initial application court orders] A court may, on an initial application in respect of a company, make an order on such terms as it may impose, effective for such period as the court deems necessary not exceeding thirty days,

(a) staying, until otherwise ordered by the court, all proceedings taken or that might be taken in respect of the company under an Act referred to in subsection (1);

(b) restraining, until otherwise ordered by the court, further proceedings in any action, suit or proceeding against the company; and

(c) prohibiting, until otherwise ordered by the court, the commencement of or proceeding with any other action, suit or proceeding against the company.

(4) [Other than initial application court orders] A court may, on an application in respect of a company other than an initial application, make an order on such terms as it may impose,

(a) staying, until otherwise ordered by the court, for such period as the court deems necessary, all proceedings taken or that might be taken in respect of the company under an Act referred to in subsection (1);

Digitized by Google

(b) restraining, until otherwise ordered by the court, further proceedings in any action, suit or proceeding against the company; and

(c) prohibiting, until otherwise ordered by the court, the commencement of or proceeding with any other action, suit or proceeding against the company.

. . .

(6) [Burden of proof on application] The court shall not make an order under subsection (3) or (4) unless

(a) the applicant satisfies the court that circumstances exist that make such an order appropriate; and

(b) in the case of an order under subsection (4), the applicant also satisfies the court that the applicant has acted, and is acting, in good faith and with due diligence.

11.4 (1) [Her Majesty affected] An order made under section 11 may provide that

(a) Her Majesty in right of Canada may not exercise rights under subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act or any provision of the Canada Pension Plan or of the Employment Insurance Act that refers to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act and provides for the collection of a contribution, as defined in the Canada Pension Plan, or an employee's premium, or employer's premium, as defined in the Employment Insurance Act, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, in respect of the company if the company is a tax debtor under that subsection or provision, for such period as the court considers appropriate but ending not later than

(i) the expiration of the order,

(ii) the refusal of a proposed compromise by the creditors or the court,

(iii) six months following the court sanction of a compromise or arrangement,

(iv) the default by the company on any term of a compromise or arrangement, or

(v) the performance of a compromise or arrangement in respect of the company; and

(b) Her Majesty in right of a province may not exercise rights under any provision of provincial legislation in respect of the company where the company is a debtor under that legislation and the provision has a similar purpose to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act, or refers to that subsection, to the extent that it provides for the collection of a sum, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, where the sum

(i) has been withheld or deducted by a person from a payment to another person and is in respect of a tax similar in nature to the income tax imposed on individuals under the Income Tax Act, or for such period as the court considers appropriate but ending not later than the occurrence or time referred to in whichever of subparagraphs (a)(i) to (v) may apply.

(ii) is of the same nature as a contribution under the Canada Pension Plan if the province is a "province providing a comprehensive pension plan" as defined in subsection 3(1) of the Canada Pension Plan and the provincial legislation establishes a "provincial pension plan" as defined in that subsection,

(2) [When order ceases to be in effect] An order referred to in subsection (1) ceases to be in effect if

(a) the company defaults on payment of any amount that becomes due to Her

Digitized by Google

Majesty after the order is made and could be subject to a demand under

(i) subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act,

(ii) any provision of the Canada Pension Plan or of the Employment Insurance Act that refers to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act and provides for the collection of a contribution, as defined in the Canada Pension Plan, or an employee's premium, or employer's premium, as defined in the Employment Insurance Act, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, or

(iii) under any provision of provincial legislation that has a similar purpose to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act, or that refers to that subsection, to the extent that it provides for the collection of a sum, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, where the sum

(A) has been withheld or deducted by a person from a payment to another person and is in respect of a tax similar in nature to the income tax imposed on individuals under the Income Tax Act, or

(B) is of the same nature as a contribution under the Canada Pension Plan if the province is a "province providing a comprehensive pension plan" as defined in subsection 3(1) of the Canada Pension Plan and the provincial legislation establishes a "provincial pension plan" as defined in that subsection; or

(b) any other creditor is or becomes entitled to realize a security on any property that could be claimed by Her Majesty in exercising rights under

(i) subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act,

(ii) any provision of the Canada Pension Plan or of the Employment Insurance Act that refers to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act and provides for the collection of a contribution, as defined in the Canada Pension Plan, or an employee's premium, or employer's premium, as defined in the Employment Insurance Act, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, or

(iii) any provision of provincial legislation that has a similar purpose to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act, or that refers to that subsection, to the extent that it provides for the collection of a sum, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, where the sum

(A) has been withheld or deducted by a person from a payment to another person and is in respect of a tax similar in nature to the income tax imposed on individuals under the Income Tax Act, or

(B) is of the same nature as a contribution under the Canada Pension Plan if the province is a "province providing a comprehensive pension plan" as defined in subsection 3(1) of the Canada Pension Plan and the provincial legislation establishes a "provincial pension plan" as defined in that subsection.

(3) [Operation of similar legislation] An order made under section 11, other than an order referred to in subsection (1) of this section, does not affect the operation of

(a) subsections 224(1.2) and (1.3) of the Income Tax Act,

(b) any provision of the Canada Pension Plan or of the Employment Insurance Act that refers to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act and provides for the collection of a contribution, as defined in the Canada Pension Plan, or an employee's premium, or employer's premium, as defined in the Employment Insurance Act, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, or

(c) any provision of provincial legislation that has a similar purpose to subsection

Digitized by Google

224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act, or that refers to that subsection, to the extent that it provides for the collection of a sum, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, where the sum

(i) has been withheld or deducted by a person from a payment to another person and is in respect of a tax similar in nature to the income tax imposed on individuals under the Income Tax Act, or

(ii) is of the same nature as a contribution under the Canada Pension Plan if the province is a "province providing a comprehensive pension plan" as defined in subsection 3(1) of the Canada Pension Plan and the provincial legislation establishes a "provincial pension plan" as defined in that subsection,

and for the purpose of paragraph (c), the provision of provincial legislation is, despite any Act of Canada or of a province or any other law, deemed to have the same effect and scope against any creditor, however secured, as subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act in respect of a sum referred to in subparagraph (c)(i), or as subsection 23(2) of the Canada Pension Plan in respect of a sum referred to in subparagraph (c)(ii), and in respect of any related interest, penalties or other amounts.

18.3 (1) [Deemed trusts] Subject to subsection (2), notwithstanding any provision in federal or provincial legislation that has the effect of deeming property to be held in trust for Her Majesty, property of a debtor company shall not be regarded as held in trust for Her Majesty unless it would be so regarded in the absence of that statutory provision.

(2) [Exceptions] Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of amounts deemed to be held in trust under subsection 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, subsection 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan or subsection 86(2) or (2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act (each of which is in this subsection referred to as a "federal provision") nor in respect of amounts deemed to be held in trust under any law of a province that creates a deemed trust the sole purpose of which is to ensure remittance to Her Majesty in right of the province of amounts deducted or withheld under a law of the province where

(a) that law of the province imposes a tax similar in nature to the tax imposed under the Income Tax Act and the amounts deducted or withheld under that law of the province are of the same nature as the amounts referred to in subsection 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, or

(b) the province is a "province providing a comprehensive pension plan" as defined in subsection 3(1) of the Canada Pension Plan, that law of the province establishes a "provincial pension plan" as defined in that subsection and the amounts deducted or withheld under that law of the province are of the same nature as amounts referred to in subsection 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan,

and for the purpose of this subsection, any provision of a law of a province that creates a deemed trust is, notwithstanding any Act of Canada or of a province or any other law, deemed to have the same effect and scope against any creditor, however secured, as the corresponding federal provision.

18.4 (1) [Status of Crown claims] In relation to a proceeding under this Act, all claims, including secured claims, of Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province or any body under an enactment respecting workers' compensation, in this section and in section 18.5 called a "workers' compensation body", rank as unsecured claims.

. . .

(3) [Operation of similar legislation] Subsection (1) does not affect the operation of

Digitized by Google

(a) subsections 224(1.2) and (1.3) of the Income Tax Act,

(b) any provision of the Canada Pension Plan or of the Employment Insurance Act that refers to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act and provides for the collection of a contribution, as defined in the Canada Pension Plan, or an employee's premium, or employer's premium, as defined in the Employment Insurance Act, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, or

(c) any provision of provincial legislation that has a similar purpose to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act, or that refers to that subsection, to the extent that it provides for the collection of a sum, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, where the sum

(i) has been withheld or deducted by a person from a payment to another person and is in respect of a tax similar in nature to the income tax imposed on individuals under the Income Tax Act, or

(ii) is of the same nature as a contribution under the Canada Pension Plan if the province is a "province providing a comprehensive pension plan" as defined in subsection 3(1) of the Canada Pension Plan and the provincial legislation establishes a "provincial pension plan" as defined in that subsection,

and for the purpose of paragraph (c), the provision of provincial legislation is, despite any Act of Canada or of a province or any other law, deemed to have the same effect and scope against any creditor, however secured, as subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act in respect of a sum referred to in subparagraph (c)(i), or as subsection 23(2) of the Canada Pension Plan in respect of a sum referred to in subparagraph (c)(ii), and in respect of any related interest, penalties or other amounts.

20. [Act to be applied conjointly with other Acts] The provisions of this Act may be applied together with the provisions of any Act of Parliament or of the legislature of any province, that authorizes or makes provision for the sanction of compromises or arrangements between a company and its shareholders or any class of them.

Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 (as at September 18, 2009)

11. [General power of court] Despite anything in the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act or the Winding-up and Restructuring Act, if an application is made under this Act in respect of a debtor company, the court, on the application of any person interested in the matter, may, subject to the restrictions set out in this Act, on notice to any other person or without notice as it may see fit, make any order that it considers appropriate in the circumstances.

11.02 (1) [Stays, etc. — initial application] A court may, on an initial application in respect of a debtor company, make an order on any terms that it may impose, effective for the period that the court considers necessary, which period may not be more than 30 days,

(a) staying, until otherwise ordered by the court, all proceedings taken or that might be taken in respect of the company under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act or the Winding-up and Restructuring Act;

(b) restraining, until otherwise ordered by the court, further proceedings in any action, suit or proceeding against the company; and

(c) prohibiting, until otherwise ordered by the court, the commencement of any action, suit or proceeding against the company.

(2) [Stays, etc. — other than initial application] A court may, on an application in respect of a debtor company other than an initial application, make an order, on any

Digitized by Google

terms that it may impose,

(a) staying, until otherwise ordered by the court, for any period that the court considers necessary, all proceedings taken or that might be taken in respect of the company under an Act referred to in paragraph (1)(a);

(b) restraining, until otherwise ordered by the court, further proceedings in any action, suit or proceeding against the company; and

(c) prohibiting, until otherwise ordered by the court, the commencement of any action, suit or proceeding against the company.

(3) [Burden of proof on application] The court shall not make the order unless

(a) the applicant satisfies the court that circumstances exist that make the order appropriate; and

(b) in the case of an order under subsection (2), the applicant also satisfies the court that the applicant has acted, and is acting, in good faith and with due diligence.

. . .

11.09 (1) [Stay — Her Majesty] An order made under section 11.02 may provide that

(a) Her Majesty in right of Canada may not exercise rights under subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act or any provision of the Canada Pension Plan or of the Employment Insurance Act that refers to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act and provides for the collection of a contribution, as defined in the Canada Pension Plan, or an employee's premium, or employer's premium, as defined in the Employment Insurance Act, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, in respect of the company if the company is a tax debtor under that subsection or provision, for the period that the court considers appropriate but ending not later than

(i) the expiry of the order,

(ii) the refusal of a proposed compromise by the creditors or the court,

(iii) six months following the court sanction of a compromise or an arrangement,

(iv) the default by the company on any term of a compromise or an arrangement, or

(v) the performance of a compromise or an arrangement in respect of the company; and

(b) Her Majesty in right of a province may not exercise rights under any provision of provincial legislation in respect of the company if the company is a debtor under that legislation and the provision has a purpose similar to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act, or refers to that subsection, to the extent that it provides for the collection of a sum, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, and the sum

(i) has been withheld or deducted by a person from a payment to another person and is in respect of a tax similar in nature to the income tax imposed on individuals under the Income Tax Act, or for the period that the court considers appropriate but ending not later than the occurrence or time referred to in whichever of subparagraphs (a)(i) to (v) that may apply.

(ii) is of the same nature as a contribution under the Canada Pension Plan if the province is a "province providing a comprehensive pension plan" as defined in subsection 3(1) of the Canada Pension Plan and the provincial legislation establishes a "provincial pension plan" as defined in that subsection,

Digitized by Google

(2) [When order ceases to be in effect] The portions of an order made under section 11.02 that affect the exercise of rights of Her Majesty referred to in paragraph (1)(a) or (b) cease to be in effect if

(a) the company defaults on the payment of any amount that becomes due to Her Majesty after the order is made and could be subject to a demand under

(i) subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act,

(ii) any provision of the Canada Pension Plan or of the Employment Insurance Act that refers to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act and provides for the collection of a contribution, as defined in the Canada Pension Plan, or an employee's premium, or employer's premium, as defined in the Employment Insurance Act, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, or

(iii) any provision of provincial legislation that has a purpose similar to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act, or that refers to that subsection, to the extent that it provides for the collection of a sum, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, and the sum

(A) has been withheld or deducted by a person from a payment to another person and is in respect of a tax similar in nature to the income tax imposed on individuals under the Income Tax Act, or

(B) is of the same nature as a contribution under the Canada Pension Plan if the province is a "province providing a comprehensive pension plan" as defined in subsection 3(1) of the Canada Pension Plan and the provincial legislation establishes a "provincial pension plan" as defined in that subsection; or

(b) any other creditor is or becomes entitled to realize a security on any property that could be claimed by Her Majesty in exercising rights under

(i) subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act,

(ii) any provision of the Canada Pension Plan or of the Employment Insurance Act that refers to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act and provides for the collection of a contribution, as defined in the Canada Pension Plan, or an employee's premium, or employer's premium, as defined in the Employment Insurance Act, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, or

(iii) any provision of provincial legislation that has a purpose similar to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act, or that refers to that subsection, to the extent that it provides for the collection of a sum, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, and the sum

(A) has been withheld or deducted by a person from a payment to another person and is in respect of a tax similar in nature to the income tax imposed on individuals under the Income Tax Act, or

(B) is of the same nature as a contribution under the Canada Pension Plan if the province is a "province providing a comprehensive pension plan" as defined in subsection 3(1) of the Canada Pension Plan and the provincial legislation establishes a "provincial pension plan" as defined in that subsection.

(3) [Operation of similar legislation] An order made under section 11.02, other than the portions of that order that affect the exercise of rights of Her Majesty referred to in paragraph (1)(a) or (b), does not affect the operation of

(a) subsections 224(1.2) and (1.3) of the Income Tax Act,

Digitized by Google

(b) any provision of the Canada Pension Plan or of the Employment Insurance Act that refers to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act and provides for the collection of a contribution, as defined in the Canada Pension Plan, or an employee's premium, or employer's premium, as defined in the Employment Insurance Act, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, or

(c) any provision of provincial legislation that has a purpose similar to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act, or that refers to that subsection, to the extent that it provides for the collection of a sum, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, and the sum

(i) has been withheld or deducted by a person from a payment to another person and is in respect of a tax similar in nature to the income tax imposed on individuals under the Income Tax Act, or

(ii) is of the same nature as a contribution under the Canada Pension Plan if the province is a "province providing a comprehensive pension plan" as defined in subsection 3(1) of the Canada Pension Plan and the provincial legislation establishes a "provincial pension plan" as defined in that subsection,

and for the purpose of paragraph (c), the provision of provincial legislation is, despite any Act of Canada or of a province or any other law, deemed to have the same effect and scope against any creditor, however secured, as subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act in respect of a sum referred to in subparagraph (c)(i), or as subsection 23(2) of the Canada Pension Plan in respect of a sum referred to in subparagraph (c)(ii), and in respect of any related interest, penalties or other amounts.

37. (1) [Deemed trusts] Subject to subsection (2), despite any provision in federal or provincial legislation that has the effect of deeming property to be held in trust for Her Majesty, property of a debtor company shall not be regarded as being held in trust for Her Majesty unless it would be so regarded in the absence of that statutory provision.

(2) [Exceptions] Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of amounts deemed to be held in trust under subsection 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, subsection 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan or subsection 86(2) or (2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act (each of which is in this subsection referred to as a "federal provision"), nor does it apply in respect of amounts deemed to be held in trust under any law of a province that creates a deemed trust the sole purpose of which is to ensure remittance to Her Majesty in right of the province of amounts deducted or withheld under a law of the province if

(a) that law of the province imposes a tax similar in nature to the tax imposed under the Income Tax Act and the amounts deducted or withheld under that law of the province are of the same nature as the amounts referred to in subsection 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, or

(b) the province is a "province providing a comprehensive pension plan" as defined in subsection 3(1) of the Canada Pension Plan, that law of the province establishes a "provincial pension plan" as defined in that subsection and the amounts deducted or withheld under that law of the province are of the same nature as amounts referred to in subsection 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan,

and for the purpose of this subsection, any provision of a law of a province that creates a deemed trust is, despite any Act of Canada or of a province or any other law, deemed to have the same effect and scope against any creditor, however secured, as the corresponding federal provision.

Digitized by Google

Excise Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. E-15 (as at December 13, 2007)

222. (1) [Trust for amounts collected] Subject to subsection (1.1), every person who collects an amount as or on account of tax under Division II is deemed, for all purposes and despite any security interest in the amount, to hold the amount in trust for Her Majesty in right of Canada, separate and apart from the property of the person and from property held by any secured creditor of the person that, but for a security interest, would be property of the person, until the amount is remitted to the Receiver General or withdrawn under subsection (2).

(1.1) [Amounts collected before bankruptcy] Subsection (1) does not apply, at or after the time a person becomes a bankrupt (within the meaning of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act), to any amounts that, before that time, were collected or became collectible by the person as or on account of tax under Division II.

. . .

(3) [Extension of trust] Despite any other provision of this Act (except subsection (4)), any other enactment of Canada (except the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act), any enactment of a province or any other law, if at any time an amount deemed by subsection (1) to be held by a person in trust for Her Majesty is not remitted to the Receiver General or withdrawn in the manner and at the time provided under this Part, property of the person and property held by any secured creditor of the person that, but for a security interest, would be property of the person, equal in value to the amount so deemed to be held in trust, is deemed

(a) to be held, from the time the amount was collected by the person, in trust for Her Majesty, separate and apart from the property of the person, whether or not the property is subject to a security interest, and

(b) to form no part of the estate or property of the person from the time the amount was collected, whether or not the property has in fact been kept separate and apart from the estate or property of the person and whether or not the property is subject to a security interest and is property beneficially owned by Her Majesty in right of Canada despite any security interest in the property or in the proceeds thereof and the proceeds of the property shall be paid to the Receiver General in priority to all security interests.

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 (as at December 13, 2007)

67. (1) [Property of bankrupt] The property of a bankrupt divisible among his creditors shall not comprise

(a) property held by the bankrupt in trust for any other person,

(b) any property that as against the bankrupt is exempt from execution or seizure under any laws applicable in the province within which the property is situated and within which the bankrupt resides, or

(b.1) such goods and services tax credit payments and prescribed payments relating to the essential needs of an individual as are made in prescribed circumstances and are not property referred to in paragraph (a) or (b), but it shall comprise

(c) all property wherever situated of the bankrupt at the date of his bankruptcy or that may be acquired by or devolve on him before his discharge, and

(d) such powers in or over or in respect of the property as might have been exercised by the bankrupt for his own benefit.

(2) [Deemed trusts] Subject to subsection (3), notwithstanding any provision in federal or provincial legislation that has the effect of deeming property to be held in trust for Her Majesty, property of a bankrupt shall not be regarded as held in trust for Her Majesty for the purpose of paragraph (1)(a) unless it would be so regarded in the absence of that statutory provision.

Digitized by Google

(3) [Exceptions] Subsection (2) does not apply in respect of amounts deemed to be held in trust under subsection 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, subsection 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan or subsection 86(2) or (2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act (each of which is in this subsection referred to as a "federal provision") nor in respect of amounts deemed to be held in trust under any law of a province that creates a deemed trust the sole purpose of which is to ensure remittance to Her Majesty in right of the province of amounts deducted or withheld under a law of the province where

(a) that law of the province imposes a tax similar in nature to the tax imposed under the Income Tax Act and the amounts deducted or withheld under that law of the province are of the same nature as the amounts referred to in subsection 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, or

(b) the province is a "province providing a comprehensive pension plan" as defined in subsection 3(1) of the Canada Pension Plan, that law of the province establishes a "provincial pension plan" as defined in that subsection and the amounts deducted or withheld under that law of the province are of the same nature as amounts referred to in subsection 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan,

and for the purpose of this subsection, any provision of a law of a province that creates a deemed trust is, notwithstanding any Act of Canada or of a province or any other law, deemed to have the same effect and scope against any creditor, however secured, as the corresponding federal provision.

86. (1) [Status of Crown claims] In relation to a bankruptcy or proposal, all provable claims, including secured claims, of Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province or of any body under an Act respecting workers' compensation, in this section and in section 87 called a "workers' compensation body", rank as unsecured claims.

. . .

(3) [Exceptions] Subsection (1) does not affect the operation of

(a) subsections 224(1.2) and (1.3) of the Income Tax Act;

(b) any provision of the Canada Pension Plan or of the Employment Insurance Act that refers to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act and provides for the collection of a contribution, as defined in the Canada Pension Plan, or an employee's premium, or employer's premium, as defined in the Employment Insurance Act, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts; or

(c) any provision of provincial legislation that has a similar purpose to subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act, or that refers to that subsection, to the extent that it provides for the collection of a sum, and of any related interest, penalties or other amounts, where the sum

(i) has been withheld or deducted by a person from a payment to another person and is in respect of a tax similar in nature to the income tax imposed on individuals under the Income Tax Act, or

(ii) is of the same nature as a contribution under the Canada Pension Plan if the province is a "province providing a comprehensive pension plan" as defined in subsection 3(1) of the Canada Pension Plan and the provincial legislation establishes a "provincial pension plan" as defined in that subsection,

Digitized by Google

and for the purpose of paragraph (c), the provision of provincial legislation is, despite any Act of Canada or of a province or any other law, deemed to have the same effect and scope against any creditor, however secured, as subsection 224(1.2) of the Income Tax Act in respect of a sum referred to in subparagraph (c)(i), or as subsection 23(2) of the Canada Pension Plan in respect of a sum referred to in subparagraph (c)(ii), and in respect of any related interest, penalties or other amounts.

Appeal allowed with costs, ABELLA J. dissenting.

Solicitors for the appellant: Fraser Milner Casgrain, Vancouver.

Solicitor for the respondent: Attorney General of Canada, Vancouver.

Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 411, Crown's Rank vs-a-vs Bank's Security on Corporate Assets

Her Majesty The Queen Appellant

v.

Royal Bank of Canada Respondent

Indexed as: Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp.

File No.: 24713.

1996: June 19; 1997: February 27.

Present: La Forest, Sopinka, Gonthier, Cory, McLachlin, Iacobucci and Major JJ.

on appeal from the court of appeal for alberta

Crown -- Priority -- Employee source deductions not paid by company in receivership -- Company's inventory subject to fixed charge and to Bank Act security -- Whether bank had priority to proceeds of sale of inventory over statutory trust in favour of Her Majesty -- Bank Act, S.C. 1991, c. 46, s. 427 -- Income Tax Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.), ss. 153, 227(4), (5) -- Personal Property Security Act, S.A. 1988, c. P-4.05, s. 28(1).

Banks and banking operations -- Security -- Company's inventory subject to fixed charge and to Bank Act security -- Employee source deductions not paid by company in receivership -- Whether bank had priority to proceeds of sale of inventory over statutory trust in favour of Her Majesty -- Bank Act, S.C. 1991, c. 46, s. 427 -- Income Tax Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.), ss. 153, 227(4), (5) -- Personal Property Security Act, S.A. 1988, c. P-4.05, s. 28(1).

The Royal Bank secured a loan made to Sparrow Electric with a general security agreement (GSA) covering Sparrow's present and after-acquired property and with Bank Act security (BAS) created by an assignment of inventory under s. 427 of the Bank Act. When Sparrow experienced financial difficulties, a standstill agreement was executed. This agreement allowed Sparrow to continue its business but permitted the bank, on default, to appoint a receiver and enforce its security. A receiver was appointed in November 1992 at which time it was discovered that Sparrow had not been remitting its payroll deductions as required by s. 153 of the Income Tax Act (ITA). It is probable that these defaults had occurred in 1992. In January 1993, the receiver received court permission to sell Sparrow's assets. An amount from the proceeds of sale equivalent to that owing the federal government was ordered to be held in trust pending resolution as to entitlement. The bank claimed priority based on its GSA and its BAS, which entitled it to inventory proceeds. The federal government's claim was based on the s. 227 ITA deemed trust provisions, which created a deemed statutory trust in the moneys deducted from wages but not remitted to Her Majesty.

Digitized by Google

On the first application to determine priority, the deemed trust was held to take priority over the GSA. On a subsequent application by the bank for a determination of whether its BAS took priority over the deemed trust, the Court of Queen's Bench found that the deemed trust took priority. The Court of Appeal found that the BAS took priority over the deemed trust. At issue here is whether the s. 227(5) ITA deemed trust takes priority over a previously executed GSA and a previously executed BAS with respect to the proceeds of the sale of the inventory.

Held (La Forest, Gonthier and Cory JJ. dissenting): The appeal should be dismissed.

(1) Section 227(4) and (5) of the Income Tax Act

Although the employer, at the point of withholding, becomes the trustee of a fund which is in law the property of its employee, s. 227(4) ITA has the effect of making Her Majesty the beneficiary under that trust. A conceptual difficulty arises when the tax debtor fails to set aside moneys which are to be remitted. The subject of Her Majesty's beneficial interest at that point becomes intermingled with the general assets of the tax debtor and Her Majesty's claim then becomes that of a beneficiary under a non-existent trust. Subsections (4) and (5) of s. 227 resolve this conceptual dilemma by clearly and unambiguously rendering amounts unremitted as held in trust for Her Majesty. In particular, s. 227(5) is designed to, upon liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy, seek out and attach Her Majesty's beneficial interest to property of the debtor which is in existence at that time. The trust is not a real trust, as its subject matter cannot be identified from the date of the trust's creation. However, s. 227(5) has the effect of revitalizing the trust whose subject matter has lost all identity. This identification of the subject matter of the trust therefore occurs ex post facto. Her Majesty has a statutory right to access whatever assets the employer then has, and may realize from those assets the original trust debt. This interpretation is consistent with the scheme of distribution under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act.

The s. 227(5) deemed trust operates to Her Majesty's benefit in a secondary manner. Under it, Her Majesty's interest can attach retroactively to disputed collateral if the competing security interest has attached after the deductions giving rise to Her Majesty's claim in fact occurred. Conceptually, the s. 227(5) deemed trust allows that claim to go back in time and attach its outstanding s. 227(4) interest to the collateral before that collateral became subject to a fixed charge. The same result occurs when a statutory lien attaches prior to the mortgaging of disputed collateral. Here, the deductions of tax from the employees' pay cheques occurred after the attachment of the bank's fixed charge to the inventory, so this second aspect of s. 227(5)'s operation did not arise.

The mechanism of s. 227(5) cannot accurately be described as a means of "tracing"; indeed, this subsection is antithetical to tracing in the traditional sense in that it requires no link at all between the subject matter of the trust and the fund or asset into which the subject matter is being traced. Section 227(5) is more accurately described as a "relaxation of the equitable tracing rules".

Section 227(5) does not permit Her Majesty to attach Her beneficial interest to property which, at the time of liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy, in law belongs to a party other than the tax debtor. Subsections (4) and (5) of s. 227 are manifestly directed towards the property of the tax debtor, and it would be contrary to well-established authority to stretch the interpretation of s. 227(5) to permit the expropriation of the property of third parties who are not specifically mentioned in the statute.

Digitized by Google

Therefore, the proper analysis in determining whether Her Majesty is entitled to priority pursuant to these subsections must utilize principles of property law. The nature of the interests competing with those of Her Majesty must be scrutinized in order to determine whether and to what extent such interests have title in the disputed fund. If it is found that legal title in the collateral is in the bank, and not Sparrow, Her Majesty's deemed trust could only attach to Sparrow's equity of redemption.

The "statutory trust" approach can be distinguished from other legislative methods, such as an explicit "Crown priority" provision, used to secure an interest to unremitted payroll deductions. The application of such a provision to a priority competition can proceed without regard to the quality of the "security interest" which competes with Her Majesty's claim. Such a provision simply transfers title in the collateral to Her Majesty regardless of whose interest may compete with it, so long as its requirements are met.

(2) Characterization of the Bank's Interests

The bank's interest in Sparrow's inventory must be characterized as either a floating charge or a fixed and specific charge. A specific charge is one that, without more, fastens on ascertained and definite property or property capable of being ascertained and defined. A floating charge floats with the property which it is intended to affect until it crystallizes. Crystallization occurs upon the default of the debtor and transforms the interest into a fixed and specific charge over the inventory. The critical significance of the characterizing of an interest as being fixed or floating is that it describes the extent to which a creditor can be said to have a proprietary interest in the collateral. During the period in which a charge over inventory is floating, the creditor possesses no legal title to that collateral and a statutory trust or lien attaching during this time will attach to the debtor's interest and take priority over a subsequently crystallized floating charge. A security interest characterized as a fixed and specific charge, however, will take priority over a subsequent statutory lien or charge because all that the lien can attach to is the debtor's equity of redemption in the collateral.

Common law principles did not alter the effect that legislation may have on the characterization of security interests. Here, the Alberta Personal Property Security Act (PPSA) and the Bank Act are determinative of the characterization of the bank's GSA and BAS, respectively. The PPSA explicitly removes statutory trusts from its operation and accordingly does not govern the priority competition between a statutory trust and a security interest. The Act's effect, however, fundamentally changes the characterization of security interests. Generally speaking, absent an express intention to the contrary, a security interest in all present and after-acquired personal property will attach when that agreement is executed by the parties. Once attachment has occurred, the GSA becomes in law a fixed and specific charge over the collateral. For these reasons, the GSA held by the respondent bank must be characterized as a fixed and specific charge with a licence to deal with the inventory that arose because of the bank's granting Sparrow permission to sell the encumbered inventory. The fixed charge attached on the agreement's execution.

Similarly, security taken under the Bank Act is in the nature of a fixed and specific charge. The concept of the fixed charge is correlative to the notion of a creditor's having legal proprietary rights in the collateral. It is misleading to suggest that s. 427 security is in the nature of a floating charge because the bank effectively acquires legal title. Unlike a floating charge which may apply to all property of a specified kind held by the borrower from time to time but does not affix itself specifically upon any particular item of property until it crystallizes upon default by the borrower, s. 427 security is a fixed charge on each item of assigned property held from time to time whether or not the loan is in default. This gives a bank significantly greater rights than it would hold under a floating charge debenture on inventory. For this reason, the security interest of the bank in the form of BAS should be characterized as a fixed and specific charge with a licence to sell the inventory.

Digitized by Google

The traditional concept of the fixed charge seems to be at odds with the notion of having a proprietary right over collateral such as after-acquired inventory which is not yet in existence at the time the security agreement is executed. A fixed charge over all present and future inventory represents a proprietary interest over a dynamic collective of present and future assets. The conception of this form of charge must change to meet the modern realities of commercial law and in particular the legislative provisions which have been brought to bear in this appeal. In effect, the fixed and specific charge gives to the secured creditor the title (subject to the debtor's equitable right of redemption) to the present inventory of the debtor, as well as the after-acquired inventory of the debtor. In this way, the secured creditor becomes the legal owner of inventory as it comes into possession of the debtor.

Where a secured creditor holds a fixed charge over a debtor's inventory, that charge will have the effect of ensuring the creditor has legal title to any and all inventory subject to the charge at any given time, subject to the caveat (not operative here) that no outstanding statutory payroll deductions had in fact been made prior to the attachment of the fixed charge. Here, the inventory which was subject to the liquidation sale belonged in law to the respondent bank: both under its GSA and its BAS the bank held a fixed charge over Sparrow's inventory. Her Majesty's beneficial interest accordingly could only attach, before its sale, to Sparrow's equity of redemption in the property.

(3) Licence Theory

Per Sopinka, McLachlin, Iacobucci and Major JJ.: The security interests that the respondent has under the Bank Act and the PPSA take priority over the deemed trust that arises in favour of Her Majesty by operation of s. 227(4) ITA. While the former interests are subject to a licence to sell, that licence is not nearly so broad as to encompass the satisfaction of income tax obligations. A licence to sell inventory authorizes at most only the satisfaction of obligations that are immediately incidental to an actual sale of the inventory.

The licence theory holds that a bank's security interest in a debtor's inventory, whether fixed and specific, is subject to a licence in the debtor to deal with that inventory in the ordinary course of business. The point is that the bank's claim to the inventory must as a consequence give way to any debts incurred in the ordinary course of business. In theory, a creditor who has granted a licence to sell inventory has thereby consented to his security interest's being subject to other obligations that may arise "in the ordinary course of business". The licence is thus supposed to afford evidence of the respondent's intention to take less than an entire security interest in the inventory.

The licence affords no such evidence. The potential sale of the inventory does not amount to an actual limitation of the security interest. A great difference exists between saying, on the one hand, that if a debtor sells inventory and applies the proceeds to a debt to a third party, then the third party takes the proceeds free of any security interest and saying, on the other hand, that because a third party could take the proceeds free of any security interest, no security interest exists in the proceeds as against that third party. A licence to sell inventory in the ordinary course of business is a condition of the former kind. The consequent (defeasance of the security interest) follows only if the antecedent (sale of the inventory and application of proceeds to an obligation to a third party) is satisfied. The security interest in the inventory disappears only if the debtor actually sells the inventory and applies the proceeds to a debt to a third party.

Digitized by Google

In accordance with s. 28(1) PPSA, the result of a sale of inventory is to give the purchaser an unencumbered interest in the inventory and the licensor a continuing security interest in the proceeds of the sale. Only if the debtor subsequently uses the proceeds to satisfy an obligation to a third party will the proceeds be removed from the scope of the licensor's security interest in them. Accordingly, a security agreement with a licence to sell creates a defeasible interest; but the event of defeasance is the actual sale of the inventory and the actual application of the proceeds against an obligation to a third party.

By itself, s. 28(1) PPSA does not necessarily compel rejection of the broad interpretation of the licence to sell. However, the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius is appropriately invoked here to complete the argument. The statute prescribes certain consequences for the security interest that follow a dealing with inventory, and in particular, it prescribes the defeasance of the interest if the debtor actually sells the inventory and applies the proceeds to an obligation to a third party. Significantly, the statute does not contemplate a defeasance on the happening of any other event. The statute occupies the field and crowds out other possible interpretations of the licence.

Because the inventory in question was not sold pursuant to the licence, here the licence can have had no effect on the respondent's security interest. What the debtor might have done with the licence does not matter. If it were otherwise, the licence to sell inventory would entirely eviscerate the respondent's GSA.

The argument might be made that the deemed trust works by deeming an actual sale of the inventory to have been made. It this were correct, then it would not matter that the inventory was not actually sold pursuant to the licence. However, the deeming is not a mechanism for undoing an existing security interest, but rather a device for going back in time and seeking out an asset that was not, at the moment the income taxes came due, subject to any competing security interest. The deemed trust provision cannot be effective unless it is first determined that there is some unencumbered asset out of which the trust may be deemed. In this case the inventory was encumbered by the GSA.

The debtor's covenant in the GSA to pay all taxes was not part of the licence and was merely a covenant to obey the law. It adds nothing to s. 153(1) ITA and does not prescribe the outcome of a priority contest.

A number of policy considerations support this conclusion. Judicial innovation in this field risks legal uncertainty. Inventory financiers would have to provide against the risk that their security interest might be defeated by some rival claim. There is also a real possibility that recognition of a broad licence theory would obliterate the PPSA charge against inventory. If Parliament wishes to do so, it may step in and assign absolute priority to the deemed trust. But in the absence of clear statutory language to that effect, the bank's GSA must prevail.

Digitized by Google

Per La Forest, Gonthier and Cory JJ. (dissenting): The critical issue here was the scope of the contractual licence. In particular, if the bank's consent included the right to sell the inventory in order to pay wages, then that consent by necessity included the right to sell inventory to remit payroll deductions. In such a situation, Her Majesty's interest would be able to attach to the proceeds of the inventory and so take priority over the bank's interest.

The licence theory operates, in the context of the statutory scheme at issue here, as an exception to the general rule that at the time of "liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy" Her Majesty's interest cannot attach to property which is at that time the property of a secured creditor. Where a secured creditor has consented to the use of its collateral when deductions are made in order to pay the statutory deductions which are the object of a deemed trust, that creditor has bound itself by the statutory requirements relating to those deductions. Here, therefore, the wage deductions at issue were made at a time when the bank had permitted the sale of inventory in order to pay wages (and thus wage deductions), and the bank's inventory existent at the time of receivership can accordingly be attached under s. 227(5).

The critical factor in the "licence to sell" argument is the permission which must be found to have been granted with respect to the usage of the proceeds of the disputed collateral. While licences are often expressed in terms of a "right to sell in the ordinary course of business", this permission is made with respect to the usage of proceeds, which is the proper focus of the inquiry, and not necessarily the circumstances of sale. Here, Sparrow was permitted to sell its inventory in the ordinary course of its business and "use" the proceeds generated therefrom.

The licence to sell inventory in the ordinary course of business in this case necessarily included a licence to sell inventory to pay wages, and remit wage deductions, in the course of Sparrow's business. Where, as here, the secured party has security over the majority of the assets of the debtor, the security interest over the inventory must permit the debtor to sell the inventory and put it to the general use of its business, including towards the payment of wages. The scope of the licence can be ascertained either from the express terms of the security agreement or from the nature of the agreement and the conduct of the parties. The licence here was to sell inventory in the "ordinary course of [Sparrow's] business . . . and use [the proceeds]" which renders it of such a quality as to include a right to use the proceeds to pay wages. A licence to sell inventory may in certain circumstances be circumscribed so as not to include a right to use the proceeds to pay wages.

The true test of whether the licence to sell inventory includes the right to pay wages is a matter of interpreting the contractual arrangement between the parties. The focus is not so much on the circumstances of the selling of inventory, but rather the permitted usage of the proceeds of inventory. Where the licence has a limited scope, that licence may not include the right to use proceeds to pay wages. However, the expression of a limited use for proceeds of inventory cannot prevail if the arrangement between the parties is such as to allow, in practice, the debtor to use the inventory proceeds in the course of its business. The test should be whether the debtor had the freedom to use these funds in the ordinary course of business as opposed to being under an obligation to remit them to the secured party.

Digitized by Google

The GSA contained an express licence permitting Sparrow to sell inventory in the course of its business and use the proceeds available; the BAS contained an implied licence to this effect. While it is true that the GSA contained a trust proceeds clause, this clause cannot have the effect of limiting the scope of the licence where the real arrangement between the parties was, as expressly stated, that Sparrow could use the proceeds of inventory in the course of its business. The bank in this case was not a small inventory financier who required Sparrow to remit proceeds of inventory to it immediately. To the contrary, the bank was a large scale lender who permitted Sparrow to use inventory sales to maintain the viability of its enterprise. Under the licence at issue here, the bank permitted Sparrow to sell inventory to pay wages and, necessarily, payroll deduction obligations.

The appellant's s. 227(5) deemed trust must take priority over the bank's security interests in the disputed collateral. The trust fund representing the deducted amounts, while without identified subject matter from the date of its inception, is capable of identifying property subject to that trust ex post facto. This result is not precluded with respect to the BAS by virtue of s. 428(1) of the Bank Act. Although s. 428(1) secures the respondent bank's proprietary right to the disputed collateral, the bank nevertheless consented to the divestment of this interest. Such a waiver of priority renders s. 428(1) of no assistance to the bank.

The licence theory, in addition to providing certainty in disputes between consensual and non-consensual security interests, achieves fairness in commercial law. In essence, the bank is willing to accept the benefits of Sparrow's non-payment of statutory deductions and has permitted the use of its collateral to pay these deductions, but refuses to accept the burden of Sparrow's unlawful action at the time of its receivership. It should be the policy of the law that the respondent bank be held accountable for Sparrow's outstanding statutory obligations. The licence theory ensures that in appropriate circumstances this result will obtain.

The licence theory does not go so far as to mean that every subsequent claim should prevail over the GSA because every rival claim might have to be satisfied out of the proceeds of a hypothetical sale of the inventory. The consent to pay wages is a necessary but not sufficient condition. It did not simpliciter lead to the conclusion that Her Majesty's interest must prevail. What is significant is that the bank consented to payment of wages, including deductions, out of inventory which, at the time of the deductions and upon actual payment of wages, were deemed by statute to be taken out of the estate of the debtor. The unique nature of the statutory provisions applicable to wage deductions, and the bank's consent thereto, are integral to the success of the s. 227(5) claim in the case at bar. In this way, the licence theory is circumscribed in its ability to defeat prior secured interests.

In addition, the licence theory as applied here is not inimical to the integrity of commercial law. It operates narrowly, in conjunction with unique statutory provisions, so as to actualize legally performed obligations. It does not create uncertainty in commercial transactions.

Cases Cited

By Iacobucci J.

Referred to: R. in Right of B.C. v. F.B.D.B., 1987 CanLII 156 (BC CA), [1988] 1 W.W.R. 1; Alberta (Treasury Branches) v. M.N.R.; Toronto-Dominion Bank v. M.N.R., 1996 CanLII 244 (SCC), [1996] 1 S.C.R. 963.

By Gonthier J. (dissenting)

Digitized by Google

Royal Bank v. Sparrow Electric Corp., Alberta Court of Queen's Bench, Edmonton, November 24, 1993, unreported; R. in Right of B.C. v. F.B.D.B., 1987 CanLII 156 (BC CA), [1988] 1 W.W.R. 1; Dauphin Plains Credit Union Ltd. v. Xyloid Industries Ltd., 1980 CanLII 186 (SCC), [1980] 1 S.C.R. 1182; Bank of Montreal v. Hall, 1990 CanLII 157 (SCC), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 121; Board of Industrial Relations v. Avco Financial Services Realty Ltd., 1979 CanLII 230 (SCC), [1979] 2 S.C.R. 699; Royal Bank of Canada v. G.M. Homes Inc. (1984), 52 C.B.R. (N.S.) 244; Roynat Inc. v. Ja-Sha Trucking & Leasing Ltd., 1992 CanLII 2767 (MB CA), [1992] 2 W.W.R. 641; Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. v. Manning Mercury Sales Ltd. (Trustee of), 1994 CanLII 4852 (SK QB), [1994] 6 W.W.R. 372; National Bank of Canada v. Director of Employment Standards (1986), 5 P.P.S.A.C. 326; Abraham v. Coopers & Lybrand Ltd. reflex, (1993), 13 O.R. (3d) 649; Armstrong v. Coopers & Lybrand Ltd. reflex, (1986), 53 O.R. (2d) 468, aff'd reflex, (1987), 61 O.R. (2d) 129, leave to appeal refused, sub nom. National Bank of Canada v. Armstrong, [1988] 1 S.C.R. xii; Manitoba (Minister of Labour) v. Omega Autobody Ltd. (Receiver of) 1989 CanLII 178 (MB CA), (1989), 59 D.L.R. (4th) 34; Re Deslauriers Construction Products Ltd., [1970] 3 O.R. 599; Pembina on the Red Development Corp. Ltd. v. Triman Industries Ltd. 1991 CanLII 2699 (MB CA), (1991), 85 D.L.R. (4th) 29; Alberta (Treasury Branches) v. M.N.R.; Toronto-Dominion Bank v. M.N.R., 1996 CanLII 244 (SCC), [1996] 1 S.C.R. 963; Friesen v. Canada, 1995 CanLII 62 (SCC), [1995] 3 S.C.R. 103; Illingworth v. Houldsworth, [1904] A.C. 355; Re Urman (1983), 44 O.R. (2d) 248; North Sky Trading Inc. (Bankrupt), Re 1994 CanLII 8986 (AB QB), (1994), 158 A.R. 117; Royal Bank of Canada v. Workmen's Compensation Board of Nova Scotia, 1936 CanLII 39 (SCC), [1936] S.C.R. 560; C.I.B.C. v. Klymchuk reflex, (1990), 74 Alta. L.R. (2d) 232.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Bank Act, R.S.C. 1927, c. 12, s. 88.
Bank Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. B-1, ss. 2(1), 178, 179(1), 185(2), 186(2).
Bank Act, S.C. 1991, c. 46, ss. 425(1) "goods, wares and merchandise", 427(1), (2), 428(1), 434(2), 435(2).
Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. B-3, s. 67 [am. 1992, c. 27, s. 33].
Canada Pension Plan, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-5.
Canada Pension Plan, R.S.C., 1985, c. C-8, s. 23(3), (4).

Canada Pension Plan, S.C. 1964-65, c. 51, s. 24(3), (4).
Income Tax Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.), ss. 153(1)(a), (3), 224(1.2) [ad. 1987, c. 46, s. 66; am. 1990 c. 34, s.1], (1.3) [ad. 1987, c. 46, s.66], 227(4), (5).
Personal Property Security Act, S.A. 1988, c. P-4.05, ss. 4(a), 10(1), 12(1), 13(1), 28(1).
Personal Property Security Act, S.B.C. 1989, c. 36.
Personal Property Security Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P.10.

Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 48.
Unemployment Insurance Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. U-1, s. 57(2), (3).
Workmen's Compensation Act, R.S.N.S. 1923, c. 129, s. 79(2).

Authors Cited

Cuming, Ronald C. C. "Commercial Law -- Floating Charges and Fixed Charges of After-Acquired Property: The Queen in the Right of British Columbia v. Federal Business Development Bank" (1988), 67 Can. Bar Rev. 506.

Digitized by Google

Cuming, Ronald C. C., and Roderick J. Wood. Alberta Personal Property Security Act Handbook, 2nd ed. Toronto: Carswell, 1993.
Cuming, Ronald C. C., and Roderick J. Wood. British Columbia Personal Property Security Handbook, 2nd ed. Toronto: Carswell, 1993.
Moull, William D. "Security Under Sections 177 and 178 of the Bank Act" (1986), 65 Can. Bar Rev. 242.
Waters, D. W. M. Law of Trusts in Canada, 2nd ed. Toronto: Carswell, 1984.
Wood, Roderick J. "The Floating Charge in Canada" (1989), 27 Alta. L. Rev. 191.
Wood, Roderick J. "Revenue Canada's Deemed Trust Extends Its Tentacles: Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp." (1995), 10 B.F.L.R. 429.
Wood, Roderick J., and Michael I. Wylie. "Non-Consensual Security Interests in Personal Property" (1992), 30 Alta. L. Rev. 1055.
Ziegel, Jacob S. "Symposium: Recent and Prospective Developments in the Personal Property Security Law Area" (1985), 10 Can. Bus. L.J. 131.
Ziegel, Jacob S., Benjamin Geva and R. C. C. Cuming. Commercial and Consumer Transactions, Rev. 2nd ed. Toronto: Emond Montgomery, 1990.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Alberta Court of Appeal reflex, (1995), 28 Alta. L.R. (3d) 153, 165 A.R. 132, 89 W.A.C. 132, [1995] 6 W.W.R. 718, 33 C.B.R. (3d) 34, 10 P.P.S.A.C. (2d) 1, allowing an appeal from judgments of Agrios J. 1993 CanLII 7257 (AB QB), (1993), 19 Alta. L.R. (3d) 183, 10 P.P.S.A.C. (2d) 1, at p. 3, [1995] 1 C.T.C. 101, and 1994 CanLII 8992 (AB QB), (1994), 21 Alta. L. R. (3d) 275, 156 A.R. 187, [1994] 9 W.W.R. 338. Appeal dismissed, La Forest, Gonthier and Cory JJ. dissenting.

Edward R. Sojonky, Q.C., and Michael J. Lema, for the appellant.

Ray C. Rutman, for the respondent.

The reasons of La Forest, Gonthier and Cory JJ. were delivered by 1 GONTHIER J. (dissenting) -- This case involves a determination of priority between a deemed statutory trust and various security instruments in regard to the proceeds of a liquidation sale of inventory. In particular, the appeal requires a determination of the priority status of Her Majesty's deemed trust under s. 227(4) and (5) of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.) (hereinafter "ITA"), these provisions becoming operative in this case because of the misappropriation of unremitted payroll deductions lawfully belonging to Her Majesty. In competition to this claim, the Royal Bank of Canada asserts priority under both a general security agreement and an assignment of inventory under s. 427 of the Bank Act, S.C. 1991, c. 46.

I - Facts

2 The debtor, Sparrow Electric Corporation (hereinafter "Sparrow"), carried on business as an electrical contractor in Alberta. The enterprise was of a substantial size, employing 200 to 300 employees in its business operations. To finance these operations, Sparrow borrowed heavily from the respondent Royal Bank of Canada (hereinafter the "bank"). The bank secured Sparrow's borrowing with various forms of security, covering most of the assets utilized in Sparrow's business. Of particular relevance to this appeal, however, the bank held a general security agreement over all of Sparrow's present and after-acquired personal property, as well as an assignment of inventory under s. 178 (now s. 427) of the Bank Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. B-1.

3 In 1992, it became apparent to the bank that Sparrow was having financial difficulties. On two occasions, August 5, 1992 and September 30, 1992, the bank wrote to Sparrow advising its management that Sparrow was in default on its loan obligations. On October 16, 1992, in order to give Sparrow some time to correct its default situation, the bank and Sparrow entered into a "Standstill Agreement". This agreement permitted Sparrow to continue carrying on business under the proviso that, should Sparrow's position fail to improve, the bank would be entitled to appoint a receiver and enforce its security.

Digitized by Google

4 Sparrow's financial position did not improve. For this reason, on November 19, 1992, the bank appointed a receiver to take over Sparrow's business, and on December 8, 1992, the bank successfully petitioned Sparrow into bankruptcy. The order appointing the receiver empowered the receiver to, among other things, carry on Sparrow's business as it deemed necessary. The receiver did in fact carry on Sparrow's business for some time, employing approximately 200 employees in order to fulfil Sparrow's outstanding contractual obligations. These employees were terminated effective January 15, 1993.

5 In addition to the failure to pay the loan obligations which inevitably led to its bankruptcy and receivership, Sparrow had failed to honour other obligations in its attempt to remain in business. In particular, Sparrow failed to remit payroll deductions as required by s. 153 ITA. While the record does not disclose the exact date of these failures, it appears that the first instance of non-remittance could have occurred no later than August 7, 1992. Having regard to the amount of payroll deductions outstanding as of August 7, and to the average number of Sparrow's employees on the payroll, we can conclude that the actual payroll deductions which give rise to Her Majesty's claim in all likelihood occurred some time in the year 1992. In any event, by the time of its receivership, in addition to substantial amounts outstanding to the bank, Sparrow was indebted to the appellant ("Her Majesty") in the amount of $625,990.86 for unremitted income tax payroll deductions.

6 On January 12, 1993, the receiver applied to the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench for authorization to sell various Sparrow assets. Part of the pool of assets to be sold included Sparrow's inventory which is the subject of this appeal. On January 15, 1993, Wilson J. authorized both the sale of the assets and remittance of its proceeds to the bank in partial repayment of its claims, but ordered that an amount equal to Her Majesty's claim for unremitted payroll deductions be held in trust pending a resolution as to the entitlement to this portion of the proceeds. At some later date, the assets were in fact sold, and the amount of $625,990.86 set aside. It has been held in judicial proceedings that the amount held is constituted entirely of proceeds from inventory (Royal Bank v. Sparrow Electric Corp., Alberta Court of Queen's Bench, Edmonton, November 24, 1993, unreported). That ruling is not at issue in this appeal.

7 At present, the fund being held and constituting the proceeds of inventory is sufficient to satisfy either Her Majesty's claim, or part of the outstanding claims owing to the bank. The determination of priority in this appeal will therefore be determinative as to which party is entitled to the entirety of the disputed fund.

II - The Competing Interests

8 For convenience, I will at the outset outline the claims of the bank and of

Digitized by Google

Her Majesty which are advanced as being entitled to the proceeds of the inventory.

(A) The Bank

9 The respondent bank advances two distinct security instruments in order to establish its claim to the disputed fund. First, the bank argues that its general security agreement ("GSA"), executed on February 25, 1992, and perfected pursuant to the Alberta Personal Property Security Act, S.A. 1988, c. P-4.05 ("PPSA"), is entitled to priority. By this agreement, Sparrow assigned to the bank a security interest in all of its present and after-acquired personal property, including "all inventory of whatever kind and wherever situate" (para. 1(a)(i)). In addition, para. 7 of that agreement provided that proceeds of the collateral received by Sparrow would be received and held in trust for the bank. Of significance to this appeal, however, para. 4 of the GSA contained two express covenants, providing:

> So long as this Security Agreement remains in effect Debtor covenants and agrees:
>
> (a) to defend the Collateral against the claims and demands of all other parties claiming the same or an interest therein; to keep the Collateral free from all Encumbrances ...; provided always that, until default, Debtor may, in the ordinary course of Debtor's business, sell or lease inventory and, subject to Clause 7 hereof, use Money available to Debtor,
>
> ...
>
> (e) to pay all taxes, rates, levies, assessments and other charges of every nature which may be lawfully levied, assessed or imposed against or in respect of Debtor or Collateral as and when the same become due and payable; [Emphasis added.]

Additionally, under the credit facilities agreement between Sparrow and the bank, dated January 22, 1992, Sparrow covenanted as follows:

> (3) it will promptly pay when due all business, income and other taxes properly levied on its operations and property and remit all statutory employee deductions when due; [Emphasis added.]

10 The bank's second claim is that its Bank Act security ("BAS") entitles it to priority to the inventory proceeds. That security instrument was executed on two occasions, January 29, 1990 and December 12, 1990. Under the General Assignment, Sparrow assigned to the bank, inter alia, "all goods inventory, [and] stock-in-trade" as continuing security for the payment of loans to the bank. In addition, as part of the Agreement as to Loans and Advances, Sparrow granted security in both its inventory and its proceeds. At the time these instruments were executed, s. 178 of the Bank Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. B-1, was in effect. However, on June 1, 1992, that Act was replaced with the Bank Act, S.C. 1991, c. 46. The relevant portions of these two acts are identical. However, as the facts giving rise to this case occurred while the latter Act was in force, I will refer to the provisions of this new Act for the purposes of this appeal. As such, the bank's claim for security under its BAS is grounded in s. 427 (formerly s. 178) of the Bank Act, which provides:

> 427. (1) A bank may lend money and make advances
>
> (a) to any wholesale or retail purchaser or shipper of, or dealer in, products of agriculture, products of aquaculture, products of the forest, products of the quarry and mine, products of the sea, lakes and rivers or goods, wares

Digitized by Google

and merchandise, manufactured or otherwise, on the security of such products or goods, wares and merchandise and of goods, wares and merchandise used in or procured for the packing of such products or goods, wares and merchandise,

...

(2) Delivery of a document giving security on property to a bank under the authority of this section vests in the bank in respect of the property therein described

(a) of which the person giving security is the owner at the time of the delivery of the document, or

(b) of which that person becomes the owner at any time thereafter before the release of the security by the bank, whether or not the property is in existence at the time of the delivery, the following rights and powers, namely,

(c) if the property is property on which security is given under paragraph (1)(a), (b), (g), (h), (i), (j) or (o), under paragraph (1)(c) or (m) consisting of aquacultural implements, under paragraph (1)(d) or (n) consisting of agricultural implements or under paragraph (1)(p) consisting of forestry implements, the same rights and powers as if the bank had acquired a warehouse receipt or bill of lading in which that property was described, ...

...

and all such property in respect of which such rights and powers are vested in the bank under this section is for the purposes of this Act property covered by the security. [Emphasis added.]

Section 425(1) (formerly contained within s. 2(1)) provides that:

425. (1) ...

"goods, wares and merchandise" includes products of agriculture, products of aquaculture, products of the forest, products of the quarry and mine, products of the sea, lakes and rivers, and all other articles of commerce; [Emphasis added.]

And s. 435(2) (formerly s. 186(2)) provides:

435. ...

(2) Any warehouse receipt or bill of lading acquired by a bank under subsection (1) vests in the bank, from the date of the acquisition thereof,

(a) all the right and title to the warehouse receipt or bill of lading and to the goods, wares and merchandise covered thereby of the previous holder or owner thereof; and

(b) all the right and title to the goods, wares and merchandise mentioned therein of the person from whom the goods, wares and merchandise were received or acquired by the bank, if the warehouse receipt or bill of lading is made directly in favour of the bank, instead of to the previous holder or owner of the goods, wares and merchandise.

11 In addition, the respondent directed this Court's attention to s. 428(1) (formerly s. 179(1)), which it was submitted affected the priority position of the bank's BAS:

428. (1) All the rights and powers of a bank in respect of the property mentioned in or covered by a warehouse receipt or bill of lading acquired and held by the bank, and the rights and powers of the bank in respect of the property covered by a security given to the bank under section 427 that are the same as if the bank had acquired a warehouse receipt or bill of lading in which that property was described, have, subject to subsection 427(4) and subsections (3) to (6) of this section, priority over all rights subsequently acquired in, on or in respect of that property, and also over the claim of any unpaid vendor. [Emphasis added.]

Digitized by Google

Finally, s. 434(2) (formerly s. 185(2)) provides:

434. ...

(2) Nothing in any charter, Act or law shall be construed as ever having been intended to prevent or as preventing a bank from acquiring and holding an absolute title to and in any mortgaged or hypothecated real property, whatever the value thereof, or from exercising or acting on any power of sale contained in any mortgage given to or held by the bank, authorizing or enabling it to sell or convey any property so mortgaged. [Emphasis added.]

12 While no provision in the BAS explicitly permitted Sparrow to sell its inventory, the respondent bank has conceded that such a licence existed, as a practical matter, as between the parties. In any event, I would have thought that once a licence to sell inventory had been granted under the GSA, it would be impossible to grant a more restricted licence to deal with the same collateral under the provisions of the BAS.

(B) Her Majesty's Interest

13 Her Majesty's claim arises under the s. 227 deemed trust provisions of the ITA. Section 153(1)(a) of that Act requires employers to withhold from the pay cheques of its employees and remit to the Receiver General amounts on account of the payee's tax for the year:

153. (1) Every person paying at any time in a taxation year

(a) salary or wages or other remuneration,

...

shall deduct or withhold therefrom such amount as may be determined in accordance with prescribed rules and shall, at such time as may be prescribed, remit that amount to the Receiver General on account of the payee's tax for the year.... [Emphasis added.]

Such amounts are deemed to be held in trust for Her Majesty by virtue of s. 227(4) and (5) ITA, which provide:

227. ...

(4) Every person who deducts or withholds any amount under this Act shall be deemed to hold the amount so deducted or withheld in trust for Her Majesty.

(5) Notwithstanding any provision of the Bankruptcy Act, in the event of any liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy of or by a person, an amount equal to any amount shall be deemed to be separate from and form no part of the estate in liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy, whether or not that amount has in fact been kept separate and apart from the person's own moneys or from the assets of the estate.

(a) deemed by subsection (4) to be held in trust for Her Majesty, ...

...

As of June 15, 1994, these provisions have been repealed and replaced by a revised

Digitized by Google

s. 227(4): S.C. 1994, c. 21, s. 104(1). However, as this amendment was not effective at the time the facts of this appeal arose, I decline to comment on the application of the new s. 227(4) to this case.

III - Judgments of the Courts Below

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench 1993 CanLII 7257 (AB QB), (1993), 19 Alta. L.R. (3d) 183

14 The first application brought to determine the priority over the inventory proceeds involved the competing claims under the GSA advanced by the bank, and Her Majesty's deemed trust. Agrios J. held that the deemed trust took priority over the GSA. In characterizing the statutory trust, Agrios J. concluded at p. 189 that the trust attaches to "whatever assets are left" upon bankruptcy. With regard to the GSA security interest, Agrios J. was of the view that it took the form of a fixed charge on the inventory with a licence to sell in the ordinary course of business. However, this latter characterization was not necessary to reach his decision, as the learned chambers judge ultimately reasoned, at p. 188, "[w]hether the charge is floating or fixed, if there is an ability to deal with an asset such as inventory, the asset becomes exposed to the normal market incidents of carrying on business". Relying on the decision of McLachlin J.A. (as she then was) in R. in Right of B.C. v. F.B.D.B., 1987 CanLII 156 (BC CA), [1988] 1 W.W.R. 1 (B.C.C.A.) (hereinafter "FBDB"), Agrios J. found that a normal incident of selling inventory was the payment of statutory liens. The sale of the inventory therefore permitted the statutory trust to attach.

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench 1994 CanLII 8992 (AB QB), (1994), 21 Alta. L.R. (3d) 275

15 The bank subsequently applied for a determination of whether their BAS over Sparrow's inventory took priority over Her Majesty's deemed trust. For substantially similar reasons, Agrios J. held that the deemed trust once again took priority. Whether the BAS could be characterized as a fixed charge with a licence to sell, or a floating charge, the sale of the inventory subjected the bank's interest in it to the "normal incidents of business" (at p. 283). And, in Agrios J.'s view, one of these incidents was the paying of wages and withholdings. As these proceeds were impressed with the deemed trust, whatever interest the bank had could not attach to them, as they were no longer the property of Sparrow.

Alberta Court of Appeal reflex, (1995), 28 Alta. L.R. (3d) 153

16 Both the decisions of Agrios J. were appealed to the Alberta Court of Appeal. As such, the priority of both the GSA and the BAS were at issue before that court. However, the Court of Appeal, unanimously deciding to dispose of the appeal solely on the grounds that the BAS took priority over the statutory trust, neither heard oral argument nor ruled with regard to the priority of the GSA.

17 The Court of Appeal began with the premise that BAS was a fixed and specific charge transferring legal title to the bank and not a floating charge over inventory. For this proposition, the court relied upon two judgments of this Court, Dauphin Plains Credit Union Ltd. v. Xyloid Industries Ltd., 1980 CanLII 186 (SCC), [1980] 1 S.C.R. 1182, and Bank of Montreal v. Hall, 1990 CanLII 157 (SCC), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 121, both decisions which the court considered binding upon it. As the claim of Her Majesty arose subsequent to the execution of the BAS, in the court's opinion, the deemed trust could have nothing to attach to. In addition, the court rejected the argument that the inventory was subject to a licence to sell which would provide Her Majesty with an opportunity to attach its interest. The Court of Appeal found FBDB, supra, relied upon by Agrios J. to be distinguishable on the basis that the intimacy in that case between the sale of inventory and the statutory trust was not present in the case before it. In contrast, in the present case, the court found no conceptual or evidentiary link between the sale of inventory and the withholding of payroll deductions. In any event, the court found that any licence to sell inventory only lasted until default, and as the sale in this case occurred well after any default by Sparrow, the licence must therefore have been extinguished at the relevant time. For these reasons, the Court of Appeal found that the BAS took priority over Her Majesty's deemed trust.

Digitized by Google

IV - Issues

18 There are two issues to be resolved in this appeal: (1) whether, on the facts of this case, Her Majesty's s. 227(5) ITA deemed trust takes priority over a previously executed GSA with respect to the proceeds of the sale of inventory; and (2) whether, on the facts of this case, Her Majesty's s. 227(5) ITA deemed trust takes priority over a previously executed BAS with respect to the proceeds of the sale of inventory?

V - Analysis

(A) Introduction

19 The law reports are replete with cases involving competing claims between statutory liens and deemed trusts, such as the one found in s. 227 ITA, and other previously executed consensual security interests: Dauphin Plains Credit Union Ltd. v. Xyloid Industries Ltd., supra; Board of Industrial Relations v. Avco Financial Services Realty Ltd., 1979 CanLII 230 (SCC), [1979] 2 S.C.R. 699; Royal Bank of Canada v. G. M. Homes Inc. (1984), 52 C.B.R. (N.S.) 244 (Sask. C.A.); Roynat Inc. v. Ja-Sha Trucking & Leasing Ltd., 1992 CanLII 2767 (MB CA), [1992] 2 W.W.R. 641 (Man. C.A.); FBDB, supra; Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. v. Manning Mercury Sales Ltd. (Trustee of), 1994 CanLII 4852 (SK QB), [1994] 6 W.W.R. 372 (Sask. Q.B.); National Bank of Canada v. Director of Employment Standards (1986), 5 P.P.S.A.C. 326 (Ont. Div. Ct.); Abraham v. Coopers & Lybrand Ltd. reflex, (1993), 13 O.R. (3d) 649 (Gen. Div.) (under appeal); Armstrong v. Coopers & Lybrand Ltd. reflex, (1986), 53 O.R. (2d) 468 (H.C.), aff'd reflex, (1987), 61 O.R. (2d) 129 (C.A.), leave refused, sub nom. National Bank of Canada v. Armstrong, [1988] 1 S.C.R. xii. The ubiquitousness of this legal dilemma in our courts speaks no doubt, at least in part, to the prevalence of the unfortunate factual situation which such statutory trusts and liens were meant to counter. Namely, such deemed trusts or liens are devices which legislators often employ in order to recover moneys which ought to have lawfully been paid to them but have been unlawfully misappropriated by a debtor who subsequently encounters financial difficulty and is forced into winding up its business, e.g., Canada Pension Plan, R.S.C., 1985, c. C-8, s. 23(3) and (4); Unemployment Insurance Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. U-1, s. 57(2) and (3); and the Income Tax Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.), s. 227(4) and (5). Indeed, it is perhaps more accurate to speculate that this sort of misappropriation of public funds is often a manifestation of an already-existing financial difficulty in a debtor's business, as a debtor foregoes statutory payments as required of it in order to increase artificially its supply of working capital.

Digitized by Google

20 At the same time that legislators have sought to protect the fiscal integrity of public institutions through the devices of statutory trusts and liens, however, they have also endeavoured to protect the security interests of those private institutions who are involved in providing credit to Canadian businesses. For example, the Bank Act has historically provided for the protection of the collateral of banking institutions. The current provision of the Bank Act granting a security interest in a debtor's inventory, s. 427, can be traced back over one hundred years to the enactment of its predecessor section, s. 74, in 1890 (S.C. 1890, c. 31). The historical and societal importance of this form of security was observed by this Court in Hall, supra, where, at p. 139, La Forest J. commented that "[i]n a word, the creation of the Bank Act security interest has been a key factor in the evolution of banking in this country". Later, at p. 140, La Forest J. concluded:

> The above considerations establish, to my satisfaction, that the s. 178 security interest, which originated as a policy response to structural deficiencies in the lending regimes of the nascent Canadian economy, has, since its inception, played a primordial role in facilitating access to capital by several groups that play a key role in the national economy. [Emphasis added.]

21 More recently, provincial legislatures have moved to protect secured creditors generally through the enactment of personal property security legislation: e.g. Personal Property Security Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P.10; Personal Property Security Act, S.B.C. 1989, c. 36; and the PPSA. These statutory regimes have been implemented to increase certainty and predictability in secured transactions through the creation of a coherent system of priorities: Ronald C. C. Cuming and Roderick J. Wood, British Columbia Personal Property Security Act Handbook (2nd ed. 1993), at pp. 4-5; G.M. Homes Inc., supra, at p. 252. The benefits of such certainty in commercial transactions, on basic economic principles, are intended to accrue to the health of the economy in general.

22 It can be seen from the foregoing, therefore, that the priority competition between statutory trusts and consensual security interests represents, in a broad sense, a clash between conflicting legislative objectives. To this extent, then, a resolution of the priority competition in the present case requires a sensitivity to the differing legislative objectives here at play. In particular, however, to the extent that the aim of personal property security regimes is to effect certainty in commercial transactions, the interpretation by the courts of such legislation and the development of the jurisprudence generally in this area must, to every extent possible, seek to achieve predictable results.

23 It has been unfortunate that the development of the case law, to this point, has not inspired the degree of certainty which is so manifestly desirable in this area of commercial law. Indeed, the jurisprudence has been referred to as a "troubled area of the law" (Manitoba (Minister of Labour) v. Omega Autobody Ltd. (Receiver of) 1989 CanLII 178 (MB CA), (1989), 59 D.L.R. (4th) 34 (Man. C.A.), at p. 36), and has been the subject of, at times, scathing academic criticism (Roderick J. Wood, "Revenue Canada's Deemed Trust Extends Its Tentacles: Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp." (1995), 10

Digitized by Google

B.F.L.R. 429, and Roderick J. Wood and Michael I. Wylie, "Non-Consensual Security Interests in Personal Property" (1992), 30 Alta. L. Rev. 1055). The general view, I believe, has been summarized by Professor Wood in his most helpful case commentary, "Revenue Canada's Deemed Trust Extends Its Tentacles: Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp.", supra, at p. 430: "[i]t is somewhat of an embarrassment that after more than two decades we still cannot confidently predict the outcome of a priority dispute between a deemed trust and a security interest". The above judicial and academic commentary, I believe, invites this Court to proceed steadfastly towards the pronouncement of clear principles to be applied in determining the priority between statutory trusts and consensual security interests.

24 With these general observations in mind, I will now proceed to analyze the specific aspects of the competing claims advanced by the parties in the present case.

(B) The Nature of Section 227(4) and (5) Statutory Trusts

25 Section 153(1)(a) ITA places an affirmative duty upon employers to deduct and withhold amounts from their employees' pay cheques, and remit those withholdings to the Receiver General on account of the employees' tax payable. By virtue of s. 153(3) ITA, these withholdings are deemed to become the property of the employee:

> 153. ...
>
> (3) When an amount has been deducted or withheld under subsection (1), it shall, for all the purposes of this Act, be deemed to have been received at that time by the person to whom the remuneration, benefit, payment, fees, commissions or other amounts were paid.

In a perfect world, these deductions would be made, a cash fund would be set aside by the employer, and the withheld amounts would be promptly remitted to the Receiver General when due. The deducted amounts, lawfully the property of the employee, would in this way be transferred to Her Majesty to be set against his overall tax payable.

26 As a practical reality, however, these deductions are often not remitted as required under the ITA. Instead, the withholdings are commonly made solely as a book entry, and therefore the deduction of taxes from wages becomes merely a notional transaction; no cash is actually set aside for remittance and, often, the deductions are not transferred to the Receiver General: see, e.g., Re Deslauriers Construction Products Ltd., [1970] 3 O.R. 599 (C.A.), at p. 601. It is at this point which a business becomes indebted to Her Majesty for the amount of moneys only fictionally deducted. I hasten to add, however, that while it can be said Her Majesty at this point becomes de facto, if not de jure, a creditor of the non-remitting employer, the arrangement is dissimilar to an ordinary debtor-creditor situation in two fundamental respects. First, in contrast to usual negotiated credit arrangements, this transaction is of manifestly a non-consensual nature. Second, by virtue of s. 153(3), the debtor can in law be considered to be utilizing an asset which is the property of its employees. In this sense, it is not inaccurate to characterize the non-remittance of payroll deductions as a "misappropriation" of the property of another. Indeed, the authorities, correctly in my view, commonly refer to the conduct of the tax debtor in this manner: Roynat, supra, at p. 646, per Twaddle J.A.; and

Digitized by Google

Pembina on the Red Development Corp. Ltd. v. Triman Industries Ltd. 1991 CanLII 2699 (MB CA), (1991), 85 D.L.R. (4th) 29 (Man. C.A.), at p. 48, per Lyon J.A. dissenting.

27 The economic reality of this sort of misappropriation of statutory deductions is artificially to increase the working capital of the tax debtor. By foregoing a cash payment to Her Majesty in the amount of the payroll deductions, the tax debtor is able to utilize the freed resources elsewhere in its business. The effect of non-remittance was summarized by Lyon J.A. in his dissenting reasons in Pembina on the Red Development, supra, at p. 48:

> ... either the tax debtor used the misappropriated deductions for its own purposes or the pool of moneys available for distribution to the tax debtor's creditors ... has been increased by the amount which the tax debtor failed to remit to the Receiver-General.

28 It is against the backdrop of this unfortunate factual scenario that the provisions of s. 227(4) and (5) can be seen to have been enacted. While it can be said that at the point of withholding the employer becomes the trustee of a fund which is in law the property of its employee, s. 227(4) has the effect of making Her Majesty the beneficiary under that trust. I agree with the observation of the mechanics of s. 227(4) made by Twaddle J.A. in Roynat, supra, at p. 646, where he states:

> Although [s. 227(4)] calls the trust created by it a deemed one, the trust is in truth a real one. The employer is required to deduct from his employees' wages the amounts due by the employees under the statute. This money does not belong to the employer anymore. It belongs to the employees. The employer holds it in a statutory trust to satisfy their obligations.

The conceptual difficulty arises, of course, when the tax debtor fails to set aside moneys which are to be remitted. At this point, the subject of Her Majesty's beneficial interest becomes intermingled with the general assets of the tax debtor. As Twaddle J.A. rightly observed in Roynat, supra, at p. 646, "Her Majesty's claim ... then be[comes] that of a beneficiary under a non-existent trust". In short, the misappropriation of statutory deductions conceptually problematizes the legal vehicle -- the concept of the trust -- which Parliament has invoked in order to regain the moneys lawfully owed to Her Majesty.

29 This conceptual dilemma is resolved by s. 227(5). That provision states that:

> 227. ...
>
> (5) Notwithstanding any provision of the Bankruptcy Act, in the event of any liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy of or by a person, an amount equal to any amount
>
> (a) deemed by subsection (4) to be held in trust for Her Majesty, ...
>
> ...
>
> shall be deemed to be separate from and form no part of the estate in liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy, whether or not that amount has in fact been kept separate and apart from the person's own moneys or from the assets of the estate.

The effect of s. 227(5) naturally falls to be determined through a proper interpretation of the language contained in that subsection.

30 This Court recently had occasion to review the principles of law to be applied to the interpretation of tax legislation. In Alberta (Treasury Branches) v. M.N.R.; Toronto-Dominion Bank v. M.N.R., 1996 CanLII 244 (SCC), [1996] 1 S.C.R. 963, at pp. 975-76, Cory J. quoted this Court's decision in Friesen v. Canada, 1995 CanLII 62 (SCC), [1995] 3 S.C.R. 103, at pp. 112-14, where the relevant principles were summarized as follows:

Digitized by Google

> In interpreting sections of the Income Tax Act, the correct approach, as set out by Estey J. in Stubart Investments Ltd. v. The Queen, 1984 CanLII 20 (SCC), [1984] 1 S.C.R. 536, is to apply the plain meaning rule. Estey J. at p. 578 relied on the following passage from E. A. Driedger, Construction of Statutes (2nd ed. 1983), at p. 87:
>
> > Today there is only one principle or approach, namely, the words of an Act are to be read in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act, and the intention of Parliament.
>
> The principle that the plain meaning of the relevant sections of the Income Tax Act is to prevail unless the transaction is a sham has recently been affirmed by this Court in Canada v. Antosko, 1994 CanLII 88 (SCC), [1994] 2 S.C.R. 312. Iacobucci J., writing for the Court, held at pp. 326-27 that:
>
> > While it is true that the courts must view discrete sections of the Income Tax Act in light of the other provisions of the Act and of the purpose of the legislation, and that they must analyze a given transaction in the context of economic and commercial reality, such techniques cannot alter the result where the words of the statute are clear and plain and where the legal and practical effect of the transaction is undisputed: Mattabi Mines Ltd. v. Ontario (Minister of Revenue), 1988 CanLII 58 (SCC), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 175, at p. 194; see also Symes v. Canada, 1993 CanLII 55 (SCC), [1993] 4 S.C.R. 695.
>
> I accept the following comments on the Antosko case in P. W. Hogg and J. E. Magee, Principles of Canadian Income Tax Law (1995), Section 22.3© "Strict and purposive interpretation", at pp. 453-54:
>
> > It would introduce intolerable uncertainty into the Income Tax Act if clear language in a detailed provision of the Act were to be qualified by unexpressed exceptions derived from a court's view of the object and purpose of the provision.... (The Antosko case) is simply a recognition that "object and purpose" can play only a limited role in the interpretation of a statute that is as precise and detailed as the Income Tax Act. When a provision is couched in specific language that admits of no doubt or ambiguity in its application to the facts, then the provision must be applied regardless of its object and purpose. Only when the statutory language admits of some doubt or ambiguity in its application to the facts is it useful to resort to the object and purpose of the provision.

At pp. 976-77 of Alberta (Treasury Branches), supra, Cory J. concluded:

> Thus, when there is neither any doubt as to the meaning of the legislation nor any ambiguity in its application to the facts then the statutory provision must be applied regardless of its object or purpose. I recognize that agile legal minds could probably find an ambiguity in as simple a request as "close the door please" and most certainly in even the shortest and clearest of the ten commandments. However, the very history of this case with the clear differences of opinion expressed as between the trial judges and the Court of Appeal of

Digitized by Google

Alberta indicates that for able and experienced legal minds, neither the meaning of the legislation nor its application to the facts is clear. It would therefore seem to be appropriate to consider the object and purpose of the legislation. Even if the ambiguity were not apparent, it is significant that in order to determine the clear and plain meaning of the statute it is always appropriate to consider the "scheme of the Act, the object of the Act, and the intention of Parliament".

31 In the present case, I find the language in s. 227(5) to be clear and unambiguous, especially when viewed as a provision directly following s. 227(4), which renders amounts unremitted as held in trust for Her Majesty. In my view, this section is designed to, upon liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy, seek out and attach Her Majesty's beneficial interest to property of the debtor which at that time is in existence. The trust is not in truth a real one, as the subject matter of the trust cannot be identified from the date of creation of the trust: D. W. M. Waters, Law of Trusts in Canada (2nd ed. 1984), at p. 117. However, s. 227(5) has the effect of revitalizing the trust whose subject matter has lost all identity. This identification of the subject matter of the trust therefore occurs ex post facto. In this respect, I agree with the conclusion of Twaddle J.A. in Roynat, supra, where he states the effect of s. 227(5) as follows, at p. 647: "Her Majesty has a statutory right of access to whatever assets the employer then has, out of which to realize the original trust debt due to Her".

32 I add that this approach was taken to a provision substantially similar to s. 227(5) by Gale C.J. in Re Deslauriers Construction Products Ltd., supra, at p. 601, whose reasoning was affirmed by this Court in Dauphin Plains, supra. The Deslauriers case, supra, involved a priority competition between a trustee-in-bankruptcy and a statutory deemed trust provision created under the Canada Pension Plan, S.C. 1964-65, c. 51. Section 24(3) and (4) of that Act stated:

> 24. ...
>
> (3) Where an employer has deducted an amount from the remuneration of an employee as or on account of any contribution required to be made by the employee but has not remitted such amount to the Receiver General of Canada, the employer shall keep such amount separate and apart from his own moneys and shall be deemed to hold the amount so deducted in trust for Her Majesty.
>
> (4) In the event of any liquidation, assignment or bankruptcy of an employer, an amount equal to the amount that by subsection (3) is deemed to be held in trust for Her Majesty shall be deemed to be separate from and form no part of the estate in liquidation, assignment or bankruptcy, whether or not that amount has in fact been kept separate and apart from the employer's own moneys or from the assets of the estate.

This Court in Dauphin Plains, supra, at p. 1198, approved of Gale C.J.'s conclusion as to the interpretation of s. 24(4) (at p. 601 of Deslauriers, supra):

> It seems to us that s-s. (4), and particularly the concluding six words thereof, were inserted in the Act specifically for the purpose of taking the moneys equivalent to the deductions out of the estate of the bankrupt by the creation of a trust and making those moneys the property of the Minister.

33 This interpretation of s. 227(5) also has the virtue of being consistent with the scheme of distribution under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C.,

Digitized by Google

1985, c. B-3. Section 67 of that Act expressly removes claims for unremitted payroll deductions, which are held in trust (inter alia) pursuant to s. 227 ITA, from the bankrupt's estate:

> 67. (1) The property of a bankrupt divisible among his creditors shall not comprise
>
> (a) property held by the bankrupt in trust for any other person,
>
> ...
>
> (2) Subject to subsection (3), notwithstanding any provision in federal or provincial legislation that has the effect of deeming property to be held in trust for Her Majesty, property of a bankrupt shall not be regarded as held in trust for Her Majesty for the purpose of paragraph (1)(a) unless it would be so regarded in the absence of that statutory provision.
>
> (3) Subsection (2) does not apply in respect of subsections 227(4) and (5) of the Income Tax Act, subsections 23(3) and (4) of the Canada Pension Plan or subsections 57(2) and (3) of the Unemployment Insurance Act....

34 It is to be observed that in addition to attaching Her Majesty's interest to the debtor's property upon the triggering of any of the events mentioned in s. 227(5), the deemed trust operates to the benefit of Her Majesty in a secondary manner. Namely, s. 227(5) permits Her Majesty's interest to attach to collateral which is subject to a fixed charge if the deductions giving rise to Her Majesty's claim arose before that charge attached to that collateral. This proposition flows from the decision of this Court in Dauphin Plains, supra. Dauphin Plains involved a determination as to priority in respect of the proceeds of a liquidation sale of a receiver-manager. In that case, the claims of Her Majesty (inter alia) arose by virtue of the non-remittance of payroll deductions in regard to payments under the Canada Pension Plan, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-5, and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 48. Those Acts provided Her Majesty with claims pursuant to deemed trusts whose language is substantially similar to the version of s. 227(4) and (5) at issue in this appeal. In finding that these claims took precedence over a floating charge which had crystallized after the deductions at issue were actually made, Pigeon J. stated at p. 1199:

> It should first be observed that, for reasons similar to those on which the decision in the Avco case, supra, was based, the claim for Pension Plan and Unemployment Insurance deductions cannot affect the proceeds of realization of property subject to a fixed and specific charge. From the moment such charge was created, the assets subject thereto, were no longer the property of the debtor except subject to that charge. The claim for the deductions arose subsequently and thus cannot affect this charge in the absence of a statute specifically so providing. However, the floating charge did not crystallize prior to the issue of the writ and the appointment of the receiver. In the present case it makes no difference which of the two dates is selected, both are subsequent to the deductions. [Emphasis added.]

Thus, s. 227(5) alternatively permits Her Majesty's interest to attach retroactively to the disputed collateral if the competing security interest has attached after the deductions giving rise to Her Majesty's claim in fact occurred. Conceptually, the s. 227(5) deemed trust allows Her Majesty's claim to go back in time and attach its outstanding s. 227(4) interest to the collateral before that collateral became subject to a fixed charge. The same result occurs when a statutory lien attaches prior to the mortgaging of disputed collateral. In Avco, supra, this Court per Martland J. commented upon just such a scenario, at p. 706:

Digitized by Google

> From that date, the lien attaches to the employer's property and, as provided in subs. (1), it will take priority over any other claim, including an assignment or mortgage. In other words, after the lien attaches, its priority is unaffected by a disposition of his property made by the employer. Where a mortgage has been made prior to the lien attaching, it is not affected. The lien will only attach to the employer's equity in that property. [Emphasis added.]

See also G.M. Homes Inc., supra, at p. 250.

35 In this appeal, however, the deductions of tax from the employees' pay cheques occurred after the attachment of the bank's fixed charge to the inventory. As such, this second aspect of s. 227(5)'s operation is not at issue in this case.

36 I find support for the interpretation of s. 227(5) that I have taken in as much as it is consistent with the overall purpose of s. 227(4) and (5). In Pembina on the Red Development, supra, Lyon J.A. (dissenting) had occasion to comment upon the purpose of the predecessor section to the current s. 224(1.2) ITA, namely s. 224(1.2) and (1.3) of the Income Tax Act, S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 63, which were added by S.C. 1987, c. 46, s. 66. I find that Lyon J.A.'s comments in this respect to be fully applicable to the articulation of the purpose of s. 227(5). At p. 51, Lyon J.A. stated:

> One must always remember that the withholding tax or source deduction to which s. 224 applies is at the heart of the collection procedures for personal income taxation in Canada. Indeed, if one makes a calculation from the statistics reported in "Taxation Statistics, 1987", a publication of Revenue Canada Taxation, Catalogue No. RV-1987, one finds that 87% of all personal income taxes paid in Canada are collected by source deductions. It can thus be seen that Parliament in passing s. 224(1.2) made it as all-encompassing as it is in order to ensure its continued viability. No other system is so crucial to the overall collection procedure adopted by the Crown. Parliament clearly meant to protect this system. Using the employer as a tax collector requires such extra protection in cases such as the one at bar where the employer converts the withheld tax money to its own purposes. Understandably, that conversion cannot be countenanced if the integrity of that system is to be preserved. Parliament, therefore, acting within its constitutional authority, has taken this extraordinary remedy to protect a major collection source.

Similarly, Parliament has clearly sought to protect the collection of unremitted payroll deductions through the device of the statutory deemed trust. Accordingly, s. 227(5) must be interpreted in light of this purpose. To summarize, it operates in a twofold manner: upon the triggering of an event specified in s. 227(5), Her Majesty's beneficial interest (i) attaches to the tax debtor's property then in existence; or (ii) attaches to collateral subject either to a fixed charge, or a crystallized floating charge, if the actual deductions giving rise to Her Majesty's claim occurred before the fixed charge attached, or the floating charge crystallized, respectively.

37 One further point with respect to terminology is necessary before leaving the present discussion. The method of attachment of Her Majesty's beneficial interest pursuant to s. 227(5) has been referred to at times as a "mechanism for tracing": Roynat, supra, at p. 647. This was indeed how it was presented by counsel for Her Majesty in his submissions before this Court. During the hearing of this case, it was questioned whether this was not an awkward usage of the word "tracing". After considering the matter, it is my view that it is not accurate to describe the mechanism of s. 227(5) as a means of "tracing"; indeed, it would seem that this subsection is antithetical to tracing in the traditional sense, to the extent that it requires no link at all between the subject matter of the trust and the fund or asset which the subject matter is being traced into: D. W. M. Waters, Law of Trusts in Canada, supra, at pp. 1037-53. For this reason, I find Professor Wood's description of the operation of s. 227(5), namely, a "relaxation of the equitable tracing rules", to be most accurate: Roderick J. Wood, "The Floating Charge in Canada" (1989), 27 Alta. L. Rev. 191, at p. 221; see also Omega, supra, at p. 43; and Re Deslauriers Construction Products Ltd., supra, at p. 603.

Digitized by Google

38 In conclusion, s. 227(5) is a provision designed to minimize the adverse effect upon Her Majesty from the misappropriation of trust funds held by tax debtors on account of their employees' tax payable. The provision contemplates an intermingling of Her Majesty's property with that of a tax debtor's, such that the subject matter of the trust cannot be (or indeed never was) identifiable. To address this conceptual problem, s. 227(5) allows Her Majesty to attach its interest to any property which lawfully belongs to the debtor at the time of liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy; this property is then deemed to exist "separate" and apart from the tax debtor's estate. The ITA thus permits Her Majesty to transfer title in the property from the tax debtor to Herself in order to satisfy the tax debtor's outstanding unremitted payroll obligations.

39 I would hasten to add to this, however, that this provision does not permit Her Majesty to attach Her beneficial interest to property which, at the time of liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy, in law belongs to a party other than the tax debtor. Section 227(4) and (5) are manifestly directed towards the property of the tax debtor, and it would be contrary to well-established authority to stretch the interpretation of s. 227(5) to permit the expropriation of the property of third parties who are not specifically mentioned in the statute. As Martland J. stated in Avco, supra, at p. 706:

> The property to which a s. 5A lien attaches is not defined nor identified. In the absence of a specific statutory provision to that effect, in my view it should not be construed in a manner which could deprive third parties of their pre-existing property rights.

Similarly, in Pembina on the Red Development, supra, Scott C.J. stated the presumption against expropriation of property, at p. 38:

> In Cross, Statutory Interpretation (London: Butterworths, 1987), the author writes at p. 180:
>
> > There is a general presumption that Parliament does not intend to take away private property rights unless the contrary is clearly indicated. Lord Atkinson stated that there is a canon of interpretation "that an intention to take away the property of a subject without giving to him a legal right to compensation for the loss of it is not to be imputed to the legislature unless that intention is expressed in unequivocal terms." After all, the protection of property is generally regarded as one of the fundamental values of a liberal society. [Emphasis added.]

Digitized by Google

Later in that same case, Twaddle J.A., in separate concurring reasons, articulated this same principle as follows, at p. 46, "[i]t is a long-established principle of law that, in the absence of clear language to the contrary, a tax on one person cannot be collected out of property belonging to another".

40 Thus, while s. 227(5) can be seen as a provision enacted to solve the conceptual dilemma precipitated by an intermingling of unremitted payroll deductions with a tax debtor's general assets, it is a legal vehicle not without its own conceptual limitations. Namely, while the s. 227(5) deemed trust permits Her Majesty to attach Her beneficial interest to property of the tax debtor upon liquidation (assignment, receivership or bankruptcy), it does not permit the expropriation of property which may belong to a third party creditor at the time the subsection becomes engaged.

41 However, as will be discussed in further detail, infra, it is my opinion that the licence theory may, in certain cases, create an exception to this general principle. In particular, where a secured creditor consents to the disposition of his collateral in order to pay wage deductions, that consent, coupled with the statutory trust provisions here at issue, may act to divest that creditor of its proprietary interest in that collateral at the time of liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy. Indeed, it is my view that this exception is engaged in the present case such that the s. 227(5) claim of Her Majesty must prevail.

(C) The Nature of the Bank's Security Interests

42 I begin from the observation that Parliament, in enacting s. 227(4) and (5), has chosen to secure Her Majesty's claims to unremitted payroll deductions through employing the concept of a deemed trust. Therefore, the proper analysis to follow in determining whether Her Majesty is entitled to priority pursuant to these subsections must utilize principles of property law. For this reason, it becomes relevant and indeed essential to scrutinize the nature of the interests which compete with Her Majesty's trust in order to determine whether and to what extent such interests have title in the disputed fund. As I mentioned previously, Her Majesty's trust can attach to the disputed collateral only to the extent that that collateral is not in law the property of a party other than the tax debtor at the time the deemed trust is engaged. More specifically, subject to the application of the licence theory, if it is found that legal title in the collateral is in the bank, and not Sparrow, Her Majesty's deemed trust could only attach to Sparrow's equity of redemption: see Avco, supra, at p. 706.

43 This "statutory trust" approach can be distinguished from other legislative methods which are used to secure an interest to unremitted payroll deductions, namely, through employing an explicit "Crown priority" provision. An example of such a provision can be found in s. 224(1.2) ITA, a subsection which was recently the subject of consideration of this Court in Alberta (Treasury Branches), supra. That provision reads:

> 224. ...
>
> (1.2) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Bankruptcy Act, any other enactment of Canada, any enactment of a province or any law, where the Minister has knowledge or suspects that a particular person is or will become, within 90 days, liable to make a payment
>
> (a) to another person ... who is liable to pay an amount assessed under subsection 227(10.1) or a similar provision, or

Digitized by Google

(b) to a secured creditor who has a right to receive the payment that, but for a security interest in favour of the secured creditor, would be payable to the tax debtor, the Minister may, by registered letter or by a letter served personally, require the particular person to pay forthwith, where the moneys are immediately payable, and in any other case, as and when the moneys become payable, the moneys otherwise payable to the tax debtor or the secured creditor in whole or in part to the Receiver General on account of the tax debtor's liability under subsection 227(10.1) or a similar provision, and on receipt of that letter by the particular person, the amount of those moneys that is required by that letter to be paid to the Receiver General shall, notwithstanding any security interest in those moneys, become the property of Her Majesty and shall be paid to the Receiver General in priority to any such security interest. [Emphasis added.]

In contrast to the "deemed trust" approach, the application of this section to a priority competition can proceed without regard to the quality of the "security interest" which competes with Her Majesty's claim. Indeed, s. 224(1.2) simply transfers title in the collateral to Her Majesty regardless of whose interest may compete with it, so long as the requirements of s. 224(1.2) are met: see, e.g., Alberta (Treasury Branches), supra. For a general discussion of these two distinct analytical methods of determining priority between non-consensual security interests (such as statutory trusts) and consensual security interests, see Wood and Wylie, "Non-Consensual Security Interests in Personal Property", supra, at pp. 1072-83.

44 In the present case, it therefore becomes necessary to characterize the bank's interest in Sparrow's inventory as either a floating, or a fixed and specific charge.

45 The basic distinction between fixed and floating charges was articulated by Lord Macnaghten in Illingworth v. Houldsworth, [1904] A.C. 355 (H.L.), at p. 358:

A specific charge, I think, is one that without more fastens on ascertained and definite property or property capable of being ascertained and defined; a floating charge, on the other hand, is ambulatory and shifting in its nature, hovering over and so to speak floating with the property which it is intended to affect until some event occurs or some act is done which causes it to settle and fasten on the subject of the charge within its reach and grasp.

The "event ... or ... act" to which Lord Macnaghten refers to as causing the floating interest to "settle and fasten" is described in the modern authorities as "crystallization". Generally speaking, crystallization occurs upon the default of the debtor. Once the floating interest has been said to crystallize, that interest is transformed into a fixed and specific charge over the inventory. See Wood, "The Floating Charge in Canada", supra, at pp. 204-8.

46 The critical significance of the characterization of an interest as being fixed or floating, of course, is that it describes the extent to which a creditor can be said to have a proprietary interest in the collateral. In particular, during the period in which a charge over inventory is floating, the creditor possesses no legal title to that collateral. For this reason, if a statutory trust or lien attaches during this time, it will attach to the debtor's interest and take priority over a subsequently crystallized floating charge. However, if a security interest can be characterized as a fixed and specific charge, it will take priority over a subsequent statutory lien or charge; in such a case, all that the lien can attach to is the debtor's equity of redemption in the collateral: Avco, supra, at p. 706. This correlative relationship between fixed charges and legal ownership was articulated by this Court in Dauphin Plains, supra, at p. 1199, where Pigeon J. stated:

Digitized by Google

> It should first be observed that, for reasons similar to those on which the decision in the Avco case, supra, was based, the claim for Pension Plan and Unemployment Insurance deductions cannot affect the proceeds of realization of property subject to a fixed and specific charge. From the moment such charge was created, the assets subject thereto, were no longer the property of the debtor except subject to that charge. [Emphasis added.]

See also Avco, supra.

47 There has been much debate as to whether it is appropriate to characterize a security interest over inventory which permits the debtor to sell that inventory in the ordinary course of business as a floating charge. The debate centres around the ability to characterize a security interest as fixed, in the presence of a licence given to the debtor to sell the collateral, where such an arrangement involves "no final and irrevocable appropriation of property to the creditor": FBDB, supra, at p. 33. McLachlin J.A. (as she then was) in FBDB, supra, fully considered the conflicting authorities on this point and concluded at pp. 37-38 and 40:

> In short, the answer to the question of whether the courts have recognized a fixed charge subject to a licence to sell in the ordinary course of business is no, with the exception of the line of cases confirming the right of a chattel mortgagor to sell mortgaged stock in the ordinary course of business.
>
> ...
>
> If a charge conferred on the debtor the right to deal with the goods in the ordinary course of business then, regardless of what the parties chose to call it, it was regarded as floating, with the result that third party interests acquired prior to crystallization of the charge had priority over the chargeholder.

Adopting this "either-or" doctrine, McLachlin J.A. chose to characterize the security agreement in FBDB, which permitted the debtor to sell the secured collateral in the ordinary course of the debtor's business, as a floating charge.

48 I note also that this Court very recently referred to the decision of McLachlin J.A. in FBDB, supra, with approval: Alberta (Treasury Branches), supra. While the issue in that case was different from that in FBDB, the comments of Cory J. can, I think, be taken as affirming the "either-or" doctrine as applied in FBDB.

49 The relevance of the "either-or" doctrine to the present case, of course, lies in the fact that Sparrow had been granted by the bank, both expressly and impliedly, a licence to sell the inventory over which the bank held a security interest. It therefore could be argued that such a licence renders the interest of the bank in the nature of a floating charge, an interest which must yield to a statutory trust which attaches prior to the charge's crystallization.

50 I do not find it necessary to comment on FBDB to the extent that that decision suggests that in the present case the interests of the bank should be characterized as a floating charge. It should be noted that the decision of McLachlin J.A. in the FBDB case predated the enactment of personal property security legislation in British Columbia, and so does not speak to the state of the law in a PPSA jurisdiction. Nor did that case deal with any other statutory enactment, such as the Bank Act, which could affect the characterization of the security agreement there at issue. For these reasons, I consider the comments of McLachlin J.A. in FBDB to be directed to the common law position with regard to the characterization of fixed and floating charges. Whatever those common law principles may be, they cannot be taken to alter the effect that legislation may have on the characterization of security interests. As it is my view that the Alberta PPSA and the Bank Act are determinative of the characterization of the bank's GSA and BAS, respectively, I do not need to address the common law view articulated in FBDB.

Digitized by Google

51 I turn now to consider each of the bank's security interests.

(i) The General Security Agreement (GSA)

52 Counsel for the appellant, Her Majesty, argued in his factum that the bank's GSA is to be considered in the nature of a floating charge. In support of this proposition, counsel advances the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in Re Urman (1983), 44 O.R. (2d) 248. In that case, involving a general assignment of book debts perfected under the Ontario Personal Property Security Act, the security interest was characterized as a floating charge.

53 For the reasons which follow, I cannot accept this submission. In my view, the general security agreement in this case, which was subject to the Alberta personal property security legislation, must be characterized as a fixed and specific charge subject to a licence to sell the inventory.

54 It is of course true that the PPSA does not govern the priority competition between a statutory trust and a security interest. Subsection 4(a) explicitly removes statutory trusts such as the one created by s. 227 ITA from the province of the Alberta PPSA:

> 4 Except as otherwise provided in this Act, this Act does not apply to the following:
>
> (a) a lien, charge or other interest given by an Act or rule of law in force in Alberta;

However, this does not mean that the PPSA does not affect the characterization of a charge executed in a jurisdiction which is subject to such an Act. To the contrary, the effect of personal property security legislation has been said to have "fundamentally changed the characterization of security interests": Wood and Wylie, "Non-Consensual Security Interests in Personal Property", supra, at p. 1082. In particular, while pre-PPSA, a security agreement purporting to create a floating charge could be said to remain unattached to the collateral until crystallization, s. 12(1) of the Alberta PPSA manifestly alters this situation. That subsection reads:

> 12(1) A security interest, including a security interest in the nature of a floating charge, attaches when
>
> (a) value is given,
>
> (b) the debtor has rights in the collateral, and
>
> (c) except for the purpose of enforcing rights between the parties to the security agreement, the security interest becomes enforceable within the meaning of section 10,
>
> unless the parties specifically agree in writing to postpone the time for attachment, in which case the security interest attaches at the time specified in the agreement.

Digitized by Google

The relevant portion of s. 10 for our purposes states:

> 10(1) Subject to subsection (2), a security interest is enforceable against a third party only where
>
> (a) the collateral is in the possession of the secured party, or
>
> (b) the debtor has signed a security agreement that contains
>
> ...
>
> (ii) a statement that a security interest is taken in all of the debtor's present and after-acquired personal property ....

Generally speaking, therefore, absent an express intention to the contrary, a security interest in all present and after-acquired personal property will attach when that agreement is executed by the parties. Once attachment has occurred, in my view, the GSA then becomes in law a fixed and specific charge over the collateral.

55 I find support in this conclusion as to the effect of personal property security legislation upon security interests from the fact that the academic literature is unanimous on this point. For example, Professor Jacob S. Ziegel in his article "Symposium: Recent and Prospective Developments in the Personal Property Security Law Area" (1985), 10 Can. Bus. L.J. 131, commented as follows, at p. 152:

> It is of the first importance to determine whether a security interest under the PPSA retains any of the common law characteristics of a floating charge and if so which. My own view is that once a security interest has attached under the PPSA it has no "floating" attributes even though the security agreement, expressly or impliedly, gives the debtor considerable powers to dispose of the collateral in the course of his business. In brief, the PPSA only recognizes specific or fixed security interests although admittedly the collateral itself may often change its character because of the express or implied powers of disposition given the debtor. [Emphasis added.]

This opinion is echoed by Professor Wood in his recent article "Revenue Canada's Deemed Trust Extends Its Tentacles: Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp.", supra, at p. 433:

> Under pre-PPSA law, a plausible argument could be made that a security interest in the form of a fixed charge combined with a licence to deal is, in effect nothing more than a floating charge. However, this argument [is] untenable in the cases involving PPSA security interests....

Similarly, Professor Ronald C. C. Cuming, in "Commercial Law -- Floating Charges and Fixed Charges of After-Acquired Property: The Queen in the Right of British Columbia v. Federal Business Development Bank" (1988), 67 Can. Bar Rev. 506, at pp. 510-11, opined:

> In effect, [PPS] legislation treats all charges, including floating securities, as fixed charges. The legislatures that have enacted Personal Property Security Acts have implicitly declared that, as a matter of public policy, there is nothing objectionable to having a fixed charge on stock-in-trade of a debtor coupled with a licence to deal with the collateral in the ordinary course of business. [Emphasis added.]

At p. 519, the learned author concludes "there can be no such thing as a floating charge under a Personal Property Security Act".

56 Applying this principle to the case at bar, the GSA held by the respondent bank must certainly be characterized as a fixed and specific charge. It attached at the time the agreement was executed, February 25, 1992. More specifically, however, because of the permission granted by the bank which allowed Sparrow to sell the encumbered inventory, the GSA is in the nature of a fixed charge with a licence to deal with the inventory.

Digitized by Google

(ii) Bank Act Security (BAS)

57 The appellant has further submitted that the respondent bank's BAS is in the nature of a floating charge over the inventory. Several lower court decisions have been relied upon in support of this proposition: Abraham, supra (under appeal); Armstrong, supra; and North Sky Trading Inc. (Bankrupt), Re 1994 CanLII 8986 (AB QB), (1994), 158 A.R. 117 (Q.B.) (under appeal).

58 The earliest authority to comment upon the nature of BAS is the decision of this Court in Royal Bank of Canada v. Workmen's Compensation Board of Nova Scotia, 1936 CanLII 39 (SCC), [1936] S.C.R. 560. That case involved a priority competition between security under s. 88 of the Bank Act, R.S.C. 1927, c. 12, the predecessor of s. 427, and a lien created by s. 79(2) of The Workmen's Compensation Act, R.S.N.S. 1923, c. 129. In his concurring judgment, Davis J. observed the effect of s. 88 security as follows, at p. 567:

> . . . the security [does] not operate to transfer absolutely the ownership in the goods but ... the transaction [is] essentially a mortgage transaction and subject to the general law of mortgages except where the statute has otherwise expressly provided.... Section 88 set up by the Bank Act enables manufacturers, who desire to obtain large loans from their bankers in order to carry on their industrial activities, to give to the bank a special and convenient form of security for the bank's protection in the large banking transactions necessary in the carrying on of industry throughout the country. Until the moneys are repaid, the bank is the legal owner of the goods but sale before default is prohibited and provision is made for the manufacturer regaining title upon repayment. To say that Parliament did not use language to expressly provide that the bank shall have a first lien on the goods is beside the mark. The bank acquires ownership in the goods by the statute. [Emphasis added.]

59 More recently, this Court had occasion to consider the attributes of Bank Act security in Hall, supra. In that case, La Forest J. underlined this Court's previous ruling in Workmen's Compensation Board of Nova Scotia, supra, that BAS gives to the lender legal title in the collateral. At pp. 133-34, La Forest J. stated:

> By section 178(2) [now s. 427(2)], a bank may take security in property owned by the borrower at the time of the loan transaction, and any property acquired during the pendency of the security agreement. The rights and powers of the bank with respect to the secured property are set out in s. 178(2)(c). By the terms of s. 178(2)(c), these rights and powers are stated to be "the same rights and powers as if the bank had acquired a warehouse receipt or bill of lading in which such property was described". These powers are defined, in turn, in s. 186 [now s. 435] of the Act where it is specified that any warehouse receipt or bill acquired by a bank as security for the payment of a debt, vests in the bank all the right and title to goods, wares and merchandise covered by the holder or owner thereof.
>
> The nature of the rights and powers vested in the bank by the delivery of the document giving the security interest has been the object of some debate.

Digitized by Google

Argument has centred on whether the security interest should be likened to a pledge or bailment, or whether it is more in the nature of a chattel mortgage. I find the most precise description of this interest to be that given by Professor Moull in his article "Security Under Sections 177 and 178 of the Bank Act" (1986), 65 Can. Bar Rev. 242, at p. 251. Professor Moull, correctly in my view, stresses that the effect of the interest is to vest title to the property in question in the bank when the security interest is taken out. He states, at p. 251:

> The result, then, is that a bank taking security under section 178 effectively acquires legal title to the borrower's interest in the present and after-acquired property assigned to it by the borrower. The bank's interest attaches to the assigned property when the security is given or the property is acquired by the borrower and remains attached until released by the bank, despite changes in the attributes or composition of the assigned property. The borrower retains an equitable right of redemption, of course, but the bank effectively acquires legal title to whatever rights the borrower holds in the assigned property from time to time. [Emphasis added.]

60 It follows from the comments of this Court regarding the ownership rights in inventory conferred by the Bank Act that security taken under that Act must be considered to be in the nature of a fixed and specific charge. As stated above, the concept of the fixed charge is correlative to the notion of a creditor's having legal proprietary rights in the collateral. I add that this view has been adopted by academic literature in this area: R. J. Wood, "Revenue Canada's Deemed Trust Extends Its Tentacles: Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp.", supra, at p. 433; and William D. Moull, "Security Under Sections 177 and 178 of the Bank Act" (1986), 65 Can. Bar Rev. 242. I find this following passage, at p. 251, from the article written by Professor Moull which was cited with approval by this Court in Hall, supra, particularly persuasive:

Because of its scope and flexibility, some commentators have suggested that section 178 [now 427] security is in the nature of a floating charge. This can be misleading, however. Because the bank effectively acquires legal title, section 178 security is really in the nature of a fixed charge on the present and after-acquired property of the borrower assigned to the bank. One attribute that section 178 security may be said to share with a floating charge is its application to all property of a specified class held by the borrower from time to time. But while a floating charge may apply to all property of a specified kind held by the borrower from time to time, it does not affix itself specifically upon any particular item of property until it crystallizes upon default by the borrower. Conversely, a section 178 security is a fixed charge on each item of assigned property held from time to time whether or not the loan is in default. This gives a bank significantly greater rights than it would hold under a floating charge debenture on inventory.

61 For these reasons, I consider the security interest of the bank in the form of BAS to be in the nature of a fixed and specific charge with a licence to sell the inventory.

(iii) Summary -- Fixed and Specific Charge Over Inventory

62 It would seem appropriate at this point, before leaving the present discussion, to comment briefly upon this novel and perhaps abstract notion of possessing a fixed charge over all of the present and future inventory of a

Digitized by Google

debtor. To begin with, I note that traditional definitions of the fixed charge, as for example the one I previously quoted above from Illingworth, supra, emphasize the ability to "settle and fasten" upon ascertainable and defined property as being an integral attribute to this particular form of charge. This type of attachment to tangible and ascertainable property, of course, is impossible to achieve in the case of an assignment of inventory, where that collateral is changing constantly. In short, the traditional concept of the fixed charge seems to be at odds with the notion of having a proprietary right over collateral such as after-acquired inventory which, by definition, is not yet in existence at the time the security agreement is executed.

63 In my view, however, a fixed charge over all present and future inventory represents a proprietary interest over a dynamic collective of present and future assets. To this extent, as stated above, this form of security interest challenges our traditional conception of a fixed charge; to the same extent, in my opinion, our conception of this form of charge must change to meet the modern realities of commercial law, and in particular the legislative provisions which have been brought to bear in this appeal.

64 In effect, the fixed and specific charge gives to the secured creditor the title (subject, of course, to the debtor's equitable right of redemption) to the present inventory of the debtor, as well as the after-acquired inventory of the debtor. In this way, the secured creditor becomes the legal owner of inventory as it comes into possession of the debtor. I note that the Alberta PPSA contains a specific provision securing a creditor's proprietary right to after-acquired property in this way:

> 13(1) Except as provided in subsection (2), where a security agreement provides for a security interest in after-acquired property, the security interest attaches in accordance with section 12, without the need for specific appropriation. [Emphasis added.]

Professors Cuming and Wood, in their published annotation of the Alberta PPSA, observe that by virtue of this subsection "the security interest in after-acquired property has equal status with a security interest in collateral in existence at the time the security agreement is executed": Cuming and Wood, Alberta Personal Property Security Act Handbook (2nd ed. 1993), at p. 121 (emphasis added). Similarly, the BAS has the effect of presently attaching the secured creditor's interest to the after-acquired inventory of the debtor. In Hall, supra, La Forest J. approved of Professor Moull's description of the effect of the relevant provisions of the Bank Act, at p. 134, which is particularly apposite to the present discussion:

> The result, then, is that a bank taking security under section 178 [now s. 427] effectively acquires legal title to the borrower's interest in the present and after-acquired property assigned to it by the borrower. The bank's interest attaches to the assigned property when the security is given or the property is acquired by the borrower and remains attached until released by the bank, despite changes in the attributes or composition of the assigned property. The borrower retains an equitable right of redemption, of course, but the bank effectively acquires legal title to whatever rights the borrower holds in the assigned property from time to time. [Emphasis added.]

65 It follows from these observations that where, as here, a secured creditor holds a fixed charge over a debtor's inventory, that charge will have the effect of ensuring the creditor has legal title to any and all inventory subject to the charge at any given point in time. This, of course, is subject to the caveat (not operative in this case) that no outstanding statutory payroll deductions had in fact been made prior to the attachment of the fixed charge. Thus, in the present case, the inventory which was subject to the liquidation sale belonged in law to the respondent bank: both under its GSA and its BAS the bank held a fixed charge over Sparrow's inventory. As such, all that Her Majesty's beneficial interest could attach to, before its sale, was Sparrow's equity of redemption in the property: Avco, supra; C.I.B.C. v. Klymchuk reflex, (1990), 74 Alta. L.R. (2d) 232 (C.A.), at p. 240.

Digitized by Google

66 But this of course does not end the matter. While it is true that the bank held legal title in the inventory which is the subject of the dispute in this case, it is also true that at the time the deductions were made the bank had given its permission to Sparrow to sell this inventory in the course of its business. The GSA contained an express licence to this effect; and the BAS impliedly contained such a licence. In this way, the bank had consented, contractually, to the divestment of their interest in the collateral taken in inventory and the usage of the proceeds of that collateral for certain purposes. The critical issue which falls to be decided is, then, what is the scope of this contractual licence? In particular, if this bank's consent included the right to sell the inventory in order to pay wages, then that consent by necessity included the right to sell inventory to remit payroll deductions. In such a situation, for the following reasons, Her Majesty's interest would be able to attach to the proceeds of the inventory, and in this way take priority over the bank's interest.

67 As stated previously, at para. 41, it is my opinion that the licence theory may operate, in the context of the statutory scheme at issue in the present appeal, as an exception to the general rule that at the time of “liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy” Her Majesty’s interest cannot attach to property which is at that time the property of a secured creditor. More specifically, where it can be said that at the time the deductions were made a secured creditor had consented to the use of its collateral in order to pay the statutory deductions which are the object of a deemed trust, it may also be said that that creditor has bound itself by the statutory requirements relating to those deductions. Here, therefore, if it can be said that at the time the wage deductions at issue were made the bank had permitted the sale of inventory in order to pay wages, and thus wage deductions, it will be possible for s. 227(5) to attach to the bank’s inventory existent at the time of receivership. With regard to this approach to the licence theory, see FBDB, supra, at pp. 40-41, Roynat, supra, at pp. 649-50, and G.M. Homes Inc., supra, at pp. 252-54.

68 In short, where the bank has consented to the reduction in the value of its security in order to pay statutory deductions at the time those deductions are made, they have to the same extent, by virtue of s. 227(5), consented to the reduction in their security at the time of receivership. The critical question which falls to be decided in this case, then, is what was the scope of the bank’s consent to sell inventory at the time the deductions were made?

(D) Whether on the Facts the Licence to Sell Included the Right to Use the Proceeds to Pay Wages?

69 I underline at the outset that the critical factor in the “licence to sell” argument is the permission which must be found to have been granted with respect to the usage of the proceeds of the disputed collateral. Thus, while licences may often be mouthed in terms of a "right to sell in the ordinary course of business", it must not be forgotten that it is permission with respect to the usage of proceeds, and not necessarily the circumstances of sale, which is the proper focus of the inquiry.

Digitized by Google

70 When interpreting the contractual provisions which gave Sparrow the right to sell the encumbered inventory, it is necessary to look at the words of the contract, the nature of the transaction which the parties entered into, and all of the surrounding circumstances.

71 The express provisions of the GSA establishes that Sparrow was granted a licence to sell the encumbered inventory. In particular, the licence stated that:

> . . . until default, Debtor may, in the ordinary course of Debtor's business, sell or lease inventory and, subject to Clause 7 hereof, use Money available to Debtor. [Emphasis added.]

Therefore, Sparrow was permitted to sell its inventory in the ordinary course of its business and "use" the proceeds generated therefrom. The critical question is what "us[age]" this licence to sell in the "ordinary course of ... business" contemplated. In this connection, I find two of the express covenants in Sparrow's contractual arrangements to be salient. Paragraph 4(e) of the GSA required Sparrow:

> (e) to pay all taxes, rates, levies, assessments and other charges of every nature which may be lawfully levied, assessed or imposed against or in respect of Debtor or Collateral as and when the same become due and payable; [Emphasis added.]

In addition, in the Credit Facilities Agreement, Sparrow covenanted to the bank as follows:

> (3) it will promptly pay when due all business, income and other taxes properly levied on its operations and property and remit all statutory employee deductions when due; [Emphasis added.]

72 Looking at these express provisions of the contractual arrangements between Sparrow and the bank, I conclude that the payment of payroll deductions would be a usage to which the bank contemplated Sparrow would use the proceeds of inventory sold in the "ordinary course of ... business". My conclusion in this respect is buttressed when the nature of the dealings between Sparrow and the bank, and all the surrounding circumstances, are observed.

73 The bank was Sparrow's primary lender; it held a security interest in most, if not all, of Sparrow's assets. In particular, the bank held various security interests in Sparrow's inventory. It was of course in the bank's best interest that Sparrow function as a viable economic unit. To do so, Sparrow was required to sell its services as an electrical contractor and, necessarily, sell its inventory. From the sales of the inventory, Sparrow could generate revenues to, inter alia, pay its outstanding operating debts. If it failed to do so, Sparrow could be petitioned into bankruptcy, with the result that Sparrow could no longer generate the profits necessary to pay its loan obligations to the bank in the long term. One of Sparrow's ongoing obligations, its costs of doing business, was the paying of wages. In order to stay in business, and operate as a profitable business enterprise, Sparrow would have to pay its employees.

Digitized by Google

This is a necessary requirement of continuing in business. It would be reasonable that the bank expect, taking into consideration all the circumstances of this arrangement, that revenue from the sale of inventory would be used to pay wages.

74 From these observations, I consider the licence to sell inventory in the ordinary course of business in this case necessarily included a licence to sell inventory to pay wages, and remit wage deductions, in the course of its business. Where, as here, the secured party has security over the majority of the assets of the debtor, the security interest over the inventory must permit the debtor to sell the inventory and put it to the general use of its business, including towards the payment of wages. Indeed, the express terms of the licence intimates this, providing Sparrow could, "in the ordinary course of ... business, ... use Money available". The scope of the licence can thus be ascertained either from the express terms of the security agreement, or from the nature of the agreement and the conduct of the parties. To be clear, however, the scope of the licence in this case flows not merely from a right to sell inventory per se. Instead, it is the licence to sell inventory in the "ordinary course of [Sparrow's] business ... and use [the proceeds]" which renders it of such a quality as to include a right to use the proceeds to pay wages. As Professor Wood has correctly observed in "Revenue Canada's Deemed Trust Extends Its Tentacles: Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp.", supra, at p. 435, a licence to sell inventory may in certain circumstances be circumscribed so as to not include a right to use the proceeds to pay wages:

> The fact that the secured party permits the debtor to sell the inventory does not in itself imply that the secured party permits the debtor to use these proceeds to pay employees. In some cases the secured party will not restrict the debtor's ability to use the proceeds in the ordinary course of business, but this depends entirely on the security arrangement negotiated between the debtor and the secured party. Consider the following scenario:
>
> > SP finances the acquisition of inventory by an automobile dealer (D), and is granted a security interest in the inventory. The wholesale security agreement provides that D may sell the inventory in the ordinary course of business and that upon doing so D must immediately remit the wholesale purchase price of the automobile to SP.
>
> In this scenario, SP clearly does not permit the debtor to use the proceeds of inventory to pay its employees. Indeed, it is common for SP to regularly monitor the debtor to ensure that the debtor is not "out of trust" by failing to remit the proceeds of sale.

75 In summary, the true test of whether the licence to sell inventory includes the right to pay wages must therefore be a matter of interpreting the contractual arrangement between the parties. The focus is not so much on the circumstances of the selling of inventory, but rather the permitted usage of the proceeds of inventory. As in Professor Wood's example, where the licence has a limited scope, that licence may not include the right to use proceeds to pay wages. However, the expression of a limited use for proceeds of inventory cannot prevail if the arrangement between the parties is such as to allow, in practice, the debtor to use the inventory proceeds in the course of its business. In this respect, I agree with Professor Wood's comments regarding the appropriate test for determining whether a licence to sell inventory includes permission to pay wages with the proceeds ("Revenue Canada's Deemed Trust Extends Its Tentacles: Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp.", supra, at pp. 435-36):

Digitized by Google

> This is not to say that the analysis should hinge on the existence of a trust proceeds clause or other contractual provision requiring the debtor to remit proceeds. A contractual provision of this type should not govern if the real arrangement between the parties is such that the debtor has the freedom to use the proceeds of inventory in the ordinary course of business.
>
> ...
>
> To make any sense at all, the licence theory must, at the very least, be restricted to cases where the secured party permits the debtor to pay employees either out of its collateral or out of the proceeds of its collateral. This permission cannot be derived merely from the existence of a licence to sell inventory. The test should be whether the debtor had the freedom to use these funds in the ordinary course of business as opposed to being under an obligation to remit them to the secured party. [Emphasis added.]

76 In the case at bar, the GSA contained an express licence permitting Sparrow to sell inventory in the course of its business and use the proceeds available; the BAS contained an implied licence to this effect. While it is true that the GSA contained a trust proceeds clause, I find that this cannot have the effect of limiting the scope of the licence where the real arrangement between the parties was, as expressly stated, that Sparrow could use the proceeds of inventory in the course of its business. The bank in this case was not a small inventory financier who required Sparrow to immediately remit proceeds of inventory to it. To the contrary, the bank was a large scale lender who permitted Sparrow to use inventory sales to maintain the viability of its enterprise. For these reasons, applying Professor Wood's test, I find that under the licence to "sell ... inventory" "in the ordinary course of ... business" and "use [the] [m]oneys available" the bank permitted Sparrow to sell inventory to pay wages and, necessarily, payroll deduction obligations.

77 For all these reasons, through the application of the licence theory, it is my conclusion that the appellant's s. 227(5) deemed trust must take priority over the bank's security interests in the disputed collateral. The trust fund representing the deducted amounts, while without identified subject matter from the date of its inception, is capable of identifying property subject to that trust ex post facto. To reiterate, the bank consented to the reduction in its security in inventory in order to pay wage deductions at the time those deductions were made, and s. 227(5) ITA has the effect of carrying forward that consent to the time of receivership. By consenting to the payment of wages out of the proceeds of inventory during the course of Sparrow's business, the bank ipso facto consented to the statutory scheme under the ITA designed to cover unpaid wage deductions. In short, in the present case the licence to deal with inventory proceeds coupled with the statutory scheme in s. 227(4) and (5) ITA gives priority to Her Majesty's claims for statutory wage deductions. This result is obtained both in regard to the bank's GSA, and its BAS.

78 The respondent bank has submitted that this result is necessarily precluded with regard to their BAS by virtue of s. 428(1) of the Bank Act, which provides as follows:

Digitized by Google

> 428. (1) All the rights and powers of a bank in respect of the property mentioned in or covered by a warehouse receipt or bill of lading acquired and held by the bank, and the rights and powers of the bank in respect of the property covered by a security given to the bank under section 427 that are the same as if the bank had acquired a warehouse receipt or bill of lading in which that property was described, have, subject to subsection 427(4) and subsections (3) to (6) of this section, priority over all rights subsequently acquired in, on or in respect of that property, and also over the claim of any unpaid vendor. [Emphasis added.]

I cannot agree with this submission. It is true that s. 428(1) secures the respondent bank's proprietary right to the disputed collateral. However, for the reasons I have expressed, the fact remains that the bank has consented to the divestment of this interest. Such a waiver of priority, in my view, renders s. 428(1) of no assistance to the respondent bank.

79 I add as a final matter that in addition to providing certainty in disputes between consensual and non-consensual security interests, the licence theory has the virtue of achieving fairness in commercial law. Here, the respondent bank had permitted Sparrow to sell its inventory in the course of its business in order to, among other things, pay wages and wage deductions. To this extent, therefore, the bank permitted the reduction in the value of its security interest in Sparrow's inventory, during the ordinary course of Sparrow's business. Implicit in the bank's consent is the assumption that in so doing, Sparrow would generate profits from the conversion of inventory into revenues; this economic process, as I noted above, ensures that interest payments owing to the bank would be paid to them on a sustainable basis. In short, the bank benefitted in a general sense from Sparrow's carrying on its business operations, an endeavour which required Sparrow to pay wages and wage deductions. More specifically, however, when Sparrow stopped paying its wage deductions, as required, the bank could be said to benefit from the artificial increase in Sparrow's working capital, allowing an extension of the life of Sparrow's business.

80 Now, when Sparrow's business is no longer a viable enterprise, the bank says that it is entitled to the very payments which allowed Sparrow, in part at least, to stay in business longer than was legally economical. In essence, the bank is willing to accept the benefits of Sparrow's non-payment of statutory deductions, and can be said to have reasonably permitted the use of its collateral to pay these deductions at the time they should have lawfully been paid, but refuses to accept the burden of Sparrow's unlawful action at the time of its receivership. In my view, it should be the policy of the law that the respondent bank be held accountable for Sparrow's outstanding statutory obligations. The licence theory, as I have developed it, ensures that in appropriate circumstances this result will obtain. In this way, in my opinion the licence theory is grounded not only in legal principles, but also in sound policy.

81 Since writing the foregoing, I have had the benefit of reading the careful reasons of my colleague, Mr. Justice Iacobucci. With deference however, I do not share his views or his concerns.

82 I note that Iacobucci J., in his reasons, has taken me to have adopted the licence theory in extremely broad terms. Specifically, when summarizing the conceptual basis of my reasoning, he states at para. 91:

Digitized by Google

> Consequently, says the [licence] theory, the bank's claim to the inventory must give way to any debts incurred in the ordinary course of business. [Emphasis added.]

Similarly, Iacobucci J. writes at para. 97:

> The satisfaction of any legitimate debt or obligation, whenever incurred, is arguably "in the ordinary course of business". Certainly, the payment of creditors is a permissible "use" of the proceeds of a sale of inventory. Following my colleague's reasoning, this would mean that every subsequent claim should prevail over the respondent's general security agreement, because every rival claim might have been satisfied out of the proceeds of a hypothetical sale of the inventory. [Emphasis added.]

83 With respect, as he acknowledges, my reasons do not go this far. It is not the consent to payment of wage deductions from the proceeds of inventory simpliciter which drives me to the conclusion that Her Majesty's interest must prevail. This is a necessary, but not sufficient, condition. In addition, however, what is significant to the outcome of this case is that the bank has consented to payment of wages including deductions, out of inventory which, at the time of the deductions, are by statute deemed to be taken out of the estate of the debtor (see ss. 153(3) and 227(4) ITA). Section 227(5) carries that consent forward to the time of liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy, to realize Her Majesty's claim out of the bank's inventory.

84 Therefore, the unique nature of the statutory provisions applicable to wage deductions, and the bank's consent thereto, are integral to the success of the s. 227(5) claim in the case at bar. In this way, the licence theory, as I have employed it, is circumscribed.

85 It must be stressed that the issue relates to wages actually paid to employees -- not a simple obligation to pay wages -- a portion of which has been deducted from the amount remitted to the employee and must be remitted to Her Majesty. Pending such remittance, the amount deducted is deemed under s. 227(4) to be held in trust for Her Majesty. By virtue of these ITA provisions, and unlike ordinary debts and obligations, unpaid wage deductions are, in law, performed obligations. The consent by the bank to the payment of wages out of the proceeds of the sale of inventory must be taken to cover the wages paid according to law including that portion which has been deducted from the remittance to the employee, pursuant to the ITA, in order that it be remitted to Her Majesty. While the value of the bank's security in the inventory may be thereby reduced, this is by virtue of specific statutory requirements under well-defined rules limited in their application to actual payment of wages. These requirements are well known and are encompassed by the bank's consent to the payment of wages in the ordinary course of business and do not open the door to uncertainty as to the value of security. Any risk to the bank's security is part of the very risk involved in consenting to the payment of wages. This does not open the door to any uncertainty as to the value of the bank's security arising from unperformed obligations incurred by the debtor in the ordinary course of business.

86 For these reasons, I cannot agree with the premise underlying Iacobucci J.'s reasons, namely, that the licence theory as I have employed it is inimical to the integrity of commercial law. It does not have the extensive application suggested by my colleague; it does not create uncertainty in commercial transactions. Instead, the licence theory operates narrowly, in conjunction with unique statutory provisions, so as to actualize legally performed obligations when they, in fact, exist.

Digitized by Google

VI - Conclusion

87 It is possible to summarize my conclusions in this case into the following five propositions:

1. Priorities between statutory trusts and consensual security interests are resolved by determining which interest has an attached interest in the disputed collateral at the time the statutory trust becomes operative.

2. The s. 227(5) ITA deemed trust attaches to any property of the debtor which exists upon liquidation, assignment, bankruptcy or receivership.

3. For example, if deductions are made prior to the attachment of a fixed charge over collateral, the s. 227(5) deemed trust will engage to retroactively attach Her Majesty's beneficial interest to that collateral. The fixed charge over that collateral will thereafter be subject to Her Majesty's pre-existing claims for unremitted payroll deductions.

4. Otherwise, if a security interest is in the nature of a fixed and specific charge, that interest gives the holder legal title to the collateral, such that a subsequent competing statutory trust will not be able to attach its interest. In such a case, all the statutory trust can attach to is the equity of redemption in the collateral.

5. However, as an exception to propositions 2 and 4, where the holder of a fixed security interest permits the debtor to sell the collateral, this may provide an opportunity for the statutory trust to attach. Whether this actually occurs depends entirely on the facts of each case. The test is whether, at the time the deductions occurred, the debtor had the right to sell the collateral and use the proceeds to pay the obligation to which the statutory trust is related.

88 I have found that, on the facts of this case, the licence invoked to sell inventory included the permission to use its proceeds to pay wages or wage deductions. The test in proposition 5 has therefore been made out. Accordingly, I would allow the appeal with costs.

The judgment of Sopinka, McLachlin, Iacobucci and Major JJ. was delivered by 89 IACOBUCCI J. -- I have read the lucid reasons of my colleague, Justice Gonthier, and although I agree with much of his reasoning, I cannot, with respect, accept the conclusion that he reaches. In particular, I do not accept that the deemed trust that arises in favour of the Crown by operation of s. 227(4) of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.) (hereinafter "ITA"), takes priority over the security interests that the respondent has under the Bank Act, S.C. 1991, c. 46, and the Personal Property Security Act, S.A. 1988, c. P-4.05 (hereinafter "PPSA"). Even conceding that the latter interests are subject to a licence to sell, the licence is not nearly so broad as to encompass the satisfaction of income tax obligations. As I will discuss below, a licence to sell inventory authorizes at most only the satisfaction of obligations that are immediately incidental to an actual sale of the inventory.

90 Because my only disagreement with my colleague is in his application of the licence-to-sell approach to this case, I do not propose to discuss the facts or background that he has so ably described or to dwell on any other part of his reasons. I need not say anything more about the character of the respondent's security interests than that they are fixed and specific.

Digitized by Google

91 My colleague disposes of this appeal on the basis of the so-called "licence theory". Briefly, the licence theory holds that a bank's security interest in a debtor's inventory, though it be fixed and specific, is subject nevertheless to a licence in the debtor to deal with that inventory in the ordinary course of business. Consequently, says the theory, the bank's claim to the inventory must give way to any debts incurred in the ordinary course of business. The leading articulation of the licence theory appears in McLachlin J.A.'s (as she then was) reasons in R. in Right of B.C. v. F.B.D.B., 1987 CanLII 156 (BC CA), [1988] 1 W.W.R. 1 (B.C.C.A.) (hereinafter "FBDB"), at p. 40.

92 The theoretical basis of the licence theory seems to be that a creditor who has granted a licence to sell inventory has thereby consented to the subjection of his security interest to other obligations that may arise "in the ordinary course of business". My colleague says this in his reasons, at para. 68:

> In short, where the bank has consented to the reduction in the value of its security in order to pay statutory deductions at the time those deductions are made, they have to the same extent, by virtue of s. 227(5) [ITA], consented to the reduction in their security at the time of receivership.

This is sensible, because it is only if the licence is understood as a kind of tacit lessening of the creditor's security interest that the appellant's cause is advanced. Certainly the actual operation of the licence is not relevant, because in this case the inventory in question was never actually sold pursuant to the licence. Rather, the receiver sold it by court order. If the licence is to have anything to do with the disposition of this appeal, it must be by virtue of the evidence it affords of the respondent's intention to take less than an entire security interest in the inventory.

93 In my view, the licence affords no such evidence. My colleague seems to think that the potential sale of the inventory amounts to an actual limitation of the security interest. For my part, I do not see what the one thing has to do with the other. There is a great difference between saying, on the one hand, that if a debtor sells inventory and applies the proceeds to a debt to a third party, then the third party takes the proceeds free of any security interest and saying, on the other hand, that because a third party could take the proceeds free of any security interest, no security interest exists in the proceeds as against that third party. A licence to sell inventory in the ordinary course of business is a condition of the former kind. The consequent (defeasance of the security interest) follows only if the antecedent (sale of the inventory and application of proceeds to an obligation to a third party) is satisfied. In other words, the security interest in the inventory disappears only if the debtor actually sells the inventory and applies the proceeds to a debt to a third party.

94 That this is so is suggested by s. 28(1) PPSA, which provides:

> 28(1) Subject to this Act, where collateral is dealt with or otherwise gives rise to proceeds, the security interest
>
> (a) continues in the collateral, unless the secured party expressly or impliedly authorized the dealing, and
>
> (b) extends to the proceeds,

Digitized by Google

but where the secured party enforces a security interest against both the collateral and the proceeds, the amount secured by the security interest in the collateral and the proceeds is limited to the market value of the collateral at the date of the dealing.

In accordance with this provision, the result of a sale of inventory is to give the purchaser an unencumbered interest in the inventory and the licensor a continuing security interest in the proceeds of the sale. It is only if the debtor subsequently uses the proceeds to satisfy an obligation to a third party that the proceeds will be removed from the scope of the licensor's security interest in them. Accordingly, what a security agreement with a licence to sell creates is a defeasible interest; but the event of defeasance is the actual sale of the inventory and the actual application of the proceeds against an obligation to a third party.

95 I recognize that the operation of s. 28(1) PPSA is not necessarily inconsistent with the broad interpretation of the licence to sell that my colleague advances. However, it seems to me that this is an appropriate case for the invocation of the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius. The statute prescribes certain consequences for the security interest that follow a dealing with inventory. In particular, the statute contemplates defeasance of the interest if the debtor actually sells the inventory and applies the proceeds to an obligation to a third party. Significantly, the statute does not contemplate a defeasance on the happening of any other event. In my view, the statute occupies the field and crowds out other possible interpretations of the licence, including the one that Gonthier J. favours.

96 Because in this case there was no actual sale of the inventory in question, let alone any disposition of the proceeds, the licence can have had no effect on the respondent's security interest. What the debtor might have done with the licence does not matter.

97 If it were otherwise, the licence to sell inventory would entirely eviscercate the respondent's general security agreement. The satisfaction of any legitimate debt or obligation, whenever incurred, is arguably "in the ordinary course of business". Certainly the payment of creditors is a permissible "use" of the proceeds of a sale of inventory. Following my colleague's reasoning, this would mean that every subsequent claim should prevail over the respondent's general security agreement, because every rival claim might have been satisfied out of the proceeds of a hypothetical sale of the inventory. Moreover, the priority rules of the PPSA, whose general policy is to assign priority to the earliest registered security interest, would be turned on their head. Presuming that every charge against inventory is subject to a licence to sell -- a presumption that accords with the interest of creditors in ensuring the debtor's continued vitality -- the last security interest would take priority over all earlier ones, because only the last interest would not be subject to some charge arising in the ordinary course of business. In answer to this objection, it might be said that as between two PPSA securities, the rules in the Act should be applied to determine priority. However, such an answer would not be consistent with the licence theory, which supposes that the original security interest in the inventory ends where obligations incurred in the ordinary course of business begin. The subsequent interest would prevail because the earlier interest would disappear before it.

Digitized by Google

98 It is open to my colleague to distinguish the fact situation in this appeal from the hypothetical priority contests I have mentioned on the ground that the Crown's interest in the inventory is unlike other charges against inventory in that it depends on the fictional device of deeming. What makes this case different, it might be said, is that the ITA deems to have been done what could have been done. On this understanding, it does not matter that the inventory was not actually sold and the proceeds were not actually remitted to the Receiver General, because s. 227(4) and (5) ITA deem these things to have been done. But in my view, this answer cannot succeed because the inventory was not an unencumbered asset at the moment the taxes came due. It was subject to the respondent's security interest and therefore was legally the respondent's and not attachable by the deemed trust. As Gonthier J. himself says (at para. 39):

> . . . [s. 227(4)] does not permit Her Majesty to attach Her beneficial interest to property which, at the time of liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy, in law belongs to a party other than the tax debtor.

99 The deeming is thus not a mechanism for undoing an existing security interest, but rather a device for going back in time and seeking out an asset that was not, at the moment the income taxes came due, subject to any competing security interest. In short, the deemed trust provision cannot be effective unless it is first determined that there is some unencumbered asset out of which the trust may be deemed. The deeming follows the answering of the chattel security question; it does not determine the answer.

100 Indeed, Gonthier J. does seize on the peculiar nature of the deemed trust as a possible ground for distinguishing the Crown's interest from rival interests. However, his argument differs from the one I have outlined to the extent that it emphasizes the deemed performance of the obligation to the Crown. It appears to be my colleague's position that the licence to sell represents a reduction in the value of the security interest only with respect to performed obligations but not with respect to unperformed ones. In his view, this represents a sufficient check on the licence theory. I agree that, if the distinction between performed and unperformed obligations were maintainable, then the likelihood of the licence consuming the security interest would be greatly reduced. However, in my view, the distinction cannot be maintained. As Gonthier J. says more than once in his reasons, the licence theory rests on the consent of the parties. But the parties to this case consented to the sale of inventory "in the ordinary course of Debtor's business". The language is unqualified. No distinction is drawn between performed and unperformed obligations. The only performance that is contemplated in the licence is the actual sale of the inventory and the application of the proceeds to a debt. And, as I have already argued, the deeming mechanism does not furnish the needed actual sale. Accordingly, I conclude that if the words of the licence are to be given their due as an indicium of the parties' intent, then there can be no distinction between performed and unperformed obligations.

101 My colleague places great emphasis on the fact that the debtor covenanted, in the general security agreement, "to pay all taxes, rates, levies, assessments and other charges of every nature which may be lawfully levied, assessed or imposed against or in respect of Debtor or Collateral as and when the same become due and payable". But this covenant is not part of the licence. And in any event, it is merely a covenant to obey the law. It adds nothing to s. 153(1) ITA. Furthermore, it does not prescribe the outcome of a priority contest. What is more, the covenant to pay taxes is only one of several in the agreement. Another covenant provides that the debtor shall "carry on and conduct the business of Debtor in a proper and efficient manner". Presumably the debtor might incur subsequent debts in the course of carrying on and conducting its business. Gonthier J. advances no principle that might permit the settlement of priority disputes as between the Crown and subsequent lenders. In the event of a dispute, both would have the benefit of the licence to sell inventory and of express covenants, so that some other criterion would have to be found to determine which takes priority. Here, as before, the prospect of a reversal of the ordinary priority rules is immediate and troubling.

Digitized by Google

102 My colleague also relies on comments made in FBDB. In that case, the British Columbia Court of Appeal said, after having disposed of the appeal on another ground, that a licence to sell inventory carries with it a requirement that the licencee should satisfy obligations incurred in "dealing with the stock in the ordinary course of business": FBDB, supra, at p. 40. Because the obligation to set aside provincial sales taxes is a "legal incident" of the sale of inventory, a lien for unpaid sales taxes comes within the scope of the licence and so is excepted from any security interest that is subject to it: idem.

103 As I understand the comments in FBDB, a licence to sell inventory permits the satisfaction of obligations out of the proceeds only to the extent of the "legal incidents" of the sale. In itself, this greatly limits the scope of the theory. Because the payment of wages, except perhaps to the sales agent, is not a "legal incident" of the sale of inventory, deduction of income taxes from wages does not come within the scope of the licence. This alone would appear sufficient to distinguish FBDB from the instant appeal.

104 However, I think that on closer examination it turns out that FBDB does not even depend on a licence theory, or at least does not depend on a licence theory of the kind advanced by my colleague. I say this because his reasons posit a charge that arises against the value of the inventory as a result of the operation of the licence. But the sales taxes that were at issue in FBDB were not against the value of the inventory. Rather, they were superadded to the underlying value, which is to say that they were calculated on the basis of the sale price of the inventory. Thus, the sales taxes that attend a sale of inventory represent something over and above the value of the inventory. Because a bank's charge is against the inventory, it does not extend so far as the sales taxes generated by a sale of inventory. But income taxes are not like sales taxes in that they are not as directly related to sales of inventory as sales taxes are. To the extent that income taxes have anything to do with the proceeds of a sale of inventory, they are payable out of the monies received for the value of the inventory. A bank's charge against the inventory is therefore adequate to defeat subsequent claims for the payment of income taxes. For this reason, McLachlin J.'s reasoning in FBDB is not contrary to what I am advancing herein.

105 I should also mention that in 1988, when the FBDB case was decided, British Columbia's Personal Property Security Act, S.B.C. 1989, c. 36, was not in force. As a consequence, the British Columbia Court of Appeal did not have to contend with the legislative considerations that we face in this appeal. In particular, there was at the time no equivalent in British Columbia law to s. 28(1) of Alberta's PPSA. The Court of Appeal therefore had greater latitude than we have to interpret a licence to sell as a tacit consent to a reduction of the security interest in the inventory. It seems to me that as a result of the enactment of the PPSA, something more than an unadorned licence to sell is needed to justify the conclusion that a creditor intended to abridge considerably its security interest in inventory.

Digitized by Google

106 And so I conclude that the licence to sell inventory is not an exception to the respondent's fixed and specific charge against the debtor's inventory. To hold otherwise would be to eviscerate the respondent's security interest. This is not to say, however, that Parliament could not legislate otherwise. Parliament has shown that it knows how to assert priority over rival security interests. See Alberta (Treasury Branches) v. M.N.R.; Toronto-Dominion Bank v. M.N.R., 1996 CanLII 244 (SCC), [1996] 1 S.C.R. 963, at p. 975. All that is needed to overtake a fixed and specific charge is clear language to that effect.

107 Though I consider the above legal arguments sufficient to dispose of this appeal, I observe that policy considerations also tell in favour of the conclusion I have reached.

108 In this respect, the first thing to notice is that the security agreement that the debtor and the respondent had in this case is an example of a very common and important financing device. To a considerable extent, commerce in our country depends on the vitality of such agreements. As several leading academics have observed, the amounts at stake run into the billions of dollars each year. And though not every creditor seeks security, the incentives to do so are powerful. See Jacob S. Ziegel, Benjamin Geva and R. C. C. Cuming, Commercial and Consumer Transactions (Rev. 2nd ed. 1990), at pp. 957-60. Accordingly, tinkering with security interests is a dangerous business. The risks of judicial innovation in this neighbourhood of the law are considerable.

109 Chief among these is the risk that attends legal uncertainty. If the legal rule is not clear, then inventory financiers will have to provide against the risk that their security interest might be defeated by some rival claim. The danger is particularly acute where as here, the language is as broad as "in the ordinary course of business". In this regard, I agree with what Professor Roderick J. Wood said in his article ("Revenue Canada's Deemed Trust Extends Its Tentacles: Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp." (1995), 10 B.F.L.R. 429, at p. 429) that my colleague cites:

> . . . there is little controversy with the proposition that a priority rule should be capable of producing reasonably predictable results. An unclear priority rule imposes a number of social costs. It means that creditors must plan their affairs against less certain outcomes. Uncertain rules generate more litigation than clear rules. Over time an uncertain rule is sometimes transformed into a clear rule through the process of judicial interpretation. However, this is a piecemeal approach which often occurs at a glacial pace.

110 Indeed, the consequences of my colleague's approach might be more dire than even Professor Wood supposes. For, as I have observed, almost any subsequent financial arrangement might be in the ordinary course of business.

Digitized by Google

Accordingly, the possibility is real that my colleague's proposed rule would effectively obliterate the PPSA charge against inventory. As insurance against this outcome, the costs of financing would presumably increase. I agree that if Parliament mandated this outcome, the courts must perforce accept it. However, judges should not rush to embrace such a weighty consequence unless the statutory language requiring them to do so is unequivocal.

111 Moreover, and for reasons I have already given, there is every likelihood that a broad interpretation of the licence theory would do violence to the PPSA. The Act clearly contemplates that inventory financing will be an important commercial device. But allowing the mere potential operation of a licence to sell to defeat a security interest in inventory would deprive the interest of all efficacy. It would not be any sort of security against subsequent obligations.

112 Finally, I wish to emphasize that it is open to Parliament to step in and assign absolute priority to the deemed trust. A clear illustration of how this might be done is afforded by s. 224(1.2) ITA, which vests certain moneys in the Crown "notwithstanding any security interest in those moneys" and provides that they "shall be paid to the Receiver General in priority to any such security interest". All that is needed to effect the desired result is clear language of that kind. In the absence of such clear language, judicial innovation is undesirable, both because the issue is policy charged and because a legislative mandate is apt to be clearer than a rule whose precise bounds will become fixed only as a result of expensive and lengthy litigation.

113 It remains to make a few remarks by way of conclusion. Because I believe that the respondent's general security agreement gave it a fixed and specific charge against the debtor's inventory, and because I conclude that the licence to sell that inventory does not derogate from the respondent's security interest, I conclude that this appeal should be dismissed. I do not need to decide whether the Bank Act security would have priority over the deemed trust as well; though given that the licence to sell inventory under the Bank Act security is only implied, I do not see how the Crown could have a greater claim under the Bank Act than it has under the PPSA.

114 Therefore I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs, LA FOREST, GONTHIER and CORY JJ. dissenting.

Solicitor for the appellant: The Attorney General of Canada, Ottawa.

Solicitors for the respondent: Milner, Fenerty, Edmonton.

Quebec (Revenue) v. Caisse populaire Desjardins de Montmagny, 2009 SCC 49, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 286 – Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act Considerations on ETA Deemed Trusts ceasing to apply

Bankruptcy and insolvency — Crown claims — Goods and services tax —Provincial sales tax Tax amounts that have been collected but not remitted, or are collectible, at time of bankruptcy of supplier

Digitized by Google

Legal characterization of Crown's rights in amounts of such taxes — Whether federal or provincial Crown is ordinary creditor or owner of tax amounts — Excise Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. E-15, s. 222(1), (1.1) — Act respecting the Ministère du Revenu, R.S.Q., c. M-31, s. 20 — Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, s. 67(2).

The GST imposed under the Excise Tax Act ("ETA") and the QST payable under the Act respecting the Québec Sales Tax are taxes that are collected, and in respect of which credits are available, at each step of the manufacturing and marketing of taxable goods and services. They are payable by the recipient, who is regarded as the debtor in respect of the tax liability to the Crown. In principle, the supplier acts only as a mandatary of the Crown in collecting and remitting these taxes and is deemed to hold the amounts so collected in trust for Her Majesty.

A number of businesses went bankrupt. The Canadian and Quebec tax authorities (the "tax authorities") claimed from the trustees the GST and QST amounts that had been collected but not remitted, or were collectible, by those businesses as of the dates of their bankruptcies. The tax authorities submitted that they were entitled to the amounts in issue as the owners thereof. Financial institutions that held various security interests in the property of the bankrupts contended that, under the law applicable in bankruptcy matters, the federal or provincial Crown is only an ordinary creditor and must be ranked as such with the debtors' other creditors, and that their security interests could therefore be set up against the Crown. The Quebec Superior Court found for the tax authorities on the basis that the GST and QST amounts were not part of the bankrupts' patrimonies. The Quebec Court of Appeal set aside the judgments.

Held: The appeals should be dismissed.

When a supplier goes bankrupt, the tax authorities do not own GST and QST amounts that have been collected but not remitted or are collectible at the time of the bankruptcy. Instead, they have an unsecured claim against the supplier. The legal characterization of the relationships between the tax authorities and the suppliers and recipients of goods and services cannot be considered in isolation from the overall context of the system for the collection and remittance of these taxes and from the provisions of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act ("BIA"). The tax authorities' position amounts to maintaining that the deemed trusts established by s. 222 ETA and s. 20 of the Act respecting the Ministère du Revenu ("AMR")continue to exist after a bankruptcy, which conflicts with both the words and the intent of the statutory provisions in question, and is inconsistent with the nature of the tax authorities' rights under the system for the collection and remittance of the GST and QST. [7] [21] [28-29]

In light of the 1992 amendments to s. 67 BIA, the deemed trusts established by ss. 222 ETA and 20 AMR are terminated at the time of the bankruptcy. Parliament also enacted concordance amendments to the ETA by adding subs. (1.1) to s. 222. As a result of this provision, deemed trusts intended to secure GST claims are ineffective in bankruptcy situations. Although the Quebec legislation does not contain a provision similar to s. 222(1.1) ETA, Parliament's legislative authority over bankruptcy prevents the provincial legislatures from modifying the order of priority established in the BIA. Thus, the trustee is responsible for liquidating patrimonies that include the GST and QST amounts in issue. The mandate the supplier or the trustee is deemed to have been given with respect to the two taxes involves the performance of obligations to collect and then to remit, not the amounts collected, but a balance resulting from offsetting claims of the Crown and the supplier. [7-8] [16-17] [23] [27-28]

Digitized by Google

Cases Cited

Referred to: Reference re Quebec Sales Tax, [1994] 2 S.C.R. 715; Reference re Goods and Services Tax, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 445; D.I.M.S. Construction inc. (Trustee of) v. Quebec (Attorney General), 2005 SCC 52, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 564; Victuni AG v. Minister of Revenue of Quebec, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 580; Lefebvre (Trustee of), 2004 SCC 63, [2004] 3 S.C.R. 326; British Columbia v. Henfrey Samson Belair Ltd., [1989] 2 S.C.R. 24; Caisse populaire Desjardins de l'Est de Drummond v. Canada, 2009 SCC 29, [2009] 2
S.C.R. 94.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Act respecting the Ministère du Revenu, R.S.Q., c. M-31, ss. 20, 23, 24.
Act respecting the Québec sales tax, R.S.Q., c. T-0.1, ss. 16, 82, 302.1, 422, 425, 427, 437.
Act respecting the Québec sales tax and amending various fiscal legislation, S.Q. 1991, c. 67.
Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act and to amend the Income Tax Act in consequence thereof, S.C. 1992, c. 7.
Bank Act, S.C. 1991, c. 46, s. 427.
Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, ss. 67, 86(1), 87(1).
Constitution Act, 1867, s. 92(2).
Excise Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. E-15, ss. 141.01, 165, 169(1), 221(1), 222(1), (1.1), (3), 223, 224, 228, 265, 296(1)(b).

Authors Cited

Canada. House of Commons. House of Commons Debates, vol. II, 3rd Sess., 34th Parl., June 19, 1991, p.
2106.
Canada. House of Commons. House of Commons Debates, vol. IV, 3rd Sess., 34th Parl., November 1, 1991, p. 4354.
Canada. House of Commons. Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations, Issue No. 9, September 5, 1991, p. 9:5.
Canada. House of Commons. Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations, Issue No. 10, September 5, 1991, p. 10:18.
Robert Brakel & Associates Ltd. Value-Added Taxation in Canada: GST, HST, and QST, 2nd ed. Toronto: CCH Canadian, 2003.
Sullivan, Ruth. Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes, 5th ed. Markham, Ont.: Lexis-Nexis, 2008.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal (Forget, Doyon and Duval Hesler JJ.A.), 2007 QCCA 1837, [2008] R.J.Q. 39, 40 C.B.R. (5th) 18, [2008] G.S.T.C. 3, SOQUIJ AZ-50464769,

[2007] J.Q. n^{o} 14712 (QL), 2007 CarswellQue 12231, setting aside a decision of Boisvert J., 2006 QCCS 2108, 34 C.B.R. (5th) 245, [2007] G.S.T.C. 185, SOQUIJ AZ-50368833, [2006] J.Q. n^{o} 3613 (QL), 2006
CarswellQue 3427. Appeal dismissed.

Digitized by Google

APPEAL from a judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal (Forget, Doyon and Duval Hesler JJ.A.), 2007 QCCA 1835, 40 C.B.R. (5th) 18, [2008] G.S.T.C. 3, SOQUIJ AZ-50464328, [2007] J.Q. n° 14713 (QL), 2007 CarswellQue 12231, setting aside a decision of St-Julien J., 2006 QCCS 6370, SOQUIJ AZ-50412620, [2006] J.Q. n° 15239 (QL), 2006 CarswellQue 11998. Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal (Forget, Doyon and Duval Hesler JJ.A.), 2007 QCCA 1813, 40 C.B.R. (5th) 18, [2008] G.S.T.C. 3, SOQUIJ AZ-50464770, [2007] J.Q. n° 14564 (QL), 2007 CarswellQue 12231, setting aside a decision of Bouchard J., 2006 QCCS 2656, 21 C.B.R. (5th) 289, [2006] G.S.T.C. 123, SOQUIJ AZ-50373960, [2006] J.Q. n° 11028 (QL), 2006 CarswellQue 4759.

Appeal dismissed.

Christian Boutin, *Michel Beauchamp*and Jean-Yves Bernard, for the appellant the Deputy Minister of Revenue of Quebec.

Pierre Cossette and Guy Laperrière, for the appellant Her Majesty The Queen.

Reynald Auger and Jean-Patrick Dallaire, for the respondents Caisse populaire Desjardins de Montmagny and Raymond Chabot Inc., in its capacity as Trustee in bankruptcy of 9083-4185 Québec Inc.

Mason Poplaw and Miguel Bourbonnais, for the respondent Raymond Chabot Inc., in its capacity as Trustee for the estate of the debtor, Consortium Promecan Inc.

Marc Germain, for the respondent the National Bank of Canada.

Éric Vallières and Sidney Elbaz, for the intervener.

Digitized by Google

English version of the judgment of the Court delivered by LEBEL J. —

Introduction

[1] In these three cases, the Canadian and Quebec tax authorities, on the one hand, and the trustees in bankruptcy of certain businesses and financial institutions holding various security interests in the property of the bankrupts, on the other, disagree about what should be done with taxes on consumption that had been collected but not remitted, or were collectible, as of the date of the bankruptcy. The tax authorities submit that they are entitled to the amounts in issue as the owners thereof. The respondents contend that, under the law applicable in bankruptcy matters, the federal or provincial Crown is only an ordinary creditor and must be ranked as such with the debtors' other creditors. The financial institutions submit that their security interests can be set up against the Crown as against any ordinary creditor. The Quebec Superior Court found for the Crown. The Quebec Court of Appeal set aside the judgments and accepted the arguments of the trustees and financial institutions. In my view, that decision is well founded, and I would uphold it.

Origins of the Cases

[2] These three cases result from the bankruptcies of a number of businesses and from problems that arose as a result of their insolvency in respect of the administration of the federal goods and services tax ("GST") imposed under the Excise Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. E-15 ("ETA"), and the Quebec sales tax ("QST") payable under the Act respecting the Québec sales tax, R.S.Q., c. T-0.1 ("AQST"). To begin, I will summarize the facts that must be considered to understand these cases. The relevant statutory provisions are reproduced in the Appendix.

Deputy Minister of Revenue of Quebec and Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Canada v. Caisse populaire Desjardins de Montmagny and Raymond Chabot Inc., in its Capacity as Trustee in Bankruptcy of 9083-4185 Québec Inc.

[3] In this case, a manufacturing company required, as a supplier, to collect the GST and the QST went bankrupt on September 7, 2005. Raymond Chabot Inc. was appointed trustee in bankruptcy. The debtor had hypothecated its claims and accounts receivable in favour of the respondent Caisse populaire Desjardins de Montmagny. Quebec's Deputy Minister of Revenue gave the trustee notice that he considered it to be his mandatary for the recovery of GST and QST amounts that had been collected but not remitted or were collectible. The tax authorities claimed that they owned the amounts in question. Furthermore, the record shows that some of the taxes that had been collected or were collectible at the time of the bankruptcy had been payable for more than 60 days. The Caisse populaire Desjardins de Montmagny claimed to hold valid security interests, which could be set up against the tax authorities, in the tax amounts related to the claims hypothecated in its favour. In view of these conflicting claims, the trustee asked the Superior Court to determine to whom the tax amounts belonged.

Deputy Minister of Revenue of Quebec and Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Canada v. Raymond Chabot Inc. in Its Capacity as Trustee for the Estate of the Debtor, Consortium Promecan Inc.

[4] In this case, Consortium Promecan Inc. went bankrupt on March 20, 2004, and

Digitized by Google

Raymond Chabot Inc. was appointed trustee. The debtor had not filed returns with respect to the GST and the QST since February 1, 2004. Quebec's Deputy Minister of Revenue asked the trustee to remit to him all GST and QST amounts in respect of the period between February 1 and March 20, 2004 that had been collected or were collectible. The trustee replied that, in its view, the Deputy Minister was only an ordinary creditor in the bankruptcy, and it denied his request. The Crown appealed that decision to the Superior Court.

Deputy Minister of Revenue of Quebec and Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Canada v. National Bank of Canada

[5] The tax claims in this case result from the bankruptcies of two companies, Alternative Granite et Marbre inc. and Stone Vogue Ressources inc., on November 5, 2004. The Crown claimed GST and QST amounts related to the accounts receivable of the bankrupt debtors. The National Bank of Canada had obtained, on those accounts, security under s. 427 of the Bank Act, S.C. 1991, c. 46, and movable hypothecs. It tried to exercise its rights under these various security interests and claimed the proceeds of the accounts receivable as well as the GST and QST amounts related to these claims. It then applied to the Superior Court to resolve the resulting dispute between itself and the tax authorities. In the meantime, the Bank's mandatary, the trustee and the Crown all collected portions of the disputed taxes and even of the accounts receivable.

Judicial History

Quebec Superior Court

[6] The Superior Court heard the three cases separately. The result was the same in all of them. All three judges concluded that the Crown owned the disputed GST and QST amounts. If the trustee in bankruptcy collected them, it was as a mandatary of the tax authorities. Quebec's Deputy Minister of Revenue and the Minister of National Revenue could not be considered to be mere ordinary creditors. In essence, the Superior Court judges held that the GST and QST amounts were not part of the bankrupt's patrimony: 2006 QCCS 2108, 34 C.B.R. (5th) 245 (per Boisvert J.), 2006 QCCS 6370, [2006] J.Q. n^{o} 15239 (QL) (per St-Julien J.), 2006 QCCS 2656, 21 C.B.R. (5th) 289 (per Bouchard J.). All three judgments were appealed to the Quebec Court of Appeal.

Quebec Court of Appeal, Forget, Doyon and Duval Hesler JJ.A.

[7] Duval Hesler J.A., writing for the Court of Appeal, allowed the appeals and set aside the Superior Court's judgments: 2007 QCCA 1837, 2007 QCCA 1835, 2007 QCCA 1813, [2008] R.J.Q. 39. She acknowledged that the QST and the GST are direct taxes payable by the recipient of the good or service. But in her view, as a result of the 1992 amendments to the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 ("BIA"), the tax authorities must be treated as an ordinary creditor in such a case. They do not own tax amounts payable by purchasers of goods and services that are subject to the GST and QST, but instead have a claim against the supplier. Furthermore, any deemed trust in favour of the tax authorities ended at the time of the bankruptcy. The tax amounts in issue were therefore part of the bankrupt's patrimony but remained subject to any security interests that had been validly granted to creditors like the Caisse populaire Desjardins de Montmagny and the National Bank of Canada. This Court granted leave for three appeals from that judgment.

Digitized by Google

Analysis

Issues and Positions of the Parties

[8] The issue is the nature of the rights of the tax authorities, the trustee in bankruptcy and the secured creditors to GST and QST amounts that have been collected but not remitted or are collectible at the time of the bankruptcy of a supplier within the meaning of the AQST and the ETA. In sum, the tax authorities submit that they own these amounts. In their opinion, the trustee collects the taxes on their behalf, as their mandatary, and these amounts are not part of the bankrupt's patrimony. The respondents reply that the amounts are part of the bankrupt's patrimony, subject to any validly granted security interests. In their view, the Crown does not have a right of ownership in the tax amounts and enjoys only the rights of an ordinary creditor in a bankruptcy situation. To resolve this issue, it will be necessary to begin by considering the nature of the two taxes in issue, the GST and the QST, and the mechanism for administering them. I will also need, before ruling on the legal characterization of the Crown's rights, to discuss the effect of the 1992 amendments to the BIA.

Nature of the GST and the QST

[9] The GST and the QST are similar types of taxes on consumption. The legal framework for imposing them was established almost 20 years ago now. They are considered to be direct taxes, and the ultimate recipient of taxable goods and services is responsible for paying them. However, the taxes are collected, and credits apply, at each step of the manufacturing and marketing chains. In principle, the supplier acts only as a mandatary of the Crown in collecting and remitting these taxes (Reference re Quebec Sales Tax, [1994] 2 S.C.R. 715, at pp. 720-22).

[10] The GST, which was implemented in 1990 by legislation that amended the ETA(S.C. 1990, 45), replaced the former federal manufacturers' sales tax. The GST can be regarded as a value-added tax. It is collected at every stage of the manufacturing and marketing of goods and services and is payable by the recipient, who is regarded as the debtor in respect of the tax liability to the Crown (s. 165 ETA). However, the supplier is responsible for collecting and remitting the tax (s. 221(1) ETA). The supplier is deemed to hold the amounts so collected in trust for Her Majesty (s. 222(1) and (3) ETA) and must periodically file returns and make remittances. In addition, the Act establishes a system under which input credits can be claimed, at each step of the marketing and supply of the good, in respect of the taxes the supplier has had to pay to his or her own suppliers (ss. 141.01 and 169(1) ETA). The ultimate recipient bears the full burden of the tax (R. Brakel & Associates Ltd., Value-Added Taxation in Canada: GST, HST, and QST (2nd ed. 2003), at pp. 2-3). This Court has confirmed this as a valid exercise of the Parliament of Canada's taxing power (Reference re Goods and Services Tax, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 445).

[11] In parallel with this federal tax reform, an in-depth review of the consumption tax system took place in Quebec. In 1991, the National Assembly enacted new sales tax legislation, the Act respecting the Québec sales tax and amending various fiscal legislation, S.Q. 1991, c. 67. The National Assembly's intention in enacting this statute was to achieve extensive harmonization with the GST and to align this aspect of Quebec's tax system with the model chosen by the Parliament of Canada. The legislation came into force on July 1, 1992 (Brakel, at pp. 3-4). Under an agreement with the Government of Canada, the Quebec government is responsible for collecting both the GST and the QST in Quebec (Brakel, at p. 4).

Digitized by Google

Moreover, pursuant to s. 20 of the Act respecting the Ministère du Revenu, R.S.Q., c. M-31 ("AMR"), amounts collected by suppliers of goods and services are deemed to be held in trust for the State. This Court held that this new sales tax falls within the provincial taxing power under s. 92(2) of the Constitution Act, 1867 (Reference re Quebec Sales Tax).

Effects of the Amendments to the BIA on the Status of Claims of the Crown

[12] In 1992, the Parliament of Canada also made extensive changes to the BIA, and those changes are of particular relevance to this issue of the nature and extent of the Crown's rights to recover the GST and QST amounts. The amendments in question were set out in the Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act and to amend the Income Tax Act in consequence thereof, S.C. 1992, c. 27. Some of these changes related to the Crown's priority in bankruptcy situations. The federal government seemed at the time to want to respond to criticisms that the system establishing the priority of the Crown's claims often left nothing for a bankrupt's ordinary creditors. A government spokesperson acknowledged these concerns at the time of the introduction of the legislation to revise the Crown priority system:

We also took steps to limit the priority of the Crown, one of the more blatantly unfair aspect[s] of the present Bankruptcy Act.

(House of Commons Debates, vol. II, 3rd Sess., 34th Parl., June 19, 1991, at p. 2106)

[13] Felix Holtmann, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations, also acknowledged the problems and injustices caused by the proliferation of deemed trusts developed to protect the Crown's claims. He stressed the need to reduce the extent of such trusts in order to achieve a better balance among creditors in bankruptcy situations:

One of the main areas is Crown priority. Under the present Bankruptcy Act the Crown has a preferred claim for various types of taxes and ranks ahead of all unsecured creditors. In 1970 a study report made reference to Crown priority; then again in 1986 proposed bankruptcy amendments recommended the abolition of the Crown priority. With the Crown priority, creditors are less likely to participate in an insolvency, in a bankruptcy, and today rarely come out to meetings of creditors because there are no assets. The assets are fully secured to the secured creditors, banks and major lenders as well as to Crowns. As a result there is virtually nothing left for the unsecureds. We recommend that the Crown priority be abolished and that if the Crown wants to contract directly with the debtor, it be entitled to a contractual priority but not a Crown priority.

(Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations, Issue No. 9, September 5, 1991, at p. 9:5)

[14] During the parliamentary debates on Bill C-22 regarding the amendment of the BIA, comments by the government spokesperson confirmed that the government intended to reduce the Crown to the rank of an ordinary creditor in bankruptcy situations:

A second very important point in the legislation is that the Government of Canada, the Crown, does not put itself in a priority position. It stands in line with the unsecured creditors in almost all cases except for the deductions of tax and unemployment owed.

(House of Commons Debates, vol. IV, 3rd Sess., 34th Parl., November 1, 1991, at p. 4354)

In the course of the discussions in the Standing Committee on Consumer and

Digitized by Google

Corporate Affairs and Government Operations, the government spokesperson had clearly expressed the intention to abolish the deemed trust in respect of the GST in bankruptcy situations:

As far as the GST is concerned, if there is a deemed trust for GST, it will not come under this particular provision so it will not survive. If there is a statutory lien or priority, or a statutory security interest for GST, it will not take priority under this legislation unless it is a registered interest.

(Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations, Issue No. 10, September 5, 1991, at p. 10:18)

[15] The amendments to the bankruptcy legislation appear to be consistent with the legislative intention announced during the parliamentary debates. First of all, s. 67 BIA reinforces the principle that all the bankrupt's property is part of the estate of the bankrupt and constitutes the common pledge of the creditors, although with the exception of property held in trust for another person. However, s. 67(2) BIA provides that, with certain exceptions, property may not be regarded as held in trust unless it would be so regarded in the absence of a statutory provision. This renders statutory trusts ineffective without affecting trusts resulting from the common law or the civil law or statutory trusts that secure claims of the federal and provincial Crowns related to source deductions for income tax, a comprehensive pension plan or the federal employment insurance program (s. 67(3) BIA). No mention is made of trusts related to the GST or to provincial taxes such as the QST. Moreover, s. 86(1) BIA confirms that the Crown is only an ordinary creditor in a bankruptcy situation:

86. (1) In relation to a bankruptcy or proposal, all provable claims, including secured claims, of Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province or of any body under an Act respecting workers' compensation, in this section and in section 87 called a "workers' compensation body", rank as unsecured claims.

[16] In addition, not long after these changes to the BIA, the Parliament of Canada enacted concordance amendments with regard to GST claims (S.C. 1993, c. 27). It added subs. (1.1) to s. 222 ETA. As a result of this provision, deemed trusts intended to secure GST claims are ineffective in bankruptcy situations:

222. . . .

(1.1) Subsection (1) does not apply, at or after the time a person becomes a bankrupt (within the meaning of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act), to any amounts that, before that time, were collected or became collectible by the person as or on account of tax under Division II.

[17] The Quebec legislation respecting the QST does not contain a provision similar to s. 222(1.1) ETA that renders the deemed trust in favour of the tax authorities ineffective in bankruptcy situations. However, according to a settled principle of constitutional law regarding the Parliament of Canada's legislative authority over bankruptcy and insolvency, the provincial legislatures may not modify the order of priority established in the BIA. In the event of conflict, the BIA will prevail and the provincial statute will be inapplicable regardless of the legislature's intention (D.I.M.S. Construction inc. (Trustee of) v. Quebec (Attorney General), 2005 SCC 52, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 564, at para. 12, per Deschamps J.).

[18] The tax authorities do not dispute the clear terms of the statutory provisions. Rather, they argue that those provisions do not apply to the GST and the QST and that the Crown is not a creditor, but the owner of the tax amounts. Thus, the amounts collected or collectible at the time of the bankruptcy in respect of the GST or the QST do not form part of the bankrupt's patrimony. As a result, they are not included in the property that is to be liquidated in accordance with the order of priority established in the BIA. It will therefore be necessary to resolve the issue of the legal characterization of the Crown's rights with respect to the GST and QST amounts. The characterization of those rights will essentially resolve the dispute before this Court.

Digitized by Google

Legal Characterization of the Crown's Rights

[19] In this analysis, it is important to abide by the fundamental rules of contemporary statutory interpretation. Parliament's intent must be ascertained, and to do this, it is often necessary to review the statutory provisions at issue in their overall context (R. Sullivan, Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes (5th ed. 2008), at p. 276). This approach casts doubt on the validity of the tax authorities' arguments.

[20] The appellants' arguments consist of a few fundamental propositions. They submit, first, that the GST and the QST are direct taxes on consumption. They are imposed on the consumer, and more specifically on the ultimate recipient of a taxable good or service. The legislation establishes a direct link between the Crown and the recipient, as the former may claim the taxes payable directly from the latter if they have not been collected (s. 296(1)(b) ETA). The appellants contend that where the GST is collected by a trustee in bankruptcy, the trustee, like the bankrupt supplier, collects it as an agent of, and on behalf of, the Crown. And the Crown is in a similar legal situation where the QST is concerned. The recipient owes the sales tax to the Crown pursuant to ss. 16 and 82 AQST. The supplier collects the tax on the Crown's behalf and is deemed to be a mandatary of the Crown pursuant to s. 422 AQST. Moreover, under s. 23 AMR, a person who does not collect a tax he or she was required to collect becomes a debtor of the State for that amount. The appellants further submit that, in the context of the ETA and the AQST, the supplier, a mandatary of the Crown, is responsible, after supplying a taxable service or good to a consumer, for the recovery of property— a GST or QST amount — that belongs to the Crown and that remains Crown property, until it is remitted to the Crown. The legal situation is the same regardless of whether the tax is collected by the supplier or by a trustee after its bankruptcy. In the appellants' view, when the collected tax is remitted, the mandatary does not settle a claim, but remits to the Crown its own property. Moreover, according to this argument, this Court has established a general principle that, in performing its obligation, the mandatary does not discharge a debt, but delivers over property belonging to the mandator (Victuni AG

v. Minister of Revenue of Quebec, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 580, at p. 584, per Pigeon J.).

[21] This set of legal propositions disregards the mechanisms for administering the GST and the QST. The legal characterization of the relationships between the tax authorities and the suppliers and recipients of goods and services cannot be considered in isolation from the overall context of the system for the collection and remittance of these taxes and from the provisions of the BIA.

[22] An initial comment must be made about the impact of the federal bankruptcy legislation. The appellants are oversimplifying the trustee's role and, in particular, his or her legal situation vis-à-vis the bankrupt. This Court has noted the complexity of the trustee's duties in, for example, Lefebvre (Trustee of), 2004 SCC 63, [2004] 3 S.C.R. 326, at paras. 35-37. The trustee's role is not limited to representing the bankrupt. The trustee manages the bankrupt's patrimony and is seized thereof as a result of the bankruptcy, but he or she also represents the creditors and is responsible to them for the liquidation and orderly distribution of the patrimony.

[23] In the cases before the Court, the trustees were responsible for liquidating a

Digitized by Google

patrimony that included the GST and QST amounts in issue, as the Court of Appeal concluded (see paras. 51-55). In her reasons, Duval Hesler J.A. clearly and correctly defined the nature of the trustee's role in this respect. The reason why the supplier was given the status of a mandatary was to ensure that the tax qualified as a direct tax so that the imposition, by the province of Quebec, of the QST in a form compatible with that of the federal GST would be constitutional (para. 50). However, the fact that this tax is ultimately borne by the recipient does not support a finding that the supplier and then the trustee, the bankrupt's representative, merely collect and remit the Crown's "property" or "thing". The nature of the collection mechanism for the two taxes suggests another interpretation of the legal situation.

[24] This mechanism is designed to implement a direct tax that is also a tax on the value added at each stage of the production and marketing of the good or service until it is acquired by its ultimate recipient. In such a system, as Duval Hesler J.A. noted, —TRANSLATION— "[t]he dollar collected is not the dollar remitted"(para. 52).

[25] First of all, the collection mechanism does not require separate invoices for the GST and the QST. These taxes are indicated and included in the invoice or other document given to the recipient (s. 223 ETA; s. 425 AQST). Next, the tax amounts collected by suppliers are remitted in accordance with the accrual, not cash, method of accounting. At periodic intervals, which vary depending on the individual supplier's sales and sometimes on the nature of the business, suppliers remit to the tax authorities amounts corresponding to the tax amounts that have been billed for and are collectible during the reporting period in question even if these collectible amounts have not in fact been collected from the recipients. When sending remittances, suppliers deduct from the amounts being remitted credits corresponding to their own inputs, that is, to the taxes they have paid to their own suppliers. Thus, they remit net tax amounts based on the difference between the taxes they have collected and the taxes they themselves have paid (s. 228 ETA; s. 437 AQST). At times, under this system, they can obtain rebates.

[26] Moreover, nothing in the legislation respecting the GST and the QST requires suppliers to keep the taxes they collect separate. Until a bankruptcy occurs, only the deemed trusts established by s. 222 ETA and s. 20 AMR lead to this legal result by giving the tax authorities a right to equivalent amounts from the suppliers' assets. Finally, while it is true that the recipient owes the tax to the Crown, a supplier who has remitted the tax owed by the recipient but has not collected it has a cause of action against the recipient (s. 224 ETA; s. 427 AQST).

[27] The statutory mandate imposed on the supplier to collect the GST and the QST differs from the mandate in issue in Victuni, which related to the acquisition and development of an immovable. The mandate with respect to the two taxes involves the performance of obligations to collect and then to remit, not the amounts collected, but a balance resulting from offsetting claims of the Crown and the supplier. The existence of these offsetting claims confirms that claims for the amounts collected by suppliers are fungible, as this Court in fact pointed out in British Columbia v. Henfrey Samson Belair Ltd., [1989] 2 S.C.R. 24, at pp. 34-35.

[28] I note that the appellants' position amounts to maintaining that the deemed trusts established by s. 222 ETA and s. 20 AMR continue to exist after a bankruptcy. The appellants' argument is inconsistent with the nature of their rights under the system for the collection and remittance of the GST and QST. It also conflicts with Parliament's clear intent and with the very explicit wording of the relevant statutory provisions regarding what is to happen if a supplier goes bankrupt. Before 1992, the Crown held a priority where certain tax claims were concerned. These claims were often protected by an increasingly complex series of statutory deemed trusts. The 1992 amendments to the BIA rendered these trusts ineffective in a bankruptcy situation, although there were exceptions with respect, for example, to claims for income tax source deductions (see, for example, Caisse populaire Desjardins de l'Est de Drummond v. Canada, 2009 SCC 29, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 94). Other than where these exceptions apply, when a debtor goes bankrupt, the Crown becomes an ordinary creditor. The trustee will give it the same priority as other creditors of the same rank. The trustee will be personally responsible for paying the GST or QST in respect of its own activities only (s. 265 ETA; s. 302.1 AQST).

Digitized by Google

[29] Canadian tax authorities are bound by the choice of legislative policy now expressed in the BIA. The order of priority established in the *BIA*is also binding on the Quebec tax authorities, even though the AMR is silent on what happens to the deemed trust established in s. 20 thereof in the event of bankruptcy. The appellants' arguments conflict with both the words of the statutory provisions in question and their underlying legislative intent, and cannot be accepted.

Conclusion

[30] For these reasons, I would affirm the decision of the Quebec Court of Appeal and dismiss the appellants' appeals with costs.

APPENDIX

Excise Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. E---15

165. (1) Subject to this Part, every recipient of a taxable supply made in Canada shall pay to Her Majesty in right of Canada tax in respect of the supply calculated at the rate of 5% on the value of the consideration for the supply.

.

(1) Every person who makes a taxable supply shall, as agent of Her Majesty

. in right of Canada, collect the tax under Division II payable by the recipient in respect of the supply.

.

.

.

.

. . .

Digitized by Google

(1) every person who collects an amount as or on account of tax under Division II is deemed, for all purposes and despite any security interest in the amount, to hold the amount in trust for Her Majesty in right of Canada, separate and apart from the property of the person and from property held by any secured creditor of the person that, but for a security interest, would be property of the person, until the amount is remitted to the Receiver General or withdrawn under subsection (2).

Subject to

(1.1) Subsection (1) does not apply, at or after the time a person becomes a bankrupt (within the meaning of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act), to any amounts that, before that time, were collected or became collectible by the person as or on account of tax under Division II.

to subsection (1.1),

(3) Despite any other provision of this Act (except subsection (4)), any other enactment of Canada (except the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act), any enactment of a province or any other law, if at any time an amount deemed by subsection (1) to be held by a person in trust for Her Majesty is not remitted to the Receiver General or withdrawn in the manner and at the time provided under this Part, property of the person and property held by any secured creditor of the person that, but for a security interest, would be property of the person, equal in value to the amount so deemed to be held in trust, is deemed to be held, from the time the amount was collected by the person, in trust for Her Majesty, separate and apart from the property of the person, whether or not the property is subject to a security interest, and to form no part of the estate or property of the person from the time the amount was collected, whether or not the property has in fact been kept separate and apart from the estate or property of the person and whether or not the property is subject to a security interest and is property beneficially owned by Her Majesty in right of Canada despite any security interest in the property or in the proceeds thereof and the proceeds of the property shall be paid to the Receiver General in priority to all security interests.

An Act respecting the Québec sales tax, R.S.Q., c. T---0.1

16. Every recipient of a taxable supply made in Québec shall pay to the Minister of Revenue a tax in respect of the supply calculated at the rate of 7.5% on the value of the consideration for the supply.

422. Every person who makes a taxable supply shall, as a mandatary of the Minister, collect the tax payable by the recipient under section 16 in respect of the supply.

Digitized by Google

An Act respecting the Ministère du Revenu, R.S.Q., c. M---31

20. Every person who deducts, withholds or collects any amount under a fiscal law is deemed to hold it in trust for the State, separately from the person's patrimony and the person's own funds, for payment to the State in the manner and at the time provided under a fiscal law.

Where at any time an amount deemed by the first paragraph to be held by a person in trust for the State is not paid to the State in the manner and at the time provided under a fiscal law, an amount equal to the amount thus deducted, withheld or collected is deemed, from the time the amount is deducted, withheld or collected, to be held in trust for the State, separately from the person's patrimony and the person's own funds, and to form a separate fund not forming part of . . the property of that person, whether or not the amount has in fact been held separately from that person's patrimony or that person's own funds.

. Every person who does not collect a duty that he was bound to collect as a . mandatary of the Minister or does not withhold a duty that he was bound to withhold, under a fiscal law or a regulation made under such a law, shall become a debtor of the State for the amount of that duty, with the exception of the withholding provided for in section 1015 of the Taxation Act (chapter I--- 3), unless the withholding concerns a duty that a person was required to withhold from an amount paid to another person who is not resident in Canada for services performed in Québec.

. Every person who deducts, withholds or collects an amount under a fiscal law is bound to pay to the Minister, at the date fixed by such law, or in . accordance with the provision for such payment, an amount equal to that which the person must remit under the said Act.

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B---3

67. (1) The property of a bankrupt divisible among his creditors shall not comprise

(a) property held by the bankrupt in trust for any other person,

. . .

Subject to subsection (3), notwithstanding any provision in federal or provincial legislation that has the effect of deeming property to be held in trust for Her Majesty, property of a bankrupt shall not be regarded as held in trust for Her Majesty for the purpose of paragraph (1)(a) unless it would be so regarded in the absence of that statutory provision.

Digitized by Google

Subsection (2) does not apply in respect of amounts deemed to be held in trust under subsection 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, subsection 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan or subsection 86(2) or (2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act (each of which is in this subsection referred to as a "federal provision") nor in respect of amounts deemed to be held in trust under any law of a province that creates a deemed trust the sole purpose of which is to ensure remittance to Her Majesty in right of the province of amounts deducted or withheld under a law of the province where that law of the province imposes a tax similar in nature to the tax imposed under the Income Tax Act and the amounts deducted or withheld under that law of the province are of the same nature as the amounts referred to in subsection 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, or the province is a "province providing a comprehensive pension plan" as defined in subsection 3(1) of the Canada Pension Plan, that law of the province establishes a "provincial pension plan" as defined in that subsection and the amounts deducted or withheld under that law of the province are of the same nature as amounts referred to in subsection 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan, and for the purpose of this subsection, any provision of a law of a province that creates a deemed trust is, notwithstanding any Act of Canada or of a province or any other law, deemed to have the same effect and scope against any creditor, however secured, as the corresponding federal provision.

(1) In relation to a bankruptcy or proposal, all provable claims, including secured claims, of Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province or of any body under an Act respecting workers' compensation, in this section and in section 87 called a "workers' compensation body", rank as unsecured claims.

(1) A security provided for in federal or provincial legislation for the sole or principal purpose of securing a claim of Her Majesty in right of Canada or of a province or of a workers' compensation body is valid in relation to a bankruptcy or proposal only if the security is registered under a prescribed system of registration before the date of the initial bankruptcy event.

Appeals dismissed with costs.

Solicitor for the appellant the Deputy Minister of Revenue of Quebec: Attorney General of Quebec, Montréal.

Solicitor for the appellant Her Majesty The Queen: Attorney General of Canada, Montréal.

Solicitors for the respondents Caisse populaire Desjardins de Montmagny and Raymond Chabot Inc., in its capacity as Trustee in bankruptcy of 9083-4185 Québec Inc.: Langlois Kronström Desjardins, Lévis.

Solicitors for the respondent Raymond Chabot Inc., in its capacity as Trustee for the estate of the debtor, Consortium Promecan Inc.: McCarthy Tétrault, Montréal.

Solicitors for the respondent the National Bank of Canada: Stein Monast, Québec.

Solicitors for the intervener: McMillan, Montréal.

Caisse populaire Desjardins de l'Est de Drummond v. Canada, 2009 SCC 29, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 94 – Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and "Security Interests"

Digitized by Google

Taxation — Income tax — Trust for moneys deducted —Employer defaulting on line of credit and financial institution exercising right of compensation on employer's term deposit pursuant to agreement
Deemed trust in favour of Crown over property of employer that has deducted income tax and employment insurance premiums at source — Crown seeking to collect amount due by employer for unremitted source deductions from proceeds of term deposit— Whether compensation agreement between financial institution and employer created "security interest" within meaning of s. 224(1.3) of Income Tax Act Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.), ss. 224(1.3)"security interest", 227(4.1).

On September 18, 2000, the Caisse granted Camvrac a line of credit up to $277,000. A week later, Camvrac deposited $200,000 with the Caisse in accordance with a "Term Savings Agreement". Under the agreement, the deposit was neither negotiable nor transferable. On the same day, the Caisse and Camvrac entered into a "Security Given Through Savings" agreement in which Camvrac agreed to maintain and permit the Caisse to retain the deposit of $200,000 for the duration of its indebtedness to the Caisse. It also agreed that, in the event it defaulted, there would be compensation between the credit agreement and the term deposit. Camvrac defaulted on the loan on November 25, 2000, and later made an assignment in bankruptcy. The Caisse noted on its copy of the "Term Savings Agreement": "To be closed on 21/2/2001 to realize on security". Since Camvrac had failed to remit to the Crown income tax and employment insurance premiums deducted at source, the Crown gave the Caisse notice to pay the amount owing to the Crown from the proceeds of the deposit. Section 227(4.1) of the Income Tax Act ("ITA") and s. 86(2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act ("EIA") create a deemed trust in favour of the Crown over property of the employer that has deducted income tax and employment insurance premiums at source. This trust applies to property of an employer and property held by any secured creditor of the employer that, but for its security interest, would be property of the employer. The property is impressed with the deemed trust at the time the unremitted amounts were deducted at source by the employer. The Caisse unsuccessfully challenged the recovery process. The prothonotary, the Federal Court and the Federal Court of Appeal held that the Crown was entitled to recover the amounts due and the interest paid at the rate provided for in ss. 36(2) and 37(2) of the Federal Courts Act.

Held (LeBel and Deschamps JJ. dissenting): The appeal should be dismissed.
Per McLachlin C.J. and Binnie, Fish, Charron and Rothstein JJ.: The agreement between the Caisse and Camvrac gave rise to a "security interest" for the purposes of s. 224(1.3) ITA. Camvrac's property subject to the security interest is thus deemed to be held in trust for the Crown under s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA because Camvrac did not remit to the Crown income tax and employment insurance premiums deducted at source. [1] [2]
The definition of "security interest" in s. 224(1.3) does not require that the agreement between the creditor and debtor take any particular form, nor is any particular form expressly excluded. So long as the creditor's interest in the debtor's property secures payment or performance of an obligation, there is a security interest within the meaning of this section. Parliament has chosen an expansive definition of security interest in s. 224(1.3) in order to enable maximum recovery by the Crown under its deemed trust for unremitted income tax and employment insurance premiums deducted at source by employers. It is open to Parliament to define a term in an area of its own legislative competence in order to ensure that there is a rule of general application across all of the provinces. [12] [14] [15]

Digitized by Google

Whether a contract providing for a right to compensation (in Quebec) or a right to set-off (in the common law provinces) also gives rise to a security interest within the meaning of s. 224(1.3) requires that the terms of the contract be carefully considered to determine whether the parties intended to confer on one party an interest in the property of the other party that secures payment or performance of an obligation. If the substance of the agreement demonstrates that the parties intended an interest in property to secure an indebtedness, then a security interest exists within the meaning of s. 224(1.3). In this case, it was the five-year term and the maintenance and retention of the $200,000 deposit, as well as Camvrac's agreement not to transfer or negotiate the deposit and that the deposit could only be used as security with the Caisse, that created the Caisse's interest in Camvrac's property for the purposes of s. 224(1.3) ITA. In the absence of these encumbrances on Camvrac's deposit, Camvrac could have withdrawn the deposit at any time. Should it have done so and still been indebted to the Caisse, the Caisse's right to compensation would be ineffective because it would not be indebted to Camvrac at the time the Caisse had to resort to the remedy of compensation. [23] [25] [30]

The Caisse is liable to pay to the Crown the amounts for employment insurance premiums and income tax deducted at source by Camvrac up to, and including, any deductions not remitted as of February 21, 2001 — the date on which the Caisse realized on its security. The trust created by s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA is deemed to be in effect at any time. It does not matter that the term deposit became the property of Camvrac only after some of the employment insurance premiums and income tax deductions went unremitted since the deemed trust encompasses property which comes into the hands of the tax debtor after the trust arises. The proceeds of Camvrac's term deposit are therefore available to the Crown to discharge all of the outstanding employment insurance premiums and income tax deducted at source by Camvrac, whether the unremitted deductions occurred before or after Camvrac entered into the "Term Savings Agreement" and until February 21, 2001. Interest is calculated in accordance with ss. 36(2) and 37(2) of the Federal Courts Act from February 21, 2001, when the Caisse effected compensation, to the date of payment. [59] [61] [63]

Per LeBel and Deschamps JJ. (dissenting): Compensation is not a "security interest" as that term is defined in s. 224(1.3) ITA. For the purposes of s. 224(1.3), it is not enough that compensation offers protection similar to that of a security interest: it must also confer a real right. To limit the concept of security interest in s. 224(1.3) to rights that are real in nature is consistent both with the shared meaning of the terms ("security interest" and "garantie") used in the two versions of the provision and with Parliament's purpose of giving the deemed trust priority over the security interests referred to in s. 224(1.3). This deemed trust was created to ensure that employers remit income tax deducted from their employees' salaries to the Receiver General for Canada. [65] [98] [101]

Although compensation can be likened to a security interest, it cannot be equated with one in the sense that the term "security interest" must be given in the context of s. 224(1.3) ITA. Where compensation may be effected between two debts, the effect is clearly analogous to that of a "security interest" in the broad sense of the term; nevertheless, compensation or set-off is not regarded, in the positive law of either Quebec or the common law provinces, as having the characteristics of a real right. The automatic extinction of mutual debts is an effect of compensation, but it does not constitute the enforcement of a real right in the property in question. Furthermore, a conclusion that compensation is a "security interest"as that term is defined in the federal statute would conflict with the meaning given to the term in provincial personal property security statutes, which exclude set-off. Such an interpretation would also be inconsistent with the common law concept of "set-off", on which numerous business transactions are based. Finally, whether considered in isolation or as a whole, the term for repayment of the deposit amount, the obligation to maintain, the right to withhold and the limits on the right to transfer, hypothecate or negotiate the deposit created only personal obligations. [102] [107] [122] [132]

Digitized by Google

Insofar as the amounts had not been deducted at the time the agreement was entered into, the Caisse's right to conventional compensation may be set up against Her Majesty because Her Majesty cannot have more rights than Camvrac itself had. In Quebec civil law, as at common law, the rule for asserting contractual rights against third-party assignees is based on the general principles governing obligations. The right to conventional compensation is assessed as of the time the right is granted, not as of the time it is exercised. The protection of third parties, codified in art. 1681 C.C.Q., applies to rights acquired before the compensation agreement was signed. Thus, where the trust applies to a claim, it attaches to a legal relationship that corresponds to an active contractual situation, which explains why the beneficiary of the trust may assert only those rights held by the tax debtor. When Parliament wished to give the deemed trust more teeth, it took care to give Her Majesty priority over secured creditors. It did not alter the general rules governing the rights a debtor can assert against its original creditor. [65] [147] [148] [150] [152]

Camvrac's right to recover its claim was subject to the right to compensation that had been granted to the Caisse in September 2000 in the agreement to give savings as security. In the context of that agreement, the right to compensation was a right held by the Caisse that could not be negated solely by the fact of the deemed trust becoming effective. Her Majesty, as a third party, could not demand that the Caisse discharge its debt to Camvrac if the conditions for repayment had not been met. The Caisse's right had to be respected by third parties who acquired rights after the agreement was signed. Consequently, Her Majesty must abide by the compensation agreement, given that her right is subsequent to it. [153]

Her Majesty may, however, claim from the Caisse the amount owed by Camvrac before the compensation agreement was signed in September 2000. The claims of the Caisse and Camvrac have distinct sources: one is based on the variable credit contract, the other, on the term savings agreement. The Caisse's claim against Camvrac dates from September 18, 2000 and Camvrac's claim, from September 25, 2000. On the latter date, Camvrac undertook, first in the term savings agreement, "to make, on the date of acquisition, a deposit in the amount of $200,000", and then in the agreement to give savings as security, to "maintain" a deposit in the amount of $200,000. For Camvrac to be able to undertake in the agreement to give savings as security to "maintain" the deposited amount, its claim resulting from the term savings agreement had to take on an independent existence, if only at the time the deposit was made. Given that the deposit was made before the right to compensation was granted, the deemed trust could have become effective in respect of Camvrac's claim up to the total of the amounts owed to Her Majesty as of September 25, 2000. This is not a case in which the respective debts have the same source and the claim is subject to a right to compensation. Just as Her Majesty's rights are subordinated to the right to compensation for deductions subsequent to the signing of the agreement, the Caisse's right must give way to Her Majesty's pre-existing right. [154] [156]

Digitized by Google

On the interest issue, there is no need to vary the decision of the Federal Court of Appeal. [157]

Cases Cited
By Rothstein J.
Referred to: Saulnier v. Royal Bank of Canada, 2008 SCC 58, [2008] 3 S.C.R. 166; Husky Oil Operations Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 453; Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 411; Dagg v. Canada (Minister of Finance), [1997] 2 S.C.R. 403; Holt v. Telford, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 193; DaimlerChrysler Financial Services (debis) Canada Inc. v. Mega Pets Ltd., 2002 BCCA 242, 212 D.L.R. (4th) 41; Caisse populaire Desjardins de Val-Brillant v. Blouin, 2003 SCC 31, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 666; First Vancouver Finance v. M.N.R., 2002 SCC 49, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 720; Markevich v. Canada, 2003 SCC 9, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 94.

By Deschamps J. (dissenting)
Markevich v. Canada, 2003 SCC 9, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 94; Canada (Attorney General) v. Caisse populaire d'Amos, 2004 FCA 92, 324 N.R. 31; Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 411; Quebec North Shore Paper Co. v. Canadian Pacific Ltd., [1977] 2 S.C.R. 1054; McNamara Construction (Western) Ltd. v. The Queen, [1977] 2 S.C.R. 654; R. v. S.A.C., 2008 SCC 47, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 675; Reagan v. Murphy, 105 So.2d 210 (1958); Harwood Oil & Mining Co. v. Black, 124 So.2d 764 (1960); Alberta (Treasury Branches) v. M.N.R., [1996] 1 S.C.R. 963; First Vancouver Finance v. M.N.R., 2002 SCC 49, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 720; Royal Bank of Canada v. First Pioneer Investments Ltd., [1984] 2 S.C.R. 125; 518718 Alberta Ltd. v. Canadian Forest Products Ltd., 1998 ABQB 619, 63 Alta. L.R. (3d) 371; Caisse populaire Desjardins de Val-Brillant v. Blouin, 2003 SCC 31, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 666; A. L. Green Ltd. v. Michaud, [1975] C.A. 432; Banque Royale du Canada v. Béliveau, [1976] C.A. 539; Bandera Investment Co. v. Société immobilière du Québec, J.E. 98-1667, SOQUIJ AZ-98021774; Seigneur v. Immeubles Beneficial Ltée, [1994] R.J.Q. 1535; Banque Nationale du Canada v. Notre-Dame-du-Lac (Ville) (1990), 31 Q.A.C. 45;Banque de Montréal v. Walsh & Brais Inc., [1990] R.L. 119; D.I.M.S. Construction inc. (Trustee of) v. Quebec (Attorney General), 2005 SCC 52, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 564; Ching v. Jeffery (1885), 12 O.A.R. 432; Canadian Admiral Corp. v. L. F. Dommerich & Co., [1964] S.C.R. 238; Toronto-Dominion Bank v. Block Bros. Contractors Ltd. (1980), 118 D.L.R. (3d) 311; Board of Industrial Relations v. Avco Financial Services Realty Ltd., [1979] 2 S.C.R. 699; Dauphin Plains Credit Union Ltd. v. Xyloid Industries Ltd., [1980] 1 S.C.R. 1182; Cass. civ., 13 juillet 1942, J.C.P. 1943.II.2157, note Houin; Cass. com., 3 juin 1997, D. 1998.Jur.61, note François; Cass. com., 9 décembre 1997, Bull. civ. IV, n^{o} 327.

Statutes and Regulations Cited
Act respecting the special powers of legal persons, R.S.Q., c. P-16.
Civil Code of Lower Canada.
Civil Code of Québec, S.Q. 1991, c. 64, arts. 875, 974, 1250, 1260, 1261, 1637, 1641, 1643, 1671, 1672, 1673, 1680, 1681, 2111 para. 2, 2123, 2329, 2330, 2543, 2660, 2683, 2702, 2703, 2710, 2714.7.
Code of Civil Procedure, R.S.Q., c. C-25, art. 637.

Digitized by Google

Constitution Act, 1867, s. 91(2A), (3).
Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 111.
Employment Insurance Act, S.C. 1996, c. 23, s. 86.
Excise Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. E-15.
Federal Courts Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-7, ss. 36, 37.

Digitized by Google

Federal Law — Civil Law Harmonization Act, No. 1, S.C. 2001, c. 4, s. 8.
Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.), ss. 224(1), (1.3) "security interest", 227(4) [repl. 1998, c. 19, s. 226(1)], (4.1) [ad. idem].
Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, ss. 8.1, 8.2.
Personal Property Security Act, C.C.S.M., c. P35, s. 3(1).
Personal Property Security Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. P-7, s. 3(1).
Personal Property Security Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 359, s. 2(1).
Personal Property Security Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P.10, ss. 1 "security interest", "sûreté",2(a) "debenture", 40.
Personal Property Security Act, R.S.P.E.I. 1988, c. P-3.1, s. 3(1).
Personal Property Security Act, R.S.Y. 2002, c. 169, s. 2.
Personal Property Security Act, S.N.B. 1993, c. P-7.1, ss. 1 "security interest", 3(1), 41.
Personal Property Security Act, S.N.L. 1998, c. P-7.1, s. 4(1).
Personal Property Security Act, S.N.S. 1995-96, c. 13, s. 4(1).
Personal Property Security Act, S.N.W.T. 1994, c. 8, s. 2(1).
Personal Property Security Act, 1993, S.S. 1993, c. P-6.2, s. 3(1).
Regulation to amend the Regulation respecting the register of personal and movable real rights, O.C.
30-2009, (2009) 141 G.O. 2A, 17A.

Authors Cited

Austin, John. Lectures on Jurisprudence, or, The Philosophy of Positive Law, 5th ed. revised and edited by R. Campbell. London: J. Murray, 1885.
Bastarache, Michel, et al. The Law of Bilingual Interpretation. Markham, Ont.: LexisNexis Canada, 2008. Baudouin, Jean-Louis, et Pierre-Gabriel Jobin. Les obligations, 5e éd. Cowansville, Qué.: Yvon Blais, 1998.
Baudouin, Jean-Louis, et Pierre-Gabriel Jobin. Les obligations, 6e éd. par Pierre-Gabriel Jobin avec la collaboration de Nathalie Vézina. Cowansville, Qué.: Yvon Blais, 2005.
Bélanger, André. Essai d'une théorie juridique de la compensation en droit civil québécois. Cowansville, Qué.: Yvon Blais, 2004.
Black's Law Dictionary, 6th ed. St. Paul, Minn.: West Publishing Co., 1990, "encumbrance". Bonneau, Thierry. Droit bancaire, 7eéd. Paris: Montchrestien, 2007.
Brierley, John E. C. "Title Six: Certain Patrimonies by Appropriation — Articles 1256-1298", in Reform of the Civil Code, vol. 1-B, Property. Texts written for the Barreau du Québec and the Chambre des notaires du Québec. Translated by Susan Altschul. Montréal: Barreau du Québec, 1993.
Ciotola, Pierre, et Antoine Leduc. "Arrêt Val-Brillant: évolution ou régression de l'hypothèque mobilière avec dépossession, en droit civil québécois?", dans Sylvio Normand, dir., Mélanges offerts au professeur François Frenette: études portant sur le droit patrimonial. Québec: Presses de l'Université Laval, 2006, 361.
Claxton, John B. Studies on the Quebec Law of Trust. Toronto: Thomson Carswell, 2005.
Côté, Pierre-André. The Interpretation of Legislation in Canada, 3rd ed. Scarborough, Ont.: Carswell, 2000. Crawford, Bradley. The Law of Banking and Payment in Canada, vol. 2. Aurora, Ont.: Canada Law Book, 2008 (loose-leaf updated November 2008).

Digitized by Google

Cuerrier, Marc. "The Harmonization of Federal Tax Legislation", in The Harmonization of Federal Legislation with the Civil Law of the Province of Quebec and Canadian Bijuralism (Second publication), Booklet 7. Ottawa: Department of Justice, 2001.
Cuming, Ronald C. C., Catherine Walsh and Roderick J. Wood. Personal Property Security Law. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2005.
Davies, Paul L. Gower and Davies' Principles of Modern Company Law, 7th ed. London: Sweet & Maxwell, 2003.
Denault, Philippe. La recherche d'unité dans l'interprétation du droit privé fédéral: Cadre juridique et fragments du discours judiciaire. Montréal: Thémis, 2008.
Derham, S. Rory. The Law of Set-Off, 3rd ed. New York: Oxford University Press, 2003.
Deschamps, Michel. "Le nouveau régime québécois des sûretés sur des valeurs mobilières", conférence donnée le 19 mars 2009 à la Chaire du notariat de l'Université de Montréal (en ligne: www.chairedunotariat.qc.ca/fr/conferences/mois/032009/Deschamps.pdf).
Duboc, Guy. La compensation et les droits des tiers. Paris: L.G.D.J., 1989.
Dukelow, Daphne A. The Dictionary of Canadian Law, 3rd ed. Scarborough, Ont.: Thomson Carswell, 2004, "debenture", "encumbrance".
Garner, Bryan A. A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage, 2nd ed. New York: Oxford University Press, 1995, "debenture".
Ghestin, Jacques. Traité de droit civil— Les obligations: les effets du contrat, avec le concours de Marc Billiau. Paris: L.G.D.J., 1992.
Goode on Legal Problems of Credit and Security, 4th ed. by Louise Gullifer. London: Sweet & Maxwell, 2008.
Grottenthaler, Margaret E., and Philip J. Henderson. The Law of Financial Derivatives in Canada. Toronto: Thomson Carswell, 2003 (loose-leaf updated 2008, release 1).
Hohfeld, Wesley Newcomb. "Fundamental Legal Conceptions as Applied in Judicial Reasoning" (1917), 26
Yale L.J. 710.
Holland, Thomas Erskine. The Elements of Jurisprudence, 12th ed. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1916. Honorat, Adrienne. "Redressement et liquidation judiciaires", D. 1998.Somm.325.
Karim, Vincent. Les obligations, 2e éd., vol. 2, art. 1497 à 1707 C.c.Q. Montréal: Wilson & Lafleur, 2002. Lafond, Pierre-Claude. Précis de droit des biens, 2e éd. Montréal: Thémis, 2007.
Lamontagne, Denys-Claude. Biens et propriété, 6e éd. Cowansville, Qué.: Yvon Blais, 2009.
Lamoureux, Martin. "The Income Tax Act, the Excise Tax Act and the Term Interest: An Interesting Case for Harmonization", in The Harmonization of Federal Legislation with Quebec Civil Law and Canadian Bijuralism — Collection of Studies in Tax Law 2001. Montréal: Fiscal and Financial Planning Association/Department of Justice of Canada, 2002, 7:1.
Lluelles, Didier, et Benoît Moore. Droit des obligations. Montréal: Thémis, 2006.
Macdonald, Roderick A. "Reconceiving the Symbols of Property: Universalities, Interests and Other Heresies" (1994), 39 McGill L.J. 761.
Macdonald, Roderick A. "The Security Trust: Origins, Principles and Perspectives", in Hélène Jutras and Katia Opalka, eds.,Contemporary Utilisation of Non-Corporate Vehicles of Commerce. Meredith Lectures. Montréal: Faculty of Law, McGill

Digitized by Google

University, 1997, 155.
Martel, Paul. Business Corporations in Canada: Legal and Practical Aspects. Toronto: Thomson Carswell, 2005 (loose-leaf updated 2008, release 3).
Martin, Didier. "Contrats et obligations", Juris-classeur civil, art. 1289 à 1293, fasc. 108 à 111.
France: Éditions Techniques, 1995.
Martin, Didier. "Des techniques d'affectation en garantie des soldes de comptes bancaires", D.
1987.Chron.229.
Morel, André. "La rédaction de lois bilingues harmonisées avec le droit civil", dans The Harmonization of Federal Legislation with Quebec Civil Law and Canadian Bijuralism — Collection of studies. Ottawa: Department of Justice, 1997, 309.
Palmer, Kelly R. The Law of Set-Off in Canada. Aurora, Ont.: Canada Law Book, 1993.
Paton, George Whitecross. A Text-Book of Jurisprudence, 2nd ed. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1951.

Payette, Louis. Les sûretés réelles dans le Code civil du Québec, 2e éd. Cowansville, Qué.: Yvon Blais, 2001.

Pineau, Jean, Danielle Burman et Serge Gaudet. Théorie des obligations, 4e éd. par Jean Pineau et Serge Gaudet. Montréal: Thémis, 2001.
Pratte, Denise. "L'hypothèque avec dépossession de créances non représentées par un titre négociable ou le retour à une fiction accommodante", dans Sylvio Normand, dir., Mélanges offerts au professeur François Frenette: études portant sur le droit patrimonial. Québec: Presses de l'Université Laval, 2006, 421.

Québec. Assemblée nationale. Journal des débats, 1re sess., 38e lég., vol. 40, no 46, 11 juin 2008, Étude détaillée du projet de loi no 47, Loi sur le transfert de valeurs mobilières et d'autres actifs financiers,
p. 1.
Quebec Research Centre of Private and Comparative Law. Private Law Dictionary and Bilingual Lexicons: Obligations. Cowansville, Que.: Yvon Blais, 2003, "accessory real right".
Reid, Hubert. Dictionnaire de droit québécois et canadien avec table des abréviations et lexique anglais-français, 3e éd. Montréal: Wilson & Lafleur, 2004, "débenture".

Rives-Lange, Jean-Louis, et Monique Contamine-Raynaud. Droit bancaire, 6e éd. Paris: Dalloz, 1995. Salmond, John William. Jurisprudence, 10th ed. by Glanville L. Williams. London: Sweet and Maxwell, 1947.
Sullivan, Ruth. Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes, 5th ed. Markham, Ont.: LexisNexis, 2008.
Wood, Philip R. Set-Off and Netting, Derivatives, Clearing Systems, 2nd ed. London: Sweet & Maxwell, 2007.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Federal Court of Appeal (Desjardins, Létourneau and Pelletier JJ.A.), 2006 FCA 366, 361 N.R. 77 (sub nom. Minister of National Revenue v. Caisse populaire du Bon

Digitized by Google

Conseil), [2007] 3 C.T.C. 70, 2007 D.T.C. 5220, [2006] F.C.J. No. 1775 (QL), 2006 CarswellNat 5050, affirming a decision of Pinard J., 2005 FC 1563, [2007] 2 C.T.C. 44, 2007 D.T.C. 5664, [2005] F.C.J. No.
1933 (QL), affirming a decision by Mireille Tabib, Prothonotary, 2005 FC 731, 293 F.T.R. 166, 2006 D.T.C. 6385, [2005] F.C.J. No. 900 (QL). Appeal dismissed, LeBel and Deschamps JJ. dissenting.
Reynald Auger and Jean-Patrick Dallaire, for the appellant.
Pierre Cossette and Guy Laperrière, for the respondent.

The judgment of McLachlin C.J. and Binnie, Fish, Charron and Rothstein JJ. was delivered by [1] ROTHSTEIN J. — The primary issue in this appeal is whether the agreements between the Caisse populaire ("Caisse") and its customer, Camvrac Enterprises Inc. ("Camvrac"), give rise to a "security interest" within the meaning of that term in s. 224(1.3) of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.) ("ITA"). The definition of "security interest" in s. 224(1.3) ITA has also been incorporated by reference in s. 86(2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act, S.C. 1996, c. 23 ("EIA"). If the agreements between the Caisse and Camvrac do fall within the definition of "security interest" in s. 224(1.3) ITA, then the property of Camvrac that is subject to the security interest of the Caisse is deemed to be held in trust for the Crown under s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA because Camvrac did not remit to the Crown income tax and employment insurance premiums deducted at source by Camvrac.
[2] In my view, the agreements between the Caisse and Camvrac gave rise to a "security interest" for the purposes of s. 224(1.3) ITA. Camvrac's property subject to the security interest was property that was subject to the Crown's deemed trust. I would dismiss the appeal.

F s a [3] On September 18, 2000, the Caisse granted Camvrac a line of credit ct up to $277,000.
September 25, 2000, Camvrac deposited $200,000 with the Caisse in accordance with a "Term Savings Agreement" providing that the deposit would mature on October 16, 2005. The "Term Savings Agreement" sets out the terms of Camvrac's entitlement to the deposit and the Caisse's obligation to pay Camvrac
$200,000. The relevant portions of the "Term Savings Agreement" stated: [TRANSLATION]
Date of maturity: October 16, 2005

Digitized by Google

. . .
. . .

PROVISIONS GOVERNING THE PRINCIPAL
The member [Camvrac] agrees to make, on the date of acquisition, a deposit in the amount of $200,000 (hereinafter referred to as the "initial amount of deposit").
On the date of issue associated with the applicable term ("date of issue"), the initial amount of deposit and the interest then accrued on that amount shall be reinvested in the form of a deposit maturing on the maturity date associated with the applicable term ("date of maturity").
This deposit may neither be negotiated nor transferred. No amount in principal or interest shall be redeemable or payable before the date of maturity.
This deposit may be hypothecated or given as security only in favor of the issuing Caisse.

[4] The Caisse and Camvrac also entered into a "Security Given Through Savings Agreement"
The most relevant terms read:
[TRANSLATION]
RIGHT TO WITHHOLDING AND COMPENSATION
To secure the repayment of any sum in principal, interest, costs and accessories owed or to be owed the Caisse by:
☒ the Depositor [Camvrac]
. . .
. . .
. . .

under:
☒ (a) a line of credit agreement in the amount of $277,000.00 granted to him (her) on 2000-09-18;

☒ and under any debts or obligations, present or future, direct or indirect held by:
☒ the Depositor

(hereinafter referred to as "the Credit Contract[s]")

the Depositor undertakes to maintain and consents to the withholding by the Caisse, in the account(s) or on the certificate(s) of deposit mentioned below, of the amount of $200,000.00 distributed as follows:
Account or certificate of deposit Sum withheld by the Caisse identification
(for deposit certificates, state date issued amount and certificate number)
ALTERNATIVE TERM SAVINGS
5 YEARS IN THE AMOUNT OF
$200,000.00 $200,000.00
_____$____
. . .
. . .
. . .
. . .

Digitized by Google

The Caisse may withhold the sums shown above, . . . as long as all the amounts due under the Credit Contract(s) have not been fully repaid and, in the case of a line of credit, as long as it has not been cancelled. In cases of default as provided for below, there shall be compensation between the Credit Contract(s) and the certificate(s) of deposit or the amounts deposited defined above, as provided for in Section 7.

SAFEKEEPING OF CERTIFICATES

For the whole term of this agreement, the above-mentioned certificate(s) of deposit shall be kept by the Caisse.

HYPOTHEC

To further secure the repayment of any sum owed or to be owed under the Credit Contract(s), the Depositor hypothecates and pledges the above-mentioned certificate(s) of deposit and sums deposited, for an amount equal to the total amount of the sums withheld. The parties also agree that the clause shown on the certificate(s) of deposit stipulating that such certificate(s) are neither negotiable nor transferable shall be deemed cancelled, effective from the date of these presents.

DEFAULT

The Depositor shall be in default in any of the following cases:

if any of the commitments under the Credit Contract(s) or these presents is not fulfilled;

if the Depositor or the Borrower becomes insolvent or goes bankrupt, or if he(she) makes a proposal and it is rejected or annulled;

In the event of any default:

any sums owing under the Credit Contracts shall immediately become payable;

the Caisse may use the sums deposited or the certificate(s) of deposit contemplated herein, regardless of its(their) having matured or not, to compensate its claim under the Credit Contract(s);

The consequences of a default are for the exclusive benefit of the Caisse and the latter may waive them expressedly. The Caisse may, among others, without any prejudice to its rights, wait for the maturity date of the certificate(s) of deposit before exercising its rights as provided for in paragraphs (b) and (c) above.

RESERVE OF RECOURSES

. . . Furthermore, failure by the Caisse to avail itself of any of its rights in case of default shall not be interpreted as a waiver of such rights.

[5] Camvrac failed to pay the interest on its line of credit on November 25, 2000 and so was technically in default on that date. However, the Caisse took no steps as a result of the default and, according to the Caisse's account summaries, Camvrac's line of credit continued to accrue interest until January 31, 2001. On February 7, 2001, Camvrac made an assignment in bankruptcy. On February 21, 2001, the Caisse made the following note on its copy of the "Term Savings Agreement" : [TRANSLATION]"To be closed on 21/2/2001 to realize on security." Finally, on June 12, 2001, the Crown gave the Caisse notice to pay the amount owing to the Crown for unremitted employment insurance premiums and income tax deducted at source by Camvrac from the proceeds of the term deposit the Crown said was subject to its deemed trust.

Digitized by Google

[6] Prothonotary Tabib of the Federal Court, Justice Pinard of the Federal Court, and Justice Létourneau writing for the Federal Court of Appeal found in favour of the Crown: 2005 FC 731, 2006 D.T.C. 6385, aff'd 2005 FC 1563, 2007 D.T.C. 5664, aff'd 2006 FCA 366, 361 N.R. 77. The Caisse now appeals to this Court.

The Primary Issue

[7] Under the "Security Given Through Savings" agreement, the Caisse was entitled to effect compensation to reduce or eliminate Camvrac's indebtedness to it if Camvrac defaulted on its line of credit. The Caisse did so. The issue is whether the Crown is the beneficial owner of Camvrac's term deposit to the extent of the unremitted employment insurance premiums and income tax deducted by Camvrac at source as a result of the deemed trust created by s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA.

Analysis

The Definition of "Security Interest" in Section 224(1.3) of the Income Tax Act

[8] Parliament has defined "security interest" in s. 224(1.3) ITA. This definition provides that: "security interest" means any interest in property that secures payment or performance of an obligation and includes an interest created by or arising out of a debenture, mortgage, hypothec, lien, pledge, charge, deemed or actual trust, assignment or encumbrance of any kind whatever, however or whenever arising, created, deemed to arise or otherwise provided for;

[9] Section 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA create a deemed trust in favour of the Crown over property of the employer that has deducted income tax and employment insurance premiums at source. The deemed trust applies to property of the employer and property held by any secured creditor of the employer that, but for its security interest, would be property of the employer. The property is impressed with the deemed trust at the time the unremitted amounts were deducted at source by the employer. Section 227(4.1) ITA provides:

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (except sections 81.1 and 81.2 of that Act), any other enactment of Canada, any enactment of a province or any other law, where at any time an amount deemed by subsection (4) to be held by a person in trust for Her Majesty is not paid to Her Majesty in the manner and at the time provided under this Act, property of the person and property held by any secured creditor (as defined in subsection 224(1.3)) of that person that but for a security interest (as defined in subsection 224(1.3)) would be property of the person, equal in value to the amount so deemed to be held in trust is deemed to be held, from the time the amount was deducted or withheld by the person, separate and apart from the property of the person, in trust for Her Majesty whether or not the property is subject to such a security interest, and to form no part of the estate or property of the person from the time the amount was so deducted or withheld, whether or not the property has in fact been kept separate and apart from the estate or property of the person and whether or not the property is subject to such a security interest and is property beneficially owned by Her Majesty notwithstanding any security interest in such property and in the proceeds thereof, and the proceeds of such property shall be paid to the Receiver General in priority to all such security interests.

Section 86(2.1) EIA is to the same effect with respect to employment insurance premiums deducted by employers at source.

Digitized by Google

[10]While the definition of "security interest" is similar to legal terminology used in the personal property security and other legislation of the provinces, the definition in s. 224(1.3) ITA is the only relevant definition of "security interest" for the purposes of s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA. Both s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA, which incorporate by reference the definition of "security interest" from s. 224(1.3) ITA, apply

> [n]otwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (except sections 81.1 and 81.2 of that Act), any other enactment of Canada, any enactment of a province or any other law . . . . [s. 227(4.1) ITA]
>
> [n]otwithstanding the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (except sections 81.1 and 81.2 of that Act), any other enactment of Canada, any enactment of a province or any other law . . . . [s. 86(2.1) EIA]

This is a clear indication that the scope of the deemed trust created by these provisions over property of the tax debtor is to be defined in terms of the statutory definition of "security interest" provided by Parliament in s. 224(1.3) *ITA*and not as the term security interest may be used in provincial legislation.
[11]As Binnie J. recently noted in Saulnier v. Royal Bank of Canada, 2008 SCC 58, [2008] 3 S.C.R. 166, at para. 16, "[f]or particular purposes Parliament can and does create its own lexicon." Parliament's authority to define terms without reference to provincial law in areas of federal legislative competency was considered with respect to bankruptcy in Husky Oil Operations Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 453. Gonthier J. held for the majority, at para. 32, that the definition of terms such as "secured creditor", if defined under the Bankruptcy Act, must be interpreted in bankruptcy cases as defined by the federal Parliament, not the provincial legislatures. Provinces cannot affect how such terms are defined for purposes of the Bankruptcy Act.
[12]It is therefore open to Parliament to define a term in an area of its own legislative competence (Constitution Act, 1867, s. 91(2A)"Unemployment Insurance" and s. 91(3) "The raising of Money by any Mode or System of Taxation"), as it has done here, in order to ensure that there is a rule of general application across all of the provinces. Were provincial law used to define the meaning of "security interest" in s. 224(1.3) ITA and, in turn, the scope of the deemed trust created by s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA, uniformity could not be achieved. Rather, what constituted a "security interest" for the purposes of s. 224(1.3) ITA could be different from province to province. The Minister's ability to recover unremitted source deductions would then vary depending on an employer's location.
[13]Further, if provincial law were used to define the meaning of a"security interest" under s. 224(1.3) ITA, a change in the provincial law of property security would affect the scope of the deemed trust created by s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA from time to time. This level of uncertainty cannot have been what Parliament intended with the words"any interest in property that secures payment or performance of an obligation"in s. 224(1.3) ITA. This definition is incorporated by reference in s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA which create the deemed trust in favour of the Crown "[n]otwithstanding . . . any enactment of a province".
[14]In this case, Parliament has chosen an expansive definition of"security interest" in s. 224(1.3) ITA in order to enable maximum recovery by the Crown under its deemed trust for unremitted income tax and employment insurance premiums deducted at source by employers. Parliament did so, in part, in response to this Court's decision in Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 411, which interpreted the former deemed trust provisions in the ITA narrowly.

Digitized by Google

[15]In order to constitute a security interest for the purposes of s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA, the creditor must hold "any interest in property that secures payment or performance of an obligation". The definition of "security interest" in s. 224(1.3) ITA does not require that the agreement between the creditor and debtor take any particular form, nor is any particular form expressly excluded. So long as the creditor's interest in the debtor's property secures payment or performance of an obligation, there is a "security interest" within the meaning of this section. While Parliament has provided a list of "included" examples, these examples do not diminish the broad scope of the words "any interest in property": see Dagg v. Canada (Minister of Finance), [1997] 2 S.C.R. 403, at para. 68, and R. Sullivan, Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes (5th ed. 2008), at pp. 61-68.

[16]I agree with my colleague that the common linguistic meaning of the defined term "security interest" in s. 224(1.3) ITA is the English term "security interest". A "security interest" is defined as any interest in property or "droit sur un bien" (right over property) that secures the performance of an obligation.

[17] For the reasons that follow, I conclude that the definition of"security interest" in s. 224(1.3) ITA applies to the facts before this Court.

The Relationship Between Contractual Compensation or Set-Off and a Security Interest

[18]Compensation and set-off are terms of art which I do not purport to define exhaustively in these reasons. Compensation in Quebec is similar to set-off in the common law provinces. There are a number of circumstances giving rise to compensation or set-off. There are also different kinds of compensation and set-off. "Legal compensation" is defined in arts. 1672 ff. of the Civil Code of Québec, S.Q. 1991, c. 64 ("C.C.Q."). Articles 1672 and 1673 state in part that:

1672. Where two persons are reciprocally debtor and creditor of each other, the debts for which they are liable are extinguished by compensation, up to the amount of the lesser debt.

1673. Compensation is effected by operation of law upon the coexistence of debts that are certain, liquid and exigible and the object of both of which is a sum of money or a certain quantity of fungible property identical in kind.

[19]In the common law provinces, "legal set-off" is similarly statutorily defined. In the Ontario Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, for example, "legal set-off" is defined in s. 111:

111. — (1) In an action for payment of a debt, the defendant may, by way of defence, claim the right to set off against the plaintiff's claim a debt owed by the plaintiff to the defendant.

Mutual debts may be set off against each other even if they are of a different nature.

Where, on a defence of set off, a larger sum is found to be due from the plaintiff to the defendant than is found to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff, the defendant is entitled to judgment for the balance.

[20]"Equitable set-off" was compared and contrasted with legal set-off by Wilson J. in Holt v. Telford, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 193. Wilson J. said of equitable set-off, at pp. 205-6:

The distinction between set-off at law and set-off in equity was canvassed by the

Digitized by Google

British Columbia Court of Appeal in C.I.B.C. v. Tuckerr Indust. Inc., supra, at p. 605:
Such a set-off has its origin in equity and does not rest on the statute of 1728. It can apply where mutuality is lost or never existed. It can apply where the cross obligations are not debts.
Equitable set-off, like legal set-off, is also raised by way of cross-claim (see Holt, at pp. 212-13).
[21]There may be some differences between legal compensation (in Quebec) and legal and equitable set-off (in the common law provinces). However, the differences between legal compensation and legal and equitable set-off do not arise in this case because this Court is considering a right to compensation conferred on the Caisse by a contract between the Caisse and Camvrac (i.e. the "Security Given Through Savings" agreement). The Caisse and my colleague use the term "compensation conventionnelle". I translate "compensation conventionnelle" as "contractual compensation".
[22]Contractual compensation achieves a similar goal to legal compensation or legal or equitable set-off, the discharge of mutual debts. However, contractual compensation achieves this goal through mutual consent. It provides the contracting parties with a self-help remedy that avoids the technical requirements of legal compensation or legal or equitable set-off : see J.-L. Baudouin and P.-G. Jobin, Les obligations (5th ed. 1998), at para. 981, and K. R. Palmer, The Law of Set-Off in Canada (1993), at pp. 263-
Both a contract providing for a right of compensation in Quebec and a contract providing for a right of set- off in the common law provinces are to be interpreted by a court in a manner that gives effect to the intentions of the parties as reflected in the words of the contract.
[23]I do not think it is correct to make a blanket determination that a contractual right to compensation or a contractual right to set-off can never be associated with a "security interest" or that they are always associated with a "security interest". Whether a contract providing for a right to compensation or a right to set-off also gives rise to a "security interest"within the meaning of s. 224(1.3) ITA requires that the terms of the contract be carefully considered to determine whether the parties intended to confer on one party or the other "any interest in property [of the other party] that secures payment or performance of an obligation".
[24]In The Law of Set-Off (3rd ed. 2003), Professor S. R. Derham argues, I think persuasively, that some contracts including a right of set-off (or, in this case, contracts including a right of compensation) should be said also to involve security. As an example of a set-off agreement that also contains a security interest, Professor Derham describes a situation very similar to the one before this Court in the following words, at para. 16.82:
. . . a bank as a condition to the grant of a facility requires that a deposit be made with it which the depositor is not permitted to access until all indebtedness under the facility has been paid, and the parties agree that the bank may appropriate the deposit in discharge of the debt in the event of default in payment. The essence of the arrangement is that the depositor's property, in the form of the account in credit, is to function as a security. Indeed, in the case of a charge-back in which express words of charge are used, a contractual set-off is the very remedy that would be contemplated . . . . [Emphasis added.]
[25]The essence of contractual compensation or set-off is that the terms of the contract reflect the mutual intention of the parties: see Derham, at para. 16.86. If their mutual intention is to create a security interest to ensure that the right of compensation or set-off will be an effective remedy, there is no reason to think that a security interest does not exist simply because the parties have chosen one mechanism for realizing on the security, rather than another. What must be considered is the substance of the agreement. If the substance of the agreement demonstrates that the parties intended an interest in property to secure an indebtedness, then a security interest exists within the meaning of s. 224(1.3) ITA.

Digitized by Google

Application of the Deemed Trust Provisions

[26]In this case, the Caisse says that its contractual right to effect compensation with Camvrac is not a "security interest" within the meaning of s. 224(1.3) ITA. It says that this contractual right did not confer on it an interest in Camvrac's property with the intention of securing the line of credit that it extended to Camvrac. Rather, the Caisse says that the contractual right allowed it simply to extinguish its own indebtedness to Camvrac.

[27]The Crown submits that the definition of "security interest" in s. 224(1.3) ITA is broad enough to include the Caisse's contractual right to effect compensation contained in the "Security Given Through Savings"agreement between the Caisse and Camvrac. It says that the deemed trust created by s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA protected its interest in the proceeds of Camvrac's term deposit because the property of Camvrac subject to the Caisse's security interest is beneficially owned by the Crown under its deemed trust to the extent of the unremitted source deductions.

[28]The issue then is whether the Caisse and Camvrac intended the agreements, which included the Caisse's right to effect compensation, to create a "security interest" within the meaning of s. 224(1.3) ITA. In my view, they did.

[29]The relevant facts are these. Camvrac made a deposit of $200,000 with the Caisse. Camvrac and the Caisse entered into a "Term Savings Agreement" under which Camvrac and the Caisse agreed that:

Camvrac's deposit would be for a term of five years;

Camvrac could not negotiate or transfer the deposit;

the term deposit could be hypothecated or given as security, but only in favour of the Caisse.

Camvrac and the Caisse also agreed to enter into the "Security Given Through Savings" agreement. Under this agreement, Camvrac and the Caisse agreed that:

"To secure repayment of any sum . . . owed or to be owed the Caisse" by Camvrac under its line of credit that:

Camvrac would maintain a deposit of $200,000;

Camvrac consented to the Caisse withholding repayment of the sum of $200,000; as long as the line of credit was still outstanding.

In the event of default, there would be compensation between the line of credit and the deposit of $200,000.

These agreements expressly conferred on the Caisse an interest in the property of Camvrac (i.e. Camvrac's deposit) to secure repayment of Camvrac's indebtedness to the Caisse.

[30]It was the five-year term and the maintenance and retention of the $200,000 deposit, as well as Camvrac's agreement not to transfer or negotiate the deposit and that the deposit could only be used as security with the Caisse, that created the Caisse's interest in Camvrac's property for the purposes of s. 224(1.3) ITA. In the absence of these encumbrances on Camvrac's deposit, Camvrac could have withdrawn the deposit at any time. Should it have done so and still been indebted to the Caisse, the Caisse's right to compensation would be ineffective because it would not be indebted to Camvrac at the time the Caisse had to resort to the remedy of compensation. However, in this case the terms of the agreements provided that Camvrac agreed to the encumbrances on its deposit of $200,000 so that the Caisse would continuously be indebted to Camvrac and that on default there would be effective compensation. It is the fact that the agreements secured the Caisse's right to effective compensation by conferring on the Caisse an interest in Camvrac's property that created a "security interest" for the purposes of s. 224(1.3) ITA.

Digitized by Google

[31]I note here, from the words of the agreements, that the Caisse itself conceived of its agreements with Camvrac as creating "security" for the line of credit. The "Term Savings Agreement" provided that the term deposit"may be hypothecated or given as security only in favor of the issuing Caisse" (emphasis added). In the "Security Given Through Savings" agreement, it was Camvrac's term deposit which was used "[t]o secure the repayment" of the line of credit (emphasis added). The hypothecation provision contained in the "Security Given Through Savings" agreement was "[t]o further secure the repayment" (emphasis added). Thus, even in the absence of hypothecation, the agreements granted the Caisse rights over Camvrac's deposit to ensure an effective compensation remedy. The rights and obligations ensuring an effective compensation remedy were the Caisse's primary security because the hypothecation was viewed as "further" security.

[32] While the mechanism by which the Caisse would realize on its security was compensation, that mechanism in no way detracts from the fact that the deposit was encumbered by the conditions agreed to by Camvrac and imposed by the Caisse in order to ensure that the remedy of compensation would be effective. Nor does the fact that the Caisse could realize on its security by means of a book entry diminish the fact that the deposit secured Camvrac's obligation to the Caisse. In the absence of the restrictions imposed by the Caisse, Camvrac's right to repayment of its deposit of $200,000 could have been encumbered or transferred to a third party as security: see arts. 1637 and 2710*C.C.Q.* and B. Crawford, The Law of Banking and Payment in Canada(loose-leaf), vol. 2, at § 9:30.20. Just because a creditor holding a security interest (the Caisse) is also the debtor (the Caisse owes the $200,000 deposited by Camvrac to Camvrac) does not make it any less of a security interest for the purposes of s. 224(1.3) ITA.

[33]The situation in this case is in contrast to one in which a bank has what may be a standard term in a deposit agreement that any credit in the customer's account may be appropriated by the bank in discharge of the customer's potential indebtedness to the bank. In that case, there is no obligation on the customer to maintain a specific sum or, indeed, any amount deposited in the account at all as security for a loan that may or may not exist. There is no continuous right in the customer's property to protect the bank against default. The customer may withdraw any or all of the amounts in the account at any time. No specific property secures repayment. In these circumstances, based on this type of deposit agreement, the customer's property— its right to claim a deposit — cannot be said to secure its indebtedness to the bank. Unlike the case before this Court, this is a simple contractual right to set-off or compensation without attendant security.

Responses to Deschamps J.

[34]In my view, the difference in the results reached by Deschamps J. and myself in this case stems from the approaches we have taken. If I understand my colleague's approach correctly, she focusses on the remedy of compensation to conclude it is not a security interest. Under my approach, it is necessary to consider all of the relevant terms of the agreements between Camvrac and the Caisse and not solely the provisions entitling the Caisse to the remedy of compensation. In my view, the issue is not whether compensation alone is viewed as a security interest. It is whether the agreements between the parties — including the Caisse's contractual right to effect compensation —created a "security interest" to ensure that the remedy of compensation would be effective.

Digitized by Google

[35]Deschamps J. says that a creditor with a right to effect compensation or set-off attains a goal analogous to a security interest. However, in her view, creditors who exercise their right to compensation or set-off are not enforcing a security by realizing on the debtor's property, but are instead just extinguishing mutual obligations.

[36] I agree with her that compensation or set-off is the extinguishment of mutual obligations. However, mutual obligations must exist for compensation to be an effective remedy. If a debtor can, at its own option, eliminate the creditor's liability to it (by withdrawing its deposit), the creditor may have a right of compensation or set-off, but it may not be effective. It is the encumbrances placed on the debtor's claim against the creditor that ensure that the creditor will remain liable to the debtor and, in this way, ensure an effective compensation remedy.

[37]Deschamps J. also notes that compensation is not specifically enumerated in s. 224(1.3) ITA and that this is important for two reasons. First, she relies on academic authorities who assert that a contractual right to set-off cannot create a security interest because the right does not confer on the creditor an interest in the debtor's property. Second, she says that compensation would have to be specifically enumerated in s. 224(1.3) ITA because compensation and set-off are not included in the provincial statutes respecting personal property security. Legal compensation is not included in the division relating to hypothecs in the Civil Code of Québec. She also says that set-off is excluded from the personal property security legislation of the common law provinces which all include definitions of security interest that are similar to that in s. 224(1.3) ITA. In light of the exclusion of contractual compensation and contractual set-off from provincial legislation dealing with security interests over property and the fact that contractual compensation does not confer on the creditor an interest in the debtor's property, its absence from the list of examples of security interests provided in s. 224(1.3) ITA is evidence that Parliament did not intend to include contractual compensation or contractual set-off within its definition of "security interest".

[38]With respect to my colleague's reliance on academic authorities who say that a contractual right to set-off does not confer on a creditor an interest in property, I understand these authorities differently than my colleague. Professor Derham explains that a contract containing a right to set-off like the one at issue in this case can also confer on a creditor an interest in a debtor's property: see Derham, at para. 16.82. However, the authors upon whom Deschamps J. relies do not address the precise issue before this Court. For example, R. C. C. Cuming, C. Walsh and R. J. Wood say, in Personal Property Security Law (2005):

Set-off, whether contractual or procedural, does not involve a security interest because neither party to the set-off acquires a property interest. [p. 87]

And Professor R. M. Goode says, in Goode on Legal Problems of Credit and Security (4th ed. 2008):

The party asserting it [the right of set-off] never acquires rights in the other's monetary claim at all; he merely asserts a countervailing claim which operates in pro tanto extinction of his monetary liability. [para. 1-19]

However, in this case, the Caisse has acquired rights in Camvrac's property by the encumbrances placed on Camvrac's deposit. Those rights ensured that Camvrac's claim against the Caisse for its deposit would continuously exist in order to ensure that the compensation remedy would be effective. The P. Wood quote relied upon by Deschamps J. states:

Digitized by Google

[With respect to set-off] . . . a depositor does not grant a property right over the depositor's ownership of the deposit claim back to the bank to secure a loan owed by the depositor to the bank.

(Set-Off and Netting, Derivatives, Clearing Systems (2nd ed. 2007), at para. 1-008)

Yet, in this case, Camvrac did grant the Caisse a continuous interest in its deposit.

[39]It appears these authors were considering a bare right to contractual set-off such as the standard form deposit agreement I have discussed above. I believe these authors are saying that the remedy of set-off results in no property of the debtor coming in the hands of the creditor as the result of a set-off. All that occurs is the extinguishment of mutual debts. These authors are not addressing the period of time before set-off takes place where, as in this case, the creditor has taken steps to place restrictions on the debtor's property to ensure that the creditor continuously remains liable to the debtor so that the set-off remedy will be effective.

[40]I agree with my colleague that legal compensation does not appear grouped with hypothecs in the Civil Code of Québec. However, the issue is not whether compensation is a security interest. The fact that the terms"contractual compensation" or "contractual set-off" do not specifically appear as examples of the defined term "security interest" in s. 224(1.3) *ITA*does not mean that an agreement which provides for compensation, but which also conforms to the statutory definition of a "security interest" in s. 224(1.3) *ITA*is to be exempted from the purview of this definition. The list is non-exhaustive. Even when the remedial mechanism is compensation, so long as an agreement confers on a creditor an interest in property that secures the payment or performance of an obligation through compensation, the agreement will constitute a "security interest" within the meaning of s. 224(1.3) ITA.

[41]Although it is unnecessary for me to decide this point in order to resolve the issues in this appeal, I would respectfully disagree with my colleague that any agreement that provides for contractual set- off is categorically excluded from the personal property security legislation of the common law provinces. In the common law provinces, the approach to personal property security arrangements is functional, rather than formal. For example, s. 3(1) of Alberta's Personal Property Security Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. P-7, states that it applies to every transaction that in substance creates a security interest, without regard to its form and without regard to the person who has title to the collateral, and without limiting the generality of clause (a), a chattel mortgage, conditional sale, floating charge, pledge, trust indenture, trust receipt, assignment, consignment, lease, trust and transfer of chattel paper where they secure payment or performance of an obligation.

See also the personal property security acts of the other provinces and territories: s. 3(1) in New Brunswick (S.N.B. 1993, c. P-7.1), Prince Edward Island (R.S.P.E.I. 1988, c. P-3.1), Manitoba (C.C.S.M., c. P35) and Saskatchewan (S.S. 1993, c. P-6.2); s. 2(1) in British Columbia (R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 359), Northwest Territories and Nunavut (both S.N.W.T. 1994, c. 8); s. 4(1) in Nova Scotia (S.N.S. 1995-96, c. 13) and Newfoundland and Labrador (S.N.L. 1998, c. P-7.1); s. 2(a) in Ontario (R.S.O. 1990, c. P.10); and s. 2 in Yukon (R.S.Y. 2002, c. 169).

[42]Given the functional approach to personal property security arrangements in these statutes, it is difficult for me to see how any transaction that confers an interest on a creditor in a debtor's property to secure an obligation could be categorically excluded unless that type of transaction has been defined and expressly excluded by the legislation itself. To my knowledge, an agreement that provides for security together with a right of set-off to realize on that security is not expressly excluded in any of the common law provincial personal property security statutes. What is required by the common law provincial personal property security statutes is a decision about whether a particular contract or agreement in a given case functions as a security interest.

Digitized by Google

[43]Deschamps J. says the Caisse did not rely on its hypothec. She says the mere obligation of Camvrac to maintain its deposit and the Caisse's right to withhold repayment of the deposit do not create the real right necessary for a "security interest". She distinguishes between "droit de rétention", which she says only applies to corporeal property and which has some of the attributes of a real right and a "droit de retenue", which applies to retention of amounts of money and which has no attributes of a real right and corresponds to compensation.

[44]At both civil and common law, a claim, like a deposit, may be charged with a real right or become the subject of a creditor's interest in property. For example, accounts receivable are often assigned to lending institutions as security for loans. Indeed, a deposit in a bank or caisse is an account receivable in favour of the customer. In the case of term deposits, in the absence of restrictions imposed by the lending institution, a term deposit may be assigned just like other receivables. An assignee has an interest in or a real right over the account receivable, that is an encumbrance on the claim of the creditor to the proceeds of the receivables whether from debtor customers or from a debtor bank or caisse.

[45]In s. 224(1.3) ITA, the word "interest" in English is rendered as "droit" or right in French. As Marc Cuerrier notes in "The Harmonization of Federal Tax Legislation" (section 2.3), booklet 7 published in The Harmonization of Federal Legislation with the Civil Law of the Province of Quebec and Canadian Bijuralism (2001), this terminological difference in the English and French reflects differences in the two major legal systems of Canada. While in the common law it is possible to speak independently of both rights and interests in property, only rights are recognized in the civil law. As Martin Lamoureux notes in his article "The Income Tax Act, the Excise Tax Act and the Term Interest: An Interesting Case for Harmonization" published in The Harmonization of Federal Legislation with Quebec Civil Law and Canadian Bijuralism — Collection of Studies in Tax Law 2001 (2002), 7.1, the term "droit"in civil law corresponds most to the term "interest" in common law.

[46]In this case, the issue is not whether the Caisse's interest in or right over Camvrac's property is one that conforms with the property security legislation of the provinces. This is because the deemed trust created by s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA, which incorporate by reference the definition of "security interest" in s. 224(1.3) ITA, applies"[n]otwithstanding . . . any enactment of a province" (see also DaimlerChrysler Financial Services (debis) Canada Inc. v. Mega Pets Ltd., 2002 BCCA 242, 212 D.L.R. (4th) 41, at para. 31). However, it is of note that the agreements between the Caisse and Camvrac did conform to the requirements for a movable hypothec with delivery established by this Court in Caisse populaire Desjardins de Val-Brillant v. Blouin, 2003 SCC 31, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 666, so as to constitute a real right under the Civil Code of Québec.

[47]In the Civil Code of Québec, a hypothec is defined as a real right (art. 2660 C.C.Q.). As my colleague notes, a claim, like an account receivable, can be hypothecated with or without delivery (art. 2710 C.C.Q.). In Val-Brillant, Gonthier J., for the majority, considered what was necessary for a movable hypothec with delivery over a non-negotiable claim, like the one at issue in this case. He held at para. 28 that:

Digitized by Google

A movable hypothec with delivery on a non-negotiable claim is therefore validly granted and published [per arts. 2702 and 2703 C.C.Q.] where (i) the debtor has transferred effective control of the claim to the creditor by giving the creditor the right to collect directly in the event of default, without further authorization by the debtor; (ii) where the claim is evidenced by a non-negotiable title which it is possible to hand over, such title has been handed over to the creditor; and (iii) the necessary steps have been taken so that the hypothec may be set up against the debtor of the claim in accordance with art. 1641 C.C.Q.

[48]In this case, the agreements between the Caisse and Camvrac met these criteria. First, the Caisse had effective control over Camvrac's claim. The five-year term and the conditions in the "Security Given Through Savings" agreement ensured that the Caisse had effective control over Camvrac's deposit and that, in the event of default, the Caisse could effect compensation between the line of credit and Camvrac's deposit without further authorization from Camvrac. Second, it is not clear on the record whether a certificate of deposit was or was not issued in this case. Both clause 2 of the "Security Given Through Savings" agreement and the fact that the Caisse noted on its copy of the "Term Savings Agreement" that it had been [TRANSLATION] "To be closed on 21/2/2001 to realize on security" suggest that, if a certificate of deposit was issued, it was held by the Caisse. However, nothing turns on whether Camvrac's term deposit was evidenced by a certificate of deposit. Gonthier J.'s second criteria for a movable hypothec with delivery over a non-negotiable claim only applies where a non-negotiable title exists. Where it does not, the second criteria is not applicable. Third, a movable hypothec with delivery is set up against the account debtor and all other claimants by taking the necessary steps under art. 1641 C.C.Q. Under art. 1641 C.C.Q., the assignment may be set up against the account debtor and other claimants as soon as the account debtor has acquiesced in it. In this case, in respect of Camvrac's deposit, the Caisse is the account debtor as well as the assignee. Obviously, the Caisse as account debtor acquiesced in the assignment of its debt to itself as assignee. In my view, because the agreements between the Caisse and Camvrac met the criteria of a movable hypothec with delivery on a non-negotiable claim and because a hypothec is defined as a real right in the Civil Code of Québec, the Caisse must have held a real right over Camvrac's property.

[49]As my colleague notes at para. 129, art. 2702 C.C.Q. has been amended and these amendments have come into force since this case was heard. It is not necessary to embark upon an interpretation of these amendments. However, what they point out is that, should provincial law form the basis for defining a "security interest" under s. 224(1.3) ITA, the scope of the deemed trust created by s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) *EIA*could change from time to time with changes to provincial property security law. In my view, this result is not contemplated by the words of ss. 224(1.3) and 227(4.1) ITA, and s. 86(2.1) EIA.

[50]Deschamps J. says that Camvrac's obligation to maintain the deposit and the Caisse's right to withhold repayment "were of residual application" only (para. 120). During the term of the deposit, the Caisse was not required to return the deposit until the term had expired.

[51]Even if the obligation to maintain and the right to retain are residual and apply only after the five-year term of the deposit has expired, they are nonetheless encumbrances that could affect Camvrac's use of its property. Indeed, as Deschamps J. says, they are mechanisms provided "to ensure that legal or conventional compensation could be effected" (para. 120). That is precisely the point. The agreements entered into by Camvrac and the Caisse created rights and obligations, including the Caisse's right of retention and Camvrac's obligation to maintain the deposit, to ensure that the Caisse would remain liable to Camvrac if the Caisse had to resort to compensation as a remedy.

Digitized by Google

[52]Finally, Deschamps J. says that the Caisse's right of retention of Camvrac's $200,000 deposit does not confer on the Caisse a real right to Camvrac's term deposit. She says at para. 121:

The most important thing to bear in mind is that none of the clauses . . . created a real right or [a] security interest . . . . A term is a deadline for repayment. The right to deduct is simply the right of a creditor not to perform an obligation to pay as long as a debt is owed to him or her. It is, in a way, an extension granted for repayment. As for the obligation to maintain, it is clearly an undertaking by one person to another to perform an obligation. The limit on the right to transfer, hypothecate or negotiate constitutes an obligation "not to do".

[53]She further says, at para. 124, that my approach may conflict with how negative pledges are treated under the functional approach to personal property security in the common law provinces. She quotes Professors Cuming, Walsh and Wood who say, at p. 86:

A "negative pledge" clause or negative covenant in a loan agreement under which the borrower covenants not to encumber or dispose of some or all of her personal property until the loan is repaid does not create a security interest since, standing alone, the covenant does not create an interest in the property of the borrower. A negative pledge clause in a security agreement cannot prevent the covenantor from giving another effective security interest in the collateral. [Emphasis added.]

[54]I believe her paras. 121 and 124 highlight the difference between us. I would agree with my colleague that no security interest has been created if a contractual right to compensation only means that, should the debtor default, the creditor may retain amounts owed to the debtor, if any. I would also agree that a negative pledge "standing alone" does not "prevent the covenantor from giving another effective security interest in collateral".

[55]However, much more was occurring here. From the outset, the Caisse required that Camvrac make a term deposit subject to encumbrances in order to ensure that the Caisse would remain liable to Camvrac, in the event that the Caisse had to resort to the remedy of compensation as a result of default. The right of retention, the obligation to maintain and Camvrac's pledge not to hypothecate or use its term deposit as security in favour of anyone besides the Caisse were three of a series of encumbrances that created the Caisse's interest in or right over Camvrac's property to ensure that compensation would be an effective remedy.

To Which of the Unremitted Source Deductions Did the Deemed Trust Apply?

[56]Having concluded that the agreements between the Caisse and Camvrac created a "security interest" within the meaning of s. 224(1.3) ITA, it is now necessary to determine whether the deemed trust covered all unremitted source deductions that the Crown sought from the Caisse.

[57]On the facts of this case, some of the unremitted employment insurance premiums and income tax deducted was owed by Camvrac to the Crown before Camvrac entered into the "Term Savings Agreement" with the Caisse. There is some question, then, in this case, whether the deemed trust provisions in s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA can confer beneficial ownership on the Crown over Camvrac's after- acquired property (i.e. the term deposit).

Digitized by Google

[58]A second issue is at what point the Caisse realized on its security in the term deposit by effecting compensation. The Caisse says that the relevant date was the date of default, November 25, 2000. The Crown says that the relevant date was February 21, 2001. Under s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA, Camvrac's property is impressed with the Crown's deemed trust from the time income tax and employment insurance premiums were deducted at source by Camvrac. The date at which the Caisse effected compensation is important because unremitted employment insurance premiums and income tax were deducted by Camvrac until the end of January 2001. If the Caisse is correct, as of November 25, 2000 the Crown would have no entitlement to the proceeds of the term deposit for source deductions that were deducted after November 25, 2000 since the term deposit would no longer have been the property of Camvrac once compensation had been effected and could not be subject to the deemed trust created by s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA. If the Crown is correct, then the proceeds would be subject to the deemed trust for the full amount of the unremitted source deductions to February 21, 2001 (as the date when compensation was effected by the Caisse).

[59]With respect to whether the deemed trust provisions apply to after-acquired property, this Court interpreted s. 227(4.1) ITA broadly in First Vancouver Finance v. M.N.R., 2002 SCC 49, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 720, as applying to both property in the hands of the tax debtor and after-acquired property. In First Vancouver, Iacobucci J. held for the Court, at para. 38, that based on the plain language of ss. 227(4) and 227(4.1) as supported by the purpose of the provisions and intentions of Parliament, the deemed trust created by these sections encompasses property which comes into the hands of the tax debtor after the trust arises.

The trust created by s. 227(4.1) ITA and s. 86(2.1) EIA is deemed to be in effect "at any time". It does not matter that the term deposit became the property of Camvrac only after some of the employment insurance premiums and income tax deductions went unremitted since the deemed trust "encompasses property which comes into the hands of the tax debtor after the trust arises".The proceeds of Camvrac's term deposit are therefore available to the Crown to discharge all of the outstanding employment insurance premiums and income tax deducted at source by Camvrac, whether the unremitted deductions occurred before or after Camvrac entered into the "Term Savings Agreement" and until the date that the Caisse realized on its security.

[60]As to the date on which the Caisse exercised its right to compensation, I agree with the Crown for two reasons. First, February 21, 2001 is the date on which the Caisse itself noted on its copy of the "Term Savings Agreement": [TRANSLATION] "To be closed on 21/2/2001 to realize on security." This is evidence that the Caisse believed that compensation was effected on that date and not earlier. Second, the Caisse, according to its account records, continued to charge interest on the line of credit until January 31, 2001 despite the fact that Camvrac had defaulted on November 25, 2000 by failing to make its interest payment to the Caisse due on that date. The "Security Given Through Savings" agreement stated that:

DEFAULT

. .

.

Digitized by Google

ve benefit of the Caisse and the latter may waive them expressedly. The Caisse may, among others, without any prejudice to its rights, wait for the maturity date of the certificate(s) of deposit before exercising its rights as provided for in paragraphs (b) and (c) above.

RESERVE OF RECOURSES

The consequences of a default are for the exclusi

Digitized by Google

. . . Furthermore, failure by the Caisse to avail itself of any of its rights in case of default shall not be interpreted as a waiver of such rights.

[61]These terms acknowledged that the Caisse had a discretion as to the timing of when compensation would be effected. The Caisse was entitled, as it did here, not to effect compensation immediately upon default, but instead could choose to allow the line of credit to remain open. This is what the Caisse did. It did not effect compensation until February 21, 2001. The Caisse is liable to pay to the Crown the amounts for employment insurance premiums and income tax deducted at source by Camvrac up to, and including, any deductions not remitted as of February 21, 2001.

Interest Calculation

[62]This issue may be disposed of quickly. The Caisse says that if it is liable to the Crown, the law of Quebec with respect to pre-judgment interest rather than ss. 36(2) and 37(2) of the Federal Courts Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-7, applies. I cannot agree with the Caisse. Markevich v. Canada, 2003 SCC 9, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 94, is dispositive of the issue. Indebtedness under the ITA and EIA gives rise to a cause of action outside of a particular province and so the rules respecting pre-judgment interest in ss. 36(2) and 37(2) of the Federal Courts Act apply: see Markevich, at paras. 39-40. The cause of action was that of the Crown against the Caisse for unremitted source deductions pursuant to its deemed trust which arose because the Caisse appropriated funds belonging to Camvrac which were impressed with the Crown's deemed trust.

Conclusion

[63]For these reasons, I find that the terms of the "Term Savings Agreement" and the "Security Given Through Savings" agreement between the Caisse and Camvrac created a "security interest" within the meaning of s. 224(1.3) ITA. The Caisse was liable to the Crown for the unremitted employment insurance premiums and income tax deducted at source by Camvrac up to and including February 21, 2001. Interest is calculated in accordance with ss. 36(2) and 37(2) of the Federal Courts Act from February 21, 2001, when the Caisse effected compensation, to the date of payment.

[64]The appeal should be dismissed with costs in this Court only.

English version of the reasons of LeBel and Deschamps JJ. delivered by [65]DESCHAMPS J.(dissenting) — The Court is once again being asked to consider the scope of the rights resulting from the deemed trust created by Parliament to ensure that employers remit income tax and employment insurance premiums deducted from their employees' salaries to the Receiver General for Canada. For the reasons that follow, I find that compensation is not a "security interest" within the meaning of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.) ("ITA"),and the Employment Insurance Act, 1996, c. 23 ("EIA"),and that the appellant's contractual right may be set up against the respondent because the respondent cannot have more rights than the employer itself had. I would accordingly allow the appeal and remand the case to the trial judge to establish the amount of the deductions that had not been remitted at the time the compensation agreement was signed.

Iss ue
s

Digitized by Google

[66]The main issue in this appeal concerns the effect of the deemed trust provided for in the ITA and the EIA on assets subject to compensation under an agreement between the Caisse populaire Desjardins de Bon Conseil, to whose rights the appellant ("Caisse") has succeeded, and the employer, Camvrac Enterprises Inc. ("Camvrac"). The Caisse raises an additional issue related to the calculation of interest. It submits that as a result of ss. 36(1) and 37(1) of the Federal Courts Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-7, interest should have been calculated in accordance with the rule that applies in Quebec. The respondent contends that ss. 36(2) and 37(2) of that Act apply instead, because the cause of action arose outside Quebec. I will discuss the issue relating to the deemed trust first before turning to the interest issue.

[67]Between May 2000 and January 2001, Camvrac, an employer doing business in Quebec, failed to remit $26,863.53 in income tax and employment insurance premiums deducted from its employees' salaries to the Receiver General for Canada. Nothing in the evidence specifies the amount owed by Camvrac as of September 25, 2000, but according to the Federal Court prothonotary who heard the matter at trial, the unremitted deductions totalled $5,558.72 in October 2000.

[68]On September 18, 2000, the Caisse and Camvrac signed a variable credit contract under which the Caisse extended $277,000 in credit to Camvrac. A few days later, on September 25, 2000, two additional agreements were signed: a term savings agreement under which Camvrac deposited $200,000 in the Caisse for a term expiring on October 16, 2005, and an agreement to give savings as security for the repayment of any amount owed to the Caisse, in which Camvrac granted the Caisse a "right to withholding and compensation" and a hypothec. Only the right to compensation is in issue in this appeal: neither the hypothec nor the right to withhold was raised, enforced or exercised, or set up against the respondent. Although excerpts from the relevant clauses are also set out in the Appendix, I will reproduce one here that I will be discussing more specifically:

[TRANSLATION]

RIGHT TO WITHHOLDING AND COMPENSATION

To secure the repayment of any sum in principal, interest, costs and accessories owed or to be owed the Caisse by the Depositor under a line of credit agreement in the amount of $277,000.00 granted to him (her) on 2000-09-18 and under any debts or obligations, present or future, direct or indirect held by the Depositor, the Depositor undertakes to maintain and consents to the withholding by the Caisse, in the account(s) . . . mentioned below, of the amount of $200,000.00 distributed as follows: . . . . Alternative term saving 5 years in the amount of $200,000.00 . . . .

The Caisse may withhold the sums shown above, along with the interest from the certificates of deposit if applicable, as long as all the amounts due under the Credit Contract(s) have not been fully repaid and, in the case of a line of credit, as long as it has not been cancelled. In cases of default as provided for below, there shall be compensation between the Credit Contract(s) and the certificate(s) of deposit or the amounts deposited defined above, as provided for in Section 7.

[69]I note that the parties and the courts below have sometimes referred to the term deposit as a "certificate of deposit". In my opinion, as is indicated in the term savings agreement, it is simply a term deposit. But what it is called is of no consequence in light of the mechanisms that are at issue in this appeal.

[70]On November 25, 2000, Camvrac defaulted on the interest on the borrowed amount. On December 1, 2000, that interest was paid by means of a manual transfer of funds effected by the Caisse. A statement dated December 31, 2000, shows a debt of $277,000 owed by Camvrac to the Caisse; it also indicates that monthly interest on the total amount of the loan was charged to Camvrac. A savings and investment account statement dated January 31, 2001 shows a balance of $200,578 in respect of the deposit. On February 5, 2001, Camvrac made an assignment in bankruptcy. On its copy of the deposit agreement, the Caisse made the following note: [TRANSLATION] "To be closed on 21/2/2001 to realize on security."

Digitized by Google

[71]On June 12, 2001, the respondent required the Caisse to pay her $26,863.53 owed by Camvrac for payroll deductions. She submits that this amount was protected by the deemed trust resulting from provisions of the *ITA*and the EIA. The Caisse counters that the note made on the deposit agreement on February 21, 2001 was merely administrative in nature and that its debt to Camvrac was extinguished by compensation.

Judicial History

[72]Before a prothonotary of the Federal Court, the respondent argued that the deposited amount was property of Camvrac that was subject to the deemed trust, and that in enforcing its security interest on February 21, 2001, the Caisse had realized on that certificate and should have paid her the amount of the deductions Camvrac had failed to remit. The Caisse submitted that under the agreement with Camvrac, the mutual debts —its own and that of Camvrac — became exigible when Camvrac defaulted and that those debts had been extinguished by compensation. In the prothonotary's opinion, there was no doubt that the deposited amount was held as security, that in "cashing it in", the Caisse was enforcing a security interest, and that the deposited amount was subject to the deemed trust. She therefore held that"the value of the benefit conferred on the [Caisse] through the realization on its security interest in the certificate of deposit constitutes the proceeds from the certificate of deposit, and must be paid to the Receiver General"(2005 FC 731, 2006 D.T.C. 6385, at para. 22). According to the prothonotary, legal compensation could not be relied on, because the term of the deposit had not expired. She added that if the Caisse wanted to avail itself of its contracts with Camvrac, it had to manifest its intention to enforce them, which it did not do until February 21, 2001, by which time the respondent's right had priority. The prothonotary therefore ordered the Caisse to pay the amount claimed by the respondent. She awarded interest at the rate provided for in ss. 36(2) and 37(2) of the Federal Courts Act.

[73]The Federal Court upheld the prothonotary's judgment (2005 FC 1563, 2007 D.T.C. 5664). In response to the Caisse's argument that the prothonotary had failed to consider the forfeiture of the term clause in the term savings agreement, the court stated that although conventional compensation could have been effected under the terms of the contract before the expiry of the term of the deposit, the Caisse had not exercised its right to do so until February 21, 2001, by which time the deposit amount was subject to the deemed trust. The Federal Court rejected the Caisse's argument that compensation is not a security interest, relying instead on the French version of the definition of "security interest" (garantie) in s. 224(1.3) *ITA*to conclude that even if compensation were held to constitute a payment, it would be considered a "security interest" within the meaning of the ITA.

[74]The Federal Court of Appeal also concluded that the ITA's definition of "security interest" is sufficiently broad to include the Caisse's right to compensation in respect of Camvrac's deposit, and that the provisions concerning the deemed trust authorized the respondent to recover from the Caisse the amounts owed by Camvrac (2006 FCA 366, 361 N.R. 77). On the interest issue, the Court of Appeal relied on Markevich v. Canada, 2003 SCC 9, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 94, and Canada (Attorney General) v. Caisse populaire d'Amos, 2004 FCA 92, 324 N.R. 31, and upheld the trial judgment.

Digitized by Google

Parties' Arguments Concerning the Deemed Trust

[75]The Caisse advances three arguments: (1) the courts below erred in finding that the mechanism it relies on is a security interest within the meaning of ss. 224(1.3) and 227(4.1); (2) compensation is not a mechanism for performing obligations; and (3) the time when the debt was extinguished does not depend on whether the compensation is characterized as legal or conventional, but in the alternative, if it must be characterized, it should instead be regarded as a contractual arrangement for compensation in the future. This last argument does not appear to have been raised as forcefully in the courts below, but the facts and legal concepts relied on remain the same.

[76]The respondent contends that the deemed trust creates an absolute priority and that, regardless of whether the compensation is conventional or legal or of whether compensation constitutes a security interest, the proceeds from the "cashing in" of the term deposit must be paid to her up to the amount of the source deductions owed by the employer.

[77]Because the courts below held that compensation constitutes a"security interest" as defined in s. 224(1.3) ITA, I will deal with this issue first. I will then consider whether the contractual right to compensation may be set up against the respondent.

"Security Interest" as Defined in Section 224(1.3) ITA

[78]Over ten years ago, Gonthier J. observed in Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 411, at para. 22, that a clash between conflicting legislative objectives had given rise to a competition of priorities between deemed trusts and consensual security interests. In 1998, Parliament enacted legislation to expand the scope of the deemed trust (S.C. 1998, c. 19, s. 226(1)) and give it priority over every"security interest" as that term is defined in s. 224(1.3). In this context, it is important to clearly delineate the concept of "security interest" as defined in that provision.

[79]Although the provisions in issue in this appeal —ss. 224(1.3), 227(4) and 227(4.1) ITA and the corresponding provisions of the EIA — are reproduced in the Appendix, I will nevertheless reproduce the more relevant passages here for ease of reference. Section 224(1.3) ITA defines "security interest" for the purposes of the deemed trust. The English version of the definition reads as follows:

"security interest" means any interest in property that secures payment or performance of an obligation and includes an interest created by or arising out of a debenture, mortgage, hypothec, lien, pledge, charge, deemed or actual trust, assignment or encumbrance of any kind whatever, however or whenever arising, created, deemed to arise or otherwise provided for;

[80]The terminology used in the French version is different. On the one hand, the term "security interest" is rendered as "garantie". On the other hand, whereas the word "interest" is used in the English expression"interest in property", the word "droit" is used instead in the expression "droit sur un bien" in French:

« garantie » Droit sur un bien qui garantit l'exécution d'une obligation, notamment un

Digitized by Google

paiement. Sont en particulier des garanties les droits nés ou découlant de débentures, hypothèques, privilèges, nantissements, sûretés, fiducies réputées ou réelles, cessions et charges, quelle qu'en soit la nature, de quelque façon ou à quelque date qu'elles soient créées, réputées exister ou prévues par ailleurs.

[81]The concept of "garantie" can vary in scope depending on the context. It is therefore important that the two versions be read together and that the meaning of the terms "security interest" and "garantie" be harmonized in the context of s. 224(1.3) ITA. It should be noted that there is no distinct federal common law: Quebec North Shore Paper Co. v. Canadian Pacific Ltd., [1977] 2 S.C.R. 1054, McNamara Construction (Western) Ltd. v. The Queen, [1977] 2 S.C.R. 654, and P. Denault, La recherche d'unité dans l'interprétation du droit privé fédéral (2008), at p. 38. Where the suppletive law must be applied to interpret a concept incorporated into a federal rule, the law of the province is the relevant source: Federal Law—Civil Law Harmonization Act, No. 1, S.C. 2001, c. 4, s. 8, amending the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. As a result, absent an express provision to the contrary, federal legislation must be interpreted in a manner consistent with the concepts and institutions of the legal system of the province in which it is to be applied: A. Morel, "La rédaction de lois bilingues harmonisées avec le droit civil", in The Harmonization of Federal Legislation with Quebec Civil Law and Canadian Bijuralism — Collection of studies (1997), 309, at p. 313.

[82]Furthermore, not only must reference be made — when necessary to interpret federal legislation — to the law of the province in which it is to be applied, but both the English and French versions must be taken into consideration: M. Bastarache et al., The Law of Bilingual Interpretation(2008), at pp. 42 et seq. I will begin by analysing the English and French versions to determine whether a shared meaning can be established. In the case at bar, this analysis leads to a notion common to the civil law and the common law that makes it possible to harmonize the application of the taxing provision in the two legal systems.

[83]Given that the terms "security interest" in the English version and "garantie" in the French version may not have the same scope, it will be necessary to establish the shared meaning of the English and French versions by applying the principles of bilingual interpretation recently reiterated in R. v. S.A.C., 2008 SCC 47, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 675, at paras. 14-16 (see also Bastarache et al. and P.-A. Côté, The Interpretation of Legislation in Canada (3rd ed. 2000), at p. 327).

[84]There are two steps to this analysis: identifying the shared meaning and establishing Parliament's intent. At the first step, there are three possibilities (S.A.C., at para. 15):

First, the English and French versions may be irreconcilable. . . . Second, one version may be ambiguous while the other is plain and unequivocal. The shared meaning will then be that of the version that is plain and unambiguous: Daoust, at para. 28; Côté, at p. 327. Third, one version may have a broader meaning than the other. According to LeBel J. in Schreiber, at para. 56, "where one of the two versions is broader than the other, the common meaning would favour the more restricted or limited meaning".

[85]The first possibility can be ruled out: the two versions are not irreconcilable. In English, the expression "security interest" has a well-established meaning, whereas the French word "garantie" is more general. While every security interest is necessarily a garantie, the opposite is not necessarily true. For example, a personal surety provides a *garantie*but does not establish a security interest in his or her property. The English term is therefore more specific than the French.

Digitized by Google

However, in light of the broad scope of the "security interest" concept, I do not consider it appropriate to say that the English version is "narrow" and the French version broad. If a choice had to be made between the second and third categories, therefore, the question would have to be placed in the second, that of the unequivocal version/ambiguous version. Here, this choice does not change the outcome, since in either case the shared meaning is that of the term used in the English version: "security interest".

[86]At the second step in the interpretation of bilingual statutes, it must be determined whether the shared meaning of the two versions is consistent with Parliament's intent (S.A.C., at para. 16). It is clear that the successive amendments to the ITA and the EIA in respect of the deemed trust were intended to give enhanced protection to the tax creditor. Beyond this immediate objective, however, I cannot conclude that Parliament intended that the priority set for the taxing authorities should be vague. Such an interpretation would make it impossible for a tax debtor's creditors to determine their rights in advance. Given that the common law and civil law concepts are compatible, Parliament can only have intended to treat all Canadian taxpayers the same way and to enable both communities to predict how the legal mechanisms they use to organize their affairs will be interpreted. Only the shared meaning makes it possible to attain this objective. Accordingly, I conclude that Parliament's intent is consistent with the well-established concept of "security interest" as opposed to the more ambiguous concept of "garantie" (see ss. 8.1 and 8.2 of the Interpretation Act, introduced by the Federal Law — Civil Law Harmonization Act, No. 1; Denault, at p. 117).

[87]If, in the instant case, the shared meaning corresponds to the unequivocal concept of "security interest", it is because there is a concept common to a "security interest" in the sense of "interest in property" and a "garantie"in the sense of "droit sur un bien". It is this concept that must be identified. In "The Income Tax Act, the Excise Tax Act and the Term Interest: An Interesting Case for Harmonization", in The Harmonization of Federal Legislation with Quebec Civil Law and Canadian Bijuralism (2002), published in the Collection of Studies in Tax Law 2001, Martin Lamoureux points out that a term like "interest" may be impossible to define without considering the context. In his view, "depending on the context, the expression 'interest in property' appears to be the converse of the notion of absolute ownership"(p. 7:9). According to this interpretation, therefore, the security interest —the right in question in s. 224(1.3) ITA — is distinct from a right of absolute ownership.

[88]After analysing how the "interest" concept is used in the *ITA*and in the Excise Tax Act,
R.S.C. 1985, c. E-15 ("ETA"),Lamoureux proposes the concept of "real right" as a basis for harmonizing those of "interest" and "droit". He explains this as follows:

As we stated in part three, we propose to harmonize the notion of "interest" (intérêt) with its Quebec equivalent which is"real right" (droit réel). This conclusion is based on a comparative analysis which shows a great similarity between the two concepts. In fact, a comparison of the two concepts shows a similarity between several of their general attributes, for example, the right to follow, the right to assert adversus omnes, a direct right to the thing and the dismemberment of property over time. [p. 7:22]

[89]This proposal is relevant in the case of s. 224(1.3), because the words "interest" and "droit" are used in the English and French versions of that provision. However, Lamoureux mentions some differences between the "interest" and "real right" concepts: for instance, beneficial ownership, equity and future interest can give rise to an interest in property but do not necessarily have equivalents in civil law. He accordingly suggests that Parliament should define "real right" in the ITA and the ETA, and include common law concepts needed for certain specific purposes in the definition. I agree with using the "real right" concept to harmonize the concept of "interest in property" with that of "droit sur un bien" (right in property). In classical civil law, a *droit sur un bien*is a real right, not a personal right. The accessory real right (known in French as a "droit réel accessoire" and, often, as a "droit réel de garantie") forms an essential component of a security: P.-C. Lafond,Précis de droit des biens (2nd ed. 2007), at paras. 422-23 and 440-47;Private Law Dictionary and Bilingual Lexicons: Obligations (2003),"accessory real right", at pp. 4-5; D.-C. Lamontagne, Biens et propriété (6th ed. 2009), at paras. 103-4.

Digitized by Google

[90]At common law, the term "real right" and its close cousins "right*in rem*" and "jus in re", although less common, are nevertheless established. Professor Royston Miles Goode writes in Goode on Legal Problems of Credit and Security (4th ed. 2008), at para. 1-17, that "a security interest is a right in rem". Professors Ronald C. C. Cuming, Catherine Walsh and Roderick J. Wood also refer to the concept of "real right"or "right in rem" in Personal Property Security Law (2005):

A creditor who is given a security interest in the debtor's property obtains a proprietary right to the collateral. The defining characteristic of a proprietary right (which is also referred to as a real right or a right in rem) is that it is a right in a thing that is generally enforceable against the world. [p. 511]

See also R. A. Macdonald, "Reconceiving the Symbols of Property: Universalities, Interests and Other Heresies" (1994), 39 McGill L.J. 761; J. Austin, Lectures on Jurisprudence, or, The Philosophy of Positive Law (5th ed. 1885), at pp. 381-91; T. E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence (12th ed. 1916), at pp. 146-47; W. N. Hohfeld, "Fundamental Legal Conceptions as Applied in Judicial Reasoning" (1917), 26 Yale

L.J. 710, at pp. 714-15; J. W. Salmond, Jurisprudence (10th ed. 1947), at pp. 252-56; G. W. Paton, A Text-book of Jurisprudence (2nd ed. 1951), at pp. 232-36; Reagan v. Murphy, 105 So.2d 210 (La. 1958); Harwood Oil & Mining Co. v. Black, 124 So.2d 764 (La. 1960).

[91]Moreover, just as an interest in property may be considered to be similar in many respects to a civil law real right, at common law, the notion of a "real right" is considered to be essential to a finding that a security interest exists in the area of personal property security. It is now well established that a functional approach has been adopted in the common law provinces and that form is not determinative of whether a security has been created. The fact remains, however, that the basis for a security interest continues to be a real right. Professors Cuming, Walsh and Wood explain this clearly:

The elimination of form as a determinant of the existence of a security agreement necessitates a close look at some types of transactions that, on the surface, appear to fall outside the scope of a PPSA but that may provide for interests that fall on one side of the line or the other, depending upon the presence or absence of a feature. In each case, it is necessary to determine whether the essential characteristics of a security agreement are present. This involves answering the question: does the transaction involve the contractual recognition or creation of an interest in the personal property of one person that secures an obligation owing to another person? . . . The "interest" involved must be a real right in personal property in the sense that it is exercisable against not only the obligor but also against third parties with subsequent interests in the property. [pp. 85-86]

Digitized by Google

Professor Goode makes a similar comment in this respect (at para. 1-17):

Even where the creditor is to be given rights in respect of an asset, it is necessary to distinguish real rights from personal rights. . . . [A] security interest is a right in rem and in principle the secured creditor is entitled to remove the asset from the general body of creditors.

[92]The common law concept of security interest therefore corresponds, in civil law terms, not to a personal right, but to a real right. In short, although no single expression is used at common law, what can be seen is that the right holder has a right in the property itself, as opposed to a right to compel a person to perform an obligation, which is the essence of a personal right. Thus, the "real right" concept is common to the two legal traditions. This concept is also inherent, and literally so, in the English expression "interest in property" and the French expression "droit surun bien" used in s. 224(1.3).

[93]The "real right" concept is also inherent in the mechanisms listed in s. 224(1.3). From the perspective of the civil law, the list in that provision includes forms of security formerly provided for in the Civil Code of Lower Canada and certain special statutes, such as the Act respecting the special powers of legal persons, R.S.Q., c. P-16, that have been consolidated in the Civil Code of Québec in the concept of the hypothec; the forms of security in question conferred real rights on creditors. Some of the mechanisms set out in the list in s. 224(1.3) ITA warrant comment.

[94]For instance, the term "assignment" refers to an assignment by way of security, not an absolute assignment (Alberta (Treasury Branches) v. M.N.R., [1996] 1 S.C.R. 963, at para. 22; First Vancouver Finance v. M.N.R., 2002 SCC 49, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 720, at para. 39). In the Civil Code of Québec, an assignment by way of security takes the form of a movable hypothec (J.-L. Baudouin and P.-G. Jobin, Les obligations (6th ed. 2005), by P.-G. Jobin with the collaboration of N. Vézina, at No. 942).

[95]As for the trust, it is true that, in civil law, property is transferred in trust to a patrimony by appropriation (art. 1261 C.C.Q.). However, the transferred right is in the "property" (art. 1260 C.C.Q.). Moreover, a creditor who is a beneficiary of a security trust is not an ordinary creditor; the beneficiary's right may be characterized as a hybrid or sui generis right and has some of the characteristics of a real right (R. A. Macdonald, "The Security Trust: Origins, Principles and Perspectives", in Contemporary Utilisation of Non-Corporate Vehicles of Commerce (1997), Meredith Lectures, 155, at pp. 203-4; J. B. Claxton, Studies on the Quebec Law of Trust (2005), at pp. 553-55; J. E. C. Brierley, "Title Six: Certain Patrimonies by Appropriation — Articles 1256-1298", in Reform of the Civil Code (1993), vol. 1-B, at p. 17). And it should be noted that a legislature may expressly include, in a technical definition of a term, mechanisms that do not fall within the usual definition of the term.

[96]The same reasoning applies to the mechanisms listed in the provision if they are viewed from a common law perspective. Some of them (mortgage, trust, assignment) transfer legal or equitable title to the secured creditor. Others, such as the pledge or the charge, are comparable to the civil law's hypothec, with or without delivery. As for the lien, it may take a number of forms: it is akin sometimes to a pledge, where it includes a right to sell the property (Goode, at para. 1-49), and sometimes to a legal mortgage, where it is non-possessory. Finally, "encumbrance" is a very broad term that is defined in Black's Law Dictionary (6th ed. 1990) as"[a]ny right to, or interest in, land which may subsist in another to diminution of its value" (p. 527). Although this term can refer to an easement, it should be noted that where its use to refer to a form of security is concerned, the examples given are usually the mortgage, the lien and the trust (D. A. Dukelow, The Dictionary of Canadian Law (3rd ed. 2004), at p. 408). Thus, the mechanisms mentioned above give the creditor a right that can be characterized as a "real right" within the shared meaning of this expression in the two legal traditions.

Digitized by Google

[97]The debenture is the only item in the list in s. 224(1.3) *ITA*that does not create a real right. However, it is a special case. The debenture has historically been central to secured lending transactions (L. Payette, Les sûretés réelles dans le Code civil du Québec (2nd ed. 2001), at pp. 387-89 and 815-20; B. A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage (2nd ed. 1995), at p. 250; The Dictionary of Canadian Law, at pp. 318-19; H. Reid, Dictionnaire de droit québécois et canadien (3rd ed. 2004), at p. 162). Ordinarily, a debenture is issued and secured in a single instrument. One such instrument was considered by this Court in Royal Bank of Canada v. First Pioneer Investments Ltd., [1984] 2 S.C.R. 125. The following comment by P.

L. Davies helps clarify the scope of the mechanism to which the term "debenture" as used in s. 224(1.3) ITA applies: "The expression'debenture' is applied indiscriminately to the instrument creating or evidencing the indebtedness and to the debt itself and the bundle of rights vested in the holder to secure its payment" (Gower and Davies' Principles of Modern Company Law (7th ed. 2003), at p. 809). The debenture is also mentioned in s. 2(a) of Ontario's Personal Property Security Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P.10, as an example of a transaction that creates a security interest. Cuming, Walsh and Wood explain this as follows: ". . . it can be assumed that, in this context, the term refers to a corporate obligatio[n] secured by some form of security agreement in personal property"(p. 62, n. 21). In short, even though a debenture can be seen, in a technical sense, as merely a debt obligation (P. Martel, Business Corporations in Canada (2005), at pp. 32-14 and 32-15), the term "debenture" must be interpreted in its commercial and historical context, and its inclusion in the list in s. 224(1.3) ITA leads to the conclusion that Parliament intended to include the types of security that are most frequently used to grant real rights in property.

[98]In my opinion, since compensation has not been included in the list, the Caisse's right can constitute a security interest only if it entails a real right. To limit the concept of security interest in s. 224(1.3) *ITA*to rights that are real in nature is consistent both with the shared meaning of the terms ("security interest" and "garantie") used in the two versions of the provision and with Parliament's purpose of giving the deemed trust priority over the security interests referred to in s. 224(1.3) ITA: First Vancouver Finance.

[99]It must now be determined whether compensation is a "security interest" as that term is defined in s. 224(1.3) ITA.

Right to Compensation and Security Interest

[100] Before determining whether compensation is a "security interest"as that term is defined in

s. 224(1.3) ITA, I must mention that many Quebec commentators have characterized compensation as a form or *type*of "garantie". It is important to note their use of the French term "garantie",which, as I mentioned above, has a less precise meaning than "security interest". Thus, Baudouin, Jobin and Vézina state, at No. 1035, that compensation [TRANSLATION] "serves as a garantie by making it possible to avert the risks of debtor insolvency". In their view, compensation gives [TRANSLATION] "ordinary creditors a measure of priority in not requiring them to compete with other creditors" (see also: D. Lluelles and B. Moore, Droit des obligations (2006), at No. 2672; V. Karim, Les obligations (2nd ed. 2002), vol. 2, arts. 1497 à 1707 C.c.Q., at pp. 749-50; J. Pineau, D. Burman and S. Gaudet, Théorie des obligations (4th ed. 2001), at p. 612). Moreover, compensation is a mechanism for extinguishing obligations that operates differently depending on the context in which it is effected: A. Bélanger, Essai d'une théorie juridique de la compensation en droit civil québécois (2004), at p. 299.

Digitized by Google

[101] These observations, although relevant to a description of compensation and its effects, do not support a conclusion that compensation is a "security interest" as that term is defined in s. 224(1.3) ITA. Although compensation may have the same effect as a security interest, care must be taken not to refer to the flexible sense that can be derived only from the French term "garantie". For the purposes of s. 224(1.3) ITA, it is not enough that compensation offers protection similar to that of a security interest: it must also confer an "interest in property", that is, a real right.

[102] Although it is true that compensation can be likened to a security interest, it cannot be equated with one in the sense that the term"security interest" must be given in the context of s. 224(1.3) ITA. Where compensation may be effected between two debts, the effect is clearly analogous to that of a "security interest" in the broad sense of the term; nevertheless, compensation or set-off is not regarded, in the positive law of either Quebec or the common law provinces, as having the characteristics of a real right. The automatic extinction of mutual debts is an effect of compensation, but it does not constitute the enforcement of a real right in the property in question. Since compensation is not specifically mentioned in the definition of "security interest" in s. 224(1.3) ITA, I find that it is not a security interest for the purposes of that provision.

[103] Guy Duboc, a French author, suggests in La compensation et les droits des tiers (1989), at pp. 244-47, Nos. 360-64, that compensation agreements should be recognized as pledge agreements that are subject to the same conditions and have the same effects as a pledge. But he is alone in his opinion, and he himself acknowledges that his position is a bold one. In my view, this position cannot be incorporated into Quebec law, especially in light of the consolidation of all forms of security that took place in the course of the reform of the Civil Code of Québec. Rather, it must be concluded that the provisions on compensation, located as they are in the chapter on the extinction of obligations, do not support the argument that compensation is a pledge that would be considered a hypothec under the Civil Code of Québec. To reach the same conclusion as Duboc would be contrary to the objective pursued by the codifiers in 1991 of consolidating the various forms of security.

[104] There is another reason why I would place compensation, or set-off, outside the ambit of s. 224(1.3) ITA. The term "security interest"used in the English version is one that is used extensively in the common law provinces in, specifically, the context of personal property security law. For example, it is defined as follows in the English version of Ontario's Personal Property Security Act:

"security interest" means an interest in personal property that secures payment or performance of an obligation, and includes . . . .

As can be seen, this definition is very similar to the one in the English version of s. 224(1.3) ITA:

"security interest" means any interest in property that secures payment or performance of an obligation and includes an interest created by or arising out of . . . .

[105] Furthermore, in most of the common law provinces, the French versions of this provision do not raise the same problems as the French version of the federal provision (see, for example, in addition to the Ontario statute, those of New Brunswick (Personal Property Security Act, S.N.B. 1993, c. P-7.1) and Manitoba (Personal Property Security Act, C.C.S.M., c. P35)). In the Ontario statute, the French version reads as follows:

Digitized by Google

« sûreté » Intérêt sur des biens meubles qui garantit le paiement ou l'exécution d'une obligation, notamment les intérêts suivants . . . .

Thus, the term"security interest" is rendered as "sûreté" in the Ontario statute, as opposed to "garantie" — a word that requires interpretation because of its vagueness — in the federal statute.

[106] All the personal property security statutes of the common law provinces include broad, functional definitions of "security interest" (see, for example, s. 1 ("security interest") of Ontario's Personal Property Security Act and s. 1 ("security interest") of New Brunswick's Personal Property Security Act). Despite this liberal approach, all these statutes— except that of Ontario — give priority to contractual rights that arise before an assignment to another creditor is known. The Ontario statute was to the same effect until 2006; since then, it has provided that the right arises as of the time the debt becomes payable. The new Ontario provision does not appear to have been considered by the courts. However, regardless of when such rights arise, they are always dealt with separately from security interests (e.g., Ontario's Personal Property Security Act, s. 40; New Brunswick's Personal Property Security Act, s. 41; all other such statutes have virtually identical provisions), which shows that the legislatures did not consider set-off to be included in the concept of"security interest". In the only case in which the most common wording of the provisions creating this type of right has been interpreted, 518718 Alberta Ltd. v. Canadian Forest Products Ltd., 1998 ABQB 619, 63 Alta. L.R. (3d) 371, the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench held that a creditor with a contractual right of set-off has priority over an assignee provided that the creditor's right arises before the assignment (paras. 54, 55 and 63) (in that case, the result was altered on the basis of estoppel, but estoppel is not in issue in the case at bar).

[107] A conclusion that compensation is a "security interest" as that term is defined in the federal statute would therefore conflict with the meaning given to the term in the provincial personal property security statutes, which exclude set-off. Such an interpretation would also be inconsistent with the common law concept of "set-off", on which numerous business transactions are based. Cuming, Walsh and Wood express the following opinion (at p. 87):

Set-off, whether contractual or procedural, does not involve a security interest because neither party to the set-off acquires a property interest.

Professor Goode adds the following, at para. 1-19:

A right of set-off, even if given by contract, is a purely personal right to set one claim against another. The party asserting it never acquires rights in the other's monetary claim at all; he merely asserts a countervailing claim which operates in pro tanto extinction of his monetary liability. It follows that a contractual set-off does not create a security interest.

P. Wood expresses the same opinion in Set-Off and Netting, Derivatives, Clearing Systems (2nd ed. 2007), at para. 1-008:

Although set-off has a similar commercial effect to a security interest, set-off is not a security interest in that the creditor does not grant the debtor a property interest over the creditor's property in the debt owed to the creditor to secure the cross-claim owed by the creditor to the debtor, eg a depositor does not grant a property right over the depositor's ownership of the deposit claim back to the bank to secure a loan owed by the depositor to the bank. Nor is set-off a right of retention like a lien because the bank does not retain the coins or notes of the depositor: the property in the benefit of the deposit account is held by the depositor and the bank has no property to retain.

Digitized by Google

Hence a right of set-off would not normally conflict with negative pledges typical of unsecured bank loan agreements whereby the borrower agrees not to create security over its assets. Negative pledges which widen the concept to include transactions similar to security interests should also not prohibit set-offs since a security interest and related title finance transactions (sale and leaseback, factoring, sale and repurchase) usually involve property transfers, but set-off is not a property transfer. A negative pledge which prohibited set-off would effectively prevent the debtor from becoming reciprocally indebted to a counterparty — impracticable in the normal case.

Professor Grant Gilmore, one of the US architects of Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code, when requested to exclude set-off from the definition of security interests, remarked, "One might as well exclude fan-dancing". Nevertheless he reluctantly gave in: Article 9 does not apply to "a right of recoupment or set-off": see s. 9-109(d)(10). In New Zealand the equivalent Personal Property Security Act does not apply to a right of set-off, netting or combination of accounts: see s. 23(c).

[108] Although I will be discussing the reasons of Rothstein J. below, I wish at this point to draw attention to one aspect of his reasoning. He relies on an excerpt from S. R. Derham's book The Law of Set-Off(3rd ed. 2003) to conclude that if the parties intended to create a security interest, that interest must be covered by the definition in s. 224(1.3) ITA. With respect, the following statement by Derham must be borne in mind: ". . .the predominant view is that a set-off agreement is not a charge" (para. 16.80). Thus, it must be understood that the passages cited by my colleague are part of a discussion of arguments in support of an unconventional approach. As with my rejection of Duboc's novel interpretation of French law, I find that it would not really be appropriate to incorporate into federal law a concept that is not recognized at common law and is totally unknown in civil law. In my view, it is very dangerous to assert that a real right in property can result from the parties' intention without basing that assertion on a mechanism known to the law.

[109] This review of the academic commentaries thus leads me to conclude that, under the common law as it now stands, set-off is excluded from the field of personal property security. The fact that a legal mechanism enables a creditor to obtain an effect similar to that of a "security interest"in the generic sense of the term does not make that mechanism a security interest.

[110] Despite the arguments presented in all courts, my colleague Rothstein J. considers that the question to be answered is not whether compensation is a security interest. Rather, in his view, the issue is whether the agreement created a "security interest" as defined in s. 224(1.3) ITA. He concludes that such an interest did in fact result from the juxtaposition of certain rights of the Caisse and obligations of Camvrac.

[111] As Rothstein J. sees it, compensation is merely a remedy (para. 30). The undertakings that gave rise to an "interest in property" as defined in s. 224(1.3) ITA were those relating to the term for repayment of the deposit amount, the obligation to maintain the deposit, the right to withhold and the limits on transferring, negotiating and hypothecating the deposit (para. 30). Rothstein J. does not concern himself with whether those rights, either individually or collectively, created a real right. Yet even though he does not expressly accept that a security interest entails a real right, he considers that, in the case at bar, the Caisse held a movable hypothec with delivery in accordance with the reasoning of the majority in Caisse populaire Desjardins de Val-Brillant v. Blouin, 2003 SCC 31, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 666. For several reasons, I cannot accept my colleague's interpretation of the "security interest" concept or his recourse to the hypothec to conclude that the deemed trust had priority. I will discuss my objections under two heads.

Digitized by Google

Novel Approach to the "Security Interest" Concept

[112] I must say that Rothstein J.'s approach to the "security interest" concept is a novel one. He states that he agrees that the shared meaning lies in the English version, which implies that the English term corresponds to a legally recognized common concept. As I mentioned above, there is no federal common law. To identify the purpose Parliament was pursuing when it chose the "security interest" concept, it is necessary to refer to the common law, which is provincial law. The analysis cannot therefore disregard provincial law. However, the effect of my colleague's interpretation is to expand the "security interest" concept beyond its accepted scope in Canadian commercial law. Since his approach does not correspond at all to the shared meaning, its effect is to disregard both the principles applicable to the interpretation of bilingual legislation and those applicable to the harmonization of federal law and provincial law.

[113] Rothstein J. concludes on the basis of inchoate accessory rights that an interest in property — or, in other words, a "security interest" as defined in s. 224(1.3) LIR — was created (at para. 30):

It was the five-year term and the maintenance and retention of the $200,000 deposit, as well as Camvrac's agreement not to transfer or negotiate the deposit and that the deposit could only be used as security with the Caisse, that created the Caisse's interest in Camvrac's property for the purposes of s. 224(1.3) ITA.

What my colleague overlooks in his analysis is the fact that under s. 224(1.3) ITA, the interest in the property must make it possible to realize on the security. To simply find that an interest in property exists without regard for the context is not sufficient.

[114] At common law, a security interest typically entails three fundamental rights: (1) the right to realize on property given as security; (2) a right to priority with respect to the proceeds of realization; and the right to follow the property in the hands of a third party to whom it has been transferred (Cuming, Walsh and Wood, at p. 1). None of the rights mentioned by Rothstein J. enable the person concerned to appropriate the property. Thus, neither the term for repayment, nor the obligation to maintain, nor the right to withhold, nor the limit on the right to transfer, hypothecate or negotiate would enable the Caisse to realize on the deposit or appropriate the deposit amount to ensure performance of the secured obligation. I cannot imagine that Parliament intended the provision to apply to any mechanism other than the one known at common law that makes it possible to appropriate the property to which the security interest relates. What must be done under s. 224(1.3) *ITA*is to identify a security interest, not a simple interest.

[115] Although my colleague does not include compensation in the above list in support of his conclusion that an interest in property was created, he does ultimately refer to it, describing it as a remedy. What I conclude from this is that he does not see compensation as an interest in property and that according to his interpretation only the rights he mentions create such an interest. I believe that a few comments about each of these rights will be helpful here.

Digitized by Google

[116] Regardless of what standpoint is taken in reviewing the Caisse's obligation with respect to the term, the clause establishing the term cannot be viewed as stipulating anything other than a deadline for repayment of the deposit. It is well established that in the context of a banking contract, to deposit an amount in a financial institution is to make a loan. The financial institution becomes the owner of the loaned amount and must return it with the interest agreed on (art. 2330 C.C.Q.). The transaction is, in a word, a simple loan (art. 2329 C.C.Q.). The clause that establishes the term merely fixes the time when the loaned amount is to be returned. Camvrac's relationship with the Caisse with respect to the deposit was merely one of creditor and debtor that entailed only a right to be repaid upon expiry of the term. The establishment of a term did not alter the nature of the legal relationship between the Caisse and Camvrac. The right was not a real right, but a simple personal right.

[117] The same analysis applies to the covenants to which Camvrac agreed, those relating to Camvrac's claim against the Caisse. The undertakings to maintain the deposit and not to transfer, negotiate or hypothecate the claim conferred on the Caisse no right in the claim Camvrac had against it. In the event of default, these rights would be of no assistance unless they were violated, in which case they might give rise to an action for failure to perform the contract. All these rights were personal rights, not real rights. The right to withhold warrants more specific comment.

[118] In considering the meaning to be given to the expressions "droit de retenue" and "droit de rétention" and the nature of the right that has been created, the context is essential. In civil law, there is one concept known as the "droit de rétention" (under, for example, arts. 875, 974, 1250 and 2543 C.C.Q.), which is a right to retain corporeal property, and another known as the "droit de retenue", or right to deduct (see arts. 2111, para. 2 and 2123 C.C.Q.). The right to deduct is different from the right to retain: it applies to an amount of money, not to corporeal property. There is therefore no right to follow. Also, the creditor's claim does not have priority. The right to deduct has none of the characteristics on the basis of which a right to retain can be likened to a real right.

[119] In the instant case, in the agreement to give savings as security, the following appears as the title of clause 1: "Droit de rétention et de compensation" ("Right to withholding and compensation" in the English version of the Caisse's standard form contract). Regarding obligations, the agreement provides that the depositor "consents to the withholding by the Caisse, in the account(s) . . . mentioned below, of the amount of . . .", and that "[t]he Caisse may withhold the sums . . . in the case of a line of credit, as long as it has not been cancelled". Despite the use of the expression "droit de rétention" in the title of the clause, the purpose of the right is to deduct an amount of money and not to retain corporeal property, which means that it is a "droit de retenue", not a "droit de rétention" within the meaning of the Civil Code of Québec.

[120] This right to deduct could be of no help to the Caisse during the term of the deposit, as the Caisse was not required to return the deposited amount until the term expired, and this stipulation afforded it no additional protection. Since clause 11 of the term savings agreement provided that the term would be renewed automatically in the absence of notice to the contrary, the Caisse would be able to exercise the right to deduct only if Camvrac gave notice that it would not be renewing the term. Such notice could be given not later than seven days after the term expired. If a notice of non-renewal were received, it would then be open to the Caisse to request repayment under clause 5 of the variable credit contract. In such circumstances, compensation could be effected by operation of law upon the expiry of the term, and the right to deduct and the obligation to maintain the deposit would be irrelevant. If, however, the Caisse did not immediately cancel the line of credit when the term of the deposit expired owing to the non-renewal, Camvrac would be precluded from requesting repayment because of its undertaking to maintain the amount in a deposit and the Caisse's right to deduct the amount. The Caisse would then retain the power to cancel the line of credit at any time, at its discretion, in order to effect legal compensation or, in the case of default, conventional compensation. These scenarios show that the Caisse's right to deduct and Camvrac's obligation to maintain were mechanisms provided for in the agreement to ensure that legal or conventional compensation could be effected. They conferred no separate right to realize on the claim and, moreover, were of residual application.

Digitized by Google

[121] The most important thing to bear in mind is that none of the clauses on which Rothstein J. relies created a real right or an interest in property ("security interest" as defined in s. 224(1.3) ITA). A term is a deadline for repayment. The right to deduct is simply the right of a creditor not to perform an obligation to pay as long as a debt is owed to him or her. It is, in a way, an extension granted for repayment. As for the obligation to maintain, it is clearly an undertaking by one person to another to perform an obligation. The limit on the right to transfer, hypothecate or negotiate constitutes an obligation "not to do".

[122] Thus, I cannot see how these rights, whether considered in isolation or as a whole, might constitute a "security interest" as that term is defined in s. 224(1.3) ITA. None of them provides a basis for using the property to ensure performance of the obligation, and none of them constitutes an interest in property that secures performance of an obligation.

[123] As Professors Cuming, Walsh and Wood point out, the elimination of form as a determinant of the creation of a security does not mean that every contractual undertaking can be regarded as security on personal property. The limits on which Rothstein J. relies can be compared with those applicable to flawed assets. According to the technique of flawed assets, property such as a bank deposit is subject to limits on withdrawal until the depositor has repaid his or her debt to the bank. It is well established that this technique does not create a security interest. Professor Goode explains this as follows (at para. 1- 21):

[The technique of flawed assets] does not of itself constitute a security, for the bank acquires no rights over the deposit, merely a right to withhold repayment.

[124] Cuming, Walsh and Wood also cite examples of undertakings pursuant to which creditors are given interests in property that cannot be characterized as security interests. One of them, the covenant not to dispose of or encumber property, is of interest, as it is analogous to one of the undertakings on which Rothstein J. relies:

A "negative pledge" clause or negative covenant in a loan agreement under which the borrower covenants not to encumber or dispose of some or all of her personal property until the loan is repaid does not create a security interest since, standing alone, the covenant does not create an interest in the property of the borrower. A negative pledge clause in a security agreement cannot prevent the covenantor from giving another effective security interest in the collateral. [p. 86]

Adding one or more personal rights does not result in the creation of a real right, which, as we saw above, Cuming, Walsh and Wood consider essential to the creation of a security interest. If Rothstein J.'s conclusion that a contractual undertaking creates an interest in the property is based on the functional approach, a further issue that will arise is how the negative pledge — whether or not in combination with another personal right such as the right to compensation — is now to be characterized.

Digitized by Google

[125] Therefore, in my view, not only is Rothstein J.'s analysis of the expression "interest in property" or "droit sur un bien" unacceptable in that it disregards the fact that the principal purpose of a security interest must be to permit the property given as security to be realized, but it cannot be reconciled with the characterization of techniques similar to those adopted in the case at bar that do not create security interests.

Granting of a Movable Hypothec on a Claim With Delivery

[126] I also wish to comment on the argument that a hypothec was granted on the basis of the reasoning followed in Val-Brillant. First of all, I would point out that no evidence was adduced concerning a hypothec and that no submissions were made in this respect either before the prothonotary or in the Federal Court or the Federal Court of Appeal. I find this argument somewhat surprising in view of the fact that the parties neither produced evidence nor made submissions with respect to it. It will also be necessary to place Val-Brillant in context and to comment briefly on the use of the hypothec to confirm that the Caisse's right is subject to the deemed trust.

[127] In Val-Brillant, the issue was whether a non-negotiable certificate of deposit could be the object of a pledge (art. 2702 C.C.Q.). There were two opposing theories, of "materialization" or"dematerialization" of the pledge: Payette, at pp. 380-91; P. Ciotola and A. Leduc, "Arrêt Val-Brillant: évolution ou régression de l'hypothèque mobilière avec dépossession, en droit civil québécois?", in S. Normand, ed., Mélanges offerts au professeur François Frenette: études portant sur le droit patrimonial (2006), at p. 361. The majority accepted the theory of dematerialization and held that there could be a pledge on a non-negotiable instrument. Gonthier J., writing for the majority, concluded that effective control of a non-negotiable instrument for the purposes of arts. 2702 and 2703 C.C.Q. could be gained by means of the assignment of claims mechanism referred to in art. 2710 C.C.Q.

[128] The commentators have criticized the view that a movable hypothec with delivery can be granted in the manner described in Val-Brillant: Ciotola and Leduc; D. Pratte, "L'hypothèque avec dépossession de créances non représentées par un titre négociable ou le retour à une fiction accommodante",in Mélanges offerts au professeur François Frenette: études portant sur le droit patrimonial, at p. 421.

[129] Article 2702 C.C.Q. was amended on January 1, 2009. The Civil Code of Québec now explicitly provides that physical delivery of the property or instrument is essential for a pledge to be granted. This amendment to the Civil Code of Québec is a clarification made by the legislature in response to Val-Brillant (see: Quebec, National Assembly, Journal des débats, June 11, 2008, 1st Sess., 38th Leg., vol. 40, No. 46, at p. 1, Bill 47, Securities and Other Financial Assets Transfer Act; M. Deschamps, "Le nouveau régime québécois des sûretés sur des valeurs mobilières", lecture delivered on March 19, 2009 to the Chaire du notariat of the Université de Montréal, at p. 4, note 12 (online:/www.chairedunotariat.qc.ca/fr/conferences/mois/032009/Deschamps.pdf.). It is now clear that the instrument that is delivered must confer effective control over the claim without recourse being had to the assignment of claim mechanism as suggested by Gonthier J. By specifying that physical delivery is required, the legislature has indicated that the theory of materialization of the pledge has been accepted: the instrument must therefore be negotiable. The only exception to this requirement that the instrument be negotiable relates to certain securities (art.

Digitized by Google

2714.7 C.C.Q.). At the same time, in response to a concern expressed by the majority in Val-Brillant, the Regulation respecting the register of personal and movable real rights was amended to enable individuals who do not operate enterprises to hypothecate incorporeal property and claims — including claims represented by non-negotiable instruments — without delivery: O.C. 30-2009, (2009) 141 G.O. 2A, at p. 17A; art. 2683 C.C.Q. This amounts to a relaxation of the conditions under which an individual can grant a hypothec without delivery. As for a deposit, such as the one in the case at bar, it cannot be the object of a pledge.

[130] Having said this, I have difficulty understanding how the hypothec fits into the reasoning that leads Rothstein J. to conclude that the rights granted to the Caisse created a security interest. Two interpretations are possible. Does my colleague conclude that the respondent's right has priority over the Caisse's right solely because of the control exercised over the claim by means of the term, the obligation to maintain, the right to withhold and the limits on the rights to transfer, hypothecate and negotiate? Or is his conclusion based on the idea that in addition to those rights, Camvrac had granted a right to compensation that resulted in a hypothec? If the first interpretation is correct, the argument based on the hypothec is irrelevant. If the second is correct, the right to compensation becomes determinative even though my colleague does not include it among the sources of an interest in property. If Rothstein J.'s conclusion that the deemed trust has priority is based on the hypothec, his reasoning clashes with the clarification made by the Quebec legislature.

[131] Furthermore, I cannot accept the Court's recourse to an argument that has been raised neither by the Caisse nor by the respondent. As I mentioned above, the agreement to give savings as security provided for the granting of a hypothec, a right to withhold and a right to compensation, but only the right to compensation was raised and argued. The Caisse was not limited in the choice of rights it could exercise. If, for example, in addition to the hypothec and the right to compensation, the claim had been secured by another personal right, such as by suretyship, the respondent could not have claimed from the Caisse the amount received from the surety. It would have been clear that the Caisse was free to choose which right it would exercise. Thus, it could have chosen to exercise its right to compensation, or it could also — independently of the hypothec also provided for in the contract — have availed itself of the suretyship if such a right were provided for in the contract. The Civil Code of Québec provides, on the one hand, for compensation and, on the other hand, for hypothecs on claims. These two mechanisms must not, in my opinion, be confused. The reasons for the parties' choice may be based in fact. In my view, the question is not merely one of law. In all fairness to the parties, therefore, I do not consider it appropriate at this point to intervene in the "judicial contract" to alter the bases of the appeal before the Court.

[132] I therefore find, with respect, that as regards the term, the obligation to maintain, the right to withhold and the limits on the right to transfer, hypothecate or negotiate, all that have been created are personal obligations. Furthermore, since the parties did not raise the hypothec in this Court, I do not think that we can base our conclusion on an argument in respect of which no evidence was adduced and that does not correspond to the law. The appellant chose to exercise its right to compensation, and that is the right that must be considered.

[133] As a result, I conclude that the appellant is correct in arguing that compensation is not a "security interest" as that term is defined in s. 224(1.3) ITA. To accept the Caisse's first argument is not to dispose of the appeal, however. Despite my finding that the Federal Court of Appeal erred in holding that the respondent had priority on the basis that the Caisse, in effecting compensation, had created a security interest for itself, the case is not yet closed. It must still be determined whether the right to compensation may be set up against the respondent, who, as a result of the deemed trust, not only has a priority over secured creditors — as the term"secured creditor" is defined in s. 224(1.3) ITA — but also has a right in the tax debtor's property. To do this, it must be asked whether the respondent may exercise its right in respect of both the amounts that had not been remitted at the time the right to compensation was granted to the Caisse and those that were not remitted after that time. As I mentioned above, by September 25, 2000, the date the compensation agreement was signed, Camvrac had already failed to remit some amounts that had been deducted from its employees' salaries. Those amounts totalled approximately $5,000.

Digitized by Google

Possibility of Setting up the Compensation Agreement Against the Respondent

[134] I do not think it necessary to explain at length why, prior to the expiry of the term of the deposit, the Caisse's right was not a right to legal compensation. The Caisse's right cannot be dissociated from the contract in which it was granted, if only because one of the conditions for legal compensation was not met: Camvrac's debt was not exigible, because repayment of the deposit amount was not due until October 2005. It will therefore be necessary to refer to the agreements between Camvrac and the Caisse.

[135] The Civil Code of Québec does not mention conventional compensation. However, there is nothing that prohibits it. In fact, conventional compensation is merely the arrangement by contract of the mechanism provided for in the Code. Furthermore, commentators have long recognized the validity of compensation agreements (see: Baudouin, Jobin and Vézina, at No. 1057; Lluelles and Moore, at No. 2701). [136] The issue in the case at bar is whether the Caisse may set up its compensation agreement against the respondent. The respondent's right is provided for in s. 227(4.1) ITA. If I exclude the portions relating to the priority over secured claims, which I have already discussed, the respondent's right in Camvrac's property is set out as follows:

227. . . .

Every person who deducts or withholds an amount under this Act is deemed . . . to hold the amount separate and apart from the property of the person . . . in trust for Her Majesty and for payment to Her Majesty in the manner and at the time provided under this Act.

(4.1) . . . where at any time an amount deemed by subsection (4) to be held by a person in trust for Her Majesty is not paid to Her Majesty in the manner and at the time provided under this Act, property of the person . . . equal in value to the amount so deemed to be held in trust is deemed to be held, from the time the amount was deducted or withheld by the person, separate and apart from the property of the person, in trust for Her Majesty . . . and to form no part of the estate or property of the person from the time the amount was so deducted or withheld . . . .

[137] The statutory mechanism transfers the tax debtor's property to a trust. In First Vancouver Finance, the Court likened this mechanism to a floating charge over all the tax debtor's assets up to the amount due, in that the trust does not attach to any specific property and allows the tax debtor's business to be carried on as usual.

Digitized by Google

[138] All forms of security — including what was formerly referred to as a floating charge — are now consolidated in the Civil Code in a single mechanism, the hypothec. The transfer of property into a trust may also be likened to garnishment, since that is the procedure provided for in s. 224(1) ITA to enable the respondent to appropriate amounts owed to the tax debtor that are subject to the deemed trust: Alberta (Treasury Branches). Whether the transfer into a trust is likened to a hypothec, to garnishment or to a simple assignment, the rules remain the same. The Civil Code of Québec and the Code of Civil Procedure, R.S.Q., c. C-25, provide that the rules governing the assignment of claims apply. The relevant provisions read as follows:

Civil Code of Québec

1680. A debtor who has acquiesced unconditionally in the assignment or hypothecating of claims by his creditor to a third person may not afterwards set up against the third person any compensation that he could have set up against the original creditor before he acquiesced.

An assignment or hypothec in which a debtor has not acquiesced, but which from a certain time may be set up against him, prevents compensation only for debts of the original creditor which come after that time.

Code of Civil Procedure

637. If the affirmative declaration of the garnishee is not contested and does not show the existence of another seizure by garnishment in his hands, the clerk, upon an inscription by either party, orders the garnishee to pay to the seizing creditor the amounts which he owes to the judgment debtor to the extent of the amount of the judgment in capital, interest and costs. To that extent the order of the clerk effects an assignment, in favour of the seizing creditor, of the judgment debtor's claim, from the date of the seizure. Such order must be served on the garnishee and becomes executory 10 days later.

[139] The ability of the debtor of the assigned claim to set up against the assignee any recourse that the debtor may have against the assignor is based on the general rule that the assignee may not have more rights in the assigned claim than the assignor had. This rule is set down in art. 1637 C.C.Q.:

1637. A creditor may assign to a third person all or part of a claim or a right of action which he has against his debtor.

He may not, however, make an assignment that is injurious to the rights of the debtor or that renders his obligation more onerous.

[140] This provision is complemented by art. 1643 C.C.Q., which provides that a debtor may rely on a cause of extinction that occurred before an assignment could be set up against him or her. The first paragraph of that article reads as follows:

1643. A debtor may set up against the assignee any payment made to the assignor before the assignment could be set up against him, as well as any other cause of extinction of the obligation that occurred before that time.

[141] The commentators and the courts have accordingly recognized that any defences and any right to refuse to perform (exception for nonperformance) that arose prior to an assignment may be set up against the assignee by a debtor who has not acquiesced in the assignment. The same is true of the extinction of obligations by compensation: Karim, at p. 773; Baudouin, Jobin and Vézina, at No. 962; Lluelles and Moore, at No. 3176; Bélanger, at p. 189.

[142] Furthermore, where the right to compensation arises from an agreement entered into before the assignment became enforceable against the debtor, the debtor's rights under the agreement may be set up against the assignee: A. L. Green Ltd. v. Michaud, [1975] C.A. 432, cited with approval in Banque Royale du Canada v. Béliveau, [1976] C.A. 539, and Bandera Investment Co. v. Société immobilière du Québec, J.E. 98-1667 (Sup. Ct.), SOQUIJ AZ-98021774. The above cases concerned claims for rent in respect of which the lessees had a right to deduct or a right to compensation. In each case, because the contractual right to compensation predated the assignment, the exercise of the right was authorized in respect of the period after the assignment. In these circumstances, it was held that the agreements could be set up against the third parties because they had acquired their rights after the compensation agreements were signed. Although the judges did not say so explicitly, it seems clear that this conclusion was based on the premise that art. 1681 *C.C.Q.*did not apply in the circumstances because the assignees had acquired no rights as of the time the compensation agreements were signed. Vincent Karim makes the following comment:

Digitized by Google

[TRANSLATION] However, it will be hard for the creditors of an insolvent party to challenge a compensation agreement entered into at the same time as the contract giving rise to that party's claim, as the creditors will have difficulty proving that the agreement has caused them any prejudice. [p. 750]

[143] The same approach has been adopted for assignments of conditional claims: Seigneur v. Immeubles Beneficial Ltée, [1994] R.J.Q. 1535 (C.A.); Banque Nationale du Canada v. Notre-Dame-du-Lac (Ville) (1990), 31 Q.A.C. 45; and Banque de Montréal v. Walsh & Brais Inc., [1990] R.L. 119 (C.A.).

[144] Conventional compensation — or contractual set-off — defies categorization, since it may take as many forms as the contract that provides for it will allow: Derham, at para. 16.85. However, there is no denying that the right to compensation has characteristics in common with such concepts as the conditional obligation, the exception for nonperformance, and even the right to deduct or the right to retain. In D.I.M.S. Construction inc. (Trustee of) v. Quebec (Attorney General), 2005 SCC 52, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 564, at paras. 28-29, for example, the Court likened a statutory right to deduct to compensation. Moreover, the right to deduct was one of the very first justifications given in France for holding that the debt actually owed to an assignee was the net amount: Duboc, at p. 169, No. 239, commenting on Ch. civ., May 13, 1833, S. 1833.1.668. While it comes as no surprise that Quebec's rules lead to the same result as the rules of French law, it is interesting to note that common law commentators and courts also acknowledge that the right to set-off may be asserted against third parties.

[145] Where the French rules are concerned, however, it should be noted that allowing compensation to be effected is based on a concept that does not on its own form part of the positive law of Quebec. In France, where there is a sufficient nexus between two debts, compensation may be effected despite the assignment of a claim or a collective recovery procedure: D. R. Martin,"Contrats et obligations", Juris-classeur civil, arts. 1289 to 1293, fasc. 108 to 111, No. 75. Since a compensation agreement creates a sufficient nexus, the possibility of setting it up is not in dispute (unless the agreement was entered into during a period where solvency was in doubt): Cass. civ., July 13, 1942, J.C.P. 1943.II.2157 (Annot. Houin); Cass. com., June 3, 1997, D. 1998.Jur.61 (Annot. François). (See, however, Cass. com., Dec. 9, 1997, Bull. civ. IV, No. 327, and the critique of that decision by A. Honorat, "Redressement et liquidation judiciaires", D. 1998.Somm.325.) Some authors draw a distinction in the case of garnishment by a third party on the basis that the property would no longer be available after the seizure: Didier Martin, "Des techniques d'affectation en garantie des soldes de comptes bancaires", D. 1987.Chron.229, and Thierry Bonneau, in Droit bancaire (7th ed. 2007), at No. 395. Duboc disagrees, however, as do Jean-Louis Rives-Lange and Monique Contamine-Raynaud (Droit bancaire (6th ed. 1995)). According to Rives-Lange and Contamine-Raynaud, [TRANSLATION] "[t]here is no reason to decide cases involving collective seizures differently from those involving individual seizures" (p. 183, footnote 6). In Quebec, the French debate over the unavailability of seized property would have to be resolved in favour of the possibility of setting up a compensation agreement entered into before the seizure. As I mentioned above, since art. 637 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that seizure results in assignment of the claim, the principles discussed above concerning the assignment of claims apply to garnishment.

Digitized by Google

[146] The number of cases in which common law courts have considered contractual set-off is small, but the few reported decisions on this subject have been favourable to the right to rely on set-off agreements. For instance, I have already mentioned 518718 Alberta, in which the court held that a contractual right of set-off had priority over the assignee's rights. Likewise, the Ontario Court of Appeal held in Ching v. Jeffery (1885), 12 O.A.R. 432, that the defences available to the debtor on an assigned promissory note, including the right to reduce his or her debt by an amount owed by the assignor, could be raised against the assignee. In Canadian Admiral Corp. v. L. F. Dommerich & Co., [1964] S.C.R. 238, it was held that the debtor had as against the assignee under a factoring agreement the same defence it would have had as against the assignor. Finally, in Toronto-Dominion Bank v. Block Bros. Contractors Ltd. (1980), 118 D.L.R. (3d) 311 (Alta. Q.B.), a contractual right to set-off (referred to by the parties as a right to "future set-off") was available against an assignee of security on the basis of cases in which courts had applied the general rule that an assignee cannot have any greater right than the assignor (p. 318).

[147] In sum, at common law, as in Quebec civil law, the rule for asserting contractual rights against third-party assignees is based on the general principles governing obligations. It can be inferred from the decisions cited above that the right to conventional compensation is assessed as of the time the right is granted, not as of the time it is exercised. The protection of third parties, codified in Quebec law in art. 1681 C.C.Q., applies to rights acquired before the compensation agreement was signed. In Traité de droit civil — Les obligations: les effets du contrat (1992), No. 602, at p. 589, Professor Jacques Ghestin gives a clear explanation of the effect of the transfer of a claim. His comment clarifies the legal justification for the possibility of setting up a contractual right to compensation against third parties:

[TRANSLATION] A claim is not only a patrimonial asset, but also a legal relationship. When a claim is alienated, therefore, what is transferred is not just an asset, but also an active contractual situation.

The possibility of setting up a contract whose object is the transfer of a claim thus necessarily has some particularities that are accounted for in positive law on the basis that the contract produces effects in respect of certain third parties.

[148] Thus, where the deemed trust applies to a claim, it attaches to a legal relationship that corresponds to an active contractual situation, which explains why the beneficiary of the trust may assert only those rights held by the tax debtor at the time the trust became effective.

[149] It will also be helpful to refer back to s. 227(4.1) ITA and to review the cases in which the scope of the deemed trust has been considered. Before Parliament clarified the respondent's priority over secured creditors, the courts had held that prior rights could be disregarded only to the extent expressly provided for in the relevant provision. For example, in Board of Industrial Relations v. Avco Financial Services Realty Ltd., [1979] 2 S.C.R. 699, Martland J. wrote:

Digitized by Google

In [s. 5A] the absence of a specific statutory provision to that effect, in my view it should not be construed in a manner which could deprive third parties of their pre-existing property rights. [p. 706]

(See also Dauphin Plains Credit Union Ltd. v. Xyloid Industries Ltd., [1980] 1 S.C.R. 1182, at p. 1199.)

[150] This suggests that it is necessary to be cautious in assessing the scope of the deemed trust on the tax debtor's property. When Parliament wished to give the deemed trust more teeth, it took care to give the respondent priority over secured creditors. It did not alter the general rules governing the rights a debtor can assert against its original creditor. In assessing the consequences of that decision, particularly with regard to compensation, one can but find support in an interpretation based on the normally applicable legal rules.

[151] Compensation is used in many business transactions and in the asset accounting of many businesses. M. E. Grottenthaler and P. J. Henderson state in The Law of Financial Derivatives in Canada (loose-leaf) that "Canada can be described as a 'netting friendly' jurisdiction" both in the context of insolvency and where contractual matters outside that context are concerned (p. 5-3). They explain that netting, which is a form of set-off, is crucial to derivatives transactions that affect the capitalization rules applicable to banks. They say the following about the importance of this mechanism:

It is of the utmost importance to parties that the termination and close-out netting provisions are enforceable against the other party. Unlike the case with many commercial transactions, parties are not willing to accept the risk that these provisions may not be fully enforceable in an insolvency situation. There are several reasons for this. First, many entities that participate in the derivatives market are subject to regulatory requirements that they maintain a certain asset level in relation to their liabilities (i.e. adequate capital). For this purpose, it is desirable to account for their transactions with their various counterparties on a net basis. The Basel Committee on Banking Supervision developed a new framework for regulatory capital and risk management (known as Basel II). The implementing Capital Adequacy Requirements guidelines released by OSFI [the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions] to apply to Canadian incorporated banks allow for the netting of contracts pursuant to contractual netting provisions if the bank can satisfy OSFI that certain conditions are met, including that the institution has a written and reasoned legal opinion that, in the event of any legal challenge, the relevant courts would find the exposure under the netting agreement to be the net amount under the laws of all relevant jurisdictions (which includes the counterparty's home jurisdiction and the governing law of the transactions and the netting agreement). The legal opinions must address the validity and enforceability of the netting agreements in the context of insolvency proceedings.

Secondly, because the marketplace for derivatives transactions is a highly competitive and global marketplace, entities governed by the laws of a jurisdiction that does not recognize the effectiveness of termination and close-out netting in an insolvency situation are put at a serious competitive disadvantage. [pp. 5-2 and 5-3] [152] This is just one example of the use of compensation in a context that does not involve the "security interest" concept and of the great importance of this mechanism both in Canadian law and in international economic relations.

Digitized by Google

Parliament thus seems to have had reasons for acting as it did in modifying the deemed trust only to give the respondent priority over creditors with security interests. I have concluded that the deemed trust does not give the respondent more rights than the tax debtor had and that, insofar as the amounts had not been deducted at the time the agreement was entered into, the Caisse's right may be set up against the respondent. What this finding means in practice must now be determined.

[153] In the case at bar, Camvrac's right to recover its claim was subject to the right to compensation that had been granted to the Caisse in the agreement to give savings as security. In the context of that agreement, the right to compensation was a right held by the Caisse that could not be negated solely by the fact of the deemed trust becoming effective. The respondent, as a third party, could not demand that the Caisse discharge its debt to Camvrac if the conditions for repayment had not been met. The Caisse's right had to be respected by third parties who acquired rights after the agreement was signed. Consequently, the respondent must abide by the compensation agreement, given that her right is subsequent to it.

[154] As I mentioned above, Camvrac had remitted nothing to the respondent since May 2000. Because the compensation agreement was entered into in September 2000, a question that arises is whether the respondent may claim from the Caisse amounts owed prior to that date. This is the issue that remains to be addressed.

[155] In certain circumstances, the debt itself can consist only of the net balance owed by the debtor. Thus, where, as in Bandera, the amount of an assignment of rent is established only after adjustments, the amount of the rent corresponds to the net balance payable to the landlord. In such a situation, regardless of when the assignee's right first arises, his or her claim cannot exceed the actual amount owed by the debtor of the assigned claim, that is, the post-compensation amount. In other cases, such as where the respective claims do not have the same source, the date the creditor's right arises may be relevant. The instant case is one such case.

[156] The claims of the Caisse and Camvrac have distinct sources: one is based on the variable credit contract, the other, on the term savings agreement. The Caisse's claim against Camvrac dates from September 18, 2000 and Camvrac's claim, from September 25, 2000. On the latter date, Camvrac undertook, first in the term savings agreement, [TRANSLATION] "to make, on the date of acquisition, a deposit in the amount of $200,000", and then in the agreement to give savings as security, to "maintain" a deposit in the amount of $200,000. These undertakings show that the respective claims of the Caisse and Camvrac are distinct. For Camvrac to be able to undertake in the agreement to give savings as security to "maintain" the deposited amount, its claim resulting from the term savings agreement had to take on an independent existence, if only at the time the deposit was made. Given that the deposit was made before the right to compensation was granted, the deemed trust could have become effective in respect of Camvrac's claim up to the total of the amounts owed to the respondent as of September 25, 2000. This is not a case in which the respective debts have the same source and the claim is subject to a right to compensation. Just as the respondent's rights are subordinated to the right to compensation for deductions subsequent to the signing of the agreement, the Caisse's right must give way to the respondent's pre-existing right. As I stated at the beginning of these reasons, the evidence in the record is insufficient to establish the amount of the unremitted deductions with any precision; therefore, failing an agreement between the parties, the case must be remanded to the court of original jurisdiction to establish that amount.

Digitized by Google

Interest Issue

[157] Regarding interest, the Court of Appeal correctly endorsed the application of Markevich, and there is no need to intervene.

Conclusion

[158] For these reasons, I would allow the appeal, set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal, authorize compensation for the balance of the amounts deducted as of September 25, 2000 and, failing an agreement between the parties, remand the case to the court of original jurisdiction to establish the amount to be paid by the Caisse to the respondent, with costs throughout.

APPENDIX

Contractual Provisions

Variable Credit Contract

[TRANSLATION]

LINE OF CREDIT

Digitized by Google

The Caisse agrees to extend to the Borrower, who accepts, a line of credit in the amount of $277,000.00. . . .

. At any point in time, the Caisse may notify the Borrower that no advance shall be granted to it thenceforth under this contract.

.

3. INTEREST

.

The interest shall be paid on the twenty-fifth day of each month. It shall be debited automatically from the . . . account . . . .

. The Borrower further undertakes to pay, on any payment due not made, additional interest . . . , any arrears of interest being then . considered as principal.

. 5. REQUEST FOR REPAYMENT

. The Caisse reserves the right to demand at any time the immediate repayment of any balance owed in principal, interest, costs and

. accessories. The Caisse shall then be entitled to no longer carry out this agreement, subject to all its other rights and recourses.

.

7. DEFAULT

If the Borrower draws a cheque that brings the line of credit balance to an amount higher than the amount authorized hereunder, if it goes bankrupt, if it transfers its property or becomes insolvent or fails to meet any of the conditions and obligations stipulated herein, any balance then

. owing in principal, interest, costs and accessories shall become immediately payable.

.

.

.

.

.

Term Savings Agreement
[TRANSLATION]
Date of maturity: October 16, 2005

. .

.

Digitized by Google

PROVISIONS GOVERNING THE PRINCIPAL

The member agrees to make, on the date of acquisition, a deposit in the amount of $200,000 (hereinafter referred to as the “initial amount of deposit”).

On the date of issue associated with the applicable term (“date of issue”), the initial amount of deposit and the interest then accrued on that amount shall be reinvested in the form of a deposit maturing on the maturity

. date associated with the applicable term (“date of maturity”).

This deposit may neither be negotiated nor transferred. No amount in . principal or interest shall be redeemable or payable before the date of maturity.

. This deposit may be hypothecated or given as security only in favor of the issuing Caisse.

Digitized by Google

. . .

Digitized by Google

PROVISIONS GOVERNING DISPOSAL AT MATURITY

11. At maturity date, unless the Caisse is notified to the contrary not later than the seventh day following such date, the principal and interest shall be deposited (to a term savings account) for a term equal to the term of this deposit. The interest rate shall be the rate then in force at the Caisse for such deposit, depending on the applicable term. The interest shall be reckoned daily and capitalized annually.

THIS IS A DEPOSIT WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE DEPOSIT INSURANCE ACT.

Agreement to Give Savings as Security

[TRANSLATION]

RIGHT TO WITHHOLDING AND COMPENSATION

To secure the repayment of any sum in principal, interest, costs and accessories owed or to be owed the Caisse by:

☒ the Depositor

Name of Borrower (if other than Depositor) under:

Digitized by Google

☒ (a) a line of credit agreement in the amount of $277,000.00 granted to him (her) on 2000-09-18;
(b) a (Loan, line of credit, etc.) agreement in the amount of $ granted to him (her) on ;
(c) the following agreements:
. . .
. . .
. . .
. . .
. .
☒ and under any debts or obligations, present or future, direct or indirect held by:
☒ the Depositor
Name of Borrower (if other than Depositor) towards the Caisse, (hereinafter referred to as "the Credit Contract[s]")
the Depositor undertakes to maintain and consents to the withholding by the Caisse, in the account(s) or on the certificate(s) of deposit mentioned below, of the amount of $200,000.00 distributed as follows:
Account or certificate of deposit Sum withheld by the Caisse identification
(for deposit certificates, state date issued amount and certificate number)
ALTERNATIVE TERM SAVINGS
5 YEARS IN THE AMOUNT OF
$200,000.00 $200,000.00
$
The Caisse may withhold the sums shown above, ☐along with the interest from the certificates of deposit if applicable, as long as all the amounts due under the Credit Contract(s) have not been fully repaid and, in the case of a line of credit, as long as it has not been cancelled. In cases of default as provided for below, there shall be compensation between the Credit Contract(s) and the certificate(s) of deposit or the amounts deposited defined above, as provided for in Section 7.
SAFEKEEPING OF CERTIFICATES

HYPOTHEC

To further secure the repayment of any sum owed or to be owed under the Credit Contract(s), the Depositor hypothecates and pledges the above-mentioned certificate(s) of deposit and sums deposited, for an amount equal to the total amount of the sums withheld. The parties also agree that the clause shown on the certificate(s) of deposit stipulating that such certificate(s) are neither negotiable nor transferable shall be deemed cancelled, effective from the date of these presents.
WITHDRAWALS AND CHEQUES

REDEMPTION BEFORE MATURITY OF A CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT

MATURITY AND RENEWAL OF A CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT

DEFAULT
The Depositor shall be in default in any of the following cases:
if any of the commitments under the Credit Contract(s) or these presents is not fulfilled;

Digitized by Google

if the Depositor or the Borrower becomes insolvent or goes bankrupt, or if he (she) makes a proposal and it is rejected or annulled;

In the event of any default:
any sums owing under the Credit Contracts shall immediately become payable;
the Caisse may use the sums deposited or the certificate(s) of deposit contemplated herein, regardless of its (their) having matured or not, to compensate its claim under the Credit Contract(s);. . .
The consequences of a default are for the exclusive benefit of the Caisse and the latter may waive them expressedly. The Caisse may, among others, without any prejudice to its rights, wait for the maturity date of the certificate(s) of deposit before exercising its rights as provided for in paragraphs (b) and (c) above.
RESERVE OF RECOURSES
. . . Furthermore, failure by the Caisse to avail itself of any of its rights in case of default shall not be interpreted as a waiver of such rights.
Statutory Provisions
Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.)
224. . . .
(1.3) In subsection (1.2),
.

> "security interest" means any interest in property that secures payment or
> . performance of an obligation and includes an interest created by or arising out of a debenture, mortgage, hypothec, lien, pledge, charge,
> . deemed or actual trust, assignment or encumbrance of any kind whatever, however or whenever arising, created, deemed to arise or otherwise provided for;
> 227. . . .
> Every person who deducts or withholds an amount under this Act is deemed, notwithstanding any security interest (as defined in subsection 224(1.3)) in the amount so deducted or withheld, to hold the amount separate and apart from the property of the person and from property held by any secured creditor (as defined in subsection 224(1.3)) of that person that but for the security interest would be property of the person, in trust for Her Majesty and for payment to Her Majesty in the manner and at the time provided under this Act.

(4.1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (except sections 81.1 and 81.2 of that Act), any other enactment of Canada, any enactment of a province or any other law, where at any time an amount deemed by subsection (4) to be held by a person in trust for Her Majesty is not paid to Her Majesty in the manner and at the time provided under this Act, property of the person and property held by any secured creditor (as defined in subsection 224(1.3)) of that person that but for a security interest (as defined in subsection 224(1.3)) would be property of the person, equal in value to the amount so deemed to be held in trust is deemed to be held, from the time the amount was deducted or withheld by the person, separate and apart from the property of the person, in trust for Her Majesty whether or not the property is subject to such a security interest, and to form no part of the estate or property of the person from the time the amount was so deducted or withheld, whether or not the property has in fact been kept separate and apart from the estate or property of the person and whether or not the property is subject to such a security interest . . . .

Digitized by Google

Employment Insurance Act, S.C. 1996, c. 23

86. (1) All premiums, interest, penalties and other amounts payable by an employer under this Act are debts due to Her Majesty and are recoverable in the Federal Court or any other court of competent jurisdiction or in any other manner provided for by this Act.

(2) Where an employer has deducted an amount from the remuneration of an insured person as or on account of any employee's premium required to be paid by the insured person but has not remitted the amount to the Receiver General, the employer is deemed, notwithstanding any security interest (as defined in subsection 224(1.3) of the Income Tax Act) in the amount so deducted, to hold the amount separate and apart from the property of the employer and from property held by any secured creditor (as defined in subsection 224(1.3) of the Income Tax Act) of that employer that but for the security interest would be property of the employer, in trust for Her Majesty and for payment to Her Majesty in the manner and at the time provided under this Act.

(2.1) Notwithstanding the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act(except sections 81.1 and 81.2 of that Act), any other enactment of Canada, any enactment of a province or any other law, where at any time an amount deemed by subsection (2) to be held by an employer in trust for Her Majesty in the manner and at the time provided under this Act, property of the employer

Digitized by Google

and property held by any secured creditor (as defined in subsection 224(1.3) of the Income Tax Act) of that employer that but for a security interest (as defined in subsection 224(1.3) of the Income Tax Act) would be property of the employer, equal in value to the amount so deemed to be held in trust is deemed to be held, from the time the amount was deducted by the employer, separate and apart from the property of the employer, in trust for Her Majesty whether or not the property is subject to such a security interest, and to form no part of the estate or property of the employer from the time the amount was so deducted, whether or not the property has in fact been kept separate and apart from the estate or property of the employer and whether or not the property is subject to such a security interest and is property beneficially owned by Her Majesty notwithstanding any security interest in such property or in the proceeds thereof, and the proceeds of such property shall be paid to the Receiver General in priority to all such security interests.

(2.2) For the purposes of subsections (2) and (2.1), a security interest does not include a prescribed security interest.

Civil Code of Québec, S.Q. 1991, c. 64

1637. A creditor may assign to a third person all or part of a claim or a right of action which he has against his debtor.

He may not, however, make an assignment that is injurious to the rights of the debtor or that renders his obligation more onerous.

. . .

. . .

. . .

1643. A debtor may set up against the assignee any payment made to the assignor before the assignment could be set up against him, as well as any other cause of extinction of the obligation that occurred before that time.

1671. Obligations are extinguished not only by the causes of extinction contemplated in other provisions of this Code, such as payment, the expiry of an extinctive term, novation or prescription, but also by compensation, confusion, release, impossibility of performance or discharge of the debtor.

1672. Where two persons are reciprocally debtor and creditor of each other, the debts for which they are liable are extinguished by compensation, up to the amount of the lesser debt.

Compensation may not be claimed from the State, but the State may claim it.

1673. Compensation is effected by operation of law upon the coexistence of debts that are certain, liquid and exigible and the object of both of which is a sum of money or a certain quantity of fungible property identical in kind.

A person may apply for judicial liquidation of a debt in order to set it up for compensation.

1680. A debtor who has acquiesced unconditionally in the assignment or hypothecating of claims by his creditor to a third person may not afterwards set up against the third person any compensation that he could have set up against the original creditor before he acquiesced.

An assignment or hypothec in which a debtor has not acquiesced, but which from a certain time may be set up against him, prevents compensation only for debts of the original creditor which come after that time.

Digitized by Google

1681. Compensation may neither be effected nor be renounced to the prejudice of the acquired rights of a third person.

Code of Civil Procedure, R.S.Q., c. C-25

637. If the affirmative declaration of the garnishee is not contested and does not show the existence of another seizure by garnishment in his hands, the clerk, upon an inscription by either party, orders the garnishee to pay to the seizing creditor the amounts which he owes to the judgment debtor to the extent of the amount of the judgment in capital, interest and costs. To that extent the order of the clerk effects an assignment, in favour of the seizing creditor, of the judgment debtor's claim, from the date of the seizure. Such order must be served on the garnishee and becomes executory 10 days later.

Appeal dismissed with costs, LEBEL*and* DESCHAMPS JJ. dissenting. Solicitors for the appellant: Langlois Kronström Desjardins, Lévis.

Solicitor for the respondent: Canada Department of Justice, Montréal.

Digitized by Google

Extension of trust – 227(4.1)

(4.1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (except sections 81.1 and 81.2 of that Act), any other enactment of Canada, any enactment of a province or any other law, where at any time an amount deemed by subsection 227(4) to be held by a person in trust for Her Majesty is not paid to Her Majesty in the manner and at the time provided under this Act, property of the person and property held by any secured creditor (as defined in subsection 224(1.3)) of that person that but for a security interest (as defined in subsection 224(1.3)) would be property of the person, equal in value to the amount so deemed to be held in trust is deemed to be held, from the time the amount was deducted or withheld by the person, separate and apart from the property of the person, in trust for Her Majesty whether or not the property is subject to such a security interest, and

to form no part of the estate or property of the person from the time the amount was so deducted or withheld, whether or not the property has in fact been kept separate and apart from the estate or property of the person and whether or not the property is subject to such a security interest and is property beneficially owned by Her Majesty notwithstanding any security interest in such property and in the proceeds thereof, and the proceeds of such property shall be paid to the Receiver General in priority to all such security interests.

Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Canada as represented by the Minister of National Revenue v. HSBC Bank of Canada, 2004 FC 467, Tracing the Interest in The Proceeds of The Trust Into a Subordinate Creditor's Hands

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT

[1] The plaintiff (hereinafter "the Minister) instituted this action to recover outstanding source deductions owed by Cambridge Colleges Inc. from HSBC Bank of Canada ("HSBC") on the basis that HSBC appropriated assets which were held in trust by Cambridge in favour of the Minister. More particularly, HSBC was Cambridge's banker and it redeemed on July 19, 1999, a guaranteed investment certificate ("G.I.C.") issued by another financial institution to Cambridge on May 26, 1999 for an amount of $300,000.00 pursuant to a security agreement covering this G.I.C.

[2] All the facts relevant to this action have been included in a statement of agreed facts filed by the parties instead of viva voce evidence. Rather than trying to summarize them further, I have included a copy of the said statement (without the annexes) as Appendix I to my reasons for judgment.

THE ISSUES

[3] The Minister relies on subsection 227(4.1) of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, ch. 1 (5th Supplement) as amended (the "Act"), which creates a deemed trust in its favour. The plaintiff submits that this trust came into existence retroactively to the time the source deductions were made by Cambridge that is back in January 1999 and that it attaches assets equal in value to the amounts not remitted by Cambridge which as of June

Digitized by Google

1999 totalled $99,531.28 (see paragraphs 19 to 21 in Appendix 1).

[4] The Minister claims that on July 19, 1999, when HSBC caused the G.I.C. to be redeemed, and used the proceeds to fulfill its obligations under letters of credit issued by it in favour of another creditor of Cambridge, it did so as a "secured creditor" within the meaning of subsection 224(1.3) of the Act (paragraphs 6, 7, 13 and 16 of Appendix 1).

[5] Pursuant to subsection 227(4.1) of the Act, HSBC was thus bound to remit to the Minister the proceeds of the G.I.C. up to the amount owed by Cambridge. It failed to do so and must now be condemned to pay $80,915.32 which represents the current outstanding debt owed to the Minister (paragraph 31 of Appendix 1).

[6] HSBC relies on the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in First Vancouver Finance v. Canada (Minister of National Revenue), [2002] 2 S.C.R. 720, to argue that the security provided for in favour of the Minister at subsections 227(4) and (4.1) of the Act is akin to a floating charge over all of the tax debtor's assets. Until it crystallized, Cambridge was free to dispose of its assets. According to the defendant, the floating charge only crystallized on September 2, 1999, when the Minister sent its requirement to pay (paragraph 23 of Appendix 1).

[7] HSBC had no notice that Cambridge had not remitted all its source deductions when it redeemed the G.I.C. and used the proceeds to pay other obligations of Cambridge. When the deemed trust provided for at section 227 of the Act crystallized, the G.I.C. or the proceeds thereof were no longer subject to the trust and HSBC was no longer a secured creditor in respect of such assets. Thus, HSBC owes nothing to the plaintiff.

ANALYSIS

[8] Subsections 227(4) and (4.1) read as follows:

227(4) Every person who deducts or withholds an amount under this Act is deemed, notwithstanding any security interest (as defined in subsection 224(1.3) in the amount so deducted or withheld, to hold the amount separate and apart from the property of the person and from property held by any secured creditor (as defined in subsection 224(1.3)) of that person that but for the security interest would be property of the person, in trust for Her Majesty and for payment to Her Majesty in the manner and at the time provided under this Act.

227(4.1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (except sections 81.1 and 81.2 of that Act), any other enactment of Canada, any enactment of a province or any other law, where at any time an amount deemed by subsection (4) to be held by a person in trust for Her Majesty is not paid to Her Majesty in the manner and at the time provided under this Act, property of the person and property held by any secured creditor (as defined in subsection 224(1.3)) of that person that but for a security interest (as defined in subsection 224(1.3)) would be property of the person, equal in value to the amount so deemed to be held in trust is deemed to be held; from the time the amount was deducted or withheld by the person, separate and apart from the property of the person, in trust for Her Majesty whether or not the property is subject to such a security interest, and

Digitized by Google

to form no part of the estate or property of the person from the time the amount was so deducted or withheld, whether or not the property has in fact been kept separate and apart from the estate or property of the person and whether or not the property is subject to such a security interest and is property beneficially owned by

227(4) Toute personne qui déduit ou retient un montant en vertu de la présente loi est réputée, malgré toute autre garantie au sens du paragraphe 224(1.3) le concernant, le détenir en fiducie pour Sa Majesté, séparé de ses propres biens et des biens détenus par son créancier garanti au sens de ce paragraphe qui, en l'absence de la garantie, seraient ceux de la personne, et en vue de le verser à Sa Majesté selon les modalités et dans le délai prévus par la présente loi.
227(4.1) Malgré les autres dispositions de la présente loi, la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité (sauf ses articles 81.1 et 81.2), tout autre texte législatif fédéral ou provincial ou toute règle de droit, en cas de non-versement à Sa Majesté, selon les modalités et dans le délai prévus par la présente loi, d'un montant qu'une personne est réputée par le paragraphe (4) détenir en fiducie pour Sa Majesté, les biens de la personne, et les biens détenus par son créancier garanti au sens du paragraphe 224(1.3) qui, en l'absence d'une garantie au sens du même paragraphe, seraient ceux de la personne, d'une valeur égale à ce montant sont réputés:
être détenus en fiducie pour Sa Majesté, à compter du moment où le montant est déduit ou retenu, séparés des propres biens de la personne, qu'ils soient ou non assujettis à une telle garantie;
ne pas faire partie du patrimoine ou des biens de la personne à compter du moment où le montant est déduit ou retenu, que ces biens aient été ou non tenus séparés de ses propres biens ou de son patrimoine et qu'ils soient ou non assujettis à une telle garantie.
Ces biens sont des biens dans lesquels Sa Majesté a un droit de bénéficiaire malgré toute autre garantie sur ces biens ou sur le produit en découlant, et le produit découlant de ces biens est payé au receveur général par priorité

Digitized by Google

Her Majesty notwithstanding any security interest in such property and the proceeds thereof, and the proceeds of such property shall be paid to the Receiver General in priority to all such security interests. [my emphasis] sur une telle garantie. [mes soulignés]

Digitized by Google

[9] It is not disputed that on July 19, 1999:
the G.I.C. and the $300,000 it represented were the property of Cambridge;
the G.I.C. was covered by the deemed trust in favour of the Minister as well as a security interest in favour of the defendant;
HSBC was a secured creditor holding a security interest in the G.I.C. and in its proceeds.
[10] In First Vancouver Finance, supra, the Supreme Court of Canada had to decide whether the deemed trust in favour of the Minister prevented a tax debtor from selling for value some of its assets, more particularly its receivables, to a financial institution under a factoring agreement.
[11] In that case, the financial institution had paid a fair value for the receivables. It purchased those assets and was never a secured creditor within the meaning of the Act. It also knew that the tax debtor owed source deductions to the Minister and had agreed to pay a portion of the value of the receivables directly to the Minister.
[12] The Court found that the sale of assets to a third party purchaser for value in the ordinary course of business was not precluded by the existence of the deemed trust. It reached that conclusion because of the absence of a specific reference to third party purchasers in subsections 227(4) and (4.1) of the Act. It held that in such a case, there was no basis to allow the Minister's interest in the tax debtor's property to continue, once, such property had been sold to such third parties. It found that this interpretation was in harmony with the purpose of the statute given that the deemed trust would attach automatically to the proceeds or assets received by the debtor in exchange for its assets. This conclusion was also warranted by the plain language of subsection 227(4.1) which specifically refers to proceeds. It was in line with the intention of the legislator which directed its effort to recovery in priority of secured creditors. Even the Minister had not argued that it could be assumed that the legislator wanted to assert priority over ordinary consumers because this would have a general chilling effect on commercial transactions.
[13] HSBC says that the same reasoning is applicable here and that indeed, it would have a chilling effect on commercial transactions if bankers could not exercise their security in the ordi nary course of business (particularly those given to secure payments under letters of credit), when they have not receive any notice of their client's failure to pay the Minister.
[14] This position does not take into consideration that the very purpose of subsections 227(4) and (4.1) is to grant the Minister priority over secured creditors such as HSBC. In Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 411 (QL), the Supreme Court of Canada had indicated that strong language would be necessary to give the Minister such priority over secured creditors. This prompted the latest series of amendments to the Act and the current version of subsections 227(4) and 227(4.1) is the result thereof. These subsections no longer refer to specific events triggering the deemed trust. Instead, the Act deems property of the taxpayer and of secured creditor to be held in trust at any time an amount is not paid in accordance with the Act.
[15] In First Vancouver Finance, supra, the Supreme Court of Canada confirmed that the new wording not only triggered a retroactive trust at the time the deductions were made but also that it extended the trust to all property acquired after it came into existence. In doing so, the Supreme Court of Canada recognized that the broad power given to the Minister was necessary because in contrast to a tax debtor's bank which is familiar with its debtor's business and finances, the Minister does not have much knowledge and he is in fact, an involuntary creditor. The Minister must thus rely entirely on its ability to collect the source deductions which are, as mentioned in First Vancouver Finance, supra, at the very heart of the income tax collection in Canada. The legislator specifically intend ed to avoid the need for the Minister to trace tax debtor's assets and to prove what property was covered by the trust.

Digitized by Google

[16] On July 19, 1999 when it cause Cambridge's G.I.C. to be redeemed, HSBC was relying on its security agreement and was acting as a "secured creditor" of Cambridge.

[17] HSBC could have made inquiries on or before July 19, 1999, to determine if any money was owed for source deductions. There is no evidence that they made any attempt in this respect or that they didn't have the capacity to do so. They could have required personal guarantees to balance the risk that such debt would take priority over its security pursuant to the Act.

[18] Until the Minister carries out an audit which in this case was done at the end of June 1999, the plaintiff is not in a position to notify any secured creditor that the tax debtor failed to remit all its source deductions.

[19] The Act does not require the sending of a notice by the Minister but HSBC states that it has always been a requirement under common law to prevent bankers from exercising their security on assets held in trust (see Canada v. Phoenix Assurance Co., [1976] 2 FC 649 (QL)).

[20] The Supreme Court of Canada in First Vancouver Finance above, at paragraph 34, states that the Minister is not bound by any restraint imposed by ordinary principles of trust law and that a statutory trust, such as the one created at subsections 227(4) and (4.1), is not governed by common law requirements.

[21] In light of the above, it appears to me that the circumstances of this case are very different from those in First Vancouver Finance, supra. HSBC is not a third party purchaser for value and its argument runs contrary to the language of the Act as well as the purpose and intention of the legislator.

[22] In the circumstances, the Court concludes that the proceeds of the G.I.C. should have been paid to the Minister in priority. This was not done and the defendant must therefore repay the amount of outstanding source deductions owed by Cambridge that is, $80,915.32.

[23] The Court is satisfied that the plaintiff is entitled to prejudgment interests pursuant to subsection 36(1) of the Federal Courts Act, R.S. 1985, c. F-7. Having considered the relevant provisions of the Judgment Interest Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. J-1, of the province of Alberta and all the circumstances of this case, I find that it would be just to award prejudgment interest from September 2, 1999 at the various rates prescribed by regulation pursuant to the said Judgment Interest Act.

JUDGMENT

This Court's judgment is that:

The action is allowed.

Digitized by Google

The defendant shall pay to the plaintiff $80,915.39, plus prejudgment interest from September 2, 1999 at the various rates prescribed by regulation under the Judgment Interest Act of the province of Alberta.
Plaintiff shall have its costs assessed as per column III of the Tariff B of the Federal Court Rules, 1998.

"Johanne Gauthier"
Judge

CRA Internal Operations Manual - Deemed Trusts

(See below image page)

Digitized by Google

DEEMED TRUST 1

Overview 1

Legislation 1
Legislative Provisions and Their Impact 2
Income Tax Act 2
Deemed Trust and Non-Resident Accounts 2
Excise Tax Act 3
Air Travellers Security Charge Act 3
Legislative Amendments 3
Income Tax Act 3
Excise Tax Act 4
Air Travellers Security Charge Act 4
Canada Pension Plan Act, Employment Insurance Act and Unemployment Insurance Act 5
Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act 5
Amounts that Make up The Deemed Trust 5
Income Tax Act 6
Excise Tax Act 6
Amounts Collected, Deemed to Have Been Collected, Collectible and Net Tax 7
Air Travellers Security Charge Act 7
Priorities Arising From the Deemed Trust Provisions 7
Income Tax Act 8
Excise Tax Act 8
Air Travellers Security Charge Act 9
General Priority Rule 9

Policy 10
Introduction 10
Exceptions to the General Priority Rule 11
Sections 81.1 and 81.2 of the BIA 11
Prescribed Security Interest 12
Claiming the Net Proceeds of Realization 14
Realization of Property by the CRA 15
A Third Party Refuses to Sell Seized Property 15
Where the Proceeds of Realisation Have Already Been Distributed 16
Distribution Prior to June 18, 1998 17
Distribution as of June 18, 1998 17
Transitional Provisions – GST/HST Deemed Trust 18
Confidentiality 18
Deemed Trust and Enhanced Requirements To Pay 20
Priority of the Deemed Trust Over Provincial Debts 21
Proposal Under the BIA or Plan of Arrangement Under the CCAA 23
More Than One Secured Creditor 23
Application of Payments 24
Merger of Corporations 24

Procedures 25
Situations Where the Debtor is not in an Insolvency Situation 25
When Can a Claim be Issued? 26
Claim Against the Debtor 26
Claim Against a Secured Creditor or a Third Party 27
When an Employer is in an Insolvency Situation 29

Digitized by Google

Collection of the Deemed Trust Amount Within the Bankruptcy Estate (Other Than by Way of Property Encumbered by Security) 30
Rejection of Our Property Claim 30
Collection of our Deemed Trust Amount Using Property Encumbered by Securities 30
Secured Creditor Who Does not Participate in the Bankruptcy Process 31
Secured Creditor Participating in the Bankruptcy Process 31
Secured Creditor Who Disposes of Property Held as Security - Section 130 of the BIA 33
Net Proceeds of Realization Greater Than The Amount of our Deemed Trust 33
Insufficient Net Proceeds of Realization 34
Possible Loss Incurred at Realization 35
Risky Situations With High Potential of Realization or Situations Where the Trustee Does Not Have Sufficient Liquidity 35
Objection to Dividend Sheet 35

Resource Material 36

Appendix 36
Appendix 1 - Deemed Trust Claim Where the Employer is not Bankrupt 37
Appendix 2 - Deemed Trust Claim - Sale 38
Appendix 3 - Covering Letter for Property Claim 39
Appendix 4 - Deemed Trust Claim - Bankruptcy - Secured Creditor 40
Appendix 5 - Deemed Trust Claim - Bankruptcy - Other person 40
Appendix 6 - Deemed Trust Claim - Bankruptcy - Redemption of Security Interest 41
Appendix 7 - Preassessment Letter – Under Section 159 of the ITA 42
Appendix 8 - Authorization From an Employer - Disclosure of Confidential Information 43
Appendix 9 - Letter to Third Party - Status of Source Deductions Account 44
Appendix 10 - Deemed Trust Claim – Registrant Other Than Bankrupt 46
Appendix 11 - Deemed Trust Claim – Sale 46
Appendix 12 - Preassessment Notice Letter – Under Section 270 of the ETA 47
Appendix 13 - Registrant Authorization – Disclosure of Confidential Information 48
Appendix 14 - Letter Sent to Third Party– GST/HST Account Status 49
Appendix 15 - Deemed Trust (DT) Calculation Sheet 50
Appendix 16 - Examples of GST/HST Deemed Trust Calculation 51

Digitized by Google

Deemed Trust

Collections Manual Updates

Overview

The present chapter deals with the deemed trust under the Income Tax Act ("ITA"), the Excise Tax Act ("ETA") and the Air Travellers Security Charge Act ("ATSCA"). On the one hand, the chapter examines the effects of the latest legislative amendments that reinforced the deemed trust provisions of the ITA and the ETA and also examines the newer deemed trust provisions under the ATSCA. At the same time, the chapter emphasizes the differences that exist in the deemed trust provisions under these three Acts.

On the other hand, the chapter reviews the policies of the Canada Revenue Agency ("the CRA") relating to the priority given to the CRA under the ITA, the ETA and the ATSCA deemed trust provisions. It also analyses the ways by which the CRA can invoke this priority against tax debtors and their creditors.

Finally, the chapter devotes a section on the procedures to be followed in order to invoke the deemed trust when the tax debtor is not in an insolvency situation and when he has filed a Notice of Intention to file a proposal, a proposal or has become bankrupt.

Legislation

The present section sets out the legislative provisions regarding deemed trusts:

- Income Tax Act, subsections 227(4), (4.1)
- Excise Tax Act, subsections 222(1), (3)
- Air Travellers Security Charge Act, 15
- Canada Pension Plan Act, 23(3), (4), (4.1)
- Employment Insurance Act, 57(2), (3), (3.1)

Related subjects:

- Legislative Provisions and Their Impact
- Legislative Amendments
- Amounts that Make up the Deemed Trust
- Priorities Arising from the Deemed Trust Provisions
- General Priority Rule

Digitized by Google

Legislative Provisions and Their Impact

The present section defines the legislative provisions and their implication concerning deemed trusts:

- Income Tax Act
- Deemed Trust and Non-Resident Accounts
- Excise Tax Act
- Air Travellers Security Charge Act

Income Tax Act

Prior to the legislative amendments of June 18, 1998, (retroactive to June 15, 1994), the ITA deemed trust stipulated:

- that the amounts a person deducted or withheld under the ITA were deemed to be held in trust for Her Majesty and kept separate and apart from the funds of the person who deducted and withheld them
- that Her Majesty had a lien and charge on the property of that person from the time the amounts were deducted, irrespective of whether that person kept the amounts separate from his own property or was in receivership, bankruptcy or liquidation

On February 27, 1997, the Supreme Court of Canada handed down a decision unfavourable to the CRA in the matter of The Queen v. Royal Bank of Canada, 97DTC 5089 (C.S.C.), also known under the name of Sparrow Electric.

In a 4:3 decision, the Supreme Court ruled that the ITA deemed trust did not have priority over the security interest held by the Royal Bank. It commented on the priority of the deemed trust in these terms:

> ... I wish to emphasize that it is open to Parliament to step in and assign absolute priority to the deemed trust. A clear illustration of how this might be done is afforded by section 224(1.2) of the ITA, which vests certain moneys in the Crown "notwithstanding any security interest in those moneys" and provides that they "shall be paid to the Receiver General in priority to any such security interest". All that is needed to effect the desired result is clear language of that kind. [Free Translation]

Deemed Trust and Non-Resident Accounts

The previous wording as well as the current wording of the deemed trust provisions applies to other amounts in addition to amounts deducted from wages. The deemed trust provisions of the ITA also apply to withholdings that a payer must make when it pays amounts to a non-resident. Consequently, the guidelines contained in this directive will also be useful to collection officers who have to collect non-resident accounts.

Digitized by Google

Excise Tax Act

Prior to the amendment of October 20, 2000, subsection 222(1) of the ETA stipulated that a person who collects an amount on account of GST/HST is considered, for all intents and purposes, to hold this amount in trust for Her Majesty until it is paid to the Receiver General.

As for subsection 222(3) of the ETA, it stated that in the event of any liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy of a person, an amount equal to the amount deemed in trust was considered not to form part of the estate in liquidation, assignment, receivership or bankruptcy.

Section 222 of the ETA was amended in 2000, to reflect the amendments that had previously been made to the ITA deemed trust provisions, except for the fact that section 222 is not effective in the context of a proposal or bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act ("BIA").

Air Travellers Security Charge Act

The provisions concerning the deemed trust pursuant to the Air Travellers Security Charge Act ("ATSCA") will be addressed below in the "Legislative Amendments" section.

Legislative Amendments

Applicable Acts:

- Income Tax Act
- Excise Tax Act
- Air Travellers Security Charge Act
- Canada Pension Plan Act, Employment Insurance Act and Unemployment Insurance Act
- Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act

Income Tax Act

On April 7, 1997, the Minister of Finance publicly announced his intention to amend the ITA, the Canada Pension Plan Act ("CPP"), the Employment Insurance Act ("EIA") and the ETA in order to clarify the priority of the deemed trust provisions over the security interests held by most creditors.

Subsection 227(4) of the ITA was amended by Bill C-28, which received Royal Assent on June 18, 1998, retroactive to June 15, 1994. In order to secure the payment of unremitted source deductions, subsection 227(4) stipulates that a debtor is considered to hold source deductions amounts in trust for Her Majesty.

Digitized by Google

Furthermore, subsection 227(4.1) states that Her Majesty has a beneficial ownership to the assets of a debtor to the extent of the amount of unremitted source deductions, notwithstanding any security interest granted on those assets. The proceeds of such property are payable to the Crown in priority to any security interest.

The Minister of Finance stressed the importance of establishing this priority, pointing out that source deductions are automatically credited to employees in respect of taxes paid for the year, and that they are remitted to the provinces who are signatories to tax collection agreements in respect of provincial taxes payable by these employees.

The ITA deemed trust cannot be invoked for source deductions attributable to pay periods prior to June 15, 1994.

Excise Tax Act

Subsections 222(1) and 222(3) of the ETA were amended by Bill C-24, which received Royal Assent on October 20, 2000. In accordance with these new subsections, the property of the debtor or the property held by a debtor's secured creditor, in an amount equal to the unremitted GST/HST collected, is considered to be owned by the Crown. This property can be used by the Crown to satisfy the outstanding tax liability of the tax debtor, notwithstanding any security interest in that property. The Crown's security interest has priority over any security interest other than a prescribed security interest. Contrary to ITA deemed trust, the ETA deemed trust does not apply in bankruptcy and insolvency situations.

As the regulation regarding the prescribed security interest has not yet been enacted, collection officers will have to apply Regulation 2201 of the ITA Regulations, dealing with prescribed security interest, to the ETA deemed trust provisions with such modifications as required by the circumstances.

For further information regarding prescribed security interest, please consult the section entitled Exceptions to the General Priority Rule.

In addition to the provisions dealing with enhanced requirements to pay and director's liability, the amended deemed trust provisions are intended to ensure the full collection of GST/HST revenues.

Deemed trust amounts collected as of October 20, 2000, or later, are subject to the new provisions pertaining to deemed trusts.

For further details, refer to Directive ARD-01-01, entitled Priority for GST/HST Deemed Trust Amounts.

Air Travellers Security Charge Act

On March 27, 2002, the ATSCA received Royal Assent and became effective on that date.

As per section 15 of the ATSCA, any debtor who collects an amount on account of the charge is considered to be holding this sum in trust for Her Majesty. Furthermore, and in a fashion similar to that of the ITA and ETA, if the debtor does not remit the sums held in trust to the Receiver General, the property of the debtor (including the property held by the debtor's secured creditors – other than a prescribed security interest) is deemed to be held in trust for Her Majesty. It is to be noted that an ATSCA deemed trust does not apply in a proposal or bankruptcy context.

Digitized by Google

As the regulation regarding the prescribed security interest has not yet been enacted, collection officers will have to apply Regulation 2201 of the ITA Regulations, dealing with prescribed security interest, to the ATSCA deemed trust provisions with such modifications as required by the circumstances.

For further information regarding prescribed security interest, please consult the section entitled Exceptions to General Priority Rule.

Canada Pension Plan Act, Employment Insurance Act and Unemployment Insurance Act

Subsections 23(3), 23(4) and 23(4.1) of the CPP, subsections 57(2), 57(3) and 57(3.1) of the Unemployment Insurance ACT ("UIA") and subsections 86(2), 86(2.1) and 86(2.2) of the Employment Insurance Act ("EIA") were amended by Bill C-28. The effect of the amendments was the same as the effect of the amendments on the ITA deemed trust provisions.

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act

Bill C-28 also amended the BIA and the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act ("CCAA") to take into account the amendments to the deemed trust provisions contained in the other acts.

The amendments to the BIA and to the CCAA also have the effect of raising the priority of provincial deemed trust provisions to the same rank as the federal Crown's priority but solely in a bankruptcy or CCAA context. For example, the Ministère du Revenu du Québec ("MRQ") can now claim a priority equal to ours in bankruptcy, for amounts of taxes and of Régie des rentes withheld on the wages of employees. However, if there is no bankruptcy or an arrangement in accordance with the CCAA, the deemed trust for a province does not have a priority equal to ours.

Amounts that Make up The Deemed Trust

In order to satisfy a deemed trust debt, the CRA can seize property of the tax debtor up to the amount of its claim, in priority to the debtor's secured creditor(s). The CRA can also claim from the secured creditor(s) the proceeds of the sale of property belonging to the debtor and on which the secured creditor holds a security interest.

However, in order for a the CRA deemed trust to be well-founded, it is important that collection officers be able to provide justification on how the deemed trust amounts were calculated. Hence, a subsection 152(7) ITA assessment cannot give rise to a deemed trust claim, as it is impossible to confirm the amounts that were withheld, nor can a claim be based on a "T-4 difference."

Applicable acts:

Digitized by Google

- Income Tax Act
- Excise Tax Act
- Amounts Collected, Deemed to Have Been Collected, Collectible and Net Tax
- Air Travellers Security Charge Act

Income Tax Act

The ITA deemed trust is made up of amounts that have been deducted from the wages of employees and not remitted to the CRA. More specifically, the ITA deemed trust is composed of the following amounts:

- federal and provincial income tax
- employee contributions to the CPP; and
- EI and UI employee premiums

The ITA deemed trust does not apply to CPP contributions made by the employer nor to the EI premiums paid by the employer. Furthermore, it does not apply to amounts that were not deducted from the earnings of employees and that could have been assessed in accordance with subsection 227(10) of the ITA. Nor does the deemed trust extend to interest and/or penalties that have accrued on the deemed trust amounts.

Excise Tax Act

The ETA deemed trust applies to GST/HST amounts collected or deemed to have been collected (after the input tax credits and other tax adjustments have been deducted) that have not been remitted to the CRA. As with the deemed trust of the ITA, the ETA deemed trust does not encompass interest charges and/or penalties that have accumulated on the deemed trust amounts. Furthermore, the ETA deemed trust does not apply to "collectible" amounts, being amounts charged to the debtor's accounts receivable.

When a debtor files his GST/HST return, the amount of GST/HST collected and collectible is combined as a single amount. In circumstances when there are no accounts receivable, calculating the deemed trust amount is easy. As penalty and interest or other charges do not form part of the deemed trust, these amounts are deducted from the total deemed trust amount. The remaining balance will be the deemed trust amount.

However, if the debtor has accounts receivable, the CRA must subtract the amount of taxes collectible that are due on these accounts from the deemed trust. To do so, the collection officer must multiply the amount of the accounts receivable by 107%. The amount thus calculated will be deducted from the amount of GST/HST indicated in the debtor's return. This calculation does not permit the calculation of the collectible GST/HST to the nearest dollar, but it will ensure that the registrant is receiving fair and equitable treatment by the CRA.

Digitized by Google

Amounts Collected, Deemed to Have Been Collected, Collectible and Net Tax

A debtor is required to file a return based on his filing period (monthly, quarterly or annually). The return must indicate the total amount of his sales for the period concerned as well as the total amount of collected or collectible GST/HST.

The difference between collected and collectible amounts is not always clear. Let's simply say that the collected amounts are the amounts of GST/HST collected on sales and paid by the client (by cheque, debit card, credit card, etc.) at the time of the sale. This means that when a client pays his purchase, the debtor collects the GST/HST. Since the debtor collected the tax on behalf of the Crown, the corresponding amounts are deemed to be held in trust until the end of his filing period, after which the debtor must remit the amount of net tax.

On the other hand, the collectible amounts designate amounts charged to the debtor's accounts receivable. Even if the client has not paid the debtor, the debtor must include this transaction in his total sales amount when he files his return. However, at this stage, the debtor has collected only part of the amount (initial payment) or has not collected any amount. Consequently, the part of the amount of this transaction that applies to GST/HST is a collectible amount and is not included in the deemed trust amount. Once the client has paid the amount payable to the debtor, the amount in question becomes a collected amount.

Net tax is the amount left after having deducted the ITCs and other tax adjustments and it includes collectible and collected GST/HST. As indicated hereinafter, you must determine the collected amount for the deemed trust.

Section 222.1 of the ETA deals with amounts of GST/HST deemed to have been collected. Under this new provision, the purchaser of an account receivable (such as a factor) is not required to remit the GST/HST component of his purchase. In fact, at the time the factor purchases the accounts receivable, the tax is deemed to have been collected by the debtor. This amount is then added to any deemed trust amounts the debtor currently has outstanding.

It is important to note that section 222.1 does not apply to a deemed trust amount that was outstanding at the time of the sale. In the event there are deemed trust amounts outstanding at the time of sale of the accounts receivable to a factor, the Crown is the real owner of the accounts receivable to the extent of the amount of the deemed trust outstanding.

Air Travellers Security Charge Act

In a similar fashion to the ETA deemed trust, ATSCA deemed trust amounts are those that have been collected by the debtor (after certain adjustments including those set out by section 32). This deemed trust does not apply to interest or penalties that could be payable on these amounts, nor to collectible amounts.

Priorities Arising From the Deemed Trust Provisions

As a general rule, the deemed trust provisions hold that Her Majesty has beneficial ownership of property of a debtor in the event the latter fails to remit deemed trust amounts. This beneficial ownership ensures that Her Majesty has a right to the assets of the debtor, in priority to all of the debtor's secured creditors (other than those having a prescribed security interest). The CRA's priority is not conditional on the filing of any claim as it stems directly from the applicable legislation, namely the ITA, the ETA, the ATSCA, the CCP, the EIA and the UIA.

Digitized by Google

On the one hand, the deemed trust is a mechanism that allows the CRA to seize the property of a debtor to the extent of the amount of the deemed trust. On the other hand, if a secured creditor takes possession of the property on which he has a security interest, the CRA has a right to the proceeds of disposition of the property in priority to virtually all secured creditor(s). However, we must always ensure that the creditor who seizes a debtor's property holds a security interest as defined in subsection 224(1.3) of the ITA, subsection 123(1) of the ETA and section 2 of the ATSCA. Therefore, a lessor and a conditional sales vendor are not considered secured creditors and are not subject to the deemed trust.

For further information, refer to Directive RCD-99-07 entitled Priority for Deemed Trust and Memorandum 03-09, entitled Validating Bank Act Security (S.427 Bank Act).

Applicable acts:

- Income Tax Act
- Excise Tax Act
- Air Travellers Security Charge Act

Income Tax Act

The CRA's priority arises once the amounts are withheld from the salaries and wages of employees. However, such amounts cannot be claimed before the date the debtor is required to remit them. Section 108 of the Income Tax Regulations stipulates at what moment the debtor must make the remittance to the Receiver General.

The CRA can enforce its priority under the deemed trust either against a third party, such as a secured creditor who takes measures against the employer's property, either directly against the debtor. The Situations Where the Debtor is not in an Insolvency Situations section will address this subject more exhaustively. Under proposals or bankruptcies, the priority of the deemed trust under the ITA remains intact against secured creditors. The section When an Employer is in an Insolvency Situation will address these situations.

Excise Tax Act

On the other hand, the CRA's priority under the deemed trust provisions of the ETA comes into existence the moment the amounts are collected or are deemed to have been collected. Such amounts cannot be claimed before the date on which the debtor is required to remit these amounts to the Receiver General.

Furthermore, contrary to the ITA deemed trust, the modified deemed trust provisions of the ETA are not enforceable when the debtor has filed a notice of intention to file a proposal, a proposal or has become bankrupt. In other words, a deemed trust debt under the ETA becomes an ordinary claim in a bankruptcy or proposal context unless an enhanced requirement to pay has been issued before the bankruptcy or proposal.

Digitized by Google

For further information on this subject, please refer to Communication ARD 2004-035, entitled Collecting GST/HST in an Insolvency.

As in the case of the deemed trust under the ITA, the CRA can enforce its priority under the deemed trust either against a third party, such as a secured creditor who takes measures against the debtor's property, either directly against the debtor. For further details, refer to the section entitled, Situations Where the Debtor is not in an Insolvency Situation.

Air Travellers Security Charge Act

The CRA's priority under the ATSCA comes into existence the moment the amounts are collected or deemed to have been collected. In the same way, such amounts cannot be claimed before the date on which the debtor is required to remit these amounts to the Receiver General.

The provisions of the ATSCA in regards to the deemed trust are not enforceable in cases of the debtor's bankruptcy, notice of intention or proposal. As such, a deemed trust debt under the ATSCA becomes an ordinary claim in a bankruptcy or proposal context unless an enhanced requirement to pay has been issued before the bankruptcy or proposal.

As in the case of the deemed trust under the ITA and the ETA, the CRA can enforce its priority under the deemed trust either against a third party, such as a secured creditor, either directly against the debtor.

For further details, refer to the section entitled, Situations where the Debtor is not in an Insolvency Situation.

General Priority Rule

As set out briefly above, the CRA has beneficial ownership to the property of a debtor who is liable for the payment of deemed trust amounts. This beneficial ownership provides the CRA with priority on a debtor's property notwithstanding any security interest on the property. The term "security interest" is defined in subsection 224(1.3), in subsection 123(1) of the ETA and in section 2 of the ATSCA as follows:

> Interest in property that secures payment or performance of an obligation and includes interest created by or arising out of a debenture, mortgage, lien, pledge, charge, deemed or actual trust, assignment or encumbrance of any kind whatever, however or whenever arising, created, deemed to arise or otherwise provided for.

Please note that the term "security interest" does not include a prescribed security interest. The exceptions to the deemed trust priority rank, including the prescribed security interest, are discussed hereinafter in the Policy section and apply to the deemed trusts under ITA, the ETA and the ATSCA.

Digitized by Google

Policy

The present section specifies the policy concerning deemed trusts:

- Introduction
- Exceptions to the General Priority Rule
- Claiming the Net Proceeds of Realization
- Realization of Property by the CRA
- A Third Party Refuses to Sell Seized Property
- Where the Proceeds of the Realization Have Already Been Distributed
- Distribution Prior to June 18, 1998
- Distribution as of June 18, 1998
- Transitional Provisions – GST/HST Deemed Trust
- Confidentiality
- Deemed Trust and Enhanced Requirements to Pay
- Priority of the Deemed Trust Over Provincial Debts
- Proposal Under the BIA or Plan of Arrangement Under the CCAA
- More Than One Secured Creditor
- Application of Payments
- Merger of Corporations

Introduction

The existence of our deemed trust does not have to be proven. The legislation is sufficiently clear in this regard. What is less clear however, is how we calculate the amounts that make up the deemed trust.

When legal action aimed at recovering our deemed trust is contemplated, we must remember that the burden of proof rests with the CRA.

In the case of the deemed trust, the foregoing means that we must be able to demonstrate, upon request, how we came up with the amounts we are claiming on account of the deemed trust. In other words we must be able to explain how they were determined or calculated. These details must be forwarded to the Department of Justice whenever a case is referred to them for legal action in connection with our deemed trust.

Digitized by Google

The amounts that cannot be positively identified as being part of the deemed trust must not be included as part of our claim. For example, a deemed trust claim cannot be based on a subsection 152(7) ITA assessment nor a "T-4 difference."

Exceptions to the General Priority Rule

As we have seen previously in the section Priorities Arising from the Deemed Trust Provisions, the deemed trust provides the CRA with an almost absolute priority over the debtor's creditors with regards to the debtor's property or the proceeds arising from its disposition. However, there are exceptions to this general priority rule that can be found either in the applicable legislation or in the court judgments, which have been included in the CRA's policies.

Therefore, the deemed trust has priority over any security interest as defined under subsection 224(1.3) of the ITA, subsection 123(1) of the ETA and section 2 of the ATSCA, except in the case of:

- an unpaid supplier, farmer, fisherman or aquiculturalist provided for in sections 81.1 and 81.2 of the BIA
- a prescribed security interest as described in new subsection 227(4.2) of the ITA, subsection 222(4) of the ETA and subsection 15(1) of the ATSCA
- a lease or a conditional sales contract; or
- a third party purchaser in good faith

Furthermore, the CRA agrees that legal or court costs, in particular sheriff and bailiff fees have priority over the deemed trust amounts.

Related subjects:

- Sections 81.1 and 81.2 of the BIA
- Prescribed security interest

Sections 81.1 and 81.2 of the BIA

As a general rule, section 81.1 gives unpaid suppliers a right to repossess goods sold and delivered to the insolvent debtor within thirty days after the goods were delivered.

Under section 81.2, farmers, fishermen, or aquiculturalist have a first charge on the insolvent debtor's inventory, for the amount of the products of agriculture, sea or aquaculture sold and delivered to the debtor. This charge is valid only if the goods were delivered within the 15 days prior to the debtor's bankruptcy.

Digitized by Google

Prescribed Security Interest

Similarly to the ITA deemed trust provisions, Regulation 2201 of the Income Tax Regulations applies retroactively as of June 15, 1994. As for the ETA and ATSCA deemed trust, although the provisions concerning prescribed security interests are not yet effective, the CRA's policy is to apply the deemed trust in regards to these Acts as if a prescribed security interest is currently in effect.

For further information concerning prescribed security interest, please refer to Directive RCD 00-07, entitled Regulation 2201 - Prescribed Security Interest.

Related subjects:

- The Deemed Trust Date
- Amounts Deducted Prior to the Mortgage Registration
- Extension of the Prescribed Security Interest – Insurance or Expropriation Proceeds
- What is Excluded from the Prescribed Security Interest
- Reduction to the Prescribed Security Interest
- Leases and Conditional Sales Contracts
- Third Party Purchaser in Good Faith
- Court Costs

The Deemed Trust Date

The deemed trust date, being the date the deemed trust arose, is a concept that goes hand-in-hand with the prescribed security interest. On the one hand, the date is crucial in fixing a point in time from which to determine the property of the employer (at that date) that can be used to satisfy the amount of the deemed trust in which the CRA has a beneficial interest. On the other hand it is necessary to determine the deemed trust date for the purpose of calculating the prescribed security interest.

Employers are required to withhold amounts from their employees' wages on account of income tax and other source deductions. From the date of the actual deduction or withholding, being payday, these funds are held in trust until the date the employer is required to remit these funds. In the same way, the deemed trust date for the purpose of the ETA and the ATSCA is the date when the GST/HST amount or the air travellers' security charge is collected.

In regards to the above, the date on which the debtor is required to remit the trust funds is not a factor.

Amounts Deducted Prior to the Mortgage Registration

Regulation 2201(1) stipulates "...where the mortgage is registered... before the time the amount is deemed to be held in trust by the person." Consequently, unpaid source deductions, which pertain to wages paid before the registration of a mortgage on land or buildings, have priority over the mortgage claim.

Digitized by Google

Extension of the Prescribed Security Interest - Insurance or Expropriation Proceeds

Regulation 2201(3) specifies that the exception enjoyed by the holder of a mortgage on land or buildings extends to insurance or expropriation proceeds payable with regard to such property.

What is Excluded from the Prescribed Security Interest

As per subsection 2201(3) of the ITA Regulations, a prescribed security interest does not include:

- a lien or any other security that is created by statute
- an assignment of rents or leases
- a mortgage interest in equipment or fixtures that can be removed from the land or building and disposed of separately

Reduction to the Prescribed Security Interest

Regulation 2201 assigns a priority to mortgages on land and buildings that were registered before the deemed trust date. However, in certain circumstances and for sums that must be remitted after January 1, 2000, the prescribed security interest amount may be reduced.

Subsection 2201(2) stipulates that where the debtor fails to pay an amount deemed to be held in trust, the amount of the prescribed security interest is deemed not to exceed the difference between the secured obligation and the total of the following amounts:

- all amounts of all the rights of the secured creditor including guarantees or rights of set-off but not including the mortgage
- all amounts applied after the time of the failure on account of the obligation, so long as any amount deemed

Essentially, the maximum amount of a secured creditor's prescribed security interest is determined by calculating the value of the outstanding obligation (amount due) secured by the mortgage, less the value of any other security the lender may use to satisfy his debt. So, if a secured creditor holds a third party guarantee, the value of the guarantee will reduce the amount of the secured creditor's prescribed security interest.

However, a security interest granted by a debtor on property other than land and buildings (such as inventory or equipment) is not included in the calculation of the prescribed security interest. The reason behind this exclusion is that the CRA already holds a beneficial interest in that property by virtue of the deemed trust provisions.

Digitized by Google

Moreover, the prescribed security interest is limited to the outstanding amount of the obligation at the deemed trust date. Consequently, if advances secured by a mortgage on real estate are made over a period of time and a failure to remit occurs during that period, the portion of these advances made before the deemed trust date is protected by the prescribed security interest, but the portion of the advances made after the deemed trust date is subordinated to the deemed trust.

As well, if the debtor makes any payments pursuant to the mortgage agreement after the deemed trust date, the payments will reduce the amount of the prescribed security interest.

Leases and Conditional Sales Contracts

Collection officers must not invoke the priority of the deemed trust against lessors and conditional sales vendors in order to seize the property that is the object of the lease or the conditional sales contracts. In fact, recent decisions have confirmed that this property is not held in trust on behalf of Her Majesty, as the tax debtor is not the owner of the property.

It is recommended that collection officers review the leases and conditional sales contracts in order to verify that the lessor/instalment vendor remains the owner of the asset for the length of the lease or the conditional sales contract. Otherwise, collection officers should communicate with the regional office of the Department of Justice.

For further details, refer to Memorandum 02-14 entitled, Deemed Trust and Leases, CSC and Third Party Purchasers for Value.

Third Party Purchasers in Good Faith

The CRA has never applied the deemed trust provisions against third parties who have acquired assets from a tax debtor at fair market value in the normal course of business. Factoring companies that buy accounts receivable from debtors for less than their book value are considered third party purchasers acting in good faith.

In view of the decision by the Supreme Court of Canada in the matter of First Vancouver, collection officers must not issue deemed trust claims against factoring companies for collected accounts receivable.

For further information, please refer to Memorandum 02-14 entitled, Deemed Trust and Leases, CSC and Third Party Purchasers for Value.

Court Costs

The CRA will not claim the priority of its deemed trust over legal or court costs. To do so would entail taking the risk that sheriffs, bailiffs and other civil enforcement officers could refuse to act when their services are required.

Claiming the Net Proceeds of Realization

Digitized by Google

When we demand that a secured creditor pay the amount of our deemed trust from the proceeds of realization of the property in which he holds a security interest, the CRA allows him to deduct the actual reasonable disbursements that he incurred to sell the property. As such, the amount realized minus the actual disbursements directly related to the realization represents the "net proceeds of realization."

Some examples of realisation costs are: storage costs, insurance premiums, advertising expenses, bailiff or sheriff fees, transportation fees, towing charges, sales commission and cleaning & preparation costs. Depending on the situation, these may be legitimate costs incurred in the process of disposing of an asset.

Note that the CRA will not authorize any deduction from the proceeds of realisation to defray the time the creditor spent on realization. This is an ordinary internal cost of the secured creditor and not an out-of-pocket expense resulting from the realisation process. In realizing its security, the secured creditor is taking a chance that it will recover at least part of its secured claim. Lawyers' fees are an example of an outlay that is not recoverable in priority to our deemed trust.

In short, the secured creditor will have to remit to us the lesser of two amounts:

- the net proceeds of realization, or
- the amount of our deemed trust claim

The purpose of this policy is to avoid a situation where the creditor refuses to take the risk of realizing his security.

Realization of Property by the CRA

The deemed trust provisions are used to ensure the CRA's right to the debtor's property in priority to any secured debtor. Consequently, not only can we invoke the provisions when a third party takes action against the property of a debtor but we can also invoke them to seize property in the debtor's hands. To do so, the CRA will issue a writ of seizure to the sheriff together with a deemed trust claim to let him know that we are claiming on two separate levels.

A Third Party Refuses to Sell Seized Property

There is no legislative provision that allows a secured creditor to leave the property with the CRA so that the latter can realize it in his place. In fact the deemed trust provisions only allow the CRA to claim the proceeds of the sale of the goods covered by the deemed trust. Therefore, the secured creditor will either have to sell the property himself or leave it in the hands of the debtor. The opposite is also true. The CRA cannot force a secured creditor or a third party to sell property covered by the deemed trust. As such, it is possible for a secured creditor to keep property in his possession without the CRA being able to do anything about it. In such situations, we must simply wait for the creditor to sell the property and claim priority to the proceeds of disposition.

Digitized by Google

Where the Proceeds of Realisation Have Already Been Distributed

When a third party (secured creditor or a bailiff, sheriff) proceeds to seize property covered by the deemed trust, the CRA has the right to receive the proceeds of the disposition in priority to any other secured creditor (other than a creditor falling within the exceptions mentioned earlier). When the third party holds the proceeds of disposition, the CRA must simply issue him a deemed trust claim. The following paragraphs address situations where the third party has already distributed the proceeds of the disposition stemming from the sale of the goods covered by the deemed trust.

A. General Rule

When a third party distributes the proceeds of disposition of goods that are subject to the deemed trust before the CRA can produce a deemed trust claim, the CRA nevertheless retains its remedies against the third party.

In fact, it must be remembered that the application of the deemed trust provisions is not conditional on the filing of a claim in the hands of a person who liquidates, realizes or otherwise disposes of the debtor's goods. Even when a claim is not filed before the distribution, circumstances may justify an assessment under sections 159 of the ITA and 270 of the ETA or the institution of a legal action against the person concerned.

For further information regarding this type of assessment in a deemed trust context please refer to Claim Against a Secured Creditor or Third Party.

B. Distribution by a Trustee in Bankruptcy

Where the trustee has distributed the proceeds of realization of property, you may object to the dividend sheet, provided the delay for doing so has not elapsed. More information on that recourse is provided under the section Risky Situations With High Potential of Realization or Situations Where the Trustee Does not Have Sufficient Liquidity. In certain circumstances, you may also contemplate filing an application in court under section 37 of the BIA. The use of this provision is further discussed in the section Redemption by the Trustee of Property Encumbered by Security Subsection 128(3) of the BIA.

C. Distribution by a Bailiff, a Sheriff or the Clerk of a Court

Several recourses are open to the CRA when third parties are charged with realizing property of the debtor or distributing the proceeds of realization of such property and the proceeds of the sale of these goods are distributed without the CRA receiving its deemed trust amount.

First of all, if a payment scheme was followed when distributing the proceeds of the sale or of the realization of the debtor's assets the CRA will be able to claim the amount of its deemed trust from the last creditor on the payment scheme, since they benefited from amounts they should not have received.

Digitized by Google

Secondly, it may be possible to assess under sections 159 of the ITA or 270 of the ETA if there is failure to obtain a discharge certificate. For further information regarding this type of assessment in a deemed trust context, please refer to Claim Against a Secured Creditor or Third Party.

Note: It is not possible to issue such an assessment under the ATSCA.

The CRA can also consider the possibility of instituting legal action against the third party in order to recover the amount the CRA is entitled to. To the extent that the executing officer was unable to determine the existence of our deemed trust, no recourse will normally be undertaken. However, if the executing officer was aware of our debt, or should have inquired about the possibility of such a debt, the Department of Justice will be consulted in order to determine the appropriate approach.

Distribution Prior to June 18, 1998

Although the amendments to the deemed trust for source deductions are retroactive to June 15, 1994, the decision to invoke the deemed trust prior to June 18, 1998, must be made on a case-by-case basis. In general, the CRA will rely on the retroactive character of the deemed trust provisions for source deductions where it can be demonstrated that the person in question was aware of our priority and of the impending legislative amendments.

In situations where this criterion is not met, the decision to proceed will be taken in conjunction with your Field Support programs officer at Headquarters, taking into consideration the recommendation of the Department of Justice. Furthermore, it will be necessary to take into account:

- the cost-effectiveness of the measures contemplated, such as the expenses incurred when the case is referred to the Department of Justice
- the evidence available if it goes to court
- the possible impact on the CRA's image, for example if the contemplated action may appear unfair in the public's eye

Distribution as of June 18, 1998

The decision to take action must be made based on the following factors:

- the cost of the action contemplated
- the amounts to be recovered
- the existence of less costly avenues of recovery and

Digitized by Google

- the effect on compliance

When the only recourse available is to initiate legal action to recover the amounts owed to the CRA, the amount will have to be relatively high. The cost associated with the services provided to us by the Department of Justice is high, and since the number of lawyers in the regional offices of the Department of Justice is limited, the time a lawyer spends on a case to recover a modest amount could prevent him from dealing in time with a case that has a higher monetary potential.

A. Minimum Threshold

Please note that Headquarters has adopted a new policy by which a request for assistance will not be routed to the Department of Justice if the CRA's deemed trust claim against a third party is below PROTECTED. Of course, local management retains the authority to raise (but not to lower) this minimum threshold to take into consideration various operational realities.

Our deemed trust claims are often filed against financial institutions, trustees, etc. In order to ensure future compliance, certain cases will merit Department of Justice intervention even if the amounts in question are not significant.

Transitional Provisions -- GST/HST Deemed Trust

Under the ETA, the deemed trust arises at the moment of collection by the debtor. In other words, an amount collected on or after October 20, 2000 on account of the deemed trust will be subject to the new deemed trust provisions. Practically speaking, this means that the debtor's reporting period (monthly, quarterly or annually) will be used to determine precisely the deemed trust amount collected in the reporting period that includes October 20, 2000, and this task will be extremely difficult and time consuming. Although these amounts could be determined by an audit, we must recognise the impracticality of requesting an audit for each and every deemed trust account. Therefore, the CRA has determined that the new provisions will be applied to a debtor's first reporting period commencing after the date of Royal Assent.

It must be noted that there could be exceptions to this rule where the outstanding amount warrants it. Consult with your Field Support programs officer before pursuing this measure.

Confidentiality

A. The Communication of Information to Prospective Lenders or Purchasers

In order to reduce the impact of the deemed trust provisions on perspective lenders or purchasers, the Department of Finance has indicated that certain information on a debtor's file may be provided to a prospective lender or purchaser. There is no specific provision for the disclosure of information to such persons in sections 241 of the ITA and 295 of the ETA (the ATSCA does not have such provisions) nor can it be regarded as necessary for the purposes of the administration or enforcement of the ITA and the ETA. Therefore it will be necessary to obtain written authorization from the debtor before disclosing any information to a prospective lender or purchaser. We will then have to transmit the information to the third party by letter, within a reasonable amount of time.

Digitized by Google

The form letters to that effect are exhaustive. Appendices 8 and 9 attached herein must be used for the disclosure of confidential information under the ITA. Please refer to Appendices 13 and 14 attached for the disclosure of information under the ETA.

Only the information requested must be provided. The sample letters above will have to be adapted to the circumstances of each case. However, the disclaimer clauses found in the last six paragraphs of Appendix 9 (for the ITA) and 14 (for the ETA) must be shown on all information disclosure letters.

The CRA staff must keep in mind that:

- a debtor has to authorize a financial institution to access information in its file to get a loan
- under the confidentiality provisions of the ITA and the ETA, the CRA may disclose information with a taxpayer's consent but it is not required to do so
- financial institutions may try to make the CRA liable for providing inaccurate or incomplete information on a debtor's file
- it is important that information be provided in writing only

If no written authorization to disclose information is provided to you, you can forward the information directly to the debtor. No information about the debtor is to be disclosed verbally to the third party, not even confirmation that the information the third party received earlier by letter is correct or that the client's situation is unchanged. If you encounter specific problems, consult your Field Support Programs officer at Headquarters before disclosing any information.

Unless a debtor's account is under the responsibility of the Collections Division, collection officers should not have to respond to inquiries.

For further details, refer to the Collections Manual chapter entitled, Confidentiality: Providing Information to a Third Party.

B. Filing of Claims with Third Parties

It should be noted that you should never send a claim to a secured creditor "in the event that" he decides to realize his security interest. In fact, the confidentiality provisions in the ITA section 241 and in the ETA section 295 are very strict.

Digitized by Google

Note: The ATSCA does not have provisions dealing with confidential information.

Filing a claim as a preventive measure would constitute an unauthorized disclosure of confidential information. Furthermore, such a measure has no advantages for the CRA. Indeed, even though it is definitely preferable to promptly file a claim, the fact remains that our priority for deemed trust amounts can be claimed at any time, regardless of whether a claim in this regard has been filed.

C. Communication of Information to a Third Party who is Liable for a Deemed Trust Amount

Where the CRA must file a claim with a third party for a deemed trust amount, we must use one of the form letters listed within the Appendix. These letters contain the details of our claim and the breakdown of our debt. However a third party (primarily a secured creditor) may wish that the CRA provide further proof in support of its claim. In such cases it is appropriate that the collection officer provide the third party with a copy of the Notice of Assessment for the source deductions amount that was used in the calculation of the deemed trust claim by the collection officer who prepared the claim. If the third party is not satisfied with the way the deemed trust was calculated, the collection officers must resist requests for additional documentary proof.

Deemed Trust and Enhanced Requirements To Pay

A. Income Tax Act

Amounts deemed to be held in trust under the ITA are amounts withheld directly on the gross earnings of employees. They are comprised of income tax, employee portion of CPP contributions and employee portion of employment insurance premiums. They do not include penalties, interest nor the employer's CPP and employment insurance contributions. As for enhanced requirements to pay, they allow for the recovery in full of a Paydac account, including penalties, interest and employer contributions. These requirements are issued pursuant to subsection 224(1.2) of the ITA and not under the deemed trust provisions.

B. Excise Tax Act

In the same fashion, amounts deemed to be held in trust under the ETA are net tax amounts that were collected, or deemed to have been collected and do not include collectible amounts nor interest and penalties. The enhanced requirements to pay issued under subsection 317(3) allow for the recovery of the deemed trust amounts in addition to the full amount of GST/HST owed, interest, penalties and other charges.

C. Air Travellers Security Charge Act

Digitized by Google

Deemed trust amounts for the ATSCA are charge amounts that have been collected or deemed to have been collected and do not include collectible amounts nor interest and penalties. The enhanced requirements to pay issued under subsection 75(3) of the ATSCA allow for the recovery of deemed trust amounts in addition to the full amount of charges owed, interest, penalties and other charges.

It is important to respect the above distinctions. Deemed trust claims (under the ITA, the ETA and the ATSCA) must be filed by using letters, not through issuing enhanced requirements to pay, which are to be used to intercept amounts payable to the debtor.

Requirements to pay are issued to a third party who is liable for the payment of an amount to the debtor or to a debtor's secured creditor.

For further information regarding the use of enhanced requirements to pay in sectors other than construction, please refer to Communication ARD 2004-009, entitled Deemed Trusts and Enhanced Requirements To Pay in Sectors Other than Construction.

Priority of the Deemed Trust Over Provincial Debts

Taking the position that the deemed trust provisions are broad enough, the CRA will demand payment of our deemed trust before certain amounts to which provincial legislation grants special status, such as property tax arrears. However, any application of the deemed trust provisions are subject, where applicable, to the funds sharing agreement (Memorandums of Understanding) entered into by Canada with each applicable province. Collection officers are encouraged to review the funds sharing agreement for their province.

Under subsection 227(4.3) of the ITA and sections 122 of the ETA and 6 of the ATSCA, the deemed trusts arising under these laws have priority over a secured federal or provincial Crown claim. When the federal Crown, the provincial Crown or a Crown agent, holds a security interest in the debtor's property, this interest is subject to the deemed trust provisions under the ITA, the ETA and the ATSCA.

However, the CRA does not assert the priority conferred by the deemed trust provisions over legal and/or court costs. For further details please see section Exceptions to the General Priority Rule.

A. Province of Quebec

Income Tax Act

The CRA takes the position that the wording of section 227 of the ITA is sufficient to give it precedence over the provincial government's priority on movable property under the Quebec Civil Code ("QCC"). In situations where concurrent measures were taken by both organizations (CRA and MRQ) with respect to the same property of the debtor, the funds sharing agreement will apply. In the absence of an agreement, or should a conflict arise, the CRA's deemed trust must be paid before the MRQ priority. In the event the CRA is not paid in priority, you will have to contact your Field Support programs officer at HQ who could contact the Department of Justice.

Digitized by Google

Excise Tax Act

The CRA considers that the wording of section 222 of the ETA confers it priority over the province concerning movable property under the QCC. In cases where concomitant measures are taken by the CRA and MRQ on property of the debtor same property, the funds sharing agreement applies. In the absence of an agreement or should a conflict arise, the CRA's deemed trust must be paid before the MRQ priority. In the event the CRA is not paid in priority, you will have to contact your Field Support programs officer at HQ who could contact the Department of Justice.

B. Priority on Employees' Unpaid Salaries

Generally, the CRA must continue to assert the deemed trust priority over the claims of employees for unpaid salaries. In fact, as deemed trust provisions grant the CRA priority over this type of claim, the CRA would be out of place to abdicate its rights and prerogatives.

Occasionally, the CRA may allow employees to be paid before a deemed trust claim. This type of decision will be taken depending on the circumstances of each situation, including the relative importance of amounts in question, the positions held by the employees, the fact of whether employees were aware of the CRA claim (or the organization acting on behalf of the employees) at the time of realization of the debtor's property and the sensitivity of the file.

If collection officers wish to grant priority to employee claims, they must contact their Field Support programs officer.

C. Priority of Provincial Sales Tax

The GST is collected together with the Provincial Sales Tax. The provinces of British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario each collect their own provincial sales tax. In these provinces, the priority of the GST deemed trust is established in accordance with the funds sharing agreement (Memorandum of Understanding) concluded with the CRA.

In the provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, the CRA collects the Harmonized Sales Tax (HST), on behalf of the provinces. The HST is a combination of the GST and the applicable provincial sales tax. In these provinces, the total GST/HST deemed trust amount grants Her Majesty beneficial ownership on the debtor's property and priority to this property and to all proceeds stemming from the disposition of this property, over all creditors.

Digitized by Google

Subsection 317(12) allows the CRA to issue a requirement to pay in regards to a province, in order to collect GST/HST.

Proposal Under the BIA or Plan of Arrangement Under the CCAA

A. Income Tax Act

As part of a proposal filed under the BIA or a plan of arrangement concluded under the CCAA, collection officers should not invoke the deemed trust priority under the ITA. In fact, as subsections 60(1.1) of the BIA and 18.2(1) of the CCAA provide for the payment in full of source deductions arrears (not only amounts affected by the deemed trust) within six months following approval of the proposal or the court arrangement, it is beneficial to invoke these provisions instead of issuing a deemed trust claim.

For additional information on the application of subsection 60(1.1) of the BIA, please refer to Communication ARD 2004-039 entitled The Application of Subsection 60(1.1) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act.

However, this protection does not apply to consumer proposals. In those situations, it is recommended to insert a clause in the proposal, before its approval, using the wording of subsection 60(1.1) of the BIA to which we would make the necessary adjustments. This approach allows us to recover all of the amounts owing by the debtor. Obviously, this is only possible if the CRA is able to control the vote for the approval of the proposal.

In situations where the proposal does not provide a clause ensuring the payment in full of our source deductions, the CRA will file a deemed trust claim with the trustee or the administrator to recover part of the income tax, employee portion of CPP and Employment Insurance.

More Than One Secured Creditor

It is common for a tax debtor to pledge his property to more than one secured creditor. This means we will often have to collect our deemed trust simultaneously from different sources; for example, from the trustee in bankruptcy, or from a receiver appointed by a secured creditor and a secured creditor acting on his own behalf. In these situations, proofs of claim including property claims will be sent to any person involved in the realization of the debtor's property or in the distribution of the proceeds.

For ETA and ATSCA cases, if an enhanced requirement to pay has been issued before the bankruptcy date refer to Communication ARD 2004-035 entitled, Collecting GST/HST in an Insolvency.

It may seem unfair that a secured creditor would have to pay amounts to the CRA without other creditors in the same class having to do the same. Hence, when feasible, we may claim part of the amount from each of the secured creditors. However, it must be borne in mind that the CRA's mandate is to protect the interests of the Crown by making sure that the amounts owing to it are paid promptly using the quickest and easiest collection methods. Therefore, it is necessary to avoid taking unnecessary risks and, at all times, to choose the most cost-effective option for the CRA.

Digitized by Google

Application of Payments

The CRA expects that the main difficulty in managing deemed trust files will be to explain the application of payments or other credits on a debtor's account. In all cases where payments or credits are considered in the calculation of our deemed trust amount, we must prepare a table detailing how we arrived at the deemed trust amount that we are claiming. With respect to the ITA, Appendix 6 includes an area where a breakdown the arrears amount can be clearly indicated. With respect to the ETA, we invite you to refer to the attached Appendix 15. A copy of this worksheet must be permanently kept in the file.

We must bear in mind that there is no legal prohibition against the CRA applying payments or credits in the most advantageous fashion. In this regard, the CRA is subject to the general principle that applies to any creditor. In the absence of instructions from the debtor, the creditor may apply a payment wherever it wishes. Consequently, unless the debtor specifies where he wants his payment to be applied, the CRA is free to apply the payment wherever it wants.

In view of the exceptions described in the preceding paragraphs, the CRA will apply payments and credits first against the amounts that are not part of its deemed trust, in order to maximize the amounts that the CRA can recover in priority by means of its deemed trust.

Nonetheless, it is necessary to act prudently and logically. For example, if the CRA assesses a third party for a transfer of property that occurred in 1997 and the latter pays the total amount of the source deductions owed by the transferor for 1997 and prior years, the payment must be applied against the period concerned. Similarly, if a trustee makes payments to satisfy our property claim, these amounts will necessarily have to be applied against the deemed trust.

The GST system automatically allocates arrears payments to the oldest applicable period, then to penalties and interest, and then to the next oldest applicable period. Recent arrears payments and credits are first applied against amounts that are not part of the deemed trust (penalties, interest and collectible amounts) in order to maximize the amounts that the CRA can recover by means of its deemed trust.

Merger of Corporations

Our deemed trust priority will be claimed from a corporation that absorbs another corporation and liquidates its property or from the representative of such a corporation. Although sections 159 of the ITA and 270 of the ETA already provide for the CRA to be paid ahead of unsecured creditors, the deemed trust provisions allow the CRA to be paid ahead of secured creditors.

Digitized by Google

Procedures

The CRA intends to take maximum advantage of the priority ranking of the deemed trust provisions. The measures to be taken and the applicable procedures will depend on the circumstances of each case. The number of possible situations is infinite. That is why it will be necessary to analyse each case and determine the best approach under the circumstances. As a general rule, the collection of an account is effected using the easiest and least costly means for the CRA. This is also true for deemed trust claims.

The following guidelines and procedures should help you determine the approach to take in the various situations you will encounter. However, these guidelines and procedures are not exhaustive. Therefore, do not hesitate to discuss your case with your supervisor. If necessary, your team leader or your technical advisor will be able to contact one of the Field Support programs officer at Headquarters responsible for your region.

Related Topics:

- Situations Where the Debtor is not in an Insolvency Situation
- When an Employer is in an Insolvency Situation
- Net Proceeds of Realization Greater Than the Amount of our Deemed Trust
- Insufficient Net Proceeds of Realization
- Possible Loss Incurred at Realization
- Risky Situations With High Potential of Realization or Situations Where the Trustee Does not Have Sufficient Liquidity
- Objection to Dividend Sheet

Situations Where the Debtor is not in an Insolvency Situation

When the debtor is not in an insolvency situation, the CRA may invoke its deemed trust (ITA, ETA and ATSCA) directly against the debtor because he is deemed to hold the deducted/collected amounts in trust. Therefore, the CRA may seize and sell the debtor's property, to the extent of the amount held in trust.

On the other hand, the CRA may invoke its deemed trust against a secured creditor or a third party who disposes of one of the debtor's assets that is held in trust for Her Majesty. Note that the CRA may only use its deemed trust to claim priority over the proceeds of disposition arising from the sale of property and not to recover property held by the third party.

There may be situations where the collection officer is dissatisfied with the amount realised. Perhaps the collection officer feels the amount realised is low or inadequate or that the realisation costs are unreasonable. In these circumstances, the collection officer can question the sale of the property, but must first consult with his/her supervisor.

Digitized by Google

Generally, the CRA invokes its deemed trust by a letter sent to the debtor himself or to the third party selling the debtor's property (secured creditor, receiver, bailiff or sheriff).

Related Topics

- When can a Claim be Issued?
- Claim Against a Debtor
- Claim Against a Secured Creditor or a Third Party

When Can a Claim be Issued?

Deemed trust claims are made by using letters referencing the relevant ITA, ETA or ATSCA provisions. These claims do not constitute a legal action and do not require issuing a legal warning to the debtor or to the third party. They can therefore be issued when:

- the debtor's account has just been received and the debtor has not yet been contacted
- the debtor has made a payment arrangement and does not abide by this arrangement
- the debtor has made a payment arrangement and is abiding by this arrangement but a third party takes action against the debtor's property; or
- the source deductions have been deducted from the employee pay checks but have not been remitted to the Receiver General, GST/HST is collected or is deemed to have been collected, but has not been remitted to the Receiver General or the Air Travellers Security Charge has been collected but has not been remitted to the Receiver General.

It is extremely important to make all the necessary efforts to file a claim as soon as possible. Late actions are always disruptive and are not looked upon favourably by the courts. Please refer to Memorandum 03-12 entitled, Impact of Recent Court Decisions Dealing with Deemed Trust, which suggests certain methods to expedite the collection of deemed trust amounts.

Claim Against the Debtor

A. The Proceeds of Disposition Have not Been Distributed

When we seize and sell a debtor's property by means of a writ, a deemed trust claim must be filed with the sheriff or bailiff together with the writ instructing him to seize and sell the property. This way, it will be clearly established that we are making claims at two separate levels with different priority rankings:

Digitized by Google

- for our deemed trust, in priority to the secured creditors; and
- as a judgment creditor for the non-trust portion of our claim, after payment to the secured creditors.

Thus, in order to file a deemed trust claim under the ITA, the CRA will use the letter found in the enclosed Appendix 1 to the sheriff or the bailiff while the Appendix 10 letter will be used to file a deemed trust claim under the ETA. Obviously, these letters may have to be amended depending on the circumstances of each case.

B. The Proceeds of Disposition Have Been Distributed Before the Filing of Our Claim

When a bailiff or a sheriff charged with realizing a debtor's property, or distributing the proceeds of realization of such property, the CRA must review the special circumstances of each case before deciding if it will take action against this third party. To the extent that this third party was unable to determine the existence of our deemed trust, no recourse will normally be taken. However, if the CRA issued a deemed trust claim with the executing officer before the distribution of the amounts or if the executing officer was aware of our debt or should have inquired about the possibility of such a debt, the Department of Justice will be consulted in order to determine the appropriate approach.

Claim Against a Secured Creditor or a Third Party

A) The Proceeds of Disposition Have not Been Distributed

You should file a claim with any person who is realizing, liquidating, repossessing or otherwise disposing of the assets of a debtor, or any person who purchases these assets. Although the legislation does not contain any requirement to do so, by promptly filing a claim with a person who is preparing to dispose of the debtor's property or of the proceeds arising there from, we increase the odds of receiving what we are owed. Should this person fail to pay the CRA, it will be easier to take recourse against this person since this person was aware of our priority.

Appendix 1 of this Chapter contains an example of a deemed trust claim made under the ITA, which can be adapted to the circumstances of each case. Appendix 10 contains a similar letter to be used under the ETA. It is important to make all necessary efforts to promptly file a claim. Late actions are always disruptive, are not looked upon favourably by the courts, and can tarnish the CRA's image.

Sale of Business

When the debtor or another person (e.g. monitor, liquidator, etc.) sells a business and the buyer does not pay the full amount, we will send a letter to both parties (see the letters at Appendix 2 for the ITA and Appendix 11 for the ETA). If we are advised of the sale after all amounts have been distributed, we must try to obtain payment of our deemed trust from creditors who may not otherwise have been paid.

Digitized by Google

This does not prevent us from pursuing the remedies provided by provincial legislation governing the sale of businesses. In addition, certain third parties involved in the sale of a business may be considered a "legal representative" within the meaning of the ETA and therefore be subject to the requirement of obtaining a clearance certificate. If you believe you are facing such a situation, you should obtain a legal opinion as to whether it is advisable to issue an assessment against the third party for failure to obtain a clearance certificate.

For further details, refer to Directive RCD 01-01 entitled, Person Acting for Another: Section 159 ITA and Section 270 ETA.

B) The Proceeds of Disposition Have Been Distributed Before the Filing Our Claim

When a secured creditor distributes the proceeds of disposition arising from the sale of assets covered by our deemed trust, the actions to be taken will depend on the facts of each situation.

i. Assessments for Failure to Obtain a Clearance Certificate

It is standard practice for financial institutions – and other secured creditors – to retain the services of a receiver to realize property on which they have a security interest. However, according to section 159 of the ITA and section 270 of the ETA (there are no such provisions for the ATSCA) a receiver must obtain a clearance certificate before distributing the proceeds of disposition of such property. Assessing the receiver for failure to obtain such a certificate will normally be more advantageous for the CRA than having the Department of Justice file a civil suit. On the one hand, issuing an assessment is less costly. On the other hand, assessing under section 159 may make it possible to also recover the portion of the debt not included in the deemed trust from the debtor's account.

In many situations, we may consider issuing an assessment under sections 159 of the ITA and 270 of the ETA. This measure must be considered whenever the distribution was made by a "legal representative" according to the definition of this term in subsections 248(1) of the ITA and 270(1) of the ETA.

Where an assessment under sections 159 of the ITA or 270 of the ETA is being considered, a pre-assessment letter (reproduced in Appendices 7 for ITA and 12 for the ETA) will first be sent to the third party.

ii. Assessment Against the Director(s)

Digitized by Google

instead of taking civil proceedings against the third party, which is often the most costly option or assessing under section 159 of the ITA and 270 of the ETA, it may be possible to assess the debtor's director(s) under sections 227.1 of the ITA, 323 of the ETA and 81 of the ATSCA. When the indebted debtor is a corporation whose directors are solvent, we may choose to assess the directors instead of trying to recover only the deemed trust portion from the corporation, since a director's liability assessment allows us to recover the entire amount of the source deductions debt.

C) Legal Action

When the secured creditor or another third party fails to pay our deemed trust, and the remedies mentioned above are not available, we will have to refer the case to the Department of Justice. The Department of Justice will first issue a formal demand for payment. If there is failure to pay, the Department of Justice may initiate legal action.

D) Recovery of Amounts

Claims for the payment of deemed trust amounts should be filed with any person(s) who received amounts to the detriment of our deemed trust. Such claims are appropriate under any circumstance. They are based on a very simple principle. If the priority conferred on us by the legislation had been respected, we would have received certain amounts. The person who benefited from those amounts, because of the failure of a third party to comply with the ITA, the ETA or the ATSCA, was not entitled to those amounts and should remit them.

When an Employer is in an Insolvency Situation

One of the most widespread use of our deemed trust provisions is the property claim filed in bankruptcy cases. Although it is the BIA which indicates how to claim what belongs to the Crown, i.e. by filing a property proof of claim, it is the ITA, specifically subsection 227(4.1), which stipulates that the amounts deducted from the wages of employees are the property of the Crown and do not form part of the estate in the event the debtor becomes bankrupt.

When a debtor files an assignment in bankruptcy or when a receiving order is made against him, the CRA may collect the amount of its deemed trust within the bankruptcy estate or by using property held as security by a secured creditor.

As mentioned above, the deemed trust under the ETA and the ATSCA are not effective in insolvency situations (bankruptcies and proposals) unless an enhanced requirement to pay has been issued before the insolvency date, in which case, the CRA may file a proof of property for the requirement to pay amount.

For more information on this topic as it relates to the ETA, please refer to Communication ARD 2004-035 entitled, Collecting GST/HST in an Insolvency.

Digitized by Google

Related Topics:

- Collection of the Deemed Trust Amount Within the Bankruptcy Estate (Other Than by way of Property Encumbered by Security)
- Rejection of Our Property Claim
- Collection of our Deemed Trust Amount Using Property Encumbered by Securities
- Secured Creditor Who Does not Participate in the Bankruptcy Process
- Secured Creditor Participating in the Bankruptcy Process
- Secured Creditor Who Disposes of Property Held as Security – Section 130 of the BIA

Collection of the Deemed Trust Amount Within the Bankruptcy Estate (Other Than by Way of Property Encumbered by Security)

Property of a debtor that is vested in the trustee must be liquidated by the trustee for the benefit of creditors participating in the bankruptcy. Generally, the proceeds of disposition of this property are ultimately distributed to the creditors, according to the portion of their debt.

In order to proceed this way, collection officers must file a property proof of claim with the trustee for the pre-bankruptcy deemed trust portion and a regular proof of claim for the non-trust amounts. Appendix 3 suggests a cover letter for the property claim. This letter can be adapted if necessary to mention that a proof of unsecured claim is also attached.

Rejection of Our Property Claim

It is important to react promptly if the trustee disputes our property claim. Pursuant to subsection 81(2) of the BIA, the Crown has fifteen days to file a motion with the court. If the Department fails to act by this deadline, the Crown will be deemed to have abandoned any right to the property claimed.

Although the amendments to the deemed trust provisions are applicable "notwithstanding the BIA (except sections 81.1 and 81.2)", we must not accept the disallowance of our property claim in order to then claim our deemed trust from the secured creditors. Although supported by legislation, this approach is contrary to the CRA's policy.

Collection of our Deemed Trust Amount Using Property Encumbered by Securities

By virtue of the amendments to the deemed trust provisions, in addition to filing a property claim in the bankruptcy, we can, if appropriate, claim the payment of our deemed trust directly from the secured creditors. It is therefore important that the trustee informs us, without delay, of any decisions or measures he is taking with respect to encumbered assets of the bankrupt. Appendix 3 suggests a cover letter for these property claims. The letter can be adapted if necessary to mention that a proof of unsecured claim is also attached.

Digitized by Google

Headquarters expects that a trustee, receiving the letter found in Appendix 3, will inform us without delay of any decisions made with respect to the encumbered property. If appropriate, we could then suggest alternatives to the actions he proposes. Situations where it might be advantageous for the CRA to reach an agreement with the trustee or a secured creditor, or both, are described in the following pages. By and large, it will not be appropriate to attempt to force the trustee to realize an asset in which there is no equity for the whole of the preferred and unsecured creditors.

Appendix 4 presents an example of a letter to be used in bankruptcy to claim our deemed trust from a secured creditor. As for the letter in Appendix 5, it will be used to claim from the representative of such a creditor, for example, a receiver.

The rights or powers of the secured creditors in a bankruptcy estate, versus our deemed trust claim, were not a major concern before the amendment of the deemed trust provisions. Similarly, relatively little attention was paid to the decisions the trustee made to redeem and realize security or, conversely, to surrender it to the secured creditor.

Since you will have to consider the effects of the trustee's decisions on the recovery of our deemed trust and take action if necessary, it is useful that you get familiarized with the provisions of the BIA applicable to secured claims. The various options are described below.

Secured Creditor Who Does not Participate in the Bankruptcy Process

As stipulated by subsection 69.3(2) of the BIA, the secured creditor may realize his security even if the debtor is bankrupt. A secured creditor may opt out of the bankruptcy process altogether and not file a proof of secured claim. He will then either leave the property with his client, or he will realize the property in accordance with the legislation governing his security interest.

In such circumstances, subject to the secured creditor's interest arising from a prescribed security interest, we will demand that the secured creditor pay us before paying himself out of the net proceeds of realization. The letters suggested in Appendices 4 and 5 will be used for this purpose.

Secured Creditor Participating in the Bankruptcy Process

When the secured creditor files a proof of secured claim in the bankruptcy, it is up to the trustee to decide what to do with the encumbered property. He can:

- demand that the property be sold pursuant to section 129 of the BIA

Digitized by Google

- redeem the security as provided for by subsection 128(3) of the BIA, by paying the lesser of the amount of the proof of secured claim or the estimated value of the security interest; or

- surrender the property to the secured creditor

Related Topics:

- Secured Realized at the Request of the Trustee – section 129 of the BIA

- Redemption by the Trustee of Property Encumbered by Security – Subsection 128(3) of the BIA

Security Realized at the Request of the Trustee – section 129 of the BIA

Section 129 applies to situations where the trustee and the secured creditor disagree as to the value of the security. In these circumstances, they will agree to realize the property. Any excess of the proceeds of realization over the secured creditor's claim will be transferred to the bankrupt's estate for the benefit of the creditors. This is not a commonly encountered situation; if it occurs, a letter similar to the one in Appendix 5 will be sent to the person who is realizing the property.

Redemption by the Trustee of Property Encumbered by Security – Subsection 128(3) of the BIA

The trustee will choose to redeem the security as allowed under subsection 128(3) when the estimated proceeds of realization of the security

- the trustee's fees and expenses incurred in the realization

- $ of our deemed trust

- $ owing to the secured creditor

= $ for the bankrupt's estate

If the trustee already has the funds or enough assets to pay us from the bankrupt's estate, he will exclude the amount of our deemed trust from his calculation. These situations are not problematic since our deemed trust will be paid in full.

a) Trustee Miscalculation

However, it is possible that the trustee overestimates the potential proceeds of realization. He will then have paid the secured creditor's claim in exchange for a release of the latter's interest in the property, only to learn after the realization that he no longer has enough money to pay our deemed trust.

b) Trustee Who Does Not Recognize His Obligation

Digitized by Google

The trustee may also not recognize his obligation to pay our deemed trust and as such, fail to take it into account when deciding whether he will redeem the security.

In either of the situations described in paragraphs a) and b) above, the CRA will claim the payment of its deemed trust in priority to the fees of the trustee associated with the realization. Only the actual outlays associated with the realization will have priority over our deemed trust. If necessary, we will claim any shortfall from the secured creditor up to the amount that the trustee paid him to redeem his security. Appendix 6 contains a form letter to be used.

In exceptional cases, we could take a more lenient approach in the first of the two situations described above, if it is clear that the trustee acted prudently and in good faith. The CRA will then allow that a portion of his fees be paid in priority to its deemed trust.

In the second situation, filing a motion in court as allowed under section 37 of the BIA will have to be considered, to demonstrate that the trustee's decisions and actions are prejudicial to the CRA. The court could then issue any order it deems necessary to remedy the situation. Consideration will have to be given to such action when the trustee repeatedly refuses to cooperate, thereby forcing the CRA to claim the deemed trust from the creditors whose security was redeemed, and to incur legal expenses when the latter refuse to remit the amounts claimed.

When we are considering invoking section 37 of the BIA, the Department of Justice must be notified of all the pertinent facts and documents without delay. It will be difficult to convince the court that the CRA has suffered serious harm if we wait months before reacting. In addition, once the trustee is discharged, it is next to impossible to go back on his decisions or actions, whether they were good or bad.

Even if a motion is filed in court under section 37 of the BIA, we will file a deemed trust claim with any third party who has received amounts to which we were legally entitled.

Secured Creditor Who Disposes of Property Held as Security - Section 130 of the BIA

Where the trustee does not exercise his power to redeem the security or require that it be realized, the security is vested with the secured creditor. However, it must be noted that leaving the property with the secured creditor does not make him the owner of that property. The secured creditor is still required to follow the procedures that would have applied outside of bankruptcy.

The letter found at Appendix 3 should encourage trustees to inform us of any decisions they make concerning the disposition of the assets pledged as security. We will then be able to discuss other possible avenues with them, involving the secured creditor(s) concerned if necessary.

Net Proceeds of Realization Greater Than The Amount of our Deemed Trust

When the estimated net proceeds of realization exceed the amount of our deemed trust, without however being enough to also pay the claim of the secured creditor with an interest in the property, the trustee will have to reach an agreement with the secured creditor. Two avenues are then possible:

Digitized by Google

- either the secured creditor allows the trustee to realize the property and pay us
- either the secured creditor repossesses the property and realizes it

Under the first scenario, the secured creditor will have to absorb the fees and expenses of the trustee associated with the realization. Unless the CRA has agreed in writing prior to the realization of property encumbered by a security interest, that it would pay realization fees and costs, such amounts are not to be paid ahead of the deemed trust. Unless the trustee knows for sure that the realization will bring enough money to pay in full both the deemed trust and all realization fees and costs, a written agreement will have to be signed with the CRA. This agreement will stipulate the percentage of the proceeds of realization that the CRA considers reasonable under the circumstances, to cover the trustee's fees and expenses.

If the secured creditor wants to realize the property, the trustee should inform him or her of our priority, up to the amount of our property claim. This information will assist the secured creditor in deciding whether it is worth it to realize or not. Ideally, the trustee would obtain a signed commitment from the secured creditor to pay us in priority from the proceeds. One needs to keep in mind, however, that the trustee is under no obligation to even attempt to do so.

Example

Our deemed trust	12 000
Bank's claim	3 000
Realization costs	800
Fees for the realization	3 500
Percentage stipulated by the agreement with the trustee	20%
Gross proceeds of realization	16 000
Amount remitted to the bank	0	(16 000 – 800 – 3500 –12 000)
Amount remitted to the CRA	12 000	[16 000 – (16 000 X 20%)]

Insufficient Net Proceeds of Realization

Where the estimated net proceeds of realization are less than the amount of our deemed trust, the trustee will have to reach an agreement with the secured creditor. Two avenues are possible:

- either the secured creditor releases his security interest in the property, so that the trustee can realize the property and pay the CRA; or
- either the secured creditor repossesses the property and realizes it

Digitized by Google

In both cases, the secured creditor receives nothing. However, it is possible that the secured creditor may choose to realize the property himself, on the chance that the realization will yield a higher amount than initially estimated.

Before the trustee proceeds with the realization, the CRA will sign an agreement with him stating the percentage of the gross proceeds of realization that will cover his fees and expenses. This approach allows us to keep the fees and expenses within reasonable limits. It also has the advantage of encouraging the trustee to try to obtain the maximum possible. There may also be situations where neither the trustee nor the secured creditor or the CRA has any interest in having the property realized.

When the property is left with the secured creditor, while under no obligation in that regard, the trustee could obtain a signed commitment from the secured creditor to pay us in priority. This makes things clearer and easier for all parties.

Possible Loss Incurred at Realization

In certain situations, it will be difficult to predict the potential proceeds of realization. The trustee may request that we guarantee the payment of his fees and expenses in the event that the proceeds of realization are insufficient to cover them. Such a commitment must never be made. There have been cases where the CRA has had to pay substantial amounts unnecessarily because of such a commitment. When neither the secured creditor nor the trustee elects to risk proceeding with realization, the property will normally be left with the debtor.

Risky Situations With High Potential of Realization or Situations Where the Trustee Does Not Have Sufficient Liquidity

You must never give a carte blanche commitment to a trustee. However, you could face a situation where realizing a property entails taking a risk, but where the potential of realization is very high. Such situations must be referred to your Field Support programs officer at Headquarters. The same is true of situations where the trustee asks us to advance him funds to allow him to proceed with the realization because he does not have the necessary liquidity. They will help you to determine the best approach given the circumstances of your case.

Objection to Dividend Sheet

Where the dividend sheet provides for the distribution of amounts to certain creditors but not full payment of our property claim, consideration will have to be given to objecting to the dividend sheets, as allowed under subsection 152(6) of the BIA. Because such an objection must be filed within fifteen days following the date on which the trustee mails the dividend sheet, relevant details are to be sent to the Department of Justice as quickly as possible.

Such a situation is not expected to arise frequently. Trustees are familiar with our property claims and it is quite unlikely that a trustee would pay other creditors in priority over our property claim. The fact that the CRA now has direct recourse against secured creditors in no way diminishes the trustee's obligation to pay our property claim in priority.

Digitized by Google

Resource Material

Directive RCD-98-06, Lien and Charge Registration, issued August 26, 1998.

Directive RDC-99-07, Priority for Deemed Trust, issued June 10, 1999.

Directive RCD-00-07, Regulation 2201 - Prescribed Security Interest, issued May 26, 2000.

Directive ARD-01-01, Priority for GST/HST Deemed Trust Amounts, issued May 23, 2001.

Directive RCD-01-01, Person Acting for Another: Section 159 ITA and Section 270 ETA, January 10, 2001.

Directive RCD-02-01, Deemed Security Interest, issued April 18, 2002

Memorandum 01-22, Enforcing the Deemed Trust Provisions – Business Development Bank of Canada, issued January 11, 2001.

Memorandum 02-14, Deemed Trust and Leases, CSC and Third Party Purchasers for Value, issued August 14, 2002.

Memorandum 03-12, Impact of Recent Court Decisions Dealing with Deemed Trust issued June 19, 2003.

Memorandum 03-09, Validating Bank Act Security (S.427 Bank Act), issued May 13, 2003.

Communication ARD-2004-009, Deemed Trusts and Enhanced Requirements To Pay in Sectors Other than Construction, issued March 3, 2004.

Communication ARD-2004-035, Collecting GST/HST in an Insolvency, issued June 17, 2004.

Communication ARD-2004-039, The Application of Subsection 60(1.1) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, issued August 25, 2004.

Appendix

Related topics:

- Appendix 1 – Deemed Trust Claim where the employer is not bankrupt
- Appendix 2 – Deemed Trust Claim - Sale
- Appendix 3 – Covering letter for property claim

Digitized by Google

- Appendix 4 – Deemed Trust Claim - Bankruptcy - Secured creditor
- Appendix 5 – Deemed Trust Claim - Bankruptcy - Other person
- Appendix 6 – Deemed Trust Claim - Bankruptcy - Redemption of security interest
- Appendix 7 – Preassessment letter – under section 159 of the ITA
- Appendix 8 – Authorization from an employer - disclosure of confidential information
- Appendix 9 – Letter to third party - status of source deductions account
- Appendix 10 – Deemed Trust Claim – registrant other than bankrupt
- Appendix 11 – Deemed Trust Claim – Sale
- Appendix 12 – Preassessment notice letter – under section 270 of the ETA
- Appendix 13 – Registrant authorization – disclosure of confidential information
- Appendix 14 – Letter sent to a third party – GST/HST account status
- Appendix 15 – GST/HST Deemed Trust (DT) Calculation Sheet
- Appendix 16 – Examples of GST/HST Deemed Trust Calculation

Appendix 1 - Deemed Trust Claim Where the Employer is not Bankrupt

"Salutation": (specify in what capacity when applicable)

We have been informed that you are preparing to liquidate, dispose of, or distribute property of the above-named employer. That employer currently owes the Crown amounts deducted from the wages of its employees.

Pursuant to subsections 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan, 57(2) or (3) of the Unemployment Insurance Act and 86(2) or (2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act, the following amounts are deemed to be held in trust pending payment to Her Majesty:

Income Tax	Canada Pension	Unemployment	Employment	Total

Digitized by Google

Plan Contributions	Insurance Premiums	Insurance Premiums

The above-mentioned provisions give the Crown a beneficial right to these amounts in all the property of the employer and any proceeds arising from that property, with priority over any security interest, other than a prescribed security interest, in such property. Proposed section 2201 of the Income Tax Regulations (copy attached) defines what constitutes a "prescribed security interest."

Subject to the priority of the holder of a prescribed security interest for the unpaid balance of the amount secured by the mortgage in question, payment of the total referred to above must be made to the Receiver General from the proceeds of realization of any property of the employer minus realization costs.

Choose one of the following paragraphs:

We draw your attention to section 159 of the Income Tax Act, a copy of which is attached, in the event you fail to comply with this claim, in particular subsection 159(3.1), which stipulates that an appropriation, by a legal representative of a taxpayer, of property in the possession or control of the legal representative acting in that capacity is deemed to be a distribution of the property to a person.

If you fail to comply with this claim, the Agency may initiate proceedings against you in order to recover the amounts, which in accordance with the legislation in effect, should have been paid to us.

If you would like more information or clarification, please contact the undersigned at the "TSO" Tax Services Office at "telephone number."

Yours truly,

Appendix 2 - Deemed Trust Claim - Sale

"Salutation":

We have been informed that you are preparing to distribute some or all of the proceeds from the sale of property, which was the above-named employer's. That employer currently owes the Crown amounts deducted from the wages of its employees.

Pursuant to subsections 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan, 57(2) or (3) of the Unemployment Insurance Act and 86(2) or (2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act, the following amounts are deemed to be held in trust pending payment to Her Majesty:

Income Tax	Canada Pension Plan Contributions	Unemployment Insurance Premiums	Employment Insurance Premiums	Total

The above-mentioned provisions give the Crown a beneficial right to these amounts in all the property of the employer and any proceeds arising from that property, with priority over any security interest, other than a prescribed security interest, in such property. Proposed section 2201 of the Income Tax Regulations (copy attached) defines what constitutes a "prescribed security interest."

Digitized by Google

Subject to the priority of the holder of a prescribed security interest for the unpaid balance of the amount secured by the mortgage in question, payment of the total referred to above must be made to the Receiver General from the proceeds of realization of any property of the employer and before payment to any other creditor. We therefore request that you not dispose of the proceeds that would otherwise be payable to the above-named employer or any of its creditors before the amounts shown have been paid in full.

We draw your attention to section 159 of the Income Tax Act, a copy of which is attached, in the event you fail to comply with this claim.

If you would like more information or clarification, please contact the undersigned at the "TSO" Tax Services Office at "telephone number."

Yours truly,

Appendix 3 - Covering Letter for Property Claim

"Salutation":

Enclosed is a property claim in respect of amounts deducted from the wages of the employees of the above-named bankrupt.

Pursuant to subsections 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan, 57(2) or (3) of the Unemployment Insurance Act and 86(2) or (2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act, these amounts are deemed to be held in trust pending payment to Her Majesty. Consequently, they are not included in the estate of the bankrupt.

Notwithstanding the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (except sections 81.1 and 81.2 of that Act), the above-mentioned provisions give the Crown a beneficial right to these amounts in all the property of the employer and any proceeds arising from that property, with priority over any security interest, other than a prescribed security interest, in such property. Proposed section 2201 of the Income Tax Regulations (copy attached) defines what constitutes a "prescribed security interest."

Subject to the priority of the holder of a prescribed security interest for the unpaid balance of the amount secured by the mortgage in question, payment of the total referred to above must be made to the Receiver General from the security or the proceeds of realization of any property of the employer and before payment to any other creditor. Unless you are satisfied that you will be able to pay the attached property claim in full, we request that you contact us prior to disposing of property of the bankrupt or proceeds arising from such property, even those charged with a security.

If you would like more information or clarification, please contact the undersigned at the "TSO" Tax Services Office at "telephone number."

Yours truly,

Digitized by Google

Appendix 4 - Deemed Trust Claim - Bankruptcy - Secured Creditor

"Salutation":

We have been informed that you are a secured creditor of the above-named bankrupt employer and that you are about to liquidate or realize some of the property of that employer which you hold as security in order to obtain payment of your debt. That employer currently owes the Crown amounts deducted from the wages of its employees.

Pursuant to subsections 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan, 57(2) or (3) of the Unemployment Insurance Act and 86(2) or (2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act, the following amounts are deemed to be held in trust pending payment to Her Majesty and are not included in the estate of the bankrupt:

Income Tax	Canada Pension Plan Contributions	Unemployment Insurance Premiums	Employment Insurance Premiums	Total

Notwithstanding the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (except sections 81.1 and 81.2 of that Act), the above-mentioned provisions give the Crown a beneficial right to these amounts in all the property of the employer and any proceeds arising from that property, with priority over any security interest, other than a prescribed security interest, in such property. Proposed section 2201 of the Income Tax Regulations (copy attached) defines what constitutes a "prescribed security interest."

Subject to the priority of the holder of a prescribed security interest for the unpaid balance of the amount secured by the mortgage in question, payment of the total referred to above must be made to the Receiver General from the proceeds of realization of any property of the employer minus realization costs.

If you fail to comply with this claim, the Agency may initiate proceedings against you in order to recover the amounts, which, in accordance with the legislation in effect, should have been paid to us.

If you would like more information or clarification, please contact the undersigned at the "TSO" Tax Services Office at "telephone number."

Yours truly,

Appendix 5 - Deemed Trust Claim - Bankruptcy - Other person

"Salutation":

We have been informed that you are acting as "capacity, if applicable" on behalf of a secured creditor of the above-named bankrupt employer, and that you are about to liquidate or realize some of the property of that employer, which you hold as security, to obtain payment from the secured creditor's debt. That bankrupt employer currently owes the Crown amounts deducted from the wages of its employees.

Digitized by Google

Pursuant to subsections 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan, 57(2) or (3) of the Unemployment Insurance Act and 86(2) or (2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act, the following amounts are deemed to be held in trust pending payment to Her Majesty and are not included in the estate of the bankrupt:

Income Tax	Canada Pension Plan Contributions	Unemployment Insurance Premiums	Employment Insurance Premiums	Total

Notwithstanding the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (except sections 81.1 and 81.2 of that Act), the above-mentioned provisions give the Crown a beneficial right to these amounts in all the property of the employer and any proceeds arising from that property, with priority over any security interest, other than a prescribed security interest, in such property. Proposed section 2201 of the Income Tax Regulations (copy attached) defines what constitutes a "prescribed security interest."

Subject to the priority of the holder of a prescribed security interest for the unpaid balance of the amount secured by the mortgage in question, payment of the total referred to above must be made to the Receiver General from the proceeds of realization of any property of the employer minus realization costs.

We draw your attention to section 159 of the Income Tax Act, a copy of which is attached, in the event you fail to comply with this claim.

If you would like more information or clarification, please contact the undersigned at the "TSO" Tax Services Office at "telephone number."

Yours truly,

Appendix 6 - Deemed Trust Claim - Bankruptcy - Redemption of Security Interest

"Salutation":

We have been informed that you were a secured creditor of the above-named bankrupt employer and that the trustee redeemed your security as permitted under subsection 128(3) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act. That employer owes the Crown amounts deducted from the wages of its employees.

Pursuant to subsections 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan, 57(2) or (3) of the Unemployment Insurance Act and 86(2) or (2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act, the following amounts are deemed to be held in trust pending payment to Her Majesty and are not included in the estate of the bankrupt:

Income Tax	Canada Pension Plan Contributions	Unemployment Insurance Premiums	Employment Insurance Premiums	Total

Notwithstanding the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (except sections 81.1 and 81.2 of that Act), the above-mentioned provisions give the Crown a beneficial right to these amounts in all the property of the employer and any proceeds arising from that property, with priority over any security interest, other than a prescribed security interest, in such property. Proposed section 2201 of the Income Tax Regulations (copy attached) defines what constitutes a "prescribed security interest."

Digitized by Google

Despite the above-mentioned provisions, the trustee responsible for administering the estate of the bankrupt employer elected to redeem your security, without first paying the deemed trust amounts owing to the Crown. Unless you immediately remit the total shown above to the Receiver General, the Agency may seek a court order cancelling the redemption of your security by the trustee, or any other order that the court may consider appropriate.

If you would like more information or clarification, please contact the undersigned at the "TSO" Tax Services Office at "telephone number."

Yours truly,

Appendix 7 - Preassessment Letter – Under Section 159 of the ITA

"Salutation":

According to our records, on or about "approximate date of distribution", in your capacity as (choose one)

- a person designated by a secured creditor of the above-named employer,
- a purchaser of property of the above-named employer,
- you (choose one)
- distributed property of that employer
- distributed the proceeds of realization of property of that employer
- distributed the selling price of property of that employer without paying to the Crown the amounts for which Her Majesty has a beneficial right in the property in question or the proceeds of their realization. Please note that under subsection 159(3.1) of the Income Tax Act ("ITA"), you are deemed to have distributed any property of the employer, which you personally appropriated.

Subsections 227(4) or (4.1) of the ITA, 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan, 57(2) or (3) of the Unemployment Insurance Act and 86(2) or (2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act grant Her Majesty a beneficial right in all property of the employer, as well as any proceeds arising from such property for amounts which the employer deducted from the wages of its employees, and which the employer failed to remit. The property of the employer includes amounts, which you were required to pay to acquire assets of the employer.

In accordance with subsection 159(2) of the ITA, before disposing of any property of that employer or the proceeds of realization of such property, you were required to obtain a certificate acknowledging payment of all debts of the employer owed to the Crown. Because you failed to do so, we are considering assessing you as permitted under subsection 159(3) of the ITA.

Digitized by Google

If payment for property on which the Crown has a beneficial right, an "amount", or employer's proceeds of realization, whichever is less, is not received within the next thirty days we may proceed with an assessment of you without further notice.

Please note that section 159 of the ITA covers all types of debts owed to the Crown. Consequently, in addition to the assessment referred to above, you may be subject to other assessments under the same provisions in respect of other debts of the employer. However, the total of the assessments may not at any time exceed the net value of the property distributed or the net proceeds of realization of that property.

If you believe that you should not be assessed under section 159 ITA, or if you wish to bring to our attention facts which may have a bearing on our decision to assess or the amount of the assessment, please contact the undersigned at the "TSO" Tax Services Office at "telephone number."

Yours truly,

Appendix 8 - Authorization From an Employer - Disclosure of Confidential Information

"Date"

Canada Revenue Agency
Tax Services Office "TSO"
Revenue Collections

"Salutation":

Re: "employer"
Employer account number: "BN"

"Employer" authorizes Canada Revenue Agency to disclose to (third party) the following information about this account from the Canada Revenue Agency's existing computerized records:

Any outstanding balance as assessed by Canada Revenue Agency plus any accrued interest and penalties, the associated pay period(s), whether a payment arrangement has been made with Canada Revenue Agency (and, if so, if payments are current), and whether an objection or appeal has been filed (and, if so, its status);

the employer's remittance frequency (e.g. bi-monthly);

the date, the amount and the associated pay period of the last (5) remittances;

any pay period(s) for which no remittances have been received by Canada Revenue Agency by the remittance deadline (other than as covered in paragraph 1 above);

Digitized by Google

any pay period(s) for which no information return (under Income Tax Regulation 108(3)) has been filed; and the date of the last Canada Revenue Agency trust audit and period covered, whether a trust audit is presently ongoing and whether a trust audit has been scheduled with "employer."

Please send this information to the attention of "third party contact" at the following address: « »

This authorization shall be void unless submitted to Canada Revenue Agency on or before "expiry date selected by employer."

(as applicable) I am able to provide this authorization to Canada Revenue Agency on behalf of "employer" by virtue of my role as "title" or as confirmed by the attached corporate authorization.

Thank you for your assistance.

"Employer"

by:
"name and title of employer's contact"

Appendix 9 - Letter to Third Party - Status of Source Deductions Account

"Date"

"Third party name and address"

"Salutation":

Re: "employer"
Employer account number: "BN"

Further to your "date" letter, "employer" has authorized Canada Revenue Agency to disclose the following information about this account as of "date":

1. outstanding balance as assessed by Canada Revenue Agency plus accrued interest and penalties (as detailed below):

   a. unremitted source deductions (tax/CPP/EI): $
   b. unremitted employer contributions (CPP/EI): $
   c. pay period(s) involved:
   d. payment arrangement in place: [yes/no]
      - if so, is employer current under arrangement: [yes/no]
   e. has employer objected to or appealed the assessment(s): [yes/no]
      - if so, status of objection/appeal:

Digitized by Google

2. employer's remittance frequency: [e.g. bi-monthly]

3. date, amount and associated pay period of last [5] remittances:

4. pay period(s) for which no remittances were received by Canada Revenue Agency by the deadline (other than as noted in 1(c) above):
   - if return(s) filed, amount owing as shown by "employer":

5. pay period(s) for which "employer" did not file a return:

6. date (month/year) of last Canada Revenue Agency trust audit (if any) and period covered:
   - is a trust audit presently ongoing: [yes/no]
   - has a trust audit been scheduled with employer: [yes/no]

("Return" refers to Income Tax Regulation 108(3), which requires that remittances be accompanied by a return in the prescribed form.)

An employer is responsible for ensuring the remittance of the appropriate source deductions from payments made to its employees. Canada Revenue Agency does not warrant that the appropriate source deductions have been made by this employer or, if arrears are noted above, that no other arrears exist.

The above information was drawn from Canada Revenue Agency's existing computerized records relating to this account. Canada Revenue Agency has not reviewed the employer's payroll records or otherwise investigated the employer's source deductions in response to your request for information.

You may wish to conduct your own review of the employer's payroll records to assist in determining whether the appropriate source deductions have been deducted and remitted.

Canada Revenue Agency does not have to, nor does it undertake to, notify you of any subsequent assessments or reassessments on this account relating to periods before or after the currency date noted in the first paragraph above.

Canada Revenue Agency's authority to disclose is limited to the information outlined above.

This information is provided for your information only and shall not be relayed to third parties.

Sincerely,

TSO Collection Officer

c.c.: "employer"

Digitized by Google

Appendix 10 - Deemed Trust Claim – Registrant Other Than Bankrupt

"Salutation": (indicate under what authority, if applicable)

Re: [Registrant]

We have been informed that you are preparing to liquidate, dispose of, or distribute property of the above-named registrant. That registrant currently owes GST/HST amounts collected but not remitted to the Crown.

Pursuant to subsections 222(1) of the Excise Tax Act, the following amounts are deemed to be held in trust pending payment to Her Majesty:

Details concerning the GST/HST:

The above-mentioned paragraph gives the Crown a beneficial right to these amounts in all the property of the registrant and any proceeds arising from that property, with priority over any security interest, other than a prescribed security interest.

If you fail to comply with this claim, the Agency may initiate proceedings against you in order to recover the amounts, which, in accordance with the legislation in effect, should have been paid to us.

If you would like more information or clarification, please contact the undersigned at the "TSO" Tax Services Office at "telephone number."

Yours truly,

TSO Collection Officer

Appendix 11 - Deemed Trust Claim – Sale

"Salutation":

Re: [Registrant]

We have been informed that you are preparing to distribute some or all of the proceeds from the sale of property, which was the above-named registrant's. That registrant currently owes GST/HST amounts collected but not remitted to the Crown.

Pursuant to subsections 222(1) of the Excise Tax Act, the following amounts are deemed to be held in trust pending payment to Her Majesty:

Details concerning the GST/HST

The above-mentioned paragraph gives the Crown a beneficial right to these amounts in all the property of the registrant and any proceeds arising from that property, with priority over any security interest, other than a prescribed security interest.

Digitized by Google

Subject to the priority of the holder of a prescribed security interest for the unpaid balance of the amount secured by the mortgage in question, payment of the total referred to above must be made to the Receiver General from the proceeds of realization of any property of the registrant, before payment to any other creditor. We therefore request that you not dispose of the proceeds that would otherwise be payable to the above-named registrant or any of its creditors before the amounts shown have been paid in full.

If you would like more information or clarification, please contact the undersigned at the "TSO" Tax Services Office at "telephone number."

Yours truly,

TSO Collection Officer

Appendix 12 - Preassessment Notice Letter – Under Section 270 of the ETA

"Salutation":

According to our files, you have (proceeded to distribute the registrant's property, the proceeds of realization of the registrant's property or the proceeds of the sale of the registrant's property) on or about "approximate date of distribution" as a (named person by this registrant's secured creditor or the buyer of this registrant's property). However, you have failed to remit to the Crown amounts entitled to Her Majesty relating to the property in question or the proceeds of its realization. We wish to remind you that, pursuant to subsection 270 of the Excise Tax Act ("ETA"), you are deemed to have distributed the appropriated registrant's property.

Subsection 222(1) of the ETA confers to Her Majesty a beneficial right to these amounts in all the property of the registrant, and any proceeds arising from that property, as amounts collected by the registrant but not remitted. The registrant's property includes amounts you were required to pay to acquire the registrant's property.

In accordance with subsection 270 of the ETA, before proceeding with the sale of all the property of that registrant or the distribution of the proceeds of realization of such property, you were required to obtain a certificate acknowledging payment of all debts of the registrant owed to the Crown. Because you failed to do so, we are considering assessing you as permitted under subsection 270 of the ETA.

If payment of the amount indicated above, or the proceeds of realization minus realization costs, whichever is less, is not received within the next thirty days, we may proceed with an assessment to you for having failed to obtain a clearance certificate.

Consequently, in addition to the assessment referred to above, you may be subject to other assessments under the same provisions in respect of other debts of the registrant. However, the total of the assessments may not at any time exceed the net value of the property distributed or the net proceeds of realization of that property.

Digitized by Google

If you believe that you should not be assessed under section 270 of the ETA or if you wish to bring to our attention facts which may have a bearing on our decision to assess or the amount of the assessment, please contact the undersigned at the "TSO" Tax Services Office at "telephone number."

Yours truly,

TSO Collection Officer

Appendix 13 - Registrant Authorization – Disclosure of Confidential Information

"Date"

Canada Revenue Agency
[address]

["Greetings":

Re: [Registrant]]
GST/HST account # [ ]

[Person] authorizes Canada Revenue Agency ("CRA") to disclose to [third party] the following information about this account from CRA's existing computerized records:

- any outstanding balance as assessed by CRA plus any accrued interest and penalties, the associated pay period(s), whether a payment arrangement has been made with CRA, (and, if so, if payments are current) and whether an objection or appeal has been filed (and, if so, its status);
- the applicable filing frequency (e.g. bi-monthly);
- the date, amount and associated filing period of the last five remittances;
- any filing periods for which no remittances have been received by CRA by the remittance deadline (other than as covered in paragraph 1 above);
- any filing periods for which no return has been filed
- the date of the last CRA trust audit and period covered, whether a trust audit is presently ongoing and whether a trust audit has been scheduled with [registrant].

Please send this information to the attention of [third party contact] at the following address: [ ].

Digitized by Google

This authorization shall be void unless submitted to CRA on or before [expiry date selected by the registrant].

(as applicable) I am able to provide this authorization to CRA for [person]'s account, by virtue of my role as [title] or as confirmed by the attached corporate authorization.

Thank you for your assistance.

[registrant]

per: [name and title of registrant's contact]

Appendix 14 - Letter Sent to Third Party– GST/HST Account Status

[Date]

[Third party name and address]

[salutation]

Re: [registrant]
GST/HST account # [ ]

Further to your [date] letter, [registrant] has authorized Canada Revenue Agency ("CRA") to disclose the following information about this account (as of [date]):

1. outstanding balance as assessed by CRA, plus accrued interest and penalties (as detailed below): $
   a. GST/HST collected but unremitted (tax/CPP/EI): $
   b. unremitted collectible GST/HST
   c. interest and penalties: $
   d. other charges
   e. reporting period(s) involved:
   f. payment arrangement in place: [yes/no]
   g. if so, is employer current under arrangement: [yes/no]
   h. has employer objected to or appealed the assessment(s): [yes/no] – if so, status of objection/appeal:

2. [registrant's] filing frequency: [monthly, quarterly or annually]:

3. date, amount and associated reporting periods of the last [5] remittances:

4. the reporting period(s) for which no remittances were received by CRA by the deadline (other than as noted in 1(c) above):

   • if a return(s) was filed, the amount owing as shown by [registrant]

5. the reporting period(s) for which [registrant] did not file a return:

   date (month/year) of last CRA trust audit (if any) and period covered:
   -- is a trust audit presently ongoing: [yes/no]

Digitized by Google

– has a trust audit been scheduled with [registrant]: [yes/no]

A registrant is responsible for ensuring the remittance of the appropriate GST/HST collected. CRA does not warrant that this registrant has made the appropriate remittances because no arrears are noted above, and no other arrears exist.

The above information was drawn from CRA's existing computerized records relating to this account. CRA has not reviewed the registrant's books and records or otherwise investigated the registrant's situation in response to your request for information.

You may wish to conduct your own review of the registrant's books and records to assist in determining whether the appropriate remittances have been collected and remitted.

CRA does not undertake to notify you of any subsequent assessments or reassessments on this account relating to periods before or after the currency date noted in the first paragraph above.

CRA's authority to disclose is limited to the information outlined above.

This information is provided for your information only and shall not be relayed to third parties.

Yours truly,

TSO Collection Officer

c.c.: [registrant]

Appendix 15 - Deemed Trust (DT) Calculation Sheet

Name of Account:_____ Account #:_____

Date Prepared:_____

Accounts receivable: No Yes
Indicate if a copy of the accounts receivable is attached or if the registrant provided the amount of accounts receivable verbally

Amount: _____ $ @ 7/107 = _____ $ GST/HST Collectible

Use the RTDP "Retrieve Transaction Detail by Period" screen

Period ended	GST	Penalty	Interest	Other	Total

Digitized by Google

Subtotal
Less Tax Collectible
Total
Account summary:
DT Old provisions New provisions
Total DT
Non trust amounts less payments
Account balance

Old provisions – up to October 19, 2000
New provisions– effective starting on October 20, 2000

Appendix 16 - Examples of GST/HST Deemed Trust Calculation

Note: Read the example carefully, and review the Deemed Trust Calculation Sheet following each example.

Example1: Straight-forward deemed trust calculation

Dave's Custom Woodworks annual GST/HST returns for 1998, 1999 and 2000 have been filed but he has not paid the amounts owing. The registrant has no accounts receivable.
A payment of $1,000 was received in November 2000

Steps:

Deemed Trust Calculation:

- The preliminary deemed trust calculation indicates a deemed trust total of $13,000.
- Determine the amount of the GST/HST collectible. As the registrant does not have any accounts receivable, this step it is not necessary.
- The November 2000 payment is applied first to the penalties and interest of the 1998 return ($450 + $450). The same treatment is applied for the December 1999 return ($50 + $50).
- After incorporating the payment of $1,000, the up-to-date calculation of the deemed trust amounts is: Total $13,000 –

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Directors Liability

Section 227.1 imposes on directors the obligation of being responsible for remittance of withholdings and corporate income tax. If they do not ensure remittance by the corporation, they as directors will share in exposure to CRA.[63]

Liability of directors for failure to deduct - S. 227.1

227.1 (1) Where a corporation has failed to deduct or withhold an amount as required by subsection 135(3) or 135.1(7) or section 153 or 215, has failed to remit such an amount or has failed to pay an amount of tax for a taxation year as required under Part VII or VIII, the directors of the corporation at the time the corporation was required to deduct, withhold, remit or pay the amount are jointly and severally, or solidarily, liable, together with the corporation, to pay that amount and any interest or penalties relating to it.

Limitations on liability

(2) A director is not liable under subsection 227.1(1), unless

(a) a certificate for the amount of the corporation's liability referred to in that subsection has been registered in the Federal Court under section 223 and execution for that amount has been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part;

(b) the corporation has commenced liquidation or dissolution proceedings or has been dissolved and a claim for the amount of the corporation's liability referred to in that subsection has been proved within six months after the earlier of the date of commencement of the proceedings and the date of dissolution; or

(c) the corporation has made an assignment or a bankruptcy order has been made against it under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and a claim for the amount of the corporation's liability referred to in that subsection has been proved within six months after the date of the assignment or bankruptcy order.

Idem

(3) A director is not liable for a failure under subsection 227.1(1) where the director exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances.

Limitation period

(4) No action or proceedings to recover any amount payable by a director of a corporation under subsection 227.1(1) shall be commenced more than two years after the director last ceased to be a director of that corporation.

Amount recoverable

(5) Where execution referred to in paragraph 227.1(2)(a) has issued, the amount recoverable from a director is the amount remaining unsatisfied after execution.

Preference

(6) Where a director pays an amount in respect of a corporation's liability referred to in subsection 227.1(1) that is proved in liquidation, dissolution or bankruptcy proceedings, the director is entitled to any preference that Her Majesty in right of Canada would have been entitled to had that amount not been so paid and, where a certificate that relates to that

[63] See "The Supreme Court's Decision in Peoples: A New Standard of Directors' Liability?", R. Lynn Campbell, (2007) vol. 55, no 3, 465 – 80, in the Canadian Tax Journal for some comments.

Digitized by Google

amount has been registered, the director is entitled to an assignment of the certificate to the extent of the director's payment, which assignment the Minister is hereby empowered to make.

Contribution
(7) A director who has satisfied a claim under this section is entitled to contribution from the other directors who were liable for the claim.

Soper v. Canada, [1998] 1 FC(A) 124, 1997 CanLII 6352 (FCA); 149 DLR (4th) 297; 51 DTC 5407; [1997] 3 CTC 242, The Federal Appeal That Set Out The Present Environment and its Criteria[64]

Court of Appeal, Marceau, Linden and Robertson JJ.A. Vancouver, May 20; Ottawa, June 27, 1997.

Income tax " Corporations " Appeal from T.C.C. decision taxpayer not satisfying "due diligence" defence in Income Tax Act, s. 227.1(3) " S. 227.1(3) enabling directors to escape liability for unremitted amounts required to be withheld from employees' salaries if establishing exercised degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent failure that reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances " When taxpayer, experienced businessman, becoming director, receiving balance sheet showing net loss of $132,000 " Neither employees nor other Board members discussing with taxpayer company's failure to make tax remittances " Taxpayer never inquiring whether company complying with remittance obligations " Appeal dismissed " Analysis of common law duty of care, set out in City Equitable Fire Insurance Co., In re, [1925] Ch. 407 (C.A.), whether and to what extent modified by s. 227.1(3) " Meaning of each component i.e. skill, care diligence " Standard of care under s. 227.1(3) containing both objective, subjective elements " More difficult for inside directors to establish due diligence defence " Unless reasons for suspicion, outside directors may rely on day-to-day corporate managers to pay debt obligations " Positive duty to act arising when aware of facts leading to conclusion could reasonably be potential problem with remittances " Whether standard of care met question of fact to be resolved in light of personal knowledge, experience of director " Given ample business experience, taxpayer under positive duty to act when received balance sheet " Not misled, frustrated by other company officials " Doing nothing inadequate to discharge burden imposed by s. 227.1(3).
Construction of statutes " Income Tax Act, s. 227.1(3) enabling directors to escape liability for unremitted amounts required to be withheld from employees' salaries if establishing exercised degree of care, diligence, skill to prevent failure that reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances " Whether, to what extent modifying common law standard of care " As presumption of coherence, Canada Business Corporations Act, s. 122(1)(b), setting out standard of care to be exercised by directors for corporate law purposes, in virtually identical language, considered " Since Canada Business Corporations Act mirroring Ontario Business Corporations Act, inference Parliament intending to send same message to existing, potential directors " S. 227.1(3) containing both subjective, objective elements " Had Parliament wished to strengthen common law standard of care could have done so by omitting "in comparable circumstances".

[64] See "The Supreme Court's Decision in Peoples: A New Standard of Directors' Liability?", R. Lynn Campbell, (2007) vol. 55, no 3, 465 – 80, in the Canadian Tax Journal for some comments.

Digitized by Google

This was an appeal from a decision of the Tax Court of Canada holding that the taxpayer had failed to satisfy the "due diligence" defence set out in Income Tax Act , subsection 227.1(3). In October 1987 the taxpayer, an experienced businessman, became a director of Ramona Beauchamp International (1976) Inc. (hereinafter RBI). The company, which operated a modelling school, wanted taxpayer on the board to enhance its getting listed on the Vancouver Stock Exchange. At the November 1987 meeting of the board, he was given a copy of RBI's balance sheet, which showed a net loss of $132,000. At no time did any employee or board member of RBI discuss with the taxpayer RBI's failure to make certain tax remittances as required under the Act. Nor did the taxpayer inquire as to whether RBI was complying with its remittance obligations under the Act. In February 1988 he resigned from the board. Income Tax Act, subsection 153(1) imposes a duty on corporations to withhold taxes and other source deductions from an employee's salary and to remit such amounts to the Receiver General of Canada. Subsection 227.1(1) makes a corporation liable for unremitted amounts while at the same time imposing joint and several liability on its directors. But subsection 227.1(3) enables corporate directors to escape liability for non-remittance if they can establish that they "exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances". Pursuant to subsection 227.1(1), the taxpayer was assessed as a director for unremitted employee withholdings of RBI, plus interest and penalties for the period from October 1987 to January 1988. The Tax Court held that the statutory defence of due diligence was not available to the taxpayer because he had known of RBI's financial difficulties when he accepted the directorship, and took no steps to ensure remittance.

The issue was whether subsection 227.1(3) involves a subjective element, in the sense that the personal knowledge and background of a director is a relevant consideration, or whether it is an entirely objective standard, to which all directors will be similarly held.

Held, the appeal should be dismissed.

Per Robertson J.A. (Linden J.A. concurring): As the subjective standard had its roots in the common law, the analysis focused on the seminal decision on the common law duty of care, City Equitable Fire Insurance Co., In re, [1925] Ch. 407 (C.A.). City Equitable established the following principles: (1) Directors are not trustees.

But as agents, directors stand in a fiduciary relationship to their principal, the company. To the extent that a fiduciary is under a duty to act in good faith so too is a trustee and, in this limited sense the comparison of a director with a trustee has validity. The analogy breaks down, however, when consideration is given to the duties of care and skill. Subsection 227(5), which deems amounts deducted or withheld to be held in trust, regardless of whether the funds deducted or withheld under the Act were actually so segregated, did not raise the standard of care to the trustee threshold. (2) A director need not exhibit in the performance of his or her duties a greater degree of skill and care than may reasonably be expected from a person of his or her knowledge and experience. Thus, the standard of care is partly objective (the standard of a reasonable person), and partly subjective in that the reasonable person is judged on the basis that he or she has the knowledge and experience of the particular individual.

A director is neither obliged to give continuous attention to the affairs of the company, nor even to attend all meetings of the board. The common law would not, however, permit directors to adhere to a standard of total passivity and irresponsibility. The statutory standard of care will be interp reted and applied in a manner which encourages responsibility. The director who acts irresponsibly, e.g. by failing to attend all board meetings, does so at his own peril. (4) In the absence of grounds for suspicion, a director may rely on company officials to perform honestly duties that have been properly delegated to them. The exigencies of business and the company's articles of association, together, determine whether it is appropriate to delegate a duty. The larger the business, the greater will be the need to delegate.

Digitized by Google

The next question was whether the subjective element of the common law standard had been eliminated or reduced by statute? The wording of subsection 227.1(3) is virtually identical to the language used in Canada Business Corporations Act, paragraph 122(1)(b) which sets out for purposes of corporate law, the standard of care to be exercised by directors. Notably, the statutory phrase "care, diligence and skill" reflects the language of the City Equitable case. The Income Tax Act and the Canada Business Corporations Act adopt the same language because both relate to the standard of care to be exercised, although they differ as to whom the care is owed. Since there is a presumption of coherence between statutes, in order to determine whether the common law standard of care was modified by statute, both the due diligence provision in Income Tax Act, subsection 227.1(3) and the standard of care provisions in the Canada Business Corporations Act had to be considered.

The statutory analysis involved a consideration of each of the statutory standard's constituent elements in turn: skill, care and diligence. At common law, a director was required to exercise only that degree of skill which could reasonably be expected from a person of his or her knowledge and experience. The statutory skill criterion ("skill that a reasonably prudent person would exercise in comparable circumstances") is essentially the same as the common law requirement. Use of "in comparable circumstances" indicates that a reasonably prudent person in comparable circumstances may be an unskilled person. The subjective element of the common law standard of skill has not been altered by federal statute.

The statutory enactment does not appear to have altered the common law position that a director is expected to fulfill his or her duties with care by acting reasonably according to the knowledge and experience that he or she actually possesses. The legislation speaks of a reasonably prudent person and the care that that person would exercise in comparable circumstances. In the event that the reasonably prudent person is unskilled, the statute requires only the exercise of a degree of care which is commensurate with that person's level of skill. In this manner skill and care are interconnected. It is insufficient for a director to simply assert that he did his best if, having regard to that individual's level of skill and business experience, he failed to act reasonably prudently.

Diligence is simply the degree of attention or care expected of a person in a given situation. If attention to one's obligations is the essence of diligence, then that aspect of the standard neither adds to nor detracts from the statutory statement in subsection 227.1(3).

Since the language of the Canada Business Corporations Act mirrors that of the Ontario Business Corporations Act, Parliament intended to send the same message to existing and potential directors. Had Parliament wished to strengthen the standard of care imposed at common law, it could have easily done so by adopting the appropriate language i.e. similar to that used in the British Columbia Company Act, which does not contain the phrase "in comparable circumstances".

Subsection 227.1(3) embraces a subjective element which takes into account the personal knowledge and background of the director, as well as his or her corporate circumstances in the form of, inter alia, the company's organization, resources, customs and conduct. Thus, more is expected of individuals with superior qualifications, e.g. experienced businesspersons. The standard of care set out in subsection 227.1(3) is therefore neither purely objective nor subjective. The Act contains both objective elements, embodied in the reasonable person language, and subjective elements, inherent in individual considerations like "skill" and the idea of "comparable circumstances". Accordingly, the standard can be properly described as "objective subjective".

Digitized by Google

Inside directors, those involved in the day-to-day management of the company and who influence the conduct of its business affairs, will have the most difficulty in establishing the due diligence defence. It will be a challenge for such individuals to argue convincingly that despite their daily role in corporate management, they lacked business acumen to the extent that that factor should overtake the assumption that they knew or ought to have known of the remittance requirements. A director may attempt to satisfy the due diligence requirement by setting up controls to account for remittances, asking for regular reports from the company's financial officers on the ongoing use of such controls, and obtaining confirmation at regular intervals that withholding and remittance has taken place as required by the Act. Or a director might, in certain circumstances, establish and monitor a trust account from which both employee wages and remittances owing to Her Majesty would be paid. While such precautionary measures may be persuasive evidence of due diligence on the part of a director, they are not necessary conditions precedent to the establishment of that defence. A clear dividing line must be maintained between the standard of care required of a director and that of a trustee. Accordingly, an outside director cannot be required to go to the lengths outlined above. Unless there is reason for suspicion, it is permissible to rely on the day-to-day corporate managers to pay debt obligations such as those owing to Her Majesty. The positive duty to act arises where a director obtains information, or becomes aware of facts, which might lead one to conclude that there is, or could reasonably be, a potential problem with remittances. Whether the standard of care has been met is a question of fact to be resolved in light of the personal knowledge and experience of the director at issue.

The taxpayer was under a positive duty to act which arose when he received the balance sheet of RBI revealing that the company was experiencing "extremely serious" financial problems. Given his ample business experience, the taxpayer should have been alerted to the existence of a possible problem with remittances, especially since there was no indication that RBI's financial troubles were merely temporary in nature. There was no indication that the taxpayer was misled or frustrated by other company officials during a quest for knowledge about the state of remittances. Doing nothing was inadequate for the purpose of discharging the burden imposed on the taxpayer by subsection 227.1(3), given the precarious financial position of the company.

Per Marceau J.A.: Parliament has imposed on a director of a corporation a completely new, separate and positive duty. Such duty is owed to the Crown, and consists of an obligation to do what one reasonably can to prevent such failure from occurring. Such a duty is not fulfilled by a director who has never put his mind to the requirement and has remained completely uninterested and passive with respect to it.

statutes and regulations judicially considered

Bankruptcy Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. B-3.

Business Corporations Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. B.16.

Business Corporations Act, 1982, S.O. 1982, c. 4, s. 134(1)(b).

Canada Business Corporations Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. C-44 , s. 122(1)(b).

Company Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 59, s. 142(1)(b).

Digitized by Google

Income Tax Act, S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 63, ss. 153(1) (as am. by S.C. 1980-81-82-83, c. 140, s. 104; 1985, c.
45, s. 87; 1987, c. 46, s. 51), 159(2) (as am. by S.C. 1985, c. 45, s. 90), 227(5) (as am. by S.C. 1986, c. 6, s.
118; 1988, c. 55, s. 171), 227.1 (as enacted by S.C. 1980-81-82-83, c. 140, s. 124; 1984, c. 1, s. 100; 1988,
c. 55, s. 172), 242.

cases judicially considered applied:

City Equitable Fire Insurance Co., In re, [1925] Ch. 407 (C.A.). distinguished:

Sanford v. R., reflex, [1996] 1 C.T.C. 2016 (T.C.C.).

considered:

Barnett (JV) v MNR, reflex, [1985] 2 CTC 2336; (1985), 85 DTC 619 (T.C.C); Fraser (Trustee of) v. M.N.R. reflex, (1987), 37 B.L.R. 309; 64 C.B.R. (N.S.) 58; reflex, [1987] 1 C.T.C. 2311; 87 DTC 250 (T.C.C.); Stevenson Estate v. Canada, [1996] T.C.J. No. 1599 (QL); Byrt (H.) v. M.N.R.,reflex, [1991] 2 C.T.C. 2174; (1991), 91 DTC 923 (T.C.C.); Golfman (W.R.) v. M.N.R., reflex, [1990] 2 C.T.C. 2344; (1990), 90 DTC 1863 (T.C.C.); Davies (J.W.) v. Canada, reflex, [1994] 1 C.T.C. 2744; (1994), 94 DTC 1716 (T.C.C.).

referred to:

White (J.) v. M.N.R., reflex, [1990] 2 C.T.C. 2566; (1990), 91 DTC 54 (T.C.C.); Cybulski v. M.N.R. reflex, (1988), 39 B.L.R. 255; [1988] 2 C.T.C. 2180; 88 DTC 1531 (T.C.C.); Lalonde (R) v MNR, [1982] CTC 2749; (1982), 82 DTC 1772 (T.R.B.); *Dixon v. Deacon Morgan McEwen Easson*reflex, (1989), 41 B.C.L.R. (2d) 180 (S.C.); Denham & Co., In re (1883), 25 Ch.D. 752 (C.A.); Cardiff Savings Bank, In re. Bute's (Marquis of) Case,[1892] 2 Ch. 100; McCandless (M.W.) v. Canada, reflex, [1995] 2 C.T.C. 2111; (1995), 95 DTC 484
(T.C.C.); Kerr v. Law Profession Indemnity Co.(1994), 22 C.C.L.I. (2d) 28 (Ont. Gen. Div.); Quantz (C.) v. M.N.R., reflex, [1988] 1 C.T.C. 2276; (1988), 88 DTC 2276 (T.C.C.); Beutler (O.) v. M.N.R., reflex, [1988] 1 C.T.C. 2414; (1988), 88 DTC 1286 (T.C.C.); Bianco v. Minister of National Revenue reflex, (1991), 2 B.L.R. (2d) 255; [1991] 2 C.T.C. 2449; 91 DTC 1370 (T.C.C.); Edmondson (S.G.) v. M.N.R., reflex, [1988] 2 C.T.C. 2185; (1988), 88 DTC 1542 (T.C.C.); Shindle (B.) v. Canada, reflex, [1995] 2 C.T.C. 227; (1995), 95 DTC 5502 (F.C.T.D.); Snow v. Minister of National Revenue reflex, (1991), 38 C.C.E.L. 70; [1991] 2 C.T.C. 2198; 91 DTC 832 (T.C.C.); Fitzgerald (G.) v. M.N.R., reflex, [1991] 2 C.T.C. 2595; (1991), 92 DTC 1019 (T.C.C.).

authors cited

Campbell, R. Lynn. "Director's Liability for Unremitted Employee Deductions" (1993), 14 Adv. Q. 453. Campbell, R. Lynn. "The Fiduciary Duties of Corporate Directors: Exploring New Avenues" (1988), 36 Can. Tax J. 912.

Canada. Department of National Revenue. Taxation. Information Circular No. 89-2. "Directors' Liability" Section 227.1 of the Income Tax Act" (May 1, 1989).

Côté, Pierre-André. The Interpretation of Legislation in Canada, 2nd ed., Cowansville (Qué.): Les Éditions Yvon Blais Inc., 1991.

Gower, L.C.B. The Principles of Modern Company Law, 3rd ed. London: Stevens & Sons, 1969.

Iacobucci, Frank et al. Canadian Business Corporations: An Analysis of Recent Legislative Developments. Agincourt, Ont.: Canada Law Book, 1977.

Krishna, Vern. The Fundamentals of Canadian Income Tax, 5th ed. Toronto: Carswell, 1995.

Kroft, Edwin G. "The Liability of Directors for Unpaid Canadian Taxes" in Report of Proceedings of the Thirty- seventh Tax Conference, 1985 . Toronto: Canadian Tax Foundation, 1986, p. 30:1.

Linden, Allen M. Canadian Tort Law, 5th ed. Toronto: Butterworths, 1993.

Digitized by Google

Moskowitz, Evelyn P. "Directors' Liability Under Income Tax Legislation and Other Related Statutes" (1990), 38 Can. Tax J. 537.
Ontario. Legislative Assembly. Interim Report of the Select Committee on Company Law. Toronto: Queen's Printer, 1967. (Chairman: Allan F. Lawrence).
Welling, Bruce L. Corporate Law in Canada: The Governing Principles, 2nd ed. Toronto: Butterworths, 1991. Ziegel, Jacob S. Cases and Materials on Partnerships and Canadian Business Corporations, Vol. 1, 3rd ed. Toronto: Carswell, 1994.
APPEAL from the Tax Court decision holding that the taxpayer, a corporate director, had failed to satisfy the "due diligence" defence to liability for the amount of unremitted taxes withheld from employees' salaries set out in Income Tax Act , subsection 227.1(3) (Soper (N.) v. Canada, reflex, [1995] 2 C.T.C. 2078; (1995), 96 DTC 2046 (T.C.C.)). Appeal dismissed.
counsel:
Henry C. Wood for appellant. Patricia A. Babcock for respondent. solicitors:
Epstein Wood & Company, Vancouver, for appellant.
Deputy Attorney General of Canada for respondent.

The following are the reasons for judgment rendered in English by Marceau J.A.:
I have had the advantage of reading, in draft, the reasons for judgment prepared by my brother Robertson. I am in complete agreement with his conclusion and disposition of the appeal. On the whole, I do not dissociate myself from the reasons he gives. His analysis of the duty of care, diligence and skill imposed by subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act [S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 63 (as enacted by S.C. 1980-81-82-83, c. 140, s. 124)] was, in view of the apparent lack of consistency in the jurisprudence, quite appropriate and welcome. I wish to say, however, that I based my conclusion on much simpler reasoning.
Subsection 227.1(1) [as enacted idem; S.C. 1984, c. 1, s. 100] makes a director liable for the failure of his or her corporation to remit the monies withheld as taxes and other source deductions from its employees' salaries, and subsection 227.1(3) relieves a director of his or her liability if he or she can show that he or she exercised a certain degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent such failure. By these provisions, Parliament, I think, has imposed on a director of a corporation a completely new, separate and positive duty. Such duty is owed not to the corporation but to the Crown, and consists of an obligation to do what one reasonably can to prevent such failure from occurring. I simply cannot imagine that such a duty may ever be seen as having been fulfilled by a director who, as here, has never put his or her mind to the requirement and has remained completely uninterested and passive with respect to it.
I, too, would dispose of the appeal as suggested by Mr. Justice Robertson.

The following are the reasons for judgment rendered in English by Robertson J.A.: Subsection 153(1) [as am. by S.C. 1980-81-82-83, c. 140, s. 104; 1985, c. 45, s. 87; 1987, c. 46, s. 51] of the Income Tax Act (the Act) imposes a duty on corporations to withhold taxes and other source deductions from an employee's salary and to remit such amounts to the Receiver General of Canada. Subsection 227.1(1) of the Act makes a corporation liable for unremitted amounts while at the same time imposing joint and several liability on its directors. However, that obligation is tempered by subsection 227.1(3) which enables corporate directors to escape liability for non-remittance if they can establish that they "exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances."
This is an appeal from a decision of the Tax Court of Canada [reflex, [1995] 2 C.T.C. 2078]

Digitized by Google

holding that the appellant taxpayer failed to satisfy the so-called "due diligence defence" set out in subsection 227.1(3). Specifically, this Court is asked to consider and reconcile the allegedly inconsistent jurisprudence of the Tax Court. While it is at least arguable that such a conflict in the authorities might be more imagined than real, it is indisputable that the underlying question of the standard of care, diligence and skill to be exercised by a corporate director in the performance of his or her duties has been largely ignored. These reasons will address that fundamental issue.

FACTS

In October of 1987 the appellant taxpayer, an experienced businessman, became a director of Ramona Beauchamp International (1976) Inc. (hereinafter RBI) at the instigation of Ramona Beauchamp for two purposes: first, to promote RBI's interests in the marketplace and, second, to lend his name and reputation in conjunction with a proposed listing of RBI on the Vancouver Stock Exchange. At the relevant time the taxpayer was the chief operating officer of Canada-Wide Magazines. RBI operated a talent agency and a modelling school.

At the time the taxpayer joined the Board of Directors of RBI, he knew that it was experiencing financial difficulties. At the November 1987 meeting of the Board he was given a copy of the balance sheet of RBI which, as of 30 September 1987, showed a net loss of $132,000. At no time did any employee or Board member of RBI discuss with the taxpayer the failure of RBI to make certain tax remittances as required under the Act. Ramona Beauchamp, a co-director, had instructed the other directors of RBI not to discuss with the taxpayer anything other than that which was dealt with at directors' meetings attended by the taxpayer. RBI's failure to remit source deductions to the Department of National Revenue was never raised at any Board meeting. At no time did the taxpayer inquire as to whether RBI was complying with its remittance obligations under the Act. The taxpayer remained a director of RBI from October 1987 until his resignation became effective on 10 February 1988. (Although the Minister asserts at paragraph 4 of his memorandum of fact and law that the taxpayer became a director in June of 1987, the Tax Court Judge's finding on this matter has not been questioned on appeal.)

Pursuant to subsection 227.1(1) of the Act, the taxpayer was assessed as a director for unremitted employee withholdings of RBI, plus interest and penalties in the amount of $13,009.04 for the period October 1987 to January 1988. The taxpayer appealed that assessment to the Tax Court of Canada under the general procedure. After rejecting the taxpayer's argument based on his limited role in RBI, an issue abandoned on this appeal, the Tax Court Judge went on to hold that in the circumstances the statutory defence of due diligence was not available to the taxpayer. In the opinion of the Judge below, the fact that the taxpayer knew of RBI's financial difficulties at the time he accepted the directorship coupled with the fact that he took no steps to ensure remittance was a sufficient basis upon which to conclude that the taxpayer had failed "to exercise the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances."

ISSUES

It is often said that the requisite degree of care, skill and diligence to be exercised by a given director in the performance of his or her duties is to be determined as a "question of fact". Such an approach, while perhaps superficially attractive, oversimplifies the problem by failing to recognize that it is first necessary to establish the applicable standard of care. In turn, the pivotal issue is whether the statutory standard involves a subjective element, in the sense that the personal knowledge and background of a director is a relevant consideration, or whether the standard is an entirely objective one, to which all directors would be similarly held. When the issue is placed in this perspective, it is not difficult to understand what has been occurring in the Tax Court of Canada. As a general observation, a majority of judges of that Court have adopted the subjective standard, albeit by implication only. In but a few cases has that standard been rejected: e.g. White (J.) v. M.N.R., reflex, [1990] 2 C.T.C. 2566 (T.C.C.). Moreover, there are a number of cases where the imposition of directors' liability is justified regardless of which standard is chosen. Thus, perhaps the only conflict that truly exists is in the articulation of the proper standard: see Cybulski v. M.N.R. reflex, (1988), 39

Digitized by Google

B.L.R. 255 (T.C.C.), and compare with Barnett (JV) v MNR, reflex, [1985] 2 CTC 2336 (T.C.C.). In the end, a measure of consistency has been achieved, if only by virtue of the fact that the judicial qualities of common sense and fairness have filled the gap left by the absence of a precise explanation of the due diligence defence as articulated in subsection 227.1(3).

As the subjective standard has its roots in the common law, my analysis will focus on the seminal decision in this area before turning to the basic question of whether and to what extent that standard has been modified by subsection 227.1(3) of the Act. As that provision is a mirror image of the standard imposed on directors under the Canada Business Corporations Act (the CBCA), R.S.C., 1985, c. C-44, and in light of the statutory presumption of coherence between statutes, it remains to determine Parliament's intent. In the reasons that follow, I conclude that the federal legislation includes an objective component but largely adopts the common law position to the extent that the former recognizes the subjective element. It is instructive, however, to begin with an overview of the circumstances giving rise to the adoption of the director liability provisions and the due diligence defence set out in section 227.1 of the Income Tax Act.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY AND FRAMEWORK

Prior to the coming into force of section 227.1 of the Act, the Department of National Revenue faced two related but distinct problems. The first was the non-payment of corporate taxes per se and the second was the non-remittance of taxes that were to be withheld at source on behalf of a third party (e.g. employees). The 1981 recession exacerbated both of these problems. As companies experienced difficult financial times, corporations and directors actively and knowingly sought to avoid the payment of taxes in a variety of ways. For example, some companies allowed themselves to be stripped of their assets by a related entity, and left with an uncollectable "I.O.U.", with the result that the Crown's claim for unpaid corporate taxes could not be satisfied. Yet other corporations that were short of capital "sold" their unused investment tax credits or scientific research deductions with little concern for whether the company would subsequently be able to fulfill its obligations under the Act. Non-remittance of taxes withheld on behalf of a third party was likewise not uncommon during the recession. Faced with a choice between remitting such amounts to the Crown or drawing on such amounts to pay key creditors whose goods or services were necessary to the continued operation of the business, corporate directors often followed the latter course. Such patent abuse and mismanagement on the part of directors constituted the "mischief" at which section 227.1 was directed: see E. G. Kroft, "The Liability of Directors for Unpaid Canadian Taxes," in Report of Proceedings of the Thirty- seventh Tax Conference , 1985 (Toronto: Canadian Tax Foundation, 1986) 30:1, at pages 30:1-30:3, 30:14- 30:15; see also E. P. Moskowitz, "Directors' Liability Under Income Tax Legislation and Other Related Statutes" (1990), 38 Can. Tax J. 537, at pages 539-541.

Before the introduction of section 227.1, the means available to the Department for the collection, from directors personally, of amounts owing to the Crown were limited and inadequate. Subsection 159(2) [as am. by S.C. 1985, c. 45, s. 90] of the Act alone imposed personal liability on a director for corporate tax arrears only if a director acting in the capacity of a liquidator or a trustee distributed corporate property before obtaining the requisite tax clearance certificate. In addition to such civil liability, a director was (and still is) subject to criminal liability for corporate tax arrears pursuant to section 242 of the Act if that director "directed, authorized, assented to, acquiesced in, or participated in" the company's commission of an offence under the Act. However, in light of the difficulty of meeting the mens rea requirement of section 242, few directorial convictions under that provision have been secured.

Digitized by Google

It was against this background that efforts were made to facilitate the Department's collection process by broadening directors' exposure to personal liability. The draft legislation, made public in June of 1982, which was a precursor to section 227.1 imposed absolute liability on directors for amounts that the corporation failed to deduct or remit on behalf of a third party as required by the Act. Notably, as originally enacted, section 227.1 did not impose liability for a failure to pay Part VII or Part VIII corporate tax. That development came later by way of amendment to subsection 227.1(1) in 1984: see S.C. 1984, c. 1, section 100, applicable to 1983 and subsequent taxation years.

As noted above, section 227.1 was originally drafted as an absolute liability provision. It was only following a policy review undertaken in September of 1982 by the Department of Finance, in conjunction with the drafting process, that the "due diligence defence" set out in the current subsection 227.1(3) was introduced and the harsh character of the proposed legislation tempered.

In 1989, when the Minister assessed the taxpayer in this case, section 227.1 [as enacted by S.C. 1980-81- 82-83, c. 140, s. 124; 1984, c. 1, s. 100; 1988, c. 55, s. 172)] read in full as follows:

227.1 (1) Where a corporation has failed to deduct or withhold an amount as required by subsection 135(3) or section 153 or 215, has failed to remit such an amount or has failed to pay an amount of tax for a taxation year as required under Part VII or VIII, the directors of the corporation at the time the corporation was required to deduct, withhold, remit or pay the amount are jointly and severally liable, together with the corporation, to pay that amount and any interest or penalties relating thereto.

A director is not liable under subsection (1), unless a certificate for the amount of the corporation's liability referred to in that subsection has been registered in the Federal Court of Canada under section 223 and execution for such amount has been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part;

the corporation has commenced liquidation or dissolution proceedings or has been dissolved and a claim for the amount of the corporation's liability referred to in that subsection has been proved within six months after the earlier of the date of the commencement of the proceedings and the date of dissolution; or the corporation has made an assignment or a receiving order has been made against it under the Bankruptcy Act and a claim for the amount of the corporation's liability referred to in that subsection has been proved within six months after the date of the assignment or receiving order.

A director is not liable for a failure under subsection (1) where he exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances.

No action or proceedings to recover any amount payable by a director of a corporation under subsection (1) shall be commenced more than two years after he last ceased to be a director of that corporation.

Digitized by Google

Where execution referred to in paragraph (2)(a) has issued, the amount recoverable from a director is the amount remaining unsatisfied after execution.

Where a director pays an amount in respect of a corporation's liability referred to in subsection (1) that is proved in liquidation, dissolution or bankruptcy proceedings, he is entitled to any preference that Her Majesty in right of Canada would have been entitled to had such amount not been so paid and, where a certificate that relates to such amount has been registered, he is entitled to an assignment of the certificate to the extent of his payment, which assignment the Minister is hereby empowered to make.

A director who has satisfied a claim under this section is entitled to contribution from the other directors who were liable for the claim.

Subsection 227.1(1) thus provides that directors may be held personally liable for the corporation's failure to withhold and remit certain amounts to the Receiver General of Canada. However, the Minister cannot successfully rely upon subsection (1) for recovery of amounts owing unless a series of preconditions are satisfied. Subsection 227.1(2), for example, shields a director from personal liability unless one of the following circumstances arises:

A certificate for the amount of the corporate tax liability has been registered in the Federal Court and execution thereof has been partially or wholly unsatisfied;

The corporation has commenced proceedings for liquidation or dissolution and a claim for the amount of the corporate tax liability is proved within six months after commencement of such proceedings; or

The corporation has made an assignment (or had a receiving order made against it) under the Bankruptcy Act [R.S.C., 1985, c. B-3] and a claim for the amount of the corporate tax liability is proved within six months after the date of the assignment or receiving order.

See V. Krishna, The Fundamentals of Canadian Income Tax, 5th ed. (Toronto: Carswell, 1995), at pages 1111-1112; see also Information Circular No. 89-2, "Directors' Liability" Section 227.1 of the Income Tax Act" (1 May 1989).

Moreover, pursuant to subsection 227.1(4), the Minister is not entitled to invoke subsection 227.1(1) unless he commences proceedings thereunder within two years of the date that the defendant director ceased to hold that corporate position. Finally and most importantly, for our purposes, subsection 227.1(3) states that a director is not liable under subsection (1) if he or she "exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure [to deduct, withhold or remit] that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances."

During the course of oral argument, a question arose as to whether a finding of director liability might somehow impact negatively upon an employee's liability to pay tax, the inference being that if a director is exonerated then perhaps an employee might somehow be required to provide the funds notionally deducted and still owing to Her Majesty. As I understand the current statutory regime, employees are not held personally liable in the event that a company fails to remit deductions purportedly withheld at source: see Lalonde (R) v MNR, [1982] CTC 2749 (T.R.B.). Employees are entitled to apply amounts purportedly deducted at source "as a credit against their taxes payable," whether deducted or not (Moskowitz, supra , at page 550). Of course, Parliament could have opted to treat employees in a less generous fashion. Prior to the enactment of section 227.1, however, the departments of Finance and National Revenue had specifically considered and rejected such a course as an alternative to that provision: see Kroft, supra, at page 30:13. In short, the issue of director liability under section 227.1 is irrelevant to the question of employee liability for unremitted source deductions.

THE STANDARD OF CARE

Digitized by Google

The starting point for an analysis of the common law duty of care is the seminal judgment of Romer J. in City Equitable Fire Insurance Co., In re, [1925] Ch. 407 (C.A.). In that case, an investigation undertaken upon winding up of the company revealed a shortage of funds determined to be largely attributable to fraud on the part of the managing director. Although the other corporate directors were not party to that fraudulent action the Official Receiver, as liquidator, sought to hold them liable for the loss on the basis that they were in a position to prevent the fraud and should have done so. Romer J. found that the other directors had breached their duty of care but further held that an indemnification clause in the company's articles of association prevented the Official Receiver from recovering the missing funds from them. In coming to that conclusion, Romer J. framed in the following terms the minimum standard of care, diligence and skill required of directors by the common law (at pages 426-429):

It has sometimes been said that directors are trustees. If this means no more than that directors in the performance of their duties stand in a fiduciary relationship to the company, the statement is true enough. But if the statement is meant to be an indication by way of analogy of what those duties are, it appears to me to be wholly misleading. I can see but little resemblance between the duties of a director and the duties of a trustee of a will or of a marriage settlement. It is indeed impossible to describe the duty of directors in general terms, whether by way of analogy or otherwise . . . . The larger the business carried on by the company the more numerous, and the more important, the matters that must of necessity be left to the managers, the accountants and the rest of the staff. The manner in which the work of the company is to be distributed between the board of directors and the staff is in truth a business matter to be decided on business lines . . . .

In order, therefore, to ascertain the duties that a person appointed to the board of an established company undertakes to perform, it is necessary to consider not only the nature of the company's business, but also the manner in which the work of the company is in fact distributed between the directors and the other officials of the company, provided always that this distribution is a reasonable one in the circumstances, and is not inconsistent with any express provisions of the articles of association. In discharging the duties of his position thus ascertained a director must, of course, act honestly; but he must also exercise some degree of both skill and diligence.

. . .

. . . (1.) A director need not exhibit in the performance of his duties a greater degree of skill than may reasonably be expected from a person of his knowledge and experience . . . . In the words of Lindley M.R.: "If directors act within their powers, if they act with such care as is reasonably to be expected from them, having regard to their knowledge and experience, and if they act honestly for the benefit of the company they represent, they discharge both their equitable as well as their legal duty to the company": see Lagunas Nitrate Co. v. Lagunas Syndicate. It is perhaps only another way of stating the same proposition to say that directors are not liable for mere errors of judgment. (2.) A director is not bound to give continuous attention to the affairs of his company. His duties are of an intermittent nature to be performed at periodical board meetings, and at meetings of any committee of the board upon which he happens to be placed. He is not, however, bound to attend all such meetings, though he ought to attend whenever, in the circumstances, he is reasonably able to do so. (3.) In respect of all duties that, having regard to the exigencies of business, and the articles of association, may properly be left to some other official, a director is, in the absence of grounds for suspicion, justified in trusting that official to perform such duties honestly. [For a good review of the common law, see Dixon v. Deacon Morgan McEwen Easson reflex, (1989), 41 B.C.L.R. (2d) 180 (S.C.), per Bouck J.]

The above quotes reveal a plethora of legal propositions. For purposes of this analysis, I confine myself to the following.

Digitized by Google

First, it is clear that directors are not to be equated with trustees. As Gower points out, directors are agents of the company rather than its trustees: see L. C. B. Gower, The Principles of Modern Company Law, 3rd ed. (London: Stevens & Sons, 1969), at page 516. But as agents, directors stand in a fiduciary relationship to their principal, the company. Admittedly, to the extent that a fiduciary is under a duty to act, for example, in good faith so too is a trustee and, thus, in this limited sense the comparison of a director and a trustee has validity. The analogy breaks down, however, when consideration is given to the duties of care and skill.

Notwithstanding the fact that the director/trustee analogy is generally inappropriate in the corporate context, during the course of oral argument, attention focused on the fact that subsection 227(5) [as am. by S.C. 1988, c. 55, s. 171] of the Act deems amounts deducted or withheld to be held in trust, irrespective of whether the funds deducted or withheld under the Act were actually so segregated. The inference to be drawn was that that provision somehow cloaks a director with the cape of a trustee. In my view, the inference is without legal foundation once regard is had to the true purpose underlying subsection 227(5). The purpose of that subsection is to enable the Minister to allege priority over competing creditors in the event that a corporation is no longer able to meet its continuing fiscal obligations. At this point, a brief explanation is required.

At the time of enactment of section 227.1, subsection 227(5) as it then read dictated that all amounts deducted or withheld under the Act be kept in a separate trust account. In 1986, that requirement was repealed and replaced by a provision which deemed amounts deducted or withheld after 23 May 1985 to be "held in trust . . . separate . . . and apart from the [corporation's] own moneys" irrespective of whether the funds deducted or withheld under the Act were actually so segregated: see S.C. 1986, c. 6, subsection 118(1). The reenactment of subsection 227(5) was apparently motivated by a desire to ameliorate the Department's position vis-à-vis other secured creditors by dispensing with the perceived need for "tracing" funds caused by the original provision in order to establish priority: see Kroft, supra , at page 30:5, note 22. While the new deeming provision seeks to ensure that the Crown no longer suffers from the perceived disadvantage of having to trace monies back to an actual trust account, the trust character of source deductions was preserved. It is my understanding that without some sort of trust, the Crown is of the opinion that it would have even greater difficulty establishing the priority of its claim over others. In the circumstances, I do not think it can be reasonably argued that subsection 227(5) reflects Parliament's intent with respect to the statutory standard of care set out in subsection 227.1(3).

The reality is that employers do not actually set aside funds relating to source deductions every time an employee is issued a pay cheque. The withholding of source deductions is a notional concept which does not materialize until the obligation to remit actually arises. In respect of amounts which are notionally withheld from an employee's salary pursuant to subsection 153(1), the regulations under the Act prescribe that remittance must take place within fifteen days of the end of the month in which the withholding occurred. That is a minimum requirement and more frequent remittance is prescribed where average monthly withholdings exceed $15,000.

At least one commentator has suggested that the amendment to abolish the need to establish a separate trust account has the practical effect of lowering the level of diligence that the Act requires of directors in relation to employee withholdings: see R. L. Campbell, "The Fiduciary Duties of Corporate Directors: Exploring New Avenues" (1988), 36 Can. Tax J. 912. For purposes of this appeal, it is sufficient that I conclude that subsection 227(5) does not raise the standard of care to the trustee threshold. I return now to some of the other legal propositions established in City Equitable.

Digitized by Google

The second proposition that I wish to discuss is the following: a director need not exhibit in the performance of his or her duties a greater degree of skill and care than may reasonably be expected from a person of his or her knowledge and experience. Thus, the standard of care is partly objective (the standard of the reasonable person), and partly subjective in that the reasonable person is judged on the basis that he or she has the knowledge and experience of the particular individual. It is a hybrid "objective subjective standard". The English courts, true to their aristocratic traditions, appear to have been unwilling to hold directors to a higher standard of account, namely the objective one, for a pragmatic reason: "the facts are that until recently the possession of a title was often regarded as a greater qualification for office than any amount of business acumen and drive, and that the ordinary part-time director was only expected to display such skill (if any) as he happened to possess, and such attention to duty as he thought fit to offer" (Gower, supra , at pages 549-550).

Third, a director is not obliged to give continuous attention to the affairs of the company, nor is he or she even bound to attend all meetings of the board. However when, in the circumstances, it is reasonably possible to attend such meetings, a director ought to do so. Subsequent English cases, though, went to more of an extreme, permitting a director to avoid liability despite having missed all board meetings for a period of several years: see e.g. Denham & Co., In re (1883), 25 Ch.D. 752 (C.A.); see also Cardiff Savings Bank, In re. Bute's (Marquis of) Case, [1892] 2 Ch. 100. Notwithstanding such authorities, it would be silly to pretend that the common law would stand still and permit directors to adhere to a standard of total passivity and irresponsibility. At the risk of getting ahead of myself, it should be noted here that the law today can scarcely be said to embrace the principle that the less a director does or knows or cares, the less likely it is that he or she will be held liable. Further to this point, the statutory standard of care will surely be interpreted and applied in a manner which encourages responsibility. Accordingly, the director who acts irresponsibly, for example, by failing to attend all board meetings now does so at his own peril: see McCandless (M.W.) v. Canada, reflex, [1995] 2 C.T.C. 2111 (T.C.C.). That being said, the matter of director passivity will have to be reevaluated in light of the statutory standard discussed below.

Fourth, in the absence of grounds for suspicion, it is not improper for a director to rely on company officials to perform honestly duties that have been properly delegated to them. Further to this point, it is the exigencies of business and the company's articles of association that, together, will determine whether it is appropriate to delegate a duty. The larger the business, for instance, the greater will be the need to delegate.

Those who argue in favour of a subjective standard of care, as established at common law, cite the difficulties associated with formulating and applying an objective standard by which to judge the conduct of all directors. B. L. Welling explains the problem in the following terms in Corporate Law in Canada: The Governing Principles, 2nd ed. (Toronto: Butterworths, 1991), at pages 329-330:

. . . few minimum qualifications are required to be a corporate director whereas most identifiable professional groups share among them some minimum entry standards; in addition, directors are required to exercise business judgment and to take business risks varying from extreme conservativism to out-and-out speculation. The combination of these two factors made it difficult for judges and legislators to articulate a minimum standard of competence applicable to all managers in all situations.

Notwithstanding these arguments based on both the absence of stringent pre-requisites for becoming a director and the nature of that office which involves the exercise of business judgment, the question of whether the standard of care should be "upgraded" and if so, to what extent, has long been a subject of debate: see e.g. F. Iacobucci et al., Canadian Business Corporations: An Analysis of Recent Legislative Developments (Agincourt, Ontario: Canada Law Book Ltd., 1977), at pages 291-293.

Digitized by Google

The question I must address is whether the standard of care formulated in City Equitable has been upgraded pursuant to subsection 227.1(3) of the Act. For purposes of deciding this appeal, that question may be recast more precisely as follows: has the subjective element of the common law standard been eliminated or reduced by statute? In other words, has the largely subjective standard been "objectified"? Recall that subsection 227.1(3) reads thus:

227.1 . . .

(3) A director is not liable for a failure under subsection (1) where he exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances.

Interestingly, the wording of that provision is virtually identical to the language used in paragraph 122(1)(b) of the Canada Business Corporations Act which sets out, for purposes of corporate law, the following general standard of care to be exercised by directors:

122. (1) Every director and officer of a corporation in exercising his powers and discharging his duties shall

. . .

(b) exercise the care, diligence and skill that a reasonably prudent person would exercise in comparable circumstances.

Notably, the statutory phrase "care, diligence and skill" reflects the language of the City Equitable case. It is also noteworthy that a number of provinces have corporate legislation containing a provision which mirrors in all material respects paragraph 122(1)(b) of the CBCA: see e.g. the Ontario Business Corporations Act, 1982 (the OBCA), S.O. 1982, c. 4, s. 134(1)(b); but compare the British Columbia Company Act (the BCCA), R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 59, s. 142(1)(b), which does not contain the phrase "in comparable circumstances".

In my view, it is not simply a fortuitous occurrence that subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act adopts the same language as found in paragraph 122(1)(b) of the Canada Business Corporations Act, for both statutory provisions relate to the standard of care to be exercised. Admittedly, the CBCA provision deals with the standard of care owed to the corporation while the taxation provision concerns the standard of care owed to the Crown and Canadian taxpayers. However, that distinction does not serve to nullify the relevance of the standard set out in the CBCA, if only because of the presumption of coherence between statutes. That elementary principle of statutory interpretation is explained by P.-A. Côté in The Interpretation of Legislation in Canada, 2nd ed. (Cowansville, Quebec: Les Éditions Yvon Blais Inc., 1991), at pages 288 and 290:

Different enactments of the same legislature are supposedly as consistent as the provisions of a single enactment. All legislation of one Parliament is deemed to make up a coherent system. Thus, interpretations favouring harmony between statutes should prevail over discordant ones, because the former are presumed to better represent the thought of the legislator.

This presumption of coherence in enactments of the same legislature is even stronger when they relate to the same subject matter, in pari materia. Apparent conflicts between statutes should be resolved in such a way as to re-establish the desired harmony.

. . .

To sum up, the presumption of coherence in related legislation applies particularly to statutes of the same legislature. But it is also relevant to statutes of different jurisdictions, as one legislature may be deemed to imitate the form or be consistent with the substance of a statute enacted by another.

Digitized by Google

Thus, in order to determine whether the common law standard of care was modified by statute, it is both appropriate and instructive to consider not only the due diligence provision set out at subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act but also the analogous, and virtually identical, standard of care provisions found in the Canada Business Corporations Act.

The question of the extent to which the common law standard might have been "upgraded" by these statutes has been questioned by academics and practitioners alike. Some commentators are of the view that, far from effecting a significant modification of the common law standard of care, the relevant legislative provisions established only a slightly more onerous regime than previously existed and one that retains much of its original, subjective character: see e.g. Welling, supra , at page 332. I am in general agreement with that assessment, keeping in mind my earlier comments with respect to director passivity (see discussion supra, at page 146). I begin my analysis by considering each of the statutory standard's constituent elements in turn, namely: skill, care and diligence.

Federal company law dictates that a director must "exercise the . . . skill that a reasonably prudent person would exercise in comparable circumstances." By comparison, at common law a director was required to exercise only that degree of skill which could reasonably be expected from a person of his or her knowledge and experience. It has been suggested that the statutory skill criterion is essentially the same as the common law requirement: see Welling, supra , at page 333; see also Kroft, supra, at pages 30:42-30:43. In reaching that conclusion, those commentators point to the use of the phrase "in comparable circumstances" and, in conjunction therewith, note that a reasonably prudent person might not be at all skilled in the field of corporate management. Put differently, a reasonably prudent person in comparable circumstances may be, for example, an unskilled person. In my view, it is correct to distinguish in this way between a reasonably prudent person and a reasonably skilled person so as to conclude that the subjective element of the common law standard of skill has not been altered by federal statute.

With respect to the duty of care, the Canada Business Corporations Act calls upon a director to "exercise the care . . . that a reasonably prudent person would exercise in comparable circumstances." Once again, however, the statutory enactment of a care requirement does not appear to have altered the common law position that a director be expected to fulfill his or her duties with care by acting reasonably according to the knowledge and experience that he or she actually possessed: see Welling, supra , at page 333. Put differently, the relevant legislation does not refer to "a reasonably skilled person" who, presumably, would be deemed to possess a certain level of skill in relation to corporate management. Rather, the statute speaks of a reasonably prudent person and the care that that person would exercise in comparable circumstances. Hence, in the event that the reasonably prudent person is unskilled (which possibility is discussed above), the statute requires only the exercise of a degree of care which is commensurate with that person's level of skill. It is in this manner that skill and care are clearly interconnected. That being said, it is worth emphasizing that it is insufficient for a director to assert simply that he or she did his or her best if, having regard to that individual's level of skill and business experience, he or she failed to act reasonably prudently. I turn now to the third and final element of the standard"diligence.

Upon reflection, it seems arguable to me that the term "diligence" is synonymous with the term "care". That is, diligence is simply the degree of attention or care expected of a person in a given situation. At least, that is the way the term is employed in City Equitable . If attention to one's obligations is the essence of diligence, then that aspect of the standard neither adds to nor detracts from the statutory statement in subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act. Others, however, have taken a different approach by contending not only that diligence is an independent element of the statutory standard but also that that requirement, unlike the statutory requirements for skill and care, is more onerous than at common law: see Welling, supra, at pages 333-334; see also the Ontario case of Kerr v. Law Profession Indemnity Co. (1994), 22 C.C.L.I. (2d) 28 (Ont. Gen. Div.), which deals with the Ontario Business Corporations Act [R.S.O. 1990, c. B.16].

Digitized by Google

Professor Welling posits that the reasonably prudent person serving as a director would surely exercise diligence in attending to his or her duties; a skilled individual should use his or her skills to perform said duties while an unskilled individual should obtain "competent outside advice" in respect of same (supra , at page 334). I am reluctant to embrace that analysis unreservedly. Even if a director is unskilled, I fail to see why he or she should not be entitled to rely, as contemplated in City Equitable, on advice provided by officials inside the corporation"unless the circumstances are such that the reasonably prudent but unskilled person acting as a director would seek outside advice. If Professor Welling intended his comments on outside advice to apply only to the latter set of circumstances, then there is no disagreement between us. In any event, for purposes of deciding this appeal, I need not attempt to delimit the precise boundaries of the diligence requirement.

In my opinion, it is not surprising that federal legislation has retained the subjective element of the common law standard of care for directors. Even the law of tort adjusts its objective standard of the reasonable person downward so as to account, for example, for the age, experience and intelligence of children. The standard may also be adjusted upward, as it is for professionals: see generally A. M. Linden, Canadian Tort Law, 5th ed. (Toronto: Butterworths, 1993), at chapter 5, section B, beginning at page 117. The reasonable person standard is thus hardly inflexible. It adjusts to the circumstances and to the individual qualities of the actor. This is all the more true in the context of federal company or taxation law where that standard, at least as it applies to directors' duties, is explicitly modified by the phrase "in comparable circumstances."

The legislative history of the Ontario Business Corporations Act, whose standard of care provisions are virtually identical to those found in the CBCA, supports my conclusion that the common law standard of care, while altered slightly, has not been significantly upgraded by statute. Notably, the Interim Report of the Select Committee on Company Law (1967) (the Lawrence Report) recommended a legal standard of conduct for Ontario directors that was framed in the following terms (at paragraph 7.2.3):

"Every director of a company shall exercise the powers and discharge the duties of his office honestly, in good faith and in the best interests of the company, and in connection therewith shall exercise that degree of care, diligence and skill which a reasonably prudent director would exercise in comparable circumstances." [Underlining added.]

The intent of the Committee, in suggesting the words that it did, was clearly to upgrade to a professional level the legal standards for directors imposed at common law: see the Lawrence Report, supra, at paragraphs 7.2.2 and 7.2.3. However, the original draft provision met with opposition and the Ontario legislature ultimately adopted a different standard, that of the reasonably prudent person. The standard set out in the enacted provision also contained the phrase "in comparable circumstances".

It was in the wake of a concerted lobbying effort by the corporate bar that the word "person" was ultimately inserted in place of the term "director" in the Ontario*Business Corporations Act* . The essence of the corporate bar's position is captured neatly by J. S. Ziegel et al., Vol. 1, Cases and Materials on Partnerships and Canadian Business Corporations, 3rd ed. (Toronto: Carswell, 1994), at pages 474-475:

The concern expressed was that a professional standard could result in liability for a wide

Digitized by Google

group of individuals who serve as directors, ranging from the wife of the majority shareholder in a small company to a prominent chief executive officer of a public company who, because of his prominence, serves on the board to five other public companies.

By abandoning a professional standard for directors, the legislature presumably was signalling to that "wide group of individuals who serve as directors" that they could rest easy since the statutory standard in Ontario was not intended to seriously alter the common law. The reality is that courts have to contend with a wide variety of corporate forms. Bluntly stated, the vast majority of Canadian corporations do not issue shares which trade on the various stock exchanges. The "ma and pa" operation is as much a part of the business fabric of the country as are the enterprises controlled from Bay Street.

Since the language of the Canada Business Corporations Act mirrors that of the OBCA, it seems logical to infer that the federal Parliament intended to send out the very same message to existing and potential directors. In any event, had Parliament wished to strengthen the standard of care imposed at common law, it could have easily done so by adopting appropriate language. In this regard, it is helpful to consider section 142 of the British Columbia Company Act which reads as follows:

142. (1) Every director of a company, in exercising his powers and performing his functions, shall act honestly and in good faith and in the best interests of the company; and exercise the care, diligence and skill of a reasonably prudent person.

(2) The provisions of this section are in addition to, and not in derogation of, any enactment or rule of law or equity relating to the duties or liabilities of directors of a company.

Subsection (2) of that provision indicates that the standard of care for directors set out in paragraph 142(1)(b) is clearly intended to serve as more than a codification of the requirements imposed at common law. Interestingly, neither the Ontario Business Corporations Act nor the Canada Business Corporations Act contains an explicit statement of this nature to the effect that those statutes represent, without a doubt, an upgrading of common law requirements. Equally relevant is the fact that paragraph 142(1)(b) of the British Columbia Company Act refers only to "a reasonably prudent person," which expression is unqualified by the phrase "in comparable circumstances". It seems at least arguable that the British Columbia legislation, which was enacted after the Ontario company legislation, represents an attempt to avoid the legal interpretation associated with the use of that qualifying expression in the OBCA. To the extent that the standard in the British Columbia Company Act is more burdensome than the standard in the Canada Business Corporations Act, the taxpayer is entitled to rely on the latter standard as reproduced in the Income Tax Act.

This is a convenient place to summarize my findings in respect of subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act. The standard of care laid down in subsection 227.1(3) of the Act is inherently flexible. Rather than treating directors as a homogeneous group of professionals whose conduct is governed by a single, unchanging standard, that provision embraces a subjective element which takes into account the personal knowledge and background of the director, as well as his or her corporate circumstances in the form of, inter alia, the company's organization, resources, customs and conduct. Thus, for example, more is expected of individuals with superior qualifications (e.g. experienced business-persons).

The standard of care set out in subsection 227.1(3) of the Act is, therefore, not purely objective. Nor is it purely subjective. It is not enough for a director to say he or she did his or her best, for that is an invocation of the purely subjective standard. Equally clear is that honesty is not enough. However, the standard is not a professional one. Nor is it the negligence law standard that governs these cases. Rather, the Act contains both objective elements"embodied in the reasonable person language"and subjective elements"inherent in individual considerations like "skill" and the idea of "comparable circumstances". Accordingly, the standard can be properly described as "objective subjective".

Digitized by Google

ANALYSIS

There are far too many cases dealing with section 227.1 of the Act. One way to appreciate the breadth of the extant law is to categorize the relevant cases. That task has, in fact, already been accomplished in large part by some of the commentators: see e.g. Moskowitz, supra, at pages 556-566; see also R. L. Campbell, "Director's Liability for Unremitted Employee Deductions" (1993), 14 Adv. Q. 453.

For example, in some instances the relevant issue will be whether an individual was in fact or in law a director at the relevant time for purposes of imposing personal liability or whether that individual ceased to hold office by operation of a valid resignation. In other cases, such as those involving bankruptcy and receivership, the central issue will be de jure control. Yet another cluster of cases, including situations in which a dominant director is able to limit others' influence over corporate affairs, will deal with de facto control. I intend to focus on the category of cases respecting the distinction between inside and outside directors since that line of authority is the most pertinent to this appeal.

At the outset, I wish to emphasize that in adopting this analytical approach I am not suggesting that liability is dependent simply upon whether a person is classified as an inside as opposed to an outside director. Rather, that characterization is simply the starting point of my analysis. At the same time, however, it is difficult to deny that inside directors, meaning those involved in the day-to-day management of the company and who influence the conduct of its business affairs, will have the most difficulty in establishing the due diligence defence. For such individuals, it will be a challenge to argue convincingly that, despite their daily role in corporate management, they lacked business acumen to the extent that that factor should overtake the assumption that they did know, or ought to have known, of both remittance requirements and any problem in this regard. In short, inside directors will face a significant hurdle when arguing that the subjective element of the standard of care should predominate over its objective aspect.

In some instances, it is easy to see why inside directors have been held liable. Such is true in respect of Barnett, supra, the first case which dealt with the due diligence defence. In that case the taxpayer, as director and sole shareholder of the company, hired a comptroller. When the latter informed the taxpayer that the company was short of cash, the taxpayer instructed that the business' key suppliers should be paid first. In these circumstances, the Tax Court dismissed the taxpayer's appeal from the Minister's assessment which held the taxpayer personally liable for the source deductions withheld but not remitted. Equally understandable is the imposition of liability in the following cases involving inside directors: Quantz (C.) v. M.N.R., reflex, [1988] 1 C.T.C. 2276 (T.C.C.); and*Beutler (O.) v. M.N.R.*, reflex, [1988] 1 C.T.C. 2414 (T.C.C.).

Similarly, the taxpayer in Fraser (Trustee of) v. M.N.R. reflex, (1987), 37 B.L.R. 309 (T.C.C.), provides a good example of an inattentive inside director upon whom liability was justifiably visited. The taxpayer in that case was a director, minority shareholder and vice-president of manufacturing operations of a corporation. As of a certain time, he was apprised of the fact that the company was in arrears with Revenue Canada. Nevertheless, the taxpayer did nothing more in respect of that problem than rely on assurances, from the inside directors responsible for the financial side of the business, to the effect that there was no need to worry. Having made no efforts to prevent further defaults, the taxpayer was held personally responsible for the amounts that should have been remitted to the Crown by the corporation.

Digitized by Google

Of course, not all inside directors have been held liable. The Tax Court has refused to impose liability on an inside director in cases where he or she is an innocent party who has been misled or deceived by co- directors: see Bianco v. Minister of National Revenue reflex, (1991), 2 B.L.R. (2d) 255 (T.C.C.);Edmondson (S.G.) v. M.N.R., reflex, [1988] 2 C.T.C. 2185 (T.C.C.); Shindle (B.) v. Canada, reflex, [1995] 2 C.T.C. 227 (F.C.T.D.); and Snow v. Minister of National Revenue reflex, (1991), 38 C.C.E.L. 70 (T.C.C.). There are also other examples of an inside director being exonerated: see Fitzgerald (G.) v. M.N.R., reflex, [1991] 2 C.T.C. 2595 (T.C.C.).

From the perspective of the taxpayer in this case, however, the most disconcerting decision to emerge from the Tax Court must be Sanford v. R., reflex, [1996] 1 C.T.C. 2016 (T.C.C.). That case concerned the liability of an individual who was, at the relevant time, a co-director with the present taxpayer at RBI. In*Sanford*, the inside director who was assessed as a taxpayer under section 227.1 of the Act was an employee who had invested a substantial sum of money in the company but was subsequently denied the opportunity to participate in the management of the corporation. The company's principals had encouraged the taxpayer to focus on her area of expertise namely, sales, and afforded her little influence in respect of administrative and financial matters in which she had no training. She did, however, have authority to co-sign company cheques along with another director. After learning that the company was in arrears to Revenue Canada, the taxpayer requested and co-signed a cheque to address that problem. Although that cheque was ultimately returned, marked "N.S.F.", the taxpayer did not know at the time it was issued that there were insufficient funds to cover the cheque. From the reasons for judgment, one must infer that liability was avoided because of the taxpayer's limited financial experience and restricted influence on corporate management. As well, when the taxpayer found out that funds were owing to Revenue Canada she took active steps to see that the taxes were paid. I wish to make it clear, however, that the purpose of subsection 227.1(3) is to prevent failure to make remittances and not to cure default after the fact (though, as a practical matter, the provision should have the latter effect as well). I must leave that issue for another day. For the moment, I will refrain from further comment on Sanford : see discussion infra.

The final case I wish to discuss in this section dealing with inside directors is Stevenson Estate v. Canada, [1996] T.C.J. No. 1599 (T.C.C.) (QL). That case provides a quintessential illustration of the difference between the nature of liability for inside as opposed to outside directors and the effect of the subjective element of the standard of care. The company at issue was a family run enterprise whose principal activity was the sale of earthworms. At the relevant time, the directors of that business included "an elderly man of minimal education who had virtually no idea what was going on" and who was a director in name only, as well as "an intelligent woman with considerable business experience" who held the position of Chief Financial Officer of the company (at paragraphs 13 and 11, *per*Bowman T.C.J.). The Tax Court Judge held the inside director liable for failure to meet the standard of care set out in subsection 227.1(3) of the Act and, in doing so, noted that that director "was involved in the company's affairs to a degree that she could not have been oblivious to its financial difficulties"; in contrast, the outside director was exonerated on the basis that he "took no part in the financial affairs of the company and could not have influenced the course of events" (*ibid.*at paragraphs 11 and 13). I turn now specifically to a consideration of outside directors and, in particular, how the standard of care set out in the Act is to be met by them.

In order to satisfy the due diligence requirement laid down in subsection 227.1(3) a director may, as the Department of National Revenue has noted, take "positive action" by setting up controls to account for remittances, by asking for regular reports from the company's financial officers on the ongoing use of such controls, and by obtaining confirmation at regular intervals that withholding and remittance has taken place as required by the Act: see Information Circular, No. 89-2,supra , at paragraph 7.

Digitized by Google

Likewise, some commentators have advised directors that, if they wish to be able to rely successfully on the due diligence defence, it would be wise for them to consider undertaking a number of "positive steps" including, in certain circumstances, the establishment and monitoring of a trust account from which both employee wages and remittances owing to Her Majesty would be paid: see e.g. Moskowitz, supra , at pages 566-568.

While such precautionary measures may be regarded as persuasive evidence of due diligence on the part of a director, in my view, those steps are not necessary conditions precedent to the establishment of that defence. This is particularly true with respect to the establishment of a separate trust account for source deductions to be remitted to the Receiver General. It is difficult to hold otherwise given the fact that Parliament abolished that express requirement for the purpose of achieving other legislative goals. Above all, a clear dividing line must be maintained between the standard of care required of a director and that of a trustee. Accordingly, an outside director cannot be required to go to the lengths outlined above. As an illustration, I would not expect an outside director, upon appointment to the board of one of Canada's leading companies, to go directly to the comptroller's office to inquire about withholdings and remittances. Obviously, if I would not expect such steps to be taken by the most sophisticated of business-persons, then I would certainly not expect such measures to be adopted by those with limited business acumen. This is not to suggest that a director can adopt an entirely passive approach but only that, unless there is reason for suspicion, it is permissible to rely on the day-to-day corporate managers to be responsible for the payment of debt obligations such as those owing to Her Majesty. This falls within the fourth proposition in the City Equitable case: see discussion supra, at page 146-147. The question remains, however, as to when a positive duty to act arises.

In my view, the positive duty to act arises where a director obtains information, or becomes aware of facts, which might lead one to conclude that there is, or could reasonably be, a potential problem with remittances. Put differently, it is indeed incumbent upon an outside director to take positive steps if he or she knew, or ought to have known, that the corporation could be experiencing a remittance problem. The typical situation in which a director is, or ought to have been, apprised of the possibility of such a problem is where the company is having financial difficulties. For example, in Byrt (H.) v. M.N.R., reflex, [1991] 2 C.T.C. 2174 (T.C.C.), an outside director signed financial statements revealing a corporate deficit and thus he knew, or ought to have known, that the company was in financial trouble. The same director also knew that the business integrity of one of his co-directors, who was the president of the corporation too, was questionable. In these circumstances, having made no efforts to ensure that remittances to the Crown were made, the outside director was held personally liable for amounts owing by the corporation to Revenue Canada. According to the Tax Court Judge the outside director had, in contravention of the statutory standard of care, failed to "heed what is transpiring within the corporation and his experience with the people who are responsible for the day-to-day affairs of the corporation" (supra , at page 2184, per Rip T.C.J.).

Two other cases involving outside directors are worthy of comment as these authorities were relied upon by the appellant in this case: Golfman (W.R.) v. M.N.R.,reflex, [1990] 2 C.T.C. 2344 (T.C.C.) and Davies (J.W.)

v. Canada, reflex, [1994] 1 C.T.C. 2744 (T.C.C.). In Golfman, the taxpayer was a lawyer who had become a director of a corporation for whom he had served as a legal advisor for a number of years. Before becoming a director, the taxpayer had reviewed the most recent financial statements available, which suggested that the company was in good financial shape. Further, he had asked two of his co-directors about the corporation's remittances to Revenue Canada and had been informed that everything was in order. Both of the individuals of whom he had inquired were longstanding acquaintances of the taxpayer as well as senior officers of the company with solid business reputations. Given these facts, it was held that the outside director could not reasonably have been expected to conclude that there might be a problem with remittances. It should also be noted that, upon being informed of the corporation's debt obligation to Her Majesty, the taxpayer resigned immediately.

Digitized by Google

So too in Davies, supra, were the directors relieved of personal liability. In that case, three individuals (a physician and two engineers) were asked to join the board of directors of an eyewear company in order to provide specific forms of expertise. None of these outside directors possessed experience in relation to the daily financial management of a corporation. They relied on the corporation's competent, in-house financial officers to handle withholdings and remittances. Further, for the better part of 1988, the financial reports prepared by those officers gave no indication to the outside directors that arrears owing to the Crown had arisen early in that year and gone unaddressed. Although the existence of a monthly cash shortfall was known early in 1988, the weekly event reports as well as other indicators of the company's financial health all painted a positive financial picture. The Tax Court held that the taxpayers were not personally liable for the amounts owing since there had been no reason for them to suspect that there might be a source deduction problem until late in 1988 when the financial reports suggested such for the first time. In other words, prior to November of 1988 when those financial statements were released, it could not be said that the outside directors could reasonably have been expected to have taken positive action.

It is important to note that whether a company is in serious financial difficulty, such as to suggest a problem with remittances, cannot be determined simply by the fact that the monthly balance sheet bears a negative figure. For example, many firms operate on a line of credit to deal with fiscal fluctuations. In each case it will be for the Tax Court Judge to determine whether, based on the financial information or documentation available to the director, the latter ought to have known that there was a problem or potential problem with remittances. Whether the standard of care has been met, now that it has been defined, is thus predominantly a question of fact to be resolved in light of the personal knowledge and experience of the director at issue.

Applying the foregoing analysis of the law to the facts of this case, I find that the taxpayer was under a positive duty to act which arose, at the latest, in November of 1987 when he received the balance sheet of RBI revealing that the company was experiencing what the Tax Court Judge found, as a matter of fact, to be "extremely serious" financial problems (Appeal Book, at page 43). In light of that finding by the Tax Court Judge, and given the taxpayer's ample experience in the field of business, the balance sheet of November 1987 should have alerted the taxpayer to the existence of a possible problem with remittances. This is all the more true since there was no indication or evidence that RBI's financial troubles were merely temporary in nature. In the circumstances, however, the taxpayer made no inquiries in respect of remittance of employee withholdings.

Counsel for the taxpayer argues in his written submissions that material information was knowingly withheld from the taxpayer by both Ms. Beauchamp and the other directors of RBI, such that a "conspiracy of silence" against the taxpayer denied him any knowledge of the non-remittance of employee withholdings: see appellant's memorandum of fact and law, at paragraph 24. Counsel argues further that the alleged conspiracy deprived the taxpayer of freedom of choice and the ability to exert any influence or control over the management of RBI (ibid). I find it difficult to accept the taxpayer's argument to the effect that a "conspiracy of silence" is to blame for his inaction. There was no finding by the Tax Court Judge, nor was there any evidence, to support the understanding that Ms. Beauchamp had given a specific instruction to the other directors that remittances were not to be discussed with the taxpayer. Admittedly, she had instructed the other directors not to discuss with the taxpayer anything other than that which was dealt with at directors' meetings attended by the taxpayer, which matters did not include the issue of remittances. However, there is no indication that the taxpayer was misled or frustrated by other company officials during a quest for knowledge about the state of remittances. In any event, it is unnecessary to decide precisely what steps the taxpayer in this case should have taken after having learned of RBI's grave financial situation and, correlatively, the potential for a remittance problem. Suffice it to say that what the taxpayer did, that is nothing, was inadequate for the purpose of discharging the burden imposed on him by subsection 227.1(3) of the Act, given the precarious financial position of the company.

Digitized by Google

The difference in outcomes between this case and Sanford can be rationalized on the basis of the subjective element of the standard of care. The Sanford case involved an individual with no management experience who took active steps and performed her directorial duties reasonably, having regard to her level of skill and experience, and the corporate circumstances in which she found herself. Accordingly, she was able to avoid personal liability for the unremitted amounts. On the contrary, this case concerns an experienced businessman who took no positive steps to ensure remittance of employee withholdings despite the fact that he should have been alerted to a potential problem in that regard. He did absolutely nothing but close his eyes. As a consequence, it can hardly be said that the taxpayer in this case exercised, in his capacity as director of RBI, the degree of care, skill and diligence required by the Act.

For all of these reasons, the appeal must be dismissed. This is one instance in which it is simply not appropriate to visit the taxpayer with costs of the appeal. The issues pursued before this Court transcend his personal interests. Accordingly, no costs should be awarded.

Linden J.A.: I agree.

Peoples Department Stores Inc. (Trustee of) v. Wise, [2004] 3 S.C.R. 461, 2004 SCC 68, A Recent SCC on Identical Director Responsibility (a slight Divergence?)

Present: Iacobucci,* Major, Bastarache, Binnie, LeBel, Deschamps and Fish JJ.

on appeal from the court of appeal for quebec

Corporations — Directors and officers — Fiduciary duty and duty of care — Directors of bankrupt corporation being sued by trustee — Trustee claiming that directors breached fiduciary duty and duty of care — Whether directors owe fiduciary duty or duty of care to corporation's creditors — Canada Business Corporations Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-44, s. 122(1).

Bankruptcy and insolvability — Reviewable transactions — Transfer of assets between wholly- owned subsidiary and parent corporation — Wholly-owned subsidiary and parent corporation declaring bankruptcy — Parent corporation's directors sued by trustee of wholly-owned subsidiary — Trustee claiming that certain transactions were reviewable — Whether consideration for impugned transactions conspicuously less than fair market value — Whether directors "privy" to transactions — Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, s. 100.

Digitized by Google

Wise Stores Inc. ("Wise") acquired Peoples Department Stores Inc. ("Peoples") from Marks and Spencer Canada Inc. ("M & S"). L.W., R.W. and H.W. (the "Wise brothers") were majority shareholders, officers and directors of Wise, and the only directors of Peoples. Because of covenants imposed by M & S, Peoples could not be merged with Wise until the purchase price had been paid. Almost from the outset, the joint operation of Wise and Peoples did not function smoothly. Parallel bookkeeping, combined with shared warehousing arrangements, caused serious problems for both companies. As a result, their inventory records were increasingly incorrect. The situation, already unsustainable, was worsening. L.W. consulted the vice-president of administration and finance of both Wise and Peoples in an attempt to find a solution. On his recommendation, the Wise brothers agreed to implement a joint inventory procurement policy whereby the two firms would divide responsibility for purchasing. Peoples would make all purchases from North American suppliers and Wise would, in turn, make all purchases from overseas suppliers. Peoples would then transfer to Wise what it had purchased for Wise, charging Wise accordingly, and vice versa. The new policy was implemented on February 1, 1994. Before the end of the year, both Wise and Peoples declared bankruptcy. Peoples' trustee filed a petition against the Wise brothers. The trustee claimed that they had favoured the interests of Wise over Peoples to the detriment of Peoples' creditors, in breach of their duties as directors under s. 122(1) of the Canada Business Corporations Act ("CBCA"). In the alternative, the trustee claimed that the Wise brothers had in the year preceding the bankruptcy been privy to transactions in which Peoples' assets had been transferred to Wise for conspicuously less than fair market value within the meaning of s. 100 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act ("BIA"). The trial judge found the Wise brothers liable on both grounds. The Court of Appeal set aside the trial judge's decision.

Held: The appeal should be dismissed. The Wise brothers did not breach their duties under s. 122(1) of the CBCA, nor were the impugned transactions in violation of s. 100 of the BIA.

The fiduciary duty under s. 122(1)(a) of the CBCA requires directors and officers to act in good faith and honestly vis-à-vis the corporation. Here, the trial judge found that there was no fraud or dishonesty in the Wise brothers' attempts to solve the mounting inventory problems of Peoples and Wise. The Wise brothers considered the serious inventory management problem and implemented a joint inventory procurement policy they hoped would solve it. In the absence of evidence of a personal interest or improper purpose in the new policy, and in light of the evidence of a desire to make both Wise and Peoples "better" corporations, the directors did not breach their fiduciary duty under s. 122(1)(a). An honest and good faith attempt to redress a corporation's financial problems does not, if unsuccessful, qualify as such a breach. The fiduciary duty does not change when a corporation is in the nebulous "vicinity of insolvency". At all times, they owe their fiduciary obligations to the corporation, and the corporations' interests are not to be confused with the interests of the creditors or those of any other stakeholder. There is no need to read the interests of creditors into the fiduciary duty set out in s. 122(1)(a) in light of the availability under the CBCA both of the oppression remedy (s. 241(2)(c)) and of an action based on the duty of care (s. 122(1)(b)).

Directors and officers will not be held to be in breach of the duty of care under s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA if they act prudently and on a reasonably informed basis. The standard of care is an objective one. The decisions of directors and officers must be reasonable business decisions in light of all the circumstances, including the prevailing socio-economic conditions, about which they knew or ought to have known. While courts are ill-suited and should be reluctant to second-guess the application of business expertise to the considerations that are often involved in corporate decision-making, they are capable, on the facts of any case, of determining whether an appropriate degree of prudence and diligence was brought to bear in reaching what is claimed to be a reasonable business decision. In this case, in adopting the joint inventory procurement policy, the directors did not breach their duty of care in respect of Peoples' creditors. The implementation of the new policy was a reasonable business decision made with a view to rectifying a serious and urgent business problem in circumstances in which no solution may have been possible. The trial judge's conclusion that the new policy led inexorably to Peoples' failure and bankruptcy was factually incorrect and constituted a palpable and overriding error. Many factors other than the new policy contributed more directly to Peoples' bankruptcy.

Digitized by Google

Section 44(2) of the CBCA as it then read (the provision has since been repealed) cannot exempt directors and officers from potential liability under s. 122(1) for any financial assistance given by subsidiaries to the parent corporation. Nor can the Wise brothers successfully invoke good faith reliance on the opinion of the vice-president of administration and finance under s. 123(4)(b) of the CBCA. As a non-professional employee, the vice-president did not belong to any of the professional groups named in s. 123(4)(b). He was not an accountant, was not subject to the regulatory overview of any professional organization and did not carry independent insurance coverage for professional negligence.

The trustee's claim under s. 100 of the BIA must fail. The relevant transactions are those spanning the period from February to December 1994 when the new procurement policy was in effect. With regard to all the circumstances of this case, a disparity of slightly more than six percent between fair market value and the consideration received does not constitute a conspicuous difference.

While, in light of this conclusion, there is no need to consider whether the Wise brothers would have been "privy" to the transactions, the disagreement between the trial judge and the Court of Appeal on the interpretation of "privy" in s. 100(2) of the BIA warrants the following comments. Since the provision's remedial purpose is to reverse the effects of a transaction that stripped value from the estate of a bankrupt person, the word "privy" should be given a broad reading to include those who benefit directly or indirectly from, and have knowledge of, a transaction occurring for less than fair market value. This rationale is particularly apt when those who benefit are the controlling minds behind the transaction.

Cases Cited

Applied: 373409 Alberta Ltd. (Receiver of) v. Bank of Montreal, [2002] 4 S.C.R. 312, 2002 SCC 81;

approved: Re Olympia & York Enterprises Ltd. and Hiram Walker Resources Ltd. (1986), 59 O.R. (2d) 254; Standard Trustco Ltd. (Trustee of) v. Standard Trust Co. (1995), 26 O.R. (3d) 1; referred to: Automatic Self-Cleansing Filter Syndicate Co. v. Cuninghame, [1906] 2 Ch. 34; K.L.B. v. British Columbia, [2003] 2 S.C.R. 403, 2003 SCC 51;

Digitized by Google

Canadian Aero Service Ltd. v. O'Malley, [1974] S.C.R. 592;820099 Ontario Inc. v. Harold E. Ballard Ltd. (1991), 3 B.L.R. (2d) 123, aff'd (1991), 3 B.L.R. (2d) 113;Teck Corp. v. Millar (1972), 33 D.L.R. (3d) 288; Brasserie Labatt ltée v. Lanoue, [1999] Q.J. No. 1108 (QL); Regent Taxi & Transport Co. v. Congrégation des Petits Frères de Marie, [1929] S.C.R. 650, rev'd [1932] 2 D.L.R. 70; Lister v. McAnulty, [1944] S.C.R. 317; Hôpital Notre-Dame de l'Espérance v. Laurent, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 605; Dovey v. Cory, [1901] A.C. 477; In re Brazilian Rubber Plantations and Estates, Ltd., [1911] 1 Ch. 425; In re City Equitable Fire Insurance Co., [1925] 1 Ch. 407; Soper v. Canada, [1998] 1 F.C. 124; Maple Leaf Foods Inc. v. Schneider Corp. (1998), 42 O.R. (3d) 177; Skalbania (Trustee of) v. Wedgewood Village Estates Ltd. (1989), 37 B.C.L.R. (2d) 88.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, s. 100(1) [repl. 1997, c. 12, s. 81], (2).

Canada Business Corporations Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-44, ss. 44(1) [rep. 2001, c. 14, s. 26], (2) [idem], 102(1) [repl. idem, s. 35], 121, 122(1) [am. idem, s. 135 (Sch., item 43)], 123(4) [now 123(5)], 185, 238, 239, 240, 241.

Civil Code of Québec, S.Q. 1991, c. 64, arts. 300, 311, 1457, 2501.

Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, s. 8.1.

Authors Cited

Allen, William T., Jack B. Jacobs and Leo E. Strine, Jr. "Function Over Form: A Reassessment of Standards of Review in Delaware Corporation Law" (2001), 26 Del. J. Corp. L. 859.

Beck, Stanley M. "Minority Shareholders' Rights in the 1980s". In Corporate Law in the 80s, Special Lectures of the Law Society of Upper Canada. Don Mills, Ont.: Richard De Boo, 1982, 311.

Brock, Jason. "The Propriety of Profitmaking: Fiduciary Duty and Unjust Enrichment" (2000), 58 U.T. Fac. L. Rev. 185.

Crête, Raymonde, et Stéphane Rousseau. Droit des sociétés par actions: principes fondamentaux.
Montréal: Thémis, 2002.

Dickerson, Robert W. V., John L. Howard and Leon Getz. Proposals for a New Business Corporations Law for Canada, vols. I and II. Ottawa: Information Canada, 1971.

Gray, Wayne D. "Peoples v. Wise and Dylex: Identifying Stakeholder Interests upon or near Corporate Insolvency — Stasis or Pragmatism?" (2003), 39 Can. Bus. L.J. 242.

Houlden, L. W., and G. B. Morawetz. Bankruptcy and Insolvency Law of Canada, vol. 2, 3rd ed. Toronto: Carswell, 1989 (loose-leaf updated 2003, release 9).

Iacobucci, Edward M. "Directors' Duties in Insolvency: Clarifying What Is at Stake" (2003), 39 Can. Bus. L.J. 398.

Iacobucci, Edward M., and Kevin E. Davis. "Reconciling Derivative Claims and the Oppression Remedy" (2000), 12 S.C.L.R. (2d) 87.

Martel, Paul. "Le 'voile corporatif' — l'attitude des tribunaux face à l'article 317 du Code civil du Québec" (1998), 58 R. du B. 95.

McGuinness, Kevin Patrick. The Law and Practice of Canadian Business Corporations.
Toronto: Butterworths, 1999.

Digitized by Google

Thomson, David. "Directors, Creditors and Insolvency: A Fiduciary Duty or a Duty Not to Oppress?" (2000), 58 U.T. Fac. L. Rev. 31.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal, [2003] R.J.Q. 796, 224 D.L.R. (4th) 509, 41 C.B.R. (4th) 225, [2003] Q.J. No. 505 (QL), setting aside a decision of the Superior Court (1998), 23 C.B.R. (4th) 200, [1998] Q.J. No. 3571 (QL). Appeal dismissed.

Gerald F. Kandestin, Gordon Kugler and Gordon Levine, for the appellant.

Éric Lalanne and Martin Tétreault, for the respondents Lionel Wise, Ralph Wise and Harold Wise.

Ian Rose and Odette Jobin-Laberge, for the respondent Chubb Insurance Company of Canada.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

MAJOR AND DESCHAMPS JJ. —

Introduction

The principal question raised by this appeal is whether directors of a corporation owe a fiduciary duty to the corporation's creditors comparable to the statutory duty owed to the corporation. For the reasons that follow, we conclude that directors owe a duty of care to creditors, but that duty does not rise to a fiduciary duty. We agree with the disposition of the Quebec Court of Appeal. The appeal is therefore dismissed.

As a result of the demise in the mid-1990s of two major retail chains in eastern Canada, Wise Stores Inc. ("Wise") and its wholly-owned subsidiary, Peoples Department Stores Inc. ("Peoples"), the indebtedness of a number of Peoples' creditors went unsatisfied. In the wake of the failure of the two chains, Caron Bélanger Ernst & Young Inc., Peoples' trustee in bankruptcy ("trustee"), brought an action against the directors of Peoples. To address the trustee's claims, the extent of the duties imposed by s. 122(1) of the Canada Business Corporations Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-44 ("CBCA"), upon directors with respect to creditors must be determined; we must also identify the purpose and reach of s. 100 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 ("BIA").

In our view, it has not been established that the directors of Peoples violated either the fiduciary duty or the duty of care imposed by s. 122(1) of the CBCA. As for the trustee's submission regarding s. 100 of the BIA, we agree with the Court of Appeal that the consideration received in the impugned transactions was not "conspicuously" less than fair market value. The BIA claim fails on that basis.

Background

Wise was founded by Alex Wise in 1930 as a small clothing store on St-Hubert Street in Montreal. By 1992, through expansion effected by a mix of internal growth and acquisitions, it had become an enterprise operating at 50 locations with annual sales of approximately $100 million, and it had been listed on the Montreal Stock Exchange in 1986. The stores were, for the most part, located in urban areas in Quebec. The founder's three sons, Lionel, Ralph and Harold Wise ("Wise brothers"), were majority shareholders, officers, and directors of Wise. Together, they controlled 75 percent of the firm's equity.

In 1992, Peoples had been in business continuously in one form or another for 78 years. It had operated as an unincorporated division of Marks & Spencer Canada Inc. ("M & S") until 1991, when it was incorporated as a separate company. M & S itself was wholly owned by the large British firm, Marks & Spencer plc. ("M & S plc.").

Digitized by Google

Peoples' 81 stores were generally located in rural areas, from Ontario to Newfoundland. Peoples had annual sales of about $160 million, but was struggling financially. Its annual losses were in the neighbourhood of $10 million.

Wise and Peoples competed with other chains such as Canadian Tire, Greenberg, Hart, K-Mart, M-Stores, Metropolitan Stores, Rossy, Woolco and Zellers. Retail competition in eastern Canada was intense in the early 1990s. In 1992, M-Stores went bankrupt. In 1994, Greenberg and Metropolitan Stores followed M-Stores into bankruptcy. The 1994 entry of Wal-Mart into the Canadian market, with its acquisition of over 100 Woolco stores from Woolworth Canada Inc., exerted significant additional competitive pressure on retail stores.

Lionel Wise, the eldest of the three brothers and Wise's executive vice-president, had expressed an interest in acquiring the ailing Peoples chain from M & S as early as 1988. Initially, M & S did not share Wise's interest for the sale, but by late 1991, M & S plc., the British parent company of M & S, had decided to divest itself of all its Canadian operations. At this point, M & S incorporated each of its three Canadian divisions to facilitate the anticipated divestiture thereof.

The new-found desire to sell coincided with Wise's previously expressed interest in acquiring its larger rival. Although M & S had initially hoped to sell Peoples for cash to a large firm in a solid financial condition, it was unable to do so. Consequently, negotiations got underway with representatives of Wise. A formal share purchase agreement was drawn up in early 1992 and executed in June 1992, with July 16, 1992 as its closing date.

Wise incorporated a company, 2798832 Canada Inc., for the purpose of acquiring all of the issued and outstanding shares of Peoples from M & S. The $27- million share acquisition proceeded as a fully leveraged buyout. The portion of the purchase price attributable to inventory was discounted by 30 percent. The discount was designed to inject equity into Peoples in the fiscal year following the sale and to make use of some of the tax losses that had accumulated in prior years.

The amount of the down payment due to M & S at closing, $5 million, was borrowed from the Toronto Dominion Bank ("TD Bank"). According to the terms of the share purchase agreement, the $22-million balance of the purchase price would be carried by M & S and would be repaid over a period of eight years. Wise guaranteed all of 2798832 Canada Inc.'s obligations pursuant to the terms of the share purchase agreement.

To protect its interests, M & S took the assets of Peoples as security (subject to a priority in favour of the TD Bank) and negotiated strict covenants concerning the financial management and operation of the company. Among other requirements, 2798832 Canada Inc. and Wise were obligated to maintain specific financial ratios, and Peoples was not permitted to provide financial assistance to Wise. In addition, the agreement provided that Peoples could not be amalgamated with Wise until the purchase price had been paid. This prohibition was presumably intended to induce Wise to refinance and pay the remainder of the purchase price as early as possible in order to overcome the strict conditions imposed upon it under the share purchase agreement.

On January 31, 1993, 2798832 Canada Inc. was amalgamated with Peoples. The new entity retained Peoples' corporate name. Since 2798832 Canada Inc. had been a wholly-owned subsidiary of Wise, upon amalgamation the new Peoples became a subsidiary directly owned and controlled by Wise. The three Wise brothers were Peoples' only directors.

Following the acquisition, Wise had attempted to rationalize its operations by consolidating the overlapping corporate functions of Wise and Peoples, and operating as a group. The consolidation of the administration, accounting, advertising and purchasing departments of the two corporations was completed by the fall of 1993. As a consequence of the changes, many of Wise's employees worked for both firms but were paid solely by Wise. The evidence at trial was that because of the tax losses carried-forward by Peoples, it was advantageous for the group to have more expenses incurred by Wise, which, if the group was profitable as a whole, would increase its after-tax profits. Almost from the outset, the joint operation of Wise and Peoples did not function smoothly. Instead of the expected synergies, the consolidation resulted in dissonance.

Digitized by Google

After the acquisition, the total number of buyers for the two companies was nearly halved. The procurement policy at that point required buyers to deal simultaneously with suppliers on behalf of both Peoples and Wise. For the buyers, this nearly doubled their administrative work. Separate invoices were required for purchases made on behalf of Wise and Peoples. These invoices had to be separately entered into the system, tracked and paid.

Inventory, too, was separately recorded and tracked in the system. However, the inventory of each company was handled and stored, often unsegregated, in shared warehouse facilities. The main warehouse for Peoples, on Cousens Street in Ville St-Laurent, was maintained for and used by both firms. The Cousens warehouse saw considerable activity, as it was the central distribution hub for both chains. The facility was open 18 hours a day and employed 150 people on two shifts who handled a total of approximately 30,000 cartons daily through 20 loading docks. It was abuzz with activity.

Before long, the parallel bookkeeping combined with the shared warehousing arrangements caused serious problems for both Wise and Peoples. The actual situation in the warehouse often did not mirror the reported state of the inventory in the system. The goods of one company were often inextricably commingled and confused with the goods of the other. As a result, the inventory records of both companies were increasingly incorrect. A physical inventory count was conducted to try to rectify the situation, to little avail. Both Wise and Peoples stores experienced numerous shipping disruptions and delays. The situation, already unsustainable, was worsening.

In October 1993, Lionel Wise consulted David Clément, Wise's (and, after the acquisition, Peoples') vice-president of administration and finance, in an attempt to find a solution. In January 1994, Clément recommended and the three Wise brothers agreed that they would implement a joint inventory procurement policy ("new policy") whereby the two firms would divide responsibility for purchasing. Peoples would make all purchases from North American suppliers and Wise would, in turn, make all purchases from overseas suppliers. Peoples would then transfer to Wise what it had purchased for Wise, charging Wise accordingly, and vice versa. The new policy was implemented on February 1, 1994. It was this arrangement that was later criticized by certain creditors and by the trial judge.

Approximately 82 percent of the total inventory of Wise and Peoples was purchased from North American suppliers, which inevitably meant that Peoples would be extending a significant trade credit to Wise. The new policy was known to the directors, but was neither formally implemented in writing nor approved by a board meeting or resolution.

On April 27, 1994, Lionel Wise outlined the details of the new policy at a meeting of Wise's audit committee. A partner of Coopers & Lybrand was M & S's representative on Wise's board of directors and a member of the audit committee. He attended the April 27th meeting and raised no objection to the new policy when it was introduced.

Digitized by Google

By June 1994, financial statements prepared to reflect the financial position of Peoples as of April 30, 1994 revealed that Wise owed more than $18 million to Peoples. Approximately $14 million of this amount resulted from a notional transfer of inventory that was cancelled following the period's end. M & S was concerned about the situation and started an investigation, as a result of which M & S insisted that the new procurement policy be rescinded. Wise agreed to M & S's demand but took the position that the former procurement policy could not be reinstated immediately. An agreement was executed on September 27, 1994, effective July 21, 1994, and it provided that the new policy would be abandoned as of January 31, 1995. The agreement also specified that the inventory and records of the two companies would be kept separate, and that the amount owed to Peoples by Wise would not exceed $3 million.

Another result of the negotiations was that M & S accepted an increase in the amount of the TD Bank's priority to $15 million and a new repayment schedule for the balance of the purchase price owed to M & S. The parties agreed to revise the schedule to provide for 37 monthly payments beginning in July 1995. Each of the Wise brothers also provided a personal guarantee of $500,000 in favour of M & S.

In September 1994, in light of the fragile financial condition of the companies and the competitiveness of the retail market, the TD Bank announced its intention to cease doing business with Wise and Peoples as of the end of December 1994. Following negotiations, however, the bank extended its financial support until the end of July 1995. The Wise brothers promised to extend personal guarantees in favour of the TD Bank, but this did not occur.

In December 1994, three days after the Wise brothers presented financial statements showing disappointing results for Peoples in its third fiscal quarter, M & S initiated bankruptcy proceedings against both Wise and Peoples. A notice of intention to make a proposal was filed on behalf of Peoples the same day. Nonetheless, Peoples later consented to the petition by M & S, and both Wise and Peoples were declared bankrupt on January 13, 1995, effective December 9, 1994. The same day, M & S released each of the Wise brothers from their personal guarantees. M & S apparently preferred to proceed with an uncontested petition in bankruptcy rather than attempting to collect on the personal guarantees.

The assets of Wise and Peoples were sufficient to cover in full the outstanding debt owed to the TD Bank, satisfy the entire balance of the purchase price owed to M & S, and discharge almost all the landlords' lease claims. The bulk of the unsatisfied claims were those of trade creditors.

Following the bankruptcy, Peoples' trustee filed a petition against the Wise brothers. In the petition, the trustee claimed that they had favoured the interests of Wise over Peoples to the detriment of Peoples' creditors, in breach of their duties as directors under s. 122(1) of the CBCA. The trustee also claimed that the Wise brothers had, in the year preceding the bankruptcy, been privy to transactions in which property had been transferred for conspicuously less than fair market value within the meaning of s. 100 of the BIA.

Pursuant to art. 2501 of the Civil Code of Québec, S.Q. 1991, c. 64 ("C.C.Q."), the trustee named Chubb Insurance Company of Canada ("Chubb"), which had provided directors' insurance to Wise and its subsidiaries, as a defendant in addition to the Wise brothers.

Digitized by Google

The trial judge, Greenberg J., relying on decisions from the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand, held that the fiduciary duty and the duty of care under s. 122(1) of the CBCA extend to a company's creditors when a company is insolvent or in the vicinity of insolvency. Greenberg J. found that the implementation, by the Wise brothers qua directors of Peoples, of a corporate policy that affected both companies, had occurred while the corporation was in the vicinity of insolvency and was detrimental to the interests of the creditors of Peoples. The Wise brothers were therefore found liable and the trustee was awarded $4.44 million in damages. As Chubb had provided insurance coverage for directors, it was also held liable. Greenberg J. also considered the alternative grounds under the BIA advanced by the trustee and found the Wise brothers liable for the same $4.44 million amount on that ground as well. All the parties appealed.

The Quebec Court of Appeal, per Pelletier J.A., with Robert C.J.Q. and Nuss J.A. concurring, allowed the appeals by Chubb and the Wise brothers: [2003] R.J.Q. 796, [2003] Q.J. No. 505 (QL). The Court of Appeal expressed reluctance to follow Greenberg J. in equating the interests of creditors with the best interests of the corporation when the corporation was insolvent or in the vicinity of insolvency, stating that an innovation in the law such as this is a policy matter more appropriately dealt with by Parliament than the courts. In considering the trustee's claim under s. 100 of the BIA, Pelletier J.A. held that the trial judge had committed a palpable and overriding error in concluding that the amounts owed by Wise to Peoples in respect of inventory "were neither collected nor collectible" (para. 125 QL). He found that the consideration received for the transactions had been approximately 94 percent of fair market value, and he was not convinced that this disparity could be characterized as being "conspicuously" less than fair market value. Moreover, he did not accept the broad meaning the trial judge gave to the word "privy". Pelletier J.A. declined to exercise his discretion under s. 100(2) of the BIA to make an order in favour of the trustee. In view of his conclusion that the Wise brothers were not liable, Pelletier J.A. allowed the appeal with respect to Chubb.

Analysis

At the outset, it should be acknowledged that according to art. 300 C.C.Q. and s. 8.1 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, the civil law serves as a supplementary source of law to federal legislation such as the CBCA. Since the CBCA does not entitle creditors to sue directors directly for breach of their duties, it is appropriate to have recourse to the C.C.Q. to determine how rights grounded in a federal statute should be addressed in Quebec, and more specifically how s. 122(1) of the CBCA can be harmonized with the principles of civil liability: see R. Crête and S. Rousseau, Droit des sociétés par actions: principes fondamentaux (2002), at p. 58.

This case came before our Court on the issue of whether directors owe a duty to creditors. The creditors did not bring a derivative action or an oppression remedy application under the CBCA. Instead, the trustee, representing the interests of the creditors, sued the directors for an alleged breach of the duties imposed by s. 122(1) of the CBCA. The standing of the trustee to sue was not questioned.

The primary role of directors is described in s. 102(1) of the CBCA:

102. (1) Subject to any unanimous shareholder agreement, the directors shall manage, or supervise the management of, the business and affairs of a corporation.

As for officers, s. 121 of the CBCA provides that their powers are delegated to them by the directors:

Subject to the articles, the by-laws or any unanimous shareholder agreement,

Digitized by Google

the directors may designate the offices of the corporation, appoint as officers persons of full capacity, specify their duties and delegate to them powers to manage the business and affairs of the corporation, except powers to do anything referred to in subsection 115(3); a director may be appointed to any office of the corporation; and two or more offices of the corporation may be held by the same person.

Although the shareholders are commonly said to own the corporation, in the absence of a unanimous shareholder agreement to the contrary, s. 102 of the CBCA provides that it is not the shareholders, but the directors elected by the shareholders, who are responsible for managing it. This clear demarcation between the respective roles of shareholders and directors long predates the 1975 enactment of the CBCA: see Automatic Self-Cleansing Filter Syndicate Co. v. Cuninghame, [1906] 2 Ch. 34 (C.A.); see also art. 311 C.C.Q.

Section 122(1) of the CBCA establishes two distinct duties to be discharged by directors and officers in managing, or supervising the management of, the corporation:

(1) Every director and officer of a corporation in exercising their powers and discharging their duties shall act honestly and in good faith with a view to the best interests of the corporation; and exercise the care, diligence and skill that a reasonably prudent person would exercise in comparable circumstances.

The first duty has been referred to in this case as the "fiduciary duty". It is better described as the "duty of loyalty". We will use the expression "statutory fiduciary duty" for purposes of clarity when referring to the duty under the CBCA. This duty requires directors and officers to act honestly and in good faith with a view to the best interests of the corporation. The second duty is commonly referred to as the "duty of care". Generally speaking, it imposes a legal obligation upon directors and officers to be diligent in supervising and managing the corporation's affairs.

The trial judge did not apply or consider separately the two duties imposed on directors by s. 122(1). As the Court of Appeal observed, the trial judge appears to have confused the two duties. They are, in fact, distinct and are designed to secure different ends. For that reason, they will be addressed separately in these reasons.

The Statutory Fiduciary Duty: Section 122(1)(a) of the CBCA

Considerable power over the deployment and management of financial, human, and material resources is vested in the directors and officers of corporations. For the directors of CBCA corporations, this power originates in s. 102 of the Act. For officers, this power comes from the powers delegated to them by the directors. In deciding to invest in, lend to or otherwise deal with a corporation, shareholders and creditors transfer control over their assets to the corporation, and hence to the directors and officers, in the expectation that the directors and officers will use the corporation's resources to make reasonable business decisions that are to the corporation's advantage.

The statutory fiduciary duty requires directors and officers to act honestly and in good faith vis-à-vis the corporation. They must respect the trust and confidence that have been reposed in them to manage the assets of the corporation in pursuit of the realization of the objects of the corporation. They must avoid conflicts of interest with the corporation. They must avoid abusing their position to gain personal benefit. They must maintain the confidentiality of information they acquire by virtue of their position. Directors and officers must serve the corporation selflessly, honestly and loyally: see K. P. McGuinness, The Law and Practice of Canadian Business

Digitized by Google

Corporations (1999), at p. 715.

The common law concept of fiduciary duty was considered in K.L.B. v. British Columbia, [2003] 2 S.C.R. 403, 2003 SCC 51. In that case, which involved the relationship between the government and foster children, a majority of this Court agreed with McLachlin C.J. who stated, at paras. 40-41 and 49:

Fiduciary duties arise in a number of different contexts, including express trusts, relationships marked by discretionary power and trust, and the special responsibilities of the Crown in dealing with aboriginal interests. . . .

What . . . might the content of the fiduciary duty be if it is understood . . . as a private law duty arising simply from the relationship of discretionary power and trust between the Superintendent and the foster children? In Lac Minerals Ltd. v. International Corona Resources Ltd., [1989] 2 S.C.R. 574, at pp. 646-47, La Forest J. noted that there are certain common threads running through fiduciary duties that arise from relationships marked by discretionary power and trust, such as loyalty and "the avoidance of a conflict of duty and interest and a duty not to profit at the expense of the beneficiary". However, he also noted that "[t]he obligation imposed may vary in its specific substance depending on the relationship" (p. 646). . .

. . .

. . . concern for the best interests of the child informs the parental fiduciary relationship, as La Forest J. noted in M. (K.) v. M. (H.), supra, at p. 65. But the duty imposed is to act loyally, and not to put one's own or others' interests ahead of the child's in a manner that abuses the child's trust. . . . The parent who exercises undue influence over the child in economic matters for his own gain has put his own interests ahead of the child's, in a manner that abuses the child's trust in him. The same may be said of the parent who uses a child for his sexual gratification or a parent who, wanting to avoid trouble for herself and her household, turns a blind eye to the abuse of a child by her spouse. The parent need not, as the Court of Appeal suggested in the case at bar, be consciously motivated by a desire for profit or personal advantage; nor does it have to be her own interests, rather than those of a third party, that she puts ahead of the child's. It is rather a question of disloyalty — of putting someone's interests ahead of the child's in a manner that abuses the child's trust. Negligence, even aggravated negligence, will not ground parental fiduciary liability unless it is associated with breach of trust in this sense. [Emphasis added.]

The issue to be considered here is the "specific substance" of the fiduciary duty based on the relationship of directors to corporations under the CBCA.

It is settled law that the fiduciary duty owed by directors and officers imposes strict obligations: see Canadian Aero Service Ltd. v. O'Malley, [1974] S.C.R. 592, at pp. 609-10, per Laskin J. (as he then was), where it was decided that directors and officers may even have to account to the corporation for profits they make that do not come at the corporation's expense:

The reaping of a profit by a person at a company's expense while a director thereof is, of course, an adequate ground upon which to hold the director accountable. Yet there may be situations where a profit must be disgorged, although not gained at the expense of the company, on the ground that a director must not be allowed to use his position as such to make a profit even if it was not open to the company, as for example, by reason of legal disability, to participate in the transaction. An analogous situation, albeit not involving a director, existed for all practical purposes in the case of Phipps v. Boardman [[1967] 2 A.C. 46], which also supports the view that liability to account does not depend on proof of an actual conflict of duty and self- interest. Another, quite recent, illustration of a liability to account where the company itself had failed to obtain a business contract and hence could not be regarded as having been deprived of a business opportunity is Industrial Development Consultants Ltd. v. Cooley [[1972] 2 All E.R. 162], a judgment of a Court of first instance. There, the managing director, who was allowed to resign his position on a false assertion of ill health, subsequently got the contract for himself. That case is thus also illustrative of the situation where a director's resignation is prompted by a decision to obtain for himself the business contract denied to his company and where he does obtain it without disclosing his intention. [Emphasis added.]

Digitized by Google

A compelling argument for making directors accountable for profits made as a result of their position, though not at the corporation's expense, is presented by J. Brock, "The Propriety of Profitmaking: Fiduciary Duty and Unjust Enrichment" (2000), 58 U.T. Fac. L. Rev. 185, at pp. 204-5.

However, it is not required that directors and officers in all cases avoid personal gain as a direct or indirect result of their honest and good faith supervision or management of the corporation. In many cases the interests of directors and officers will innocently and genuinely coincide with those of the corporation. If directors and officers are also shareholders, as is often the case, their lot will automatically improve as the corporation's financial condition improves. Another example is the compensation that directors and officers usually draw from the corporations they serve. This benefit, though paid by the corporation, does not, if reasonable, ordinarily place them in breach of their fiduciary duty. Therefore, all the circumstances may be scrutinized to determine whether the directors and officers have acted honestly and in good faith with a view to the best interests of the corporation.

In our opinion, the trial judge's determination that there was no fraud or dishonesty in the Wise brothers' attempts to solve the mounting inventory problems of Peoples and Wise stands in the way of a finding that they breached their fiduciary duty. Greenberg J. stated:

We hasten to add that in the present case, the Wise Brothers derived no direct personal benefit from the new domestic inventory procurement policy, albeit that, as the controlling shareholders of Wise Stores, there was an indirect benefit to them. Moreover, as was conceded by the other parties herein, in deciding to implement the new domestic inventory procurement policy, there was no dishonesty or fraud on their part.

((1998), 23 C.B.R. (4th) 200, at para. 183)

The Court of Appeal relied heavily on this finding by the trial judge, as do we. At para. 83 QL, Pelletier J.A. stated that:

[TRANSLATION] In regard to fiduciary duty, I would like to point out that the brothers were driven solely by the wish to resolve the problem of inventory procurement affecting both the operations of Peoples Inc. and those of Wise. [This is a] motivation that is in line with the pursuit of the interests of the corporation within the meaning of paragraph 122(1)(a) C.B.C.A. and that does not expose them to any justified criticism.

As explained above, there is no doubt that both Peoples and Wise were struggling with a serious inventory management problem. The Wise brothers considered the problem and implemented a policy they hoped would solve it. In the absence of evidence of a personal interest or improper purpose in the new policy, and in light of the evidence of a desire to make both Wise and Peoples "better" corporations, we find that the directors did not breach their fiduciary duty under s. 122(1)(a) of the CBCA. See 820099 Ontario Inc. v. Harold E. Ballard Ltd. (1991), 3 B.L.R. (2d) 123

Digitized by Google

(Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)) (aff'd (1991), 3 B.L.R. (2d) 113 (Ont. Div. Ct.)), in which Farley J., at p. 171, correctly observes that in resolving a conflict between majority and minority shareholders, it is safe for directors and officers to act to make the corporation a "better corporation".

This appeal does not relate to the non-statutory duty directors owe to shareholders. It is concerned only with the statutory duties owed under the CBCA. Insofar as the statutory fiduciary duty is concerned, it is clear that the phrase the "best interests of the corporation" should be read not simply as the "best interests of the shareholders". From an economic perspective, the "best interests of the corporation" means the maximization of the value of the corporation: see E. M. Iacobucci, "Directors' Duties in Insolvency: Clarifying What Is at Stake" (2003), 39 *Can. Bus. L.J.*398, at pp. 400-1. However, the courts have long recognized that various other factors may be relevant in determining what directors should consider in soundly managing with a view to the best interests of the corporation. For example, in Teck Corp. v. Millar (1972), 33 D.L.R. (3d) 288 (B.C.S.C.), Berger J. stated, at p. 314:

> A classical theory that once was unchallengeable must yield to the facts of modern life. In fact, of course, it has. If today the directors of a company were to consider the interests of its employees no one would argue that in doing so they were not acting bona fide in the interests of the company itself. Similarly, if the directors were to consider the consequences to the community of any policy that the company intended to pursue, and were deflected in their commitment to that policy as a result, it could not be said that they had not considered bona fide the interests of the shareholders.
>
> I appreciate that it would be a breach of their duty for directors to disregard entirely the interests of a company's shareholders in order to confer a benefit on its employees: Parke v. Daily News Ltd., [1962] Ch. 927. But if they observe a decent respect for other interests lying beyond those of the company's shareholders in the strict sense, that will not, in my view, leave directors open to the charge that they have failed in their fiduciary duty to the company.

The case of Re Olympia & York Enterprises Ltd. and Hiram Walker Resources Ltd. (1986), 59 O.R. (2d) 254 (Div. Ct.), approved, at p. 271, the decision in Teck, supra. We accept as an accurate statement of law that in determining whether they are acting with a view to the best interests of the corporation it may be legitimate, given all the circumstances of a given case, for the board of directors to consider, inter alia, the interests of shareholders, employees, suppliers, creditors, consumers, governments and the environment.

The various shifts in interests that naturally occur as a corporation's fortunes rise and fall do not, however, affect the content of the fiduciary duty under s. 122(1)(a) of the CBCA. At all times, directors and officers owe their fiduciary obligation to the corporation. The interests of the corporation are not to be confused with the interests of the creditors or those of any other stakeholders.

The interests of shareholders, those of the creditors and those of the corporation may and will be consistent with each other if the corporation is profitable and well capitalized and has strong prospects. However, this can change if the corporation starts to struggle financially. The residual rights of the shareholders will generally become worthless if a corporation is declared bankrupt. Upon bankruptcy, the directors of the corporation transfer control to a trustee, who administers the corporation's assets for the benefit of creditors.

Short of bankruptcy, as the corporation approaches what has been described as the "vicinity of insolvency", the residual claims of shareholders will be nearly exhausted.

Digitized by Google

While shareholders might well prefer that the directors pursue high-risk alternatives with a high potential payoff to maximize the shareholders' expected residual claim, creditors in the same circumstances might prefer that the directors steer a safer course so as to maximize the value of their claims against the assets of the corporation.

The directors' fiduciary duty does not change when a corporation is in the nebulous "vicinity of insolvency". That phrase has not been defined; moreover, it is incapable of definition and has no legal meaning. What it is obviously intended to convey is a deterioration in the corporation's financial stability. In assessing the actions of directors it is evident that any honest and good faith attempt to redress the corporation's financial problems will, if successful, both retain value for shareholders and improve the position of creditors. If unsuccessful, it will not qualify as a breach of the statutory fiduciary duty.

For a discussion of the shifting interests and incentives of shareholders and creditors, see W. D. Gray, "Peoples v. Wise and Dylex: Identifying Stakeholder Interests upon or near Corporate Insolvency — Stasis or Pragmatism?" (2003), 39 Can. Bus. L.J. 242, at p. 257; E. M. Iacobucci and K. E. Davis, "Reconciling Derivative Claims and the Oppression Remedy" (2000), 12 S.C.L.R. (2d) 87, at p. 114. In resolving these competing interests, it is incumbent upon the directors to act honestly and in good faith with a view to the best interests of the corporation. In using their skills for the benefit of the corporation when it is in troubled waters financially, the directors must be careful to attempt to act in its best interests by creating a "better" corporation, and not to favour the interests of any one group of stakeholders. If the stakeholders cannot avail themselves of the statutory fiduciary duty (the duty of loyalty, supra) to sue the directors for failing to take care of their interests, they have other means at their disposal.

The Canadian legal landscape with respect to stakeholders is unique. Creditors are only one set of stakeholders, but their interests are protected in a number of ways. Some are specific, as in the case of amalgamation: s. 185 of the CBCA. Others cover a broad range of situations. The oppression remedy of s. 241(2)(c) of the CBCA and the similar provisions of provincial legislation regarding corporations grant the broadest rights to creditors of any common law jurisdiction: see D. Thomson, "Directors, Creditors and Insolvency: A Fiduciary Duty or a Duty Not to Oppress?" (2000), 58 U.T. Fac. L. Rev. 31, at p. 48. One commentator describes the oppression remedy as "the broadest, most comprehensive and most open-ended shareholder remedy in the common law world": S. M. Beck, "Minority Shareholders' Rights in the 1980s", in Corporate Law in the 80s (1982), 311, at p. 312. While Beck was concerned with shareholder remedies, his observation applies equally to those of creditors.

The fact that creditors' interests increase in relevancy as a corporation's finances deteriorate is apt to be relevant to, inter alia, the exercise of discretion by a court in granting standing to a party as a "complainant" under s. 238(d) of the CBCA as a "proper person" to bring a derivative action in the name of the corporation under ss. 239 and 240 of the CBCA, or to bring an oppression remedy claim under s. 241 of the CBCA.

Section 241(2)(c) authorizes a court to grant a remedy if > the powers of the directors of the corporation or any of its affiliates are or have been exercised in a manner > that is oppressive or unfairly prejudicial to or that unfairly disregards the interests of any security holder, creditor, director or officer . . . .

>

Digitized by Google

A person applying for the oppression remedy must, in the court's opinion, fall within the definition of "complainant" found in s. 238 of the CBCA:

a registered holder or beneficial owner, and a former registered holder or beneficial owner, of a security of a corporation or any of its affiliates, a director or an officer or a former director or officer of a corporation or any of its affiliates, the Director, or any other person who, in the discretion of a court, is a proper person to make an application under this Part.

Creditors, who are not security holders within the meaning of para. (a), may therefore apply for the oppression remedy under para. (d) by asking a court to exercise its discretion and grant them status as a "complainant".

Section 241 of the CBCA provides a possible mechanism for creditors to protect their interests from the prejudicial conduct of directors. In our view, the availability of such a broad oppression remedy undermines any perceived need to extend the fiduciary duty imposed on directors by s. 122(1)(a) of the CBCA to include creditors.

The Court of Appeal, at paras. 98-99 QL, referred to 373409 Alberta Ltd. (Receiver of) v. Bank of Montreal, [2002] 4 S.C.R. 312, 2002 SCC 81, as an indication by this Court that the interests of creditors do not have any bearing on the assessment of the conduct of directors. However, the receiver in that case was representing the corporation's rights and not the creditors' rights; therefore, the case has no application in this appeal. 373409 Alberta involved an action taken by the receiver on behalf of the corporation against a bank for the tort of conversion. The sole shareholder, director and officer of 373409 Alberta Ltd., who was also the sole shareholder, director and officer of another corporation, Legacy Holdings Ltd., had deposited a cheque payable to 373409 Alberta Ltd. into the account of Legacy. While it was recognized, at para. 22, that the diversion of money from 373409 Alberta Ltd. to Legacy "may very well have been wrongful vis-à-vis [373409 Alberta Ltd.]'s creditors" (none of whom were involved in the action), no fraud had been committed against the corporation itself and the bank, acting on proper authority, had not wrongfully interfered with the cheque by carrying out the deposit instructions. The statutory duties of the directors were not at issue, nor were they considered, and no assessment of the creditors' rights was made. With respect, Pelletier J.A.'s broad reading of*373409 Alberta* was misplaced.

In light of the availability both of the oppression remedy and of an action based on the duty of care, which will be discussed below, stakeholders have viable remedies at their disposal. There is no need to read the interests of creditors into the duty set out in s. 122(1)(a) of the CBCA. Moreover, in the circumstances of this case, the Wise brothers did not breach the statutory fiduciary duty owed to the corporation.

The Statutory Duty of Care: Section 122(1)(b) of the CBCA

As mentioned above, the CBCA does not provide for a direct remedy for creditors against directors for breach of their duties and the C.C.Q. is used as suppletive law.

In Quebec, directors have been held liable to creditors in respect of either contractual or extra-contractual obligations. Contractual liability arises where the director personally guarantees a contractual obligation of the company. Liability also arises where the director personally acts in a manner that triggers his or her extra-contractual liability. See P. Martel, "Le 'voile corporatif' — l'attitude des tribunaux face à l'article 317 du Code civil du Québec" (1998), 58 R. du B. 95, at pp. 135-36; Brasserie Labatt ltée v. Lanoue, [1999] Q.J. No. 1108 (QL) (C.A.), per Forget J.A., at para. 29. It is clear that the Wise brothers cannot be held contractually liable as they did not guarantee the debts at issue here. Extra- contractual liability is the remaining possibility.

Digitized by Google

To determine the applicability of extra-contractual liability in this appeal, it is necessary to refer to art. 1457 C.C.Q.:

Every person has a duty to abide by the rules of conduct which lie upon him, according to the circumstances, usage or law, so as not to cause injury to another.

Where he is endowed with reason and fails in this duty, he is responsible for any injury he causes to another person by such fault and is liable to reparation for the injury, whether it be bodily, moral or material in nature.

He is also liable, in certain cases, to reparation for injury caused to another by the act or fault of another person or by the act of things in his custody. [Emphasis added.]

Three elements of art. 1457 C.C.Q. are relevant to the integration of the director's duty of care into the principles of extra-contractual liability: who has the duty ("every person"), to whom is the duty owed ("another") and what breach will trigger liability ("rules of conduct"). It is clear that directors and officers come within the expression "every person". It is equally clear that the word "another" can include the creditors. The reach of art. 1457 C.C.Q. is broad and it has been given an open and inclusive meaning. See Regent Taxi & Transport Co. v. Congrégation des Petits Frères de Marie, [1929] S.C.R. 650, per Anglin C.J., at p. 655 (rev'd on other grounds, [1932] 2 D.L.R. 70 (P.C.)):

. . . to narrow the prima facie scope of art. 1053 C.C. [now art. 1457] is highly dangerous and would necessarily result in most meritorious claims being rejected; many a wrong would be without a remedy.

This liberal interpretation was also affirmed and treated as settled by this Court in Lister v. McAnulty, [1944] S.C.R. 317, and Hôpital Notre-Dame de l'Espérance v. Laurent, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 605.

This interpretation can be harmoniously integrated with the wording of the CBCA. Indeed, unlike the statement of the fiduciary duty in s. 122(1)(a) of the CBCA, which specifies that directors and officers must act with a view to the best interests of the corporation, the statement of the duty of care in

s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA does not specifically refer to an identifiable party as the beneficiary of the duty. Instead, it provides that "[e]very director and officer of a corporation in exercising their powers and discharging their duties shall . . . exercise the care, diligence and skill that a reasonably prudent person would exercise in comparable circumstances." Thus, the identity of the beneficiary of the duty of care is much more open-ended, and it appears obvious that it must include creditors. This result is clearly consistent with the civil law interpretation of the word "another". Therefore, if breach of the standard of care, causation and damages are established, creditors can resort to art. 1457 to have their rights vindicated. The only issue thus remaining is the determination of the "rules of conduct" likely to trigger extracontractual liability. On this issue, art. 1457 is explicit.

The first paragraph of art. 1457 does not set the standard of conduct. Instead, it incorporates by reference s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA. The statutory duty of care is a "duty to abide by [a] rul[e] of conduct which lie[s] upon [them], according to the . . . law, so as not to cause injury to another". Thus, for the purpose of determining whether the Wise brothers can be held liable, only the CBCA is relevant. It is therefore necessary to outline the requirements of the duty of care embodied in s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA.

That directors must satisfy a duty of care is a long-standing principle of the common law, although the duty of care has been reinforced by statute to become more demanding. Among the earliest English cases establishing the duty of care were Dovey v. Cory, [1901] A.C. 477 (H.L.); In re Brazilian Rubber Plantations and Estates, Ltd., [1911] 1 Ch. 425; and In re City Equitable Fire Insurance Co., [1925] 1 Ch. 407 (C.A.). In substance, these cases held that the standard of care was a reasonably relaxed, subjective standard. The common law required directors to avoid being grossly negligent with respect to the affairs of the corporation and judged them according to their own personal skills, knowledge, abilities and capacities. See McGuinness, supra, at p. 776: "Given the history of the case law in this area, and the prevailing standards of competence displayed in commerce generally, it is quite clear that directors were not expected at common law to have any particular business skill or judgment."

Digitized by Google

The 1971 report entitled Proposals for a New Business Corporations Law for Canada (1971) ("Dickerson Report") culminated the work of a committee headed by R. W. V. Dickerson which had been appointed by the federal government to study the need for new federal business corporations legislation. This report preceded the enactment of the CBCA by four years and influenced the eventual structure of the CBCA.

The standard recommended by the Dickerson Report was objective, requiring directors and officers to meet the standard of a "reasonably prudent person" (vol. II, at. p. 74):

9.19

Every director and officer of a corporation in exercising his powers and discharging his duties shall

. . .

exercise the care, diligence and skill of a reasonably prudent person.

The report described how this proposed duty of care differed from the prevailing common law duty of care (vol. I, at p. 83):

242. The formulation of the duty of care, diligence and skill owed by directors represents an attempt to upgrade the standard presently required of them. The principal change here is that whereas at present the law seems to be that a director is only required to demonstrate the degree of care, skill and diligence that could reasonably be expected from him, having regard to his knowledge and experience— Re City Equitable Fire Insurance Co., [1925] Ch. 425 — under s. 9.19(1)(b) he is required to conform to the standard of a reasonably prudent man. Recent experience has demonstrated how low the prevailing legal standard of care for directors is, and we have sought to raise it significantly. We are aware of the argument that raising the standard of conduct for directors may deter people from accepting directorships. The truth of that argument has not been demonstrated and we think it is specious. The duty of care imposed by s. 9.19(1)(b) is exactly the same as that which the common law imposes on every professional person, for example, and there is no evidence that this has dried up the supply of lawyers, accountants, architects, surgeons or anyone else. It is in any event cold comfort to a shareholder to know that there is a steady supply of marginally competent people available under present law to manage his investment. [Emphasis added.]

The statutory duty of care in s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA emulates but does not replicate the language proposed by the Dickerson Report. The main difference is that the enacted version includes the words "in comparable circumstances", which modifies the statutory standard by requiring the context in which a given decision was made to be taken into account. This is not the introduction of a subjective element relating to the competence of the director, but rather the introduction of a contextual element into the statutory standard of care. It is clear that s. 122(1)(b) requires more of directors and officers than the traditional common law duty of care outlined in, for example, Re City Equitable Fire Insurance, supra.

Digitized by Google

The standard of care embodied in s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA was described by Robertson J.A. of the Federal Court of Appeal in Soper v. Canada, [1998] 1 F.C. 124, at para. 41, as being "objective subjective". Although that case concerned the interpretation of a provision of the Income Tax Act, it is relevant here because the language of the provision establishing the standard of care was identical to that of s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA. With respect, we feel that Robertson J.A.'s characterization of the standard as an "objective subjective" one could lead to confusion. We prefer to describe it as an objective standard. To say that the standard is objective makes it clear that the factual aspects of the circumstances surrounding the actions of the director or officer are important in the case of the s. 122(1)(b) duty of care, as opposed to the subjective motivation of the director or officer, which is the central focus of the statutory fiduciary duty of s. 122(1)(a) of the CBCA.

The contextual approach dictated by s.122(1)(b) of the CBCA not only emphasizes the primary facts but also permits prevailing socio-economic conditions to be taken into consideration. The emergence of stricter standards puts pressure on corporations to improve the quality of board decisions. The establishment of good corporate governance rules should be a shield that protects directors from allegations that they have breached their duty of care. However, even with good corporate governance rules, directors' decisions can still be open to criticism from outsiders. Canadian courts, like their counterparts in the United States, the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand, have tended to take an approach with respect to the enforcement of the duty of care that respects the fact that directors and officers often have business expertise that courts do not. Many decisions made in the course of business, although ultimately unsuccessful, are reasonable and defensible at the time they are made. Business decisions must sometimes be made, with high stakes and under considerable time pressure, in circumstances in which detailed information is not available. It might be tempting for some to see unsuccessful business decisions as unreasonable or imprudent in light of information that becomes available ex post facto. Because of this risk of hindsight bias, Canadian courts have developed a rule of deference to business decisions called the "business judgment rule", adopting the American name for the rule.

In Maple Leaf Foods Inc. v. Schneider Corp. (1998), 42 O.R. (3d) 177, Weiler J.A. stated, at p. 192:

The law as it has evolved in Ontario and Delaware has the common requirements that the court must be satisfied that the directors have acted reasonably and fairly. The court looks to see that the directors made a reasonable decision not a perfect decision. Provided the decision taken is within a range of reasonableness, the court ought not to substitute its opinion for that of the board even though subsequent events may have cast doubt on the board's determination. As long as the directors have selected one of several reasonable alternatives, deference is accorded to the board's decision. This formulation of deference to the decision of the Board is known as the "business judgment rule". The fact that alternative transactions were rejected by the directors is irrelevant unless it can be shown that a particular alternative was definitely available and clearly more beneficial to the company than the chosen transaction. [Emphasis added; italics in original; references omitted.]

In order for a plaintiff to succeed in challenging a business decision he or she has to establish that the directors acted (i) in breach of the duty of care and (ii) in a way that caused injury to the plaintiff: W. T. Allen, J. B. Jacobs and L. E. Strine, Jr., "Function Over Form: A Reassessment of Standards of Review in Delaware Corporation Law" (2001), 26 Del. J. Corp. L. 859, at p. 892.

Digitized by Google

Directors and officers will not be held to be in breach of the duty of care under s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA if they act prudently and on a reasonably informed basis. The decisions they make must be reasonable business decisions in light of all the circumstances about which the directors or officers knew or ought to have known. In determining whether directors have acted in a manner that breached the duty of care, it is worth repeating that perfection is not demanded. Courts are ill-suited and should be reluctant to second-guess the application of business expertise to the considerations that are involved in corporate decision making, but they are capable, on the facts of any case, of determining whether an appropriate degree of prudence and diligence was brought to bear in reaching what is claimed to be a reasonable business decision at the time it was made.

The trustee alleges that the Wise brothers breached their duty of care under s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA by implementing the new procurement policy to the detriment of Peoples' creditors. After considering all the evidence, we agree with the Court of Appeal that the implementation of the new policy was a reasonable business decision that was made with a view to rectifying a serious and urgent business problem in circumstances in which no solution may have been possible. The trial judge's conclusion that the new policy led inexorably to Peoples' failure and bankruptcy was factually incorrect and constituted a palpable and overriding error.

In fact, as noted by Pelletier J.A., there were many factors other than the new policy that contributed more directly to Peoples' bankruptcy. Peoples had lost $10 million annually while being operated by M & S. Wise, which was only marginally profitable and solvent with annual sales of $100 million (versus $160 million for Peoples), had hoped to improve the performance of its new acquisition. Given that the transaction was a fully leveraged buyout, for Wise and Peoples to succeed, Peoples' performance needed to improve dramatically. Unfortunately for both Wise and Peoples, the retail market in eastern Canada had become very competitive in the early 1990s, and this trend continued with the arrival of Wal- Mart in 1994. At paras. 152 and 154 QL, Pelletier J.A. stated:

[TRANSLATION] In reality, it was that particularly unfavourable financial situation in which the two corporations found themselves that caused their downfall, and it was M. & S. that, to protect its own interests, sounded the charge in December, rightly or wrongly judging that Peoples Inc.'s situation would only worsen over time. It is crystal-clear that the bankruptcy occurred at the most propitious time for M. & S.'s interests, when inventories were high and suppliers were unpaid. In fact, M. & S. recovered the entire balance due on the selling price and almost all of the other debts it was owed.

. . .

. . . the trial judge did not take into account the fact that the brothers derived no direct benefit from the transaction impugned, that they acted in good faith and that their true intention was to find a solution to the serious inventory management problem that each of the two corporations was facing. Because of an assessment error, he also ignored the fact that Peoples Inc. received a sizable consideration for the goods it delivered to Wise. Lastly, I note that the act for which the brothers were found liable, i.e. the adoption of a new joint inventory procurement policy, is not as serious as the trial judge made it out to be and that, in opposition to his view, the act was also not the true cause of the bankruptcy of Peoples Inc. [Emphasis added.]

Digitized by Google

The Wise brothers treated the implementation of the new policy as a decision made in the ordinary course of business and, while no formal agreement evidenced the arrangement, a monthly record was made of the inventory transfers. Although this may appear to be a loose business practice, by the autumn of 1993, Wise had already consolidated several aspects of the operations of the two companies. Legally they were two separate entities. However, the financial fate of the two companies had become intertwined. In these circumstances, there was little or no economic incentive for the Wise brothers to jeopardize the interests of Peoples in favour of the interests of Wise. In fact, given the tax losses that Peoples had carried forward, the companies had every incentive to keep Peoples profitable in order to reduce their combined tax liabilities.

Arguably, the Wise brothers could have been more precise in pursuing a resolution to the intractable inventory management problems, having regard to all the troublesome circumstances involved at the time the new policy was implemented. But we, like the Court of Appeal, are not satisfied that the adoption of the new policy breached the duty of care under s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA. The directors cannot be held liable for a breach of their duty of care in respect of the creditors of Peoples.

The Court of Appeal relied on two additional provisions of the CBCA that in its view could rescue the Wise brothers from a finding that they breached the duty of care: ss. 44(2) and 123(4).

Section 44 of the CBCA, which was in force at the time of the impugned transactions but has since been repealed, permitted a wholly-owned subsidiary to give financial assistance to its holding body corporate:

44. (1) Subject to subsection (2), a corporation or any corporation with which it is affiliated shall not, directly or indirectly, give financial assistance by means of a loan, guarantee or otherwise

. . .

(2) A corporation may give financial assistance by means of a loan, guarantee or otherwise to a holding body corporate if the corporation is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the holding body corporate;

. . .

While s. 44(2) as it then read qualified the prohibition under s. 44(1), it did not serve to supplant the duties of the directors under s. 122(1) of the CBCA. The Court of Appeal erred in concluding that s. 44(2) served as a blanket legitimization of financial assistance given by wholly-owned subsidiaries to parent corporations. In our opinion, it is incumbent upon directors and officers to exercise their powers in conformity with the duties of s. 122(1).

Although s. 44(2) authorized certain forms of financial assistance between corporations, this cannot exempt directors and officers from potential liability under s. 122(1) for any financial assistance given by subsidiaries to the parent corporation.

When faced with the serious inventory management problem, the Wise brothers sought the advice of the vice-president of finance, David Clément. The Wise brothers claimed as an additional argument that in adopting the solution proposed by Clément, they were relying in good faith on the judgment of a person whose profession lent credibility to his statement, in accordance with the defence provided for in s. 123(4)(b) (now s. 123(5)) of the CBCA. The Court of Appeal accepted the argument. We disagree.

The reality that directors cannot be experts in all aspects of the corporations they manage or supervise shows the relevancy of a provision such as s. 123(4)(b). At the relevant time, the text of s. 123(4) read:

Digitized by Google

123. . . .

. . .

(4) A director is not liable under section 118, 119 or 122 if he relies in good faith on financial statements of the corporation represented to him by an officer of the corporation or in a written report of the auditor of the corporation fairly to reflect the financial condition of the corporation; or a report of a lawyer, accountant, engineer, appraiser or other person whose profession lends credibility to a statement made by him.

Although Clément did have a bachelor's degree in commerce and 15 years of experience in administration and finance with Wise, this experience does not correspond to the level of professionalism required to allow the directors to rely on his advice as a bar to a suit under the duty of care. The named professional groups in s. 123(4)(b) were lawyers, accountants, engineers, and appraisers. Clément was not an accountant, was not subject to the regulatory overview of any professional organization and did not carry independent insurance coverage for professional negligence. The title of vice-president of finance should not automatically lead to a conclusion that Clément was a person "whose profession lends credibility to a statement made by him". It is noteworthy that the word "profession" is used, not "position". Clément was simply a non-professional employee of Wise. His judgment on the appropriateness of the solution to the inventory management problem must be regarded in that light. Although we might accept for the sake of argument that Clément was better equipped and positioned than the Wise brothers to devise a plan to solve the inventory management problems, this is not enough. Therefore, in our opinion, the Wise brothers cannot successfully invoke the defence provided by s. 123(4)(b) of the CBCA but must rely on the other defences raised.

The Claim Under Section 100 of the BIA

The trustee also claimed against the Wise brothers under s. 100 of the BIA. That section reads:

100. (1) Where a bankrupt sold, purchased, leased, hired, supplied or received property or services in a reviewable transaction within the period beginning on the day that is one year before the date of the initial bankruptcy event and ending on the date of the bankruptcy, both dates included, the court may, on the application of the trustee, inquire into whether the bankrupt gave or received, as the case may be, fair market value in consideration for the property or services concerned in the transaction.

(2) Where the court in proceedings under this section finds that the consideration given or received by the bankrupt in the reviewable transaction was conspicuously greater or less than the fair market value of the property or services concerned in the transaction, the court may give judgment to the trustee against the other party to the transaction, against any other person being privy to the transaction with the bankrupt or against all those persons for the difference between the actual consideration given or received by the bankrupt and the fair market value, as determined by the court, of the property or services concerned in the transaction.

The provision has two principal elements. First, subs. (1) requires the transaction to have been conducted within the year preceding the date of bankruptcy. Second, subs. (2) requires that the consideration given or received by the bankrupt be "conspicuously greater or less" than the fair market value of the property concerned.

Digitized by Google

The word "may" is found in both ss. 100(1) and 100(2) of the BIA with respect to the jurisdiction of the court. In Standard Trustco Ltd. (Trustee of) v. Standard Trust Co. (1995), 26 O.R. (3d) 1, a majority of the Ontario Court of Appeal held that, even if the necessary preconditions are present, the exercise of jurisdiction under s. 100(1) to inquire into the transaction, and under s. 100(2) to grant judgment, is discretionary. Equitable principles guide the exercise of discretion. We agree.

Referring to s. 100(2) of the BIA, in Standard Trustco, supra, at p. 23, Weiler J.A. explained that:

When a contextual approach is adopted it is apparent that although the conditions of the section have been satisfied the court is not obliged to grant judgment. The court has a residual discretion to exercise. The contextual approach indicates that the good faith of the parties, the intention with which the transaction took place, and whether fair value was given and received in the transaction are important considerations as to whether that discretion should be exercised.

We agree with Weiler J.A. and adopt her position; however, this appeal does not turn on the discretion to ultimately impose liability. In our view, the Court of Appeal did not interfere with the trial judge's exercise of discretion in reviewing the facts and finding a palpable and overriding error.

Within the year preceding the date of bankruptcy, Peoples had transferred inventory to Wise for which the trustee claimed Peoples had not received fair market value in consideration. The relevant transactions involved, for the most part, transfers completed in anticipation of the busy holiday season. Given the non-arm's length relationship between Wise and its wholly-owned subsidiary Peoples, there is no question that these inventory transfers could have constituted reviewable transactions.

We share the view of the Court of Appeal that it is not only the final transfers that should be considered. In fairness, the inventory transactions should be considered over the entire period from February to December 1994, which was the period when the new policy was in effect.

In Skalbania (Trustee of) v. Wedgewood Village Estates Ltd. (1989), 37 B.C.L.R. (2d) 88 (C.A.), the test for determining whether the difference in consideration is "conspicuously greater or less" was held to be not whether it is conspicuous to the parties at the time of the transaction, but whether it is conspicuous to the court having regard to all the relevant factors. This is a sound approach. In that case, a difference of $1.18 million between fair market value and the consideration received by the bankrupt was seen as conspicuous, where the fair market value was $6.6 million, leaving a discrepancy of more than 17 percent. While there is no particular percentage that definitively sets the threshold for a conspicuous difference, the percentage difference is a factor.

As for the factors that would be relevant to this determination, the court might consider, inter alia: evidence of the margin of error in valuing the types of assets in question; any appraisals made of the assets in question and evidence of the parties' honestly held beliefs regarding the value of the assets in question; and other circumstances adduced in evidence by the parties to explain the difference between the consideration received and fair market value: see L. W. Houlden and G. B. Morawetz, Bankruptcy and Insolvency Law of Canada (3rd ed. (loose-leaf)), vol. 2, at p. 4-114.1.

Over the lifespan of the new policy, Peoples transferred to Wise inventory valued at $71.54 million. As of the date of bankruptcy, it had received $59.50 million in property or money from Wise. As explained earlier, the trial judge adjusted the outstanding difference down to a balance of $4.44 million after taking into account, inter alia, the reallocation of general and administrative expenses, and adjustments necessitated by imported inventory transferred from Wise to Peoples. Neither party disputed these figures before this Court. We agree with the Court of Appeal's observation that these findings directly conflict with the trial judge's assertion that Peoples had received no consideration for the inventory transfers on the basis that the outstanding accounts were "neither collected nor collectible" from Wise. Like Pelletier J.A., we conclude that the trial judge's finding in this regard was a palpable and overriding error, and we adopt the view of the Court of Appeal.

Digitized by Google

We are not satisfied that, with regard to all the circumstances of this case, a disparity of slightly more than 6 percent between fair market value and the consideration received constitutes a "conspicuous" difference within the meaning of s. 100(2) of the BIA. Accordingly, we hold that the trustee's claim under the BIA also fails.

In addition to permitting the court to give judgment against the other party to the transaction, s. 100(2) of the BIA also permits it to give judgment against someone who was not a party but was "privy" to the transaction. Given our finding that the consideration for the impugned transactions was not "conspicuously less" than fair market value, there is no need to consider whether the Wise brothers would have been "privy" to the transaction for the purpose of holding them liable under s. 100(2). Nonetheless, the disagreement between the trial judge and the Court of Appeal on the interpretation of "privy" in s. 100(2) of the BIA warrants the following observations.

The trial judge in this appeal had little difficulty finding that the Wise brothers were privy to the transaction within the meaning of s. 100(2). Pelletier J.A., however, preferred a narrow construction in finding that the Wise brothers were not privy to the transactions. He held, at para. 135 QL, that:

[TRANSLATION] . . . the legislator wanted to provide for the case in which a person other than the co-contracting party of the bankrupt actually received all or part of the benefit resulting from the lack of equality between the respective considerations.

To support this direct benefit requirement, Pelletier J.A. also referred to the French version which uses the term ayant intérêt. While he conceded that the respondent brothers received an indirect benefit from the inventory transfers as shareholders of Wise, Pelletier J.A. found this too remote to be considered "privy" to the transactions (paras. 139-40 QL).

The primary purpose of s. 100 of the BIA is to reverse the effects of a transaction that stripped value from the estate of a bankrupt person. It makes sense to adopt a more inclusive understanding of the word "privy" to prevent someone who might receive indirect benefits to the detriment of a bankrupt's unsatisfied creditors from frustrating the provision's remedial purpose. The word "privy" should be given a broad reading to include those who benefit directly or indirectly from and have knowledge of a transaction occurring for less than fair market value. In our opinion, this rationale is particularly apt when those who benefit are the controlling minds behind the transaction.

A finding that a person was "privy" to a reviewable transaction does not of course necessarily mean that the court will exercise its discretion to make a remedial order against that person. For liability to be imposed, it must be established that the transaction occurred: (a) within the past year; (b) for consideration conspicuously greater or less than fair market value; (c) with the person's knowledge; and (d) in a way that directly or indirectly benefited the person. In addition, after having considered the context and all the above factors, the judge must conclude that the case is a proper one for holding the person liable. In light of these conditions and of the discretion exercised by the judge, we find that a broad reading of “privy” is appropriate.

Digitized by Google

Disposition

For the foregoing reasons, we would dismiss the appeal with costs to the respondents.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant: Kugler Kandestin, Montréal.
Solicitors for the respondents Lionel Wise, Ralph Wise and Harold Wise: de Grandpré Chait, Solicitors for the respondent Chubb Insurance Company of Canada: Lavery, de Billy, Montréal.

Digitized by Google

* Iacobucci J. took no part in the judgment.

Her Majesty the Queen v. Kevin Richard Buckingham, 2011 FCA 142, A Recent case on the New Purely Objective Test of Diligence and Care based on People's MAINVILLE J.A.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

[1] In reasons cited as 2010 TCC 247 ("Reasons"), Webb J. of the Tax Court of Canada found that the respondent was not liable as a director of various corporations for the amounts the corporations failed to remit as source deductions under the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.), the Canada Pension Plan, R.S.C 1985, c. C-8 and the Employment Insurance Act, S.C. 1996, c. 23, but was so liable after February 2003 for the failure to make GST/HST remittances under the Excise Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. E-15.

[2] The Crown appeals the judgment concerning the employee source deductions remittances in file A-224-10, while the respondent appeals the judgment concerning the GST/HST remittances in file A-225-10. Both appeals have been consolidated.

[3] These consolidated appeals raise the issue of the appropriate standard of care, diligence and skill required of a director under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act (and related provisions of the Canada Pension Plan and of the Employment Insurance Act) and under subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act.

Context

[4] The respondent and his family acquired control of Mosaic Technologies Corporation ("Mosaic") around 1997 in order to carry on an education services business. Shortly thereafter, Mosaic secured educational facilities in various locations across Canada. Mosaic also had a division that prepared online courses for large corporations and governments.

[5] The shares of Mosaic started to trade on the TSX Venture Exchange in 1998 or 1999. The company incurred an operating loss of $970,866 in 1999, made a profit of $253,110 in 2000 and then incurred losses of $451,161 in 2001 and $1,446,396 in 2002. After various unsuccessful efforts in 2002 and in early 2003 to secure additional capital and financing, the corporation unsuccessfully attempted to sell its assets and part of its business in order to pay its creditors. Mosaic ceased all operations in or shortly after September of 2003.

[6] The respondent was the chairman of the board of Mosaic and its largest shareholder. The trial judge found that he was involved in its day-to-day operations and played a significant role in these operations.

[7] The respondent was assessed pursuant to section 323 of the Excise Tax Act for GST/HST remittances which Mosaic had failed to make in March and June of 2003, as well as for associated penalties and interest. He was also assessed pursuant to section 227.1 of the Income Tax Act, section 21.1 of the Canada Pension Plan and section 83 of the Employment Insurance Act for Mosaic's failure to remit employee source deductions for the period of October 2002 to August 2003, as well as for associated penalties and interest.

Digitized by Google

Similar assessments were made against the respondent for the failures to remit employee source deductions by the various subsidiaries of Mosaic, namely Multimedia Ventures (Alberta) Inc., Multimedia Ventures Inc., and 6678 British Columbia Ltd.

[8] The respondent appealed all of these assessments to the Tax Court of Canada solely on the basis that he was not liable for these amounts as a result of the provisions of subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act and subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act which exonerate a director of liability where he "exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances."

The Reasons of the trial judge

[9] Relying on his decision in Higgins v. Canada, 2007 TCC 469, the trial judge concluded, at paragraphs 16 to 18 of his Reasons, that the "objective subjective" test set out in Soper v. Canada, [1998] 1 F.C. 124 (C.A.) ("Soper"), regarding the standard of care, diligence and skill required under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act had been modified by the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in Peoples Department Stores Inc.(Trustee of) v. Wise, 2004 SCC 68, [2004] 3 S.C.R. 461 ("Peoples Department Stores"). The trial judge found that an objective standard should thus be used for the purposes of applying both subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act and subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act, and that this standard incorporated the reasonable business decision test laid out in Peoples Department Stores.

[10] The question for the trial judge was therefore whether the respondent had acted prudently on a reasonably informed basis and whether his business decisions were reasonable in light of the circumstances about which he knew or ought to have known in order to prevent the failures to remit (Reasons at paras. 31, 56 and 82).

[11] The trial judge was however of the view that the analysis required in relation to remittances of employee source deductions should be dealt with separately from the analysis related to remittances of GST/HST. The need for a distinct analysis flowed, in the trial judge's view, from the fact that the "amounts for payroll deductions are not funded from a third party but are paid from whatever resources the company might have available to it" (Reasons at para. 33). For the trial judge, the remittance obligations related to source deductions are part of employee costs and are funded through the general revenues of the corporation which may be insufficient to fund these remittances. On the other hand, remittances of the GST/HST are funded by third parties from whom the GST/HST is collected. This distinction lead the trial judge to conclude that two separate analyses of the standard of care, diligence and skill were required, one for the remittances of source deductions, and one for the remittances of GST/HST (Reasons at paras. 33 and 74-75).

[12] Turning his attention to the employee source deductions remittances, the trial judge accepted the respondent's evidence that reasonable business measures were taken in 2002 and in January and February of 2003 to address the financial difficulties of Mosaic and to avoid failures to remit taxes, including work on a proposed equity issue, attempts to secure a line of credit, reductions in expenditures, and attempts to merge with another company.

[13] The trial judge found, at paragraphs 58 to 65 of his Reasons, that the facts before him were similar to those in Canada v. McKinnon, [2001] 2 F.C. 203 (C.A) 2000 D.T.C. 6593 (sub nom. Worrell v. Canada) [2001] 1 C.T.C. 79 ("Worrell"), where emphasis was placed on the continued effort to find new investors. The trial judge also referred to this Court's decision in Smith v. Canada, 2001 FCA 84, 198 D.L.R. (4th) 257, for the principle that a director is only required to act reasonably. He concluded, at paragraphs 66 to 73 of his Reasons, that the respondent had done all that he could in the circumstances to secure additional funding for Mosaic through various means, and that consequently he had met the standard of care required of him under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act.

Digitized by Google

[14] The trial judge further noted that following the failure to secure new funding, as of February 2003 the efforts of Mosaic turned towards the sale of its assets in order to pay creditors, including the arrears in employee source deductions remittances. Mosaic notably entered into a $1.6 million arrangement in May of 2003 for the sale of its online course development division. An amount of $600,000 was received from this sale in June of 2003 and used to pay various creditors, of which $100,000 was sent to the Receiver General as a partial payment of the outstanding remittances. However, the $1 million balance of the sale price was never subsequently received.

[15] The trial judge further recognized, at paragraphs 69 to 72 of his Reasons, that even if the focus of the respondent's efforts after February of 2003 was directed towards selling assets in order to pay arrears or to correct failures in remittances, rather than towards preventing failures to occur, and even if the employee source deductions remittances had been diverted, a defence under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act could nevertheless be successful:

[69] It also seems reasonable that while the Appellant is trying to arrange for a capital injection or a merger or the sale of a division or assets, that the company should continue to operate as long as there is a reasonable expectation that such events would occur. It does not seem to me that this reasonable expectation would have ended before the deal with GITI collapsed. After the deal with GITI collapsed in February 2003, the steps changed from seeking capital injections to liquidating assets. It seems to me that the liquidation of assets was more directed towards paying arrears (or correcting defaults) than it would be in preventing defaults from occurring. [Emphasis added]

[70] There would be a time delay from the time when the GITI deal collapsed and the employment of employees could be terminated. Reasonable notice is required to terminate employment without cause. As Justice Major noted in The Queen in right of the Province of British Columbia v. Ossie Sylvester, [1997] 2 S.C.R. 315:

1 Employment involves, among other things, a contract between the employer and employee. An employee who is wrongfully dismissed without reasonable notice of termination is entitled to damages for breach of contract. These damages represent the salary the employee would have earned had the employee worked during the notice period, less any amounts credited to mitigation.

[71] Employees simply cannot be dismissed without proper notice. This would mean that the obligation to pay salaries (or compensation for proper notice) will continue after any decision is made to dismiss employees and such costs (which will give rise to requirements to remit amounts under the applicable legislation) will be incurred regardless of whether the company has sufficient revenue to cover such costs. No third party is necessarily providing the funds to the company to cover such costs.

Digitized by Google

[72] As well since Maxim was acquiring a division it seems reasonable that the employees of that division would be retained until the sale was completed and it seems to me that the Appellant would have had a reasonable expectation that the deal with Maxim would close.

[16] The trial judge nevertheless reached a different conclusion concerning the failure to remit GST/HST. He rejected the defence of the respondent, which had been essentially the same as that submitted for the failure to remit employee source deductions, and explained his decision to do so in the following terms (Reasons at para. 82):

The liquidation of assets was not undertaken to prevent failures to remit GST/HST. As noted by the Appellant, the decision to sell assets was made to realize cash so that the company could pay its bills. This would be done to cure defaults in remittances, not prevent failures to remit. As a result, it does not seem to me that the Appellant has satisfied the standard of care imposed on him pursuant to subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act to prevent the failure to remit the net tax that was payable on April 30, 2003 and July 30, 2003.

The position of the Crown

- [17] The Crown argues that the trial judge committed an error in law by incorporating a cash - flow analysis into the duty of care, diligence and skill defence under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act. This, in the Crown's view, significantly expands the defence available under that subsection and, if accepted, would pass to the Crown part of the risk associated with continuing a business which is facing financial difficulties. This is particularly offensive for the Crown in light of the trial judge's finding at paragraph 33 of his Reasons that the respondent "had admitted that the amounts that had been deducted from the payroll payments were being used to pay other bills."

[18] By using amounts withheld on employee source deductions to pay third party creditors, the respondent tried to refinance his business in an effort to save it. Preferential payments were made to creditors other than the Crown purely for the purpose of continuing and preserving the continued operation of the business in order to attempt to salvage the respondent's investment. For the Crown this is exactly the mischief which section 227.1 of the Income Tax Act was intended to avoid.

- [19] The Crown asserts that the trial judge failed to draw the distinction made in Worrell between actions which might be reasonable from a business point of view, and actions which would have prevented the failure to remit employee source deductions, and he thus erred in equating a general business intent with the more specific requirements of section 227.1 of the Income Tax Act which are directed to preventing the failure to remit.

The position of the respondent

[20] In the respondent's view, Worrell stands for the proposition that insofar as the directors can demonstrate that they have made serious and reasonable efforts to resolve the financial difficulties faced by their corporation, they have met the standard of care, diligence and skill required to sustain a defence under either subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act or subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act.

[21] In this case, the trial judge recognized that the respondent had made serious and reasonable efforts to resolve the financial difficulties of Mosaic and of its subsidiaries, and applied the principles set out in Worrell to find that the respondent had successfully established a defence under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act.

Digitized by Google

[22] The respondent adds that the trial judge erred in law by failing to follow Worrell with respect to the GST/HST remittances. Rather, the trial judge carried out a separate and distinct analysis of these remittances based on his concern that GST/HST funds are received from third parties, while source deductions are funded from the general revenues of the business. For the respondent, the trial judge erred in drawing this sharp contrast between GST/HST and source deduction remittances. Treating the GST/HST remittances separately from the source deduction remittances also resulted in the trial judge reaching contradictory findings of fact.

The issues

[23] These consolidated appeals raise three principal issues:

Is the applicable standard of care, diligence and skill under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act and subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act an objective standard?

Does the standard under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act apply differently than under subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act?

Can a successful defence under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act or subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act be sustained where the efforts of the directors are focussed on curing failures to remit rather than towards preventing such failures?

Standard of review

[24] The decision of Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235, sets out the applicable standard of appellate review in an appeal from a judgment of the Tax Court of Canada. The standard of review on a question of law is correctness, while findings of fact are not to be disturbed unless it can be established that the trial judge made a palpable and overriding error. The application of a legal standard to a set of facts is a question of mixed fact and law which is also subject to deference unless an extricable question of law can be identified.

[25] Whether a defence under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act or subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act has been established requires the application of a legal standard to a set of facts. Accordingly, these determinations generally constitute questions of mixed fact and law that are reviewable on a standard of palpable and overriding error: Hartrell v. Canada, 2008 FCA 59, 2008 D.T.C. 6173 at para.

3. However, the three issues raised by these consolidated appeals also raise extricable questions of law to which a standard of correctness applies.

The pertinent legislative provisions

[26] Paragraph 153(1)(a) of the Income Tax Act provides for income tax withholdings from employee wages, and for the remittance of these withholdings to the Receiver General. Subsection 227.1(1) of the Income Tax Act sets out that the directors of a corporation which has failed to so withhold and remit are jointly and severally, or solidarily, liable together with the corporation to pay the concerned amount and any related interest or penalties. Subsections 227.1(2) and (3) of the Income Tax Act provide for certain limitations on this liability of directors, notably by allowing a defence of care, diligence and skill:

Digitized by Google

[27] Subsections 21(1) and 21.1(1) and (2) of the Canada Pension Plan set out similar withholding and remittance obligations in relation to contributions to the Canada Pension Plan:

[28] Similar provisions are also found in subsections 82(1) and 83(1) and (2) of the Employment Insurance Act:

[29] Paragraphs 228(1) and (2) of the Excise Tax Act require the filing of returns and the payment of remittances for the net tax owed in relation to goods and services, while subsection 323(1) provides that the directors of a corporation which has failed to so remit are jointly and severally, or solidarily, liable together with the corporation to pay the concerned amounts and any related interest or penalties. Subsections 323(2) and (3) provide for certain limitations on the liability of directors which are similar to those set out in the Income Tax Act for employee source deductions:

Analysis

The standard of care, diligence and skill

[30] There has been some debate in recent years as to whether the objective standard of care, diligence and skill developed by the Supreme Court of Canada in Peoples Department Stores in relation to paragraph 122(1)(b) of the Canada Business Corporations Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-44 ("CBCA") can extend to subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act and to subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act which use almost identical language in their English versions and similar language in their French versions: Hartrell v. Canada, above at para.12; compare Higgins v. Canada, above at paras. 6 to 11, with Liddle v. Canada, 2009 TCC 451, 2009 D.T.C. 1296 at paras. 33 to 35. Paragraph 122(1)(b) of the CBCA reads as follows:

122. (1) Every director and officer of a corporation in exercising their powers and discharging their duties shall (b) exercise the care, diligence and skill that a reasonably prudent person would exercise in comparable circumstances.	122. (1) Les administrateurs et les dirigeants doivent, dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions, agir : b) avec le soin, la diligence et la compétence dont ferait preuve, en pareilles circonstances, une personne prudente.

Digitized by Google

[31] Though similar, the provisions of paragraph 122(1)(b) of the CBCA and of subsections 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act and 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act have fundamentally different purposes. The different purposes to which these various provisions relate must inform the application of the standard of care, diligence and skill in each case.

[32] The duty of care in paragraph 122(1)(b) of the CBCA does not refer to an identifiable party as the beneficiary of the duty: Peoples Department Stores at para. 57. Thus, the identity of the beneficiaries of the duty of care under paragraph 122(1)(b) of the CBCA is open-ended and includes all creditors. This provision sets out a standard of behaviour that should reasonably be expected, though it does not provide an independent foundation for claims: BCE Inc. v. 1976 Debentureholders, 2008 SCC 69, [2008] 3 S.C.R. 560 at para. 44.

[33] On the other hand, subsection 227.1(1) of the Income Tax Act and subsection 323(1) of the Excise Tax Act specifically provide that the directors "are jointly and severally, or solidarily, liable, together with the corporation, to pay the amount and any interest or penalties relating to" the remittances the corporation is required to make. Subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act and subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act do not set out a general duty of care, but rather provide for a defence to the specific liability set out in subsections 227.1(1) and 323(1) of these respective Acts, and the burden is on the directors to prove that the conditions required to successfully plead such a defence have been met. The duty of care in subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act also specifically targets the prevention of the failure by the corporation to remit identified tax withholdings, including notably employee source deductions. Subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act has a similarly focus. The directors must thus establish that they exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill required "to prevent the failure". The focus of these provisions is clearly on the prevention of failures to remit.

[34] This caveat being stated, I agree with the trial judge that the "objective subjective" standard set out in Soper has been replaced by the objective standard laid down by the Supreme Court of Canada in Peoples Department Stores. I come to this conclusion in light of the language used in subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act and in subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act, and also by applying the principle of the presumption of coherence between statutes.

[35] The words of legislation are to be read in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the legislation, the purpose of the legislation, and the intention of Parliament: Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership v. Rex, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 559 at para. 26. Both subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act and subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act refer to the degree of care, diligence and skill "that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances." The reference to a reasonably prudent person is a clear indication that the test is objective rather than subjective.

[36] Moreover, the language used in paragraph 122(1)(b) of the CBCA is similar to that used in both subsections 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act and 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act. This is not a mere coincidence, but rather a further indication that the standard of care, diligence and skill required by all these provisions is similar. Similar legislative language dealing with similar matters should be given a similar interpretation unless the legislative context indicates otherwise: Pointe-Claire (City) v Quebec (Labour Court), [1997] 1 S.C.R. 1015 at para. 61; R. v. Ulybel Enterprises Ltd., [2001] 2 S.C.R. 867, 2001 SCC 56 at para. 52; Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership v. Rex, above at para. 27; Ruth Sullivan, Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes, 5th ed. (Markham, Ontario: LexisNexis Canada 2008) at pp. 223 to 225.

Digitized by Google

[37] Consequently, I conclude that the standard of care, skill and diligence required under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act and subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act is an objective standard as set out by the Supreme Court of Canada in Peoples Department Stores.

[38] This objective standard has set aside the common law principle that a director's management of a corporation is to be judged according to his own personal skills, knowledge, abilities and capacities: Peoples Department Stores at paras. 59 to 62. To say that the standard is objective makes it clear that the factual aspects of the circumstances surrounding the actions of the director are important as opposed to the subjective motivations of the directors: Peoples Department Stores at para. 63. The emergence of stricter standards puts pressure on corporations to improve the quality of board decisions through the establishment of good corporate governance rules: Peoples Department Stores at para. 64. Stricter standards also discourage the appointment of inactive directors chosen for show or who fail to discharge their duties as director by leaving decisions to the active directors. Consequently, a person who is appointed as a director must carry out the duties of that function on an active basis and will not be allowed to defend a claim for malfeasance in the discharge of his or her duties by relying on his or her own inaction: Kevin P. McGuinness, Canadian Business Corporations Law, 2nd ed. (Markham, Ontario: LexisNexis Canada, 2007) at 11.9.

[39] An objective standard does not however entail that the particular circumstances of a director are to be ignored. These circumstances must be taken into account, but must be considered against an objective "reasonably prudent person" standard. As noted in Peoples Department Stores at paragraph 62:

The statutory duty of care in s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA emulates but does not replicate the language proposed by the Dickerson Report. The main difference is that the enacted version includes the words "in comparable circumstances", which modifies the statutory standard by requiring the context in which a given decision was made to be taken into account. This is not the introduction of a subjective element relating to the competence of the director, but rather the introduction of a contextual element into the statutory standard of care. It is clear that s. 122(1)(b) requires more of directors and officers than the traditional common law duty of care outlined in, for example, Re City Equitable Fire Insurance, supra [[1925] 1 Ch. 407].

[40] The focus of the inquiry under subsections 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act and 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act will however be different than that under 122(1)(b) of the CBCA, since the former require that the director's duty of care, diligence and skill be exercised to prevent failures to remit. In order to rely on these defences, a director must thus establish that he turned his attention to the required remittances and that he exercised his duty of care, diligence and skill with a view to preventing a failure by the corporation to remit the concerned amounts.

Does the standard under subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act apply differently than under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act*?*

[41] Since GST/HST is paid by third parties, while employee source deductions are funded by general business revenues which may be insufficient to allow their payment, the trial judge was of the view that an analysis under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act must be carried out separately from an analysis under subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act. This distinction resulted in two different applications of the standard of care, diligence and skill defence.

[42] However, employee source deductions are also paid by third parties, the employees, and there is therefore no fundamental conceptual difference between employee source deductions remittances and GST/HST remittances which justify a separate analysis of the duty of care, diligence and skill defence on the sole basis of the origin of the funds. This notably flows from subsection 153(3) of the Income Tax Act which states that any amount withheld from employee remuneration "shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to have been received at that time by the person to whom the remuneration, benefit, payment, fees, commissions or other amounts were paid." Similar provisions are found in subsection 21(5) of the Canada Pension Plan and in subsection 82(7) of the Employment Insurance Act.

Digitized by Google

[43] Consequently, the amounts withheld from employee remuneration for income tax, Canada Pension Plan and Employment Insurance purposes are deemed to have been paid by the employee for all purposes associated with these Acts, including for the purposes of assessing the liability of directors for the failure of their corporation to remit the amounts so withheld.

[44] In addition, subsection 227(4) of the Income Tax Act provides that those who deduct or withhold an amount under this Act are deemed to hold the amount separate and apart in trust for Her Majesty and for payment in the manner and at the time provided under the Act.

[45] The cash-flow analysis proposed by the trial judge is thus incompatible with the applicable provisions of the Income Tax Act. The liability of the directors under subsection 227.1(1) is not conditional on the existence of sufficient cash in the corporation to pay the remittances of employee source deductions, quite the contrary.

[46] The cash-flow analysis proposed by the trial judge also assumes that the time frame in which to assess the director's conduct begins when the corporation runs out of cash. The assessment of the director's conduct rather begins when it becomes apparent to the director, acting reasonably and with due care, diligence and skill, that the corporation is entering a period of financial difficulties: Soper at para. 50.

[47] The distinction proposed by the trial judge would also convert the liability of directors under section 323 of the Excise Tax Act into an absolute liability, which is clearly not the intention of Parliament in light of subsection 323(3) of that Act. The distinction would also result in directors having a lesser responsibility in relation to employee source deductions remittances than in relation to GST/HST remittances, a distinction which is not supported by the words of either section 227.1 of the Income Tax Act or section 323 of the Excise Tax Act. Since both these legislative provisions are drafted in similar terms, they should consequently be applied in a similar fashion. The introduction of a distinction which is not set out in the legislation should be avoided.

Can a defence under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act or under subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act be sustained where the efforts of the directors are focussed on curing failures to remit rather than preventing such failures?

[48] An important question arising from this appeal is whether a successful defence under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act or subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act can be sustained where the directors continue to operate the business of the corporation knowing that this could lead to and has in fact resulted in failures to remit in circumstances where they have a reasonable expectation that the failures could be cured, notably through asset sales or through the sale of part or all of the business. The trial judge took two apparently contradictory positions in this matter, accepting such a defence in regard to the employee source deductions remittances (Reasons at paras. 69 to 72) but rejecting it in regard to the GST/HST remittances (Reasons at para. 82).

[49] The traditional approach has been that a director's duty is to prevent the failure to remit, not to condone it in the hope that matters can be rectified subsequently: Canada v. Corsano, [1999] 3 F.C. 173 (C.A.) at para. 35, Ruffo v. Canada, 2000 D.T.C. 6317, [2000] 4 C.T.C. 39 (F.C.A.). Contrary to the suppliers of a corporation who may limit their financial exposure by requiring cash-in-advance payments, the Crown is an involuntary creditor. The level of the Crown's exposure to the corporation can thus increase if the corporation continues its operations by paying the net salaries of the employees without effecting employee source deductions remittances, or if the corporation decides to collect GST/HST from customers without reporting and remitting these amounts in a timely fashion. In circumstances where a corporation is facing financial difficulties, it may be tempting to divert these Crown remittances in order to pay other creditors and thus ensure the continuation of the operations of the corporation. It is precisely such a situation which both section 227.1 of the Income Tax Act and section 323 of the Excise Tax Act seek to avoid. The defence under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act and under subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act should not be used to encourage such failures by allowing a due diligence defence for directors who finance the activities of their corporation with Crown monies on the expectation that the failures to remit could eventually be cured.

Digitized by Google

[50] The respondent however relies on Worrell for the proposition that this traditional approach has been modified. Worrell concerned the application of the defence of care, diligence and skill in circumstances where the corporation's ability to make remittance payments was at the discretion of its bank and where it was reasonable for the directors to believe that, by continuing the business of the corporation, they could restore its fortunes. While recognizing that it will normally not be sufficient for directors to simply carry on a business knowing that a failure to remit was likely but hoping that the company's future would revive with an upturn in the economy or in its market position, the Court also recognized in Worrell that where a reasonable expectation supported this belief in order to avoid future failures to remit, the defence of due diligence could be established in certain exceptional circumstances. Worrell must however be read in light of the particular facts of that case, including notably "the limitations placed on [the directors] by the bank's de facto control of the company's finances" (Worrell at para. 79), and it should therefore not be understood as providing for a new approach to the due diligence defence.

[51] It is thus important to note that Worrell did not modify the focus of the defence of care, diligence and skill, which is to prevent the failure to remit, not to cure failures to do so. As noted in Worrell at paragraph 34:

However, whether the directors did enough to exempt themselves from liability for the unremitted source deductions and G.S.T. will depend, in part at least, on the fourth principle to be found in the case law: the due diligence required of company directors by subsection 227.1(3) is to prevent the failure to remit. This has been held to mean that, if directors become liable prima facie for a company's failure to remit, they normally cannot claim the benefit of subsection 227.1(3) if their efforts were capable only of enabling them to remedy defaults after they have occurred. Accordingly, of the measures taken in an attempt to rescue [their corporation], the most relevant to this inquiry are limited to the ones that were logically capable of preventing failures to remit the source deductions and G.S.T. when they became due. [Emphasis added]

[52] Parliament did not require that directors be subject to an absolute liability for the remittances of their corporations. Consequently, Parliament has accepted that a corporation may, in certain circumstances, fail to effect remittances without its directors incurring liability. What is required is that the directors establish that they were specifically concerned with the tax remittances and that they exercised their duty of care, diligence and skill with a view to preventing a failure by the corporation to remit the concerned amounts.

Digitized by Google

[53] In this case, the trial judge found that until February 2003, the respondent had a reasonable expectation that the efforts being made would succeed in avoiding the failures to remit taxes, but that subsequent to that time, the efforts were rather aimed at curing defaults in remittances (Reasons at para. 69, reproduced above). This finding of fact has not been challenged before us. Thus, by the end of February 2003 the respondent no longer had any reasonable expectation of preventing the failures of employee source deductions remittances and of GST/HST remittances.

[54] However, the trial judge further found that it was reasonable for the respondent to believe that the sale of the online course development division for $1.6 million could provide funds for the payment of arrears on remittances. Was this sufficient to dispel the respondent's liability for the remittances for the period after February 2003? The trial judge found that it was in relation to the employee source deduction remittances, but not in relation to GST/HST remittances.

[55] The trial judge justified his approach based on the reasoning that even if all the employees had been laid-off shortly after February 2003, reasonable notice would have been required giving rise to related source deductions remittances regardless of whether the company had sufficient revenues to cover such costs. He further found that in light of the contemplated sale of the online course development division for $1.6 million, it was reasonable that the employees of that division be retained until the sale was completed. I find neither of these arguments persuasive.

[56] A director of a corporation cannot justify a defence under the terms of subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act where he condones the continued operation of the corporation by diverting employee source deductions to other purposes. The entire scheme of section 227.1 of the Income Tax Act, read as a whole, is precisely designed to avoid such situations. In this case, though the respondent had a reasonable (but erroneous) expectation that the sale of the online course development division could result in a large payment which could be used to satisfy creditors, he consciously transferred part of the risks associated with this transaction to the Crown by continuing operations knowing that employee source deductions would not be remitted. This is precisely the mischief which subsection 227.1 of the Income Tax Act seeks to avoid.

[57] Once the trial judge found as a matter of fact that the respondent's efforts after February 2003 were no longer directed towards the avoidance of failures to remit, no successful defence under either subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act or subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act could be sustained. [58] The trial judge was consequently correct in concluding that a defence under subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act was not available after February 2003 in light of his finding that the respondent's focus had shifted away from avoiding failures to remit the taxes owed. The trial judge however erred in not applying the same reasoning to the defence under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act concerning the failures to remit employee source deductions after February 2003.

Conclusion

[59] I would grant the appeal in file A-224-10, set aside the judgment of the Tax Court of Canada in Docket 2008-2817(IT)G and, giving the judgment which should have been rendered, refer the matter back to the Minister of National Revenue for reconsideration and reassessment on the basis that the respondent is liable under section 227.1 of the Income Tax Act, section 21.1 of the Canada Pension Plan and section 83 of the Employment Insurance Act as a director of Mosaic Technologies Corporation, Multimedia Ventures (Alberta) Inc., Multimedia Ventures Inc. and 6678 British Columbia Ltd. for the amounts these corporations failed to remit under these Acts for the period subsequent to February 2003 as well as for any interest or penalties relating to these amounts.

Digitized by Google

[60] I would also dismiss the appeal in file A-225-10. I would order only one set of costs in favour of the Crown in file A-224-10.
"Robert M. Mainville" J.A.
"I agree
M. Nadon J.A." "I agree
J.D. Denis Pelletier J.A."

---

81 It shouldn't be possible to file a fairness application in clear instances of director neglect.
20120928
Docket: T-915-11 Citation: 2012 FC 1146
Ottawa, Ontario, September 28, 2012 PRESENT: The Honourable Mr. Justice Phelan BETWEEN:
T & S FIRST CHOICE RENOVATIONS LIMITED

And Applicant
CANADA REVENUE AGENCY Respondent

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT

INTRODUCTION

[1] This judicial review concerns a decision of the Canada Revenue Agency [CRA] denying T & S First Choice Renovation Limited's [First Choice] request for the cancellation or waiver of penalties and interest with respect to its corporate tax, payroll and GST accounts for the 2007 tax year. The decision letter was only concerning the payroll 2007 accounts. GST for 2007 and 2008 and payroll for 2008 were considered in a second letter. That second letter was a first administrative review. Both letters a re in the Applicant's Record; CRA only included the one that was under judicial review.

[2] The original style of cause suggested that the decision was in respect of Mr. Dakha personally but the record indicates t hat the decision was made in respect of the corporation only. The only debt at issue is that of the corporation even though Mr. Dakha used personal money in the amount of $10,000 to try to address the corporate liability.

[3] In the course of argument, it was made clear by counsel for the Respondent that this matter did not involve either Mr. Dakha or his associate Mr. Sidhu personally and that no claim has been advanced against them personally.

BACKGROUND

[4] The application for tax relief is based on s 220(3.1) of the Income Tax Act, RSC 1985, c 1 (5th Supp), which gives the Minister of National Revenue the discretion to waiver or cancel in whole or in part penalties and interest otherwise payable.

Digitized by Google

220. (3.1) The Minister may, on or before the day that is ten calendar years after the end of a taxation year of a taxpayer (or in the case of a partnership, a fiscal period of the partnership) or on application by the taxpayer or partnership on or before that day, waive or cancel all or any portion of any penalty or interest otherwise payable under this Act by the taxpayer or partnership in respect of that taxation year or fiscal period, and notwithstanding subsections 152(4) to (5), any assessment of the interest and penalties payable by the taxpayer or partnership shall be made that is necessary to take into account the cancellation of the penalty or interest.

(3.1) Le ministre peut, au plus tard le jour qui suit de dix années civiles la fin de l'année d'imposition d'un contribuable ou de l'exercice d'une société de personnes ou sur demande du contribuable ou de la société de personnes faite au plus tard ce jour-là, renoncer à tout ou partie d'un montant de pénalité ou d'intérêts payable par ailleurs par le contribuable ou la société de personnes en application de la présente loi pour cette année d'imposition ou cet exercice, ou l'annuler en tout ou en partie. Malgré les paragraphes 152(4) à (5), le ministre établit les cotisations voulues concernant les intérêts et pénalités payables par le contribuable ou la société de personnes pour tenir compte de pareille annulation.

[5] The CRA, which acts as the Minister's delegate, has issued an information circular (Canada Revenue Agency, Income Tax Information Circular IC07-1, "Taxpayer Relief Provisions" (May 31, 2007)) explaining the policy to be applied. There are three circumstances where relief may be granted:

extraordinary circumstances – natural disasters, serious illness or accident and the like;

actions of the CRA – processing delays, misinformation and similar actions; and inability to pay or financial hardship – for a person, prolonged inability to supply necessities or for a corporation, extreme financial difficulty and jeopardy to continued operations.

[6] The factors which are examined are:

whether or not the taxpayer has a history of compliance with tax obligations;

whether or not the taxpayer has knowingly allowed a balance to exist on which arrears interest has accrued;

whether or not the taxpayer has exercised a reasonable amount of care and has not been negligent or careless in conducting their affairs under the self-assessment system; and whether or not the taxpayer has acted quickly to remedy any delay or omission.

[7] Mr. Dakha and Mr. Sidhu were the directors of First Choice. Mr. Dakha was largely responsible for business development.

[8] Mr. Dakha was seriously injured in a motorcycle accident in 2007 which meant that he could not continue to work. The business lost revenue and ceased operations in 2008.

[9] First Choice, through Mr. Dakha, applied for tax relief in 2008 and the final decision regarding the 2007 payroll taxes was issued in April 2011.

Digitized by Google

ANALYSIS

[10] It is well-established that the standard of review for the Minister's discretion is reasonableness (Tefler v Canada (Revenue Agency), 2009 FCA 23).

[11] I can find nothing unreasonable in the Minister's decision. The factors were examined and a rational conclusion was reached on each:

There was no causal connection between Mr. Dakha's injury and the failure to meet tax obligations as there was another director capable of meeting the fiscal obligations.

The continuity of operations was a moot point as the corporation had ceased operations in 2008 for reasons other than pending tax liabilities.

The corporation had not made a meaningful attempt to address the tax portion of the debt although Mr. Dakha certainly did.

The corporation had not exercised reasonable care in conducting its tax affairs because it had past problems with compliance. The corporation had allowed penalties to accrue on its accounts since 2002.

[12] Under all these circumstances, I cannot see where the Minister's decision in respect of First Choice is unreasonable.

CONCLUSION

[13] This judicial review will be dismissed without costs.

JUDGMENT

THIS COURT'S JUDGMENT is that the application for judicial review is dismissed without costs.

"Michael L. Phelan"

Judge

Digitized by Google

The Attorney General Of Canada v. Lynda Mckinnon et al, A-421-98, Continuing Business in Face of Lack of Liquidity and Inside Directors' Diligence

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT EVANS J.A.

INTRODUCTION

[1] Company directors are jointly and severally liable to Revenue Canada for employee source deductions and Goods and Services Tax ("G.S.T.") that their company has failed to remit and that cannot be recovered from it. However, it is a defence for a director to establish that he or she exercised the care, diligence and skill of a reasonably prudent person in comparable circumstances to prevent the failure.

[2] This case concerns the application of this defence of due diligence to a situation where, because the company had run into financial difficulties, its ability to make remittance payments was at the discretion of the bank to which it was indebted, but where it was also reasonable for the directors to believe that, by continuing to operate the business, they could restore the fortunes of the company.

[3] Whether the directors in this case satisfied the statutory standard of due diligence by exercising the degree of care, skill and diligence to prevent such failures as would be shown by a reasonably prudent person in comparable circumstances depends largely on the particular facts. However, some important legal issues about the scope of the due diligence defence are also raised. [4] The proceeding argued before the Court is an appeal by the Crown against a decision of the Tax Court of Canada, dated June 4, 1998, in which McArthur J.T.C.C. allowed the taxpayer's appeal against a notice of assessment, both because the directors did not have de facto control of the company's finances and because they had exercised the requisite degree of care, skill and diligence to be exempted from liability for the company's failure to remit the employer portions of Canada Pension Plan ("C.P.P.") and Unemployment Insurance ("U.I.") deductions, and G.S.T.

[5] In addition, there are five other related proceedings. Each respondent is party to two proceedings: an appeal under the Income Tax Act in respect of the company's failure to remit C.P.P. and U.I., and an application for judicial review in respect of unremitted G.S.T. under the Excise Tax Act. The appeals are in files A-422-98, A-423-98 and A-425-98. The section 28 proceedings are in files A-421-98, A-424-98 and A- 426-98.

[6] The proceedings were heard together on common evidence; Mr. Worrell testified on behalf of both himself and the other respondents, his co-directors, Ms. McKinnon and Mr. Lapointe, who, together, were the active directors and managers of the company, Abel Metal Limited ("Abel"). Accordingly, one set of reasons will suffice to dispose of all six cases. A copy of these reasons will be placed in each of the files and, when filed, shall become reasons for judgment in each of the matters.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

[7] Abel had been in business in the Toronto area for the best part of thirty years, manufacturing and supplying non-structural metal components used in construction. During the recession that hit the construction industry in the late 1980s and early 1990s Abel suffered serious losses. It began to experience financial difficulties in the fall of 1992, which continued into the following year. Nonetheless, in 1993 it still employed seventy people.

[8] Abel's bank, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, expressed concern over the company's April 1993 financial statement. As a result, one of the directors, Mr. Lapointe, gave a personal guarantee to the bank of Abel's debt, which then stood at $1.6 million. Abel had reached the limit of its credit line by either the fall of 1992, or early in 1993. Although in the past Abel had always paid its bills, on September 30, 1993 the bank dishonoured a company remittance cheque to Revenue Canada for insufficient funds, without giving prior notice to its customer.

Digitized by Google

[9] Abel's already difficult financial situation had been made worse when its request for bonding in June 1993 was refused because there was insufficient equity in the company. The formal letter of refusal from the bonding company was dated August 30, 1993. Unless Abel could come up with new capital of some $350,000, or find another source of bonding, the refusal of bonding would severely limit its ability to obtain profitable new contracts and to contain its already serious cash flow problem.

[10] In an attempt to extricate itself from its financial troubles, on October 16, 1993 Abel engaged a Mr. Humphreys, a chartered accountant, who had had considerable success in assisting other companies in the construction industry that had fallen into financial difficulty. Together with two of Abel's directors, he met with bank officials to discuss the bank's concerns and to try to work out solutions.

[11] However, on October 18, only two days later, the bank dishonoured a cheque for $46,000 drawn by Abel in favour of the Receiver General of Canada in respect of September payroll source deductions. At about the same time, the bank started to reduce the company's line of credit. In a letter dated October 22, 1993 the bank informed Abel that it should be careful not to issue cheques that would take it beyond its credit limit with the bank. The bank also appointed BDO Dunwoody to "monitor" Abel's finances and to report to the bank on the company's prospects.

[12] The bank also required the directors of Abel to seek approval almost daily for permission to pay the company's creditors. After the October cheque was dishonoured for insufficient funds, it was clear both to the directors and Mr. Humphreys that the bank could not be counted on to honour any cheques issued by Abel in respect of G.S.T. or source deduction remittances. Nonetheless, Ms. McKinnon continued to prepare remittance cheques in the hope that the bank would honour them, which, on a few occasions, it did on a discretionary basis.

[13] Mr. Humphreys was satisfied that Abel was a viable company: it was well established in the construction business and had weathered previous cyclical downturns in the industry. His view was that, with an injection of new capital, the company could be turned around quickly and, even if none were forthcoming, Abel would be profitable within eighteen months.

[14] Despite strenuous efforts, Mr. Humphreys could produce only one potential investor, but he was not acceptable to the bank. At this point, on April 27, 1994, the bank decided to call in its loans and Abel filed for bankruptcy. The company probably had been insolvent for the previous twelve months, even though it had apparently paid all its bills before the bank first dishonoured the first remittance cheque in September 1993.

[15] Nearly all of the company's debt to Revenue Canada for unremitted payments, from which the respondents' personal liability derives, accrued after October 18, 1993 when the bank started to exercise control over the cheques issued by Abel. After Abel filed for bankruptcy, the trustee paid some of the money owing, namely, all the outstanding employee portions of the deductions. However, the employer portions of C.P.P. and U.I., and the G.S.T., were not paid. The unpaid remittances (including interest and late payment penalties) amounted to $133,747.00 and were the subject of the assessments with which this appeal is concerned.

[16] In addition, section 21.1 of the Canada Pension Plan, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-8 and subsection 54(1) of the Unemployment Insurance Act, R.S.C 1985, c. U-1 respectively incorporate section 227.1 of the Income Tax Act with regard to directors' liability for failing to remit C.P.P. and U.I. source deductions.

Digitized by Google

THE TAX COURT'S DECISION

[17] On the facts essentially as outlined above, McArthur J.T.C.C. held (at paragraph [16]) that, from October 18, 1993, when Abel's payroll remittance cheque was dishonoured, until the company filed for bankruptcy in April of the following year,

[I]t was the bank, and not the directors, that controlled the finances of Abel. This restriction on the directors' freedom of choice is sufficient to relieve the [directors] of personal liability for both the payroll assessment and the GST assessment. The [directors] did not have the freedom of choice to govern the corporation and prevent the failures to remit....

[18] Hence, since the directors had no de facto control over the payment of the company's debts, they were not liable under subsection 227.1(1), since this provision assumes that the directors had freedom of choice in this regard. He relied on Robitaille v. Canada, [1990] 1 C.T.C. 121 (F.C.T.D.) as the leading authority for this proposition, although he also noted that directors who lose de facto financial control of the company to its banker have also been excused under subsection 227.1(3) on the ground that, if in fact it was not within their power to prevent the company's default in making payroll remittances to Revenue Canada, they had satisfied the due diligence defence.

[19] In response to the argument that, in this situation, it was within the power of the directors of Abel to have prevented the company's foreseeable defaults by closing the business, McArthur J.T.C.C. relied on Fancy v. Minister of National Revenue, [1988] 2 C.T.C. 2256 (T.C.C.). In that case, where the circumstances were somewhat similar to those of the instant case, Couture C.J.T.C.C. had rejected this argument (at page 2261), on the ground that the liability created by subsection 227.1(1) was not absolute, but was conditional upon the directors'... personal conduct in respect of the circumstances linked to the omission by their company to remit the deductions from its employees' salary.

[20] McArthur J.T.C.C. inferred from this statement that if a reasonable person would, like the directors in this case, have continued to operate the company, subsection 227.1(3) provided a defence to the Crown's contention that they were personally liable for Abel's foreseeable failure to make remittances. The Judge found (at paragraph [19]) that, in not closing the company down prior to October 18, 1993, the "appellants took a common sense approach" in view of: the company's "obligation to its employees not to shut down without satisfactory evidence that the business was not viable"; its history of surviving previous recessions in the construction industry; Mr. Humphreys' advice, and his attempts to persuade the bank to honour its cheques to the Receiver General of Canada and to find investors acceptable to the bank; and Mr. Lapointe's guarantee.

[21] After doing what it reasonably could, the Judge concluded, the company lost effective control of its finances to the bank as from October 18, 1993, which relieved the directors of any personal liability for subsequent defaults.

ISSUES

Did the de facto control exercised by the bank over the company's ability to make remittances to Revenue Canada exclude the directors from the scope of subsection 227.1(1)?

If the answer to Issue 1 is in the negative, did the directors exercise the care, diligence and skill of a reasonably prudent person in comparable circumstances to prevent the failures to remit so as to establish a defence under subsection 227.1(3)?

Digitized by Google

ANALYSIS

some general principles

[22] While there is no shortage of cases on the application of subsection 227.1(3), relatively few contain statements of principle on the approach to be taken to its interpretation and application. Rather, reasons for judgment tend to be framed in terms of the facts of the particular case: analysis often does not proceed much beyond the proposition that whether the "due diligence" defence has been established is to be determined by a consideration of all the circumstances of the case.

[23] In the absence of a developed analytical framework, cases are readily distinguishable on their facts, even when those facts, including the facts in the instant appeal, conform to a recurring general pattern. Inevitably, but without express advertence, some decisions exhibit a relatively strict approach to subsection 227.1(3), while others, including the decision under appeal here, adopt a view more favourable to the director.

[24] Nonetheless, amid this wilderness of single instances some general guidance on section

227.1 is available, most notably from this Court in Soper v. Canada, [1998] 1 F.C. 124 (F.C.A.). First, writing for the majority in Soper, supra, Robertson J.A. (at paragraph [11]) put subsection 227.1(3) into context by explaining its rationale:

Non-remittance of taxes withheld on behalf of a third party was likewise not uncommon during the recession. Faced with a choice between remitting such amounts to the Crown or drawing such amounts to pay key creditors whose goods or services were necessary to the continued operation of the business, corporate directors often followed the latter course. Such patent abuse and mismanagement on the part of directors constituted the "mischief" at which section 227.1 was directed....

[25] Whether or not non-remittance of taxes in the circumstances described above can always properly be characterised as "patent abuse and mismanagement", the conduct of the directors in the present case does not, in any event, fall within the precise mischief identified by Robertson J.A. The allegation here is not that the directors chose to pay creditors other than the Crown, but that they continued to operate the business in circumstances where they knew, or ought reasonably to have known, that the bank, which controlled their financial life support, was likely to honour cheques to pay creditors essential to the ability of the company to remain in business, but not to permit the company to discharge its debts to the Crown, for as long, at least, as the bank believed that the company's continued operation would best protect its interest as a creditor of the company.

[26] Second, Soper, supra, clarified the "due diligence" test applicable under subsection 227.1(3). Robertson J.A. held that the test is hybrid "objective-subjective" in nature. Thus, in deciding whether a director has "exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person would have shown in comparable circumstances", the court must take into account the characteristics of the directors whose conduct is in question, including their levels of relevant skill, experience and knowledge. The court must then ask whether, if faced with similar circumstances, a reasonably prudent director, with comparable levels of skill, experience and qualifications would have acted in the same way as these directors: paragraph [25]. Applying this test, Robertson J.A. said (at paragraph [44]):

... inside directors, meaning those involved in the day-to-day management of the company and who influence the conduct of its business affairs, will have the most difficulty in establishing the due diligence defence.

[27] To relate this to the facts of our case, it is clear that the "due diligence" owed by the respondents is at the high end of the spectrum. They were "inside" directors who managed the company, with which they had been associated from its early days, and were very experienced in and knowledgeable about the company's business.

Digitized by Google

[28] Third, "due diligence" normally requires that, when a director becomes aware, or ought to have become aware, that the company is falling behind with its remittances, he or she should take some positive steps to prevent the default, such as an attempt to increase the company's operating line of credit with its bank or to come to an arrangement with the bank that would enable it to make remittances. Directors have also alerted Revenue Canada to the problem and attempted to arrange to make payments by instalments.

[29] It is clear that the directors of Abel did take some positive steps to try to extricate the company from its financial difficulties. In particular, they engaged the services of Mr. Humphreys, who advised them that the company was viable, with or without an injection of new capital, and made efforts, with some success, to find interested investors.

[30] There were also discussions with the bank over the honouring of cheques drawn in favour of Abel's suppliers and employees. While it is unclear from the evidence whether either Mr. Humphreys or the directors discussed with the bank the remittance cheques to Revenue Canada, it was clear to them that the bank would honour such cheques only at its discretion, as indeed it occasionally did.

[31] It is equally clear that the directors were aware that, unless there was an early injection of capital by an investor approved by the bank, or the bank changed its position by regularly honouring the company's cheques to Revenue Canada, Abel was likely to be in default in its remittances for eighteen months, the time that Mr. Humphreys had estimated that it would take for Abel to regain its financial footing.

[32] However, whether the directors thereby did enough to exempt themselves from liability for the unremitted source deductions and G.S.T. will depend, in part at least, on the fourth principle to be found in the case law: the due diligence required of company directors by subsection 227.1(3) is to prevent the failure to remit. This has been held to mean that, if directors become liable prima facie for a company's failure to remit, they normally cannot claim the benefit of subsection 227.1(3) if their efforts were capable only of enabling them to remedy defaults after they had occurred. Accordingly, of the measures taken in an attempt to rescue Abel, those most relevant to this inquiry are limited to the ones that were logically capable of preventing failures to remit the source deductions and G.S.T. when they became due.

[33] This point was made in Corsano v. The Queen, [1999] 3 F.C. 173 (F.C.A), where the Court emphasised (at paragraph [35]) that a director's duty is to prevent default, not to condone it in the hope that matters can be rectified subsequently. And, in Soper, supra, Robertson J.A. said (at paragraph [48]) that the purpose of the subsection .... is to prevent failure to make remittances and not to cure default after the fact (though, as a practical matter, the provision should have the latter effect as well).

Similarly, in Canales v. The Queen, 97 DTC 49 (T.C.C.) McArthur J.T.C.C. (at page 50) described it as a well established principle that ... the Appellant must demonstrate that a reasonable attempt was made to prevent the failure to deduct and remit and not just an attempt to remedy the situation after the failure.

Most recently, writing for this Court in Ruffo v. Minister of National Revenue (F.C.A.: A-429-97; April 13, 2000), Létourneau J.A. said (at paragraph [6]):

The appellant's duty as a director was to anticipate and prevent the failure to pay the sums owing and not to commit such failure or perpetuate it as he did from March 1992 in the hope that at the end of the day the firm would again become profitable or there would be enough money, even if it were wound up, to pay all the creditors.

Digitized by Google

[34] In our case, the most important thing done by the directors to prevent Abel's failures to remit was to engage Mr. Humphreys to find new sources of investment for the company: his advice had been that, with the injection of approximately $350,000, the company could be turned around quickly and he expressed confidence that a suitable investor could be found. In addition, the fact that remittance cheques continued to be prepared by Ms. McKinnon in the hope that the bank would honour them can also be considered a potentially preventative measure. The directors did not continue simply to operate the business on the basis of an assurance that the company was sufficiently robust to enable them wait eighteen months to take advantage of an anticipated economic recovery.
[35] Fifth, directors incur no personal liability under subsection 227.1(1), and therefore do not need to invoke subsection 227.1(3), if at any time the company's debt to Revenue Canada, including interest and late payment penalties, is discharged. This is because subsection 227.1(2) qualifies subsection 227.1(1) by providing, in effect, that a director is liable to pay to the Crown the amounts not remitted by the company only after all efforts to collect have been exhausted.
[36] Thus, in this case, while Abel had failed to remit the employee portions of the payroll deductions, these amounts were subsequently paid to Revenue Canada by Abel's trustee in bankruptcy. Accordingly, the directors were never vicariously liable under subsection 227.1(1) to pay them.
[37] Sixth, a director who has lost legal control over the company, on the appointment of a receiver-manager for instance, is not liable to Revenue Canada for company debts that are incurred subsequently. Some cases have extended this principle to situations where directors have lost de facto control over the company's finances to another, typically its bank. Non-liability in these situations has been explained both on the ground that the charging provision, subsection 227.1(1), assumes that the directors were able freely to choose whether the company remitted its payroll deductions, and because directors who lacked the necessary control over the company's finances could not be said to have failed to show "due diligence".

The Case Law
[38] A number of cases have been decided on the basis of facts that fall broadly within the pattern presented by the instant case. While the facts of no two cases are ever identical, the decisions can be divided into two categories: those that favour the Crown, and those that favour the directors. I first examine those relied on by the appellant, the Crown.
[39] In Deschênes v. Canada (Minister of National Revenue) (T.C.C.; No. 87-1364 (IT); September 1, 1989) the taxpayer wished to keep the business going despite its financial problems and negotiated an agreement with the bank that enabled it to pay the employees' wages, but did not also ask it to honour cheques drawn for source deductions. The company was in default in making its remittances and went intvb5rtfo bankruptcy.
[40] In response to the taxpayer's argument that, in the circumstances, there was nothing else that he could reasonably have done to prevent the failures to remit, Lamarre-Proulx J.T.C.C. said:
... the testimony of the appellant himself, cited above, indicates that it was he who deliberately chose not to pay the income tax and unemployment insurance deductions. That was a risk the appellant took. It was a risk taken in difficult circumstances, certainly; but it was still a deliberate choice which remained unchanged for a period of several weeks, and was contrary to the duty of the director of a corporation to act with care, diligence and skill in remitting source deductions from employee salaries.

Digitized by Google

[41] I should note that, unlike in our case, there was apparently no evidence in Deschênes, supra, that the bank had indicated that it would not necessarily honour cheques drawn in favour of Revenue Canada by M. Deschênes' company. In addition, the Judge seems to have been influenced by the fact that, as an endorsee of two bank loans, the taxpayer hoped that, by keeping the business going, he would avoid being called upon to honour the endorsements. Finally, there was no finding of the reasonableness, or otherwise, from a business standpoint of the taxpayer's continuing to operate the company in the hope of turning its fortunes around.

[42] The Crown also relies on Hamel v. Minister of National Revenue, 92 DTC 1288 (T.C.C.), where the facts are closer to those of our case and the cases relied on in the Tax Court were expressly considered. The Judge in Hamel, supra, concluded that, having made a conscious decision to continue in business, rather than to cease operating, the directors had not demonstrated "due diligence" and consequently remained vicariously liable for the company's failures to remit, even though there was nothing else that they could have done to prevent them.

[43] The evidence was that, as the company got into financial difficulty, the bank closely supervised its operations and from February to June, when the company ceased operating, the bank increased its credit to enable the company to pay its employees and essential suppliers. However, the bank refused to honour cheques for the source deductions; the directors had discussed this topic with the bank, although no arrangement was ever made with respect to the remittances. Nor, the Judge found, did the directors speak with Revenue Canada about their problem.

[44] The Judge concluded (at page 1291) as follows:

If one agrees to continue operating a business despite the financial difficulties it is experiencing, and if one accepts to pay employees and suppliers, one must also discharge one's income tax obligations. One must be able to show, if not positive steps, at least concrete facts which may explain one's inaction during such a long period of time. The decision made jointly with the bank to continue operating for several months when the animals could have been sold earlier implies that the parties had some hope of deriving some benefit from it eventually, if only by limiting their losses. Such a decision, however, implies a responsibility to ensure that the business was not being financed out of what was owed to the government.

I should note that no finding was made about the business prudence of the directors' decision, made jointly with the bank, to continue to operate the company.

[45] I turn now to the principal cases relied on by the directors, starting with the earliest, Fancy v. Minister of National Revenue, 88 DTC 1641 (T.C.C.), which concerned the liability of husband and wife directors of an excavating company that had failed to remit source deductions. When the company ran into financial difficulties its banker monitored all its cheques and refused to authorize a deduction remittance cheque, a fact of which Ms. Fancy notified Revenue Canada as soon as she became aware of it.

[46] From the company's beginning, the bank had financed its operation, securing its loans by a general assignment of the company's accounts receivable. Hence, Couture C.J.T.C.C. held (at page 1643), the bank had always been "in effective control of the company's cash flow" and "in a position to dominate the finances of the company and to dictate its fate." The Judge concluded that the taxpayers had shown the degree of care and skill required to bring them within subsection 227.1(3) in view of: the encumbrance that the directors had placed on the company's receivables; their attempts to raise additional capital to see the company through its difficulties; and their hope that the bank would allow the company to meet its obligations to Revenue Canada. They were, he said (at page 1644), "victims of circumstances over which they had no effective control."

Digitized by Google

[47] Couture C.J.T.C.C. rejected the argument that, when they became aware of the seriousness of the company's financial difficulties, the taxpayers should have ceased its operations, on the ground that such a proposition "[d]oes not reflect the true intent of the legislation." His reason for so concluding was that the liability created by subsection 227.1(1) was not absolute and if, through their personal conduct in connection with the company's failure to remit, the directors had exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill required to satisfy subsection 227.1(3), they were exempted from liability.

[48] Couture C.J.T.C.C. appears to have approached subsection 227.1(3) by asking whether the taxpayers had, in a broad sense, acted honestly and responsibly when faced with a difficult situation, and when the assignment to the bank of their accounts receivable had further restricted their ability to remit source deductions. On the facts, his conclusion that they were not liable is hardly surprising. However, in my opinion the Judge's analysis is open to question in that there was little evidence of any concrete steps taken by the directors to prevent the defaults that were clearly foreseeable if the business were continued.

[49] Robitaille v. The Queen, 90 DTC 6059 (F.C.T.D.) is the other case that is regularly cited in support of a broad approach to the exemption from liability under subsection 227.1(1) when taxpayers' ability to remit source deductions has been curtailed by the de facto control exercised over the company's finances by its banker. However, the facts of that case were so out of the ordinary that, in my opinion, the decision sheds little light on the application of the statutory exemption of directors from liability in more familiar commercial contexts, such as that of the case under appeal.

[50] Mme Robitaille was the wife of one of the principals of the company and had been made a director only to comply with a statutory requirement that a federally incorporated company had to have at least three directors. She had played no active role in the company, and learned of its financial difficulties, including its failure to remit source deductions to Revenue Canada, only after the bank had assumed de facto control of its affairs. In any event, Addy J. concluded (at page 6063), even if she had been informed of the situation earlier, "she could not have done anything about it." Further, such was the control exercised by the bank over the affairs of the company, partly as a result of the assignment of its inventory to the bank, that Revenue Canada dealt with the bank, not with the company directors, over the remittances and the continuation of the business.

[51] In these circumstances, it is hardly surprising that the Court exempted the taxpayer from personal liability for the company's failures to remit. However, despite some broad statements by Addy J., in my opinion this case cannot be regarded as authority for the general proposition that once a bank exercises control over the cheques written by a company, the directors are not vicariously liable for source deductions not remitted to Revenue Canada.

[52] Robitaille, supra, was followed in Champeval v. Minister of National Revenue, 90 DTC 1291 (T.C.C.), affirmed 99 DTC 5115 (F.C.T.D.), where the company had also made a general assignment of its receivables to the bank, which thus had absolute control over incoming funds and decided which of the cheques drawn by the company it would honour. In concluding that the appellant was not liable because the bank's total control over the company prevented liability from arising under subsection 227.1(1), the Judge also took into account the efforts that the taxpayer had made to come to an arrangement with Revenue Canada on the remittances.

[53] Finally, it remains to consider the recent decision of MacKay J. in Clarke v. The Queen, 2000 DTC 6230 (F.C.T.D). In that case, the directors were held not liable for remittances due after the appointment of a receiver-manager, who assumed the legal powers of the directors, or for those that had become due during earlier when the bank had put the company into "soft receivership". In contrast, the directors were found liable for source deductions that should have been remitted during the month when, concerned about the financial state of the company and its ability to recover its loan, the bank had appointed a firm of accountants to monitor the company and to report to the bank on the company's financial status and prospects. In the same month, a cheque written by the company to the Receiver General of Canada was dishonoured by the bank for insufficient funds.

Digitized by Google

[54] MacKay J. found (at paragraph [7]) that, while the company was in "soft receivership", the firm of chartered accountants appointed by the bank for this purpose

...was to have the final say in all operations, including accounts receivable, sale of inventory and of equipment, contracts, purchases, payables and payments, personnel, changes in and forecasting of operations.

In addition, the company's chequebook was taken into the custody of the "soft receiver" and the bank exercised ultimate authority over the cheques that it would honour.

[55] MacKay J. held that, since the directors had no control in fact over the company, liability under subsection 227.1(1) was accordingly never engaged. He quoted with approval the following words of Addy J. in Robitaille, supra (at page 6063):

The exercise of freedom of choice on the part of the director is essential in order to establish personal liability.

Conclusions

Subsection 227.1(1): a requirement of control?

[56] With all respect to those who have taken a different view, in my opinion it is inappropriate to import into subsection 227.1(1) a requirement that it is only engaged if the directors have de facto control over the financial operation of the company, particularly the payment of its bills.

[57] First, these words are not contained in the statute, and courts should normally not add words to those in the statutory text approved by Parliament.

[58] Second, the due diligence exemption in subsection 227.1(3) will prove broad enough to provide a defence to directors who have acted with propriety in attempting to prevent defaults by their company. It is therefore unnecessary to read the notion of control into subsection (1) in order to ensure that directors are not saddled with liability when their conduct to prevent the company's failure to remit satisfied the standard of the care that a reasonable person would have exercised in comparable circumstances to prevent the defaults.

[59] Moreover, "control" is not a monolithic concept and it will inevitably be difficult to determine whether, in a given case, the directors retained sufficient "control" to trigger subsection (1). The situation is different on the appointment of a receiver whose legal powers supercede those of the directors who, in a functional sense, cease to be directors and thus fall outside the ambit of subsection 227.1(1): see, for example, Drover v. Canada (1998), 161 D.L.R. (4th) 518 (F.C.A), at paragraph [4].

[60] Third, if the concept of "control" extends to a de facto inability to take measures to ensure that remittances are paid when they fall due because the company's bank will not honour cheques in favour of Revenue Canada, then a director would not become liable under subsection 227.1(1), regardless of whether it was reasonable to keep the business going, and of the length of time that it was operated without making remittances when legally due. The reasonableness of a director's conduct is only relevant as a defence under subsection 227.1(3) once liability under subsection (1) has been engaged.

[61] Therefore, in my respectful view, the decision of McArthur J.T.C.C. that the directors of

Digitized by Google

Abel were not liable for the unremitted source deductions and G.S.T. cannot be supported on the ground that subsection 227.1(1) was not triggered because the bank's insistence that it approve any cheques written by the company deprived the taxpayers of control of the company's finances.

Subsection 227.1(3): the due diligence defence

[62] McArthur J.T.C.C. acknowledged that, prior to October 18, 1993, when the bank dishonoured a cheque payable to Revenue Canada, the directors could have closed the business. However, he concluded that, in following Mr. Humphreys' advice to keep the business going, the directors acted with "due diligence". I should also note that on October 25, 1993 BDO Dunwoody had submitted a report to the bank, with a copy to Abel, in which it recommended that the business not be closed down because closure would probably result in a loss of between 80-90% of the value of Abel's $2 million worth of receivables arising from its construction contracts.

[63] In my view, the question is whether, throughout the whole period of the defaults, starting from September 1993 and ending in April 1994, the directors exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill of the reasonably prudent person in comparable circumstances to prevent the company's failures to remit the source deductions and G.S.T.

[64] I accept that the directors of Abel are not personally liable for the amounts due prior to the dishonouring of the remittance cheque on October 18, 1993. Admittedly, the directors were well aware of the financial difficulties of the company, especially as a result of the refusal of bonding in the summer of 1993. They also knew that the bank had expressed its concerns after seeing the financial statement for April 1993, had moved Abel's account from the local branch to a department that handled troubled accounts and had dishonoured a remittance cheque at the end of September. [65]However, a few days before the second cheque was dishonoured on October 18, there had been a meeting of the bank officers handling the Abel file, Mr. Humphreys and two of the directors of the company. As a result of the discussions at this meeting, the directors believed that the bank was satisfied with the way in which the company was dealing with its problems. Nonetheless, the bank did not warn Abel that it proposed to dishonour its cheques and, prior to the dishonouring of the cheque in October, it had not started to reduce the line of credit. It is also significant in this context that in the past Abel had always paid its bills.

[66] Consequently, the focus of this appeal should be on the conduct of the directors after October 18, 1993 when the bank dishonoured the second remittance cheque, and whether they exercised the requisite care, diligence and skill to prevent the company's subsequent failures to remit which they knew were likely to occur.

[67] Because he based his decision principally on the ground that the bank so controlled Abel's finances that subsection 227.1(1) was never engaged, the Tax Court Judge dealt relatively briefly with the due diligence defence. However, he did say that, in light of the advice that they had received from Mr. Humphreys and the efforts that he was making to find a new investor, the support that they apparently received from the bank, the cyclical nature of the construction industry, the history of the company and their duty to the employees, the taxpayers "took a common sense approach" in deciding not to close the business. However, it is not altogether clear from the reasons for judgment whether the Judge considered the possibility that the directors should have closed the business after October 18, 1993.

[68] In my opinion, it is essential to keep in mind the relevant question in this appeal: did the directors exercise due diligence to prevent the company's failure to remit? This is not necessarily the same as asking whether it was reasonable from a business point of view for the directors to continue to operate the business. In order to avail themselves of the defence provided by subsection 227.1(3) directors must normally have taken positive steps which, if successful, could have prevented the company's failure to remit from occurring. The question then is whether what the directors did to prevent the failure meets the standard of the care, diligence and skill that would have been exercised by a reasonably prudent person in comparable circumstances.

Digitized by Google

[69] It will normally not be sufficient for the directors simply to have carried on the business, knowing that a failure to remit was likely but hoping that the company's fortunes would revive with an upturn in the economy or in their market position. In such circumstances directors will generally be held to have assumed the risk that the company will subsequently be able to make its remittances. Taxpayers are not required involuntarily to underwrite this risk, no matter how reasonable it may have been from a business perspective for the directors to have continued the business without doing anything to prevent future failures to remit.

[70] This point was recently made in Ruffo v. R., [1998] 2 C.T.C. 2203 (T.C.C.), affirmed by this Court on April 13, 2000 (A-429-97), where Lamarre-Proulx J.T.C.C. stated at paragraph [20]:

I am of the opinion that the case law of the Court is consistent on the diligence that the director of a corporation must show to avoid the liability prescribed in subsection 227.1(3) of the Act. It is the diligence that is concerned with preventing the failure that can, in many instances, differ from the diligence that the director must exercise toward the corporation.

[71] She went on to cite with approval the following statements by Rip J.T.C.C. in Merson v. R., 89 DTC 22, where he said (at page 28):

The prudence required by subsection 227.1(3) in the exercise of care diligence and skill is different from that required by a director performing his duties, under corporate law, notwithstanding that subsection 227.1(3) and subsection 122(1)(b) of the Canadian Business Corporations Act, for example, both use identical words. The exercise of care, diligence and skill by the director contemplated by subsection 227.1(3) is not founded on the director's obligations to the corporation; it is based on one of the corporation's obligations under the Act and the failure of the corporation to fulfil such obligation. A director who manages a business is expected to take risks to increase the profitability of the business and the duties of care, diligence and skill are measured by this expectation. The degree of prudence required by subsection 227.1(3) leaves no room for risk.

[72] I do not understand Rip J.T.C.C.'s statement that the "degree of prudence required by subsection 227.1(3) leaves no room for risk" to mean that section 227.1 imposes strict liability on directors whose company ultimately proves to be unable to make good defaults in its remittances. Such a view would clearly be contrary to subsection 227.1(3), which only becomes relevant when Revenue Canada is unable to recover the money that the company ought to have remitted.

[73] Rather, I take him to have meant that, if directors decide to continue the business in the expectation that the company will turn around and will be able to make good its remittance defaults after they have occurred, if the company nonetheless fails without paying its tax debts, it is no defence for the directors to say that the risk that they took would have been taken by a reasonable person. The subsection 227.1(3) defence only applies if it can be demonstrated that the directors exercised the care, diligence and skill that a reasonably prudent business person in comparable circumstances would have exercised to prevent a future default.

[74] Whether directors have exercised due diligence to prevent such failures from occurring has both a legal and a factual aspect. As matter of law, the liability of a director for unremitted source deductions and G.S.T. does not crystallise until the conditions prescribed by subsection 227.1(2) have been satisfied. Moreover, if the remittances are made in full, albeit late, the directors will not be liable for the company's previous failure to remit.

Digitized by Google

[75] However, the fact that, before crystallisation, the liability of the director is inchoate is not incompatible with a finding that there was a failure to remit when no remittance was made on the date prescribed in the relevant legislation as the date when the remittance was due. Thus, for example, subsection 108(1) of the Income Tax Regulations, C.R.C. 1978, c. 945 provides that amounts deducted from employees' wages in a month pursuant to subsection 153(1) of the Act shall be remitted to the Receiver General on or before the fifteenth day of the following month.

[76] Accordingly, in my view, the directors of Abel could not have obtained the benefit of subsection 227.1(3) on the basis of an assertion that they had continued the business, reasonably relying on Mr. Humphreys' advice that it could be turned around in eighteen months' time by which time the economy should have improved. Even if the company successfully positioned itself to take advantage of the economic upturn and became profitable, it would only have become able to discharge its accrued liability and to prevent future failures to remit. Following this advice could not have prevented any failures to remit that occurred prior the revival of the company's fortunes, even if the advice had proved to be correct.

[77] Given the limitations placed upon them by the bank's de facto control of the company's finances, I am satisfied that, on the facts of this case, the directors exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent failures to remit that would have been shown by a reasonably prudent person in comparable circumstances. That Ms. McKinnon continued to prepare remittance cheques, admittedly without a realistic hope that the bank would honour them all, also indicates that the directors were not unmindful of the company's debt to Revenue Canada.

[78] Much more important, in my view, were Mr. Humphreys' continued efforts to find a new investor, given his belief that the company could then quickly be turned around. He told the directors that he was confident that a new investor could be found. Indeed, he identified potential investors within two weeks of being hired, spoke with twelve people who expressed an interest in investing in Abel and produced one who was willing to invest, but who proved unacceptable to the bank for reasons that are not disclosed.

[79] As long as these efforts were being made in good faith by a person with a successful track record in rescuing companies in the construction industry, the directors of Abel could reasonably say that, if an investor were found and approved by the bank, the company would obtain bonding and be in a position to bid on lucrative contracts, which might well have persuaded the bank to increase its line of credit again or, at least, to honour Abel's next remittance cheque.

[80] Hence, if Mr Humphreys had succeeded in finding an investor acceptable to the bank, the failures to remit might have been prevented. The fact that, in the event, he was not successful and the failures occurred, does not render the directors liable if they had made reasonable efforts to prevent them. The Court would be reluctant to second guess the likely efficacy of the directors' efforts to prevent failures to remit from occurring.

[81] However, it would not have been open to the directors to have relied indefinitely on Mr. Humphreys' advice if there was no indication of potential investor interest in the company. The company's viability and the likelihood of its attracting new investors would have had to be reassessed from time to time in order for the directors successfully to invoke the due diligence defence provided by subsection 227.1(3).

Digitized by Google

CONCLUSIONS

[82] For these reasons, I have concluded that the directors satisfied the due diligence test in subsections 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act and 353(3) of the Excise Tax Act, and would therefore dismiss the appeals and the applications for judicial review with one set of costs, including taxable disbursements in each of the matters.

"John M. Evans" J.A.

"I agree
A.J. Stone J.A."

CONCURRING REASONS FOR JUDGMENT ROTHSTEIN J.A.

[1] I am in general agreement with the reasons of Evans J.A. However, I wish to emphasize that whether the due diligence defence will be successful is fact-driven in each case, i.e. always comparing what the directors did to prevent the failure with what a reasonably prudent person would have done in comparable circumstances. I agree with Evans J.A. that the due diligence defence is established on the facts of this case. However, I would prefer not to hypothesize as to what other facts or circumstances might or might not provide grounds for a successful due diligence defence.

[2] I agree with the disposition of the matter as set forth in the reasons of Evans J. A.

"Marshall Rothstein"
J.A.

Normand Cadrin v. Her Majesty The Queen, A-112-97, Inside vs Outside Directors and Their Differing Actions

DÉCARY J.A.

[1] According to the respondent, the appellant, in his capacity as director of the Société Elzéar Plourde Ltée during the period at issue, became jointly and severally liable under section 227.1 of the Income Tax Act, S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 63, as amended (the Act), where a corporation fails to deduct or withhold certain amounts at the source. It is clear that under subsection 3 of this section, "[a] director is not liable . . . where he exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances".

[2] The Judge of the Tax Court of Canada found the appellant liable in a decision[1] issued before this Court clarified the interpretation to be given to subsection 227.1(3) of the Act in Soper v. Canada, [1998] 1 F.C. 124 (C.A.). In Soper, Mr. Justice Robertson made a distinction between "inside directors" ("meaning those involved in the day-to-day management of the company and who influence the conduct of its business affairs") who "will have the most difficulty in establishing the due diligence defence" (at p. 156) and the "outside directors" for whom, "unless there is reason for suspicion", it is permissible "to rely on the day-to-day corporate managers to be responsible for the payment of debt obligations such as those owing to Her Majesty" and who have a duty to act when they "[obtain] information, or [become] aware of facts, which might lead [them] to conclude that there is, or could reasonably be, a potential problem with remittances" (at p. 160). Robertson J.A. added, "Put differently, it is indeed incumbent upon an outside director to take positive steps if he or she knew, or ought to have known, that the corporation could be experiencing a remittance problem".

Digitized by Google

[3] First, counsel for the appellant argued that the simple fact that an outside director is unaware and does not take steps to learn of the duties which the law imposes on him is sufficient, according to Soper, to exonerate him from all liability. This argument is without merit. Robertson J.A. took great care to clarify that "total passivity and irresponsibility" are no excuse, "that the law today can scarcely be said to embrace the principle that the less a director does or knows or cares, the less likely it is that he or she will be held liable" and that "the statutory standard of care will surely be interpreted and applied in a manner which encourages responsibility" (at p. 146). It is true that the standard of the reasonable person "adjusts to the circumstances and to the individual qualities of the actor" (at p. 152) and that "more is expected of individuals with superior qualifications" (at p. 155), but the fact remains that the law requires a minimum amount of care, however variable, and that a total lack of care does not meet the requirements of the law. If the appellant's only excuse were total passivity based on total ignorance, he would not escape liability under subsection 3 of section 227.1.

[4] Second, counsel for the appellant argued that even if ignorance is no excuse (as we have just stated), it is nonetheless not fatal. As soon as an outside director does, without knowing as it were, what he should have done under the circumstances had he been aware of the situation, he would escape all liability.

[5] This argument is sound in the instant case. The outside director who gets involved to the extent of his role in the business and his abilities meets the standard of care in principle. If he ensures that the business is viable before investing money in it, if he surrounds himself with reliable and competent people who undertake the day-to-day management of the business, if he stays generally informed about what is happening, if nothing happens which should arouse suspicion about the payment of the corporation's liabilities, if he acts quickly when problems arise, he should not as a general rule be held liable.

[6] In our view, had the Trial Judge been aware of the criteria this Court has since set in Soper and particularly the different approach to be taken depending on whether it is an inside or outside director, he would necessarily have come to the conclusion that the appellant was not liable.

[7] The appellant was in fact just a silent partner, who, moreover, functioned from a distance, as his own affairs were conducted from Quebec City and those of the business in which he had invested, from Jonquière. He had taken all of the business and accounting precautions before investing and had every reason to rely on the day-to-day management which his partner had undertaken. He regularly inquired about the affairs of the business and was unaware of any problems. The Judge stated that at the end of 1990, [TRANSLATION] "the management of the company . . . seemed excellent and very competent" and that the managing partner "always insisted that the company was in an excellent financial position". The Judge also held that it was only at the beginning of December 1991 that the appellant found out through his bank statements that for the first time, the corporation had not paid him the monthly loan payment and he learned from his partner that the company was "in difficulty". The appellant reacted immediately. He summoned his partner at once to Quebec City for a meeting with his accountant and an audit of the financial statements. On the day at issue, namely December 12, 1991, the accountant audited the corporation"s books and stated that it was headed for a loss of $200,000.00 at the end of December 1991. (The Trial Judge erred in finding that this loss occurred in February 1991.) The appellant then tried to convince members of his family to help him to save the business, but in vain. On December 16, 1991, the appellant went to Jonquière to meet the manager of the bank with which the corporation did business. When the corporation"s vulnerable financial position was confirmed, he contacted his lawyers in Quebec City who immediately dictated to him a letter of resignation as director.

Digitized by Google

[8] It also appears from various documents and testimony that in his findings of fact, the Trial Judge did not take into consideration that for several months, the managing partner had hidden certain problems from the appellant and had even misappropriated funds in the amount of approximately $155,000.00 in the fall of 1991.

[9] In these circumstances, knowing that the appellant"s alleged liability is for the months of September, November and December 1991 (and curiously not October 1991), the Trial Judge could not find that the appellant demonstrated culpable passivity. The Judge dealt with the matter as if the appellant was an inside director, which he was not.

[10] The appeal will be allowed, the judgment of the Tax Court of Canada will be reversed, the appellant"s appeal of the assessment issued by the Minister of National Revenue for 1991 will be allowed and the assessment in the amount of $28,985.00 will be set aside. The appellant is entitled to costs before this Court and the Tax Court of Canada.

Robert Décary J.A.

Alexander Bruce Cameron v. Her Majesty The Queen, A-763-99, A Properly Complying Outside Director with Adverse Management

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

(Delivered from the Bench at Calgary, Alberta, on Tuesday, June 19, 2001) LINDEN J.A.

The main issue in this case is whether the Tax Court Judge correctly held the appellant, a director of a corporation, liable for the failure of the corporation to make certain tax remittances during his tenure in office, pursuant to subsection 227.1(1) of the Income Tax Act.

The appellant contends that the Tax Court Judge erred and that he is not liable for the failure to remit because he exercised due diligence with regard to his responsibilities in accordance with subsection 227.1(3) which reads:

227.1 (3) A director is not liable for a failure under subsection (1) where the director exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstance.

In our respectful view, the Tax Court Judge did not correctly apply the jurisprudence of this Court as outlined in Soper [1998] I.F.C.R. 124; Smith [2001] F.C.J. 448; Worrell [2000] F.C.J. 1730, and Corsano [1999] 3 F.C.

173. First, he appears to have held the appellant to a stricter standard of care than the statute and jurisprudence require. He stated that the appellant had a "duty to prevent defalcation (default, according to the brief of the Crown) under the circumstance." That is not the law; his duty was only to use reasonable care to prevent defalcation (or default). As Justice Sharlow explained in Smith, supra;

"A director is required only to act reasonably in the circumstance. The fact that his efforts are unsuccessful does not establish that he has failed to act reasonably."

She concluded that the standard is reasonableness, "not perfection."

Moreover, the Tax Court Judge held that the appellant took "no positive action to set up or place into existence controls to account for remittances and the ongoing use of any controls." Although the appellant made "some efforts to protect Revenue Canada's arrears", he said, these were "immaterial." Here too, however, he erred, because, although positive steps are required of directors, they need only be reasonable, positive steps, not foolproof ones.

Digitized by Google

According to these principles and based on largely uncontested facts, the appellant, in our view, complied with his legal obligation under subsection 227.1(3), that is, the objective-subjective standard to act as a reasonably prudent person would have in the circumstance of this case.
True, the appellant was a lawyer, but his role as a director of the corporation was primarily to help raise money for it through a public offering. He was not a hands-on person involved in the day-to-day operation of the company, but he was concerned mainly with general policy. He was not a signing officer and had only limited influence on management. He was, therefore, more an outside director than an inside one. While these facts certainly do not exempt him from his legal obligation, something he himself recognized, they are relevant matters in assessing whether he behaved in a reasonably prudent manner.
Let us look more closely at his conduct. Early in his tenure of office, and on many occasions thereafter, the appellant, because he was aware of some problems, frequently asked management about the status of the tax remittances and he was always assured that they were in order. He unwisely relied on these false assurances; in fact, the remittances were not in order as management professed.
In September of 1994, documentary evidence emerged to demonstrate that management had not been truthful and that past remittance amounts were still owing and that current obligations were still not being met. Included in this documentation were an auditor's report, draft financial statements, and a letter from Revenue Canada dated September 19, 1994 to the effect that arrears of $205,000 were owing.
As a result of this, the appellant, Cameron, and his fellow directors decided to appoint Mr. McArthur, an accountant who had done a report about the corporation's financial status, as a director of the company and Chief Financial Officer to correct and oversee these matters. In addition, a certified management accountant, Mr. Solomon was appointed to be specifically responsible for remittance compliance. As a result of these efforts, it appeared as though matters were brought under control and that remittances were being made as required by law.
In addition, as part of this clean up operation, on September 28, 1994 an assignment agreement was entered into between the corporation and Revenue Canada, whereby the expected proceeds of a fire insurance claim with the Zurich Insurance Company were assigned to Revenue Canada up to an amount $215,000 in return for the assignee's agreement not to take steps to enforce the debt owing, that is a "standstill agreement".
A further step was later taken by the Board of Directors on March 23, 1995 to set aside monies as a second potential source for paying the overdue remittances. Out of the monies received from the public offering $213,000 was earmarked to repay the Alberta Opportunities Corporation and the arrears of source deductions. None of these funds were to be disbursed without the written authorization of one of the outside directors, which included Mr. Cameron.
At the meeting, however, it also became known that there were arrears of $25,000 in current source deductions. The Board directed that these arrears be paid immediately. The Board decided to meet again on April 12, 1995.
It was at the April 12, 1995 meeting that the appellant and the other board members learned that the $25,000 had not been paid as ordered. A cheque had been issued, but it was returned N.S.F. Another cheque covering the amount was later issued for $38,703.09 on May 4, 1995. Surprisingly, the April 12, 1995 board meeting was mistakenly told that the source deductions were current.
At this same April 12 meeting, the appellant learned that management had not complied with the board's direction to protect $213,000 from the proceeds of the public offering and that $113,000 of it had been spent without the consent of any outside director. This caused Mr. McArthur to resign from the Board. The appellant understandably became angry, decided to resign that evening and eventually did resign as of June 6, 1995.

Digitized by Google

These uncontested facts indicate that the appellant was not passive. He did as much as he could reasonably be expected to do in order to protect the interests of Revenue Canada. He may not have been as attentive, as skeptical and as assertive as he might have been, especially in allowing himself to be misled by management. But it is not easy to see what more he was required to do in the circumstances to comply with his director's duty to be reasonably prudent in the circumstances.

In the light of this conclusion, there is no need to deal with the issues concerning the allocation of the various amounts received by Revenue Canada from the corporation and the other various sources.

The appeal should be allowed, with costs, and the assessment should be vacated on the basis that the appellant met the standard of due diligence required of him in these circumstances, according to subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act.

"Allen M. Linden" J.A.

Thomas Gerald Liddle v. Her Majesty the Queen, 2011 FCA 159, The Possibility of another Dominant Director Seemingly Interfering Not Enough To Absolve Duty of Care

STRATAS J.A.

[1] This is an appeal from the judgment of Justice Diane Campbell of the Tax Court of Canada: 2009 TCC 451.

[2] The Tax Court judge found that the appellant was liable, as a director of AquaNorth Farms Inc., to pay certain tax amounts that AquaNorth Farms Inc. should have paid but did not, along with penalties and interest. Specifically, AquaNorth Farms Inc. failed to remit GST under the Excise Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. E-
15. It also failed to make payroll source deductions under the Canada Pension Plan, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-8 and the Employment Insurance Act, S.C. 1996, c. 23.

The finding of liability

[3] Before the Tax Court judge were two main questions, both of which she determined against the appellant:

Was the appellant a director of AquaNorth Farms Inc. at the time that that corporation was required to remit GST and payroll source deductions?

The Tax Court judge answered this in the affirmative, finding that the appellant was a director at the relevant time. Therefore, the appellant was liable to pay the amounts that AquaNorth Farms Inc. should have paid: see the Canada Pension Plan, supra, subsection 21.1(1), the Employment Insurance Act, supra, subsection 83(1) and the Excise Tax Act, supra, subsection 323(1).

Did the appellant exercise due diligence? Specifically, did he act with “the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent [AquaNorth Farms Inc.’s] failure [to remit GST and payroll source deductions to the Minister] that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances?” (See subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985,
c. 1 (5th Supp.), made applicable to the appellant by subsection 21.1(2) of the Canada Pension Plan, supra, and subsection 83(2) of the Employment Insurance Act, supra; see also subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act, supra.)

Digitized by Google

The Tax Court judge answered this in the negative, finding that the appellant had not exercised due diligence.
[4] In answering these two main questions, the Tax Court judge made a number of factual findings. One important factual finding was that AquaNorth Farms Inc. became subject to the tax liabilities while the appellant still had effective control of AquaNorth's finances and daily operations. Another important factual finding was that the appellant took no proactive steps to ensure that AquaNorth remitted to the Minister amounts that it was deducting from employee paycheques and GST amounts that it was collecting from its customers. In this Court, the onus is on the appellant to demonstrate that the Tax Court judge's factual findings are vitiated by palpable and overriding error: Housen v. Nikolaisen, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235, 2002 SCC
33. We are not satisfied that any such error is present. Indeed, the factual findings of the Tax Court judge are well-supported by the evidentiary record.
[5] We see no legal error in the Tax Court judge's consideration of whether the appellant was a director at the relevant time. On the question of due diligence, the Tax Court judge carefully considered the legal test for due diligence that should be applied to the evidence before us. She adopted the tests set out by this Court in Soper v. The Queen, 97 D.T.C. 5407 at page 5416 and Hartnell v. The Queen, 2008 D.T.C. 6173 at paragraph 12. Here, likewise, we see no legal error on the part of the Tax Court judge.
The involvement of another director
[6] The appellant submitted that another director of AquaNorth Farms Inc. was heavily involved at the times in question. Even if that is the case, by itself that does not give the appellant any defence. The express words of the provisions of subsection 21.1(1) of the Canada Pension Plan, subsection 83(1) of the Employment Insurance Act, and subsection 323(1) of the Excise Tax Act, make the appellant "jointly and severally, or solidarily, liable" for the full amounts that AquaNorth Farms Inc. failed to remit to the Minister.
The Tax Court judge's failure to grant an adjournment
[7] In the Tax Court, the appellant requested that the trial be adjourned under section 137 of the Tax Court of Canada Rules (General Procedure), SOR/90-688a for three reasons: he wanted to obtain legal counsel to represent him, he was not aware that a particular individual would be called as a witness against him, and he had not received some information he sought from the Minister. The Tax Court judge refused the adjournment. Among other things, the Tax Court judge found that some of the comments he made during his request for an adjournment were misleading.
[8] We note that adjournments are discretionary matters related to trial management and, as a result, this Court will interfere only where a trial judge is shown to be clearly wrong: Superior Filter Recycling Inc. v. The Queen, 2006 DTC 6491 at paragraph 2; Wagg v. Canada, 2003 FCA 303 at paragraphs 21 and 26. In our view, no such error has been demonstrated in this case. It is apparent to us that the Tax Court judge was mindful of the need for the appellant to have a fair trial. Further, there were a number of reasons supporting the Tax Court judge's discretionary refusal to grant the appellant an adjournment. These include the following:
The appellant had ample opportunity to retain counsel before the trial.
Absent a specific request during discoveries, there is no requirement in the Rules for parties to exchange the names of their respective witnesses before trial. Before trial, the appellant was notified by the Crown that it would be calling two witnesses but the appellant did not ask the Crown who they were.
The appellant could have pursued his requests for further information by various means in a timely way under the Rules and the Access to Information Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. A-1, but did not do so.

Digitized by Google

The misleading nature of the comments the appellant made during his request for an adjournment.
Disposition
[9] For the foregoing reasons, we shall dismiss the appeal, with costs. "David Stratas"
J.A.

Gordon E. Smith v. Her Majesty The Queen, 2001 FCA 84, a case of Outside Turning to Inside Director and Failing Financial Resources

SHARLOW J.A.
REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

Gordon E. Smith has been assessed under subsection 227.1(1) of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.) and subsection 323(1) of the Excise Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. E-15 for amounts owed by a corporation of which he was a director. He appealed the assessments to the Tax Court of Canada under the informal procedure on a number of grounds, including the due diligence defence. His appeal was dismissed on February 9, 2000 (reported as Smith v. Her Majesty the Queen, 2000 D.T.C. 1888, [2000] 2 C.T.C. 2494, 2000 G.T.C. 758, [2000] G.S.T.C. 12, 16 C.B.R. (4th) 289). Mr. Smith now seeks judicial review of the Tax Court decision.
Mr. Smith did not include a transcript of the Tax Court proceedings in the application record. He indicated that the transcript was "unavailable". It appears that he asked for a transcript and was told by a Tax Court official that the Tax Court did not have one. As a self-represented litigant who is not a lawyer, Mr. Smith apparently was unaware that if the proceedings had been recorded, as they apparently were in this case, he could have ordered a transcript himself and taken steps to have the transcript included in the application record. Instead, Mr. Smith included in his application record an affidavit in which he made certain assertions about the oral evidence given at trial.
Counsel for the Crown did not cross-examine Mr. Smith on his affidavit. Nor did she produce a transcript of the proceedings or include in the respondent's record an affidavit that contradicted Mr. Smith's version of the facts. In these circumstances, I am inclined to accept Mr. Smith's assertions about the oral evidence that was before the Tax Court Judge. I also note that many of the statements in Mr. Smith's affidavit are legal arguments that should have been in the memorandum of argument rather than the affidavit, and I have treated them accordingly.
I turn now to the merits of this application. The assessments challenged by Mr. Smith were issued under subsection 227.1(1) of the Income Tax Act and subsection 323(1) of the Excise Tax Act, which read as follows:

Mr. Smith has raised a number of issues, but it is necessary to consider only one. That is whether he met the due diligence test in subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act and subsection 323(3) of the Excise Tax Act. Those provisions read as follows:
The directors' liability provisions were enacted to strengthen the Crown's ability to enforce the statutory obligation imposed on certain taxpayers to remit taxes payable by other parties, such as tax withheld at source from wages paid to employees, and net

Digitized by Google

GST collected from customers. Normally, the Crown's remedies against a corporation that fails to remit these third party taxes would be limited to the corporation's assets. That is a necessary incident of separate corporate personality. However, it was perceived that a corporation, particularly a corporation in financial difficulty, might prefer to default on its obligation to remit taxes, in order to satisfy creditors whose claims were more immediately pressing. It was apparently thought necessary to enact legislation that would deter corporations from making such a choice.

Consequently, subsection 227.1(1) of the Income Tax Act and subsection 323(1) of the Excise Tax Act were enacted to impose liability, subject to certain conditions, on the directors of a corporation that had failed to remit tax collected from others: Soper v. Canada, [1998] 1 F.C. 124, 215 N.R. 372, 149 D.L.R. (4th) 297, [1997] 3 C.T.C. 242, 97 D.T.C. 5407 (F.C.A.). This is based on the presumption that a decision by a corporation to default on its remittance obligations would originate with the directors: Kalef v. Canada (1996), 194 N.R. 39, 39 C.B.R. (3d) 1, [1996] 2 C.T.C. 1, 96 D.T.C. 6132 (F.C.A.).

The obligations of corporate directors under these provisions are subject to a number of statutory preconditions (subsection 227.1(2) of the Income Tax Act and subsection 323(2) of the Excise Tax Act) that are not in issue in this case. In addition, a director may have recourse to the statutory due diligence defence in subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act and subsection 323(2) of the Excise Tax Act.

The Soper decision, supra, established that the standard of care described in the statutory due diligence defence is substantially the same as the common law standard of care in Re City Equitable Fire Insurance Co., [1925] Ch. 407 (Eng. C.A.). It follows that what may reasonably be expected of a director for the purposes of subsection 227.1(1) of the Income Tax Act and subsection 323(1) of the Excise Tax Act depends upon the facts of the case, and has both an objective and a subjective aspect.

The subjective aspect of the standard of care applicable to a particular director will depend on the director's personal attributes, including knowledge and experience. Generally, a person who is experienced in business and financial matters is likely to be held to a higher standard than a person with no business acumen or experience whose presence on the board of directors reflects nothing more, for example, than a family connection. However, the due diligence defence probably will not assist a director who is oblivious to the statutory obligations of directors, or who ignores a problem that was apparent to the director or should have been apparent to a reasonably prudent person in comparable circumstances (Hanson v. Canada (2000) 260 N.R. 79, [2000] 4 C.T.C. 215, 2000 D.T.C. 6564 (F.C.A.)).

In assessing the objective reasonableness of the conduct of a director, the factors to be taken into account may include the size, nature and complexity of the business carried on by the corporation, and its customs and practices. The larger and more complex the business, the more reasonable it may be for directors to allocate responsibilities among themselves, or to leave certain matters to corporate staff and outside advisers, and to rely on them.

The inherent flexibility of the due diligence defence may result in a situation where a higher standard of care is imposed on some directors of a corporation than on others. For example, it may be appropriate to impose a higher standard on an "inside director" (for example, a director with a practice of hands-on management) than an "outside director" (such as a director who has only superficial knowledge of and involvement in the affairs of the corporation).

Digitized by Google

That is particularly so if it is established that the outside director reasonably relied on assurances from the inside directors that the corporation's tax remittance obligations were being met. See, for example, Cadrin v. Canada (1998), 240 N.R. 354, [1999] 3 C.T.C. 366, 99 D.T.C. 5079 (F.C.A.).

In certain circumstances, the fact that a corporation is in financial difficulty, and thus may be subject to a greater risk of default in tax remittances than other corporations, may be a factor that raises the standard of care. For example, a director who is aware of the corporation's financial difficulty and who deliberately decides to finance the corporation's operations with unremitted source deductions may be unable to rely on the due diligence defence (Ruffo v. Canada, 2000 D.T.C. 6317 (F.C.A.)). In every case, however, it is important to bear in mind that the standard is reasonableness, not perfection.

Against this statutory background, it is necessary to summarize the facts of this case and to consider how the Tax Court Judge applied the relevant principles.

Mr. Smith was a director of ECO Superwood (B.C.) Ltd. (ECO) from February of 1993 until at least October 31, 1995. It is not clear when he ceased to be a director, but nothing turns on that termination date.

The Crown asserts that between November 1, 1993 and October 31, 1995, ECO became liable for unremitted employee source deductions and unremitted net GST. On that basis, Mr. Smith was assessed under subsection 227.1(1) of the Income Tax Act and subsection 323(1) of the Excise Tax Act for a total of $27,385.12, consisting of unremitted employee source deductions of $7,036.15 for October, 1995, plus $6.00 interest, and unremitted net GST of $17,569.05 for the period November 1, 1993 to October 31, 1995, plus $1,434.14 interest and $1,339.78 in penalties.

In February of 1993, when Mr. Smith first became a director of ECO, he was a high school teacher with a Master of Arts degree. He retired from his teaching career in June of 1995. He had no business training and no business experience before the events that led to this appeal. Mr. Smith was a minority shareholder of ECO, having invested approximately $10,000. He made the investment because he felt that ECO had a good and useful product.

By 1993, ECO had faced some business difficulties that led to discord between the majority and minority shareholders. Mr. Smith was aware of that and was also aware that the ECO was experiencing financial difficulties. He was elected to the board of directors in order to act as a liaison between the two groups and to try to restore harmony. In his role as director, he was not expected to participate in the day to day operations of ECO, nor was he expected to understand the details of its financial affairs.

At the outset, Mr. Smith sought legal advice about the legal duties of directors, and was generally aware of his obligation to exercise reasonable care and skill. He also learned about his obligations to ensure that ECO fulfilled its obligation to remit source deductions. At the first board meeting after his appointment, April 6, 1993, he proposed a motion that priority be given to the payment of Revenue Canada accounts. That motion was approved.

There is evidence that the directors were presented with reports at every meeting which led Mr. Smith to believe that the Revenue Canada remittances were not in default. The Crown appears to have accepted this, at least in so far as the obligations of ECO to pay net GST prior to June of 1995 were concerned. In summarizing the Crown's arguments, the Tax Court Judge says at paragraph 59:

Digitized by Google

The Appellant [Mr. Smith] knew from the start that there were difficulties existing in the Company and that it was behind in source deductions. He may not have known that the Company was behind in GST remittances until June of 1995.

For the period ending in June of 1995, Mr. Smith was not assessed for unremitted source deductions, but he was assessed for unremitted GST even though he had no knowledge of ECO's failure to remit GST.

The Tax Court Judge found that Mr. Smith was an "inside director" at the time of his election. As I read his reasons for decision, he based that conclusion on the following facts (paragraphs 123 and 124):

He [Mr. Smith] was an educated man possessing a Master of Arts Degree, although he was not in business and in spite of the fact that until the time he became associated with the Company he was unfamiliar with such business affairs. This is not a case where the Appellant was unaware of his position nor did he become a director reluctantly (even though he did indicate that he may have been pushed into it) and the actions that he took in allowing himself to be appointed as a director showed that he became so deliberately.

Before he became a director he inquired of the legal duties of a director from a lawyer. He checked the provisions regarding a director's responsibility in the statute. He admitted himself that when he became a director in February of 1993 he was aware of the financial difficulties facing the Company. When he attended the first meeting of the Board of Directors he asked about the duties and responsibilities of a director and was authorized to consult the Company's lawyer about it. He was aware of the fact that a director had at least "to act at all times with the care, diligence and skill expected of a competent person in the circumstances."

In my respectful view, the Tax Court Judge appears to have misdirected himself when he determined that Mr. Smith was an "inside director" at the time of his appointment because of his education, his willingness to act as a director, and his efforts to understand his obligations. Generally, for purposes of the due diligence defence, "inside directors" are those who are "involved in the day-to-day management of the company and who influence the conduct of its business affairs" (Soper, supra, paragraph 43). Those words simply do not describe the role of Mr. Smith when he first became a director. The facts that are relevant to the determination of whether a person is an "inside director" relate to the tasks that the person undertakes as a director and the degree of the person's involvement in the business of the corporation.

This error in the characterization of Mr. Smith's initial role as a director seems to have led the Tax Court Judge to err further by imposing a standard of care that was too high. Contrary to the conclusion of the Tax Court Judge, it seems to me that as an outside director, it was reasonable for Mr. Smith to do exactly what he did, which was to propose a motion to keep the Revenue Canada accounts current, and thereafter to rely on the inside directors and officers of the company to ensure that those instructions were followed.

The Tax Court Judge suggested that Mr. Smith should have done more. He should have sought more reports from corporate officials, asked more questions about actual balances and payments, or even had himself appointed as signing authority and monitored the payments himself. In my view, those are not steps that could reasonably have been expected of Mr. Smith, given his limited role as a director and the circumstances in which he took on that role. I conclude, therefore, that the due diligence defence is made out for the period up to and including June of 1995.

The situation changed in June of 1995, when Mr. Smith's role in the affairs of ECO changed from that of an outside director to that of an inside director. At that time, ECO was in serious financial decline and Mr. Smith attempted to assist in various attempts to keep it afloat and for that purpose became more active in the affairs of ECO. His more extensive involvement in the financial affairs of the corporation made him an inside director of ECO after June of 1995. He remained so at least until the end of October 1995 when the affairs of ECO were taken over by a receiver. He has not been assessed for any obligation that arose after that time.

Digitized by Google

It is clear from the evidence that by June of 1995 the corporation's financial resources were so depleted that there was little that could have been done to meet its remittance obligations. Despite the difficulties, however, Mr. Smith was not idle. In fact, the corporation's remittance obligations with respect to employee source deductions were met, except for the month of October. There also remained outstanding some unremitted GST for the period from June to October, 1995.

During that period Mr. Smith spent considerable effort in trying to ascertain the amount of the corporation's liabilities, and thought that he had done so, having relied on corporate officers and also on information that he received from Revenue Canada. As it turned out, that information was not accurate, but Mr. Smith cannot have been expected to know that. Given his limited experience in tax and business affairs, it was reasonable for him to accept that the information given to him was reliable.

He also learned that the corporation was about to receive a federal government research grant in an amount that, as best he could determine, would have been sufficient to cover the corporation's obligations. He went to great lengths to attempt to ensure that the grant would be applied against the corporation's obligations. That did not happen, but there is nothing in the record to suggest that Mr. Smith was to blame for that. If there were difficulties within the various government departments that made it difficult or impossible to accede to Mr. Smith's request for the grant to be used to pay the corporation's obligations, that is not apparent from the record.

The Tax Court Judge appears to have recognized the efforts made by Mr. Smith in and after June of 1995, but he noted, at paragraph 138:

The actions that he took did not have the effect of ensuring that Revenue Canada received any of the monies here.

and, at paragraph 142:

The Court is satisfied that the actions taken by the Appellant did nothing to prevent the failure.

It appears to me that these comments reveal another error in the Tax Court Judge's application of the due diligence defence. A director is required only to act reasonably in the circumstances. The fact that his efforts are unsuccessful does not establish that he has failed to act reasonably.

For these reasons, I would allow this application for judicial review with costs. The decision of the Tax Court Judge should be quashed and the matter referred back to the Tax Court with a direction that Mr. Smith's appeal be allowed and the assessments vacated.

Karen R. Sharlow J.A.

"I agree

Marc Noël J.A."

"I agree

John M. Evans J.A."

Jean Ruffo v. The Minister Of National Revenue, A-429-97, A Clear Case of Improper Shifting of Financial Priorities with the Proper Result

LÉTOURNEAU, J.A.

[1] The appellant has failed to persuade us that Lamarre-Proulx J. of the Tax Court of

Digitized by Google

Canada misconstrued and misapplied the legal principles applicable in this case,[1] which were more fully developed by this Court in Soper v. Canada,[2] Drover and Her Majesty the Queen,[3] Cadrin and Her Majesty the Queen,[4] and Wheeliker v. R.[5]

[2] Clearly, the appellant, who was the chief executive officer and a director of Les Services Alimentaires le Banquetier Inc., prolonged the company"s agony until its death through bankruptcy on May 19, 1993 by partially financing it with the statutory deductions he was supposed to levy on the employees" wages and remit to the Receiver General of Canada.

[3] This is clearly apparent from the following extracts from the appellant"s testimony:

Q. So this was a report that you received, you said, every month, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. On different accounts of the company?
A. Yes, I have to say yes.
...
Q. So are you in a position to say...
A. Yes.
Q. ... whether the thirty thousand and ninety-one ($30,091) is in fact owing?
A. Yes, in fact, that was the amount owing.
Q. So, it was during ninety-two (92) that the company stopped making the remittances of federal deductions at source, is that correct?
A. Yes.
Q. And you were able to observe, when you were balancing the monthly books, that in fact there were deductions that were not being remitted?
A. Yes.
Q. What was your... All right, you were operating with a... you had some cash-flow problems, is that correct?
A. Yes.
Q. What strategy did you...
A. Sorry, yes?
Q. What strategy or what was your policy for the payment of the accounts so as to continue operating the company, were all the accounts being paid on an equal footing or were there some suppliers or were there certain debts that were paid more urgently?
A. The two accounts that were paid unquestionably, in priority, were the wages and the raw materials we needed in order to make the products.
Q. What were...
A. When I say in priority it was according to the priorities established by the suppliers. There are some suppliers with whom we had a much larger line of credit than with others.
Q. All right. And why did you give priority at that point to the payment of those two accounts, that is, the employees and the suppliers?
A. That was the only way to stay alive.
Q. So, you were aware, month after month, that there were some deductions at source that were unpaid, that you made the decision not to pay them in order to continue the operation of the company, is that correct?
A. Completely. Can I make a comment, however?

4. Furthermore, as of July 15, 1992, the appellant was hoping, for example, to get $200,000.00 pursuant to an oral cooperative agreement with Homard Gidney Lobsters Ltd. But the only means of redress appearing on the company"s books, if this amount was paid at that time, which was not the case, consisted of paying the accumulated overdue accounts without any steps being taken to secure the payment of the ongoing deductions and preventing a future breach of this obligation.[6] In fact, no remittance was made in accordance with this recovery plan and the failures to deduct continued in the following months while the firm was electing to pay the other creditors.

Digitized by Google

[5] As Vinelott J. said, in relation to the duty of a company manager to make the aforementioned deductions and remittances:[7]

The directors of a company ought to conduct its affairs in such a way that it can meet these liabilities when they fall due, not only because they are not moneys earned by its trading activities, which the company is entitled to treat as part of its cash flow... but, more importantly, because the directors ought not to use moneys which the company is currently liable to pay over to the Crown to finance its current trading activities.

[6] The appellant"s duty as a director was to anticipate and prevent the failure to pay the sums owing and not to commit such failure or perpetuate it as he did from March 1992 on in the hope that at the end of the day the firm would again become profitable or there would be enough money, even if it were wound up, to pay all the creditors.[8]

[7] While a director may, under subsection 227.1(3) of the Income Tax Act, be relieved of personal liability for unpaid deductions by showing that he acted with diligence, the appellant has not, in the circumstances, demonstrated the requisite diligence.

[8] For these reasons, the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Gilles Létourneau
J.A.

1- Ruffo v. R., [1988] 2 C.T.C. 2203 (T.C.C.).

2- [1998] 1 F.C. 124 (F.C.A.).

3- F.C.A. no. A-331-97, May 13, 1998.

4- F.C.A. No. A-112-97, December 17, 1998.

5- [1999] 2 C.T.C. 395.

6- Appeal record, vol. II, p. 178.

7- Re Stanford Services Ltd., [1987] B.C.L.C. 607, at p. 617.

8- Wheeliker v. R., [1999] 2 C.T.C. 395, at p. 415.

Jane Hanson v. Her Majesty The Queen, A-792-96, Ignorance of the Law Not Equal to Proper Conduct: The Need to Remedy the Ignorance

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT OF THE COURT
(Delivered from the Bench at Toronto, Ontario on Monday, October 2, 2000)

LÉTOURNEAU J.A.

[1] The Tax Court of Canada ruled that the appellant, as a majority shareholder and director of the Telfer's Restaurant Corporation (874990 Ontario Limited) ("Corporation"), was liable under subsection 227.1(1) of the Income Tax Act ("Act") for the amount of unpaid source deductions, interest and penalties payable by the Corporation in bankruptcy.

[2] At pages 5 and 6 of his decision, the learned Tax Court Judge made credibility findings which were adverse to the appellant as to the extent of her knowledge and experience in business matters generally and in this particular business. We cannot say that these findings are capricious or unsupported by the evidence and, in any event, we are not in a position nor are we willing to second-guess him in this respect.

Digitized by Google

[3] In addition, he concluded that the appellant knew that she was a director and that she had been so appointed in order to secure for her son and family the majority on the Board of directors. He was also of the view that the appellant was not aware of her responsibilities, but that she made no effort, and failed to take any step, to find out what they were. He quoted with approval this statement of Bonner T.C.C.J. in Black v. The Queen, 93 D.T.C. 1212, at page 1215:

The appellant cannot take shelter under subsection 227.1(3) by claiming that his actions met the standard of a reasonably prudent person who was ill-informed as to the requirements of the Act. A reasonably prudent person who is aware that he is a director but who is uncertain as to the extent of his responsibilities as director is under a duty to at least attempt to discover what is required of him and to discharge that duty.

Nothing in that language [subsection 227.1(3)] suggests the existence of a legislative intention to offer relief to a director who fails to act because he is ignorant of and indifferent to his responsibilities and those of his company ... It is equally illogical to suggest that a director ... ignorant of his responsibilities and who fails to attempt to identify and fulfil them can meet the 227.1(3) standard.

[emphasis added]

[4] The appellant takes issue with this statement of the law because it imposes on a taxpayer-director a minimum standard of behaviour, that of making inquiries as to what is or her duties are. She says further that the statement is inconsistent with what was said in the subsequent decisions of this Court, which, admittedly, the Tax Court Judge did not have the benefit of reading. Indeed, what the appellant is offering as a justification for her failure to prevent a breach of section 227 of the Act is that, in fact, she was ignorant of the law.

[5] Generally, ignorance of the law is not a valid excuse for criminal or civil liability. Furthermore, subsequent to the judgment on this appeal, this Court decided Cadrin v. R., [1999] 3 C.T.C. 366. In Cadrin, supra, this Court said, at p. 368, that total passivity based on total ignorance would not allow a taxpayer to escape liability under ss. 227.1(3). Implicit in this conclusion is a minimum duty to remedy one's ignorance.

[6] But, of course, as this Court also said in Cadrin, supra at p. 368, if a taxpayer without knowing the law does what the law requires him or her to do or what he or she should have done in the circumstances, this is sufficient to escape liability although he or she took no steps to ascertain the law.

[7] There is in this case no evidence, as in Cadrin, that the appellant without knowing the law did what she was required to do. She did not stay generally informed about what was happening with the business nor did she inquire when she was told that the business was encountering a "rocky spot" (Transcript, p. 41) or that things were not going great (Transcript, pp. 29-30).

[8] In our view, the decision in Black, supra, is not inconsistent with what was decided in Cadrin, supra. The appellant had to meet the single objective standard of care provided for in ss. 227.1(3) of the Act which takes into account in its application some of the attributes of the person who failed to meet the standard: see Canada v.Corsano, [1999] 3 F.C. 173 (F.C.A.) leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada denied on April 20th, 2000, Soper v.Canada, [1998] 1 F.C. 124 (F.C.A.). She had to do that by leading evidence that, as a director, she exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the on-going failure to deduct and remit under section 227.1 of the Act that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in these circumstances. The Tax

Digitized by Google

Court Judge concluded that she had not done that. We agree.
[9] Accordingly, the appeal will be dismissed with costs.
"Gilles Létourneau"
J.A.

Her Majesty The Queen v. Gary J. Corsano, A-752-97, De facto Directors

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

LÉTOURNEAU

[1] I have had the advantage of reading the reasons of my colleague Justice Noël and I share his opinion as to the liability of the respondents. However, I came to this conclusion by a different process that I must expose and involves an analysis of the legal issues related to the interpretation of subsections 227.1 (1) and
(3) of the Tax Act on income (the Act), and the use of the defense of the degree of care and diligence. The meaning and scope of the term "director" in subsection 227.1 (1) of the Tax Act on income
[2] Subsection 227.1 (1) of the Act makes severally liable for the directors of a company which has failed to deduct or withhold and remit to Revenue Canada when she was required to do, the taxes due on wages and salaries. Sections 153 and 227.1, which are strongly linked, provide:

153 (1) Every person paying at Any Time in a taxation year

(A) salary or wages or other remuneration, ...

Shall deduct or Withold therefrom Such Amount as may be determined in Accordance with prescribed rules and Shall, at Such time as may be prescribed, gave That Amount to the Receiver General on account of the payee's tax for the year under this Part or Part XI. 3, as the case may be, ...

227.1 (1) Liability of directors for failure to deduct - Where a corporation to deduct Has Failed Withhold year or as required by subsection Amount 135 (3) or section 153 or 215, Has Failed to year Amount handed Such Gold Has Failed to pay year Amount of tax for a taxation year as required under Part VII or VIII, the directors of the corporation at the time the corporation was required to deduct, Withhold, or pay the Amount recovered are jointly and severally liable, together with the corporation, to pay That Amount Any interest or penalties and Relating thereto.

153 (1) Every person paying at any time for a taxation year

a) salary, wages or other remuneration, ...

shall deduct or withhold the amount as may be prescribed and shall, at the time prescribed, remit that amount to the Receiver General on account of the payee's tax or the depositary for the year under this Part or Part XI.3.

227.1 (1) Liability of directors for failure to deduct - Where a corporation has failed to deduct or withhold an amount as required by subsection 135 (3) or section 153 or 215, or failed to pay this amount or has failed to pay an amount of tax under Part VII or VIII for a taxation year, the directors of the company, when it was required to deduct, withhold, remit or pay the amount are jointly and severally liable with the corporation, to pay that amount, including interest and penalties thereon.

Digitized by Google

[3] The judge of the Tax Court adopted the view of the respondents and concluded that the term "administrator" found in the Companies Act of Nova Scotia means that administrators law and not the administrators fact recognized by the common law in Nova Scotia. On appeal, the parties presented conflicting arguments and well structured, supporting or challenging the legal conclusion of the judge of the Court of Tax. With respect, I believe that the claims of the respondents are diversion and tend to mask the real issue in this case and the approach that should be taken to determine their responsibility with respect to the transfer of funds involved in Revenue Canada. As is often the case with all the diversions, it raises some interesting questions, though not relevant to most.

[4] In fact, the key provision in this case is subsection 227.1 (1) of the Act. This is the scope of this provision must be determined and not the Companies Act of Nova Scotia. We talked a lot, but is not relevant in my opinion, the use of free and ambiguous term "administrator" in the Companies Act of Nova Scotia, as well as the scope and interpretation of this law. As we will see later, this is because the respondents have misinterpreted a previous decision of this Court as well as the purpose of subsection 227.1 (1) of the Act.

[5] Subsection 227.1 (1) of the Act makes all responsible directors of a company which has failed to remit monies owed to Revenue Canada. In this section, the term "director" is in no way restricts or explained. One of the basic rules of legislative drafting, dictated by a rule of interpretation thereof, provides that the use of a generic term without restrictions or clarifications expresses the legislature's intention to give a broad sense. Here, using the term "directors" without restrictions in subsection 227.1 (1), the legislature intended that covers all genres of directors recognized law firms, including the administrators of law and fact.

[6] It is worth repeating that the parties agree on the fact that the common law of Nova Scotia has integrated the concept of de facto director, a conclusion which the judge of the Tax Court arrives too. In this regard, I hasten to add that this legal reality exists in a form very similar in all common law jurisdictions in Canada.

[7] However, despite this, the judge of the Tax Court concluded that the term "director" in subsection 227.1 (1) of the Act includes only the administrators of law. It is based first of all on the decision of this Court in The Queen v. Her Majesty. Kalef [4] when he misinterprets. This is evident from the following extracts from his decision (on pages 8 and 9):

Because the law is clear that, for the purposes of subsection 227.1 (1) of the Act, it is necessary to discover the meaning of "administrator", examine the constitutive law of the Corporation should do and avoid the general principles of common law. Therefore, even if the appellants were perhaps de facto directors at common law, they were not under the Companies Act and they should not be held vicariously liable under Article 227.1 of the Act ...

[...]

It seems clear that analyzing the definition of "administrator" of the Ontario Business Corporations Act , which is almost identical to that in paragraph 2 (1) f) of the Companies Act , the Federal Court of Appeal has concluded that the definition was the administrator of law.

[8] Let us say immediately that this Court has never decided in Kalef that the definition of the Ontario Business Corporations Act administrator was right. The Court had to determine whether a director of a corporation ceases to hold office for the purposes of subsection 227.1 (4) of the Act when a trustee is appointed. The Court concluded that Mr. Kalef did not satisfy the conditions set out in the Ontario Business Corporations Act that would have indicated that he had ceased to hold the office of director. It was therefore remained a director, despite the appointment of a trustee in bankruptcy.

Digitized by Google

[9] Notre Cour n'a jamais non plus décidé que l'interprétation du terme " administrateur ", dans le paragraphe 227.1(1) de la Loi, ne pouvait se fonder que sur la législation constitutive d'une compagnie à l'exclusion de la common law. Voici ce qu'a dit notre collègue le juge McDonald de la Cour d'appel à ce sujet :

The Tax Act on income does not define the term "administrator" and it does not establish criteria regarding when a person ceases to hold that office . Given the silence of the Tax Act on income , it is logical to turn to the law governing the incorporation of the company to find an answer.

[Emphasis in original.]

[10] In this case, it was not necessary to invoke the common law as statutory law stated when a person ceases to hold the office of director.

[11] Moreover, the Court noted that the statute law must help us to find an answer. It offers nothing exclusive or decisive, especially in the context of this appeal that the question at issue for the purposes of section 227.1 of the Act is not whether a person has ceased to hold office administrator (question usually set by legislation), but rather whether a person acted ostensibly as an administrator, becoming a de facto director (question generally governed by common law principles). In the words of Judge McDonald, "it makes sense" to turn to the right, which can provide an answer to the silence of the Act. In this instance, the answer lies in the common law.

[12] I would like to repeat here that the question in relation to subsection 227.1 (1) of the Act deals with the liability of directors of a company which, as a soul leader of this company, failed in their task of prevent the accomplishment of the illegal act and it is not intended to determine whether they undertake the liability of the company, which is the case, I think. In 1906, the Manitoba Court of Appeal, in MacDonald v.. Drake [5] , rejected the contention of the defendants that a legislative provision making directors jointly and severally liable for unpaid wages could not reach the administrators of law. The court concluded that even if the defendants were not de jure directors, because they did not have their own required actions, it was clear that they were elected, took part in the meetings, and acted as administrators. So they were de facto directors, making them personally liable. Judge Phippen of the Court of Appeal stated, at p. 229 and 230:

[TRANSLATION]

The law is clear: the acts of de facto directors within the powers of the Company to the responsibility of the Company and its directors ...

I do not believe that the defendants, who have enjoyed the benefits of their position, can now ~~rely on the fact that they held irregularly to escape a debt (which is not fine) to employees~~ which are protected by law.

[13] In the context of an allegation of misfeasance and breach of fiduciary obligations in Northern Trust Co. v. Butchart [6] , the Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench of Manitoba, concluding that the directors were jointly and severally liable for such acts, said:

[TRANSLATION]

They were elected legally or illegally, their situation is the same. They were de facto directors and are responsible for all acts and omissions of their own making, in the same way as if they had been directors of law.

Digitized by Google

[14] The Law of Canadian Companies [7] , FW Wegenast wrote: [TRANSLATION]
The administrator is obviously can not invoke its own irregular status, for example , to escape his responsibility ... or to be exempt from a statutory obligation to pay wages or for failure to make statements to the government ... and in this case, a de facto director is in the same position as executor by interference.
[Emphasis in original.]
[15] The judge of the Tax Court also concluded that the term "director" in subsection 227.1 (1) of the Act must be interpreted restrictively because the provision imposes vicarious liability. He writes on page 9 of his reasons:
The vicarious liability under subsection 227.1 (1) applies only to the "administrator". Subsection 159 (3) also imposes a vicarious liability to certain persons who transfer property. It is important to note that section 159 (2) of the Act allocates responsibility to a large number of people. He mentions the "assignee, liquidator, receiver, receiver-manager, administrator, executor or other similar person." Certainly if we had intended subsection 227.1 (1) has a scope, you could use other words more about the "administrator", for example by adding the words "or is law "or" including persons who act as directors, "or the words" director "," frame ", or" any other person performing such functions. " In my opinion, a provision which imposes vicarious liability should be interpreted strictly and that is what I did.
[16] I have already said that if the legislature wanted to paragraph 227.1 (1) applies to all kinds of directors, he had nothing else to do what he did, c that is to say using the term "administrator" without attaching restrictions. Because the term "assignee, liquidator, receiver, receiver-manager, administrator, executor" cited by the judge of the Tax Court in this extract from his reasons, one might ask whether the legislature should also say, for ensure a wide scope to the relevant provision: [TRANSLATION] "assignee of fact or law, the liquidator of fact or law ... Director of fact or law, executor of fact or law." Just ask to meet them. In drafting the paragraph 227.1 (1) to give a wide scope, the legislature he had to say, at the risk of forgetting some other types of administrators that liability applies to directors of the Company, that If they are in fact or in law, active or inactive [8] , volunteer or paid, internal or external, a for-profit or not? Is it not more reasonable to assume that the legislature, in using the term "administrator" without limit or specify wanted him understand all types of administrators that there may be in Canada under provincial law?
[17] It is apparent that the legislature intended to give a broad meaning to the term "director" in subsection 227.1 (1) looking at the nature of the responsibilities entrusted to the company and its directors, the nature of the debt of the company and the links between the corporation, directors, employees and Her Majesty. In my opinion, the judge of the Tax Court has lost sight of these elements and, therefore, gave a restrictive interpretation in subsection 227.1 (1).
[18] The debt owed to the appellant are not of the same nature as trade payables due to suppliers in the normal course of business. Further, Her Majesty is not in the same situation a supplier chooses to do business with a given company. It is a creditor has not chosen to be in the sense that they are owed on the number of employees of the company and the salary they receive. In addition, these are generally composed of taxes and contributions to social security schemes and insurance, should benefit both employees and the public. In addition, it is not the money earned by the company as a result of its business activities. That is why, in England, the courts have held that these debts were owed to Her Majesty of nature "quasi-fiduciary". In In Re Lo-Line Electric Motors Ltd. [9] , Sir Nicolas Browne-Wilkinson VC, emphasized this fact, as well as harm to employees of a company. He quoted with approval the following passage from the decision of the judge in Vinelott Stanford Re Services Ltd. [10] : [TRANSLATION]

Digitized by Google

The directors of a company should conduct the affairs of this so that "it can meet these obligations at maturity, and not just because they are not earned by the company through its business, it is right to consider working capital (that is to say that the people with whom it deals to expect and whether the company), but, more importantly, because that directors should not fund the ongoing operations of the company with the money that it shall pay to Her Majesty. If they do and if, therefore, the amounts payable under CFE, contributions to insurance National and VAT is not paid within the time specified, and can not be recovered in the event of liquidation, the court may infer that the directors have continued their activities then they should have known that the company could not meet its current and future obligations and it endangered unjustifiably amounts owing to Her Majesty that should have been remitted to the Treasury as revenue to finance business activities may or may not produce a profit. C ' is, I think, to follow a false trail, or at least make an unnecessary, as to whether the failure to pay such debts would be considered unethical in the world of business. A director who leaves such a situation fails to produce to keep informed, to the extent possible, the financial position of the company ... or it is improperly pursuing business and are risking not intended for this purpose.

[19] In my view, subsection 227.1 (1) should not have be interpreted so narrowly that had the effect of undermining the valid social objectives covered by this provision. The fact that it makes directors personally liable for their own failures does not justify the restrictive interpretation that the judge of the Tax Court gave the term "administrator". Given the broad sense of the term "director" in subsection 227.1 (1), failure to recognize the responsibility of persons acting as directors of returns is to endorse and encourage acts or omissions of such persons, damaging to employees and the public, in a situation almost trustee. In this context, words used by Hodgins JA, the Court of Appeal in Re Owen Sound Lumber Co [11] . are quite appropriate:

[TRANSLATION]

On the second point, I agree with Justice Middleton to say that when directors have assumed responsibility trustee administrator, they have become leaders in all respects as if they had been appointed formal . To hold otherwise would mean that a person can commit illegal acts affecting the assets of the company, while enjoying immunity if it can demonstrate that it has been named an irregular manner. If this were the case, it would be fashionable to take over the load in this way rather than accept a legitimate but less advantageous.

[20] With respect, I think this statement even more relevant when the mistakes in a quasi-fiduciary position are detrimental to both employees and the public.

The standard of prudence and care in this instance [21] At pages 19 and 20 of his reasons, the judge of the Tax Court opined that the standard of care applicable to directors of a nonprofit corporation such as Louisbourg Harbourfront Park Limited Corporation (the company) was not as rigorous as that which applies to the directors of for-profit companies. It relies on the decision of this Court in Soper c. Her Majesty the Queen [12] which, in his opinion, has set "different standards of care applicable to inside and outside directors" [13] . I note in passing that this Court has stated in Soper it does not establish a different standard of care as it was internal or external administrators. Robertson JA stated the following, at p. 156:

I would first like to point out that adopting this analytical approach, I do not suggest that accountability is simply based on the fact that a person is considered an inside director as opposed to an outside director. This qualification is quite simply the starting point of my analysis.

[22] Relying on the decision Soper , the respondents argued that the standard of care set out in subsection 227.1 (3) of the Act is a flexible standard and, therefore, there are different standards applicable to situations different. As a result, there would be a standard for inside directors, one for outside directors, one for administrators nonprofit corporations, one for volunteer administrators and yet another for those who are paid. If we accept this approach, we manage to raise the thorny question: what standard or combination of standards the Court should apply to a person who is both an outside and volunteer a non-profit profit?

Digitized by Google

[23] It is true that this Court has stated in Soper that "the standard of care set out in subsection 227.1 (3) of the Act is fundamentally flexible" [14] . It is clear, however reading the judgment that it is the application of the standard is flexible, because knowledge of the factors and circumstances varied and different must be assessed to determine whether, in a given situation a director has complied with the standard of care under the Act. Subsection 227.1 (3) establishes a single standard applicable to all directors, that whether they have exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill required to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person prudence would exercise in comparable circumstances.

[24] I agree with counsel for the appellant that the purpose of subsection 227.1 (1) is to make directors responsible for deducting and remitting taxes for employees, and that this responsibility n is not different depending on whether or not the company has a profit, and I would add as the directors are paid or not, or whether they are active or inactive. All directors of all companies are responsible for any breach of the sole standard of care set out in subsection 227.1 (3) of the Act. The flexibility lies in the application of the standard, since the qualifications, skills and attributes of directors vary from one situation to another. It's the same circumstances surrounding the failure to retain and remit the sums due.

[25] With respect, I consider that the judge of the Tax Court erred in finding the existence of a standard of care different and less rigorous for-profit corporations. In doing so, he has misused and misinterpreted the evidence that was presented.

The application of the respondents to the standard of care and diligence

[26] In this instance, the failure to withhold and remit amounts owing to Her Majesty began in November 1992. Respondents Lawrence, Parsons, and MacDonald Wheeliker have learned a directors' meeting of 13 January 1993, while Corsano and Maindiratta respondents were informed at the meeting of February 3, 1993. Respondents Corsano, and Wheeliker Maindiratta know the financial difficulties of the Company since November 1992.

[27] Despite this, it is surprising that the failure to withhold and remit amounts owing to Her Majesty lasted until the bankruptcy of the Company in October 1993. This means that when the respondents were aware of the financial difficulties of the Company or the failure to remit the sums due, it was their duty to prevent the failure to pay the amounts due and to come and not only repair the breach afterwards[15]. At best, this duty is imposed intervention to certain directors for nine months. At worst, it is imposed on others for 12 months.

[28] The evidence shows that no specific measures have been taken to ensure that the Company fails to deliver the deductions due and to come when she began to have financial difficulties. The directors have decided to no action to this effect at their meetings on 13 January and 3 February 1993.

[29] At the meeting of March 3, 1993, the respondent Corsano found that discounts were in default and ordered the Director General to pay the arrears when he would receive a scheduled payment. There is no evidence that measures have been taken to the current and future discounts. Several checks were signed by the directors and given to suppliers until September 1993. The May meeting of the Board of Directors has not resulted in corrective actions to prevent failure. Nothing was done to verify whether the order to pay the arrears, given the March meeting had been met.

[30] At the July meeting, the respondent Corsano have learned that the order he had given to the Director General in March had no result and arrears were not paid to Her Majesty. He also noted that no payment had been made for the period. Corsano has ordered that all cash receipts are used to pay amounts owing to Her Majesty. This however, should not be taken literally, since suppliers should be paid to ensure the operation of the Company [16] . In fact, shortly after this meeting, the respondent Corsano spoke with the Director General to pay a supplier rather than Revenue Canada [17] . The evidence shows that no payment has been made of amounts owing to Her Majesty and no follow-up was intended to ensure the implementation of this Directive. In addition, it must be repeated that no specific action has been initiated, such as the introduction of controls for payments to be made, the request periodic reports of the Director General on the situation, and regular checking that the payments had been made. The failure lasted several months. In fact, the directors have delegated their authority on the matter to the Chief, but they failed to exercise any control despite the fact that it was clear that it did not work. It was more than an abdication of a delegation.

Digitized by Google

[31] The judge of the Tax Court has outlined a number of reasons to support its conclusion that the respondents had acted with the degree of care, diligence and skill required in the circumstances.

[32] He first concluded that the freedom of action of the council was to a large extent restricted by the Louisbourg Harbourfront Park Society (Louisbourg) owned 96% of shares of the Company. The evidence in this case does not support this conclusion on the issue. It is true that Louisbourg has refused to release its shares to the Company to be privatized. However, this is far short of undue interference in the obligation secured by the Company under subsection 227.1 (1) of the Act. In his testimony, the Chairman, Mr. Wheeliker has admitted against Louisbourg-examination that did nothing to interfere with the control exercised by the Board on the Company's business [18] . It has not interfered with the policy decisions taken by the board, nor does it intervened in the ongoing operations of the Company [19] .

Although it has no doubt that Louisbourg wanted to see the company continue its activities, there is no evidence to demonstrate that it has prevented the Company to take the deductions and remit to Revenue Canada.

[33] Second, the judge of the Tax Court gave a positive character to the fact that the March meeting, the Board had instructed the Director General of Revenue Canada to pay the full amount of receive Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. In my opinion, this does not resolve the issue. Such payment would have settled the arrears, but nothing is planned for deductions and discounts. Nothing was done to stop the failure to prevent omissions and predictable future.

[34] Third, the judge of the Tax Court has interpreted positively the fact that the Board had taken all due care to hire a qualified person as CEO, and he had reason to trust him. With respect, the evidence shows that the directors knew early on that money owed to Revenue Canada were not paid. In addition, administrators stated that the Chief did not follow their instructions to pay money owed to Revenue Canada. However, no immediate action or diligence has been taken to remedy the situation facing the refusal to obey the general manager, or to correct the past and to come. In his testimony, Mr. Corsano admitted that he had serious concerns about the ability of the CEO to lead the Corporation, primarily because it did not comply with the directives of directors, but he did not use its primary administrator to convene a board meeting to discuss this issue and decide on appropriate corrective action [20]

[35] Fourth, to determine whether the respondents had done due diligence, the judge of the Tax Court took into account the fact that the administrators were convinced that the value of the Company's assets were sufficient to meet the demands of all creditors, including

Digitized by Google

Revenue Canada. With respect, this element is not relevant. Administrators have an obligation to prevent omissions and not to endorse systematically, as did the respondents in the hope that eventually there will be enough money to pay all creditors.

[36] Fifth, he was convinced that the directors have made inquiries about payments during Council meetings. It could be convinced that the way to meet the less stringent standard that applies to the situation. However, the burden imposed by subsection 227.1 (3) is much heavier.

[37] Finally, it also took into account the fact that Louisbourg abruptly fired all directors and forced the company into bankruptcy, thereby preventing these administrators continue to try to operate the business and improve its financial situation.

[38] Again, in my opinion, this factor is not taken into account in determining the degree of care and diligence that directors have shown. They were already guilty of failure to withhold and remit the source deductions for nearly a year when they were dismissed. As the court said in Re Stanford Services Ltd. , in the passage cited above, the directors of a company should conduct the affairs of the latter so that it can "meet these obligations at maturity because administrators ... should not fund the ongoing operations of the company with money that it shall pay to Her Majesty. "

[39] In conclusion, I believe that the factors that the judge of the Tax Court considered, singly or together, can not justify its conclusion as to the liability of directors under subsection 227.1 (1) and (3) of the Act.

[40] It is sad to have to conclude that the respondents, especially those who have acted voluntarily giving their time, did not exercise the degree of care and diligence to prevent the failure to withhold and remit covered , which breach has persisted all knew for a whole year. This Court does not fulfill its duty to enforce the law if she was endorsing the acts or omissions of experienced and knowledgeable administrators who did not exercise the degree of care, diligence and skill that is expected of them under subsection 227.1 (3) of the Act.

[41] For these reasons, I would allow the appeals and set aside the decision of the judge of the Tax Court. I would dismiss the appeals of the respondents Wheeliker, Maindiratta Corsano and contributions made by the Minister of National Revenue under subsection 227.1 (1) of the Tax Act on income . The respondents Lawrence MacDonald and Parsons, I would think making the decision that due to the judge of the Tax Court, to welcome their calls and send some contributions to the Minister for that it modifies that given responsibility to withhold and remit covered only begins January 13, 1993. As the appellant did not seek costs, I would make no order about it.

"Gilles Létourneau" JCA

Certified translation Laurier Parenteau, LL.L.

Bruno Hartrell v. Her Majesty The Queen, 2008 FCA 59, A Clear Case of de facto Director Liability and People's Interpreted.

Digitized by Google

RYER J.A.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT OF THE COURT

(Delivered from the Bench at Toronto, Ontario, on February 13, 2008)

[1] This is an appeal from a decision of Paris J. of the Tax Court of Canada (the "TCC") (2006 TCC 480) dismissing the appeal of Mr. Bruno Hartrell against an income tax assessment, pursuant to subsection 227.1(1) of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.) (the "ITA"), in relation to his 1998 taxation year.

The assessment arose out of the failure of Toronto Lynx Soccer Club Inc. ("LYNX") to remit source deductions, in the amount of $47,434.46, to the Canada Revenue Agency (the "CRA") in 1998, as required by section 153 of the ITA.

[2] The appellant argues that the TCC erred in upholding the assessment against him on the basis that subsection 227.1(1) of the ITA was not applicable to him because he was never formally appointed, and did not, in fact, function as a director of LYNX in 1998. In the alternative, the appellant argues that if he did function as a director in 1998, he was entitled to rely on the due diligence defence under subsection 227.1(3) of the ITA.

[3] The determinations of the TCC as to whether Mr. Hartrell was liable, pursuant to subsection 227.1(1) of the ITA, for the 1998 source deductions that LYNX failed to remit, on the basis that he, in fact, functioned as a director of LYNX and whether the due diligence defence that is contained in subsection 227.1(3) of the ITA, has been established require the application of a legal standard to a set of facts. Accordingly, these determinations constitute questions of mixed fact and law that are reviewable on a standard of palpable and overriding error, unless it is clear that there has been an extricable error of law, in which event a standard of correctness will apply. (See Housen v. Nikolaisen, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235.)

[4] The TCC determined that in accordance with the decision in this Court in Wheeliker v. R., [1999] 2 C.T.C. 395 (F.C.A.), a person who was not formally appointed as a director can nonetheless have liability pursuant to subsection 227.1(1) of the ITA if that person has, in fact, functioned as a director of the corporation in question.

[5] We are of the view that in making this determination on the basis of Wheeliker, the TCC correctly apprehended the proper legal standard with respect to the issue of whether liability under subsection 227.1(1) of the ITA can be assessed against a person who has not formally been appointed as a director.

[6] The TCC reviewed the evidence of several witnesses, including Mr. Hartrell, and numerous documents. Based upon that review, the TCC concluded that Mr. Hartrell had played a significant role in the affairs of LYNX and that the Minister's assumption that Mr. Hartrell performed the function of a director of LYNX had not been shown to be incorrect. In so finding, the TCC declined to accept Mr. Hartrell's assertion that he was no more than a passive investor in LYNX.

[7] We are of the view that the evidence before the TCC was sufficient to enable the TCC to conclude that Mr. Hartrell had, in fact, functioned as a director of LYNX in 1998. Moreover, it was open to the TCC to decline to accept Mr. Hartrell's testimony to the effect that he was a mere passive investor in LYNX. Accordingly, we are unpersuaded that the TCC committed any palpable and overriding error in reaching its conclusion that Mr. Hartrell was subject to liability under subsection 227.1(1) of the ITA on the basis that he, in fact, functioned as a director of LYNX in 1998.

[8] Pursuant to subsection 227.1(3) of the ITA, liability in respect of a failure to remit source deductions will not be imposed on a person who has, in fact, functioned as a director, if that person has exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances.

[9] The TCC determined that the legal test with respect to the defence of due diligence under subsection 227.1(3) of the ITA was to be interpreted in accordance with paragraph 30 of the decision of this Court in Soper v. R., [1997] 3 C.T.C. 242 (F.C.A.) which the TCC reproduced in paragraph 37 of its reasons. That paragraph reads as follows:

Digitized by Google

The standard of care set out in subsection 227.1(3) of the Act is, therefore, not purely objective. Nor is it purely subjective. It is not enough for a director to say he or she did his or her best, for that is an invocation of the purely subjective standard. Equally clear is that honesty is not enough. However, the standard is not a professional one. Nor is it the negligence law standard that governs these cases. Rather, the Act contains both objective elements embodied in the reasonable person language – and subjective elements inherent in individual considerations like "skill" and the idea of "comparable circumstances" Accordingly, the standard can be properly described as "objective subjective".

[10] The principles with respect to the test for the due diligence defence in subsection 227.1(3) of the ITA that were laid down in Soper have been affirmed by this Court in Worrell v. R., [2000] 1 C.T.C. 79 (F.C.A.). [11] The appellant submits that the TCC erred by not adopting the test in Worrell. We are of the view that this argument must fail. By adopting the test in Soper, which was approved in Worrell, the TCC has adopted the test that the appellant advocates. We agree with the respondent that the TCC did not adopt the decision in Thibeault v. The Queen, 2005 TCC 393, [2006] G.S.T.C. 165, with respect to the test for the due diligence defence, and that by its reliance on Soper, the TCC adopted the proper legal test with respect to the due diligence defence under subsection 227.1(3) of the ITA.

[12] The appellant argued that the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Peoples Department Stores Inc. (Trustees of) v. Wise 2004 SCC 68 changed the test with respect to the due diligence defence from the "objective subjective" test, in Soper, to simply an "objective" test. Whether Peoples Department Stores can be said to have eliminated the subjective aspects of the due diligence defence in subsection 227.1(3) of the ITA is not entirely clear since that the decision dealt with a provision of the Canada Business Corporation Act R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3. In that regard, the Supreme Court of Canada, in paragraph 63 of the decision, stated that:

With respect, we feel that Robertson J.A.'s characterization of the standard as an "objective subjective" one could lead to confusion. We prefer to describe it as an objective standard. To say that the standard is objective makes it clear that the factual aspects of the circumstances surrounding the actions of the director or of the officer are important in the case of the s.122(1)(b) duty of care, as opposed to the subjective motivation of the director or officer which is the central focus of the statutor fiduciary duty of s.122(1)(a) of the CBCA.

If Peoples Department Stores did change the test to be applied under subsection 227.1(3) of the ITA to one that requires due diligence to be demonstrated on a purely objective standard, such a new test would be more difficult to meet than a test that contains some elements of subjectivity. As such, we are unable to see how the potential application of Peoples Department Stores could be helpful to the appellant.

[13] The TCC found that Mr. Hartrell, an experienced chartered accountant, was aware that LYNX had failed to remit the correct amount of source deductions in a number of months in 1998 and that he did nothing to prevent those failures. The TCC based this finding on the evidence before it, in particular Mr. Hartrell's testimony, as well as correspondence between Mr. Hartrell and Mr. Iantorno, the president of LYNX. The TCC rejected Mr. Hartrell's argument that because he caused LYNX to provide post-dated cheques to the CRA in 1999, after the deficiencies had arisen, he had taken reasonable efforts to prevent the deficient remittances that arose in 1998. The TCC held that these cheques were provided long after the deficient remittances had occurred and that the due diligence defence requires steps to be taken to prevent such occurrences. Moreover, the TCC found that Mr. Hartrell could have caused LYNX to pay the arrears out of the funding that was provided to LYNX between January and August of 1999. [14] Based upon the evidence before the TCC, we are of the view that it was open to the TCC to make these factual findings. Accordingly, we are not persuaded that the TCC made any palpable and overriding error in applying due diligence defence in Soper to these factual findings and in reaching the conclusion that Mr. Hartrell had failed to exercise the degree of care, diligence and skill that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances to prevent the source deduction remittance shortfalls that occurred in 1998.

Digitized by Google

[15] For these reasons, the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

"C. Michael Ryer"

J.A.

Dupont Roofing & Sheet Metal Inc. v. The Minister of National Revenue, 2011 FC 160, No Need for Notice of Assessment of DAS Liability Before Tax Debt Certification

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT

[1] This is an application for judicial review pursuant to section 18.1 of the Federal Courts Act, R.S.C. 1985,

c. F-7 of the act of certifying on June 11, 2004 in Federal Court, as Court File No. 6552-04, that the amount of $204,704.21 plus interest from May 15, 2004 is payable by the applicant and has not yet been paid.

BACKGROUND:

[2] The applicant company ("Dupont") was in the roofing business. In 2000, Dupont formed a joint venture with another firm, Applewood Roofing and Sheet Metal Inc. ("Applewood"). Together, they took possession of 94 Kenhar Street in Toronto. For administrative purposes, Applewood occupied unit 16 and Dupont occupied unit 17 at that address but both units were used as a combined work space. Applewood's bookkeeper, Mrs. Manuel, did the record keeping for both companies and they shared a mailbox.

[3] Mr. Luis Gomes, one of the two directors of Dupont, along with Manuel Da Silva, deposed that Applewood controlled all revenues and only transferred to Dupont the net amounts payable to employees. Due to disagreements over payment of Dupont's business expenses, the firms severed ties in August 2003. At the time of separation, Mr. Gomes says Applewood owed Dupont between $200,000 and $250,000. It was acknowledged by Mr. Gomes during his cross-examination that he was aware that this was the approximate amount of money owed in tax debt to the Canada Revenue Agency ("CRA").

[4] On April 4, 2003, CRA Trust Examiner, Mr. Domenic Pizzonia, produced a form of audit document called a "trust report" for Dupont. According to the respondent, it is the normal practice of the CRA to audit those employers, such as Dupont, that are required under the Income Tax Act, 1985, c.1 (5thSupp.) ("ITA") to calculate, withhold and remit tax from wages paid to employees. In the trust report attached to Mr. Pizzonia's affidavit, at p. 000268 of the applicant's Book of Affidavits, it is stated that Dupont was "negligent in filing 2001 and 2002 T4s" and "[A]udit was flagged from T4 Matching".

[5] In conducting the trust examination, Mr. Pizzonia met with Dupont's directors, Messers. Gomes and Da Silva and Mrs. Manuel, the bookkeeper. Following a review of the relevant books and records, Mr. Pizzonia calculated the amount of payroll taxes outstanding that the employer was required to collect and remit, including income tax, employment insurance premiums and Canada Pension Plan premiums, plus penalties and interest was $162,550.43. He communicated these results to the applicant's directors by personally handing over a form at the meeting. Mr. Pizzonia submitted his report to CRA for processing. The matter was then assigned to a Trust Compliance Officer, Mr. Anthony Gentile.

Digitized by Google

[6] Mr. Gentile's evidence, supported by the electronic diary entries automatically generated by the CRA database, is that he followed his general practice for causing CRA's system to issue notices of failures to remit payroll assessments for the 2001 ($38,738.29) and 2002 ($122,672.76) tax years relying upon the information and conclusions in Mr. Pizzonia's final trust examination report. These were done on April 23, 2003 and April 25, 2003 respectively. The assessment for 2001 had to be manually mailed, according to the CRA practice at the time, for assessments for a taxation year two years prior to the date of the assessment. Mr. Gentile followed his general practice to arrange for a manual mailing through the Toronto North Taxation Centre. The assessment for the 2002 taxation year was generated electronically by the computer to be mailed from the Sudbury Tax Centre. Returned mail containing notices of assessments generated by Mr. Gentile would have been directed to him. He reviewed the CRA electronic diary and found no record of a returned notice pertaining to the 2001 and 2002 assessments.

[7] CRA relies on a computer system to issue the tax debt certificates that are approved and signed by a designate of the Minister of National Revenue and filed in the Federal Court Registry. In this case, another CRA Officer, Mr. Don Ballanger, was responsible for issuing the certification of the accumulated tax debt on May 15, 2004. He states that a review of the electronic diary and historics records showed an amount owing of $204, 704.21 as of that date. Under cross-examination, Mr. Belanger acknowledged that the certification process does not involve any form of verification that notices of assessment were actually mailed to the applicant.

[8] Mr. Gomes denies having received the underlying assessments of the tax debt for Dupont certified by the Minister in 2004. He says that the practice when Dupont and Applewood shared space was for Applewood's secretary to collect the mail. After Applewood and Dupont severed ties, Mrs. Manuel gave Mr. Gomes a computer, hard drive and documents still in her possession. Mr. Gomes put the box of records in storage to deal with later at the new location. In January, 2005 Dupont experienced a fire at that address. All records were destroyed in the fire.

[9] On April 29, 2005, Mr. Gomes received a Derivative Director's Liability Assessment in which he was assessed as being one of the directors of the applicant Dupont and therefore liable under the statute to pay the unremitted tax debt. In February, 2006, his counsel forwarded a notice of objection to the CRA on behalf of Mr. Gomes. In subsequent correspondence, counsel sought copies of the underlying corporate assessments. Despite repeated requests, they were not produced by the CRA. In a letter dated June 10, 2007 the CRA Access to Information and Privacy Directorate advised applicant's counsel that the Sudbury Tax Centre and the Toronto North Tax Service Office were unable to locate copies of the assessments. On cross-examination Mr. Gentile advised that he could have reproduced the 2001 and 2002 underlying corporate assessments if requested by someone with authority to do so.

[10] Enforcement of the tax certificate was held in abeyance pending review of the objection. The assessment was confirmed and notice issued to Mr. Gomes in July 2008. Appeals in respect of Mr. Gomes' personal liability filed in the Tax Court of Canada and in the Ontario Superior Court of Justice (in respect of the tax debt owed to the province) are being held in abeyance until this application is determined.

ISSUES:

[11] The several issues raised by the parties can be reduced to two:

Digitized by Google

Was it necessary for the Minister to issue notices of assessment to the taxpayer for unpaid payroll taxes and if so, has it been established that notice was given?
If notice of assessment was required and was not given to the taxpayer, should the certificate be declared a nullity?

ARGUMENTS & ANALYSIS:

Standard of Review

[12] In the present matter, the Minister's discretion to certify the debt was exercised by a designate relying upon the historics record maintained in the CRA electronic database. To the extent that questions of natural justice, legitimate expectation and procedural fairness arise in this matter, the Court must determine whether fairness requires that the decision be overturned: eBay Canada Limited et al. v. MNR, 2008 FCA 348 at para. 36. Otherwise, the issues involve questions of mixed fact and law in which the legal question cannot be extricated from the factual findings and deference should be shown: Canada (Citizenship and Immigration) v. Khosa 2009 SCC 12, [2009] 1 S.C.R. 339 at para. 89.

[13] This matter is, in my view, analogous to a judicial review of a fairness decision by tax officials as the applicant is, in effect, seeking relief from the negative decision he received in response to his objection to the derivative liability assessment. As stated by Justice James O'Reilly in Sandler v. Canada (Attorney General), 2010 FC 459, 2010 D.T.C. 5073 at para. 7, this Court "can overturn the Minister's decision under the fairness provision only if it was unreasonable, in the sense that it falls outside the range of possible acceptable outcomes based on the facts and the law", citing Telfer v. Canada (Revenue Agency), 2009 FCA 23 at para. 25. See also: Osborne v. The Attorney General of Canada, 2010 FC 673. The overall standard of review on this application should therefore be reasonableness.

Assessment and Notice Requirements

[14] The applicant's case essentially rests on the argument that the formal requirements of notice under the ITA and other tax statutes apply to assessments for failure to remit payroll taxes. The applicant does not dispute that a tax liability arose from the corporate activities but argues that the obligation to actually pay the debt does not arise until a notice of assessment is issued and mailed to the taxpayer. The applicant submits that a certificate can only be issued upon default of payment following these actions. Failing proof of issuance of the assessment and proof of mailing of the notice to the taxpayer, the certificate is invalid and must be quashed.

[15] The applicant alleges that notices of the underlying corporate assessments were never issued, or, if issued, were never mailed to Dupont. While it is not necessary to prove receipt, the burden of proving the existence of the notices and the date of mailing falls on the Minister. This, asserts the applicant, is within the Minister's knowledge and the respondent alone controls the means of adducing evidence of the completion of either act.

[16] In this case, the applicant contends, the Minister's evidence contains significant inconsistencies and falls short of establishing that notices of assessment were in fact created and mailed to the applicant. The respondent has been unable to produce the corporate assessments. Moreover, the evidence pertaining to the respondent's mailing practices at the relevant time was not first hand knowledge but was based on "information and belief", contrary to Rule 81 of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106. It was within the power of the respondent to provide direct evidence of CRA's mailing procedures, especially in light of the importance of mailing procedures in this application. As witnesses with that knowledge did not provide evidence, the applicant could not directly cross-examine the source of the information relied on by the respondent.

[17] The applicant further submits that its right to procedural fairness has been breached

Digitized by Google

by the Minister's certification of the amount payable without first issuing Notices of Assessment. The scheme of the tax legislation provides that a taxpayer may object to a liability imposed after the taxpayer has been assessed: subsection 165(1) of the ITA; Sections 27.1, 92, 22 CPP, EI and ITA (Ontario) respectively. The respondent is required to "give a taxpayer adequate notice of the basis of reassessment, so that a taxpayer can fairly appeal or respond": Frederick J. Buccini v. Her Majesty the Queen, 2000 DTC 6685 (FCA), at para. 16, referring to Continental Bank of Canada v. R. [1998] 2 S.C.R. 358.

[18] The applicant argues it is fair and reasonable for it to have the legitimate expectation that before the Minister "certifies" an "amount payable" pursuant to subsection 223(2) of the ITA, the Minister would have first ascertained the amount payable via the normal assessment process and then would have completed that assessment process by issuing (i.e. mailing) a Notice of Assessment to the applicant. This would allow the applicant the opportunity to respond by objecting. In the result, the certificate should be nullified as the Minister has not satisfied the burden of proving that the assessment had been mailed.

[19] The respondent's position is that the CRA is not required to mail notices for failure to remit payroll taxes before certifying a payroll tax debt. The ITA requires all employers to calculate, withhold and remit payroll taxes from employee wages. There is no requirement for the mailing of notices of assessment prior to these amounts becoming due. Employers regularly become liable to pay amounts to the Crown without being assessed by the Minister. If the Minister assesses an employer for failure to remit payroll taxes that have become payable, those outstanding amounts are payable to the Receiver General, even if they are in dispute. If an employer fails to comply with source deduction requirements, any outstanding "amount payable", plus interest, may be certified by the Minister of National Revenue for the purpose of securing the debt or as a precursor to collection: In the Matter of an Assessment or Assessments by the Minister of National Revenue Under the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Act Against 92000 Holdings Limited, 93 DTC 5047 at para. 5. Collections restrictions, which otherwise prevent the Minister from certifying a tax debt until a notice of assessment has been mailed, do not apply to payroll taxes, in the respondent's submission: ITA s. 225.1(6)(b); Canada (Minister of National Revenue) v. Swiftsure Taxi Co, 2004 FC 980, [2004] 4 C.T.C. 304 at para. 16; Jus D'Or Inc. v. CCRA, 2007 FC 754 at paras. 12-15.

[20] Further, the respondent submits, mailing requirements are procedural fairness requirements material to pursuing rights of appeal. They do not restrict the collection of payroll debts. Should there have been a true error on the part of the Minister in failing to mail the assessment, the respondent contends that Dupont's remedy is to request an extension of time for filing a Notice of Objection prior to appealing to the Tax Court of Canada.

[21] I agree with the applicant that where proof of the issuance and mailing of a notice of assessment is required, the onus falls on the Minister. This is because the facts are "peculiarly within his [the Minister's] knowledge and he alone controls the means of adducing evidence of them": Aztec Industries Inc. v. Her Majesty the Queen, 95 DTC 5235, [1995] 1 C.T.C. 327 (FCA) at para. 12. Here, the applicant's counsel has effectively pointed out shortcomings in the Minister's evidence concerning the mailing of the underlying assessments such as the lack of direct evidence from a mailroom employee and inconsistencies in the evidence of the Minister's witnesses as to the procedures followed in 2003. But, if it is necessary to find that notices of assessment were mailed, I am satisfied on the basis of the Minister's evidence that the two notices of failures to remit payroll assessments for the 2001 and 2002 tax years were placed into the CRA mail stream and mailed to Dupont in 2003. [22] As stated by Justice Marshall Rothstein in Kovacevic v. Canada, 2003

Digitized by Google

FCA 293, 308 N.R. 266 at para. 16:
[w]hen legislation requires that documents be sent by a large organization such as a government department by ordinary mail, but does not require registered or certified mail or evidence of a more formal means of sending … [G]enerally it would be sufficient to set out in an affidavit, from the last individual in authority who dealt with the document before it entered the normal mailing procedures of the office, what those procedures were.
That standard, in my view, was satisfied by Mr. Gentile's evidence.
[23] I note that in Kovacevic, the legislation required the use of registered mail and the evidence fell short of proving that was done. However, I do not think it was necessary in this case for the Minister to prove that notices of assessment were mailed to Dupont in order to establish that certification of the tax debt was reasonable. There is no factual dispute in this matter that Dupont, through its controlling directors, was aware of the outstanding tax liability. They had met with Mr. Pizzonia and had received from him the trust report setting out the amounts owing for the unpaid payroll taxes in 2001 and 2002.
[24] Mr. Gomes acknowledged in his evidence that he was aware of the debt and that it was roughly the same amount that Dupont was owed by Applewood. Mr. Gomes also acknowledged not having attended to his tax records between the time Dupont and Applewood separated in 2003 and the fire that occurred in January, 2005, thereby displaying a degree of negligence with respect to his corporate responsibilities, tantamount to wilful blindness. He could not say whether the notices were in his box of records or not as he did not examine the contents of the box. The urgency of the matter was only brought home to him when he received the Director's Derivative Liability Assessment in 2005 which attributes the corporation's tax debt to him in his personal capacity.
[25] The jurisprudence relied upon by the applicant to advance the claim that the Minister is required to provide the taxpayer with a notice of assessment involve cases pertaining to personal income tax, not payroll taxes. So, although the Minister may be obliged to provide an individual with a notice assessment, the same is not true for the withholding and remitting of payroll taxes. Section 153 of the ITA explicitly instructs those persons who pay out wages to deduct a certain percentage of the salary for taxes and remit that amount to the Receiver General:
[27] Section 153 of the ITA and s. 108 of the Regulations both apply to the applicant Dupont. In allowing Applewood to transfer only net amounts to Dupont to pay its employees, it failed to adhere to the tax scheme.
[28] Further, the provisions in subsections 225.1(1) and following prohibit the Minister from, among other things, certifying an assessed tax debt or giving notice of such a liability until after the collection-commencement day in respect of the amount. Subsection 225.1(6)(b) makes it clear that these provisions do not apply to amounts required to be deducted or withheld:

[29] Therefore, as correctly argued by the respondent, it is not necessary to mail notices of assessment prior to these amounts becoming due. This is consistent with the duty of the Minister to promote and protect the public interest by ensuring the ITA is applied fairly: Canada (Minister of National Revenue) v. Swiftsure Taxi Co., 2004 FC 980, [2004] 4 C.T.C. 304 at para. 16; Jus D'Or Inc. v. CCRA, 2007 FC 754 at paras. 12-15.
[30] Subsection 227(9.4) of the Act places the liability for paying taxes resulting from failure to remit an amount deducted or withheld on the person responsible for failing to do so:[32] In other words, the CRA is entitled to verify that payroll taxes have been properly remitted to the Receiver General. Nothing in the present matter suggests that the CRA pursued a course of action that was beyond the ambit of its power as provided by the ITA. The applicant Dupont did fail to withhold employee tax and remit that tax to the Receiver General. The CRA had the statutory authority to follow up on that failure through the certification of the tax debt.

Digitized by Google

[33] Having found that it was unnecessary for the Minister to issue notices of assessment to the taxpayer Dupont for unpaid payroll taxes, the question of whether the applicant received these assessments becomes moot. In any event, and has already been suggested, the applicant may apply to the Minister to request an extension of time for filing a notice of objection prior to appealing to the Tax Court of Canada: ITA s. 166.1(1); ITA s. 166.2(5) (b) (iii).

[34] Based on the foregoing, I cannot find that it was unreasonable for the Minister to certify the debt in the amount of $204,704.21 plus interest. The ITA does not require the Minister to provide notices of assessments to corporate taxpayers who have an ongoing obligation to remit payroll taxes. Furthermore, it is clear from the evidence that the applicant was either fully aware, or ought to have been aware, of the debt owed and the obligation to pay it. As such, the certificate shall not be declared a nullity and this application for judicial review is dismissed with costs to the respondent.

JUDGMENT

IT IS THE JUDGMENT OF THIS COURT that:

the Certificate filed in the Federal Court Registry under s.223 of the Income Tax Act on June 11, 2004 as Court File No. 6552-04 that the amount of $204, 704.21 plus interest from May 15, 2004 was payable by the applicant and had not been paid is valid;

the application for judicial review of the decision to certify the applicant's tax debt and the Certificate is dismissed; and the respondent is awarded costs fixed at $2000.00.

"Richard G. Mosley" Judge

Giovanni Zen v. MNR, 2010 FCA 180, The Minister Does Not have to Issue Additional Assessments to realize the Interest Accruing

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT EVANS J.A.

INTRODUCTION

[1] Giovanni Zen was a director of Pacific Refineries Inc. in the years when, in breach of its statutory duty, it failed to remit to the Minister of National Revenue payroll source deductions in respect of its employees. The Minister issued notices of assessment to Pacific Refineries for the amount owing. The Minister also issued a notice of assessment to Mr Zen on the basis that he was jointly and severally liable for the tax debt that Pacific Refineries incurred while he was a director. Neither Pacific Refineries nor Mr Zen discharged the liability. Both are liable for the interest that has continued to accrue.

[2] The question to be decided in this appeal is whether Mr Zen is required to pay the interest that accrued on the unpaid debt after the Minister of National Revenue issued the notice of assessment to him, or whether the Minister must issue another notice of assessment with respect to that interest before he can take steps to collect it. In other words, the question is not whether Mr Zen is jointly liable with Pacific Refineries for the accrued interest (it is conceded that he is), but whether the Minister can collect it without having to issue a notice of assessment for this amount.

Digitized by Google

[3] The appellant says that, even though subsection 227.1(1) of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp) (ITA), imposes on directors a continuing liability for interest on their corporation's unpaid tax debt and the amount of their liability in respect of that debt has been assessed, no provision of the ITA requires them to pay interest that accrues after the assessment. Consequently, he argues, the Minister cannot take collection measures without a further assessment. [4] The Minister, on the other hand, submits that, once the amount owing by a director by virtue of subsection 227.1(1) has been assessed under subsection 227(10), those provisions, when read together, require the director to pay subsequently accrued interest without the need for a further assessment. Accordingly, collection measures can be taken against the director to recover both the amount assessed and the interest that has subsequently accrued.

[5] Mr Zen appeals from a decision of the Federal Court (2009 FC 531), in which Justice Blanchard (Judge) granted an application by the Minister for a compliance order in respect of requirements for information (RFIs) issued to Mr Zen to determine his ability to pay the interest that has accrued on Pacific Refineries' debt since his liability for that debt was assessed. At the same time, the Judge dismissed an application for judicial review by Mr Zen to set aside the RFIs, which he has challenged on the ground that he is not liable to pay the unassessed interest that accrued after the assessment.

[6] The Judge held that the combined effect of subsections 227.1(1) and 227(10) of the ITA imposes an obligation on Mr Zen to pay the post-assessment interest, and that the Minister was therefore authorized to issue RFIs to assist in collecting it from him. In my view, the Judge correctly interpreted the relevant provisions of the ITA, which are appended to these reasons, and I would therefore dismiss the appeal.

FACTUAL AND LEGAL BACKGROUND

[7] The relevant facts can be stated briefly. Mr Zen was a director of Pacific Refineries from 1981 to 1986. Starting in 1982, the Minister issued notices of assessment to Pacific Refineries under subsection 227(10) determining the amount that it owed for failing to remit payroll source deductions as required by subsection 153(1) of the ITA. The amounts in question related mainly to income tax, but also included relatively small amounts for Canada Pension Plan and Unemployment Insurance. The assessments issued to Pacific Refineries also included penalties, and a substantial amount of interest, imposed at that time by subsection 227(9) (see now subsection 227(9.2)).

[8] On December 8, 1986, the Minister also issued a notice of assessment to Mr Zen pursuant to subsection 227(10) with respect to his liability under subsection 227.1(1). The amount assessed was $103,463.62, which included the amounts of the payroll source deductions that Pacific Refineries had failed to remit, as well as penalties and the interest that had accrued to date.

[9] Having filed a notice of objection to the assessment, which the Minister confirmed on July 3, 1987, Mr Zen appealed to the Tax Court, but discontinued his appeal on January 5, 1996. Mr Zen also unsuccessfully applied to the Minister for relief under the "fairness package" in respect of the 1986 assessment.

[10] Because the amount for which Mr Zen had been assessed remained unpaid, the Minister served him with RFIs under paragraph 231.2(1)(a) of the ITA seeking net worth information in order to determine his ability to pay the outstanding balance which, as of February 26, 2006, the Minister calculated to be $615,587.20. This comprised the amount of the 1986 assessment ($103,463.62) and the interest that had subsequently accrued over the nearly twenty years that the assessed amount remained unpaid. [11] Following the institution of the present proceedings, Mr Zen paid to the Minister on February 21, 2007, the amount for which he had been assessed in 1986, that is, $103,463.62. The Minister acknowledged the payment on May 15, 2008, and advised Mr Zen that his outstanding balance was now $629,849.47, comprising the interest that had accrued since the 1986 assessment. Because the RFIs under review in these proceedings were issued after Mr Zen had paid the 1986 balance, they relate solely to his ability to pay the post-1986 assessment interest. If Mr Zen is not liable to pay the unassessed interest, the RFIs are unauthorized and must be set aside.

Digitized by Google

DECISION OF THE FEDERAL COURT

[12] The Judge stated that subsection 227.1(1) makes directors jointly and severally liable for the amount of any payroll source deductions that their corporation failed to remit "and any interest or penalties relating to it". He noted that subsection 227(10) empowers the Minister to assess "at any time" the amount payable under subsection 227.1(1) and provides that, when a notice of assessment is issued, "Divisions I and J of Part I apply with any modifications that the circumstances require." Division I of Part I of the ITA includes section 161, the section on interest. Among other things, subsection 161(1) requires the taxpayer to pay interest "at the prescribed rate" on the balance of "the taxpayer's taxes payable" outstanding on the due date.

[13] The Judge held that, when subsections 227.1(1) and 227(10) are read together, it is clear that directors are liable to pay interest accruing after their liability has been assessed under subsection 227(10), without the need for a further assessment. He noted that, while the ITA does not expressly impose this liability to pay, subsection 227(10) incorporates subsection 161(1), "with any modifications that the circumstances require". To modify subsection 161(1) so that it applies, not only to a taxpayer's taxes payable, but also to a director's third party debt under subsection 227.1(1), would not, the Judge held (at para. 26), be a substantive change, because Parliament clearly intended directors to be liable on an ongoing basis for the accruing interest and penalties owed by their corporation with respect to amounts that it had failed to remit.

[14] The position adopted by the appellant, the Judge said (at para. 28),

… would result in the Minister having to issue a new assessment in order to collect what is clearly a continuing liability of directors for accrued interest under the Act.

This would be inconsistent with the clear language of the Act and the intention of Parliament.

ISSUE AND ANALYSIS

[15] The issue to be decided in this appeal is whether directors, to whom notices of assessment have been issued under subsection 227(10) in respect of their joint and several liability for a corporate tax debt, are required to pay interest that has accrued after those assessments were issued, when that interest has not itself been the subject of a notice of assessment. This issue has not previously been considered by this Court.

Appellant's argument

[16] Counsel conceded that it is open to the Minister to issue a notice of assessment to Mr Zen for the amount of interest that has accrued since the 1986 assessment was issued. Subsection 227.1(1) provides that directors are jointly and severally liable for an amount not remitted by a corporation in breach of the ITA "and any interest or penalties relating to it." Subsection 227(10) empowers the Minister to assess a director "at any time" for an amount payable under section 227.1.

Digitized by Google

[17] Since Mr Zen discontinued his appeal against the 1986 assessment, it would seem that he could not object to an assessment of the interest that has accrued since 1986 on the ground that he was not jointly liable with the corporation for the amount of either the source deductions not remitted by Pacific Refineries, or the penalties and interest that had accrued up to the date of the assessment. He could, however, refuse to pay the amount of subsequently accrued interest that the Minister was seeking to collect, on the ground that it had not been calculated correctly. Nonetheless, without another assessment, counsel submits, Mr Zen is not indebted to the Minister for the interest that has accrued since 1986. Accordingly, the RFIs issued in respect of that interest are not authorized by the ITA and must be set aside.

[18] The conceptual basis of the appellant's argument is the well established legal principle that, in the absence of a provision in the ITA to the contrary, taxpayers are not required to pay an amount for which the ITA makes them liable until the Minister has issued a notice of assessment of the amount payable.

[19] Subsection 161(1) is an exception to this general principle. It provides that when a taxpayer is late in paying the amount of her "taxes payable", the taxpayer "shall pay to the Receiver General interest at the prescribed rate" on the balance owing. The effect of this provision is that, once a taxpayer has been assessed, he or she can be required, without the need for another assessment, to pay interest that accrues on the amount of the tax debt after the assessment was issued.

[20] In contrast, counsel for Mr Zen says, subsection 227.1(1) only makes a director jointly and severally liable for the corporation's unpaid tax debt. Accordingly, he argues, a director can be required to pay that debt, including any penalty and accrued interest, only after the Minster has issued a notice of assessment under subsection 227(10).

[21] No provision of the ITA, counsel submits, requires the director to pay interest that accrues after the assessment. He says that section 161 does not apply to interest accruing on assessments made under subsection 227(10) with respect to the joint and several liability imposed on a director by subsection 227.1, because that liability is not for "taxes payable". Therefore, in order to collect from Mr Zen the interest that has accrued since the 1986 assessment, the Minister must issue another notice of assessment.

ITA, section 160

[22] Counsel for Mr Zen says that cases decided under section 160 of the ITA support his argument. Like subsection 227.1(1), section 160 is essentially a collection provision, in the sense that both make a third party jointly and severally liable for the tax debt of a principal tax debtor, in order to enhance the Minister's ability to recover the tax owed by the principal debtor.

[23] Subsection 160(1) provides that, when a person with an unpaid tax liability transfers property in a non-arm's length transaction, the transferee is jointly and severally liable for the transferor's tax debt, including interest payable by the transferor. The Minister can assess the transferee under subsection 160(2) "at any time" for the amount owing under subsection 160(1).

[24] However, unlike the joint and several liability imposed on a director by subsection 227.1(1), the amount of a transferee's liability under section 160 is not coterminous with that of the tax debtor. Thus, a transferee is not liable for an amount that exceeds the lesser of the following two amounts: the value of the property transferred, minus any consideration given for it by the transferee (subparagraph 160(1)(e)(i)), and the total tax and interest that the transferor was liable to pay in or in respect of the year of the transfer and any preceding years (subparagraph 160(1)(e)(ii)).

Digitized by Google

[25] Algoa Trust v. Her Majesty The Queen, 98 DTC 1614 (T.C.C.) is a leading authority on section
160. The transferee of property in that case, Algoa Trust, successfully appealed against a notice of assessment issued to it under subsection 160(2). The assessment included interest on the transferor's unpaid tax. Algoa Trust appealed on the ground that, when the amounts that it had already paid on account of its liability under section 160 were included, the amount of the assessment exceeded the value of the property transferred. Algoa Trust is thus distinguishable from the present appeal because subsection 227.1(1) contains no analogous cap on a director's liability for the corporation's debt.

[26] However, Justice Dussault also made the following more general statements about the nature of the liability imposed by section 160 and the transferee's liability for interest.

[3] The rule stated in s. 160 of the Act does not have the effect of creating a tax debt. The effect of the provision is not to create a second debt: there is only one tax debt. The wording of the Act is quite clear: the purpose of s. 160 is essentially to add another debtor who is jointly and severally liable with the transferor. This new debtor is called the transferee. There is thus no new debt created under the Act and the obligation arises not from the assessment but from the Act itself. Fundamentally, therefore, there is only one debt and only that debt can bear interest.

[4] First, subsection (1) of s. 160 in fact states that the transferee is jointly and severally liable and that his or her liability is limited to the lesser of the two amounts mentioned in s. 160(1)(e)(i) and (ii), namely (i) the value of the property transferred less the consideration, and (ii) the total of all amounts which the transferor is liable to pay in or in respect of the year of the transfer or any preceding year, that is to say, for the year of the transfer and for any preceding years.

[5] Secondly, s. 160(2) provides that the Minister of National Revenue ("the Minister") may at any time make an assessment. This is also quite clear. However, the limit imposed in s. 160(1)(e) must be observed for each assessment.

[6] Thirdly, I would say that there is no provision of the Act regarding interest that may be applicable to an assessment issued pursuant to s. 160 of the Act. This is logical, since there is no new tax debt and an assessment under s. 160 already incorporates the interest which the transferor owed in addition to the tax. The assessment may also incorporate penalties and interest thereon. (Emphasis added)

[27] Counsel for Mr Zen relies on these passages for two propositions. First, like the liability imposed by section 160, the liability of a director under subsection 227.1(1) is not a tax debt. There is only one tax debt, namely that of the corporation that failed to remit. Section 160 and subsection 227.1(1) merely add a second debtor in order to assist the Crown in recovering the tax debt owed by the principal debtor. I agree with this analysis, which I do not understand the Minister to have challenged in the present appeal.

[28] The second proposition on which counsel for Mr Zen relies is that interest is not applicable to an assessment under subsection 160(2) of the amount owed by the transferee. In my opinion, however, this proposition does not assist Mr Zen. Whether or not interest is applicable to Mr Zen's 1986 assessment is not determinative of his liability for accruing interest, because subsection 227.1(1) provides that directors are jointly and severally liable to pay the amount that the corporation ought to have remitted "and any interest … relating to it." Thus, even if Mr Zen is not liable to pay interest on his unpaid 1986 assessment, he is liable to pay the interest that has accrued since 1986 on Pacific Refineries' unpaid tax debt.

[29] However, because subsection 227.1(1) is only a charging provision it cannot resolve the issue raised by this appeal: is the Minister authorized to institute legal proceedings to recover from a director interest on an unpaid corporate tax debt that accrued after the director was assessed?

Digitized by Google

[30] Counsel relies on Ho-A-Shoo v. Attorney General of Canada, 2000 DTC 6293 (Ont. Sup. Ct. J.) (Ho-A-Shoo), also a section 160 case, for the proposition that the Minister cannot require the transferee to pay interest that accrues after the transferee has been assessed under subsection 160(2). Dr Ho-A-Shoo was the representative plaintiff in a class action against the Minister by transferees of property from a tax debtor at less than market value. They were seeking to recover payments that they had made to the Minister which, they alleged, were in excess of their liability under section 160.

[31] On a motion by the Minister to strike the action, Justice Cumming formulated (at para. 11) the first issue in the class action as whether the Minister was authorized to demand from a transferee of property an amount of interest that both exceeded the limit on her liability imposed by subparagraph 160(1)(e)(i) (the market value of the transferred property) and had not been the subject of a notice of assessment.

[32] Relying on Algoa Trust, Justice Cumming held (at paras. 12-13) that the Minister could not assess under subsection 160(2) for an amount that exceeded the caps that subsection 160(1) imposed on the liability of a transferee of property. To this extent, Ho-A-Shoo is distinguishable from the present case.

[33] However, the Judge also addressed an argument analogous to that advanced in the present case by Mr Zen's counsel (who, incidentally, had also represented Dr Ho-A-Shoo), namely that section 160 does not authorize the Minister to recover from a transferee interest accruing after the transferee had been assessed, unless it had been the subject of a subsequent assessment.

[34] Relying again on Algoa Trust, Justice Cumming held (at para. 21) that the joint and several liability of a transferee under section 160 is not a tax debt. It is therefore not a debt in respect of "taxes payable" for the purpose of section 161. Accordingly, the Minister could not rely on that as the basis of the transferee's obligation to pay interest. See also Kirkwood v. Her Majesty The Queen, 2003 DTC 277 (T.C.C.) at para. 26.

Summary of conclusions

[35] First, Pacific Refineries was liable to pay the assessed amount of payroll source deductions that it had failed to remit, together with penalties and interest accrued to that time.

[36] Second, Mr Zen was jointly and severally liable under subsection 227.1(1) for Pacific Refineries' tax debt and penalties, as well as the interest accruing on it.

[37] Third, Mr Zen's liability under subsection 227.1(1) for the corporation's debt arises from his joint liability with the corporation, and is not itself a tax debt.

[38] Fourth, by virtue of subsection 227(10), the Minister may assess at any time the amount of Mr Zen's joint and several liability under subsection 227.1(1) for the corporation's debt, together with penalties and accrued interest.

[39] Fifth, subsection 161(1) as enacted does not require a director to pay interest accruing on a corporation's debt after the Minister has issued a notice of assessment to the director under subsection 227(10). This is because subsection 161(1) applies to "taxes payable" under Parts I, I.3, VI or VI.1. The amount assessed under subsection 227(10) in respect of the joint and several liability imposed on the director by subsection 227.1(1) is not for "taxes payable", let alone for "taxes payable" under those Parts of the ITA, since sections 227 and 227.1 are located in Part XV.

[40] To this extent, I agree with the submissions of counsel for Mr Zen. However, one other issue remains to be considered. Subsection 227(10) provides that, when the Minister assesses the amount payable by a director under subsection 227.1(1) and sends a notice of assessment, "Divisions I and J of Part I apply with any modifications that the circumstances require." Section 161 is found in Division I of Part I of the ITA.

Digitized by Google

[41] The question to be decided is whether the modifications to subsection 161(1) that would be required for it to apply to an assessment under subsection 227(10) are permitted by the words "with any modifications that the circumstances require."

ITA, subsection 161(1): "with any modifications that the circumstances require"

[42] In order to apply subsection 161(1) to an assessment under subsection 227(10), it would be necessary to add to paragraphs (a) and (b) of subsection 161(1) words such as "or any amount for which a director is liable under subsection 227.1(1)".

[43] I return to a question raised, but not clearly answered, in Ho-A-Shoo. Justice Cumming expressed dissatisfaction (at para. 16), from a policy perspective, with a result that exempted transferees from liability for unassessed interest on their unpaid joint and several liability for the transferor's tax debt. He asked himself (at para. 18) if the words of subsection 160(2) which he italicized might not make interest chargeable "in respect of a transferee's unpaid fixed liability determined under s. 160".

[44] Subsection 160(2) thus deems an amount assessed under that provision to have been "tax payable": section 152 requires the Minister to determine the amount, if any, of the tax payable for the year by a taxpayer. Nonetheless, Justice Cumming seems to have concluded that these words were not enough to attract the obligation to pay interest imposed by subsection 161(1). His reasons do not address the possibility of modifying subsection 161(1).

[45] In 2007, the Government introduced an amendment to subsection 160(2) in Bill C-10 which was intended to put beyond doubt a taxpayer's liability to pay interest, despite the absence of an assessment. If enacted, the amendment would have added, after the words "the provisions of this Division", "(including, for greater certainty, the provisions in respect of interest payable)". Section 161 is in the same Division of Part I of the ITA as section 160. Bill C-10 lapsed on the dissolution of Parliament in September 2008.

[46] However, even without this proposed amendment, subsection 160(2) would seem better suited than subsection 227(10) to attract subsection 161(1). Unlike subsection 160(2), subsection 227(10) does not treat assessments made under it as though they had been made under section 152, that is, for "taxes payable under Part I". Nonetheless, I do not regard the differences between subsections 160(2) and 227(10) as necessarily determinative of whether it is permissible for a court to modify subsection 161(1) by adding words that would enable the interest provisions of the section to apply to assessments under subsection 227(10) in respect of a director's liability under subsection 227.1(1).

[47] In my view, the modern approach to statutory interpretation should be applied to the interpretation of the words "with any modifications that the circumstances require" as they appear in subsection 227(10). Hence, they are to be read "in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act and the intention of Parliament": Placer Dome Canada Ltd. v. Ontario (Minister of Finance), 2006 SCC 20, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 715 at para. 21. This is subject only to the proviso that, when tax legislation is precise, unequivocal and detailed, and taxpayers are entitled to rely on its clear meaning in structuring their affairs, the text of the statute should "play a dominant role in the interpretive process".

[48] While the statutory words "any modifications that the circumstances require" appear to confer a broad power on the courts, counsel for Mr Zen submits that the jurisprudence demonstrates that this provision, as previously worded, had generally been regarded as quite narrow.

Digitized by Google

[49] Thus, in Ketz v. Her Majesty The Queen, 79 DTC 5142 (F.C.T.D.) (Ketz), the Court refers (at 5144) to authorities interpreting the Latin phrase mutatis mutandis, which the current drafting of subsection 227(10) replaces. These authorities restrict the scope of the phrase mutatis mutandis to necessary changes in points of detail, as opposed to changes to the very substance of the provision in question.

[50] The current legislative phrase, "with any modifications that the circumstances require", has been considered in Lord Rothermere Donation v. Her Majesty The Queen, 2009 TCC 70, 2009 DTC 312 at para. 21 (Rothermere). In that case, Justice Archambault held that the current phrase (in the French text « avec les modifications nécessaires ») enables more extensive changes to be made to a statutory provision than were permitted by mutatis mutandis: no longer are they limited to points of detail.

[51] Justice Archambault also noted (at para. 21) that when the words mutatis mutandis were first replaced, the English version referred to "such modifications as circumstances require". The English version of the text, but not the French, was subsequently changed again, and "any" was substituted for "such". Justice Archambault observed that if Parliament had intended to preserve the narrow scope that the courts had given to mutatis mutandis, it could easily have expressly limited permitted modifications to points of detail, rather than permitting any modifications that circumstances require.

[52] Whether the changes to the statutory text also changed the law is not an easy question. The words mutatis mutandis in subsection 227(10) seem first to have been replaced with English and French words in 1983 by the Income Tax Act (No. 2), 29-30-31-32 Elizabeth II, 1980-81-82-83, c. 40, subsection 123(2). The English text of subsection 227(10) was amended again by the Income Tax Amendments Act, 1997, c. 19, subsection 226(3), which changed "such modifications" to "any modifications" in the English version; no corresponding change was made to the French text.

[53] It is reasonable to conclude that when Parliament in 1983 replaced the Latin phrase in subsection 227(10) with "plain" English and French words it merely intended to make the provision more accessible. This suggests that the change was in the nature of a consolidation of the law. There is a strong presumption that consolidations are not intended to make substantive changes to the law: Ruth Sullivan, Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes, 5th ed. (Markham, Ontario: LexisNexis Canada Inc., 2008) at 655-59.

[54] On the other hand, the amendments to the pre-1983 version were enacted by Parliament as a small part of a large series of amendments to the ITA, and the change to the English text in 1997 was made for reasons other than the elimination of Latin. These considerations suggest that the amendments to subsection 227(10) may have been intended to have had a substantive effect.

[55] However this may be, I need express no concluded opinion on the matter. I am satisfied that, when the modification power conferred by subsection 227(10) is viewed contextually and purposively, the modification required to subsection 161(1) to make it applicable to an assessment under subsection 227(10) in respect of the liability imposed by subsection 227.1(1), is closer to a change in point of detail than to a change to the very substance of subsection 161(1).

[56] In contrast, the modification refused in Ketz would have extended to non-residents the benefit of a general averaging provision that Parliament had provided to residents. Justice Dubé concluded (at 5144-45):

… residence for the previous year is an essential condition for the application of subsection 118(1), not merely a point of detail. … If it had been the intention of Parliament to open the general averaging provisions of subsection 118(1) to non-residents, that intention would have been clearly spelled out in the statute.

Digitized by Google

In other words, the modification would have decreased the amount of tax payable by non-resident taxpayers by conferring on them a benefit that Parliament had conferred only on taxpayers resident in Canada. Since the proposed modification would have reduced the amount of tax for which non-residents were otherwise liable, it constituted a substantive change in the law and the statutory scheme.
[57] The reasons in Ho-A-Shoo do not explain why the modification provision in subsection 160(2) did not apply in that case. However, the plaintiff also alleged that her payment exceeded a statutory cap on her liability under section 160 (that is, the value of the property transferred). Therefore, the modification required to render her liable for unassessed interest under subsection 161(1) would have amounted to a substantive change to the ITA.
[58] The dispute in Rothermere concerned the date from which interest was payable by the Minister on tax refunds. The ITA had been amended so that interest on refunds under Part I did not start to accrue until forty five days after the filing deadline had elapsed. This enabled the Minister to process timely returns without incurring interest. The question was whether an "any modifications that the circumstances require" clause enabled the provision to be applied to refunds in respect of Part XIII tax as well. Justice Archambault held (at para. 30) that, although more than "a point of detail", the modification proposed was permissible, because "the result is in harmony with the scheme of the Act and the intent of Parliament" (para. 28).
[59] Although he does not address the issue explicitly, Justice Blanchard's reasons indicate (at paras. 21-26) that he concluded that subsection 161(1) could be modified so that it applies to assessments under subsection 227(10). For the following reasons, I agree that the modifications required to make subsection 161(1) applicable to assessments under subsection 227(10) in respect of liability imposed by subsection 227.1(1) do not change the very substance of subsection 161(1). [60] First, as counsel conceded, to modify subsection 161(1) so as to apply it to Mr Zen's liability to pay the interest accruing on Pacific Refineries' tax debt does not increase the amount for which he is liable under subsection 227.1(1). True, the legal basis of the liability of a director under subsection 227.1(1) is not a tax debt, and the amount assessed under subsection 227(10) is therefore not for "tax payable". Nonetheless, the single debt for which Mr Zen is jointly liable with Pacific Refineries is a tax debt, at least to the extent that it arose from the corporation's failure to remit income tax source deductions.
[61] Second, subsection 227(10) authorizes the Minister to issue an assessment of a liability under subsection 227.1(1) "at any time". Hence, if the Minister were to issue a notice of assessment tomorrow requiring payment of the interest that accrued after Mr Zen's 1986 assessment, counsel agrees that he would be required to pay the amount assessed, if it had been properly calculated. Thus, the modification to subsection 161(1) does not alter the amount that the Minister can require Mr Zen to pay pursuant to subsection 227.1(1).
[62] Third, counsel for the appellant also agreed that there was no reason of policy or principle why a director who has been assessed under subsection 227(10) in respect of a liability under subsection 227.1(1) should not be liable to pay subsequently accruing interest as if the amount owing were "tax payable". After all, once the amount of a corporation's tax debt has been assessed, for which a director is jointly liable, the corporation is now liable to pay accruing interest without the need for another assessment by virtue of subsection 227(9.2).
[63] Subsection 227(10) could have been modelled on subsection 160(2), and deemed the amount assessed under it to be tax payable under section 152, so as to make section 161

Digitized by Google

applicable. Further, the amendment proposed to subsection 160(2), which was designed to make it quite clear that the interest provisions of Part I apply, could have been extended to subsection 227(10). However, given the complexity of the ITA, I draw no particular inference from these disparities in provisions located in different Parts of the Act.

[64] Fourth, the effect of modifying section 161 as proposed, and thereby requiring Mr Zen to pay the interest that has accrued since the 1986 assessment, would deprive him of the procedural rights of objection (subsection 165(1)) and appeal (subsection 169(1)) that arise following the issue of a notice of assessment.

[65] However, Mr Zen has already been assessed for the amount of the corporation's debt, including the penalties and interest that had accrued up to the date of that assessment in 1986. He exercised his rights to object and appeal but, with the benefit of legal advice, discontinued his appeal. Consequently, since the discontinuance of the appeal would seem to preclude Mr Zen from disputing the correctness of the 1986 assessment, there would appear to be little left for Mr Zen to appeal if the Minister were required to issue a notice of assessment with respect to the interest that has accrued since the 1986 assessment. It would always be open to Mr Zen, in the course of enforcement proceedings in the Federal Court, to challenge the correctness of the Minister's calculation of the amount of the post-assessment interest, which is a largely mechanical exercise. [66] Accordingly, Mr Zen will not be deprived of a fair opportunity to challenge in a judicial proceeding the calculation of the amount of interest owing if the modification enables the Minister to start proceedings with a view to collecting the post-1986 assessment interest without having to issue another notice of assessment.

[67] Fifth, modifying section 161 so as to make it applicable to a subsection 227(10) assessment of liability under subsection 227.1(1) enables the Minister to commence collection measures as soon as a director had been advised by the Minister of the amount of interest that had accrued since the last assessment was issued. Normally, the Minister does not commence collection proceedings until an objection to a notice of assessment has been determined and, if the Minister's decision is appealed, the Tax Court has decided the appeal, or the time for objecting and appealing has elapsed. See Canada Revenue Agency, Tax Guide, P148, "Resolving Your Dispute: Objections and Appeal Rights under the Income Tax Act" (December 2009) at 19, online: http://www.cra arc.gc.ca/E/pub/tg/p148/p148-09e.pdf.

[68] The loss of an opportunity to further delay the collection of the interest that has continued to accrue by virtue of subsection 227.1(1) may well thus be detrimental to Mr Zen.

[69] Nonetheless, since, for twenty years, Mr Zen has had the use of money that the 1986 assessment required him to pay, an argument that he is entitled to further delay the collection of the interest that has accrued since 1986 is unlikely to evoke much sympathy among Canadian taxpayers. There seems no valid reason for treating directors who are jointly liable with their corporation for its tax debts differently from the corporation itself (see now subsection 227(9.4)) or, indeed, from other taxpayers who can be required, as a result of section 161 (with or with out necessary modifications), to pay accrued interest on tax debts without the need for a further notice of assessment and the consequential benefit of the postponement of collection measures.

[70] The modification to subsection 161(1) required in the present case to enable the Minister, without having to issue another assessment, to collect the amount for which Mr Zen is liable would thus be consistent with the scheme of the ITA, and would enhance its efficient administration.

[71] On the other hand, to adopt Mr Zen's position that the power to modify in subsection 227(10) does not permit the modification required here opens up the possibility of an unending succession of notices of assessment, notices of objection, and appeals, which are apt to serve little purpose other than to delay the collection of tax. Thus, by the time that one notice of assessment for interest accrued was issued, objected to, and appealed, additional interest would have accrued, and another notice would be required before that interest could be collected.

Digitized by Google

[72] In my opinion, there is little to commend in an interpretation of the modification power in subsection 227(10) that is likely to result in even more delay in the collection of accrued interest, and serves only to deprive Mr Zen of the opportunity to postpone the payment of an amount for which he is liable under subsection 227.1(1).

[73] A statutory modification provision confers an unusual power on courts. The normal role of the judicial branch of government with respect to legislation is to interpret and apply the law as enacted by the Legislature. A cornerstone of parliamentary democracy is that changes to the law require the authorization of the Legislature. However, the exigencies of administration in the modern state have also long required Legislatures to delegate extensive law-making powers. In Canada, these powers are most often delegated to politically accountable bodies and officials with an institutional expertise in public administration, such as the Governor (or Lieutenant Governor) in Council, individual Ministers of the Crown, and municipalities.

[74] The fact that courts have neither of these qualities counsels a cautious approach to the scope of the power delegated to them to modify provisions of the ITA, and indicates that it should be interpreted more narrowly than the current text suggests. Thus, determining whether a proposed modification is permitted by the delegated power (to use the terminology associated with mutatis mutandis: is it a change in detail or in substance?) requires a court to consider whether considerations of efficiency outweigh the benefits of subjecting it to the scrutiny of the normal legislative process.

[75] In my opinion, the modifications to subsection 161(1) proposed in the present case do not warrant the costs of requiring a Parliamentary amendment. They do not involve the kinds of technical issues, policy choices or wide ranging implications for the administration of the ITA which our notions of democratic and responsible government require to be left to be resolved through the legislative process.

[76] For all the above reasons, the modifications to subsection 161(1) required to apply it to an assessment under subsection 227(10) of a liability under subsection 227.1(1) are, in my opinion, the very kind contemplated by Parliament when it conferred the power to modify. They do not change the very substance of the provision.

CONCLUSIONS

[77] For these reasons, I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

"John M. Evans" J.A.
"I agree
Pierre Blais C.J." "I agree
M. Nadon J.A."

Directors' Liability Section 227.1 of the Income Tax Act, Section 323 of the Excise Tax Act, Section 81 of the Air Travellers Security Charge Act, and subsection 295(1) of the Excise Act, 2001
IC 89-2R2
DATE: March 24, 2006

Digitized by Google

This Circular cancels and replaces Information Circular IC89-2R, dated June 27, 1997 and IC89-2R-Erratum, dated August 8, 1997.

Notice to the reader:

- This is an HTML version of the original document. It is also available in other formats, including PDF (which is an exact rendition of the original).
- This version is only available electronically.

---

1. This Circular outlines the consequences which corporate directors may face, when the corporation, of which they are a director, fails to deduct, withhold, remit, or pay certain amounts of money held in trust for the Crown. Under these circumstances, corporate directors may be held personally liable pursuant to section 227.1 of the Income Tax Act ("ITA"), section 323 of the Excise Tax Act ("ETA"), section 81 of the Air Travellers Security Charge Act ("ATSCA"), subsection 295(1) of the Excise Act, 2001 ("EA2001"), and similar provisions of the Canada Pension Plan, and the Employment Insurance Act.

2. While the purpose of this Circular is to provide information on section 227.1 of the ITA, section 323 of the ETA, section 81 of the ATSCA, and subsection 295(1) of the EA2001, the Circular itself is not law. The law is set out in the statutes, and a copy of the relevant provisions of the ITA, the ETA, the ATSCA, and the EA2001 is attached as Appendix A.

3. Corporations (for-profit, non-profit, or not-for-profit) are required to deduct, withhold, collect, remit, or pay amounts for

(a) patronage dividends (subsection 135(3) of the ITA);

(b) salary, wages, certain benefits, and payments out of various plans (subsection 153(1) of the ITA);

(c) refundable tax (Part VII of the ITA) for share-purchase tax credits designated by the corporation;

(d) refundable tax (Part VIII of the ITA) for scientific research and experimental development tax credits designated by the corporation;

(e) dividends, interest, or proceeds of disposition received on behalf of beneficial owners of shares, if the corporation is a broker or dealer in securities, and if such owners are unknown;

(f) the payment or crediting of certain amounts to non-residents;

(g) the goods and services tax/harmonized sales tax ("GST/HST") (Part IX of the ETA);

(h) the air travellers security charge (ATSCA); and,

(i) the Excise duty payable (EA2001).

4. This Circular focuses on (b), (g), (h) and (i) in paragraph 3.

5. Corporate directors who are in office when the corporation, of which they are a director, fails to deduct, withhold, collect, remit, or pay the amounts in (b), (g), (h), and (i) of paragraph 3, may be personally liable, together with the corporation, to pay part or all of these amounts:

(a) in the case of a failure to remit or pay, the unpaid amount, plus any related penalties and interest;

(b) in the case of a failure to deduct or withhold amounts from any remuneration, a penalty of 10 or 20 per cent (as the case may be) of the amount that should have been deducted, plus any related interest;

(c) in the case of a failure to collect and/or remit amounts of GST/HST, the amount of that GST/HST that should have been remitted, plus penalties and interest;

(d) in the case of a failure to repay GST/HST refund amounts, to which the corporation was not entitled, that were paid to, or applied to the liability of the corporation, on or after June 29, 2005, plus penalties and interest;

(e) in the case of a failure to pay Air Travellers Security Charge amounts that were or should have been collected, the amount that should have been paid, plus interest; and,

Digitized by Google

(f) in the case of a failure to pay Excise duty amounts that were or should have been collected, the amount that should have been paid plus interest.

The Rules for Liability

6. There are three basic rules to the general rule of personal liability:
(a) the Agency must demonstrate its inability to recover the amounts directly from the corporation;
(b) the Agency must start proceedings to assess directors no later than two years after they have ceased to be directors; and
(c) directors must be unable to show that they exercised the degree of care, diligence, and skill ("due diligence") required to prevent the failure.

The Agency's Obligation

7. To demonstrate its inability to recover the amounts directly from the corporation, the Agency must:
(a) show that its execution against the corporation was returned unsatisfied; or
(b) prove a claim against the corporation in dissolution or liquidation; or
(c) prove a claim against the corporation in bankruptcy.

Limitation

8. Directors are not liable if the Agency commences proceedings to assess them more than two years after they cease to be directors. Directors cease to be directors by resigning, or by operation of law (e.g., they become personally bankrupt).
Directors continue to be directors, although with reduced rights and powers, after a trustee, receiver, liquidator, or other like person, acting in a similar capacity, has been appointed.

Types of Directors

9. The ITA, the ETA, the ATSCA, and the EA2001 do not distinguish between directors, be they passive, nominee, or outside directors. Consequently, their lack of involvement in the affairs of the company may not absolve them from liability. Further, directors who relinquish their responsibilities to co-directors, officers, or employees may be held liable.

De Facto Directors

10. Officers, employees, and others who are not legally appointed as directors, but who perform the functions that directors would perform, may be liable.

Due Diligence

11. Directors should ensure that the corporation is properly withholding deductions. Moreover, a corporation and its directors must act responsibly. Above all, the directors must make every reasonable effort, while deductions, GST/HST, ATSCA, and Excise duty amounts are withheld and collected, to ensure that those amounts will be remitted and paid.
12. Directors are not liable if they exercise due diligence, that is, the diligence that a reasonably prudent person would exercise in comparable circumstances to ensure that the corporation deducts, withholds, collects, remits, or pays the amounts due. The Agency expects that a director should attempt to take positive action to this end by methods such as:
(a) establishing an account for withholdings from employees and remittances of source deductions, as well as for remittances of GST/HST and ATSCA net amounts, and Excise duty;
(b) calling upon financial officers of the corporation to report regularly on the status of the account; and
(c) obtaining regular confirmation that withholdings and remittances have in fact been made during all relevant periods.
13. As well, if the corporation is experiencing financial difficulties, the responsibilities of directors may include the following:
(a) obtaining from the financial institution where the line of credit is extended, an enforceable undertaking to pay all amounts due to the Crown when due;

Digitized by Google

(b) if the corporation is in receivership or is bankrupt, advising the receiver and manager or trustee in writing of the banking arrangements in place for the payment of the source deductions withheld, net GST/HST and ATSCA, and Excise duty.

14. To demonstrate that they exercised due diligence, directors must show that they took reasonable steps to prevent the failure. In other words, the steps must be taken before the failure has occurred, and not after the failure has already occurred.

15. Directors are obliged to be aware of what is happening in the corporation of which he or she is a director. Effective lines of communication between directors and the corporation's responsible employees must be maintained.

16. Directors may not claim that they were uninformed as to the requirements of the applicable statutes. A reasonably prudent person, who is aware that he or she is a director, but who is uncertain as to the extent of the responsibilities as a director, is under a duty to at least attempt to discover what is expected of him or her, and to discharge that duty.

17. While directors may delegate their statutory responsibilities to other directors, they are nonetheless responsible for ensuring that payroll deductions, GST/HST, ATSCA, and Excise duty are remitted.

18. The due diligence test is subjective as well as objective. It is objective in that there has to be a standard against which to judge a director, i.e., a reasonable person; it is subjective in the sense that the director must have done what a reasonably prudent person would have done in the circumstances. What constitutes due diligence, then, would vary with the circumstances of each case.

Assessment Policy

19. Following an initial investigation, the Agency will inform, in writing, directors who may be liable, that one or more assessments under section 227.1 of the ITA, section 323 of the ETA, section 81 of the ATSCA, or subsection 295(1) of the EA2001 are being considered.

20. It is in the interest of each director to respond and to explain all actions taken to ensure that the corporation deducted, withheld, remitted, or paid and, where possible, to provide documentation of these actions. The Agency will consider the merits of every response before deciding to issue an assessment.

21. If a director does not reply within the time set out in the proposal letter, the Agency may issue an assessment without further notice.

22. The provisions of section 227.1 of the ITA, section 323 of the ETA, section 81 of the ATSCA, and subsection 295(1) of the EA2001 are remedial, not penal, and as such are a means of collection. Each director may be assessed for the full amount of its corporation's liability, but a director who pays an amount towards this liability is entitled to:

(a) the same preference in liquidation, dissolution, or bankruptcy proceedings as would otherwise have been available to the Crown; and,

(b) a contribution from all other directors who are liable.

APPENDIX A

INCOME TAX ACT

227.1(1) Liability of directors for failure to deduct

(1) Liability of directors for failure to deduct. – Where a corporation has failed to deduct or withhold an amount as required by subsection 135(3) or section 153 or 215, has failed to remit such an amount or has failed to pay an amount of tax for a taxation year as required under Part VII or VIII, the directors of the corporation at the time the corporation was required to deduct, withhold, remit or pay the amount are jointly and severally liable, together with the corporation, to pay that amount and any interest or penalties relating thereto.

227.1(2) Limitations on liability

(2) Limitations on liability. – A director is not liable under subsection (1), unless

Digitized by Google

(a) a certificate for the amount of the corporation's liability referred to in that subsection has been registered in the Federal Court under section 223 and execution for that amount has been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part;
(b) the corporation has commenced liquidation or dissolution proceedings or has been dissolved and a claim for the amount of the corporation's liability referred to in that subsection has been proved within six months after the earlier of the date of commencement of the proceedings and the date of dissolution; or
(c) the corporation has made an assignment or a receiving order has been made against it under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and a claim for the amount of the corporation's liability referred to in that subsection has been proved within six months after the date of the assignment or receiving order.

227.1(3) Idem

(3) Idem. – A director is not liable for a failure under subsection (1) where the director exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances.

227.1(4) Limitation period

(4) Limitation period. – No action or proceedings to recover any amount payable by a director of a corporation under subsection (1) shall be commenced more than two years after the director last ceased to be a director of that corporation.

227.1(5) Amount recoverable

(5) Amount recoverable. – Where execution referred to in paragraph (2)(a) has issued, the amount recoverable from a director is the amount remaining unsatisfied after execution.

227.1(6) Preference

(6) Preference. – Where a director pays an amount in respect of a corporation's liability referred to in subsection (1) that is proved in liquidation, dissolution or bankruptcy proceedings, the director is entitled to any preference that Her Majesty in right of Canada would have been entitled to had that amount not been so paid and, where a certificate that relates to that amount has been registered, the director is entitled to an assignment of the certificate to the extent of the director's payment, which assignment the Minister is hereby empowered to make.

227.1(7) Contribution

(7) Contribution. – A director who has satisfied a claim under this section is entitled to contribution from the other directors who were liable for the claim.

227(10) Assessment

(10) Assessment. – The Minister may at any time assess any amount payable under
(a) subsection 227(8), 227(8.1), 227(8.2), 227(8.3) or 227(8.4) or 224(4) or 224(4.1) or section 227.1 or 235 by a person,
(b) subsection 237.1(7.4) by a person or partnership,
(c) subsection 227(10.2) by a person as a consequence of a failure of a non-resident person to deduct or withhold any amount, or
(d) Part XIII by a person resident in Canada, and, where the Minister sends a notice of assessment to that person or partnership, Divisions I and J of Part I apply with any modifications that the circumstances require.

EXCISE TAX ACT

323(1) Liability of directors (prior to June 29, 2005)

(1) Liability of directors. – Where a corporation fails to remit an amount of net tax as required under subsection 228(2), the directors of the corporation at the time the corporation was required to remit the amount are jointly and severally liable, together with the corporation, to pay that amount and any interest thereon or penalties relating thereto.

323(1) Liability of directors (as at June 29, 2005)

Digitized by Google

(1) Liability of Directors. – If a corporation fails to remit an amount of net tax as required under subsection 228(2) or (2.3) or to pay an amount as required under section 230.1 that was paid to, or was applied to the liability of, the corporation as a net tax refund, the directors of the corporation at the time the corporation was required to remit or pay, as the case may be, the amount are jointly and severally, or solidarily, liable, together with the corporation, to pay the amount and any interest on, or penalties relating to, the amount.

323(2) Limitations

(2) Limitations. – A director of a corporation is not liable under subsection (1) unless

(a) a certificate for the amount of the corporation's liability referred to in that subsection has been registered in the Federal Court under section 316 and execution for that amount has been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part;

(b) the corporation has commenced liquidation or dissolution proceedings or has been dissolved and a claim for the amount of the corporation's liability referred to in subsection (1) has been proved within six months after the earlier of the date of commencement of the proceedings and the date of dissolution; or

(c) the corporation has made an assignment or a receiving order has been made against it under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and a claim for the amount of the corporation's liability referred to in subsection (1) has been proved within six months after the date of the assignment or receiving order.

323(3) Diligence

(3) Diligence. – A director of a corporation is not liable for a failure under subsection (1) where the director exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances.

323(4) Assessment

(4) Assessment. – The Minister may assess any person for any amount payable by the person under this section and, where the Minister sends a notice of assessment, sections 296 to 311 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require.

323(5) Time limit

(5) Time limit. – An assessment under subsection (4) of any amount payable by a person who is a director of a corporation shall not be made more than two years after the person last ceased to be a director of the corporation.

323(6) Amount recoverable

(6) Amount recoverable. – Where execution referred to in paragraph (2)(a) has issued, the amount recoverable from a director is the amount remaining unsatisfied after execution.

323(7) Preference

(7) Preference. – Where a director of a corporation pays an amount in respect of a corporation's liability referred to in subsection (1) that is proved in liquidation, dissolution or bankruptcy proceedings, the director is entitled to any preference that Her Majesty in right of Canada would have been entitled to had the amount not been so paid and, where a certificate that relates to the amount has been registered, the director is entitled to an assignment of the certificate to the extent of the director's payment, which assignment the Minister is empowered to make.

323(8) Contribution

(8) Contribution. – A director who satisfies a claim under this section is entitled to contribution from the other directors who were liable for the claim.

AIR TRAVELLERS SECURITY CHARGE ACT

81(1) Liability of Directors

(1) Liability of Directors. – If a corporation fails to pay an amount as and when required under this Act, the directors of the corporation at the time it was required to pay it are jointly and severally or solidarily liable, together with the corporation, to pay it and any interest that is payable under this Act.

Digitized by Google

81(2) Limitations

(2) Limitations. – A director of a corporation is not liable unless

(a) a certificate for the amount of the corporation's liability has been registered in the Federal Court of Canada under section 74 and execution for that amount has been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part;

(b) the corporation has commenced liquidation or dissolution proceedings or has been dissolved, and a claim for the amount of the corporation's liability has been proved within six months after the earlier of the date of commencement of the proceedings and the date of the dissolution; or

(c) the corporation has made an assignment or a receiving order has been made against it under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, and a claim for the amount of the corporation's liability has been proved within six months after the date of assignment or receiving order.

81(3) Diligence

(3) Diligence. – A director of a corporation is not liable for a failure under subsection (1) if the director exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances.

81(4) Assessment

(4) Assessment. – The Minister may assess any person for any amount payable by the person under this section and, if the Minister sends a notice of assessment, sections 39 to 52 apply with any modifications that the circumstances require.

81(5) Time Limit

(5) Time Limit. – An assessment of any amount payable by a person who is a director of a corporation shall not be made more than two years after the person ceased to be a director of the corporation.

81(6) Amount Recoverable

(6) Amount Recoverable. – If execution referred to in paragraph (2)(a) has issued, the amount recoverable from a director is the amount remaining unsatisfied after execution.

81(7) Preference

(7) Preference. – If a director of a corporation pays an amount in respect of the corporation's liability that is proved in liquidation, dissolution or bankruptcy proceedings, the director is entitled to any preference to which Her Majesty would have been entitled had the amount not been so paid, and if a certificate that relates to the amount has been registered, the director is entitled to an assignment of the certificate to the extent of the director's payment, which assignment the Minister is empowered to make.

81(8) Contribution

(8) Contribution. – A director who satisfies a claim under this section is entitled to contribution from the other directors who were liable for the claim.

EXCISE ACT, 2001

295(1) Liability of directors.

(1) Liability of directors. – If a corporation fails to pay any duty or interest as and when required under this Act, the directors of the corporation at the time it was required to pay the duty or interest are jointly and severally or solidarily liable, together with the corporation, to pay the duty or interest and any interest that is payable on the duty or interest under this Act.

295(2) Limitations

(2) Limitations. – A director of a corporation is not liable unless

(a) a certificate for the amount of the corporation's liability has been registered in the Federal Court under section 288 and execution for that amount has been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part;

(b) the corporation has commenced liquidation or dissolution proceedings or has been dissolved and a claim for the amount of the corporation's liability has been proved within six months after the earlier of the date of commencement of the proceedings and the date of dissolution; or

Digitized by Google

(c) the corporation has made an assignment or a bankruptcy order has been made against it under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and a claim for the amount of the corporation's liability has been proved within six months after the date of the assignment or bankruptcy order.

295(3) Diligence

(3) Diligence. – A director of a corporation is not liable for a failure under subsection (1) if the director exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances.

295(4) Assessment

(4) Assessment. – The Minister may assess any person for any amount of duty or interest payable by the person under this section and, if the Minister sends a notice of assessment, sections 188 to 205 apply with any modifications that the circumstances require.

295(5) Time limit

(5) Time limit. – An assessment of any amount payable by a person who is a director of a corporation shall not be made more than two years after the person ceased to be a director of the corporation.

295(6) Amount recoverable

(6) Amount recoverable. – If execution referred to in paragraph (2)(a) has issued, the amount recoverable from a director is the amount remaining unsatisfied after execution.

295(7) Preference

(7) Preference. – If a director of a corporation pays an amount in respect of the corporation's liability that is proved in liquidation, dissolution or bankruptcy proceedings, the director is entitled to any preference to which Her Majesty would have been entitled had the amount not been so paid, and if a certificate that relates to the amount has been registered, the director is entitled to an assignment of the certificate to the extent of the director's payment, which assignment the Minister is empowered to make.

295(8) Contribution

(8) Contribution. – A director who satisfies a claim under this section is entitled to contribution from the other directors who were liable for the claim.

2002, c. 22, s. 295; 2004, c. 25, s. 198.

Agathe Létourneau v. The Queen, 2011 FCA 354, A Resigned Director "Pulled Back In" with Falsified Minutes that was Exonerated

NADON J.A.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

Digitized by Google

[1] This is an appeal from a judgment dated April 15, 2010, by Justice Réal Favreau (the judge) of the Tax Court of Canada, 2010 TCC 203, in which the judge dismissed the appellant's appeal from an assessment made by the Minister of National Revenue (the Minister) under section 227.1 of the Income Tax Act (the ITA) for the amount of $70,848.41.
[2] More specifically, the Minister assessed the appellant for unremitted source deductions by 9034-1751 Québec Inc. (the company). The judge concluded that the appellant, as the director of the company, had to be held solidarily liable together with the company for the payment of the source deductions, including interest and penalties thereon, which the company had to deduct, withhold and remit to the Receiver General for Canada.
[3] As the judge pointed out at paragraph 4 of his reasons, the issue before him principally concerned the date on which the appellant resigned as director of the company. Before the judge, the appellant claimed that she became a director on January 4, 1999, and that she resigned on December 9, 1999.
Consequently, she argued that she could not be held responsible for the company's debts because the assessment made by the Minister to collect the sum payable was statute barred, having been made more than two years after the date she ceased to be a director of the company. The judge rejected the appellant's arguments. In so concluding, he accepted the Minister's argument that the two-year limitation period provided in subsection 227.1(4) of the ITA was inapplicable given the appellant's misrepresentations.
[4] The sole issue before the Court is to determine whether the judge erred in concluding that the appellant had to be held solidarily liable for the company's tax debts. For the following reasons, I conclude that the judge erred and that the appeal should be allowed.

Facts
[5] A brief summary of the facts will assist in understanding the appeal. More specifically, in order to properly understand the judge's findings of fact and conclusions of law, I consider it important to describe certain aspects of the evidence filed before the judge and to briefly summarize the testimonies of the appellant and of Mr. Jean Fontaine (Jean Fontaine). It should be noted that the following facts, other than the date on which the appellant resigned as director, are not disputed by the parties.
[6] The company was incorporated on April 23, 1996, under Part 1A of the Quebec Companies Act, RSQ, c. C-38. Until it ceased carrying on its business in April 2002, the company operated six convenience stores under the Pétroles Sonerco banner. One of these convenience stores was located in St-Hyacinthe, Quebec, and operated under the name Accommodation Grandmaître.
[7] On February 1, 2002, the company filed a notice of intention to make a proposal. The proposal was not acted upon.
[8] On March 5, 2002, the Minister assessed the company for unremitted source deductions for the year 2002, in the amount of $824.65. On March 6, 2002, the Minister issued a second assessment for the company for unremitted source deductions for the year 2001, in the amount of $70,023.76.
[9] The company assigned its assets on April 18, 2002, and was officially struck off by the Registraire des entreprises du Québec, Quebec's enterprise registrar, on May 7, 2004.
[10] On May 4, 2006, the Minister assessed the appellant for $70,848.41 under section 227.1 of the ITA.
[11] According to the company's register of directors, the appellant was a director from January 4, 1999, to December 9, 1999. As of that date, the sole director on the register is Jean Fontaine, gas pump attendant and manager at the St-Hyacinthe convenience store. He was responsible for managing the employees of the convenience store and for purchasing gas and various supplies. I note that Jean Fontaine was also a director from April 23, 1996, to December 2, 1996, and from May 12, 1997, to January 4, 1999. [12] The position held by Jean Fontaine at the St-Hyacinthe convenience store had been offered to him by Marcel Létourneau, the appellant's spouse, whom Jean Fontaine trusted implicitly, according to the judge. Jean Fontaine followed Marcel Létourneau's advice to the letter. In fact, Jean Fontaine testified that he never refused to sign documents that Marcel Létourneau asked him to sign even though he did not always know enough to understand the nature and consequences of the documents.

Digitized by Google

[13] In his capacity as company director, Jean Fontaine signed several documents, including corporate resolutions; an application to open an account for the company at the Bourg-Joli Caisse populaire in St- Hyacinthe dated January 24, 2000, according to which he was one of the company's cheque signing officers (the second being Ms. Guylaine Lemay, the company's comptroller); an application to open an account and become a corporate member for the company; and a resolution and declaration regarding the administration of a corporation. In addition, Jean Fontaine signed many cheques, including several payable to Marcel Létourneau, dated March and April 2001, and the annual information returns by a corporation for the years 1998, 2000 and 2001. These returns were filed with the Registraire des entreprises du Québec ("CIDREQ"). I note that on February 23, 2000, the company's annual return for 1999 was filed with CIDREQ, naming Jean Fontaine as its director, president and secretary. The truth of the information provided in this return was certified by Jacques Matte, the company's authorized counsel. Lastly, it was Jean Fontaine who signed, in his capacity as director, the assignment of the company's assets on April 18, 2002.

[14] Jean Fontaine's testimony reveals that, in fact, he had no knowledge of the company's operations during his time as director. Moreover, he recognized that he had never reviewed the company's books or the A-1 share certificates that he signed on April 23, 1996, in his capacity as secretary and president of the company.

[15] Regarding the appellant's testimony, he revealed the following. The appellant married Marcel Létourneau in 1966. She acknowledged that she was the company's director from January 4, 1999, to December 9, 1999, that is, until the day on which she tendered her resignation. By a shareholder resolution, the company accepted her resignation and appointed Jean Fontaine as director on December 9, 1999, an office that he accepted on the very same day.

[16] According to the company's register of shareholders, the appellant held 100 Class "A" shares in the company from January 4, 1999, to January 3, 2001. She allegedly acquired these shares from Jean Fontaine on January 4, 1999, and then reassigned them to him on January 3, 2001.

[17] The appellant also testified that she had been a shareholder of Gestion Aghmana Inc., which owned a commercial building in Rouyn-Noranda and in which the company operated a convenience store. Moreover, the appellant's testimony allegedly revealed that, following the company's bankruptcy, the appellant signed and filed a proof of claim with the company's bankruptcy trustee on May 6, 2002, regarding a $158,000 loan extended to the company by Gestion Aghmana Inc.

[18] In addition, the appellant testified that during her period as director of the company, she was not involved in the day-to-day management of the company's operations, since this was the responsibility of Guylaine Lemay who, among other things, took care of the bookkeeping and accounting in Victoriaville, home to Marcel Létourneau's offices.

[19] As of December 9, 1999, the date on which the appellant submits having resigned as director, she was not in any way authorized to sign company cheques or bank resolutions. Moreover, she was never present at the Victoriaville office where the company was administered and where the books were kept. In short, the appellant in no way participated in the company's administration, and she performed no duties of administration as of December 9, 1999.

Digitized by Google

Minister's Reply to the Notice of Appeal

[20] At paragraph 10 of his Reply to the Notice of Appeal, the Minister assumed a number of facts, including the following:

[TRANSLATION]

(b) The appellant was a director of 9034 starting on January 4, 1999.

. . .

9034's register of directors was falsified in such a way as to make it appear as though the appellant had resigned from her directorship on December 9, 1999.

In reality, the appellant was a director until at least as recently as January 3, 2002.

Decision of the Tax Court of Canada

[21] The judge concluded that the appellant had to be held solidarily liable together with the company for the payment of the unremitted source deductions the company owed. Before explaining the judge's reasons, I reproduce the provisions of the ITA that are at the heart of the dispute before us:

[22] First, the judge summarized the facts disclosed by the evidence, particularly those disclosed by the testimonies of the appellant and of Jean Fontaine. Second, the judge examined the relevant statutory provisions, specifically subsections 227(10), 227.1(1) and 227.1(4) of the ITA, leading him to observe that even though the Minister was under no time limit to assess an amount payable by a person under section 227.1 of the ITA, no action or proceedings to recover any amount assessed could be commenced "more than two years after the director last ceased to be a director of that corporation" under subsection 227.1(4).

[23] In light of these provisions, the judge indicated that the date that the appellant last ceased to be a director of the company had to be determined. On the basis of his analysis of the evidence, the judge concluded that the appellant remained a director of the company until May 7, 2004, the date on which the company was officially struck off the enterprise register. According to the judge, the register of directors was falsified regarding the appellant's resignation as company director. More specifically, the judge was of the opinion that unexplained corrections had been made to the register of directors to substitute the date of January 3, 2002, with that of December 9, 1999. Because of this falsification, the appellant's true date of resignation from her directorship was unknown, and her letter of resignation could not be recognized as valid and effective. These findings led the judge to conclude the following at paragraph 31 of his reasons:

[31] Since the evidence does not reveal that the appellant resigned from her position as director, went bankrupt, was unable to perform her duties, or availed herself of protective supervision, or that the company was liquidated before its registration was struck off, the appellant must be deemed never to have lost her status as director until the company was struck off the register.

[24] After concluding that the appellant remained director of the company until May 7, 2004, the judge examined the appellant's argument based on subsection 227.1(4) of the ITA and according to which the Minister's remedy was statute barred since the Minister's assessment of the appellant, dated May 4, 2006, was made after the two-year limitation period provided for in subsection 227.1(4). The judge rejected this argument at paragraph 21 of his reasons since the Minister's assessment, dated May 7, 2006, was made less than two years after the company was officially struck off the register of enterprises, that is, on May 7, 2004, and was therefore not statute barred.

Digitized by Google

[25] Notwithstanding the judge's analysis of this question, at paragraphs 39 and 40 of his reasons, the judge seemed to assume that the Minister's remedy was statute barred unless it was possible to rely on subsection 152(4) of the ITA. At paragraphs 21 and 39 of his reasons he wrote as follows:

[21] The reassessment against the appellant is dated May 4, 2006. That is more than two years after the appellant ceased, for the last time, to be a shareholder of 9034-1751 Québec Inc., whether that date was December 9, 1999, or January 3, 2002. It is also more than two years after the CRA first consulted the original minute book of 9034-1751 Québec Inc. on January 24, 2004, and more than two years after 9034-1751 Québec Inc. made an assignment of its property on April 18, 2002. However, it is within the two-year period that began on the date that Quebec's Registraire des entreprises cancelled 9034-1751 Québec Inc.'s registration, because that cancellation took place on May 7, 2004.

. . .

[39] The assessment against the appellant was made beyond the normal reassessment period. Subsection 227(10) of the ITA authorizes the Minister to assess a person for an amount contemplated by section 227.1 of the ITA at any time, in which case Divisions I and J of Part I of the ITA apply to the assessment. Those divisions encompass subsection 152(4), which restricts the Minister's power to reassess beyond the regular reassessment period to the situations contemplated in paragraphs (a) and (b) of that subsection. The situation contemplated in subparagraph 152(4)(a)(i) is one where the taxpayer or person filing the return has made a misrepresentation that is attributable to neglect, carelessness or wilful default or has committed any fraud in filing the return or in supplying any information under the ITA.

[26] The judge was of the opinion, as appears from paragraph 39 of his reasons, that subsection 227(10) in fine provided that the Minister could at any time assess any amount payable by a person under section 227.1 and, where the Minister sent a notice of assessment to that person, divisions I and J of Part I of the ITA applied with any modifications that the circumstances required. In addition, the judge found that subsection 152(4) of the ITA stipulated that the Minister could make an assessment or reassessment after the taxpayer's normal reassessment period when the taxpayer in question had "made a misrepresentation that is attributable to neglect, carelessness or wilful default or [had] committed any fraud in filing the return or in supplying any information under the ITA". In other words, according to the judge, the two-year limitation period became inapplicable when the taxpayer's conduct matched that described in subparagraph 152.4(a)(i).

[27] At paragraph 40 of his reasons, the judge indicated that the Minister had the burden of demonstrating that he was entitled to assess the appellant beyond the normal reassessment period and stated that he was satisfied that the Minister had met his burden of proof. Specifically, the judge wrote that since the register of directors was improperly altered and these alterations had prevented the Minister from making a reassessment during the normal period contemplated by the ITA and since the appellant had been aware of these alterations, the Minister's recovery proceedings were not subject to the two-year limitation period. Consequently, according to the judge, the appellant had to be held solidarily liable for the company's debts.

[28] For these reasons, the judge dismissed the appellant's appeal from the Minister's assessment with costs.

Analysis

Digitized by Google

[29] As indicated at paragraph 4 of my reasons, it is my view that the judge erred in concluding that the appellant had to be held solidarily liable for the company's tax debts. The judge made a palpable and overriding error in concluding that the appellant had never resigned as director. In so concluding, he failed to consider ample evidence that supported the appellant's argument and gave too much weight to certain aspects of the evidence, including the fact that Jean Fontaine acted on behalf of Marcel Létourneau. Consequently, this Court can intervene (see Housen v. Nikolaisen, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235).

[30] As a result of this error, the judge wrongly concluded that the appellant knew of the falsification of her actual date of resignation as director in the register of the directors. Since the evidence reveals that the appellant resigned on December 9,1999, she cannot be held liable for the company's tax debt for unremitted source deductions for 2001 and 2002.

[31] The cornerstone of the judge's reasons is the fact that a correction was made to the register of directors regarding the appellant's resignation date, by which the date of January 3, 2002, was substituted with that of December 9, 1999. According to the judge, since the appellant had not filed any evidence to enlighten the Court as to the falsification of the register of directors or the reasons therefor, and since, in his opinion, the appellant alone could benefit from it, the register was consequently altered "with the appellant's full knowledge" (paragraph 33 of the judge's reasons). According to the judge, the purpose of the appellant's actions was to limit her liability for the company's debt for 2001 and 2002.

[32] Another factor leading the judge to his conclusion was his finding that the appellant was not credible and that her testimony lacked detail. At paragraph 37 of his reasons, the judge stated the following:

[37] . . . Among other things, she had no recollection, or merely vague recollections, of the $158,000 loan advanced by Gestion Aghmana Inc., of Ms. Lambert's mortgage on her Florida condominium, of the reasons for her resignation as a director of 9034-1751 Québec Inc., or of that company's fake wage payments to Ms. Lambert to repay her personal mortgage debt.

[33] Lastly, the judge concluded, at paragraph 38 of his reasons, that Jean Fontaine "was merely used as a proxy for the appellant's spouse". The judge had the following to say:

[38] . . . The evidence is that he signed the documents that Marcel Létourneau placed before him. In actual fact, Jean Fontaine was never a director of 9034-1751 Québec Inc. and never did any accounting or bookkeeping. The administration of 9034-1751 Québec Inc. was done from Victoriaville, not from Saint-Hyacinthe. In addition, Mr. Fontaine had no knowledge of the business of the other five convenience stores managed by 9034-1751 Québec Inc., with the exception of the information obtained during the yearly rounds of the stores with Marcel Létourneau. His claim that he could become the owner of a convenience store by virtue of his overtime is not realistic and cannot be accepted. No price for the store, and no terms and conditions of acquisition, were agreed upon with Marcel Létourneau. The purchases and sales of the shares in 9034-1751 Québec Inc. were done with no regard for their actual value. Indeed, Mr. Fontaine's memory faltered when it came to explaining why the shares of 9034-1751 Québec Inc. were transferred so often and why EI [employment insurance] source deductions were made from the salary that 9034-1751 Québec Inc. paid him in 2002, when he was a shareholder of the company and was therefore not entitled to EI.

[34] In my opinion, the evidence does not support the judge's conclusion that the appellant never resigned as director. There is no question that Jean Fontaine was appointed director on December 9, 1999, to replace the appellant and that he held that position until the company was dissolved on May 7, 2004. Following the appellant's resignation letter dated December 9, 1999, Jean Fontaine was appointed director by a shareholders' resolution, and he accepted that position on the same day. On January 24, 2000, he opened the company's bank account at the Bourg-Joli Caisse populaire, and only he and Guylaine Lemay were authorized to sign cheques. He also signed the account application forms and the banking resolution as well as all of the company's cheques during 2000 and 2001. In fact, Jean Fontaine was the only person who acted on behalf of the company during the period starting on December 9, 1999, and ending the day on which the company was dissolved on May 7, 2004, which explains why Jean Fontaine, in his capacity as director, signed the assignment of the company's assets on April 18, 2002.

Digitized by Google

[35] Jean Fontaine's testimony was in no way challenged by the judge. On the contrary, it was because of his testimony that the judge concluded that Jean Fontaine was merely acting as a proxy for Marcel Létourneau. The judge implicitly recognized that the company's de jure director was Jean Fontaine and that he was acting under the control of the de facto director, Marcel Létourneau.

[36] Another factor supporting the appellant's position that she resigned on December 9, 1999, is the company's annual return for 1999 filed with CIDREQ on February 23, 2000, which names Jean Fontaine as its new director. This document fully corroborates the testimonies of Jean Fontaine and of the appellant, according to which the appellant resigned on December 9, 1999, and was replaced by Jean Fontaine the very same day.

[37] The evidence also clearly revealed that the appellant did nothing as director of the company from December 9, 1999, onwards. The judge recognized this fact at paragraph 34 of his reasons.

[38] In my opinion, the evidence could lead to only one conclusion, namely, that the appellant stopped being a director of the company on December 9, 1999. Why did the judge conclude that the appellant never resigned as a director? At paragraphs 30, 31 and 32, above, I explained the judge's reasoning. One of the factors he considered was the fact that Jean Fontaine was merely used as a proxy for Marcel Létourneau. In my opinion, this factor is irrelevant with respect to the appellant's resignation date. Marcel Létourneau's control over Jean Fontaine could not, in itself, lead to the conclusion that the appellant never resigned. At best, this fact could have led to the conclusion that Marcel Létourneau was the company's de facto director during the period Jean Fontaine performed his duties as director.

[39] Another factor the judge took into account to conclude as he did is the falsification of the register of directors, which, in his opinion, was attributable to the appellant, who was seeking to limit her liability for the company's debt for 2001 and 2002. This resulted entirely from his conclusion that the appellant had never actually resigned as director. Since, in my opinion, as I have just explained, the evidence is clear that the appellant ceased to be a director on December 9, 1999, when she was replaced by Jean Fontaine, it follows that the appellant had no interest in altering the register of directors. Since all the bank and corporate documents as of December 9, 1999, namely, the cheques, annual returns and documents concerning the opening of the account at the Bourg-Joli Caisse populaire, publicly disclose that Jean Fontaine was the director during those years, it seems impossible to conclude, with respect, that the entry in the register of directors that the appellant resigned on December 9, 1999, is fraudulent. The entry in the register of directors merely confirms the actual situation, namely, that Jean Fontaine became director on December 9, 1999, replacing the appellant.

[40] Consequently, in my view, by concluding that the correction made to the register of directors was fraudulent, the judge failed to consider important evidence, including the documentary evidence, that corroborated the testimonies of the appellant and of Jean Fontaine according to which there was a change in director on December 9, 1999.

[41] Another factor the judge took into account to conclude that the appellant never resigned as director was her lack of credibility. However, even though the appellant was not credible regarding, for example, the $158,000 loan extended to the company by Gestion Aghmana Inc. Ms. Lambert's mortgage and the reasons for her resignation as director of the company, the fact remains that the documentary evidence and testimony amply demonstrate that the appellant was no longer director as of December 9, 1999.

Digitized by Google

[42] Thus, as a result of my conclusion that the appellant did resign on December 9, 1999, and that she was therefore not a director in 2001 and 2002, she cannot be held liable for the company's tax debt for source deductions the company failed to deduct, withhold and remit to the Receiver General for Canada in 2001 and 2002.

[43] Before the judge and before this Court, the parties assumed that the Minister's assessment of the appellant dated May 4, 2006, was a "[proceeding] to recover any amount payable by a director of a corporation" within the meaning of subsection 227.1(4) of the ITA. While I entertain doubt as to the merit of this premise, it is not necessary for this Court, given the conclusion I have reached, to determine whether the Minister's assessment was such a proceeding within the meaning of subsection 227.1(4). In any event, as the appellant resigned as director on December 9, 1999, the Minister's "action or proceedings" to recover the company's tax debt are statute barred since they were commenced more than two years after the appellant last ceased to be a director of the company.

[44] Finally, we do not need to determine whether, by operation of section 227.10 in fine, subsection 152(4) applies in the present matter.

Decision

[45] For these reasons, I would allow the appeal with costs, set aside the judgment of the Tax Court of Canada and, rendering the judgment that ought to have been rendered, I would allow the appellant's appeal of the Minister's assessment with costs and refer the matter back to the Minister for reassessment on the basis that the appellant resigned as director of the company on December 9, 1999.

"M. Nadon" J.A.

"I agree.
Johanne Trudel J.A."

"I agree.
Robert M. Mainville"

Amount recoverable – 227(5)

) Where execution referred to in paragraph 227.1(2)(a) has issued, the amount recoverable from a director is the amount remaining unsatisfied after execution.

Preference – 227(6)

Where a director pays an amount in respect of a corporation's liability referred to in subsection 227.1(1) that is proved in liquidation, dissolution or bankruptcy proceedings, the director is entitled to any preference that Her Majesty in right of Canada would have been entitled to had that amount not been so paid and, where a certificate that relates to that amount has been registered, the director is entitled to an assignment of the certificate to the extent of the director's payment, which assignment the Minister is hereby empowered to make.

Contribution – 227(7)

A director who has satisfied a claim under this section is entitled to contribution from the other directors who were liable for the claim.

Digitized by Google

Applying payments under collection agreements - 228

228. Where a payment is made to the Minister on account of tax under this Act, an Act of a province that imposes a tax similar to the tax imposed under this Act, or any two or more such Acts, such part of that payment as is applied by the Minister in accordance with the provisions of a collection agreement entered into under Part III of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act against the tax payable by a taxpayer for a taxation year under this Act discharges the liability of the taxpayer for that tax only to the extent of the part of the payment so applied, notwithstanding that the taxpayer directed that the payment be applied in a manner other than that provided in the collection agreement or made no direction as to its application.

CRA Internal Operations Manual - Director's Liability

(See image pages below)

Digitized by Google

DIRECTORS' LIABILITY 1

Overview 1

Legislation 1

Background Information 1
Directors' Responsibility 2
Types of Directors 2
Active Directors 2
Passive Directors 2
Nominee Directors 2
Outside Directors/Independent Directors 3
De Facto Directors 3
Definition of Liability 3
Directors' Entitlement 3
Directors' Entitlement to Preference 4
Directors' Entitlement to Contribution 4
Interview Questions for Directors 4
When a Director ceases to be a Director 5

Policy 6
Amounts Covered Under Directors' Liability 6
Proving a Director's Liability Claim in a Proposal or in a Bankruptcy 7
Proving a Director's Liability Claim Under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act (CCAA) 8
When is a Director Not Liable 9
When to Raise a Director's Liability Assessment 9
When a Director's Liability Assessment Should not be Raised 10
The Due Diligence Provision 11
Responsibility to Exercise Due Diligence 12
Responsibility When Financial Difficulty Experienced 12
The Pre-Assessment Proposal Letter 13
Method of Service for Pre-Assessment Proposal Letters 13
No Response to the Pre-Assessment Proposal Letter 13
Director's Response to the Pre-Assessment Proposal Letter 14
Verifying Documents Relating to Directors' Liability 14
Document Analysis by the Forensic Sciences Division 15
Follow-Up to the Director's Response 16
Assessment Amount Limit 16
Approval Authority 17
Referring Cases to the Department of Justice 17
When to Refer a Case to the Department of Justice 17
Cases That Are Not Referred to the Department of Justice 18
Reassessing Joint and Several Liabilities 19
Resolving a Disputed Memorandum Assessment 19
Request for Adjustment to a Memorandum Assessment 19
Notice of Objection or Appeal Filed Subsequent to a Request for Adjustment 20
Notice of Objection or Appeal is Outstanding When Request for Adjustment is made 20
Where Time to File Notice of Objection or Extension Order has not Expired 20
When Should Reassessment be made or Adjustment Request be Declined? 20
Reassessment Approval Authority 21
Statutory Period to Reassess 21

Digitized by Google

Procedures 21
Completing a Director's Liability Assessment 22
Conducting the Initial Investigation 22
Directors' Liability Checklist 24
Required Evidence Relating to the Status of the Company 24
Required Evidence Relating to the Directors 26
Required Evidence Relating to CRA 28
Obtaining a Defence 29
Investigation Required Before Requesting an Opinion 30
Requesting an Opinion on a Director's Liability 30
Raising a Director's Liability Assessment 32
Obtaining Approval 33
Approval Memorandum 33
Completion of a Director's Liability Notice of Assessment Form 34
Completion of the T779 Form 34
Completion of the GST259 Form 36
Director's Liability Assessment Verses 38
Notice of Reassessment for Director's Liability Where a Notice of Objection Exists 39
Notice of Reassessment for Director's Liability Where No Objection or Appeal Exists 40
Additional Assessment for Director's Liability 42
Cancellation of Director's Liability Assessment 42
Director's Liability Particulars of Assessment 43
Amounts Not to Be Included Within the Particulars of Assessment 44
Amended Director's Liability Particulars of Assessment 44
Interest Charges on Director's Liability Memorandum Assessments 45
Collection Action on Directors' Liability Assessments 45
Collection Measures 46
Maintaining the Director's Liability Assessment 47
Updating all Applicable Accounts 47
Preparing the Working Paper 48
Maintaining Documents When the Assessment is Raised 50
Retention of Primary Assessment Information 51
Applying Payments 51
Payment Allocation for Memorandum Assessment 52
Application of Payments 52
Situations Where a Notice of Objection is Filed 52
Directors' Entitlement to Preference 54
Assignment of Certificate 55
Obtaining Approval 55
Examples of an Assignment of Certificate 55

Resource Material 56

APPENDIX 56
APPENDIX "A" 56

IN THE MATTER OF AN ASSESSMENT OR ASSESSMENTS BY 57

THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE UNDER ONE OR MORE OF THE .. 57

INCOME TAX ACT*, CANADA PENSION PLAN, UNEMPLOYMENT..... 57

Digitized by Google

INSURANCE ACT, EMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT AGAINST: 57

INSERT NAME OF DEBTOR CORPORATION (AS PER CERTIFICATE) 57

INSERT ADDRESS OF DEBTOR CORPORATION (AS PER CERTIFICATE) ... 57

APPENDIX "B" 58

Digitized by Google

Directors' Liability

Collections Manual Updates

Overview

The directors of a corporation have the responsibility to ensure that the corporation withholds certain amounts on behalf of the Crown and remits them to Canada Revenue Agency (CRA). If a corporation fails to do so, its directors may be held jointly and severally liable with the corporation under the provisions of the Income Tax Act, section 227.1, the Excise Tax Act, section 323, the Air Travellers Security Charge Act, subsection 81(1) and similar provisions of the Canada Pension Plan, Unemployment Insurance Act and Employment Insurance Act for which CRA is administratively responsible.

A Directors' Liability assessment is a memorandum assessment raised to collect trust fund debts from the corporate directors. A memorandum assessment is raised when a person other than the original tax debtor is jointly and severally liable with the tax debtor for an amount payable under one of the Acts administered by the CRA.

A memorandum assessment does not appear within any of the accounting systems used by Revenue Collections, except as series of detailed diary entries within the ACSES system, and is therefore commonly referred to as a "memo-assessment." For further details, refer to the chapter entitled Memorandum Assessments.

For further information, it is recommended that Training Manual HQ8920, Director's Liability Handbook be reviewed in its entirety. Also, refer to Training Manual TD8900-000, Liability of Directors.

Legislation

This section identifies legislation related to Directors' Liability:

- Canada Pension Plan, section: 21.1
- Income Tax Act, section: 227.1, 227(10) and the related provincial legislation
- Excise Tax Act, section 323
- Unemployment Insurance Act, subsection: 54(1)
- Employment Insurance Act, subsection 83(1)
- Air Travellers Security Charge Act, subsection 81(1)

Background Information

This section identifies background information related to Directors' Liability:

- Directors' Responsibility
- Types of Directors

Digitized by Google

- Definition of Liability
- Directors' Entitlement
- Interview Questions for Directors
- When a Director ceases to be a Director

Directors' Responsibility

A director's responsibility includes exercising due diligence as well as taking specific actions when the corporation experiences financial difficulty.

Although there are several types of directors, the courts do not make a distinction and base their decision on the facts of each case. It will not always be easy to determine the category into which a director of a given corporation falls. However, once identified as a director, an individual is subject to directors' liability.

Types of Directors

A director is defined as an individual appointed or elected according to law, who is authorized to manage and direct the affairs of a corporation. There are numerous types of directors.

Related Topics:

- Active Directors
- Passive Directors
- Nominee Directors
- Outside Directors/Independent Directors
- De Facto Directors

Active Directors

An individual elected as a director, who is actively involved in the operations of the company.

Passive Directors

An individual who abdicates some or all of their duties to manage the corporation and merely rely on their co-directors and officers.

Nominee Directors

An individual who is elected on the understanding that they were merely elected to obey instructions, given by someone else, usually another director, officer or shareholder.

Digitized by Google

Outside Directors/Independent Directors

An individual who is not also an officer or employee of the corporation and who has neither a substantial stock interest in the corporation nor material business dealings with the corporation.

De Facto Directors

An individual who publicly exercises the function of a director, such as:

- voting on the board
- signing corporate documents as a director
- serving in discussions or negotiation regarding corporate matters
- being presented as a director on annual corporation filings
- controlling the operations of the company but who was not elected as a director

Note: These types of directorships are difficult to prove. Prior to the consideration of any directors' liability assessment where evidence of a de facto directorship exists, the issue must be formally forwarded to the Department of Justice for a legal opinion as to the validity of such an assessment.

Definition of Liability

Sections 227.1 of the ITA and 323 of the ETA clearly define directors' liability. Although the wording in subsection 227.1(1) ITA and subsection 323(1) ETA are similar, there are variances that make their interpretation and the instances in which they can be applied substantially different.

For example, subsection 323(1) of the ETA stipulates that directors can only be held liable if they were directors "...at the time the corporation was required to remit the amount". Conversely, subsection 227.1(1) of the ITA states that liability occurs "...at the time the corporation was required to deduct, withhold, remit or pay the amount".

Because of this difference, directors' liability assessments issued pursuant to 323(1) of the ETA may only be raised for amounts in which the director in question was lawfully a director on the day following the last day the corporation was required to remit these amounts as outlined within the remitting requirements in subsection 228(2) of the ETA.

However assessments issued pursuant to 227.1 of the ITA, can be raised for amounts in which the director in question was lawfully a director during the time amounts were to have been deducted or withheld.

Directors' Entitlement

Both the ITA and the ETA indicate that a Director who pays an amount in respect of a directors' liability balance owing is entitled to take certain actions to collect the amount from the other directors.

Digitized by Google

Related Topics:

- Directors' Entitlement to Preference
- Directors' Entitlement to Contribution

Directors' Entitlement to Preference

Subsection 227.1(6) of the ITA and subsection 323(7) of the ETA, stipulate that a director who pays an amount in respect of the balance owing that is proved in liquidation, dissolution or bankruptcy proceedings, is entitled to any preference that the Crown would have been entitled to had that amount not been so paid. Where a certificate that relates to that amount was registered, the director is entitled to an assignment of the certificate to the extent of the director's payment.

For more information, refer to the Procedures section entitled, Directors' Entitlement to Preference.

Directors' Entitlement to Contribution

Subsection 227.1(7) of the ITA and subsection 323(8) of the ETA, stipulate that a director who makes the payment of the liability can proceed with action against the other directors to recover a portion of the amount that was paid on behalf of the corporation. As opposed to the Preference provision pursuant to 227.1(6) no assignment is required for a Director to exercise his entitlement to contribution. The fact that a Director has personally paid a Directors' Liability claim is sufficient for him to file claim against the other Directors.

Interview Questions for Directors

When interviewing a director, the answers to the following questions may help determine whether to raise a director's liability assessment.

1. Are you presently a director of the company? If not, when did you cease to be a director? Please provide details.
2. Do (did) you receive and review regular financial statements and reports on the company's operation? If so, how often were they reviewed?
   a) Does (did) the report include a balance sheet?
   b) Did you review the monthly general ledger trial balance and the monthly bank reconciliation?
3. Do you know whether or not the company has or had an internal control system in place to ensure payment of accounts to CRA?
   a) Who initiated the system?
   b) When were the accounts due to be remitted?

Digitized by Google

c) Does (did) the company keep a separate bank account to keep the accounts separate and apart form the company's other funds? If so, what is the account number, and with what financial institution?

4. What positive steps did you take to ascertain the company's position on accounts and to prevent the failure to remit these when collected?

5. Were there factors that you believe prevented you from ensuring CRA received the accounts collected?

6. Have you ever sought advice, legal or otherwise, to help you determine what were your duties and responsibilities as a director. If so, please elaborate.

7. Do (did) you attend directors' meetings on a regular basis? Did you attend the last directors' meeting? If not, why? Do you know when and where it was held?

8. Are you or were you the signing officer of the company? If so, were or are there more than two signatures required on company cheques? Who were or are the authorized persons to sign corporate cheques?

9. Have you co-signed or guaranteed any of the company's loans? If so, in what amounts and what are the names and addresses of the creditors? What is/was the primary security?

10. Did the company assign its accounts receivable to the bank or finance company?

11. Do (did) you receive director's fees or any other remuneration from the company?

12. Do (did) you or a company owned or controlled by you, have any business dealing with the above business? If so, how much money is owed you or your company? What product or services were provided?

13. If you are not the principal or majority shareholder, are you related to the company's principal or majority shareholder? If so, what is that relationship?

14. Describe the circumstances which led you to become a director?

15. Where are the minute books, directors' registers and share registers of the company maintained or kept? If at company's lawyer or accountant's office, please provide name, address and telephone number if possible.

When a Director ceases to be a Director

A director ceases to be a director in the following situations:

- a person prohibited by the court (for e. g. declared of unsound mind)
- personal bankruptcy
- death
- upon resigning as a director

Digitized by Google

Note: It is important to remember that a director does not automatically cease to be a director when their corporation is adjudged bankrupt, or placed into receivership. This position is reinforced by the case law, Kalef v. M.N.R. (95 DTC 487 (T.C.C.)).

Policy

This section identifies policy related to Directors' Liability:

- Amounts Covered Under Directors' Liability
- Proving a Director's Liability Claim in a Proposal or in a Bankruptcy
- Proving a Director's Liability Under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act (CCAA)
- When is a Director Not Liable
- When to Raise a Director's Liability Assessment
- When a Director's Liability Assessment Should not be Raised
- The Due Diligence Provision
- The Pre-Assessment Proposal Letter
- Assessment Amount Limit
- Approval Authority
- Referring Cases to the Department of Justice
- Reassessing Joint and Several Liabilities

Amounts Covered Under Directors' Liability

The amounts covered under directors' liability include:

- employer contributions and employee deductions
- Goods and Services Tax (GST) Amounts or Harmonized Sales Tax (HST) Amounts
- air Travellers Security Charge Amounts

Employer contributions and employee deductions:

- federal tax, provincial tax, Canada Pension Plan and employment insurance
- amounts that should have been withheld and remitted from payments or credits made to non-residents
- related penalties, not including late filing penalties or law costs

Digitized by Google

- related interest

GST Amounts:

- net tax the corporation was required to remit; including all amounts owing as a result of any notional assessments raised

  Note: Net tax does not include unwarranted refunds prior to June 29, 2005.

  For additional details, refer to Communication TSDMB-2003-002 (ARD), The Collection of Unwarranted GST/HST Refunds in a Director's Liability Situation and Communication TSDBM-2005-035 (ARD), Bill C-43, Part 3, Change to Subsection 323(1) of the Excise Tax Act.

- related penalties, not including late filing penalties or law costs

- related interest

  Note: A director cannot be held liable for any "tax payable assessment" issued pursuant to paragraph 296(1)(b) of the ETA. For further details, refer to Communication TSDMB-2005-018 (ARD) entitled, Assessment of insolvent purchasers, pursuant to Section 296(1)(b) of the Excise Tax Act; Directive RCD-96-12 entitled, Assessment of insolvent purchasers under 296(1)(b) of the ETA; and to Memorandum 03-08, entitled Liability of a Purchaser Under S. 296(1)(B) Excise Tax Act.

Also, refer to Directive RCD-00-11, entitled Assessing Directors for GST When Corporations are in a Partnership and Memorandum 03-05 entitled, Liability of Partnerships and Partners for GST/HST.

Air Travellers Security Charge Amounts:

- security charge amounts the corporation was required to remit; including all amounts owing as a result of any notional assessments raised

- related interest

Note: The wording of the ATSCA does not provide an avenue to include assessed penalties in a memorandum assessment

Proving a Director's Liability Claim in a Proposal or in a Bankruptcy

When a director of a corporation is bankrupt or files an insolvency proposal, the trustee may report, on the Statement of Affairs, the corporation's liability for payroll deductions or GST trust funds during the period of directorship. If the estate has funds to pay that liability, the trustee may request the Agency to prove a claim. If it is your intention to raise a Directors' Liability assessment it is not necessary to prove a contingent claim as subsection 149(2) of the BIA provides and extension of time for filing a claim while requiring the trustee to set aside a dividend to support that claim.

For additional details see Directive RCD 00-25, Proving a Directors' Liability Claim in a Proposal or in a Bankruptcy.

Digitized by Google

Proving a Director's Liability Claim Under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act (CCAA)

Unless the Agency has assessed the directors before the company has filed under the CCAA, assessing them during a CCAA proceeding is not normally supported by the Court.

Based on the Court's stance:

1. We should consider assessing directors as soon as there are any indications the company is experiencing cash-flow problems.

2. We should analyse the CCAA plan as soon as possible and consider whether it is appropriate to assert that the Crown's claims be put in a separate class of creditors.

3. If the plan calls for a full and final satisfaction of the debt, we should never vote to accept the plan and then later attempt to recover the difference from the directors (unless the plan is in default).

A plan under the CCAA may include in its terms, provisions for the compromise of claims against directors of the company. Such claims will have arisen before the proceedings under the CCAA have started. However, the right to that compromise is limited where the claims:

- relate to contractual rights of one or more creditors, e.g., personal guarantees of the directors

- are based on allegations of misrepresentations made by directors to creditors or wrongful or oppressive conduct by the directors

If the court agrees to a compromise, it will grant a stay of proceedings against the directors.

For additional detail refer to the Directive ARD-01-02, The Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act.

Care must also be given to ensure that any "Claims Bar Dates" set by the Court are satisfied. On occasion, during a CCAA proceeding, the Court may set a Claims Bar Date against potential claims held by creditors against corporate directors. A Claims Bar Date acts as deadline for creditors to submit any contingent claims they may potentially hold against the corporate directors, in respect of the corporate liability.

Once the Court sets a Claims Bar Date, creditors in turn have a limited period of time to file their contingent claim with the Monitor. Not doing so may prohibit a creditor's right to take any action against the corporate directors upon satisfaction of the CCAA Plan of Arrangement.

Therefore, where a Claims Bar Date has been issued by the Court for claims against corporate directors, the Agency must file a claim with the Monitor within the prescribed period. Failure to do so will likely preclude the Agency from pursuing a director's liability assessment following satisfaction of the CCAA Plan of Arrangement.

> Note: CRA claims in these circumstances will represent amounts in which the corporate directors could be held liable and do not necessarily represent the actual amounts to be assessed. These claims are "contingent claims" and their sole purpose is to satisfy the Claims Bar Date set by the Court so as not to prohibit the Agency from any action against a corporate director that is applicable.

Digitized by Google

When is a Director Not Liable

A director is not liable when:

- that director exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill to prevent the failure that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances

  Note: For further details refer to the section entitled The Due Diligence Provision.

- more than two years have elapsed since the director last ceased to be a director of that corporation

  Note: To determine whether a director ceased holding the office of director of the corporation, collection officers must determine what the applicable Company Act or Business Corporations Act provides. For further details refer to Communication ARD-2004-027, entitled Director's Liability - Bonch v. The Queen.

- CRA did not:

  - prove the claim within six months following the date of the voluntary dissolution or liquidation proceedings began

  - prove the claim against the corporation within six months following the date of bankruptcy

  - file a claim with a Receiver and/or Receiver/Manager within six months following the date of Receivership

    Note: A director does not cease to be a director upon the corporation becoming bankrupt or being put into receivership.

  - file a certificate for the amount of the corporation's liability and the execution for that amount was returned unsatisfied in whole or in part

  - file a claim with a Monitor in a CCAA proceeding where a Claims Bar Date was issued by the Court, within the prescribed period set

When to Raise a Director's Liability Assessment

Raise a Director's Liability assessment:

- after every attempt is made to collect the amount through normal collection action

- after all amounts owing by the corporation have been assessed and that all outstanding reporting periods have been assessed

- when the potential memorandum assessment exceeds the minimum balance set for directors' liability assessments; refer to the section entitled Assessment Amount Limit

- after identifying who the corporate directors are

- after ensuring through an investigation, that the assessment will be collectible by confirming that the director(s) holds an ability to pay

Digitized by Google

Note: If there is more than one director and it is clear that at least one of them is capable of satisfying the proposed assessment, the Agency's policy is to assess all the directors and take Collections action against those with the ability to pay.

- when due diligence was not exercised; refer to the section entitled The Due Diligence Provision

- up to two years after the director last ceased to be a director of that corporation

  Note: The issuance of a directors' liability assessment constitutes the start of a proceeding against that director. Therefore, you must raise the assessment before the end of the two-year deadline. If a corporation has more than one director, a date for this deadline will have to be established for each director.

- after CRA's inability to recover the amounts from the corporation were demonstrated by:

  - a nil report or the return of an unsatisfied execution in whole or in part against the corporation

  - the proving of a claim against the corporation within six months following the date of dissolution or liquidation proceedings began

  - the proving of a claim against the corporation within six months following the date of bankruptcy

  - the filing of a claim with a Receiver and/or Receiver/Manager within six months following the date of Receivership

- In the case of a corporate bankruptcy, any time after bankruptcy and up to two years after the director resigned

  Note 1: A director does not cease to be a director upon the corporation becoming bankrupt or being put into receivership.

  Note 2: A Director's Liability Assessment should not preclude the Agency from taking any applicable action against a third party pursuant to subsection 227(4.1) of the ITA to exercise our priority for deemed trust. Such an action should not be delayed by the resolution of any Director's Liability assessment.

When a Director's Liability Assessment Should not be Raised

A director's liability assessment should not be raised if:

- the director alleges that the corporation was in receivership, liquidation or bankruptcy, such that a financial institution, receiver, liquidator or trustee was in full control of the corporation at the time the law required source deductions or GST/HST to be remitted, whether or not the director was a director at the time the source deductions where withheld or GST/HST was collected, provided CRA has no contradictory evidence in its possession

  Note 1: This situation is intended to cover circumstances where, at the time the remittance was due, a third party (receiver, trustee, and liquidator) was in control of the corporation, and inhibited the corporation from remitting. However, in order not to assess, the facts must be similar to the facts in Swertz v. M.N.R., 90 DTC 1056 (T.C.C.).

Digitized by Google

Note 2: Such circumstances may warrant a Memorandum Assessment pursuant to subsections 227(5) and 227(5.1) of the ITA and sections 265 and 266 of the ETA.

- CRA has not satisfied the appropriate precondition to assessment set out in subsection 227.1(2) of the Income Tax Act (ITA) or subsection 323(2) of the Excise Tax Act (ETA) or if such an assessment is statute barred under 227.1(4) of the ITA or 323(5) of the ETA

- an investigation has confirmed that none of the director(s) would hold an ability to pay such an assessment

  Note: If there is more than one director and it is clear that at least one of them is capable of satisfying the proposed assessment, the Agency's policy is to assess all the directors and take Collections action against those with the ability to pay.

- the director claims to have been locked out of the corporate affairs by one or more of the other directors or due to a minority shareholding and satisfactory evidence to this effect is provided

- the assessment against the company was raised pursuant to
  - paragraph 296(1)(b); or
  - paragraph 296(1)(d) pertaining to unwarranted refunds prior to June 29, 2005

  For further details on paragraph 296(1)(b) refer to the Bankruptcy chapter, and Communication TSDMB-2005-035 Bill C-43, Part 3, Change to Subsection 323(1) of the Excise Tax Act and Communication ARD-2005-018 Assessment of insolvent purchasers, pursuant to paragraph Section 296(1)(b) of the Excise Tax Act, and Directive RCD-96-12 Assessment of Insolvent Purchasers under 296(1)(b) of the ETA, and Memorandum 03-08 Liability of a Purchaser Under paragraph, 296(1)(b) Excise Tax Act.

The Due Diligence Provision

Subsections 227.1(3) of the ITA, 323(3) of the ETA and 81(3) of the ATSCA define the "Due Diligence Provision." The Due Diligence Provision states that a director is not liable if that director exercised the same degree of care, diligence and skill that a reasonably prudent individual would have exercised, in comparable circumstances, to ensure that the corporation deducts, withholds, remits or pays the amounts due. The onus to prove due diligence, rests with the director.

The test of due diligence under subsections 323(3) of the ETA and 227.1(3) is summarized in this Federal Court of Appeal decision, "The test of due diligence under subsections 323(3) is not whether every conceivable step has been taken, but rather what steps to prevent failure a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances," Moriyama v. Her Majesty, 2005 FCA 207.

Cases involving a defence of due diligence are based on the facts specific to each case. A director who claims due diligence is required to describe the positive steps and actions taken to avoid the creation of the debt. However, the explanations often tend to deviate from the main question:

Digitized by Google

"What did the director do to ensure that the required source deductions and/or GST/HST net tax were paid?"

If the director cannot satisfactorily answer this question, the conclusion will often be that they have not "exercised the degree of care, diligence and skill," specified in subsections 227.1(3) of the ITA and 323(3) of the ETA.

For further information refer to the section, When to Refer a Case to the Department of Justice and Cases That Are Not Referred to the Department of Justice.

Related Topics:

- Responsibility to Exercise Due Diligence
- Responsibility When Financial Difficulty Experienced

Responsibility to Exercise Due Diligence

It is a director's responsibility to exercise due diligence, including:

- establishing controls to account for withholdings from employees and remittances of source deductions and GST/HST amounts
- calling upon financial officers of the corporation to report regularly on the continued implementation of these controls
- obtaining regular confirmation that withholdings and remittances have in fact been made during all relevant periods

Responsibility When Financial Difficulty Experienced

A director is responsible for exercising due diligence when the corporation experiences financial difficulties. Refer to Responsibility to Exercise Due Diligence.

As well, a director's responsibility when it is determined that the corporation is experiencing financial difficulties may include the following:

- obtaining from the financial institution where the line of credit is extended, an enforceable undertaking to pay all amounts due to the Crown when due
- establishing a separate trust account into which amounts of GST/HST collected would be deposited
- establishing a separate payroll trust account into which the gross payrolls would be deposited for subsequent disbursement to employees, with the difference to be remitted to the Crown when due
- if the corporation is placed in receivership or is adjudged bankrupt, advising the receiver and manager or trustee in writing of the banking arrangements in place for the payment of the source deductions withheld and of GST/HST payable

Digitized by Google

The Pre-Assessment Proposal Letter

A pre-assessment proposal letter must be issued to all directors identified prior to the assessment of any directors' liability.

The pre-assessment letter (ELCS 19713) gives each director an opportunity to present relevant facts which may prove that they should not be held liable for the corporation's unpaid source deductions and/or GST/HST net tax.

The letter advises the director of the Agency's intention to assess and informs them that they have 30 days in which to respond. It also informs the directors of the amount of the projected assessment.

This letter further advises the director that information regarding the Agency's position regarding the due diligence defence can be found within Information Circular 89-2R, available to the director by calling the CRA Toll Free number (1-800-969-2221) or the CRA website address at www.cra.gc.ca/formspubs.

Circular 89-2R informs the directors of corporations of their responsibility to deduct and remit payroll deductions and GST/HST net tax on behalf of the Crown and of their steps they must take to avoid being held personally liable. It also explains the implications to which directors are liable if they do not comply with these provisions.

Related Topics:

- Method of Service for Pre-Assessment Proposal Letters
- No Response to the Pre-Assessment Proposal Letter
- Director's Response to the Pre-Assessment Proposal Letter
- Verifying Documents Relating to Directors' Liability
- Follow-up to the Director's Response

Method of Service for Pre-Assessment Proposal Letters

It is recommended that all pre-assessment letters be issued by way of:

- registered mail/priority post; or
- hand delivery (with an Affidavit of Service completed immediately upon service)

The use of one of the above methods of service will ensure that evidence regarding proof of service will exist should this information be required at a later date.

> Note: The use of regular mail prohibits any evidence regarding proof of service from existing. For this reason, it is recommended that regular mail not be used when issuing a directors' liability pre-assessment letter.

No Response to the Pre-Assessment Proposal Letter

Digitized by Google

A second pre-assessment letter should be sent if the director does not reply to the first letter after the 30-day deadline. A second letter (ELCS 19718), stressing the importance of providing a reply, must be sent. After the second letter is sent, a new 30-day deadline is granted. It is important that the steps taken to solicit a response from the director be recorded in the ACSES diary.

The Agency must show that it has made a reasonable effort to contact the director for a response. If, after these steps, the director has still not responded, proceed with the assessment immediately.

Director's Response to the Pre-Assessment Proposal Letter

Responses to the pre-assessment letter will vary and it will be up to the Collector in most cases to analyze them and to exercise judgment as to their validity. If the response received cites a due diligence defence, refer to section The Due Diligence Provision.

Although the pre-assessment letter mentions due diligence, there are two other reasons which are occasionally cited in a director's response:

- the director claims not to have been a director at the time of default; or
- the director claims that the two year deadline to assess has expired

These two reasons are fairly easy to prove since they involve written and dated documents that are normally not subject to interpretation. If the director cites one of these two reasons, it is up to them to provide the Agency with the proof. The following are documents which you can request:

- copy of a letter of resignation forwarded to the company's registered office
- evidence from the corporate Minute Book regarding the resignation
- Director's resolution and minutes of any Directors' Meetings
- copy of the Registrar of Companies search
- copy of the corporate Notice of Dissolution
- evidence that the director was not involved in the company
- evidence that the corporate charter was revoked more than two years ago
- evidence of a Letter of Resignation dated more that two years ago delivered to the registered offices of the company
- GST/HST amounts not assessed within the 4 year time limit

Verifying Documents Relating to Directors' Liability

On occasion, the information forwarded by a director as evidence to why they were not directors at the time of default, may be highly suspect. For example, Collectors may be in receipt of a resignation letter or a document from a corporate Minute Book that may have been back-dated to give the appearance that a resignation took place using a falsified date.

Digitized by Google

Or circumstances may exist where the signatures within documents supplied are also highly suspect.

In these circumstances, it is recommended that Collectors consider the use of forensic analysis to verify the validity of the documents in question. This service is provided to Revenue Collections by the Forensic Sciences Division, Laboratory & Scientific Services Directorate, Canada Border Services Agency.

Related Topic:

- Document Analysis by the Forensic Sciences Division

Document Analysis by the Forensic Sciences Division

Forensic document analysis is provided free of cost to Revenue Collections by the Forensic Sciences Division of the Laboratory & Scientific Services Directorate, Canada Border Services Agency.

The Forensic Sciences Division can provide document analysis of handwriting and other aspects of documents to determine their origin and authenticity. Document analysis can provide a variety of information to support collection investigation particularly in matters where collection actions would otherwise be prohibited because of time limitations such as the two year limitation for directors' liability assessments.

For example, TSOs would be able to utilize these services in instances where there are questions relative to dating and/or signatures on documents such as:

- directors' letters of resignation
- transfer documents
- disputed registration forms

Document analysis includes but is not limited to:

- handwriting comparisons
- detection of forgeries and alterations
- Ink, stamp impressions and paper analysis
- chronology or sequence of inscriptions
- dating of documents
- expert testimony in court

Where circumstances warrant the use of this service, forward all documents that require analysis to:

Forensic Sciences Division
Laboratory & Scientific Services Directorate
Canada Border Services Agency
79 Bentley Avenue
Ottawa On K1E 6T7

Digitized by Google

Forward the original documents along with a cover letter outlining the reason for the forensic analysis (i.e. hand writing analysis is required to verify director's signature or document dating analysis is required to confirm resignation dates etc.). Referrals must have the approval of a Manager, Revenue Collections and/or the Assistant Director, Revenue Collections, and must be submitted under their signature.

Refer to Memorandum 99-03, entitled, Laboratory and Scientific Services for further details.

To ensure receipt of the documents required for analysis, the Forensic Sciences Division requires that all documents forwarded to them be sent by way of a private courier and not by Canada Post.

Upon completion of their forensic review, the Forensic Sciences Division will return to Collections a Forensic Report detailing their findings along with the original documents forwarded.

For more information on these services consult the Forensic Sciences Division

Follow-Up to the Director's Response

If you accept the reason cited within the response given by the director, you must document your decision and send him/her a letter advising that no assessment will be issued. There is no letter within ELCS, which advises that the Agency accepts the arguments given. You must compose one.

If you reject the director's arguments, you must advise of the Agency's intention to assess. Issue the pre-assessment letter (ELCS 19696), which informs the director of the Agency's refusal to accept their arguments. It grants an additional deadline of 15 days to clarify or substantiate any reasons, which might allow exemption from liability. The letter also informs the director of the Agency's intent to assess upon expiry of the deadline, unless receipt of any new information is received. The letter also indicates the amount of the assessment being considered.

If the director presents additional arguments, you must examine any new facts prior to raising the assessment. If there is no response to the pre-assessment letter, proceed immediately with the assessment.

Assessment Amount Limit

It is recommended that the minimum assessment amount be set at PROTECTED. However, Tax Services Office (TSO) Management may use their discretion when considering an assessment below the recommended assessment balance limit.

In these circumstances, TSO Management will take into consideration:

- current TSO workloads
- cost effectiveness
- previous compliance history

Digitized by Google

Approval Authority

The Approval authority for a directors' liability assessment is delegated to the following:

- Director, Tax Services Office
- Assistant Director, Revenue Collections
- Manager, Revenue Collections

For further details please refer to Memorandum 01-21 entitled, Delegation of the Minister's Powers under the Income Tax Act, Excise Tax Act and Customs Act.

Referring Cases to the Department of Justice

All initial referrals to the Department of Justice are made under the signature of either:

- Director, Tax Services Office
- Assistant Director, Revenue Collections
- Manager, Revenue Collections
- Team Leader, Revenue Collections

To ensure the efficient operation and wise utilization of Justice services only certain cases are referred to the Department of Justice.

For further details please refer to Memorandum 01-21 entitled, Delegation of the Minister's Powers under the Income Tax Act, Excise Tax Act and Customs Act.

Related Topics:

- When to Refer a Case to the Department of Justice
- Cases That Are Not Referred to the Department of Justice

When to Refer a Case to the Department of Justice

Refer a case to the Department of Justice when:

- an assessment is to be based upon an allegation that an individual is a de facto director
- it is claimed that the individual had resigned at the time source deductions Goods and Services Taxes (GST) or Harmonised Sales Tax (HST) should have been remitted and this information differs from that found in the corporate registry or obtained from other sources
- a director claims to have acted with due diligence by relying on someone else in the corporation to ensure that source deductions and GST/HST were remitted in accordance with the law, for example: another director, manager who was relied upon, misled the director by using misleading words or documents and assured the

Digitized by Google

director that remittances were being made on time and in full, when that was not the case or where there was a division of responsibilities amongst the directors

Note: Do not make the referral until the directors, co-directors, employees and the company's auditor are interviewed to verify or rebut the director's allegations.

- one of the situations described in Cases That Are Not Referred to the Department of Justice would otherwise exonerate the director

Where, after examination a case does not meet these guidelines or the guidelines outlined in Cases That Are Not Referred to the Department of Justice, refer to Investigation Required Before Requesting an Opinion.

For further detail, refer to the directives, RCD-95-12 and RCD-96-09, both of which are entitled Directors' Liability.

Cases That Are Not Referred to the Department of Justice

Cases that are not referred to the Department of Justice include situations where:

- a director relying on a due diligence defence does not provide a factual basis for a defence, for example: the director does not explain why the source deductions, Goods and Services Tax (GST), or Harmonized Sales Tax (HST) were not remitted in such a way that would exonerate the director from liability
- the facts described by a director in support of a due diligence defence all relate to actions taken after the failure to remit source deductions or GST/HST occurred
- the director simply alleges no knowledge of the default and there is no evidence the director was misled
- the due diligence defence is that the corporation did not have enough cash flow or funds on hand to remit source deductions or GST/HST assuming there was no receivership or action by a bank to restrict the availability of cash flow prior to the default, or that the director did not fully understand his or her legal obligations are responsibilities under the law
- the director claims that no source deductions or GST/HST were remitted as a result of the corporation's bank or financial institution refusing to continue to honour future remittance cheques and the director remained in the office without taking the appropriate steps to have such amounts remitted
- a nominee director who is a professional or business person admits that nothing was done to prevent the failure to remit and does not allege that the director was relying on someone else to ensure that remittances were made in accordance with the law

Where, after examination, a case does not meet these guidelines or the guidelines outlined in When to Refer a Case to the Department of Justice, refer to Investigation Required Before Requesting an Opinion.

Refer to Case Law for related cases. For further detail, refer to the directives, RCD-95-12 and RCD-96-09, both of which are entitled Directors' Liability.

Digitized by Google

Reassessing Joint and Several Liabilities

In many circumstances, it is not unusual for additional relevant facts to come to light after an assessment has been issued. In some instances, had the additional information been available at the outset it may have impacted the amount included on the Notice of Assessment, or resulted in the assessment not having been made at all.

Accordingly, the following policies have been developed to provide Tax Services Offices with guidance and direction concerning the circumstances when Revenue Collections should consider downward reassessments of joint and several liabilities.

The policies outlined below can be found within Communication ARD-2004-014, entitled, Reassessing Joint and Several Liabilities.

Related Topics:

- Resolving a Disputed Memorandum Assessment
- Request for Adjustment to a Memorandum Assessment
- Notice of Objection or Appeal Filed Subsequent to a Request for Adjustment
- Notice of Objection or Appeal is Outstanding When Request for Adjustment is made
- Where Time to File Notice of Objection or Extension Order has not Expired
- When Should Reassessment be made or Adjustment Request be Declined?
- Reassessment Approval Authority
- Statutory Period to Reassess

Resolving a Disputed Memorandum Assessment

It is not uncommon for disputes to arise after an assessment has been issued. When a dispute results in the amount of a debt being re-determined or recalculated, it does not constitute a compromise settlement, but rather is a re-consideration of the actual amount owed. When amounts are re-determined or recalculated, the appropriate adjustments are made within the Agency's records and a Notice of Reassessment is issued to inform the taxpayer accordingly.

Issuing reassessments to resolve disputes cannot be done on an ad hoc basis; there must be a proper basis for doing so.

Request for Adjustment to a Memorandum Assessment

Occasionally Revenue Collections is requested to reconsider a memorandum assessment that has been issued against a third party under one of the various joint and several liability provisions. Such requests may emanate from recipients who have been assessed, or their representatives. In some instances the third party who has been assessed, or the person's representative, is able to provide additional information to demonstrate that the amount assessed is in error.

Digitized by Google

Although rare, there have also been instances when counsel of the Department of Justice has requested Revenue Collections to consider an adjustment to a memorandum assessment. Although not always the case, usually counsel is representing the Agency in the dispute process when such a request has been made.

Revenue Collections Divisions will only reconsider the amount of a third party's liability and issue a reassessment to adjust the amount when there is a proper basis to do so and an objection or appeal is not outstanding. In the event an Objection or Appeal is outstanding, Revenue Collections should leave matters to the Appeals Division to handle the case and follow any instructions they may issue as a result of disposing of the Objection or Appeal.

Notice of Objection or Appeal Filed Subsequent to a Request for Adjustment

Occasionally, Revenue Collections may have been requested to reconsider a memorandum assessment and a Notice of Objection or Appeal is filed subsequently. Once a Revenue Collections Officer becomes aware that an Objection or Appeal is outstanding, he or she is encouraged to pass any additional information that they have gathered to the Appeals Division along with any observations, conclusions or recommendations they have made or wish to make. The Appeals Officer would benefit from this information and any additional work that has been done.

Notice of Objection or Appeal is Outstanding When Request for Adjustment is made

Unless instructed to do so by Appeals, whenever an assessment is subject to a notice of objection or appeal, Revenue Collections Division must not make an adjustment to a memorandum assessment under any circumstance. In the event a request for an adjustment is received from a person who has been assessed under one of the memorandum assessment provisions, the person's representative, or counsel of the Department of Justice and a Notice of Objection or Appeal is outstanding, the person making the request should be referred to the Appeals Division. When disposing with the objection or appeal, the Appeals Division will issue instructions to Revenue Collections if and when appropriate.

Where Time to File Notice of Objection or Extension Order has not Expired

In the event a request is received for an adjustment and an Objection or Appeal has not been filed, the collection officer can reconsider the facts and can complete the necessary steps to have the assessment varied when the facts warrant it. However, a third party should be informed of their right to file an objection, or to apply for an extension of time to object when time to do so has not lapsed, particularly when the request is denied or there is a chance the time may expire before a decision can be made.

When Should Reassessment be made or Adjustment Request be Declined?

When it is clear from the additional information that the amount of a memorandum assessment is in error, it would be appropriate for Revenue Collections to proceed with a reassessment provided a Notice of Objection or Notice of Appeal is not outstanding.

In the event a request for an adjustment is received and it is not clear from the additional information provided that the assessment is incorrect, the request for adjustment should be declined. It may be that the Tax Services Office staff may choose to obtain advice from the Department of Justice or the Field Support Section in advance of making such a decision.

Digitized by Google

Reassessment Approval Authority

A Collection Officer should not commit to an adjustment being made as a result of receiving a request. Instead, the matter should be referred to the person within the local office who has been delegated the authority to approve memorandum assessments to seek concurrence with the Collection Officer's recommendation.

For further details refer to the section Approval Authority.

The person who made the request for the adjustment should be informed of the decision of whether or not an adjustment will be made, and if the decision is made to make an adjustment, then a reassessment should be issued accordingly.

For further details refer to the section Notice of Reassessment for Director's Liability Where no Objection or Appeal Exists.

Statutory Period to Reassess

When an objection or appeal is not outstanding, careful attention must be given to ensure the normal reassessment period has not passed when considering an adjustment.

Under subsection 152(4) of the Income Tax Act (ITA), a three-year statutory reassessment period commences once a memorandum assessment has been issued. Accordingly, the issuance of a reassessment, or any subsequent reassessments of the same transaction or event that was dealt with in the original notice of assessment, becomes statute barred after 3 years have passed from the initial assessment date.

In the case of a memorandum assessment issued under the Excise Tax Act (ETA), a reassessment must be made within 4 years of a third party becoming liable for an amount. The third party becomes liable at the time the memorandum assessment is issued. Subsection 298(1) of the ETA provides that reassessments must be made within 4 years from the time the amount becomes payable.

Accordingly, reassessments of memorandum liabilities under the ITA and ETA must not be processed once the normal (re)assessment period noted above has passed.

Procedures

This section identifies procedures related to Director's Liability:

- Completing a Director's Liability Assessment
- Collection Action on Directors' Liability Assessments
- Maintaining the Director's Liability Assessment
- Applying Payments
- Situations Where a Notice of Objection is Filed
- Directors' Entitlement to Preference

Digitized by Google

Completing a Director's Liability Assessment

When raising a Director's liability assessment, it is important to give directors the full opportunity to provide a due diligence defence and to seek out all relevant information. For details refer to the Policy section entitled The Due Diligence Provision.

Related Topics:

- Conducting the Initial Investigation
- Directors' Liability Checklist
- Obtaining a Defence
- Investigation Required Before Requesting an Opinion
- Requesting an Opinion on a Director's Liability
- Raising a Director's Liability Assessment

Conducting the Initial Investigation

To conduct an initial investigation:

Note: The order in which the initial investigation is completed may vary depending on the case and the information already obtained.

1. Confirm that all attempts were made to recover the debt using normal collection action.

   Note: Where garnishment action is taken to collect the arrears, withdrawal of the garnishee could prohibit the assessment of directors. Refer to the chapter Garnishment for further detail.

2. In the case of a bankruptcy, confirm that a proof of claim was filed within six months of the date of the assignment.

3. In the case where non-payment resulted from a corporate liquidation, dissolution or receivership, confirm that:

   - a claim was filed within six months
   - where applicable, proof of dissolution cancellation of certificate of incorporation was obtained
   - where applicable, copies of documents appointing the receiver was obtained

4. Determine the identity of the directors at the time the liability arose, for example: dates of election, appointment and resignation, by obtaining:

   - provincial/federal corporation records

     Note: A federal search is obtained from Industry Canada.

Digitized by Google

- directors' register
- a copy of any relevant information in the corporate minute book

  Note: If it is not possible to obtain a copy, review the corporate minute book.

- copy of directors' letters of resignation
- copy of directors' resolutions and minutes of meetings listing directors

  Note: If the director(s) is not willing/able to provide these documents, the use of a Requirement for Information and Documents may be warranted. Refer to the chapter, Requirements for Information, for further details.

5. Review the company's minute book to determine:
   - the extent of positive action taken to prevent non-compliance
   - the dates of directors election
   - appointment and resignation of directors
   - banking and signing authorities
   - amalgamation
   - corporate name changes
   - treatment of the amounts of tax collected
   - declaration of dividends
   - redemption of shares
6. Determine the period outstanding that makes up the balance of the account by:
   - analyzing account information on the various systems available to collection officers, such as ACSES, BW, SUDS, etc.
   - reviewing audit information, for example: payroll audit, GST/HST audit
   - reviewing the company's payroll records
   - reviewing proofs of claim
   - examining copies of corporate Notices of Assessment

   Note: If necessary, request the appropriate audit.
7. Determine the potential to collect the liability from the directors by:
   - conducting asset searches
   - identifying the incomes

Digitized by Google

Even if it appears that only one director has sufficient assets from which to effect collection, assess all directors.

Directors' Liability Checklist

It is important that adequate documentation and information is gathered from a company, the directors and CRA to substantiate an assessment in the courts.

Related Topics:

- Required Ev cvidence Relating to the Status of the Company
- Required Evidence Relating to the Directors
- Required Evidence Relating to CRA

Required Evidence Relating to the Status of the Company

The following describes situations relating to the status of the company and the evidence required.

a) Situations where the company is indebted:

- to CRA under either or both statutes the Income Tax Act (ITA) and the Excise Tax Act (ETA) for a total amount equal to or exceeding the Tax Services Offices (TSO) threshold for directors' liability assessment
- for an amount under the local threshold, but other reasons justify that its directors be assessed

Required evidence:

- a print-out of the company's account under each statute owing

b) Situations where the company failed to remit payroll deductions and/or net GST/HST:

Required evidence:

- the account historic (where applicable), and all pertinent reports including any trust examination
- an account reconciliation in spreadsheet form denoting:
  - the months and years to which the assessments apply, the amounts of federal tax, UI premiums, EI premiums and CPP contributions, with applicable penalty and interest
  - the months and years to which the assessments apply for provincial tax, plus applicable penalty and interest

Digitized by Google

- the periods of GST/HST plus applicable penalty and interest

c) Situations where the company has cash-flow problems, and has no immediate assets from which to effect payment:

Required evidence:

- a court action recommended
- a certificate
- an enforcement of judgment or writ
- the Sheriff's or Bailiff's return

d) Situations where the name of the company has been struck off the Registrar's records on its own request and where a liquidator is or is not appointed (the charter was revoked) due to the company's failure to file the appropriate return with the Registrar:

Required evidence:

- a court action is recommended, except when a liquidator is appointed
- a certificate
- an enforcement of judgment or writ
- the Sheriff's or Bailiff's return
- a notice of dissolution when the company is struck off at it's own request
- a letter to the liquidator (within six months of dissolution) requesting payment

e) Situations where the company is formally and voluntarily wound up:

Required evidence:

- special resolution
- letter to the liquidator (within six months of the day the special resolution was passed) requesting payment

f) Situations where the company was wound up by court order requested by the company or by a third party.

Required evidence:

- a letter to the liquidator (within six months of the Court Order) requesting payment
- a Court Order

g) Situations where the company is in receivership.

Digitized by Google

Required evidence:

- a notice of Receivership
- a Claim filed with a Receiver (within 6 months of Receivership)
- a court action recommended
- a certificate
- an enforcement of judgment or writ
- the Sheriff's or Bailiff's return

h) Situations where the company is bankrupt.

Required evidence:

- a Notice of Bankruptcy
- a Proof of Claim (filed within six months of bankruptcy)
- a reconciliation of the account to Proof of Claim

i) Situation where the company was incorporated.

Required evidence:

- articles of incorporation showing the names of the incorporators

Required Evidence Relating to the Directors

The following describes situations relating to the director and the evidence required.

a) Situations determining who the directors of the company were at the time of the failure to remit.

Required evidence:

- a copy from the Minute Book or the Directors' register of the appropriate directors
- a corporate registry search

b) Situations where each director owned shares

Required evidence:

- a share register
- a corporate registry search

c) Situations where none of the directors could be assessed either because their tenure as director did not coincide with the failure to remit or the two-year limitation period for assessing has expired.

Digitized by Google

Required evidence:

- a resignation of the Director in the Minute Book
- comparison of tenure of directorship with the time of the failure to remit
- a corporate registry search

d) Situations where one of the directors could not be assessed either because after considering an assessment under the other statute, their defence has been accepted for the same period and with regard to the same corporation or an assessment has been raised under the other statute, appealed and vacated and the reasons for such a vacation would also apply to the assessment contemplated:

Required evidence:

- details and copies of relevant documents from the other file

e) Situations where at least one director has the ability to pay.

Required evidence:

- details on assets and incomes of these directors

f) Situations where we advised the director by registered mail of our intention to assess them for their corporation's failure to remit.

Required evidence:

- a copy of the pre-assessment proposal letter

g) Situations where the account was brought forward 30 days from the date of the letter.

Required evidence:

- an entry on ACSES or on the log of action

h) Situations where the director asked for an extension of time to reply.

Required evidence:

- a letter from the director or his representative

i) Situations where the director claimed not to be a director at the time of the failure.

Required evidence:

- a copy of letter of resignation forwarded to the company's registered office
- an excerpt of the relevant piece of corporate legislation showing conditions for a director's resignation to be acceptable
- evidence from the Minute Book

Digitized by Google

- Directors' resolutions and minutes of meetings listing directors
- a copy of Registrar of Companies' search
- a copy of the Notice of Dissolution and of the Notice of Revocation
- evidence that the director was or was not involved in the company

j) Situations where the director claimed that CRA is outside the time limit as per 227.1(4) of the ITA, 323(5) of the ETA.

Required evidence:

- evidence that the corporate charter was revoked more than 2 years ago
- evidence that the company dissolved more than 2 years ago
- evidence of a personal Bankruptcy more than 2 years ago
- a copy of a letter of resignation dated more than 2 years ago delivered to the registered offices of the company

Required Evidence Relating to CRA

The following describes the evidence required by CRA.

a) Situations where CRA accepted or refuted the defence:

Required evidence:

- if defence accepted, provide an analysis of the information
- if defence refuted, document your findings
- write a letter to the director to that effect

b) Situations where the director provided a defence or made further representation about his defence.

Required evidence:

- information from the director

c) Situations where CRA accepted the new representation or refuted the new information.

Required evidence:

- the analysis of the director's new information
- a letter to the director to that effect

d) Situations where the director did not reply to the pre-assessment proposal letter and/or CRA followed up by registered mail or telephoned the director.

Digitized by Google

Required evidence

- record in ACSES diary or in log of action

e) Situations where CRA issued a Notice of Assessment.

Required evidence:

- Notice of Assessment (T779) or Third Party Notice of Assessment (GST 259)
- a dummy ledger card for each director assessment

f) Situations where there is a follow-up of the assessment.

Required evidence:

- confirmation that routine collections letters were sent
- ACSES diary or log of action

g) Situation where assessment(s) appealed.

Required evidence:

- review the checklist to ascertain no relevant document is missing
- send photocopies of all the documents in the docket to the Appeals officer, including printing of any relevant ACSES Diary or log of action entries

Obtaining a Defence

A review of the Policy sections entitled The Due Diligence Provision and The Pre-Assessment Proposal Letter, are recommended in advance of a review of this section.

To obtain a defence:

1. Complete a pre-assessment proposal letter available on the Electronic Letter Creation System (ELCS 19713) to the Directors.

   Note: The pre-assessment letter gives the Director 30 days to respond.

2. Send the letter by registered mail.
3. If a request is made to extend the time to respond, grant the extension providing the reasons given are reasonable.
4. If a response is received claiming due diligence, verify the evidence submitted by:

   a) Interviewing the directors (where applicable).

   b) Reviewing the books and records.

5. If no response is received, either:

Digitized by Google

a) Contact the director by telephone to provide a further opportunity to present a due diligence defence, or

b) Send the second Pre-Assessment Letter (ELCS 19718) by registered mail requesting the director confirm that a response was not sent and to further warn that an assessment is being considered.

6. If the director's response is insufficient, a formal rejection of the director's arguments is required through the issuance of the final Pre-Assessment Letter (ELCS 19696).

7. If you are not certain as to the validity of the due diligence response received, a referral to the Department of Justice may be required. Review the guidelines provided within the section Referring Cases to the Department of Justice.

8. If you are satisfied that the director met the standard required, send a letter to the director advising that the Agency will not pursue the matter further.

Investigation Required Before Requesting an Opinion

Before requesting a Department of Justice Opinion:

1. Review the guidelines outlined in When to Refer a Case to the Department of Justice and Cases That Are Not Referred to the Department of Justice.

2. Refer to Case Law relating to due diligence defences to determine if a decided case settles the matter, or where the facts of a case do not correspond with the guidelines in When to Refer a Case to the Department of Justice and Cases That Are Not Referred to the Department of Justice.

3. If the case law is unclear, consult with the:

   - Team Leader
   - Revenue Collections Technical Advisor or Resource/Complex Case Officer
   - Programs Officer in Headquarters

4. If ambiguity still exists after consultation, request an opinion from the Department of Justice. Refer to Requesting an Opinion on a Directors' Liability for further detail.

Requesting an Opinion on a Director's Liability

To request an opinion concerning the liability of a director:

1. Prepare a letter in the name of the appropriate delegated authority to the Department of Justice;

   Note: For further details please refer to Memorandum 01-21, entitled Delegation of the Minister's Powers under the Income Tax Act, Excise Tax Act and Customs Act.

   a) Identify the company, including:

Digitized by Google

- account number
- amount of debt
- name

b) Provide an account reconciliation, indicating

- the months and years or the filing periods of the various defaults reconciled to the Notice(s) of Assessment against the corporation

2. Provide details regarding the account's history including:

- compliance history
- payment arrangements made
- any legal actions taken
- any recovery made by way of legal action and/or voluntary payments made
- the current status of the corporation (i.e. active, dissolved, bankrupt)

3. Provide details of the directors, including:

- the names of the directors
- dates of appointment
- shares owned in the company
- dates of resignation
- if applicable, details of personal bankruptcy

a) If applicable, provide the following details:

- date of bankruptcy
- date of the receivership
- details of a liquidation or winding-up
- any further details regarding the bankruptcy

b) Request the Department of Justice to provide an explanation of why, in their opinion, the director's representations are considered or are not considered sufficient to exempt the director from liability.

4. Attach copies of relevant documents, including:

- copy of the corporate information registered with the appropriate federal or provincial official indicating the directors of the corporation at all relevant times

Digitized by Google

and if not available, copy of the corporate minute book, including resolutions relating to elections, appointments and resignations and the director's register

- copies of the letters or other documents evidencing or containing the due diligence or other defence offered by the director

  Note: It is not necessary to provide the pre-assessment proposal letter.

- copy of CRA's proof of claim filed in the Bankruptcy or voluntary liquidation of the corporation

- copy of the nulla bona or partial return from the sheriff or bailiff

- copies of the Writs of Seizure and Sale certificates and/or memorial of judgment issued

- copies of subsequent conversations

5. In the case of a "de facto" director provide a complete description of the factual circumstances which give rise to the proposed assessment.

   Note: This description should be based upon a thorough examination of the relevant corporate documents as well as interviews of knowledgeable persons, for example: directors, officers, bookkeepers, accountants, managers and persons in a supervisory position, as to the extent of the individual's involvement in the direction of the corporate affairs.

6. Obtain the required approval as outlined within the section entitled Obtaining Approval.

Raising a Director's Liability Assessment

There are numerous components involved in the completion of a director's liability assessment. The following sections clearly outline in detail the steps required.

Related Topics:

- Obtaining Approval
- Approval Memorandum
- Completion of a Director's Liability Notice of Assessment Form
- Completion of the T779 Form
- Completion of the GST259 Form
- Director's Liability Assessment Versee
- Notice of Reassessment for Director's Liability where a Notice of Objection Exists

Digitized by Google

- Notice of Reassessment for Director's Liability Where No Objection or Appeal Exists
- Additional Assessment for Director's Liability
- Cancellation of Director's Liability Assessment
- Director's Liability Particulars of Assessment
- Amounts Not to Be Included Within the Particulars of Assessment
- Amended Director's Liability Particulars of Assessment
- Interest Charges on Director's Liability Memorandum Assessments

Obtaining Approval

Prior to proceeding with a proposed director's liability assessment, approval from the applicable authority level must be received.

The delegated approval levels for a director's liability assessment are as follows:

- Director, Tax Services Office
- Assistant Director, Revenue Collections Division
- Manager, Revenue Collections Division

For further details please refer to Memorandum 01-21, entitled Delegation of the Minister's Powers under the Income Tax Act, Excise Tax Act and Customs Act.

> Note: Local Revenue Collections Divisional policy will dictate which of the above authority levels are to be used.

Approval Memorandum

It is recommended that written approval be sought prior to the assessment being issued in the form of a Memorandum addressed to the applicable signing authority.

The Memorandum should include the following information:

1) Name of the debtor company
2) Account number
3) TSO date
4) Total of the debt outstanding
5) A detailed summary outlining the Collections history of the account including the following information:

Digitized by Google

- all voluntary payments made to the debt
- any legal actions taken and the amounts recovered
- when and how the corporation ceased business operations (where applicable)
- evidence that a Direction to Enforce Writ was executed and returned "Satisfied in Whole or in Part" (where applicable)
- that a Proof of Claim was filed within 6 months of the corporation's assignment in bankruptcy, receivership, or liquidation/dissolution proceeding (where applicable)
- a list of all the director(s) of record and whether they are eligible for assessment
- any details regarding due diligence claimed or not claimed by the director(s) of record
- the amounts for which the directors of record will be assessed
- details regarding the collectibility of the proposed assessment against the director(s) of record
- the opinion requested from the Department of Justice where one was required in respect of the proposed assessment

6) The name(s) of the applicable authority level(s) for signature

Note: A detailed Memorandum as noted above will also serve to provide the Appeals Division with a complete summary of the account in the likelihood of a Notice of Objection being filed.

Completion of a Director's Liability Notice of Assessment Form

A Notice of Assessment Form can be completed upon receipt of written concurrence from the applicable delegated authority.

Note: Local TSO Divisional Policy will determine at what stage the Notice of Assessment Form is completed. Some Collections Divisions require that the applicable Notice of Assessment Form be completed after Managerial approval while others allow for its completion concurrent with the Approval Memorandum. Please refer to your local policy for the approved workflow.

A Director's Liability Notice of Assessment consists of the following two components:

- a form T779 for source deductions and/or a form GST 259 for GST/HST amounts; and
- an attachment detailing the assessment known as the Particulars of Assessment

Completion of the T779 Form

Digitized by Google

The T779 Notice of Assessment Form is composed of two parts:

- Part 1 being the "Assessment Portion", and
- Part 2 being the "Remittance Form" portion

The following is a breakdown detailing all the required components within each part:

Part 1:

1. In the area identified as "Control No":
   - Insert the control number of the Notice of Assessment if not already printed.
2. In the area identified as "Date of Mailing":
   - Insert the date of mailing of the Notice of Assessment.
3. In the area identified as "Tax Services Office":
   - Insert the name of the Tax Services Office that generated the assessment.
4. In the area identified as "Total amount assessed":
   - Insert the total amount assessed as identified within the Particulars of Assessment.
5. In the area identified as "Name/Address":
   - Insert the full name (including all known aliases) of the director being assessed, and
   - Insert the mailing address of the director being assessed.

   Note: It is imperative that the mailing address used is correct. Mail the Notice of Assessment to the designated address as provided by the director. If no such address has been supplied, use all internal and external sources available to confirm the proper mailing address.
6. In the area identified as "This notice of Assessment/Reassessment is in respect of the following":
   - Insert the appropriate ITA S.227.1 assessment verse.

     Note: Refer to Director's Liability Assessment Verses for the appropriate wording.
   - Insert as a reference contact the Collections Officer's name and phone number.
7. In the area identified as Commissioner of the Canada Revenue Agency
   - Insert the Commissioner's name.

Part 2:

Digitized by Google

1. In the area identified as "Remitted by":

   - Insert the name and address of the director being assessed.

   Note: The name and address should be the same as what is indicated within Part 1.

2. In the area identified as "Mail this part with your payment to":

   - Insert the Ottawa Technology Centre address.

3. In the area identified as "TSO Code":

   - Insert your TSO code number.

4. In the area identified as "Assessment in respect of":

   - Insert the name of the corporation to which the assessment pertains, and

   - Insert the account number of the corporation to which the assessment pertains.

For an example see T779 Notice of Assessment Form (these forms are read only, existing forms have been used and updated forms with the CRA name will be inserted at a later date).

Completion of the GST259 Form

The GST259 Notice of Assessment Form is composed of two parts:

- Part 1 being the "Assessment Portion", and

- Part 2 being the "Remittance Form" portion

The following is a breakdown detailing all the required components within each part:

Part 1:

1. In the area identified as "Control No":

   - Insert the control number of the Notice of Assessment.

2. In the area identified as "Name and Address":

   - Insert the full name (including all known aliases) of the director being assessed, and

   - Insert the mailing address of the director being assessed.

   Note: It is imperative that the mailing address used is correct. Mail the Notice of Assessment to the designated address as provided by the director. If no such address has been supplied, use all internal and external sources available to confirm the proper mailing address.

3. In the area identified as "Mailing Date":

Digitized by Google

- Insert the date of mailing of the Notice of Assessment.

4. In the area identified as "Business Number":

   - Insert the account number of the corporation to which the director's liability pertains.

5. In the area identified as "Reference No":

   - Insert the RDP (Regional District Province) code along with the business number noted above.

6. In the area identified as "This Notice of Assessment is issued in respect of the liability under":

   - Insert the appropriate GST 323(1) assessment verse.

   Note: Refer to Director's Liability Assessment Verses for the appropriate wording.

7. In the area identified as "Amount Assessed":

   - Insert the total amount assessed as identified within the Particulars of Assessment.

8. In the area identified as "For more information, please contact":

   - Insert the Collection Officer's name, phone number and the Tax Services office address.

9. In the area identified as Commissioner of the Canada Revenue Agency

   - Insert the Commissioner's name.

Part 2:

1. In the area identified as "Business Number":

   - Insert the account number of the corporation to which the director's liability pertains.

2. In the area identified as "For the Account of":

- Insert the name of the corporation to which the director's liability pertains.

3. In the area identified as "Remitted by":

   - Insert the full name (including all known aliases) of the director being assessed as identified in the area "Name and Address".

4. In the area identified as "Reference No":

   - Insert the RDP (Regional District Province) code along with the business number noted above.

Digitized by Google

Please refer to GST259 Notice of Assessment Form for an example. (These forms are read only existing forms have been used and updated forms with the CRA name will be inserted at a later date.)

Director's Liability Assessment Verses

Use the following verse in assessments issued to a director(s) for ITA subsection 227.1 assessments:

> The liability under subsection 227.1 (1) of the Income Tax Act and (insert the corresponding liability under the Provincial Tax Act (*)), subsection 21.1 (1) of the Canada Pension Plan, and subsection 83(1) of the Employment Insurance Act, () in the amount of $(insert total amount assessed) being the amount of the unpaid deductions, interest and penalties payable by (insert name of corporation) in respect of a Notice of Assessment dated (insert date(s) of the Notice of Assessment(s) issued against the corporation) (). Please see the attached Particulars of Assessment for additional information.
>
> Note (*): For a list of corresponding applicable Provincial Tax Acts refer to the chapter Memorandum Assessments, Provincial Statutory Authority to Impose Liability.
>
> Note (): Amounts withheld before June 30, 1996 must include "and subsection 54(1) of the Unemployment Insurance Act (1994)."
>
> Note (): In the case of multiple assessment dates use the term "in respect of Notices of Assessment dated (insert the assessment dates)."

ITA example:

> The liability under subsection 227.1 (1) of the Income Tax Act and section 57 of the British Columbia Income Tax Act, subsection 21.1 (1) of the Canada Pension Plan, and subsection 83(1) of the Employment Insurance Act, in the amount of $100,000.00 being the amount of the unpaid deductions, interest and penalties payable by ABC Limited in respect of Notices of Assessment dated January 10, 2004, October 15, 2004 and February 2, 2005. Please see the attached Particulars of Assessment for additional information.

Use the following verse in assessments issued to a director(s) for ETA subsection 323(1) assessments:

> The liability under subsection 323(1) of the Excise Tax Act in the amount of $ (insert total amount assessed) in respect of a failure to remit net tax as required under subsection 228(2) by (name of registrant) on or about (date(s) of failure). Please see the attached Particulars of Assessment for additional information.

ETA example:

> The liability under subsection 323(1) of the Excise Tax Act in the amount of $100,000.00 in respect of a failure to remit net tax as required under subsection

Digitized by Google

228(2) by ABC Limited on or about March 31, 2005, April 30, 2005, May 31, 2005 and July 31, 2005. Please see the attached Particulars of Assessment for additional information.

Use the following verse in assessments issued to a director(s) for ATSCA subsection 81(1) assessments:

The liability under subsection 81(1) of the Air Travellers Security Charge Act in the amount of $_____ being unpaid amounts owing and interest (until the Act is amended, we cannot include penalties in Director's liability assessments because the wording does not include penalties) payable by (insert name of corporation) in respect of a Notice of Assessment dated (insert date of the Notice of Assessment issued against the corporation). Please see the particulars of the assessment for additional information.

ASTCA example:

The liability under subsection 81(1) of the Air Travellers Security Charge Act in the amount of $10,000.00 being unpaid amounts owing and interest payable by ABC Limited in respect of Notices of Assessment dated March 31, 2005 and April 30, 2005. Please see the particulars of the assessment for additional information.

Notice of Reassessment for Director's Liability Where a Notice of Objection Exists

Please review the section entitled, Reassessing Joint and Several Liabilities, prior to the completion of a reassessment to any Director's Liability assessment.

Note: The reassessment balance is the new balance owing and not the difference between the original assessment balance and the newly reassessed balance owing. For example, if the original assessed balance is $100,000 and the reassessed balance is now $80,000, the amount indicated above must be $80,000 and not $20,000.

Use the following verse for reassessments issued to a director(s) for ITA subsection 227.1 assessments:

The above adjustment is issued in response to your notice of objection and the Notice of Reassessment is issued under paragraph 165(3) of the Income Tax Act. The reassessment concerning the obligation under subsection 227.1 of the Income Tax Act and (insert the corresponding liability under the Provincial Tax Act, Canada Pension Plan, Employment Insurance Act, and/or Unemployment Insurance Act) in the amount of $(insert reassessment balance), amends the previous Notice of Assessment dated (insert original date of assessment) bearing # (insert control number from original assessment). Please see the attached Particulars of Reassessment for additional information.

ITA example:

The above adjustment is issued in response to your notice of objection and the Notice of Reassessment is issued under paragraph 165(3) of the Income Tax Act. The reassessment concerning the obligation under subsection 227.1 of the Income

Digitized by Google

Tax Act and section 57 of the British Columbia Income Tax Act, subsection 21.1(1) of the Canada Pension Plan, and subsection 83(1) of the Employment Insurance Act, in the amount of $80,000.00, amends the previous Notice of Assessment dated April 1, 2005 bearing # 123456. Please see the attached Particulars of Reassessment for additional information.

Use the following verse for reassessments issued to a director(s) for ETA subsection 323(1) assessments:

The above adjustment is issued in response to your notice of objection and the Notice of Reassessment is issued under paragraphs 301(3) and 301(5) of the Excise Tax Act in the amount of $(Insert reassessment balance), amends the previous Notice of Assessment dated (insert original date of assessment) bearing # (Insert control number from original assessment). Please see the attached Particulars of Reassessment for additional information.

ETA example:

The above adjustment is issued in response to your notice of objection and the Notice of Reassessment is issued under paragraphs 301(3) and 301(5) of the Excise Tax Act in the amount of $80,000.00, amends the previous Notice of Assessment dated August 15, 2005 bearing # 123456. Please see the attached Particulars of Reassessment for additional information.

Use the following verse for reassessments issued to a director(s) for ATSCA subsection 81(1) assessments:

The above adjustment is issued in response to your notice of objection and the Notice of Reassessment is issued under subsection 43 (8) of the Air Travellers Security Charge Act in the amount of $(insert reassessment balance), amends the previous Notice of Assessment dated (insert original date of assessment) bearing # (insert control number from original assessment). Please see the attached Particulars of Reassessment for additional information.

ATSCA example:

The above adjustment is issued in response to your notice of objection and the Notice of Reassessment is issued under subsection 43(8) of the Air Travellers Security Charge Act in the amount of $80,000.00, amends the previous Notice of Assessment dated August 15, 2005 bearing # 123456. Please see the attached Particulars of Reassessment for additional information

Notice of Reassessment for Director's Liability Where No Objection or Appeal Exists

Circumstance may arise wherein amounts that have been assessed may warrant a re-determination or re-calculation. Revenue Collections Divisions may reconsider the amount of a third party's liability and issue a reassessment to adjust the amount when there is a proper basis to do so and an objection or appeal is not outstanding. For further details refer to the sections Resolving a Disputed Memorandum Assessment and Request for Adjustment to a Memorandum Assessment.

Note: The reassessment balance is the new balance owing and not the difference between the original assessment balance and the newly reassessed balance owing.

Digitized by Google

For example, if the original assessed balance is $100,000 and the reassessed balance is now $80,000, the amount indicated above must be $80,000 and not $20,000.

Use the following verse for reassessments issued to a director(s) for ITA subsection 227.1 assessments where a third party has provided information prior to the filing of an Objection or Appeal that would result in an amendment to the original amount assessed:

The above adjustment is issued in response to additional information provided. The reassessment concerning the obligation under subsection 227.1 of the Income Tax Act and (insert the corresponding liability under the Provincial Tax Act, Canada Pension Plan, Employment Insurance Act, and/or Unemployment Insurance Act) in the amount of $(insert reassessment balance; see "Note" below), amends the previous Notice of Assessment dated (insert original date of assessment) bearing # (insert control number from original assessment). Please see the attached Particulars of Reassessment for additional information.

ITA example:

The above adjustment is issued in response to additional information provided. The reassessment concerning the obligation under subsection 227.1 of the Income Tax Act and section 57 of the British Columbia Income Tax Act, subsection 21.1(1) of the Canada Pension Plan, and subsection 83(1) of the Employment Insurance Act, in the amount of $80,000.00, amends the previous Notice of Assessment dated April 1, 2005 bearing # 123456. Please see the attached Particulars of Reassessment for additional information.

Use the following verse for reassessments issued to a director(s) for ETA subsection 323(1) assessments where a third party has provided information prior to the filing of an Objection or Appeal that would result in an amendment to the original amount assessed:

The above adjustment is issued in response to additional information provided. The reassessment concerning the obligation under subsection 323(1) of the Excise Tax Act in the amount of $(insert reassessment balance; see "Note" below), amends the previous Notice of Assessment dated (insert original date of assessment) bearing # (insert control number from original assessment). Please see the attached Particulars of Reassessment for additional information.

ETA example:

The above adjustment is issued in response to additional information provided. The reassessment concerning the obligation under subsection 323(1) of the Excise Tax Act in the amount of $80,000.00, amends the previous Notice of Assessment dated August 15, 2005 bearing # 123456. Please see the attached Particulars of Reassessment for additional information.

Use the following verse for reassessments issued to a director(s) for ATSCA subsection 81(1) assessments where a third party has provided information prior to the filing of an Objection or Appeal that would result in an amendment to the original amount assessed:

Digitized by Google

The above adjustment is issued in response to additional information provided. The reassessment concerning the obligation under subsection 81(1) of the Air Travellers Security Charge Act in the amount of $(insert reassessment balance; see "Note" below), amends the previous Notice of Assessment dated (insert original date of assessment) bearing # (insert control number from original assessment). Please see the attached Particulars of Reassessment for additional information.

ATSCA example:

The above adjustment is issued in response to additional information provided. The reassessment concerning the obligation under subsection 81(1) of the Air Travellers Security Charge Act in the amount of $80,000.00, amends the previous Notice of Assessment dated August 15, 2005 bearing # 123456. Please see the attached Particulars of Reassessment for additional information

Additional Assessment for Director's Liability

Use the following verse in circumstances where an Additional Assessment for a director's liability is required:

An additional assessment pertaining to the liability under (insert section or subsection of the ITA, ETA or ATSCA) and (insert the corresponding liability under the Provincial Tax Act, Canada Pension Plan, Employment Insurance Act, and Unemployment Insurance Act) in the amount of $(insert additional assessment amount) and is in addition to the assessment dated (insert original assessment date) bearing # (insert control number from original assessment). Please see the attached Particulars of Assessment for additional information.

ITA example:

An additional assessment pertaining to the liability under subsection 227.1 (1) of the Income Tax Act and section 57 of the British Columbia Income Tax Act, subsection 21.1 (1) of the Canada Pension Plan, and subsection 83(1) of the Employment Insurance Act in the amount of $150,000.00 and is in addition to the assessment dated April 1, 2005 bearing # 123456. Please see the attached Particulars of Assessment for additional information.

ETA example:

An additional assessment pertaining to the liability under subsection 323(1) of the Excise Tax Act in the amount of $150,000.00 and is in addition to the assessment dated August 15, 2005 bearing # 123456. Please see the attached Particulars of Assessment for additional information.

ATSCA example:

An additional assessment pertaining to the liability under subsection 81(1) of the Air Travellers Security Charge Act in the amount of $150,000.00 and is in addition to the assessment dated August 15, 2005 bearing # 123456. Please see the attached Particulars of Assessment for additional information.

Cancellation of Director's Liability Assessment

Digitized by Google

A director's liability assessment may require it to be cancelled upon instruction from the Appeals Division.

Use the following verse for the cancellation of ITA director's liability assessments:

> The above adjustment is issued in response to your notice of objection and the Notice of Assessment is issued under paragraph 165(3) of the Income Tax Act. This notice cancels the Notice of Assessment dated (insert original date of assessment) bearing # (insert control number from original assessment).

Use the following verse for the cancellation of ETA director's liability assessments:

> The above adjustment is issued in response to your notice of objection and the Notice of Assessment is issued under paragraphs 301(3) and 301(5) of the Excise Tax Act. This notice cancels the Notice of Assessment dated (insert original date of assessment) bearing # (insert control number from original assessment).

Use the following verse for the cancellation of ATSCA director's liability assessments:

> The above adjustment is issued in response to your notice of objection and the Notice of Assessment is issued under subsection 43 (8) of the Air Travellers Security Charge Act. This notice cancels the Notice of Assessment dated (insert original date of assessment) bearing # (insert control number from original assessment).

Director's Liability Particulars of Assessment

In order to explain and support any memorandum assessment, you must always prepare a separate attachment known as the Particulars of Assessment.

In the case of a director's liability assessment, the Particulars of Assessment must indicate the following:

- the name of the principle tax debtor and the account number
- the name and the account number of the person being held jointly and severally liable
- the date of the joint and several liability
- the dates of all applicable failure to remit assessments (source deductions), failure to remit net tax assessments (GST/HST) or failure to remit security charge amounts (ATSCA)
- for source deductions, the amount of federal tax, provincial tax, employment insurance premiums, unemployment insurance premiums and CPP contributions for each assessment period owing
- for GST/HST, the period end date of each assessment owing
- for GST/HST, the amount of tax owing for each assessment period owing

Digitized by Google

- for ATSCA, the fiscal month end date of each assessment owing
- for ATSCA, the amount of charges owing for each assessment period owing
- all applicable penalty and interest for each assessment period owing

  For details refer to the section Interest Charges on Director's Liability Memorandum Assessments.

  Note: Penalties can not be included in Director's Liability Memorandum Assessments raised under the ATSCA.

- the total amount assessed
- reference to all the relevant sections of the Acts used to assess

For further details refer to Amounts Not to Be Included Within the Particulars of Assessment.

In addition, a specific comment must be entered within the attachment that clearly makes the link between the Notice of Assessment form being issued and the Particulars of Assessment. Therefore the following notation should be noted within the attachment:

> This attachment is in addition to and forms part of the attached Notice of Assessment dated (insert date of assessment) bearing # (insert control number of Form T779 or GST 259 Form).

In circumstances where the director's liability assessment requires the completion of a reassessment or an additional assessment an amended Particulars of Assessment or Particulars of reassessment is required.

For examples of how a directors' liability Particulars of Assessment should look like, refer to the following:

- ITA Subsection 227.1 Particulars of Assessment
- ETA Subsection 323(1) Particulars of Assessment

Amounts Not to Be Included Within the Particulars of Assessment

The following are not to be included within the Particulars of Assessment:

- law costs
- T4 Late Penalties nor any interest attached to these penalties

Amended Director's Liability Particulars of Assessment

In circumstances where the director's liability assessment requires the completion of a reassessment or additional assessment an amended Particulars of Assessment or Particulars of Reassessment is required.

Digitized by Google

The contents of amended Particulars of Assessment/Reassessment should include all the items as outlined within the section Director's Liability Particulars of Assessment, including:

- an accounting sufficient to detail the basis for the reassessment or additional assessment, and
- the revised balance

Note: The details of any amended Particulars of Assessment or Reassessment must provide a link between what is being assessed/reassessed with what was originally assessed.

Interest Charges on Director's Liability Memorandum Assessments

On memorandum assessments specific to director's liability, interest is charged:

- from the date of the corporation's failure to deduct, withhold, remit or pay its required source deductions or its GST/HST net tax

Note: A memorandum assessment, including interest charges, cannot exceed the total amount of the primary debt. In a case where the primary debtor is declared bankrupt, interest ceases to be charged against the primary (bankrupt) account. However, interest may still be charged to the memorandum assessment until such time as the debit equals that of the primary account as of the date of bankruptcy.

Collection Action on Directors' Liability Assessments

Under Section 225.1 of the Income Tax Act, the 90 days collection restrictions must be observed before taking legal action. Although the Excise Tax Act and Air Travellers Security Charge Act permit immediate collection action on mailing of a Notice of Assessment, collection action on all Memorandum Assessments will be held in abeyance for ninety days (appeal period).

However, for amounts under the Excise Tax Act and the Air Travellers Security Charge Act, the ninety days restriction is not applicable in cases where the Tax Services Office determines the existence of a potential danger of loss. In such instances, advise Headquarters through your applicable Field Support representative, of the details surrounding the case, requesting authority to waive the ninety-day period.

Note: It is recommended that the referral made to Field Support be in the same style and manner as used within a Jeopardy proceeding. Therefore, Collections Officers should complete both a "Statement of Facts" and a "Risk Analysis" for review by Field Support. This process is required so that it can be clearly shown that on the balance of probabilities, any further delay in collection action would place the account at risk. For further details regarding the steps required to prepare these documents, refer to the Collection in Jeopardy chapter, specifically the sections entitled, Completing a Statement of Facts and Risk Analysis. The referral to Field Support can be made via e-mail providing that the above are included within. For further information please contact your applicable Field Support representative.

If the primary debt is under Appeal or the primary tax debtor filed a Notice of Objection, Collection action should not be initiated on the memorandum assessment, until such time that the Appeal is resolved.

Digitized by Google

Related Topic:

- Collection Measures

Collection Measures

Memorandum assessments, including those relating to Directors' Liability, are collected in the same manner as T1 accounts. In Directors' Liability the debts assessed are in fact jointly and severally liable to the primary debt owing; however the "trust" status of the primary debts does not extend itself to the memorandum assessment.

The following Collection measures should be undertaken immediately upon the issuance of a Directors' Liability assessment:

- Set up a Keep Code 6 against the director(s) assessed; this will ensure that any T1 refund created from an Allowable Business Investment Loss or other credit to which the director(s) is entitled is intercepted and retained. For further details regarding Keep Code 6, refer to the Chapter Receiving and Managing Accounts and for information on Allowable Business Investment Loss consult Director's Liability Handbook HQ8920-000.

- Issue the required routine Collections letters available in the ELCS system during the 90 day collections restriction period:

  1. At 30 days from the issuance of the Notice of Assessment, issue the "First Collection Letter", ELCS 19619.

  2. At 60 days from the issuance of the Notice of Assessment, issue the "Second Collection Letter", ELCS 19620.

  3. At 90 days from the issuance of the Notice of Assessment, issue the "Pre-Legal Letter", ELCS 19621.

  Note: Any actions taken must be done in accordance with the Collections restrictions noted in the above section Collection Action on Directors' Liability Assessments.

- Update the ACSES diary or GST Log of Action confirming the issuance the routine Collection letters.

- It is mandatory to try to contact the director after the 90-day period has elapsed. If no response has been made to the routine collections letters issued, proceed with the issuance the "Legal Action Letter" (ELCS 19614) giving the director 15 days to satisfy the assessed liability.

- Update the ACSES diary or GST Log of Action confirming the issuance the "Legal Action Letter".

- If no Notice of Objection is filed, or if the director has not responded to any of the legal warning letters issued, proceed with legal action to resolve the account.

Digitized by Google

Maintaining the Director's Liability Assessment

Maintaining the Director's Liability Assessment involves updating all applicable accounts on the system, the proper retention of all applicable documents and the proper application of payments received.

Related Topics:

- Updating all Applicable Accounts
- Preparing the Working Paper
- Maintaining Documents When the Assessment is Raised
- Retention of Primary Assessment Information

Updating all Applicable Accounts

To update the account:

1. Create a dummy account card using the 2nd copy of Form T779. As no such copy exists with Form GST259, it is recommended that you use a photocopy of the completed Form GST259 used in the assessment.

2. Cross-reference the account card to the primary tax debtor.

3. Make a diary notation of the joint and several liability on the primary tax debtor's account, within the ACSES system including:

   - the name (including all known aliases) of the director(s) assessed
   - the account number(s) of the director(s) assessed
   - the applicable section of the Act under which the liability arose, i.e. ITA 227.1(1) or ETA 323(1)
   - the amount assessed
   - the date of assessment (being the mailing date of the Notice of Assessment)
   - how the Notice of Assessment was issued (certified mail, hand delivery)

4. Make a diary notation of the joint and several liability on the director's account, within the ACSES system including;

   - the name and the business number of the primary tax debtor to which the joint and several liability relates to;
   - the applicable section of the Act under which the liability arose, i.e. ITA 227.1(1) or ETA 323(1)
   - the amount assessed

Digitized by Google

- the date of assessment (being the mailing date of the Notice of Assessment)
- how the Notice of Assessment was issued (certified mail, hand delivery)

Note: If multiple directors are assessed, the ACSES account of each director should be updated with the assessment information noted above of each director assessed. This will ensure that proper cross-referencing of information will occur.

5. Record any payments or credits received on the dummy card or "Working Paper", including:
   - the date of payment
   - the amount paid and from/by which director it was received

   Note: If the payment is made by cheque, record sufficient detail to allow for the identification of the financial institution, the branch location, the account holders and the account number.

   - the taxation year the payment is being applied to Note: Refer to the section Applying Payments for further detail.

   - record any interest charges as a memo entry within the dummy card. Do not post to the memorandum assessment account.
6. Make a diary notation in the ACSES account of both the primary tax debtor and the director(s), detailing the payments received and the information to be noted within the dummy card/working paper.

Preparing the Working Paper

The Working Paper will act as the summary of all the information to which the assessment is based upon. The Working Paper will provide written documentation to:

- identify the director(s) liability
- identify the basis for the memorandum assessment

Note: It is sufficient to use the assessment's Approval Memorandum as the basis for the Working Paper. Should an Approval Memorandum not exist, then a Working Paper should be prepared. Refer to the section, Approval Memorandum for details.

To prepare the Working Paper:

1. Summarize the director's identification, including:
   - full name
   - account number
2. Provide a breakdown of the primary corporate liability, including:
   - dates of assessments

Digitized by Google

- details of assessments, including:
  - federal tax
  - provincial tax
  - Canada Pension Plan
  - employment insurance
  - corresponding penalties
  - corresponding interest

Note: It is sufficient to attach a copy of the Particulars of Assessment to the Working Paper if the primary corporate balance equals the director's assessed balance.

3. Details of payments made to the primary corporate debt, including:
   - dates
   - amount of payments

   Refer to Applying Payments for the proper allocation method.

4. Details of director's liability, including:
   - the director's name
   - account number
   - amount of assessment
   - date of assessment
   - Notice of Assessment's control number
   - applicable sections of the Acts assessment raised under

5. Details of the memorandum assessment, including the component amount, for example: portion of federal tax, provincial tax, pension plan, etc. that makes up the assessment.

   Note: It is sufficient to attach a copy of the Particulars of Assessment.

6. The working paper and all related primary debt information is to be obtained and retained until the file has been concluded. A separate docket must be established for the retention of all information relating to the original assessment and third party assessment. Refer to the section, Maintaining Documents When the Assessment is Raised.

Digitized by Google

Maintaining Documents When the Assessment is Raised

Maintain the following documents in a docket when an assessment is raised. This docket should be associated at all times with any docket pertaining to the primary debtor account:

- directors' information including:
  - evidence supporting the fact that the person was a director during the relevant time
  - directors' financial data
  - documentation related to history

  Note: This is when the assessment is being raised on a repeat instance of failure to exercise due diligence.
  - copy of tax debtor's response to the pre-assessment proposal letter
  - copies of any correspondence
- spreadsheet (account reconciliation) detailing how the debt was arrived at, including:
  - month(s) or filing periods
  - year(s)
  - amounts of Federal tax
  - amounts of Unemployment/Employment Insurance premiums
  - amounts of Canada Pension Plan contributions
  - amounts of Goods and Services net tax
  - applicable interest
  - applicable penalty

  Note: These are reconciled to the Proof of Claim, Federal Certificate, Writ of Seizure and Sale or Memorial of Judgment.
- copy of any legal documents, including:
  - Certificate
  - Writ of Seizure and Sale
  - Return of Nulla Bona

Digitized by Google

- Partial Return of Execution
- Proof of Claim

- acknowledgment of the registered mail, Receipt Card
- if applicable, memorandum to file regarding the telephone conversation(s) with the director(s) when no response was received to the pre-assessment proposal letter
- copies of all correspondence to and from the Department of Justice
- copies of the assessment information, including:
  - trust or GST audit documents
  - memorandum Notice of Assessment/Reassessment

Retention of Primary Assessment Information

Collections Officers should obtain and retain primary debt information until such time as the file has been:

- paid in full
- resolved at all Appeals stages
- deleted from active inventory

A separate docket must be established for the retention of all information relating to the primary assessment. The docket should include the following:

- the Notice of Assessment of the primary account
- all pertinent audit information
- tax years for all affected taxation years
- all pertinent trust account information

Note: Adverse case law in respect of third party assessments holds that even though the primary debtor may not have appealed or objected to an original amount owing, the secondary debtor (person to which the memorandum assessment is issued) is entitled to object or appeal the amounts relating to the primary debtor's assessment. Furthermore, within these decisions, the Courts have required that the Agency produce the Notices of Assessment and/or the underlying information supporting the primary debtor's assessment.

For further details refer to Memorandum 01-09, entitled Third Party Assessments - Retention of Primary Assessment Information.

Applying Payments

Digitized by Google

Note: Appeals Officers handling an objection have complete decisional independence relative to the recommendation to confirm, vacate, or vary the assessment.

The Revenue Collections Officer will:

- provide a copy of the report explaining the basis of the assessment and all supporting documentation (not the entire Collections docket) to the Appeals Officer within five (5) working days of the request by Appeals
- explain the basis of the assessment when requested to do so by the Appeals Officer
- attend meetings with the Appeals Officer and the client, when requested to do so by the Appeals Officer and when the client agrees
- review any new or additional information, if requested by the Appeals Officer, and provide comments in writing within fifteen (15) working days of date of the request
- arrange for the issuance of a Notice of Reassessment, where the assessment is varied or vacated by the Appeals Officer, within ten (10) working days of the date of the request

3. Collection action is not taken against a debt until a decision is received from the first level of the Appeal process (Tax Court of Canada). For details refer to the section, Collection Action on Directors' Liability Assessments.

4. If the tax debtor advises that an appeal will be made to the Federal Court of Canada, payment in full or acceptable security covering the amount in dispute is required.

5. As noted above, if the assessment is varied or vacated, complete a Notice of Reassessment within ten (10) working days from the date of request. Refer to the section Notice of Reassessment for Director's Liability Where a Notice of Objection Exists for further detail.

6. Send the Notice of Reassessment to the tax debtor.

Directors' Entitlement to Preference

A director who pays an amount in respect of the balance owing that is proved in liquidation, dissolution or bankruptcy proceedings, is, pursuant to subsection 227.1(6) of the ITA and subsection 323(7) of the ETA, entitled to any preference that the Crown would have been entitled to had that amount not been so paid.

Where a Certificate that relates to that amount was registered, the director is entitled to an assignment of the certificate to the extent of the directors' payment.

Once the assignment has been made, the director will hold the same rights and remedies previously available to the Agency. For example, the director will be able to file a Proof of Claim within the estate of the bankrupt corporation with a value equal to that of the assignment made.

Related Topics:

Digitized by Google

- Assignment of Certificate
- Obtaining Approval
- Examples of an Assignment of Certificate

Assignment of Certificate

It is recommended that written approval be sought prior to the Assignment being issued in the form of a Memorandum addressed to the applicable signing authority.

The Memorandum should include the following information:

1. Name of the director to which the Assignment will be made
2. Name of the debtor company
3. TSO date of the account
4. Total of the debt outstanding
5. The Certificate's number and the date issued from the Federal Court
6. A detailed summary outlining the Collections history of the account including information relating to the director's satisfaction of the corporate liability
7. The name(s) of the applicable authority level(s) for signature

Obtaining Approval

The delegated approval levels for the assignment of a certificate are as follows:

- Director, Tax Services Office
- Assistant Director, Revenue Collections Division
- Manager, Revenue Collections Division

For further details please refer to Memorandum 01-21, entitled, Delegation of the Minister's Powers under the Income Tax Act, Excise Tax Act and Customs Act.

> Note: Local Collections Divisional Policy will dictate which of the above authority levels will be used.

Examples of an Assignment of Certificate

For examples of an Assignment of Certificate refer to the following:

- Appendix "A": ITA Subsection 227.1(6) Assignment of Certificate
- Appendix "B": ETA Subsection 323(7) Assignment of Certificate

Digitized by Google

Note: The above examples are not templates but merely samples of the suggested wording to be used.

If you have any questions, please contact your appropriate Field Support representative.

Resource Material

Training and Learning Directorate, Director's Liability Handbook (HQ8920), issued May 2004.

Training and Learning Directorate, Liability of Directors (TD8600), issued September 2000.

Directive RCD-95-12, Directors' Liability, issued December 20, 1995.

Directive RCD-96-09, Directors' Liability, issued May 3, 1996.

Directive RCD-96-13, Application of Interest in Respect of Memorandum Assessments, issued October 27, 2004.

Directive RCD-96-14, The Employment Insurance Act, issued October 29, 1996.

Directive RCD-00-11, Assessing Directors for GST When Corporation are in a Partnership, issued May 31, 2000.

Directive RCD-00-25, Proving a Directors' Liability Claim in a Proposal in a Bankruptcy, issued September 15, 2000.

Memorandum 99-03, Laboratory and Scientific Services, issued March 15, 1999

Memorandum 01-09, Third Party Assessments - Retention of Primary Assessment Information, issued July 6, 2001.

Memorandum 02-06, National Protocol Agreement for Memorandum Assessments, issued June 12, 2002.

Communication ARD-2003-002, The Collection of Unwarranted GST/HST Refunds in a Director's Liability Situation, issued October 21, 2003.

Communication ARD-2004-014, Reassessing Joint and Several Liabilities, issued April 8, 2004.

Communication ARD-2004-027, Director's Liability - Bonch v. The Queen, issued June 2, 2004.

APPENDIX

APPENDIX "A"

Court File No.: ITA-(Insert)

Digitized by Google

FEDERAL COURT

IN THE MATTER OF the Income Tax Act,

and

IN THE MATTER OF an assessment or assessments by the Minister of National Revenue under one or more of the Income Tax Act, Canada Pension Plan, Unemployment Insurance Act, Employment Insurance Act against:

Insert Name of Debtor Corporation (as per Certificate)
Insert Address of Debtor Corporation (as per Certificate)

ASSIGNMENT

WHEAREAS a Certificate in the same style as above was registered under section 223 of the Income Tax Act on the (Insert Certificate Date in this manner; 1st day of July, 2005) in the Federal Court of Canada under Court File No. ITA (Insert Certificate number) for the amount of $(insert Certificate amount) together with additional interest pursuant to one or more of the said Act at the rates from time to time prescribed for subsection 222(3) of the Income Tax Act, compounded daily, from the (insert effective interest date in this manner; 15th day of June, 2005), to the date of payment, all amounts payable by (insert name of Debtor Corporation), herein called the corporation.

AND WHEAREAS the corporation is liable to pay those amounts under the above enactments;

AND WHEAREAS pursuant to section 227.1 of the Income Tax Act, the director of the corporation became jointly and severally liable together with the corporation to pay the aforesaid amounts;

AND WHEAREAS (insert name of director) is or purports to be the director of the corporation, who has paid to the Minister of National Revenue and amount of $(insert amount paid by the director) in respect of the amounts which the director and the corporation are jointly and severally liable to pay by virtue of that section.

Digitized by Google

THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE pursuant to subsection 227.1(6) thereof and the corresponding provisions of the above enactments hereby makes an assignment of the Certificate to (insert name of director), the director of the corporation, to the extent only the amount of $(Insert amount paid by director) paid to the Receiver General in respect of the amounts for which the director and the corporation are jointly and severally liable to pay as aforesaid.

Dated at , this day of , 2005.

(Insert name and position of authorised person and signature above.)

APPENDIX "B"

Court File No.: GST-(Insert)

FEDERAL COURT

IN THE MATTER OF the Excise Tax Act,

and

IN THE MATTER OF an assessment or assessments by the Minister of National Revenue under the Excise Tax Act:

Insert Name of Debtor Corporation (as per Certificate)
Insert Address of Debtor Corporation (as per Certificate)

ASSIGNMENT

WHEAREAS a Certificate in the same style as above was registered under section 323(1) of the Excise Tax Act on the (Insert Certificate Date in this manner; 1st day of July, 2006) in the Federal Court of Canada under Court File No. GST-(Insert Certificate number) for the amount of $(Insert Certificate amount) together with additional interest pursuant to one or more of the said Act at the rates from time to time prescribed for

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Records and books - S. 230

230. (1) Every person carrying on business and every person who is required, by or pursuant to this Act, to pay or collect taxes or other amounts shall keep records and books of account (including an annual inventory kept in prescribed manner) at the person's place of business or residence in Canada or at such other place as may be designated by the Minister, in such form and containing such information as will enable the taxes payable under this Act or the taxes or other amounts that should have been deducted, withheld or collected to be determined. [65]

Records and books

(2) Every qualified donee referred to in paragraphs (a) to (c) of the definition "qualified donee" in subsection 149.1(1) shall keep records and books of account — in the case of a qualified donee referred to in any of subparagraphs (a)(i) and (iii) and paragraphs (b) and (c) of that definition, at an address in Canada recorded with the Minister or designated by the Minister — containing

---

[65] In Capital Vision Inc., Cvi Art Management, The Capital Vision Group Inc., Bdo Dunwoody LLP, 671514 Ontario Ltd., 1271724 Ontario Inc., Greg Coleman, Ralph T. Neville, Gerry John Hogenhout and Paul Bain v. Minister Of National Revenue, 2002 FCT 1317 such was provided as:
"all documents, including, but not limited to, accounts, agreements, books, charts or tables, correspondence, diagrams, forms, images, invoices, letters, maps, memoranda, plans, returns, statements, telegrams, vouchers, and any other thing containing information, whether in writing or in any other form"

Digitized by Google

(a) information in such form as will enable the Minister to determine whether there are any grounds for the revocation of its registration under this Act;
(b) a duplicate of each receipt containing prescribed information for a donation received by it; and
(c) other information in such form as will enable the Minister to verify the donations to it for which a deduction or tax credit is available under this Act.

Idem, lawyers
(2.1) For greater certainty, the records and books of account required by subsection 230(1) to be kept by a person carrying on business as a lawyer (within the meaning assigned by subsection 232(1)) whether by means of a partnership or otherwise, include all accounting records of the lawyer, including supporting vouchers and cheques.

Minister's requirement to keep records, etc.
(3) Where a person has failed to keep adequate records and books of account for the purposes of this Act, the Minister may require the person to keep such records and books of account as the Minister may specify and that person shall thereafter keep records and books of account as so required.

Limitation period for keeping records, etc.
(4) Every person required by this section to keep records and books of account shall retain
(a) the records and books of account referred to in this section in respect of which a period is prescribed, together with every account and voucher necessary to verify the information contained therein, for such period as is prescribed; and
(b) all other records and books of account referred to in this section, together with every account and voucher necessary to verify the information contained therein, until the expiration of six years from the end of the last taxation year to which the records and books of account relate.

Electronic records
(4.1) Every person required by this section to keep records who does so electronically shall retain them in an electronically readable format for the retention period referred to in subsection 230(4).

Exemptions
(4.2) The Minister may, on such terms and conditions as are acceptable to the Minister, exempt a person or a class of persons from the requirement in subsection 230(4.1).

Exception where no return filed
(5) Where, in respect of any taxation year, a person referred to in subsection 230(1) has not filed a return with the Minister as and when required by section 150, that person shall retain every record and book of account that is required by this section to be kept and that relates to that taxation year, together with every account and voucher necessary to verify the information contained therein, until the expiration of six years from the day the return for that taxation year is filed.

Exception where objection or appeal
(6) Where a person required by this section to keep records and books of account serves a notice of objection or where that person is a party to an appeal to the Tax Court of Canada

Digitized by Google

under this Act, that person shall retain every record, book of account, account and voucher necessary for dealing with the objection or appeal until, in the case of the serving of a notice of objection, the time provided by section 169 to appeal has elapsed or, in the case of an appeal, until the appeal is disposed of and any further appeal in respect thereof is disposed of or the time for filing any such further appeal has expired.

Exception where demand by Minister
(7) Where the Minister is of the opinion that it is necessary for the administration of this Act, the Minister may, by registered letter or by a demand served personally, require any person required by this section to keep records and books of account to retain those records and books of account, together with every account and voucher necessary to verify the information contained therein, for such period as is specified in the letter or demand.

Permission for earlier disposal
(8) A person required by this section to keep records and books of account may dispose of the records and books of account referred to in this section, together with every account and voucher necessary to verify the information contained therein, before the expiration of the period in respect of which those records and books of account are required to be kept if written permission for their disposal is given by the Minister.

Books and Records Retention/Destruction
IC78-10R4

DATE: June 2005
SUBJECT: Books and Records Retention/Destruction
This circular cancels and replaces Information Circular 78-10R3 dated October 5, 1998.

Notice to the reader:
This is an HTML version of the original document. It is also available in other formats, including PDF (which is an exact rendition of the original).
This version is only available electronically.

Contents
Introduction
Who has to keep books and records?
Records to be kept
Location of records
Keeping records
Electronic records management and imaging
Retention period
Inspections, audits and examinations
Foreign-based information or documents
Inadequate records
Offences and penalties
Inadequate records and failure to provide information
Appendix
Part LVIII – Keeping books and records

Introduction
1. This circular gives information and guidance to persons who are required by law to keep books and records in French or English in Canada according to sections 230 and 230.1 of the Income Tax Act, section 87 of the Employment Insurance Act, and section 24 of the Canada Pension Plan. It does not reflect the requirements imposed by other statutes, whether federal, provincial/territorial, or municipal, to maintain adequate books and records. IC05-1, Electronic Record Keeping contains information related to keeping electronic books and records.

Digitized by Google

2. The sections and subsections referred to in this circular are from the Income Tax Act. Parallel provisions for most of these matters exist in the Employment Insurance Act and the Canada Pension Plan. Where significant differences do exist, they are indicated. The Excise Tax Act has similar requirements and information concerning Books and Records in a GST/HST environment can be found in the GST/HST Memoranda Series 15.1 and 15.2. The Excise Act, 2001, also has similar requirements and can be found in Excise Duty Memoranda Series 9.1.1.

Who has to keep books and records?

3. For the purpose of this circular, person has the meaning assigned by subsection 248(1) of the Income Tax Act (the Act). Therefore, in addition to individuals, a "person" in this context includes a corporation, a trust, and any exempt entity listed in subsection 149(1) of the Act such as a registered charity, a registered Canadian amateur athletic association, and a non-profit organization.

4. Books and records must be kept by every:

person carrying on a business;

person who is required to pay or collect taxes or other amounts according to the acts mentioned in paragraph 1 above;

registered charity or registered Canadian amateur athletic association; and registered agent of a registered political party or an official agent for a candidate in a federal election.

Records to be kept

5. For the purpose of this circular, a record has the meaning assigned by subsection 248(1) of the Act. A " 'record' includes an account, an agreement, a book, a chart or table, a diagram, a form, an image, an invoice, a letter, a map, a memorandum, a plan, a return, a statement, a telegram, a voucher, and any other thing containing information, whether written or in any other form."

6. As a general rule, the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) does not specify the books and records to be kept. However, books and records have to:

permit the taxes payable or the taxes or other amounts to be collected, withheld, or deducted by a person to be determined;

substantiate the qualification of registered charities or registered Canadian amateur athletic association for registration under the Act; permit the verification of all charitable, athletic, and political donations received for which a deduction or tax credit is available; and be supported by source documents that verify the information in the books and records.

7. A source document includes items such as sales invoices, purchase invoices, cash register receipts, formal contracts, credit card receipts, delivery slips, deposit slips, work orders, dockets, cheques, bank statements, tax returns, and general correspondence whether written or in any other form.

8. In addition, other documents, whether written or any other form, including supporting documents such as accountants working papers that were used to determine the obligations and entitlements with respect to taxes payable, collectible or to be remitted are considered part of the books and records of the taxpayer and must be made available to the CRA.

Location of records

Digitized by Google

9. The books and records must be kept at the person's place of business or residence in Canada or another place designated by the Minister and must, upon request, be made available to officers of the CRA for audit purposes at all reasonable times. Books and records kept outside Canada and accessed electronically from Canada are not books and records in Canada. Access to electronic records means that the taxpayer must provide an acceptable copy of the electronic records in an electronically readable and useable format to CRA auditors so that they can process the electronic records on CRA equipment.

Keeping records

10. Keeping books and records pertains to a system of recording financial and other information. Records are considered to be kept electronically when information is created, processed, maintained and stored electronically.

11. The Canada Revenue Agency recognizes:

traditional books and records (including supporting source documents) produced and retained in paper format; and books and records produced and retained in an electronically readable format that can be related back to the supporting source documents and which are supported by a system capable of producing an accessible and useable copy. More information is available in IC05-1 Electronic Record Keeping.

12. A person who is required to keep books and records is responsible for keeping the books and records in a way that will ensure the reliability and readability of the information recorded.

13. All books and records (including source documents) that originate in paper format must be kept except where an acceptable imaging or microfilming program, as explained in the following section, is in place. Paper format also includes paper source documents that are entered into an electronic record-keeping system.

14. A person who is required to keep records and who records them electronically must retain those records in an electronically readable format. This means that a person who uses computerized systems to generate books and records must retain the electronic records, even when a hard copy is kept. Electronically readable format means information that is supported by a system capable of producing an accessible and useable copy.

Accessible copy means that the taxpayer must provide an acceptable copy of the electronic records in an electronically readable and useable format to CRA auditors to allow them to process the electronic records on CRA equipment.

A copy is useable if the electronic records can be processed and analysed with CRA software.

The useable copy must be in a common data interchange format that is compatible with CRA software.

Electronic files retained in an encrypted or backup format must be able to be restored at a later date to an accessible and useable state to meet CRA requirements.

The CRA is prepared to offer advice on electronic record-keeping issues and to respond to questions concerning the types of formats that are compatible with the CRA's software. All questions and concerns should be directed to the attention of the Electronic Commerce Audit Specialist (ECAS) at the nearest CRA tax services office. Advice provided by the ECAS must not be construed or viewed as an audit, inspection or a ruling issued by the CRA. It is the person's responsibility to keep, maintain, retain and safeguard its records.

15. A person should ensure that proper back-up records are maintained at all times. If any electronic records required to be maintained are lost, destroyed, or damaged, the person must report this situation to the Director of the local tax services office and recreate the files within a reasonable period of time.

16. A person who keeps records whether in writing or any other form, is not relieved of any of the record keeping, readability, retention, and access responsibilities because he or she contracts out the record keeping function to a third party such as a bookkeeper, accountant, an electronic commerce transaction manager, an application service provider, an Internet service provider, through a time share, service bureau, or other such arrangements. The person must ensure that these requirements are met in the event of third party changes such as, software and/or hardware conversions and upgrades, bankruptcy, or migration to/from a third party. The person is responsible for keeping the records and for providing access to authorized CRA officials.

Digitized by Google

Electronic records management and imaging

17. When original source documents and records are in an electronic format, they must be kept in an electronically readable format even if they have been transferred to another medium such as microfilm.

18. To ensure the reliablilty, integrity and authenticity of electronic records, the pending national standard publication entitled Electronic Records as Documentary Evidence (CAN/CGSB-72.34 2005) will outline electronic record management policies, procedures, practices and documentation that will assist in establishing the legal validity of an electronic record.

19. Electronic image means the representation of a source document that can be used to generate an intelligible reproduction of that document, or the reproduction itself.

In the case of paper source document an intelligible reproduction means that:

the reproduction is made with the intention of standing in place of the source document;

the interpretation of the reproduction, for the purposes for which it is being used, gives the same information as the source document; and the limittions of the reproduction (e.g., resolution, tone, or hues) are well defined and do not obscure significant details.

20. Imaging and microfilm (including microfiche) reproductions of books of original entry and source documents have to be produced, controlled, and maintained according to the latest national standard of Canada, as outlined in the publication called Microfilm and Electronic Images as Documentary Evidence (CAN/CGSB-72.11-93).

These standards are available from:

Canadian General Standards Board

Mailing address:

Sales Centre

Canadian General Standards Board

Gatineau, QC K1A 1G6

Street address:

Place du Portage Phase 3, 6B1

11 Laurier Street

Gatineau, Quebec

Telephone number:

Ottawa Area (819) 956-0425 or

Toll free from the rest of Canada: 1-800-665-2472

Fax number:

(819) 956-5644

E-mail:

ncr.cgsb-ongc@pwgsc.gc.ca

21. An acceptable imaging program as explained in the Canadian General Standards publications mentioned in paragraph 20 requires that:

(a) a person in authority within the organization has confirmed in writing that the program will be part of the usual and ordinary activity of the organization's business;

(b) systems and procedures are established and documented;

(c) a logbook is kept showing:

Digitized by Google

the date of the imaging;
the signatures of the persons authorizing and performing the imaging;
a description of the records imaged; and whether source documents are destroyed or disposed of after imaging, and the date a source document was destroyed or disposed of;
(d) the imaging software maintains an index to permit the immediate location of any record, and the software inscribes the imaging date and the name of the person who does the imaging;
(e) the images are of commercial quality and are legible and readable when displayed on a computer screen or reproduced on paper;
(f) a system of inspection and quality control is established to ensure that c), d), and e) above are maintained; and
(g) after reasonable notification, equipment in good working order is available to view, or where feasible, to reproduce a hard copy of the image.
22. Paper source documents that have been imaged in accordance with the latest national standard of Canada (see paragraph 20), may be disposed of and their images kept as permanent records.
23. The taxpayer is responsible for ensuring that the imaging is done in an acceptable manner when the imaging has been done by a third party.

Retention period
24. Books and records have to be kept for the period or periods provided by subsections 230(4) to (7) and Regulation Part 5800 of the Income Tax Regulations or until the Minister gives written permission for their disposal. Failure to comply with this requirement could result in prosecution by the CRA.
25. Subsection 230(4.1) of the Act requires every person who keeps records electronically to retain them in an electronically readable format for the retention period outlined in subsection 230(4).
26. Under the Act, books, records, and their related accounts and source documents, other than those referred to in paragraphs 27 and 28 below, have to be kept for a minimum of six years from the end of the last tax year to which they relate. The tax year is the fiscal period for corporations and the calendar year for all other taxpayers. Under the Employment Insurance Act and Canada Pension Plan, the retention period begins at the end of the calendar year to which the books and records relate.
27. The prescribed retention periods for certain books, records, and their related accounts and source documents are specified in Regulation Part 5800 (see Appendix). The required retention periods can be summarized as follows:
for a corporation, two years from the date of the dissolution of the corporation (in the case of corporations that amalgamate or merge, books and records have to be retained on the basis that the new corporation is a continuation of each amalgamating corporation); for any non-incorporated business, six years from the end of the tax year in which the business ceased; for the duplicate donation receipts of a registered charity or registered Canadian amateur athletic association, other than receipts for donations of property which are to be held for a period of not less than ten years, two years from the end of the calendar year in which the donations were made; for other specified records of registered charities and registered Canadian amateur athletic associations, two years from the date the registration is revoked; and for records relating to political contributions, two years from the end of the calendar year to which they relate.
There are no similar provisions in the Employment Insurance Act or Canada Pension Plan.
28. Exceptions to the rules outlined in paragraphs 24 and 25 above are:
The Minister may exempt a person or class of persons from the requirement to keep records electronically according to subsection 230(4.2) of the Act.

Digitized by Google

Books and records may be destroyed at an earlier time than outlined elsewhere in this circular if the Minister gives written permission for their disposal. To get such permission, a person can use Form T137, Request for Destruction of Books and Records, or can apply in writing to the director of his or her tax services office. A written request, signed by the person or an authorized representative, should provide the following information:
(a) a clear identification of books, records, or other documents to be destroyed;
(b) the tax years for which the request applies;
(c) details of any special circumstances which would justify destroying the books and records at an earlier time than that normally permitted; and
(d) any other pertinent information.
The Minister may, by registered letter or by a demand, served personally by a representative of the CRA, require specific records to be kept for an additional period of time that will be stipulated in the letter or demand.
If a return required by section 150 of the Act is filed late, the books and records referred to in paragraph 26 above must be kept for six years from the day the return is filed.
Every book and record necessary for dealing with a notice of objection or appeal must be kept until the notice of objection or appeal is disposed of and the time for filing any further appeal has expired.
In the case of paragraph 27 above, only the books and records of a deceased taxpayer or a trust can be destroyed upon receipt of a clearance certificate issued according to subsection 159(2) concerning the distribution of all property.
When the CRA gives permission to destroy books and records, this permission applies only to information required to be kept under the legislation administered by the CRA , and does not imply permission to destroy any books and records required to be kept under any other legislation, or by any other department or government agency.
29. The minimum retention period for the records referred to in paragraph 26 above is generally determined by the last tax year when a record may be required for purposes of the Act, and not the year when the transaction occurred and the record was created. For example, documentation relating to long term transactions such as records supporting the acquisition and capital cost of investments and other capital property held by a person (including registered charities and registered Canadian amateur athletic associations), should be maintained until the day that is six years from the end of the last tax year in which such a transaction could enter into any calculation for income tax purposes.

Inspections, audits and examinations
30. A person authorized by the Minister under section 231.1 may inspect, audit or examine relevant documents, property or processes of any person and of any other person that relates or may relate to the information that is or should be in the books or records of the taxpayer. This person may, at reasonable times, enter any premises or place of business and require persons therein to provide reasonable assistance and answer all proper questions.

Foreign-based information or documents
31. “Foreign-based information or documents” refers to any information or document that is available or located outside Canada and that may be relevant to the administration and enforcement of the Act.
32. The Minister may, by notice served personally or by registered or certified mail, require a person resident in Canada or a non-resident person who carries on business in Canada, to provide any foreign-based information and/or documents. It is an offence not to produce any foreign-based information, as and when required.

Digitized by Google

Inadequate records

33. If a person has failed to keep adequate books and records, subsection 230(3) of the Act provides that the Minister can specify what books and records shall be kept.

34. If the CRA finds that the books and records are inadequate, the CRA will ordinarily request a written agreement that books and records be maintained as required. The CRA will follow up the request by letter or visit within a reasonable period of time (usually not less than a month) to ensure compliance.

35. If there has been no compliance within the time allowed, the CRA will issue a formal requirement letter. The letter describes the information to be recorded in the books and describes the legal consequences and penalties for failing to comply.

36. A person who destroys or otherwise disposes of books and records to evade the payment of tax is subject to prosecution according to section 239 of the Act. Information Circular 73-10, Tax evasion, discusses CRA policies on tax evasion.

Offences and penalties

Inadequate records and failure to provide information

37. If a person fails to provide any information or documents including books and records, section 231.2 specifies that the Minister can require the person to provide the information or documents requested.

38. If the person fails to maintain adequate books and records or provide the information or documents under section 231.2 such action may result in prosecution by the CRA. On a summary conviction, and in addition to any penalty otherwise payable, a taxpayer is subject to imprisonment and/or a fine not less than $1,000.

39. Alternatively under section 231.7 the Minister may apply to the court for a Compliance Order in which a judge would order the person to provide any access, assistance, information or document sought by the Minister under section 231.1 or 231.2.

40. If a person fails or refuses to comply with an order, a judge may find the person in contempt of court, and the person is subject to the processes and the punishments of the court to which the judge is appointed.

APPENDIX

Part LVIII – Keeping books and records

5800. (1) For the purposes of paragraph 230(4)(a) of the Act, the required retention periods for records and books of account of a person are prescribed as follows:

(a) in respect of

(i) any record of the minutes of meetings of the directors of a corporation,

(ii) any record of the minutes of meetings of the shareholders of a corporation,

(iii) any record of a corporation containing details with respect to the ownership of the shares of the capital stock of the corporation and any transfers thereof,

(iv) the general ledger or other book of final entry containing the summaries of the year-to-year transactions of a corporation, and

(v) any special contracts or agreements necessary to an understanding of the entries in the general ledger or other book of final entry referred to in subparagraph (iv), the period ending on the day that is two years after the day that the corporation is dissolved;

(b) in respect of all records and books of account that are not described in paragraph (a) of a corporation that is dissolved and in respect of the vouchers and accounts necessary to verify the information in such records and books of account, the period ending on the day that is two years after the day that the corporation is dissolved;

(c) in respect of

Digitized by Google

(i) the general ledger or other book of final entry containing the summaries of the year-to-year transactions of a business of a person (other than a corporation), and
(ii) any special contracts or agreements necessary to an understanding of the entries in the general ledger or other book of final entry referred to in subparagraph (i),
the period ending on the day that is six years after the last day of the taxation year of the person in which the business ceased;
d) in respect of
(i) any record of the minutes of meetings of the executive of a registered charity or registered Canadian amateur athletic association,
(ii) any record of the minutes of meetings of the members of a registered charity or registered Canadian amateur athletic association,
(iii) all documents and by-laws governing a registered charity or registered Canadian amateur athletic association, and
(iv) all records of any donations received by a registered charity that were subject to a direction by the donor that the property given be held by the charity for a period of not less than 10 years, the period ending on the day that is two years after the date on which the registration of the registered charity or the registered Canadian amateur athletic association under the Act is revoked;
(e) in respect of all records and books of account that are not described in paragraph (d) and that relate to a registered charity or registered Canadian amateur athletic association whose registration under the Act is revoked, and in respect of the vouchers and accounts necessary to verify the information in such records and books of account, the period ending on the day that is two years after the date on which the registration of the registered charity or the registered Canadian amateur athletic association under the Act is revoked;
(f) in respect of duplicates of receipts for donations (other than donations referred to in subparagraph (d)(iv)) that are received by a registered charity or registered Canadian amateur athletic association and are required to be kept by that charity or association pursuant to subsection 230(2) of the Act, the period ending on the day that is two years from the end of the last calendar year to which the receipts relate; and
(g) notwithstanding paragraphs (c) to (f), in respect of all records, books of account, vouchers and accounts of a deceased taxpayer or a trust in respect of which a clearance certificate is issued pursuant to subsection 159(2) of the Act with respect to the distribution of all the property of such deceased taxpayer or trust, the period ending on the day that the clearance certificate is issued.

(2) For the purposes of subsection 230.1(3) of the Act, with respect to the application of paragraph 230(4)(a) of the Act, the required retention period for records and books of account that are required to be kept pursuant to section 230.1 of the Act is prescribed to be the period ending on the day that is two years after the end of the last calendar year to which the records or books of account relate.

Most of Canada Revenue Agency publications are available on the CRA Web site www.cra.gc.ca/formspubs under the heading “Forms and Publications”.

Books, Records and Other Requirements for Taxpayers Having Foreign Affiliates

IC 77-9R

BOOKS, RECORDS AND OTHER REQUIREMENTS FOR TAXPAYERS HAVING FOREIGN AFFILIATES

NUMBER: 77-9R June 22, 1983

This circular cancels and replaces Information Circular 77-9 dated May 24, 1977. Current revisions are designed by vertical lines.

Digitized by Google

1. This circular is for the guidance and information of taxpayers resident in Canada who have foreign affiliates, beneficial interests in certain non-resident trusts deemed by paragraph 94(1)(d) to be non-resident corporations and/or beneficial interests in non-resident discretionary trusts.

Income Tax Returns

2. All taxpayers with foreign affiliates, beneficial interests in certain non-resident trusts deemed by paragraph 94(1)(d) to be non-resident corporations and/or beneficial interests in non-resident discretionary trusts are asked to respond to the following questions with their income tax returns:

(a) Individual Taxpayers (T1 Returns)

(i) Did you have any controlled foreign affiliates at any time during the taxation year?

(ii) Did you, or any controlled foreign affiliate of yours, or any corporation or trust with which you did not deal at arm's length, have a beneficial interest, at any time during the taxation year, in a non-resident discretionary trust to which subsection 94(1) applies?

(b) Corporate Taxpayers (T2 Returns)

(i) Did the corporation have any foreign affiliates at any time during the taxation year?

(ii) Did the corporation, or any controlled foreign affiliate of the corporation, or any other corporation or trust with which the corporation did not deal at arm's length, have a beneficial interest, at any time during the taxation year, in a non-resident discretionary trust to which subsection 94(1) applies?

(c) Trusts (T3 Returns)

(i) Did the trust have any controlled foreign affiliates at any time during the taxation year?

(ii) Did the trust, or any controlled foreign affiliate of the trust, or any corporation or any other trust with which the trust did not deal at arm's length, have a beneficial interest, at any time during the taxation year, in a non-resident discretionary trust to which subsection 94(1) applies?

If a "yes" answer is given to any of the foregoing questions, a supplementary schedule will be required. Where in the case of a corporate taxpayer the positive answer is to question (i), the schedule will require details of the full name and address of each foreign affiliate with a distinction being made between controlled foreign affiliates and other foreign affiliates. In the case of individuals and trusts the necessary data will be only for controlled foreign affiliates. Where the positive answer is to question (ii), the full name and address of each trust and of the trustees of that trust will be required.

3. Financial statements of a controlled foreign affiliate in respect of its taxation year (as defined in paragraph 95(1)(g) of the Act) ending in the taxation year of the taxpayer resident in Canada must accompany the income tax return filed in respect of that taxation year. Financial statements of foreign affiliates that are not required to be filed should, nevertheless, be retained by the Canadian taxpayer and be available for examination by the Department.

4. Financial statements to be filed or retained by the Canadian taxpayer should be:

(a) those that have been accepted by taxation authorities in the foreign jurisdiction, or

(b) where they are not required by such authorities, those that have been certified by auditors.

Where the Canadian taxpayer is of the opinion that these financial statements are unreliable or inconsistent with the basis used for other corporations in the group and he has compiled a revised version, then that revised version should also be filed with the annual income tax return or remain available for examination as the case may be.

5. All financial statements of controlled foreign affiliates should be translated into English or French if they are presented in a language other than English or French.

Books, Records and Financial Information

6. Corporations

(a) Where the Canadian taxpayer is a corporation, requirements will vary depending on whether or not the foreign affiliate is

Digitized by Google

(i) a controlled foreign affiliate (including a non-resident trust that is deemed to be a controlled foreign affiliate), or
(ii) any other foreign affiliate.
(b) The provisions of subsection 230(1) of the Act make it the responsibility of the Canadian taxpayer to ensure that adequate books and records are maintained in Canada or elsewhere.
(c) In the case of a controlled foreign affiliate, adequate books, records and supporting schedules should be available in Canada, on request, to substantiate the information disclosed in the taxpayer's returns.
(d) Where other foreign affiliates are involved, requirements will vary depending upon the circumstances. If the Canadian taxpayer has a substantial interest in the foreign affiliate and is able to make a suitable arrangement to acquire, or there are other circumstances which enable the taxpayer to obtain the information, the Department would normally expect that there would be the same information available as there would be for a controlled foreign affiliate. Where the taxpayer is unable to obtain the required information and can demonstrate that a reasonable effort was made to do so, or where it can be demonstrated to the Department's satisfaction that it is not practical to make such an effort, the Department may, depending on the circumstances, accept less. For example, a corporation resident in Canada may be unable to obtain all the income tax returns and other information required to compute the various amounts defined in section 5907 of the Regulations for a particular foreign affiliate of the corporation because of restrictions imposed by a law of a foreign jurisdiction or by the directors of the foreign affiliate. If a reasonable effort has been made to obtain the required information, the corporation may compute such amounts using alternative documentation providing the Department is satisfied that, having regard to all the circumstances, a reasonable approximation of such amounts can be obtained through the use of such alternative documentation. What would ordinarily be expected to be made available would be the financial statements and other information that the Canadian taxpayer or a foreign affiliate is entitled to receive in its right as a shareholder under the corporation or other statutes of the foreign jurisdiction.

Retention of Books, Records, and Information
7. The requirements for the retention of records and books of account of a Canadian taxpayer are set out in Information Circular 78-10R. These requirements also apply to the books, records and information maintained by the Canadian taxpayer on the affairs of a foreign affiliate.
8. As a minimum, these records should be sufficient to substantiate the computation of foreign accrual property income and any deductions claimed under subsection 91(5) or section 113 in respect of dividends received from the foreign affiliate. It will be necessary to retain records relating to the surplus accounts, foreign taxes paid, reorganizations, amalgamations and changes in participating percentage or surplus entitlement percentage and any other relevant information beyond the mandatory retention period if these transactions have future tax consequences.
9. Foreign accrual property income is defined in paragraph 95(1)(b) of the Act and generally excludes income and losses from active businesses. The Department's interpretation of income from an active business is set out in Interpretation Bulletin IT-73R3.
10. Where the foreign jurisdiction requires the income or profit from an active business to be computed in accordance with the income tax law of that jurisdiction, depreciation or capital cost allowance would be calculated according to the foreign taxation regulations unless an election is made pursuant to subsection 5907(2.1) of the Regulations. Capital cost allowance or depreciation schedules need not be filed but should be retained. Where the foreign jurisdiction has no such requirements, the active business income should be calculated under Part 1 of the Income Tax Act.
11. Foreign accrual property income calculations of a controlled foreign affiliate must be computed under Part I of the Act. Capital cost allowance may be claimed on assets situated abroad for the purpose of calculating foreign accrual property income; however, appropriate capital cost allowance schedules must be filed with the annual return.

Digitized by Google

Foreign Exchange
12. Foreign currency conversions will, except in the cases noted in subsection 5903(2) of the Regulations, be made in accordance with the normal law. The Department has issued a number of Interpretation Bulletins (e.g. IT-95R, IT-174R, IT-205) on the subject of conversions.
13. Subsection 5907(6) of the Regulations describes the currency to be used for recording the amounts referred to in subsection 5907(1) and (2).

Subsection 93(1) Elections
14. When a valid election has been made, there is no provision whereby it can be withdrawn or replaced with an amended election. However, where it is evident that the corporation intended to elect on the full amount of the available exempt surplus, the taxable surplus in respect of which a full deduction is available under section 113, or the capital gain otherwise determined in respect of the disposition of the shares and the taxpayer is not attempting to obtain any undue tax advantage and due and reasonable care was exercised in making the election, the Department will, if the taxpayer so requests in writing, consider revisions to the amounts designated in its election in the following circumstances:
(a) the amount designated in the election is based, in part, on the determination of one or more fair market values and a reasonable effort has been made to establish the value and it is subsequently determined that the fair market value was other than the estimated amount,
(b) typographical, clerical or other similar errors or omissions have been made in an otherwise valid election, or
(c) exempt surplus, taxable surplus and/or tax paid in respect to taxable surplus has changed due to circumstances that are beyond the control of the taxpayer.
15. Requests for revisions to the amount designated in an election made under subsection 93(1) must be signed by an authorized officer of the corporation and should set out in detail the reasons for the requested revision. These requests should be submitted to the District Taxation Office.

The Tax Audit
IC 71-14R3
June 18, 1984
This circular cancels and replaces Information Circular No. 71-14R2 dated February 5, 1979.
1. This circular describes the role, the policies and practices of the tax audit - the examination of taxpayers' books and records to determine accurately the taxes, interest and penalties payable under the law.
2. While there is, in Canada, a high standard of public compliance with the law, a self-assessment tax system can be maintained only through vigilant and continuous inspection of returns. The primary purpose of the tax audit is to monitor and maintain the self-assessment system. As such, it plays an important role in the achievement of the objectives of the Department which are to collect the taxes imposed by law through the encouragement of voluntary compliance and to maintain public confidence in the integrity of the tax system.
3. While the prospect of being subjected to a tax audit is a strong inducement to voluntary compliance, particularly in view of the penalties applicable for gross negligence or wilful non-compliance, the personal contact afforded by an audit is an ideal vehicle for promoting an atmosphere in which taxpayers can realize that each is bearing a lawful share of the tax burden, and not more than that share.

Digitized by Google

The law and the system

4. The Canadian income tax system is one of self-assessment. In it, every corporation and every taxable individual, estate or trust is required by law to file an annual return of income in prescribed form and to determine the taxes payable for the year. After initial processing and correction of obvious errors made in completing the return, and after completion of a matching program, which matches certain information in the return with that in other returns or from other sources, the return may be selected for audit and thus subjected to a detailed examination. The selection of returns for audit is explained in 14 to 19 below.

5. The Income Tax Act requires taxpayers to keep such records and books of account as are required to determine the taxes payable and authorizes the Department to audit these for any purpose related to the enforcement or administration of the Act. To this end, the Act further authorizes the Department to request and receive from any person information, records, documents etc, within a reasonable, stipulated time.

6. Under the Act, the Department may re-assess tax returns:

(a) at any time in cases of fraud or misrepresentation, or where a waiver, specifying matters on which a reassessment may be issued, has been filed; or

(b) at any time up to 4 years after the date of mailing the original assessment, in all other cases.

The taxpayers

7. Of the 15 million individuals who filed returns for the 1981 taxation year, approximately eighty percent were salary or wage earners, pensioners, etc.; the remaining twenty percent were persons reporting income from unincorporated businesses, professions, farming , fishing, and investments, rentals and commissions. In addition some 500,000 corporations and 200,000 trusts filed returns for the same year.

8. Wage and salary earners present relatively few compliance problems. For the most part, their taxes are collected through payroll deductions and their incomes are readily verified by reference to information filed by their employers. The requirement to maintain books and records has little application to these taxpayers and, save for certain cases, such as when the deduction of some expenses from wages and salary may be permitted, there is little need for audit activity. The Department's audit program is directed mainly at those individuals deriving income from businesses and professions, as well as corporations and trusts.

Audit programs

9. The following principles are observed in developing the audit program:

(a) Total compliance is, and will remain, an elusive goal;

(b) The most effective and least expensive form of compliance is voluntary compliance;

(c) Recovering undeclared taxes encourages voluntary compliance;

(d) The recovery of undeclared taxes could theoretically be obtained by a complete audit every four years. In certain cases, however, the scope and complexity of taxpayers' affairs suggests that for reasons of practicability as well as the preservation of good relations with these taxpayers, audits be scheduled more frequently and cover less than a four year period;

(e) Each taxpayer group should receive at least a nominal amount of audit attention:

(f) Categorizing taxpayers for audit purposes should be done on a rational and impartial basis. Taxpayers of any group should be satisfied that the audit program is based on fair and non-discriminatory criteria.

10. The application of these principles is reviewed continuously, by

Digitized by Google

(a) analyzing and evaluating the results of completed audits;

(b) comparing audit results to the audit programs and evaluating variances;

(c) considering the effect of audit actions on compliance;

(d) preparing alternative audit programs showing different coverage emphasis and techniques directed towards identified areas of non-compliance;

(e) conducting compliance measurement surveys of various taxpayer groups;

(f) researching alternatives to methods of taxpayer classification and grouping.

11. Each year the audit program is modified in keeping with the resources allotted to the Department. In order to make optimum use of limited resources, careful consideration is given to identifying those groups of taxpayers or organizations most in need of attention and selecting audit actions most likely to improve compliance.

12. Essentially, the audit program is based on the estimated number of returns filed by each taxpayer group, and the number of returns that can be audited with the available staff. Variations in coverage are influenced by the degree of non-compliance within various taxpayer groups as measured by results from previous audit programs and compliance measurement surveys.

13. The current grouping of taxpayers into "categories" is quite detailed. Within the initial classification by type of return (T1, T2, T3), categories are established by type of occupation or business, gross income, net income, and any other relevant and impartial criteria.

Selection of files for audit - Other than projects

14. The selection of returns to be audited is greatly facilitated by the computer records of all returns filed. This allows returns to be sorted into various groupings in order that the selection criteria can be applied. In some cases sophisticated comparisons are made of selected financial information of current and prior years and between taxpayers engaged in similar businesses or occupations. These systems generate lists of returns for potential audit selection from which specific returns are chosen by supervisors in each District Office.

15. There are at present no rigid rules for the screener to follow other than the dictates of objectivity and impartiality. Computerized selection criteria are being perfected on an ongoing basis.

16. While the majority of files audited are selected in the screening process described above, there are three other common means of selection. These are:

(a) Audit projects - Frequently, the compliance of a particular group of taxpayers is tested. If the test results indicate that there is significant non-compliance within the group, its members may come under audit on a project basis which may have local, regional or national application.

(b) Leads - Information from other files, from audits or investigations or from outside sources including informers may lead to the selection of a particular file for audit;

(c) Secondary files - A file may be selected for audit because of its association with another file previously selected. For example, if several taxpayers share a single place of business and are under the same control, and one of their files has been selected for audit, it is usually more convenient both for the Department and the taxpayers to have all the records examined during the same audit engagement. In addition, the affairs of such taxpayers are often so interwoven as to require the auditor to examine them together.

Compliance measurement audits

17. A compliance measurement survey, using statistical sampling techniques attempts to establish the degree of non-compliance in various sectors of the population as well as in the entire population.

Digitized by Google

18. By auditing a randomly selected sample of returns and examining the tax recoveries from this sample, it is possible to project (within certain tolerances of probability) the potential tax recoveries for the whole group. This constitutes a measurement of the amount and proportions of non-compliance. By periodically checking the non-compliance for a particular group of taxpayers, in relation to audit activity within that group, it is possible to estimate the effects of audit on compliance. Intensification or reduction of audit effort takes place depending on whether the compliance has increased or decreased in that group.
19. Additional data collected from these sample audits is computer analyzed in an attempt to detect patterns which could be helpful in the future selection of files for audit.
Audit Activities
20. The "field audit" is the main tool in the Department's audit program. this action can require from a few hours to several weeks depending on the nature of the examination and/or the size and complexity of the taxpayer's operations. The "field audit" is usually a detailed but sometimes restricted examination of books and records normally conducted at the taxpayer's place of business. The field audit can be conducted by one auditor or a team of auditors. Team audits use two or more auditors and may include individuals with different skills such as electronic data processing and, as circumstances require, may be directed by a case manager. Another form of audit is the industry-wide audit, which involves the coordinated audits of a number of corporations within one industry. Other specialists, such as Business Equity Valuators and Real Estate Appraisers, are available to assist auditors in situations concerning valuations and appraisals of equities and various properties respectively.
21. Before beginning a field audit. the auditor will contact the taxpayer to arrange a convenient date to commence the audit and will then begin a review of the taxpayer's file. In this preliminary review, the auditor examines the return selected for audit, the attached financial statements for prior years, audit reports from previous audits and any other information on file. In so doing, the auditor can plan, in a general way, an approach to the audit and prepare a list of queries to raise.
22. On arriving at the taxpayer's place of business, the auditor will present an official identification card. Before beginning the examination of books and records, the auditor may want to discuss with the taxpayer the general nature of the business or tour the premises to gain a better understanding of the transactions recorded in the books. Cooperation by the taxpayer in this regard permits a faster and more efficient audit and is, consequently, of mutual benefit.
23. The scope of the audit is determined by the auditor with the advice and direction of a supervisor. They decide which records should be examined and what audit techniques should be employed. The audit might extend to examination of the taxpayer's ledgers, journals, bank accounts, sales invoices, shipping and receiving records, purchase vouchers, expense accounts, inventories, investments, agreements, contracts, appointment books, share records and minutes, etc. Throughout the audit, the auditor may need to obtain information and assistance from the employees of the taxpayer, particularly those on the accounting staff.
24. In a small minority of cases (for example, when the records are inadequate, or the income reported appears inconsistent with the taxpayer's standard of living) the auditor may have net worth statements prepared to determine income, or to confirm income established by other audit approaches.
25. The auditor does not usually question items one by one as the examination proceeds since many will answer themselves during the course of the audit. The preliminary list of queries will be modified and periodically a group of outstanding questions will be presented to the taxpayer. Should the taxpayer's return require an adjustment the steps described under the heading "Reassessment" are taken.
Delays in audit
26. Although the actual time of audit may be only one or two weeks, the elapsed time from start to finish may be longer. Unavoidable delays may occur when the taxpayer wishes to consult with advisers, or is called out of town before completion of the audit. Similarly, the auditor may cause the delay by deciding to request an interpretation from Head Office on a particularly complex or contentious point of law.

Digitized by Google

27. Sometimes, however, unnecessary delays are caused by taxpayers or their representatives failing to provide information or documents as requested. Faced with this situation, the auditor can obtain the information, by
(a) a written request to the taxpayer and/or the taxpayer's representative. The taxpayer or a representative will be given a reasonable period to provide the information.

(b) A formal requirement under the Act (conviction for failure to comply would result in a fine).

(c) A reassessment based on the incomplete information available (to dispute the reassessment, the taxpayer might then need to produce the missing information).
28. It is departmental policy to use with moderation the somewhat arbitrary method outlined in (c) above. Problems can usually be avoided if the taxpayer advises the auditor of any valid reason for delay in providing the requested information.
Determination of tax
29. It should be remembered that the role of the auditor is to determine the correct tax payable, even if this involves a downward adjustment of tax and a consequent refund.
30. In the determination of the correct tax, the auditor will not challenge generally accepted accounting principles as observed by the taxpayer unless:
(a) The taxpayer has been inconsistent in their application;

(b) A certain practice is specifically prohibited by the Income Tax Act or Regulations;

(c) There is legal precedent for not recognizing the principle for tax purposes;

(d) It appears the principle is being applied only as part of a scheme for tax evasion or tax avoidance.
Reassessments
31. When an audit is completed, the auditor may propose to adjust the tax payable by reassessing the taxpayer's return. Initially the proposal will be discussed with the taxpayer and/or representative and, if they request or it is reasonable to expect that the taxpayer will need an opportunity to analyse the proposed adjustments, the auditor will confirm the proposal in writing and allow a reasonable period in which to make representations. If the taxpayer is in full agreement with the changes, the auditor may proceed with the reassessment without a written proposal.
32. If the auditor does not have any proposed adjustments to the taxpayer's income tax return, the auditor will so notify the taxpayer and/or representative.
33. Should an audit be delayed by the circumstances described in 27 above and a reassessment proposed on the basis of available information, the taxpayer will be advised of the proposed change in writing and given a reasonable period to provide the missing information. If the taxpayer provides the requested information in this interval and should it alter the auditor's proposed reassessment, the taxpayer will be notified as in 31 above.
34. The policy of taxpayer notification does not apply when the Department suspects the taxpayer is attempting to avoid payment of taxes, as contemplated by subsection 158(2) of the Act. For more information on the subject of avoiding payment of assessed taxes, see Information Circular 75-16R, "Collection Policy."
Reassessment of prior year's returns
35. The subject of reassessing prior years' returns is dealt with in Information Circular 75-7R2,

Digitized by Google

"Reassessment of a Return of Income".

Audit review

36. With audit activities being conducted in 28 District Offices, the Department is concerned with achieving uniformity of interpretation and application of the law. This is the prime objective of the audit review system which encompasses the District Offices and Head Office. Each District Office has a review section responsible for achieving this objective within the District while the Audit Programs Division of Head Office is charged with ensuring uniformity across the country.

Digitized by Google

Requests for Information

Subsections 231.1-231.2 provide the statutory authority to the Minister to inspect, audit or examine any book or record related to any taxpayer or to inspect any property in furtherance of verifying compliance with the Act.

Requests for information (RFIs) are a means by which the Minister ascertains a fuller picture of the tax position of a taxpayer. They are a statutory power that has been enforced by the courts, subject to certain restrictions depending on the situation, even though they are not extensively used per statistics released under the Access to Information Act.

The ITA deals with them in primary two categories:

the first is requests made to specific taxpayers about themselves, and the second is to taxpayers about others dealing with the former.

In the case of the 1st, directly to a taxpayer about his affairs, the court has held, like In Carrefour Langelier Inc. and The Canada Customs and Revenue Agency[66] the Trial Court, citing, provided:

> [8] Rothstein J.(as he then was) said in AGT Ltd. v. Canada (Attorney General of Canada), [1996] 3 F.C. 505 (T.D.):
>
> > It is not necessary that a requirements notice set out the grounds or particulars for which the documents sought are required.
> >
> > As long as the documents pertain to a genuine inquiry into the tax liability of a person, they may be the subject of a requirements notice under subsection 231.2(1).

In this case, the tax collection arm was attempting to value a parent corporation's shares that were indirectly held, at the end, as a bankrupt's property.

Practically "any document" may be requested if it is relevant to a taxpayer's tax position and it would include compelling taxpayer's tax accountants to divulge their client's files to CRA (since there is no accountant-client privilege in Canada) as well as create new documents such as answer questionnaires and other questions, if actual documentary evidence does not exist to reflect on what exactly a situation is. [67]

Definitions - S. 231
231. In sections 231.1 to 231.7,

"authorized person" « personne autorisée »
"authorized person" means a person authorized by the Minister for the purposes of sections 231.1 to 231.5;

"document" « document »
"document" includes money, a security and a record;

"dwellinghouse" « maison d'habitation »
"dwelling-house" means the whole or any part of a building or structure that is kept or occupied as a permanent or temporary residence and includes

(a) a building within the curtilage of a dwelling-house that is connected to it by a

---

[66] 2003 FC 1260

[67] See "Protections Against Self-Incrimination in Income Tax Audits, Investigations, and Inquiries" by William I. Innes and Matthew G. Williams in the Canadian Tax Journal, (2001), Vol. 49, No. 6 / no 6, pg. 1459, for a lengthy discussion of CRA's investigatory powers .

Digitized by Google

doorway or by a covered and enclosed passageway, and (b) a unit that is designed to be mobile and to be used as a permanent or temporary residence and that is being used as such a residence;

"judge" « juge »

"judge" means a judge of a superior court having jurisdiction in the province where the matter arises or a judge of the Federal Court.

Inspections - S. 231.1

231.1 (1) An authorized person may, at all reasonable times, for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement of this Act,

(a) inspect, audit or examine the books and records of a taxpayer and any document of the taxpayer or of any other person that relates or may relate to the information that is or should be in the books or records of the taxpayer or to any amount payable by the taxpayer under this Act, and

(b) examine property in an inventory of a taxpayer and any property or process of, or matter relating to, the taxpayer or any other person, an examination of which may assist the authorized person in determining the accuracy of the inventory of the taxpayer or in ascertaining the information that is or should be in the books or records of the taxpayer or any amount payable by the taxpayer under this Act, and for those purposes the authorized person may

(c) subject to subsection 231.1(2), enter into any premises or place where any business is carried on, any property is kept, anything is done in connection with any business or any books or records are or should be kept, and

(d) require the owner or manager of the property or business and any other person on the premises or place to give the authorized person all reasonable assistance and to answer all proper questions relating to the administration or enforcement of this Act and, for that purpose, require the owner or manager to attend at the premises or place with the authorized person.

Prior authorization

(2) Where any premises or place referred to in paragraph 231.1(1)(c) is a dwelling-house, an authorized person may not enter that dwelling-house without the consent of the occupant except under the authority of a warrant under subsection 231.1(3).

Application

(3) Where, on ex parte application by the Minister, a judge is satisfied by information on oath that

(a) there are reasonable grounds to believe that a dwelling-house is a premises or place referred to in paragraph 231.1(1)(c),

(b) entry into the dwelling-house is necessary for any purpose relating to the administration or enforcement of this Act, and

(c) entry into the dwelling-house has been, or there are reasonable grounds to believe that entry will be, refused, the judge may issue a warrant authorizing an authorized person to enter the dwelling-house subject to such conditions as are specified in the warrant but, where the judge is not satisfied that entry into the dwelling-house is necessary for any purpose relating to the administration or enforcement of this Act, the judge may

(d) order the occupant of the dwelling-house to provide to an authorized person reasonable access to any document or property that is or should be kept in the

Digitized by Google

dwelling-house, and

(e) make such other order as is appropriate in the circumstances to carry out the purposes of this Act, to the extent that access was or may be expected to be refused and that the document or property is or may be expected to be kept in the dwelling-house.

Requirement to provide documents or information - S. 231.2

231.2 (1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Minister may, subject to subsection (2), for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement of this Act (including the collection of any amount payable under this Act by any person), of a listed international agreement or, for greater certainty, of a tax treaty with another country, by notice served personally or by registered or certified mail, require that any person provide, within such reasonable time as is stipulated in the notice,

(a) any information or additional information, including a return of income or a supplementary return; or

(b) any document.

Unnamed persons

(2) The Minister shall not impose on any person (in this section referred to as a "third party") a requirement under subsection 231.2(1) to provide information or any document relating to one or more unnamed persons unless the Minister first obtains the authorization of a judge under subsection 231.2(3).

Judicial authorization

(3) A judge of the Federal Court may, on application by the Minister and subject to any conditions that the judge considers appropriate, authorize the Minister to impose on a third party a requirement under subsection (1) relating to an unnamed person or more than one unnamed person (in this section referred to as the "group") if the judge is satisfied by information on oath that

(a) the person or group is ascertainable; and

(b) the requirement is made to verify compliance by the person or persons in the group with any duty or obligation under this Act.

(c) and (d) [Repealed, 1996, c. 21, s. 58(1)]

Search warrant - S. 231.3

231.3 (1) A judge may, on ex parte application by the Minister, issue a warrant in writing authorizing any person named therein to enter and search any building, receptacle or place for any document or thing that may afford evidence as to the commission of an offence under this Act and to seize the document or thing and, as soon as practicable, bring it before, or make a report in respect of it to, the judge or, where the judge is unable to act, another judge of the same court to be dealt with by the judge in accordance with this section.

Evidence in support of application

(2) An application under subsection 231.3(1) shall be supported by information on oath establishing the facts on which the application is based.

Evidence

(3) A judge may issue the warrant referred to in subsection 231.3(1) where the judge is

Digitized by Google

satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that

(a) an offence under this Act was committed;

(b) a document or thing that may afford evidence of the commission of the offence is likely to be found; and

(c) the building, receptacle or place specified in the application is likely to contain such a document or thing.

Contents of warrant

(4) A warrant issued under subsection 231.3(1) shall refer to the offence for which it is issued, identify the building, receptacle or place to be searched and the person alleged to have committed the offence and it shall be reasonably specific as to any document or thing to be searched for and seized.

Seizure of document

(5) Any person who executes a warrant under subsection 231.3(1) may seize, in addition to the document or thing referred to in that subsection, any other document or thing that the person believes on reasonable grounds affords evidence of the commission of an offence under this Act and shall as soon as practicable bring the document or thing before, or make a report in respect thereof to, the judge who issued the warrant or, where the judge is unable to act, another judge of the same court to be dealt with by the judge in accordance with this section.

Retention of things seized

(6) Subject to subsection 231.3(7), where any document or thing seized under subsection 231.3(1) or 231.3(5) is brought before a judge or a report in respect thereof is made to a judge, the judge shall, unless the Minister waives retention, order that it be retained by the Minister, who shall take reasonable care to ensure that it is preserved until the conclusion of any investigation into the offence in relation to which the document or thing was seized or until it is required to be produced for the purposes of a criminal proceeding.

Return of things seized

(7) Where any document or thing seized under subsection 231.3(1) or 231.3(5) is brought before a judge or a report in respect thereof is made to a judge, the judge may, of the judge's own motion or on summary application by a person with an interest in the document or thing on three clear days notice of application to the Deputy Attorney General of Canada, order that the document or thing be returned to the person from whom it was seized or the person who is otherwise legally entitled thereto if the judge is satisfied that the document or thing

(a) will not be required for an investigation or a criminal proceeding; or

(b) was not seized in accordance with the warrant or this section.

Access and copies

(8) The person from whom any document or thing is seized pursuant to this section is entitled, at all reasonable times and subject to such reasonable conditions as may be imposed by the Minister, to inspect the document or thing and to obtain one copy of the document at the expense of the Minister.

AGT Limited v. The Attorney General Of Canada, A-514-96/[1997] 2 F.C. 878, The

Digitized by Google

Balancing of State Interest in a Regulatory Environment, and the Taxpayer's Right to Privacy

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT DESJARDINS J.A.

This appeal deals with the validity and enforceability of three notices of requirements issued by the Minister of National Revenue (the "Minister") to the appellant AGT Limited (AGT) pursuant to subsection 231.2(1) of the Income Tax Act.

These notices of requirements read in their substantive parts:

For the purposes related to the administration or enforcement of the Income Tax Act, pursuant to the provisions of subsection 231.2(1) thereof, I hereby require from you within 30 days from the date of delivery of this notice, file copies of correspondence, agreements, reports, memoranda, schedules, working papers, minutes of meetings, notes to files, telexes, facsimile transmissions and other documents in your possession or under your control, and in the manner originally kept relating directly or indirectly to the following:

documents and information filed with the Canadian Radio and Telecommunication Commission and not previously provided for the years 1990 to July 1995

The aforementioned enumeration of classes of documents or information is not to be presumed to be exhaustive of the material which the officer or officers of this Department will wish to review and subsequent reference may be made to classes or specific documents or information which must be provided pursuant to this agreement.

...

If this requirement is not complied with you may be liable to prosecution without further notice under subsection 238(1).

The documents and information sought by the Minister under the notices of requirements are materials the appellant filed with the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission (the "CRTC") for the years 1990 to July 1995, which now enjoy the status of confidential material by virtue of a decision of the CRTC made pursuant to sections 350 and 358 of the Railway Act,[3] and sections 18 and 19 of the CRTC Telecommunications Rules of Procedure.[4]

The facts

The appellant is a telephone company whose activities have been regulated by the CRTC since October 4, 1990. Prior to October 4, 1990, telephone service in the province of Alberta was provided by the Alberta Government Telephones Commission. Being a Crown corporation exempt from federal and provincial income tax, it never claimed capital cost allowance. For accounting purposes, however, it did calculate an annual depreciation expense which it included in the calculation of its revenue requirement. Pursuant to the Alberta Government Telephones Reorganization Act,[5] the Commission was restructured as of October 4, 1990, for purposes of privatization. Telus Corporation was formed to act as a holding corporation to facilitate the privatization of the provincial Crown agent. Most telephone operations and assets were transferred to the appellant, a subsidiary of Telus which became a regulated business under the jurisdiction of the CRTC. AGT became, at the same time, a taxable entity.

In preparation for the organization and privatization of the Alberta Government Telephones Commission, the Minister was asked for an advanced tax ruling as to whether depreciable assets for tax purposes should be valued at original cost, approximately $ 4 billion, or a net book value, i.e. original cost less depreciation of about $ 2.2 billion. The tax ruling allowed the original cost as undepreciated capital cost.

Digitized by Google

In October 1991, the appellant filed an application to the CRTC for a Revenue Requirement proceeding, initially for 1992. The revenue requirement is intended to cover AGT's expenses, costs of capital and other items; but of relevance here, is the fact that the allowed revenue is also intended to cover AGT's income tax liability.

During the course of its application to the CRTC, AGT took a more conservative approach on its income tax liability than in its income tax returns to the Minister. Before the CRTC, the corporate taxpayer furnished the CRTC with certain documents on which it claimed and obtained confidentiality pursuant to sections 18 and 19 of the CRTC Telecommunications Rules of Procedure. The Minister of National Revenue, who had been conducting a general audit of AGT involving the review and verification of the financial statements and tax returns filed by the appellant in 1990 and 1991,[6] became aware of the confidential material the appellant had filed with the CRTC. As a result of an internal memo, three representatives of the Minister visited the CRTC on 22 June 1995, so as to have access to the material. The CRTC, however, refused to release the confidential documents.

In July 1995, after attempting unsuccessfully to obtain the confidential documents in issue directly from the CRTC, the Minister issued the notices of requirements under subsection 231.2(1) of the Act requiring AGT to produce the documents in question.

The taxpayer applied for judicial review to the Trial Division of this Court challenging the validity and enforceability of the notices of requirements. The application was dismissed in a decision which is now reported.[7]

The parties' contentions

The appellant has pressed upon us two key arguments. Firstly, that the notices of requirements were not authorized under subsection 231.2(1). Secondly, that the documents sought to be seized were privileged under the "Wigmore Rules" as outlined in cases such as R. v. Gruenke.[8] We chose not to hear the respondent on this second issue, since we are satisfied that the motions judge did not err in his disposition of that argument.

With regard to the first issue, the appellant contends that the notices of requirements are invalid because they do not meet the conditions set out by the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd.,[9] namely that the documents "be relevant to the filing of the income tax return", and that the seizure be "reasonable" within the meaning of section 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.[10]

With regard to the threshold test for relevance, the appellant submits that although McKinlay stands for the proposition that seizures under subsection 231.2(1) of the Income Tax Act have a lower threshold test than the "reasonable rounds" test for seizure in a criminal law context it is still incumbent upon the Minister to demonstrate to the court, by affidavit or otherwise, that the notices of requirements are designed to seek production of only those documents that may be relevant to his compliance verification function. To issue a notice of requirement which deliberately disregards the potential relevance of a document is clearly outside the scope of the section.

Digitized by Google

In the case at bar, there are issues as between the Minister and AGT with regard to the classification of certain assets for tax purposes.[11] The appellant submits that the Minister has admitted that the notices of requirements seek the production of information which is irrelevant to these issues. During cross- examination, Ms. Sharon Marlene White, a representative of the respondent, conceded that AGT could not be forced to give its opinion on the risk assessment of those assets.[12] She made clear, however, that the Minister is interested in the facts underlying the risk assessment. The following exchange then occurred:[13]

Q You just issued the requirement knowing that a consequence may be that you would end up with information that you are not entitled to?

A I issued a requirement asking for all documents filed with the CRTC, whatever they may be. [Emphasis added]

Such an admission, claims the appellant, indicates that the Minister is operating an impermissible fishing expedition. The Minister, it says, is entitled to business records a taxpayer is obligated to keep, but not to opinion documents and business strategies.

The appellant further argues that the seizure is unreasonable because the appellant's privacy interest in the documents sought to be seized outweighs the state's interest in those documents. The appellant submits that it has a compelling privacy interest in the documents because, at the time the notices of requirements were issued, the sought for documents enjoyed confidentiality by virtue of the CRTC's decision which had determined that it is in the public interest that the documents remain confidential. The fact that the appellant is not required by the Act to maintain the type of documents in issue is further evidence that the state's interest in obtaining the documents does not outweigh the appellant's privacy interest. The motions judge should have considered that the documents at issue came into existence by compulsion of law for a very specific purpose since the information was prepared and provided to the CRTC so as to allow the CRTC to discharge its statutory duty. The diversion which the Minister is seeking is, therefore, unreasonable.

The appellant finally argues that the Minister's extra-legal conduct in seeking access to the information is clearly at odds with the rule of law and the values embodied by section 8 of the Charter. The attempt to obtain the documents through the CRTC is an intricate part of the seizure in issue and goes to the determination of whether the seizure was reasonable.

The respondent maintains that the notices of requirements meet the legal requirements of McKinlay. The Minister is entitled to obtain documents which might contain not only facts, but which might reveal the roadmap followed by the taxpayer in his assessment. The Minister is entitled to have access to documents which might flag situations likely to assist him in the enforcement of the Act.

Analysis

The seminal case is McKinlay where the Supreme Court of Canada found that subsection 231(3) of the Income Tax Act, now 231.2(1), constitutes a valid seizure within the meaning of section 8 of the Charter. The Court upheld the Minister's warrantless demand for a taxpayer's private documents and information, in the context of the administration or enforcement of the Act, on the basis that there was a lower standard of reasonableness for the production of those documents.

Digitized by Google

Wilson J., speaking for herself and Lamer C.J.,[14] noted that the federal Income Tax Act was a regulatory statute, and that the meaning to be given to the word "unreasonable", as found in section 8 of the Charter, would be less strict in an administrative and regulatory context:[15]

It is consistent with this approach, I believe, to draw a distinction between seizures in the criminal or quasi-criminal context to which the full rigours of the Hunter criteria will apply, and seizures in the administrative or regulatory context to which a lesser standard may apply depending upon the legislative scheme under review. I do not believe that when the Chief Justice said in Simmons at p. 527 that departures from the Hunter criteria would be rare he was applying his mind to searches or seizures in the context of regulatory legislation. I think he was addressing as in the cases of Hunter and Simmons themselves searches or seizures in a criminal or quasi-criminal context. It is with these considerations in mind that I examine the reasonableness of s. 231(3) of the Income Tax Act.

She then continued:[16]

At the beginning of my analysis I noted that the Income Tax Act was based on the principle of self- reporting and self-assessment. The Act could have provided that each taxpayer submit all his or her records to the Minister and his officials so that they might make the calculations necessary for determining each person's taxable income. The legislation does not so provide, no doubt because it would be extremely expensive and cumbersome to operate such a system. However, a self-reporting system has its drawbacks. Chief among these is that it depends for its success upon the taxpayers' honesty and integrity in preparing their returns. While most taxpayers undoubtedly respect and comply with the system, the facts of life are that certain persons will attempt to take advantage of the system and avoid their full tax liability.

Accordingly, the Minister of National Revenue must be given broad powers in supervising this regulatory scheme to audit taxpayers' returns and inspect all records which may be relevant to the preparation of these returns. The Minister must be capable of exercising these powers whether or not he has reasonable grounds for believing that a particular taxpayer has breached the Act. Often it will be impossible to determine from the face of the return whether any impropriety has occurred in its preparation. A spot check or a system of random monitoring may be the only way in which the integrity of the tax system can be maintained. If this is the case, and I believe that it is, then it is evident that the Hunter criteria are ill-suited to determine whether a seizure under s. 231(3) of the Income Tax Act is reasonable. The regulatory nature of the legislation and the scheme enacted require otherwise. The need for random monitoring is incompatible with the requirement in Hunter that the person seeking authorization for a search or seizure have reasonable and probable grounds, established under oath, to believe that an offence has been committed. If this Hunter criterion is inapplicable, then so too must the remaining Hunter criteria since they all depend for their vitality upon the need to establish reasonable and probable grounds. For example, there is no need for an impartial arbiter capable of acting judicially since his central role under Hunter is to ensure that the person seeking the authorization has reasonable and probable grounds to believe that a particular offence has been committed, that there are reasonable and probable grounds to believe that the authorization will turn up something relating to that particular offence, and that the authorization only goes so far as to allow the seizure of documents relevant to that particular offence.

Digitized by Google

This is not to say that any and all forms of search and seizure under the Income Tax Act are valid. The state interest in monitoring compliance with the legislation must be weighed against an individual's privacy interest. The greater the intrusion into the privacy interests of an individual, the more likely it will be that safeguards akin to those in Hunter will be required. Thus, when the tax officials seek entry onto the private property of an individual to conduct a search or seizure, the intrusion is much greater than a mere demand for production of documents. The reason for this is that, while a taxpayer may have little expectation of privacy in relation to his business records relevant to the determination of his tax liability, he has a significant privacy interest in the inviolability of his home.

In my opinion, s. 231(3) provides the least intrusive means by which effective monitoring of compliance with the Income Tax Act can be effected. It involves no invasion of a taxpayer's home or business premises. It simply calls for the production of records which may be relevant to the filing of an income tax return. A taxpayer's privacy interest with regard to these documents vis-à-vis the Minister is relatively low. The Minister has no way of knowing whether certain records are relevant until he has had an opportunity to examine them. At the same time, the taxpayer's privacy interest is protected as much as possible since s. 241 of the Act protects the taxpayer from disclosure of his records or the information contained therein to other persons or agencies.

The appellant claims in essence that although subsection 231.2(1) of the Act has been declared constitutionally valid, each notice of requirement issued under that provision must meet the test of relevancy and reasonableness.

The short answer to this contention is that once a statutory provision is declared valid, as was done with respect to subsection 231.2(1) of the Act in McKinlay, the constitutional analysis ends. Only a statutory analysis is then required. It is under this analysis that I now consider the appellant's arguments about relevancy and reasonableness.

Under the Income Tax Act, the Minister is concerned with verifying the tax liability of the taxpayer which is first revealed in the taxpayer's return. It will often be "impossible to determine from the face of the return whether any impropriety has occurred in its preparation".[17] Because of the nature of the conduct regulated by the Income Tax Act, there are, in many cases, no ways of determining whether proscribed conduct has been engaged in, short of studying the process by which a suspected corporation or business has made and implemented its decision.[18] Investigatory mechanisms which force corporations and other businesses to divulge what they and only they can know about their internal affairs are part of the state's interest in the enforcement of the Act.[19]

While an individual or a corporation's interest in having business strategies kept in confidence is recognized,[20] the balancing no doubt favours the state. Wilson J. in McKinlay recognizes that the "Minister has no way of knowing whether certain records are relevant until he has had an opportunity to examine them".[21] There is an ultimate safeguard. Not all of those documents are necessarily admissible against the taxpayer in a court of law or in another proceeding. Only those in accord with the rules of evidence shall be admissible.

The fact that the documents in issue were prepared for another forum, namely for providing the CRTC with information required under a rate setting process, does not prevent the Minister from having access to them since they are relevant to the potential tax liability of the taxpayer. Moreover, the fact that they were sealed by order of the CRTC from public access does not prevent the Minister from having access to them when he is engaged in enforcing the Act. These propositions follow from McKinlay.

Digitized by Google

The notices of requirements constitute the least intrusive means by which effective monitoring of compliance with the Act can be effected.[22] The fact that the Minister used extra-legal means to try to obtain the documents is an irrelevant consideration with respect to the validity of the notices of requirements. The fact of the matter is that those documents were not obtained from the CRTC. Subsection 231.2(1) is drafted in broad language, but its scope has been reduced through the rules of interpretation[23] to situations where the information sought by the Minister is relevant to the tax liability of some specific person or persons, and when the tax liability of such person or persons is the subject of a genuine and serious inquiry. Given these criteria, I find that no error was committed by the motions judge.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

The appellant asked, in the event the appeal is dismissed, that the judgment of this Court be stayed for a period of ninety days so as to allow the appellant to submit an application to the Supreme Court of Canada for leave to appeal to that Court. The respondent agreed. On consent, I would stay this judgment for a period of ninety days. If an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada is filed before the expiry of that period, the stay would stand until the application is disposed of by that Court.

"Alice Desjardins"
J.A.
"I agree
A.J. Stone J.A."
"I agree
Linden J.A."

1 R.S.C. 1985 (5th Supp.), c. 1. Subsection 231.2(1) provides as follows: 231.2(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Minister may, subject to subsection (2), for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement of this Act, by notice served personally or by registered or certified mail, require that any person provide, within such reasonable time as is stipulated in the notice, any information or additional information, including a return of income or a supplementary return; or (b) any document.

2 A.B. at 320-21.

3 R.S.C. 1985, c. R-3 as am.

4 SOR/79-554, 27 July 1979, Canada Gazette Part II, vol. 133, no. l5.

5 S.A. 1990, c. A-23.5.

Digitized by Google

[6] Affidavit of Ms. Sharon Marlene White, Comm. Appendix I, vol. III, at p. 295.

[7] AGT Ltd. v. Canada (Attorney General) (T.D.), [1996] 3 F.C. 505; 96 DTC 6388.

[8] [1991] 3 S.C.R. 263.

[9] [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627.

[10] Part I of the Constitution Act, 1982, being Schedule B of the Canada Act 1982 (U.K.), 1982, c. 11.

[11] A.B. at 442.

[12] A.B. at 444-46.

[13] A.B. at 450-53.

[14] Both La Forest J. and L'Heureux-Dubé J. concurred with Wilson J. subject to what they had said in the case of Thomson Newspapers Ltd. v. Canada (Director of Investigation & Research, Restrictive Trade Practices Commission) 67 D.L.R. (4th) 161 (S.C.C.), released concurrently, Sopinka J. agreed with the disposition of the case as suggested by Wilson J., but for different reasons.

[15] R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627 at 647-48.

[16] R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627 at 648-50.

[17] R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627 at 648, per Wilson J.

[18] See La Forest J. in Thomson Newspapers Ltd. v. Canada (Director of Investigation & Research, Restrictive Trade Practices Commission) 67 D.L.R. (4th) 161 at 234 (S.C.C.).

[19] See La Forest J. in Thomson Newspapers Ltd. v. Canada (Director of Investigation & Research, Restrictive Trade Practices Commission) 67 D.L.R. (4th) 161 at 234 (S.C.C.).

[20] See La Forest J. in Thomson Newspapers Ltd. v. Canada (Director of Investigation & Research, Restrictive Trade Practices Commission) 67 D.L.R. (4th) 161 at 209 (S.C.C.).

[21] R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627.

[22] R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627 at 650.

[23] James Richardson & Sons v. M.N.R., [1984] 1 S.C.R. 614 at 625, which, like McKinlay, dealt with subsection 231(3) of the Income Tax Act, S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 63 as am. (now with differences that are inconsequential for purposes of this case, subsection 231.2(1) of the present Income Tax Act).

Bankruptcy Proceedings

A RFI easily ranks over even the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act since they are not “a proceeding” which prevents them from being pursued under that Act. Such was the case in The Minister Of National Revenue and Gerald L. Stern[68] where the court held:

[7] With all due respect, I disagree. In my view, the Minister is entitled to issue a letter pursuant to section 231.2 of the Act even if the taxpayer has filed a proposal under the

[68] T-218-04

Digitized by Google

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act. [8] Beaudry J., in Carrefour Langelier Inc. v. Canada (Customs and Revenue Agency) 2003 FC 1403, wrote at paragraph [9]:

The applicant urges that the requirement letter is a proceeding and therefore there is a serious issue to be tried. I share the respondent's view that section 231.2 of the Act is a power to investigate, which is devolved to the Minister and it is not a "proceeding" within the meaning of section 69.3 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act. Once the information is obtained, the respondent will be in a position to establish the fair market value of Mr. Glassman's shares and may share the information with the trustee for the benefit of the other creditors in the bankruptcy.

[9] In the present case, the Minister is exercising his power to investigate under 231.2 of the Act, and the lack of co-operation by the taxpayer over the years justifies this investigation. The Respondent admits in his affidavit that the CCRA provable claim is substantial. The effect of subsection 69.3(1) is to impede independent action by any creditor against the debtor or his property, now vested in the trustee. It has no effect on the right of the Minister under section 231.2 of the Act to obtain further information relevant to the tax debt of the Respondent. As stated by Justice Nadon in Vancouver Trade Mart Inc. (Trustee of) v. Canada (Minister of National Revenue - M.N.R.), [1997] F.C.J. No. 1467 (paragraph 28):

Section 231.2(1) of the Act simply allows the Minister, in proper circumstances, to obtain production of relevant information and documents so as to properly administer and enforce the provisions of the Income Tax Act.

This was further added to in the decision of Donald Fabi And The Minister Of National Revenue[69] where the Trial Court reflected extensively on the jurisprudence when the taxpayer attempted to argue that a search for ancillary assets under bankruptcy was “a proceeding”. It held:

10. As his replies were incomplete, on or about December 15, 2003, I sent Donald Fabi two requirements to provide documents and information issued pursuant to subsection 231.2(1) of the Income Tax Act, so as to obtain information and/or documents relating to the hypothecary loans and purchase of a lot and condominium in Florida . .

[15] Mr. Phaneuf informed the Court that the purpose of one of the two requirements was meant to cast some light on a financing application made to the Bank by Mr. Fabi in July 1998 in order to purchase and/or make a new outlay on a condominium in Florida, and the purpose of the other was to cast some light on a financing application made to the Bank by Mr. Fabi in July 1998 in order to purchase the seaside lot in Florida with other individuals.

Thus, the requirements to provide documents and information which are the subject of the application for judicial review were sent in the course of the collection investigation and were in no way part of an investigation or prosecution for criminal offences.

…

[18] He ended by stating [TRANSLATION] "that the Agency has not instituted any criminal investigation involving Donald Fabi".

…

[20] The parties did not discuss this issue of the applicable standard of review before this Court. The applicant is seeking a ruling that the Minister's decision is null and void and is asking the Court to quash the two requirements on the ground that they were issued contrary to subsection 69.1(1) of the BIA.

[21] Before this Court, the two parties argued that in this case it was the Minister's powers which were at issue, and consequently the standard of review was that of correctness. I agree with this point of view, since the question is one of jurisdiction. In support of this, I cite the reasons for judgment of Bastarache J. in Pushpanathan v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 982, at paragraph 28:

---

[69] 2004 FC 1779

Digitized by Google

¶ 28 Although the language and approach of the "preliminary", "collateral" or "jurisdictional" question has been replaced by this pragmatic and functional approach, the focus of the inquiry is still on the particular, individual provision being invoked and interpreted by the tribunal. Some provisions within the same Act may require greater curial deference than others, depending on the factors which will be described in more detail below. To this extent, it is still appropriate and helpful to speak of "jurisdictional questions" which must be answered correctly by the tribunal in order to be acting intra vires. But it should be understood that a question which "goes to jurisdiction" is simply descriptive of a provision for which the proper standard of review is correctness, based upon the outcome of the pragmatic and functional analysis. In other words, "jurisdictional error" is simply an error on an issue with respect to which, according to the outcome of the pragmatic and functional analysis, the tribunal must make a correct interpretation and to which no deference will be shown.

[22] Mr. Fabi's counsel argued that the two requirements to provide documents and information issued by the Minister pursuant to subsection 231.2(1) of the Act are subject to the stay mentioned in subsection 69.1(1) of the BIA.

[23] That provision states that, subject to subsections (2) to (6), on the filing of a proposal in respect of an insolvent person, no creditor has any remedy against the insolvent person or the insolvent person's property, or shall commence or continue any action, execution or other proceeding, for the recovery of a claim provable in bankruptcy, until the trustee has been discharged or the insolvent person becomes bankrupt.

…

[25] In support of his argument, Mr. Fabi's counsel cited extensive case law, which I summarize:

The Supreme Court of Canada's judgment in R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627. The Supreme Court concluded that although a requirement for information or documents issued pursuant to the Income Tax Act constitutes a seizure within the meaning of section 8 of the Charter, it is not an unreasonable seizure.

The Supreme Court of Canada's judgment in Vachon v. Canada (Employment and Immigration Commission), [1985] 2 S.C.R. 417. In that case, the Supreme Court held that the recovery of an overpayment by source deduction from unemployment insurance benefits payable is a remedy or proceeding against the debtor or his property within the meaning of the former subsection 49(1) of the Bankruptcy Act.

The Supreme Court of Canada's judgment in M & D Farm Ltd. v. Manitoba Agricultural Credit Corporation, [1999] 2 S.C.R. 961. In that case, the appellant had obtained a stay of proceedings from a tribunal pursuant to the federal Farm Debt Review Act, after being informed by the Corporation that it intended to commence proceedings to recover amounts owed under a mortgage. Despite the stay, the Corporation obtained an order under a provincial Act to commence foreclosure proceedings, but took no action until the federal stay had expired. The Supreme Court held that the application for leave based on the provincial Act was a "proceeding within the meaning of s. 23 of the federal Act". In his reasons, Binnie J. considered other means of collection used by creditors while the section 23 stay was in effect and concluded that the courts have generally held them to be invalid. He mentioned Davies v. Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, [1987] B.C.J. No. 632, which involved an examination for discovery on a farm foreclosure, and Nelson's Lazy H Ranches (1984) Ltd. v. Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, [1992] 3 W.W.R. 574 (Alta. C.A.), in which an order affirming an order of sale and vesting made during a stay pursuant to section 23 of the federal Act was held to be void.

Digitized by Google

Bisaillon v. Canada, [1999] F.C.J. No. 898. In that case, Létourneau J.A. granted a stay of a requirement to provide documents and information until judgment was rendered by the Court of Appeal. At paragraph 27 of his reasons, he writes:

¶ 27 However, I am far from persuaded that, as the applicants maintained, first, the strict rules applicable to the description of the content of search warrants are those that should govern the content of a requirement of information such as the one at issue, and second, that the instant requirement is illegal because it is nothing less than a fishing expedition. While a search warrant is most intrusive and invasive of taxpayer's privacy, the requirement of information in the case at bar is clearly analogous to the procedure for examining a debtor after judgment, similar to that mentioned in arts. 543 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, which authorizes the examination of a third party able to supply information on a debtor's assets and income and compulsion of the third party to produce documents relating to those assets (art. 281): but I do not have to decide that point. [Emphasis added.]

The judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal in Jones v. Ontario, O.N.C.A. C38961. Mr. Jones had filed a bankruptcy proposal approved by the Ontario Supreme Court. The question before the Court of Appeal was whether the periodic tax payments made by Mr. Jones after the date of his proposal under the BIA could be applied to reduce his tax obligations incurred before the said proposal. The Court of Appeal held that they could not.

Sabey (Trustee of), [1996] B.C.J. No. 2820, is similar to Jones, supra. The Court did not allow Revenue Canada to reimburse itself, after notice of a bankruptcy proposal, from a tax refund payable to Mr. Sabey. The Court reasoned that allowing such reimbursement would give Revenue Canada preference at the expense of other creditors.

Similar circumstances can be found in Condominium Plan No. 78R15349 v. Fayad, 2001 SKQB 104. The heart of the judgment of Dawson J. is found at paragraphs 23 and 24 of his reasons, which I quote:

¶ 23 The courts have consistently given a very broad meaning to both "remedy" and "proceedings" as used in s. 69. The words have been interpreted to include any kind of attempt at recovery, judicial or extrajudicial. In this case, without the registered caveat there is no security. Without security the applicant cannot foreclose on the condominium to collect its levy. The registration of the caveat is a process taken relative to or for the purpose of execution. The registration of the caveat is the means by which the applicant's rights are enforced. Section 69 is sufficiently broad to include the registration of a caveat, registered as security for the unpaid levy.

¶ 24 Section 69 of the Bankruptcy Act requires a creditor who wishes to seek a remedy or commence a proceeding despite the s. 69 stay, to apply to the Bankruptcy court to have the stay removed in relation to their action. Without doing this, any prior proceeding or remedy violates s. 69. The levy against Mr. Fayad was unsecured at the time of his filing for bankruptcy. The Applicant's actions of registering the caveat violates s. 69. The applicant is not entitled to enforce the caveat.

[26] Counsel for the Minister responded by putting forward two major points:

the cases referred to by the applicant were cited out of their legislative context; and this Court has already decided the point at issue in two cases.

[27] There is no question that the context - the legislative background surrounding the problems of an issue and the purpose of the legislation - are essential factors in correctly interpreting Act.

[28] In this regard, I have only to cite the following passage from the reasons for judgment of Iacobucci J. in Re Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd., [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27:

Digitized by Google

¶ 20 At the heart of this conflict is an issue of statutory interpretation. Consistent with the findings of the Court of Appeal, the plain meaning of the words of the provisions here in question appears to restrict the obligation to pay termination and severance pay to those employers who have actively terminated the employment of their employees. At first blush, bankruptcy does not fit comfortably into this interpretation. However, with respect, I believe this analysis is incomplete.

¶ 21 Although much has been written about the interpretation of legislation (see, e.g., Ruth Sullivan, Statutory Interpretation (1997); Ruth Sullivan, Driedger on the Construction of Statutes (3rd ed. 1994) (hereinafter "Construction of Statutes"); Pierre-André Côté, The Interpretation of Legislation in Canada (2nd ed. 1991)), Elmer Driedger in Construction of Statutes (2nd ed. 1983) best encapsulates the approach upon which I prefer to rely. He recognizes that statutory interpretation cannot be founded on the wording of the legislation alone. At p. 87 he states:

Today there is only one principle or approach, namely, the words of an act are to be read in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act, and the intention of Parliament.

Recent cases which have cited the above passage with approval include: R. v. Hydro-Québec, [1997] 1 S.C.R. 213, Royal Bank of Canada v. Sparrow Electric Corp., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 411; Verdun
v. Toronto Dominion Bank, [1996] 3 S.C.R. 550; Friesen v. Canada, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 103.

¶ 22 I also rely upon s. 10 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 219, which provides that every Act "shall be deemed to be remedial" and directs that every Act shall "receive such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as will best ensure the attainment of the object of the Act according to its true intent, meaning and spirit".

¶ 23 Although the Court of Appeal looked to the plain meaning of the specific provisions in question in the present case, with respect, I believe that the court did not pay sufficient attention to the scheme of the ESA, its object or the intention of the legislature; nor was the context of the words in issue appropriately recognized. I now turn to a discussion of these issues.

[29] Counsel for the Minister also properly raised two recent judgments of this Court, in particular the judgment of Beaudry J. in Carrefour Langelier Inc. v. Canada (Customs and Revenue Agency), 2003 FC 1403, and that of Blais J. in Canada (Minister of National Revenue - M.N.R.) v. Stern, 2004 FC 763.

[30] In Carrefour Langelier, supra, Beaudry J., ruling on a motion for an interim stay of a requirement to provide pursuant to section 231.2 of the Act, concluded that the argument made by the applicant, namely that a requirement under section 231.2 of the Act is "another proceeding" within the meaning of subsection 69.3(1) of the BIA, raises no serious issue to be tried. At paragraph 9 of his reasons, he wrote this:

¶ 9 The applicant urges that the requirement letter is a proceeding and therefore there is a serious issue to be tried. I share the respondent's view that section 231.2 of the Act is a power to investigate, which is devolved to the Minister and it is not a "proceeding" within the meaning of section 69.3 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act. Once the information is obtained, the respondent will be in a position to establish the fair market value of Mr. Glassman's shares and may share the information with the trustee for the benefit of the other creditors in the bankruptcy. [Emphasis added.]

[31] In Stern, supra, the respondent relied on section 69.3 of the BIA to oppose to the Minister's efforts to investigate his sources of income before his bankruptcy. Blais J. dismissed this argument, relying on the judgment of Beaudry J. in Carrefour Langelier, supra. He wrote:

¶ 6 The Respondent suggests that, given the effect of section 69.3 of the Bankruptcy and

Digitized by Google

Insolvency Act, sources of income of Mr. Stern in the pre-bankruptcy period could not possibly be relevant to the Minister's enforcement or collection of his tax liability.

¶ 7 With all due respect, I disagree. In my view, the Minister is entitled to issue a letter pursuant to section 231.2 of the Act even if the taxpayer has filed a proposal under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act.

¶ 8 Tremblay-Lamer J. [sic] [Beaudry J.], in Carrefour Langelier Inc. v. Canada (Customs and Revenue Agency) 2003 FC 1403, wrote at paragraph [9]:

The applicant urges that the requirement letter is a proceeding and therefore there is a serious issue to be tried. I share the respondent's view that section 231.2 of the Act is a power to investigate, which is devolved to the Minister and it is not a "proceeding" within the meaning of section 69.3 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act. Once the information is obtained, the respondent will be in a position to establish the fair market value of Mr. Glassman's shares and may share the information with the trustee for the benefit of the other creditors in the bankruptcy

¶ 9 In the present case, the Minister is exercising his power to investigate under 231.2 of the Act, and the lack of co-operation by the taxpayer over the years justifies this investigation. The Respondent admits in his affidavit that the CCRA provable claim is substantial. The effect of subsection 69.3(1) is to impede independent action by any creditor against the debtor or his property, now vested in the trustee. It has no effect on the right of the Minister under section 231.2 of the Act to obtain further information relevant to the tax debt of the Respondent. As stated by Justice Nadon in Vancouver Trade Mart Inc. (Trustee of) v. Canada (Minister of National Revenue - M.N.R.), [1997] F.C.J. No. 1467 (paragraph 28):

Section 231.2(1) of the Act simply allows the Minister, in proper circumstances, to obtain production of relevant information and documents so as to properly administer and enforce the provisions of the Income Tax Act. [Emphasis added.]

[34] In Slattery (Trustee of) v. Slattery, [1993] 3 S.C.R. 430, the Supreme Court of Canada noted that a civil proceeding brought by a trustee in bankruptcy against the wife of a bankrupt to obtain a judgment declaring that certain property registered in the wife's name was part of the bankrupt's estate, or held in trust for that estate, was a proceeding relating to the administration and enforcement of the Act, the exception contained in subsection 241(3), and consequently the testimony of two Revenue Canada employees who had participated in an investigation into the bankrupt's affairs was authorized in connection with the trustee's action.

[35] That case also responds to an argument by counsel for Donald Fabi, that with the Court's leave pursuant to subsection 163(2) of the BIA the Minister could question Donald Fabi, who if so ordered had to provide documents. At page 454 of the report, Iacobucci J. considered that the possible existence of an alternative procedure did not disentitle the Minister to the right he had under another Act.

[36] At page 450 of the report Iacobucci J. wrote that the purposes of the Act include a desire to permit an effective and fair distribution of the assets of a bankrupt person and a desire to protect creditors of insolvent persons. He noted that the bankruptcy process is aimed at the proper protection of debtor, creditor and public interests. He noted that the ultimate purpose and result of prosecution of the trustee was to increase the estate of the bankrupt taxpayer, and this provided the relation or connection with enforcement of the Income Tax Act.

[37] I refer to the Federal Court of Appeal judgment in Tower v. Canada (Minister of National Revenue - M.N.R.), 2003 FCA 307, dealing once again with a requirement under section 231.2 of the Income Tax Act. Malone J.A. wrote the following at paragraph 29:

¶ 29 A number of cases have dealt with the scope of subsection 231.2(1) (see R. v.

Digitized by Google

McKinlay Transport Ltd., supra; James Richardson & Sons, Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue et al., supra; AGT Ltd. v. Canada (Attorney General), supra; and R. v. Jarvis, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 757 at paragraph 51). The relevant principles from these authorities establish that the determination of a taxpayer's tax liability is a purpose related to the administration and enforcement of the Act. A requirement is valid if the requested information may be relevant in the determination of the tax liability of the named taxpayer. This is a low threshold. Subsection 231.2(1) gives the Minister a broader authority to obtain information than would be the case if, for example, the Minister were conducting pre-trial examinations for discovery in the context of an income tax appeal.

[38] In McKinlay Transport, supra, the Supreme Court of Canada noted that the Income Tax Act was based on the principle of self-reporting and self-assessment. In such a scheme, the Court acknowledged that in supervising the scheme, the Minister had to be given "broad powers . . . to audit taxpayers' returns and inspect all records which may be relevant to the preparation of these returns".

[39] Wilson J. wrote the following, concerning subsection 231(3) of the Income Tax Act:

¶ 35 In my opinion, s. 231(3) provides the least intrusive means by which effective monitoring of compliance with the Income Tax Act can be effected. It involves no invasion of a taxpayer's home or business premises. It simply calls for the production of records which may be relevant to the filing of an income tax return. A taxpayer's privacy interest with regard to these documents vis-à-vis the Minister is relatively low. The Minister has no way of knowing whether certain records are relevant until he has had an opportunity to examine them. At the same time, the taxpayer's privacy interest is protected as much as possible since s. 241 of the Act protects the taxpayer from disclosure of his records or the information contained therein to other persons or agencies.

[40] R. v. Fitzgibbon, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1005, also supports the arguments of counsel for the Minister. In that case, the issue was whether it was necessary to obtain the Bankruptcy Court's consent pursuant to subsection 49(1) of the Bankruptcy Act (now subsection 69.1(1)) in order to legally make a compensation order under the Criminal Code as part of the penalty imposed on an undischarged bankrupt. The Supreme Court of Canada concluded that the Bankruptcy Court's authorization was not required, but the beneficiaries of the compensation order had to obtain its consent when they sought to file the order in the Superior Court in order to apply or execute it. Cory J. gave the Court's reasons.

[41] In the view of Cory J., such an order is not a remedy or an order for recovery against the property of the bankrupt offender within the meaning of subsection 49(1) of the Bankruptcy Act. He wrote:

¶ 23 In contrast, a compensation order is an order made against the person of the offender, imposing upon him or her an obligation to pay the amount ordered. It is only when the compensation order is filed with the Superior Court of the province that it becomes an order enforceable against the person and property of the offender. There is a fundamentally important distinction between the original compensation order, which is an order against the person by which the court recognizes an acknowledged indebtedness, and the subsequent filing in the Superior Court which can convert that personal order into an order against the property of the accused.

¶ 24 Section 49(1) of the Bankruptcy Act would preclude the enforcement of the latter. This is because such an enforcement would result in the granting of the very priorities which the Bankruptcy Act seeks to avoid. However, the original compensation order made at the time of sentencing is an order against the offender personally recognizing an acknowledged indebtedness and is not immediately enforceable. Until the order is filed with the Superior Court, it simply imposes a future obligation upon the offender to pay. It is neither a remedy nor an order for recovery against the property of the bankrupt offender within the meaning of s. 49(1). Thus s. 49(1) does not prohibit the making of a compensation order. [Emphasis added.]

Digitized by Google

[42] Cory J. also considered that such a result did not undermine the integrity of the Act, because the net effect of the compensation order was simply to prove that the victims had a valid claim as unsecured creditors in the bankrupt's estate. It did not give the victims priority over the other unsecured creditors. Priority would only arise if the beneficiaries of the order sought to execute the order and attach the property of the bankrupt, pursuant to the provisions of the Criminal Code. Cory J. concluded that the trustee in bankruptcy would then have to be notified and the consent of the Bankruptcy Court obtained pursuant to subsection 49(1) before execution of the order could proceed. That is why he concluded that the integrity of the Bankruptcy Act was maintained.

[43] Counsel for Mr. Fabi argued that the requirements to provide under section 231.2 of the Income Tax Act did not enjoy any exemption under the BIA, such as that Act provides in section 69.42 for the Minister of Finance, the Governor in Council and the Attorney General of Canada.

[44] He also relied on two new legislative provisions in support of his argument that the Minister's requirements in the case at bar are recovery proceedings covered by subsection 69.1(1) of the BIA.

[45] The first, providing for a new prescription period, is an amendment to section 222 of the Income Tax Act following the Supreme Court of Canada's judgment in Markevich v. Canada, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 94. "Action" is defined as "an action to collect a tax debt of a taxpayer and includes a proceeding in a court and anything done by the Minister under . . . any provision of this Part", which is Part XV containing section 231.

[46] The second amendment which concerns us is in section 231.2. As mentioned, that section authorizes the Minister to issue requirements "for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement of this Act". In 2000, Parliament specified that the administration and enforcement of the Act included "the collection of any amount payable under this Act".

[47] In my opinion, the arguments of counsel for Mr. Fabi cannot be accepted. The argument based on section 69.42 of the BIA would only be valid if this Court were to find that a requirement under section 231.2 of the Income Tax Act was a "action, execution or other proceeding" within the meaning of subsection 69.1(1) of the BIA of this Act.

[48] In my view, the arguments of counsel for Mr. Fabi cannot be accepted. The validity of his argument relies on an acknowledgement by this Court that a requirement issued under section 231.2 of the Income Tax Act is covered by subsection 69.1(1) of the BIA, which is not the case.

[49] Further, the legislative amendments mentioned do not have the effect of altering the Minister's investigative power under section 231.2 in a recovery proceeding.

At appeal the taxpayer attempted to argue that the RFI was a collection steep since it seemed to fall within the statutory ITA provisions that dealt with that collections however the court held:

[2] Those requests were made pursuant to paragraph 231.2(1)(a) and (b) of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985 (5th Supp.), c. 1 (the Act). They sought to obtain from the appellant information as to the ownership or transfer of a building and/or lot owned by him in Florida. These applications, set out in an affidavit by a representative of the defendant, had three purposes: to determine the value of the appellant's assets, to discover what had happened with the selling price of the building, if applicable, and to ascertain, if no purchase was made as the appellant claimed, what had happened with the money disbursed by the bank to acquire the properties.

…

Digitized by Google

[9] The information which the Minister sought to obtain was also relevant and necessary to establish the appellant's tax debt. The latter submitted that his tax debt had already been determined in the proposal and amounted to $183,621.09, according to the proof of claim filed by the respondent with the trustee. I am ready to follow the appellant in this respect, but the tax debt does not include debts to come, that is, a debt which has not yet been determined and which might relate to undeclared or concealed taxable assets.

[10] Indeed, the appellant's undeclared assets may give rise to a taxable income if they exist. The affidavit by Mr. Phaneuf, who is employed by the Agency, indicates at paragraph 14 that the purpose of the request for information was to determine whether the appellant's undeclared assets had been transferred, in which case the transfer or disposition, especially to related persons, could give rise to a tax debt for the appellant.

[11] With respect, I am of the view that the requests for information by the Minister, made in this case to determine, for tax purposes, the existence or value of an asset which might be concealed or the amount of its selling price or price of disposal, do not constitute an action in view of collecting claims provable in bankruptcy. The Minister is responsible for implementing and enforcing the Act. This duty, which he performs in the public interest, includes the determination of a taxpayer's tax debt. Determining a taxpayer's tax obligation is an objective relating to the administration and enforcement of the Act. In order to carry out this duty properly, the Minister must be able to ask questions in order to obtain and determine the facts and amounts: Tower v. M.N.R., [2004] 1 F.C.R. 183 (F.C.A.).

[12] At this stage, according to the evidence, this is the objective pursued by the requests for production of information and documents made by the Minister. If the Minister thereafter wishes to proceed to the next stage, that is the collection of the new tax debt so established, if any, then paragraph 69.1(1)(a) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act will come into play. It cannot be assumed at this point, and there is no evidence to this effect in the record, that the Minister will ignore paragraph 69.1(1)(a) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and will not proceed to collect the new tax debt by way of an amended claim, as he is allowed to do by section 121 of that Act.

…

[15] I am of the view that this reading by the appellant of subsection 222(1) ignores the very first parts of the definition of the word "action": the action must be "an action to collect" a tax debt. I agree with the judge, who thus ruled at paragraph 49 of his reasons: the Minister's power set out at section 231.2 of the Act does not relate to collection. The power is not a collection action.

…

[17] With respect, it seems clear to me that the words "anything done by the Minister under . . . this Part" are qualified by the fact that a collection action must be at stake, and therefore that the action taken pursuant to this Part referred to by subsection 222(1) is a collection measure. The words "under this Part" contained in the definition of subsection 222(1) do not have the effect of transforming a power of investigation into a collection action.

…

[20] I say wrongly because, firstly, the appellant's reasoning is based on the premise that the section 232.1 power of investigation is a collection action or an action taken in view of collection, subject to the limitation period. As we have already noted, that is false.

[21] Secondly, the appellant has ignored the comment made by this Court in Tower v. M.N.R., supra; at paragraph 32 of that decision, the Court recalled that "there is no statutory time limit" applicable to the exercise of this power. The Court has thus implicitly but necessarily concluded that the Minister's power to impose a requirement to provide information is not a collection action, still less an action aiming at the collection of a tax debt already determined when, as in this case, its purpose is to determine the existence …

Digitized by Google

Deloitte & Touche Inc., The Trustee of the Estate of Vancouver Trade Mart Inc., a bankrupt v. Attorney General Of Canada representing the Minister Of National Revenue, T-1071-96, Trustee Papers under a s. 231.2 Request

INTRODUCTION:
The Applicant, a trustee in bankruptcy, seeks to set aside a decision of the Minister of National Revenue (the "Minister") requiring him to provide documents, pursuant to section 231.2 of the Income Tax Act (Canada) (the "Act").
Specifically, the Applicant received a letter dated April 10, 1996 from the Director of Taxation, Vancouver Tax Services, requiring him to produce certain documents, namely his working papers and account analyses relating to a bankrupt company and its shareholders.
The letter dated April 10, 1996 is as follows:
For purposes related to the administration or enforcement of the Income Tax Act, pursuant to the provisions of Section 231.2 of the said Act, I hereby require from you within thirty (30) days from the date of service hereof:
All your working papers and your account analyses relating to each of Vancouver Trade Mart Inc., Mr. George Lee (aka Heng-Loung George Lee), Mrs. Julie Lee, Mr. Edward J. Lee and Mr. Irwin J. Lee, for the period January 1, 1989 to December 31, 1995.
The required working papers and account analyses are to include:
Shareholders" accounts.
Accounts Payable including payables to sub-trades and related companies.
Building construction cost.
Intercompany accounts.
Disbursement of loan proceeds.
Disbursement analysis prior to bankruptcy.
To comply with this notice, you should provide the working papers and account analyses required to Peter Ling of this Department who may be contacted at 691-3666 to arrange for attendance at your office for that purpose.

FACTS:
I begin with the relevant facts. The Applicant is the trustee of the estate of a bankrupt company, Vancouver Trade Mart Inc. ("VTM"). On December 1, 1994 a judgment creditor filed a petition before the Supreme Court of British Columbia seeking a Receiving Order against VTM. On January 13, 1995 VTM filed a Notice of Intention to make a proposal pursuant to Part III, Division 1 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (the "Bankruptcy Act"). The Applicant agreed to act as trustee under the proposal and appointed Mr. Colin Topley to act on its behalf in the matter. Mr. Topley, a senior vice-president of the Applicant, was, at all material times herein, a licensed trustee in bankruptcy, a certified general accountant and a certified fraud examiner. On March 13, 1995, VTM filed its proposal to creditors. The Applicant was named as trustee in the proposal. The first meeting of VTM"s creditors took place on April 3, 1995. The meeting was adjourned to April 19, 1995 at which time the creditors rejected VTM"s proposal. Thus, VTM"s assignment into bankruptcy deemed effective as of December 1, 1994. Also on April 19, 1995 the Applicant was confirmed as trustee to the bankruptcy of VTM.
At all material times herein, VTM had been controlled by George and Julie Lee and their children, Edward and Irwin Lee. As of April 19, 1995, the Department of National Revenue began a full audit of VTM, which included a review of VTM"s shareholders and related companies.

Digitized by Google

The auditor assigned to this audit was Mr. Peter Ling. In the course of performing his audit, Mr. Ling contacted George Lee who informed him that all of VTM"s books and records were in the possession of the Applicant. Mr. Ling contacted the Applicant and, on May 10, 1995 he was allowed to review a certain number of VTM"s documents, namely bank statements, cancelled cheques, supplier"s invoices, financial statements, etc.

During the course of reviewing the aforesaid documents, Mr. Ling was informed by representatives of the Applicant that they had conducted their own audit of VTM and that they had noticed "irregularities" between VTM and its shareholders. Mr. Ling stated in his affidavit that the Applicant "suspected that George Lee had appropriated VTM funds for his personal use".

Mr. Ling, following the receipt of this information, requested that the Applicant provide him with its working papers "including year-end adjusting journal entries, working trial balances, shareholders" account analyses and other account analyses done by VTM"s previous accountants". In October 1995, Mr. Ling was permitted by the Applicant to review VTM"s former accountant"s working papers. On October 26, 1995, Mr. Ling was allowed to make photocopies of the accountant"s working papers, including the year-end adjusting journal entries, the journal ledger, general ledger listings and all trial balances pertaining to VTM.

At the end of October 1995, Mr. Ling wrote to the Applicant requesting that he be allowed to review its account analyses of the bankrupt company, including its analyses of the shareholder accounts. At the end of November 1995 the Applicant advised Mr. Ling that it would not comply with his request. For the present purposes, paragraphs 31, 32 and 33 of Mr. Ling"s affidavit dated June 1996 are relevant:

Specifically, the purpose of examining that part of the Forensic Audit which includes an account analysis relating to VTM, George Lee, Julie Lee, Edward Lee and Irwin Lee for the period January 1, 1989 to December 31, 1995 is to determine whether any of those persons have misused or appropriated funds from VTM, directly or indirectly, and if so, to determine if assessments should be issued against them for example, but not restricted to the provisions of sections 15, 56 and 160 of the Income Tax Act.

If I am provided with the required parts of the Forensic Audit as specified in the Requirement Notice dated April 10, 1996, then I will not have to duplicate the same audit exercise already performed by Colin Topley or Deloitte & Touche Inc. as trustee for VTM.

I require those parts of the Forensic Audit of Colin Topley relating to VTM, George Lee, Julie Lee, Edward Lee and Irwin Lee, for the period January 1, 1989 to December 31, 1995 for purposes related to the administration and enforcement of the Income Tax Act and for no other purpose.

As it appears from Mr. Ling"s statements, he seeks the Applicant"s papers for the purpose of completing his audit of George, Julie, Edward and Irwin Lee for the period of January 1, 1989 to December 31, 1995.

LEGISLATION:

The Minister"s request for the Applicant"s working papers and account analyses stems from section 231.2(1) of the Act which provides:

231.2 (1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Minister may, subject to subsection (2), for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement of this Act, by notice served personally or by registered or certified mail, require that any person provide, within such reasonable time as is stipulated in the notice, any information or additional information, including a return of income or a supplementary return; or any document.

Digitized by Google

Also of relevance, is the definition of the word "documents" which appears in section 231 of the Act. "Documents", is defined as follows:
"documents" includes money, securities and any of the following, whether computerized or not: books, records, letters, telegrams, vouchers, invoices, accounts and statements (financial or otherwise); ISSUES:
The issues raised by the Applicant, as they appear from the grounds set forth in the Originating Notice of Motion, are:
The correct construction of section 231.2 of the Income Tax Act does not entitle the Minister of National Revenue to require production of the work product including working papers and account analyses of a forensic accountant.
Section 231.2 of the Income Tax Act does not entitle the Minister of National Revenue to require production from a Trustee in Bankruptcy of his working papers and account analyses generated as part of the Trustee"s administration of the bankrupt"s estate and with a view to obtaining legal advice with respect to the realization of the bankrupt"s assets.
Section 231.2 of the Income Tax Act should not be interpreted so as to allow the Minister of National Revenue to obtain the working papers and accounts analyses of a Trustee in Bankruptcy when the Minister of National Revenue is in competition with the Trustee for monies in the hands of third parties.
The Requirement names Vancouver Trade Mart Inc. the bankrupt and George Lee, Mrs. Julie Lee, Mr. Edward J. Lee and Mr. Irwin J. Lee. No bona fide investigation of the tax liability of these individuals is being carried out by the Minister of National Revenue.
The interpretation of section 231.2 of the Income Tax Act argued by the Respondent would render section 231.2 to be of no force and effect because it justifies an unreasonable search contrary to section 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.
By the time this matter came up for hearing, the Applicant had abandoned the fourth ground. Thus, only grounds 1, 2, 3 and 5 remain for adjudication.

ANALYSIS:
I will begin my analysis with the fifth ground to the effect that the Minister"s interpretation of section 231.2(1) of the Act amounts to the justification of an unreasonable search, contrary to section 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms (the "Charter"). I cannot agree.
Both sides relied on the Supreme Court of Canada"s decision in McKinlay Transport Ltd. v. The Queen, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627. On the one hand, the Applicant submits that, contrary to the taxpayer"s position in McKinlay , the Applicant herein has "high expectations of privacy". In the Applicant"s submission, this distinguishes the facts of the present case from those in McKinlay . Consequently, according to the Applicant, if the documents requested by the Minister have to be produced, this will constitute an unreasonable seizure, and thus a breach of section 8 of the Charter.
On the other hand, the Respondent submits that there is nothing in the record to distinguish between this case and McKinlay. In the Respondent"s submission, the reasoning of Wilson J., who delivered the reasons of the majority of the Supreme Court in McKinlay , is applicable to the facts of the present case. As both sides refer essentially to the same passage from Wilson J."s reasons, I will quote these reasons. At page 642, Madam Justice Wilson states:
... First, s. 231(3), even construed narrowly in accordance with prior authority, envisages the compelled production of a wide array of documents and not simply those which the state requires the taxpayer to prepare and maintain under the legislation. Second, the legislation contemplates that parties who are not the subject of an investigation or audit can be compelled to produce documents relating to another taxpayer who is the subject of such investigation or audit. Thus, compelled production reaches beyond the strict filing and maintenance requirements of the Act and may well extend to information and documents in which the taxpayer has a privacy interest in need of protection under s. 8 of the Charter although it may not be as vital an interest as that obtaining in a criminal or a quasi-criminal context. I would therefore conclude that the application of s. 231(3) of the Income Tax Act to the appellants constitutes a "seizure" since it infringes on their expectations of privacy. It remains to be determined, however, whether the state"s intrusion on that privacy interest is unreasonable or, to put it another way, whether it violates the taxpayers" reasonable expectation of privacy.

Digitized by Google

And at pages 648, 649 and 650:

At the beginning of my analysis I noted that the Income Tax Act was based on the principle of self- reporting and self-assessment. The Act could have provided that each taxpayer submit all his or her records to the Minister and his officials so that they might make the calculations necessary for determining each person"s taxable income. The legislation does not so provide, no doubt because it would be extremely expensive and cumbersome to operate such a system. However, a self-reporting system has its drawbacks. Chief among these is that it depends for its success upon the taxpayers" honesty and integrity in preparing their returns. While most taxpayers undoubtedly respect and comply with the system, the facts of life are that certain persons will attempt to take advantage of the system and avoid their full tax liability.

Accordingly, the Minister of National Revenue must be given broad powers in supervising this regulatory scheme to audit taxpayers" returns and inspect all records which may be relevant to the preparation of these returns. The Minister must be capable of exercising these powers whether or not he has reasonable grounds for believing that a particular taxpayer has breached the Act. ... A spot check or a system of random monitoring may be the only way in which the integrity of the tax system can be maintained. If this is the case, and I believe that it is, then it is evident that the Hunter criteria are ill-suited to determine whether a seizure under s.231(3) of the Income Tax Act is reasonable. The regulatory nature of the legislation and the scheme enacted require otherwise. The need for random monitoring is incompatible with the requirement in Hunter that the person seeking authorization for a search or seizure have reasonable and probable grounds, established under oath, to believe that an offence has been committed. ...

This is not to say that any and all forms of search and seizure under the Income Tax Act are valid. The state interest in monitoring compliance with the legislation must be weighed against and individual"s privacy interest. The greater the intrusion into the privacy interests of an individual, the more likely it will be that safeguards akin to those in Hunter will be required. Thus, when the tax officials seek entry onto the private property of an individual to conduct a search or seizure, the intrusion is much greater than a mere demand for production of documents. The reason for this is that, while a taxpayer may have little expectation of privacy in relation to his business records relevant to the determination of his tax liability, he has a significant privacy interest in the inviolability of his home.

In my opinion, s. 231(3) provides the least intrusive means by which effective monitoring of compliance with the Income Tax Act can be effected. It involves no invasion of a taxpayer"s home or business premises. It simply calls for the production of records which may be relevant to the filing of an income tax return. A taxpayer"s privacy interest with regard to these documents vis-a-vis the Minister is relatively low. The Minister has no way of knowing whether certain records are relevant until he has had an opportunity to examine them. At the same time, the taxpayer"s privacy interest is protected as much as possible since s. 241 of the Act protects the taxpayer from disclosure of his records or the information contained therein to other persons or agencies.

Digitized by Google

I agree with the Respondent that there is no distinction to be made. Consequently, the Minister"s request for documents under section 231.2(1) of the Act does not, in my view, constitute an unreasonable seizure. The Respondent submits that the Applicant"s "own reasonable expectation of privacy has not been infringed, and neither has the creditors". I agree. The purpose of section 8 of the Charter is to prevent the state from intruding "unwarrantedly" into the affairs of individuals. That is certainly not the case here.

The Applicant argued that it had a very high expectation of privacy "respecting its work product, working papers and account analyses that are confidential documents to be used by the trustee in the administration of the bankrupt estate". Unfortunately, the Applicant has not been able to persuade me that there is such a "very high expectation of privacy" as concerns its work as trustee of a bankrupt estate.

I am therefore of the view that the applicant cannot succeed on the fifth ground.

With respect to the other grounds, counsel for the Applicant regrouped them into two issues:

the correct construction of section 231.2(1) of the Income Tax Act does not require a Trustee in Bankruptcy to produce to the Department of National Revenue Taxation the work product including working papers and account analyses generated as part of the Trustees administration [sic] of the Bankrupt Estate pursuant to his appointment under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act.

The working papers and account analyses generated as part of the Trustee"s administration of the Bankrupt Estate and with a view to obtaining legal advice with respect to the realization of the Bankrupt"s assets are all subject to solicitor/client privilege and as such not producible on service of a Requirement under section 231.2(1) of the Income Tax Act .

With respect to the first issue, counsel for the Applicant advanced four reasons why section 231.2 of the Income Tax Act "should not be construed to include the trustee"s working papers and account analyses". The four reasons advanced by counsel are the following:

to construe it as including the work product of the Trustee developed during the administration of the Estate would authorize a warrantless search, contrary to Section 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms;

the construction including a Requirement to produce the Trustee"s work product will produce a conflict between the provisions of two Federal statutes, namely the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and the Income Tax Act. There is a presumption of coherence and consistency between the entire body of statute law of the Parliament of Canada;

a construction that would include the Trustee"s work product would produce an absurd result, contrary to reasonableness, common sense and logic;

such a construction constitutes an expropriation without compensation and due process of the property of the Applicant, contrary to the presumption against this.

I have already dealt with the first reason which is, in effect, the fifth ground of the Originating Notice of Motion.

The second reason advanced by the Applicant is that the Minister"s interpretation of section 231.1(1) of the Act creates a conflict between the Act and the Bankruptcy Act . After due consideration of the Applicant"s written and oral arguments, I am at a loss to understand what conflict would be created by requiring the Applicant to produce the documents which the Minister requires. I agree entirely with the Respondent"s position on this issue. I adopt, for the present purposes, the statement which appears at paragraph 75 of the Respondent"s brief. It reads as follows:

No conflict is created between the Income Tax Act and the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act by the application of Section 231.2(1). All that Section 231.2(1) does is oblige the Applicant to provide information for the enforcement of a regulatory Statute, it does not impair his ability to act as a trustee. Producing the documents in question in this case will not affect the creditors legal rights in any way. The trustee is still free to institute legal proceedings on behalf of the general creditors if that is in the best interests of the bankrupt estate. In short, the trustee can comply with the Income Tax Act in this case without breaching any portion of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act.

Digitized by Google

Contrary to what the Applicant asserts, it does not necessarily follow that because the Minister will have access to Mr. Topley"s working papers and account analyses, the creditors of the bankrupt estate will be prejudiced. At the end of the day, the bankruptcy court will have to decide, if called upon, whether payments made by VTM to its shareholders are void. If void, the funds will revert to the bankrupt estate and thus, in all likelihood, no tax liability will have been created as far as the shareholders are concerned.

As a last argument on this point, the Applicant submits that to allow the Minister to obtain the Applicant"s working papers "to defeat the claims of the trustee in bankruptcy would clearly produce an incoherence that the Parliament of Canada could never have intended". The fact that section 231.2(1) of the Act may allow the Minister to obtain Mr. Topley"s working papers does not, in my view, create the incoherence which, the Applicant submits, Parliament could not have intended.

Section 231.2(1) of the Act simply allows the Minister, in proper circumstances, to obtain production of relevant information and documents so as to properly administer and enforce the provisions of the Income Tax Act. The Applicant fails on this point.

The third reason advanced by the Applicant is that, should it be compelled to produce its work papers and account analyses, an absurd result would be reached "contrary to reasonableness, common sense and logic". I have not been persuaded that the interpretation which the Minister has adopted leads to either an absurd result or is contrary to reasonableness, common sense and logic.

The next reason advanced by the Applicant is that the Minister"s interpretation of section 231.2(1) of the Act leads to "expropriation without compensation and due process" of his property. Relying on the Federal Court of Appeal"s decision in La Ferme Filiber Ltee. v. The Queen , [1980] 1 F.C. 128, the Respondent argues that the requirement under section 231.2(1) of the Act does not constitute and cannot constitute expropriation. At page 130 of the report of La Ferme, Marceau J. states:

An expropriation implies dispossession of the expropriated party and appropriation by the expropriating party; it necessarily requires a transfer of property or rights from one party to the other. There is nothing of that kind here. Defendant has not acquired anything belonging to plaintiff.

...

If the legal proposition on which this action is based were to be admitted, and the adoption or amendment of a regulation such as that in question here were to be regarded as constituting a disguised act of expropriation with respect to anyone whose commercial activities were interfered with thereby, it is easy to imagine the proliferation of claims that would follow. There is no doubt that the establishment or amendment of a regulation of this kind may create extremely unfortunate situations, and the action appears to provide a striking example of this. If however, in such special cases, the government has not made any exceptional provision for the payment of compensation, there is no legal principle I know of which can force it to do so.

I agree with Marceau J., as I must, that, for there to be an expropriation, there necessarily must occur a transfer of property or rights from one party to the other. That is not the case in the present matter. I should mention that during the hearing counsel for the Applicant, rightly in my view, conceded that the expropriation point must fail.

I will now address the second issue raised by the Applicant. The Applicant submits that its working papers and account analyses are subject to a solicitor/client privilege and that, consequently, it cannot be compelled to produce what the Minister has required it to produce under section 231.2(1) of the Act.

Digitized by Google

The Applicant"s submission is that Mr. Topley"s review of VTM"s pre-proposal transactions was commenced in order to submit the work to legal counsel for the purpose of an opinion regarding the advisability of legal proceedings. Consequently, the Applicant argues that all of the work performed in relation to pre-proposal transactions is subject to a solicitor/client privilege and thus that the Minister cannot compel the production of these documents. Once again, I cannot agree with the position taken by the Applicant.

In Susan Hosiery Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, (1969) 69 D.T.C. 5278 (ex. ct.), Jackett P. (later Chief Justice Jackett of the Federal Court of Canada) at 5281-5283, explained the solicitor/client privilege as follows:

In an attempt to avoid misunderstanding as to the effect of the decision that I propose to deliver, it may be well for me to attempt to put in my own words the law, as I understand it, on the understanding that, except in so far as is necessary for the decision of this case, I reserve the right to reconsider the precise extent of the doctrines that I am attempting to describe.

As it seems to me, there are really two quite different principles usually referred to as solicitor and client privilege, viz:

all communications, verbal or written, of a confidential character, between a client and a legal adviser directly related to the seeking, formulating or giving of legal advice or legal assistance (including the legal adviser"s working papers, directly related thereto) are privileged; and all papers and materials created or obtained specially for the lawyer"s "brief" for litigation, whether existing or contemplated, are privileged.

In considering the ambit of these principles, it is well to bear in mind the reasons for them.

In so far as the solicitor-client communications are concerned, the reason for the rule, as I understand it, is that, if a member of the public is to receive the real benefit of legal assistance that the law contemplates that he should, he and his legal adviser must be able to communicate quite freely without the inhibiting influence that would exist if what they said could be used in evidence against him so that bits and pieces of their communications could be taken out of context and used unfairly to his detriment unless their communications were at all times framed so as not only to convey their thoughts to each other but so as not to be capable of being misconstrued by others. The reason for the rule, and the rule itself, extends to the communications for the purpose of getting legal advice, to incidental materials that would tend to reveal such communications, and to the legal advice itself. It is immaterial whether they are verbal or in writing.

Turning to the "lawyer"s brief" rule, the reason for the rule is, obviously, that, under our adversary system of litigation, a lawyer"s preparation of his client"s case must not be inhibited by the possibility that the materials that he prepares can be taken out of his file and presented to the Court in a manner other than that contemplated when they were prepared. What would aid in determining the truth when presented in the manner contemplated by the solicitor who directed its preparation might well be used to create a distortion of the truth to the prejudice of the client when presented by someone adverse in interest who did not understand what gave rise to its preparation. If lawyers were entitled to dip into each other"s briefs by means of the discovery process, the straightforward preparation of cases for trial would develop into a most unsatisfactory travesty of our present system.

What is important to note about both of these rules is that they do not afford a privilege against the discovery of facts that are or may be relevant to the determination of the facts in issue. What is privileged is the communications or working papers that came into existence by reason of the desire to obtain a legal opinion or legal assistance in the one case and the materials created for the lawyer"s brief in the other case. The facts or documents that happen to be reflected in such communications or materials are not privileged from discovery if, otherwise, the party would be bound to give discovery of them...

Digitized by Google

In my view, it follows that, whether we are thinking of a letter to a lawyer for the purpose of obtaining a legal opinion or of a statement of facts in a particular form requested by a lawyer for use in litigation, the letter or statement itself is privileged but the facts contained therein or the documents from which those facts were drawn are not privileged from discovery if, apart from the facts having been reflected in the privileged documents, they would have been subject to discovery. For example, the financial facts of a business would not fall within the privilege merely because they had been set out in a particular way as requested by a solicitor for purposes of litigation, but the statement so prepared would be privileged.

Jackett P. then went on to examine the application of the solicitor/client privilege to "accountant"s materials". At 5283, he put it as follows:

Applying these principles, as I understand them, to materials prepared by accountants, in a general way, it seems to me that no communication, statement or other material made or prepared by an accountant as such for a business man falls within the privilege unless it was prepared by the accountant as a result of a request by the business man"s lawyer to be used in connection with litigation, existing or apprehended; and

that, where an accountant is used as a representative, or one of a group of representatives, for the purpose of placing a factual situation or a problem before a lawyer to obtain legal advice or legal assistance, the fact that he is an accountant, or that he uses his knowledge and skill as an accountant in carrying out such task, does not make the communications that he makes, or participates in making, as such a representative, any the less communications from the principal, who is the client, to the lawyer; and similarly, communications received by such a representative from a lawyer whose advice has been so sought are none the less communications from the lawyer to the client.

The first principle stated by Jackett P. in Susan Hosiery encompasses all communications, whether verbal or written, between a client and his legal adviser pertaining to the legal advice sought by that client. The second principle stated by Jackett P., is the "brief" privilege. This privilege, according to a well known author[1], covers the following:

It is pointed out in para 17 of the 16th Report of the Law Reform Committee that the privilege covers three kinds of communication:

communications between the client or his agents and the client"s professional legal advisers;

communications between the client"s professional legal advisers and third parties, if made for the purpose of pending or contemplated litigation;

communications between the client or his agent and third parties, if made for the purpose of obtaining information to be submitted to the client"s professional legal advisers for the purpose of obtaining advice upon pending or contemplated litigation.

Thus, communications between a client and third parties will be privileged if they came into existence for the purpose of obtaining information for submission to the client"s legal advisers in order to obtain legal advice concerning pending or contemplated litigation.

Before turning to the facts of this case, reference should be had to the decision of the House of Lords in Waugh v. British Railways Board, (1979) 2 All ER 1169 where the House of Lords formulated the "dominant purpose" test in regard to the solicitor"s "brief" privilege. This is how Lord Edmund-Davies formulated the test at 1182 and 1183:

... And in my judgment we should start from the basis that the public interest is, on balance, best served by rigidly confining within narrow limits the cases where material relevant to litigation may be lawfully withheld. Justice is better served by candour than by suppression. For, as it was put in the Grant v. Downs majority judgment, "privilege...detracts from the fairness of the trial by denying a party access to relevant documents or at least subjecting him to surprise".

Digitized by Google

Adopting that approach, I would certainly deny a claim to privilege when litigation was merely one of several purposes of equal or similar importance intended to be served by the material sought to be withheld from disclosure, and a fortiori where it was merely a minor purpose. On the other hand, I consider that it would be going too far to adopt the "sole purpose" test applied by the majority in Grant v. Downs , which has been adopted in no United Kingdom decision nor, as far as we are aware, elsewhere in the Commonwealth. Its adoption would deny privilege even to material whose outstanding purpose is to serve litigation, simply because another and very minor purpose was also being served. But, inasmuch as the only basis of the claim to privilege in such cases as the present one is that the material in question was brought into existence for use in legal proceedings, it is surely right to insist that, before the claim is conceded or upheld, such a purpose must be shown to have played a paramount part. Which phrase or epithet should be selected to designate this is a matter of individual judgment. Lord Denning MR, as we have seen, favoured adoption of the phrase employed in the Law Reform Committee"s report, viz "material which came into existence...wholly or mainly" for the purpose of litigation. "Wholly" I personally would reject for the same reason as I dislike "solely", but "mainly" is nearer what I regard as the preferable test. Even so, it lacks the element of clear paramountcy which should, as I think, be the touchstone. After considerable deliberation, I have finally come down in favour of the test propounded by Barwick CJ in Grant v. Downs in the following words:

"Having considered the decisions, the writings and the various aspects of the public interest which claim attention, I have come to the conclusion that the Court should state the relevant principle as follows: a document which was produced or brought into existence either with the dominant purpose of its author, or of the person or authority under whose direction, whether particular or general, it was produced or brought into existence, of using it or its contents in order to obtain legal advice or to conduct or aid in the conduct of litigation, at the time of its production in reasonable prospect, should be privileged and excluded from inspection."

Dominant purpose, then, in my judgment, should now be declared by this House to be the touchstone. It is less stringent a test than "sole" purpose, for, as Barwick CJ added -

"...the fact that the person...had in mind other uses of the document will not preclude that document being accorded privilege, if it were produced with the requisite dominant purpose".

The "dominant purpose" test was recently adopted by the British Columbia Court of Appeal in Shaughnessy Golf & Country Club v. Uniguard Services Ltd. and Chahal , (1986) 1 B.C.L.R. (2d) 309. I see no reason why I should not follow this test.

I now turn to the facts relevant to this issue. The Applicant"s position is summarized at p. 20 of its memorandum of fact and of law:

Mr. Topley, an accountant and partner in Deloitte & Touche Inc. and representing Deloitte & Touche Inc., the client, prepared the working papers and analysis for the purpose of obtaining legal opinion and legal advice and to facilitate legal action on behalf of the client, Deloitte & Touche Inc., the Trustee of the Bankrupt Vancouver Trade Mart Inc. It is therefore respectfully submitted that this Court should order that all of the working papers and analyses enumerated in Exhibit "F" of the Affidavit of Colin Topley, sworn and filed herein, are subject to solicitor/client privilege and accordingly are not producible pursuant to the Notice of Requirement issued by the Respondent to the Applicant.

The Applicant"s working papers and analyses are listed in exhibit "F" to the affidavit of Colin Topley. The explanation offered by Mr. Topley concerning these documents appears at paragraph 31 of his affidavit:

... Most of those working papers and analyses are incomplete. All have been prepared by the Trustee since the outset of the Proposal process for presentation to legal counsel and the Inspectors with a view to the pursuit of realizations for the general benefit of Vancouver Trade Mart"s creditors.

Digitized by Google

During his examination on discovery held on October 16, 1996, Mr. Topley explains, at page 13, the creation of his working papers as follows:

My ending product was created from a combination from documents from Vancouver Trade Mart and subsequent interviews with other parties and, ah, subsequent access pursuant to various court orders. We"ve got -- some of which I think we got the court orders earlier this year in the spring.

The work done by Mr. Topley included examining VTM"s financial statements, memoranda, check stubs, ledger accounts, bank records, communication files, reports to shareholders and all other documents containing relevant information on the activities of the bankrupt company.

The Applicant, through Colin Topley, originally retained the firm of Ladner Downs on January 13, 1995 to provide legal advice with respect to VTM"s proposal to creditors under Part III, Division of the Bankruptcy Act

. The Applicant, with the help of legal counsel, examined VTM"s pre-proposal business transactions to determine if any of these transactions were voidable under federal or provincial law.

It cannot be disputed, in my view, that the work done by the Applicant and legal counsel prior to the meeting of April 19, 1995, i.e. when the creditors rejected VTM"s proposal, was primarily done for the purpose of convincing the creditors that VTM"s proposal should be accepted.

The object of the work undertaken by the trustee was to inform the inspectors to the bankruptcy in order to allow them to make proper decisions, initially with respect to VTM"s proposal and subsequently regarding the assets of the bankrupt estate.

It appears from the evidence that it was only on April 19, 1995, i.e. at the first meeting of the bankruptcy inspectors, that the creditors tentatively authorized the Applicant to retain legal counsel "to recover property from the fraudulent preference payments and dividends paid". (see page 43 of the examination on discovery of Colin Topley)

At the May 16, 1995 meeting of the inspectors the Applicant presented an invoice for its fees and those of legal counsel. At that meeting, the Applicant also sought the inspector"s consent to seek a legal opinion regarding possible litigation. The fees of both trustee and legal adviser were ratified by the inspectors but they informed the trustee that they were unwilling to incur any future risk and thus were not prepared to pay for the trustee"s work concerning "reviewable transactions". During his examination on discovery, at page 49, Mr. Topley made it clear that the creditors were not prepared to pay for legal bills nor were they prepared to "make any investment or funding of the ongoing administration of the estate". The creditors authorized the Applicant to carry on with its investigation but on the condition that its fees and those of legal counsel would only be paid if there was a recovery.

Paragraphs 30.(1)(d) and (e) of the Bankruptcy Act the allow the trustee, with the approval of the inspectors of the bankrupt estate, to institute or defend legal proceedings in relation to the property of the bankrupt and, in that regard, to retain solicitors to conduct the litigation. The legislation provides:

30. (1) The trustee may, with the permission of the inspectors, do all or any of the following things:

bring, institute or defend any action or other legal proceeding relating to the property of the bankrupt;

employ a solicitor or other agent to take any proceedings or do any business that may be sanctioned by the inspectors;.

As I pointed out above, it was only on May 16, 1995 that the inspectors of the bankrupt estate authorized the Applicant to retain solicitors in respect of a number of matters. These matters, as they appear from the resolutions passed at the May 16, 1995 meeting are the following:

Digitized by Google

Resolution #18:
BE IT RESOLVED that the Trustee engage Harper Grey Easton to provide an opinion to the Trustee on the merits of any possible causes of action the Trustee may have against Mr. George Lee, and/or Mrs.
Julie Lee and/or Mr. Edward Lee or any of their related companies in relation to any transaction(s) that may be attackable and voided for the benefit of the Estate.
Resolution #19:
BE IT RESOLVED that the Trustee engage Harper Grey Easton and initiate steps to void and recover payments to non related Creditors and others that are deemed fraudulent preferences and settlements within the meaning of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and the provincial statutes including the Fraudulent Preferences Act, The Fraudulent Settlement Act or the Companies Act. For more certainty the payments identified are set out in pages five (5) to nine (9) of the Trustee"s Report to Inspectors dated 12 April 1995.
Resolution #19B:
BE IT RESOLVED that the Trustee be authorized to engage Harper Grey Easton to initiate proceedings to void and recover funds paid by Vancouver Trade Mart Inc. to any financial institution in addition to payments set out in Pages 5 to 9 of the Trustees Report to Inspectors dated 12 April 1995 that can be deemed a fraudulent preference or settlement within the meaning of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and the provincial statutes of the Fraudulent Preferences Act, the Fraudulent Settlement Act or the Companies Act.
Resolution #20:
BE IT RESOLVED that the Trustee engage Harper Grey Easton to assist the Trustee with the examination of the Directors of Vancouver Trade Mart including George Lee, Julie Lee, Edward Lee, Victor Elias and John Gorman.
Resolution #21:
BE IT RESOLVED that, the Trustee engage Harper Grey Easton to obtain appropriate Court Orders for the Trustee to obtain the books and records from various financial institutions, law firms, officers and directors of Vancouver Trade Mart where such books and records reflect transactions with Vancouver Trade Mart and will assist in identifying and recovering the property of Vancouver Trade Mart.
I should point out that the documents which the Minister seeks to obtain, and which the Applicant refuses to provide, have not been filed in the record so that I have not had the opportunity of examining them. Thus, contrary to what went on before Mr. Justice Teitelbaum in Gregory v. Canada (Minister of National Revenue), (1992) D.T.C. 6518, I have not been provided with a proper explanation regarding the contents of the documents sought by the Minister. In this regard, I have already referred to paragraph 31 of Mr. Topley"s affidavit and to page 13 of his examination on discovery.
Mr. Topley"s position, and thus the Applicant"s position, is that his working papers and account analyses were all prepared for the purpose of obtaining legal advice regarding possible litigation. Whether or not counsel requested this work to be done appears to be of no relevance.
In his written and oral arguments, counsel for the Applicant submitted that the evidence was clear, and not contradicted, that the working papers and analyses, were prepared for the purpose of seeking advice from legal counsel, Ladner Downs and Harper Grey Easton. I cannot agree with that submission. That is certainly the opinion of Mr. Topley but the evidence does not support his opinion. What the evidence shows is that the Applicant, through Mr. Topley, complied with the duties imposed upon it by the Bankruptcy Act. As Mr. Topley stated during his examination on discovery, at page 21:
It was my mandate as a trustee to do a review of the transactions, and because of the nature of the transactions I engaged Mr. Geoffrey Thompson[2] to assist me to evaluate and guide me in the process.

Digitized by Google

Later on Mr. Topley was asked whether he needed a lawyer "to tell you how to do your job as a trustee?". He answered that he did not need a lawyer.

There is no evidence before me that either Ladner Downs or Harper Grey Easton requested Mr. Topley to prepare any report for their possible use in legal proceedings. In Gregory, supra, many of the documents in respect of which privilege was sought, were reports and opinions obtained by the solicitors from experts who had been retained in order to enable the solicitors to provide legal advice to their clients. That is certainly not the case in the present instance. The evidence does not satisfy me that the work was undertaken so as to enable counsel to give legal advice.

I am not satisfied that the documents which the Minister seeks to obtain were prepared for the "dominant purpose" of obtaining legal advice. In my view, the evidence does not come close to supporting that position. Before concluding, I wish to say that there cannot be much doubt that the Applicant"s working papers and accounts analyses are "documents" within the meaning of section 231.2(1) of the Act. I have already referred to the definition of "documents" which appears in section 231. The definition is a broad one and, in my view, is broad enough to include the documents sought herein by the Minister. There can also not be much doubt that the Applicant is a "person" within the meaning of section 231.2(1).

Counsel for the Applicant argued that "documents" in section 231.2(1) was meant to include source documents only and not documents such as those created by a trustee in bankruptcy. In view of the wording of the section, I cannot see how I can so restrict the meaning of the word "document". I would have to disregard the plain meaning of the words in the section to agree with the Applicant.

In Gregory, supra, no issue appears to have arisen with respect to the nature of the documents sought by the Minister. In that case, many of the documents sought by the Minister from the Applicant, a lawyer, were not "source documents" but rather opinions received by the applicant from lawyers and accountants. Teitelbaum J. refused to order the Applicant to produce the documents solely on the ground that they were privileged.

CONCLUSION:

For these reasons, this application shall be dismissed. "MARC NADON"

JUDGE

Ottawa, Ontario

Charter Implications

There have been arguments over whether a RFI constitutes an unreasonable search of a taxpayer's affairs by the state as was the case of R. v. Mckinlay Transport Ltd.[70] where the Supreme Court held:

> During an income tax audit of the appellants, Revenue Canada, pursuant to s. 231(3) of the Income Tax Act, served them with letters demanding information and the production of documents. Because the appellants failed to comply with these demands, an information was issued alleging that they had breached s. 238(2) of the Act. A Provincial Court judge quashed

[70] [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627

Digitized by Google

the information holding that s. 231(3) violated the guarantee to protection against unreasonable search and seizure in s. 8 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Ontario Supreme Court allowed respondent's appeal. The court found that s. 231(3) did not authorize a seizure within the meaning of s. 8. The judgment was upheld by the Court of Appeal.

Held: The appeal should be dismissed.
Per Lamer and Wilson JJ.: A demand for information or documents under s. 231(3) of the Income Tax Act, coupled with its enforcement mechanism in s. 238(2), does not violate s. 8 of the Charter. The purpose of ss. 231(3) and 238(2), when read together, is not to penalize criminal conduct but to enforce compliance with the Act. While a demand under s. 231(3) constitutes a "seizure", for the reasons given in Thomson, it is not an unreasonable one.
The Income Tax Act is essentially a regulatory statute which controls the manner in which income tax is calculated and collected. It is based on the principle of self-reporting and self-assessment. To ensure compliance with the Act, the Minister of National Revenue must be given broad powers to audit taxpayers' returns and inspect all relevant records whether or not he has reasonable grounds for believing that a particular taxpayer has breached the Act. The integrity of the tax system can be maintained only by a system of random monitoring and s. 231(3) provides the least intrusive means by which effective monitoring of compliance with the Act can be effected. A taxpayer's expectation of privacy with regard to the documents in question vis-à-vis the Minister is relatively low. The taxpayer's privacy interest is protected as much as possible by s. 241 of the Act which forbids the disclosure of the taxpayer's records or the information contained therein to other persons or agencies. Therefore, the seizure contemplated by s. 231(3) is reasonable and does not infringe s. 8 of the Charter.
The standard of review of what is "reasonable" in a given context must be flexible if it is to be realistic and meaningful. It is consistent with this approach to draw a distinction between seizures in the criminal or quasi-criminal context to which the full rigours of the Hunter criteria will apply, and seizures in the administrative or regulatory context to which a lesser standard may apply depending upon the legislative scheme under review. In light of the regulatory nature of the legislation and the scheme enacted, it was evident in this case that the Hunter criteria were ill-suited to determine whether a seizure under s. 231(3) of the Act was reasonable.
Per La Forest J.: As in Thomson, the Income Tax Act, though supported by penal sanctions, including imprisonment, is essentially of an administrative nature. For the reasons I gave in Thomson and, subject to these reasons, for those given by Wilson J. in this appeal, s. 231(3) of the Act is reasonable and does not violate s. 8 of the Charter.
Per L'Heureux-Dubé J.: Subject to the reasons I gave in Thomson, s. 231(3) of the Income Tax Act does not violate s. 8 of the Charter. While a demand under s. 231(3) of the Act may be considered a seizure within the meaning of s. 8, such a seizure is reasonable.
Per Sopinka J.: For the reasons I gave in Thomson, neither the letters of demand herein nor s. 231(3) of the Income Tax Act violate s. 8 of the Charter. The letters of demand do not constitute a seizure and s. 231(3) does not authorize a seizure within the meaning of s. 8.
In Jean-Alain Bisaillon, Hypnat Ltée, Hypnat Ltée, Courtier, And Her Majesty The Queen And Minister Of National Revenue[71] the argument was put forward again when the CRA made a RFI to a bank that held a payable to a taxpayer who was being charged for alternate violations. It held:
[2] The motions judge properly came to the conclusion that in the action brought by the

[71] A-315-99

Digitized by Google

appellants there were no serious questions of law to be tried.

[3] In fact, McKinlay Transport Ltd., a judgment by the Supreme Court of Canada, applies in the case at bar and disposes of the constitutional arguments made by the appellants. In that case the Supreme Court concluded that:

- the Act is essentially a regulatory measure;
- s. 231(3) (the predecessor of s. 231.2(1)) is not criminal or quasi-criminal law;
- application of that subsection constitutes a seizure since it infringes the individual"s expectations of privacy;
- only unreasonable seizures contravene s. 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms;
- seizure in an administrative and regulatory context must be distinguished from seizure in a criminal or quasi-criminal situation;
- in a taxation system based on the principle of self-reporting and self-assessment, the Minister of National Revenue has to have broad powers to audit taxpayers' returns and inspect records which may have been used to prepare those returns;
- the Minister of National Revenue must be able to exercise these powers whether or not he has reasonable grounds to believe that a particular taxpayer has breached the Act;
- s. 231(3) provides the least intrusive means by which effective monitoring of compliance with the Act can be carried out; and
- the taxpayer's privacy interest with regard to documents which may be relevant in income tax returns is relatively low in relation to the Minister.

[4] In our opinion, it is not a serious argument for the appellants to say that a requirement to provide documents or information, like the one at bar, infringes the constitutional provisions of ss. 7 and 8 of the Charter when that requirement is made as part of a genuine administrative investigation for the purpose of recovering money owed and with a real objective of collecting information in that connection. Of course, it cannot be used as a stratagem for the covert purpose of obtaining information to be used in criminal proceedings.

[5] Having said that, the fact that the Minister has reasonable grounds to believe that an offence may have been committed or the fact that the information obtained pursuant to the ministerial requirement may eventually be used for other than the administrative or civil purpose for which it was initially requested does not have the effect of distorting the initial requirement or its purpose, transforming the administrative investigation into a criminal one and preventing the information requested from being obtained and used to ensure compliance with the Act at the civil and administrative level.

[9] Further, if as the appellants alleged and feared the Department's Investigations Branch were to see fit to use the said information in the criminal proceedings, the appellants charged might then assert their constitutional rights at the time the infringement was imminent and so oppose their use in that forum.[2] The mere possibility that wrongful use might be made of information obtained pursuant to an administrative investigating power exercised in accordance with the Act clearly cannot compromise the existence of that power or prevent or invalidate its exercise.

[10] Similarly, we consider that there is no merit in the appellants' argument that the requirement of information addressed to the Laurentian Bank of Canada is nothing but an illegal "fishing expedition". McKinlay Transport Ltd., supra, and Richardson v. Minister of National Revenue[72] recognized that it is often difficult for the Minister making a requirement for information or documents to know exactly what documents he is looking for, and so to describe them with great precision and an abundance of detail.

[72] [1984] 1 S.C.R. 614, at 625

Digitized by Google

…

[12] Finally, the requirement of information pursuant to s. 231.2(1) meets each of the criteria of validity laid down in Richardson:

- the Minister is acting for a legitimate purpose specified and authorized by the Act, namely the collection of a due and payable tax debt;
- the requirement of information relates to the tax liability of a person (Hypnat Ltée), that liability is under administrative investigation and the obtaining of information is necessary in general to ensure compliance with the Act, and in particular the collection of money owed to Revenue Canada;
- the person from whom the information is sought does not have to be the one whose liability to tax is under investigation; and
- the requirement is valid even though the giving of the information may disclose private transactions involving persons who are not under investigation and may not be liable to tax.

In Javed Ahmad, Naheed Surrya Ahmad, Tahira Parveen Chaudhry, Khush B.R. Chaudhry v. The Minister Of National Revenue the taxpayer attempted to argue the same and the Court held:

Section 7 and Right to Silence

[25] In the tax audit per se there is no suspect and no accused. The procedure is entirely administrative in nature.

[28] In the Tyler case[2], the Court prohibited the respondent Minister from communicating the signed statements obtained under paragraph 231.2(1)(a) to the RCMP. Here, the applicants have already provided those statements to the Minister. What they are objecting to is the production of supporting documents under paragraph 231.2(1)(b).

Section 8

[29] In the McKinlay case at page 649, the Supreme Court of Canada reviewed the constitutionality of subsection 231(3) of the Income Tax Act (now subsection 231.2(1) of the Income Tax Act) and concluded that even if a Requirement for Production of Documents is a "seizure" within the meaning of section 8 of the Charter, such "seizure" is reasonable and, hence, is not a violation of section 8;

In my opinion, s. 231(3) provides the least intrusive means by which effective monitoring of compliance with the Income Tax Act can be effected. It involves no invasion of a taxpayer's home or business premises. It simply calls for the production of records which may be relevant to the filing of an income tax return. A taxpayer's privacy interest with regard to these documents vis-à-vis the Minister is relatively low. The Minister has no way of knowing whether certain records are relevant until he has had an opportunity to examine them. At the same time, the taxpayer's privacy interest is protected as much as possible since s. 241 of the Act protects the taxpayer from disclosure of his records or the information contained therein to other persons or agencies.

Subsections 11(c) and (d), Section 13 and Right to Silence [30] The tax audit conducted by Revenue Canada is not an investigation in a criminal process; it is purely administrative in a civil context.

[31] The protection afforded by subsections 11(c) and (d) is a protection against testimonial compulsion of an accused and a protection against self-incrimination.

[32] Revenue Canada has collected little information at this point in its audit on the applicants' tax position and there is no evidence in the record that information was conveyed from Revenue Canada to the RCMP or any other person in relation to Javed Ahmad's and

Digitized by Google

Naheed Surrya Ahmad's criminal proceedings.
[33] Even though Javed Ahmad and Naheed Surrya Ahmad are facing criminal charges under the Narcotic Control Act, the production of the requested documents, pursuant to the Income Tax Act, does not deprive them of their constitutional rights under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.
[34] With respect to Tahira Parveen Chaudhry and Khush B.R. Chaudhry, they have not been charged with any criminal offences and, therefore, the protection afforded by the Charter under subsections 11(c) and
(d) does not apply to them in the course of a tax audit, which is purely administrative.
… CONCLUSION
[36] I find that the request for production under paragraph 231.2(1)(b) of the Income Tax Act is for a valid purpose and does not constitute an abuse of process.
[37] I also find that the request does not infringe the applicants' rights under sections 7, 8, 11(c), 11(d) and section 13 of the Charter or their right to silence.
[38] I further find that the applicants are not entitled to an order in the nature of mandamus compelling the Minister to immediately return all information and documents provided to date under paragraph 231.2(1)(a) of the Income Tax Act.

Jarvis/Ling and the Charter's Effect on RFI's use By SI Investigators

If there is one set of cases that have determined when a Sec 231.1(1)-(2) RFI can be used legitimately under the ITA and not offend the Charter it is the two cases of R. v. Jarvis and R. v. Ling[73] These two cases set the line where CRA prerogative in furthering tax evasion prosecution and the individuals' right to oppose self-incrimination meet.

R. v. Jarvis, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 757, 2002 SCC 73, The Case That 'Changed The World' on Self-Incrimination, Delineation between Auditor and SI Investigator and Evidence Collection

Warren James Jarvis Appellant
v.
Her Majesty The Queen Respondent
and
The Attorney General for Ontario, the Attorney General of Quebec and the Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario) Interveners
Indexed as: R. v. Jarvis
Neutral citation: 2002 SCC 73.
File No.: 28378.
2002: June 13; 2002: November 21.
Present: McLachlin C.J. and L'Heureux-Dubé, Gonthier, Iacobucci, Major, Bastarache, Binnie, Arbour and LeBel JJ.
on appeal from the court of appeal for alberta

Income tax — Administration and enforcement — Audits and investigations — Whether distinction can be drawn between audit and investigation under Income Tax Act —

[73] 2002 SCC 74, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 814

Digitized by Google

If so, circumstances in which tax official's inquiry constitutes penal investigation — Whether evidence obtained during audit pursuant to ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) of Income Tax Act can be used to further investigation or prosecution of offences under s. 239(1) of the Act without violating taxpayer's Charter rights — Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 7, 8 — Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.), ss. 231.1, 231.2.

Income tax — Administration and enforcement — Audits and investigations — Sections 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) of Income Tax Act available "for any purpose related to administration or enforcement" of Income Tax Act — Whether "enforcement" of Income Tax Act includes investigation and prosecution of offences under s. 239 of Act — Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.), ss. 231.1(1), 231.2(1), 239.

Constitutional law — Charter of Rights — Fundamental justice — Principle against self-incrimination — Extent to which taxpayer under investigation for offences under s. 239 of Income Tax Act benefits from principle against self-incrimination — Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, s. 7.

Constitutional law — Charter of Rights — Unreasonable search or seizure — Taxpayer under investigation for offences under s. 239 of Income Tax Act — Whether documents obtained under ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) of Income Tax Act after penal investigation has commenced violate taxpayer's right against unreasonable search or seizure — Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, s. 8 — Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.), ss. 231.1(1), 231.2(1).

Constitutional law — Charter of Rights — Exclusion of evidence — Tax evasion — Revenue Canada receiving information alleging that taxpayer had committed tax evasion — Statements and documents obtained during inquiry by tax auditor pursuant to ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) of Income Tax Act transferred to investigator — Investigator obtaining further information with requirement letters to various banks and search warrant — Taxpayer charged with tax evasion — Whether evidence against taxpayer obtained in violation of his rights under Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms — If so, whether evidence should be excluded — Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, s. 24(2).

Revenue Canada began an inquiry following a tip that the appellant taxpayer had not reported sales of his late wife's art in his tax returns for the 1990 and 1991 taxation years. In February 1994, the auditor sent letters to the taxpayer indicating that his file had been selected for audit and requesting certain books and records. The auditor visited art galleries and gathered enough information to determine that the tip had some validity. On March 16, she obtained further information by phone from the taxpayer and his accountant. On April 11, the auditor and her supervisor met the taxpayer to review his records. He was not cautioned. He answered questions, provided banking information, signed a bank authorization, and provided materials including records of sales and expenses related to the art. By late April, the auditor had obtained the additional records and information requested from the taxpayer and she concluded that he had grossly omitted revenues in the relevant returns. On May 4, the auditor referred her entire file to the Special Investigations Section of Revenue Canada, which began an investigation to determine whether prosecution for tax evasion was merited. Despite numerous requests concerning the status of the audit, the auditor deliberately did not inform the taxpayer that his file had been referred to the investigative section. After a review of the file, and on the basis of the books and records obtained from the taxpayer at the April 11 meeting, the investigator determined that reasonable and probable grounds existed to seek a search warrant to investigate for tax evasion. In November, a search warrant issued under the Criminal Code authorized the searches of a Revenue Canada's office and the respective residences of the taxpayer and his accountant. In early 1995, requirement letters issued to various banks under s. 231.2(1) of the Income Tax Act by the investigator provided additional information.

Digitized by Google

The taxpayer was charged with tax evasion under s. 239 of the Act. The trial judge held that the audit had effectively become an investigation as of March 16, 1994. Since the auditor failed to caution the taxpayer at the April 11 meeting, the statements and documents gathered at that meeting were obtained in violation of his rights under s. 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and reference to that information in the Information to Obtain A Search Warrant was removed. The trial judge concluded that what remained did not provide "reasonable grounds" for a search warrant and, as a result, the execution of the searches violated the taxpayer's s. 8 Charter rights. He also concluded that the banking records obtained by way of s. 231.2(1) in early 1995 violated the taxpayer's s. 8 rights. Pursuant to s. 24(2) of the Charter, the 1995 banking information and the evidence obtained at the April 11 meeting and through the searches were excluded. The trial judge granted a motion for a directed verdict of acquittal. The summary conviction appeal judge ordered a new trial, holding that only the taxpayer's statements during the April 11 meeting should have been excluded from the Information to Obtain and that the search warrant otherwise had been validly issued. The Court of Appeal dismissed a further appeal and affirmed the order for a new trial.

Held: The appeal should be dismissed.

Although the Income Tax Act relies upon self-assessment and self-reporting, the Minister of National Revenue has broad powers for the administration and enforcement of the Act. Under ss. 231.1 and 231.2, a person authorized by the Minister has the powers to: enter a taxpayer's place of business or place of record keeping; require the taxpayer and third parties to answer questions put to them; and require the taxpayer and third parties to furnish information and documents upon request. To ensure compliance with the self-reporting requirements of the Act, s. 239 creates offences which carry significant penalties, including incarceration. Section 239 bears the formal hallmarks of criminal legislation and, even though the Act is a regulatory statute, non-compliance with its mandatory provisions will in some cases lead to criminal charges. In prosecution thereof, the state is pitted against the individual in an attempt to establish culpability. To conduct an appropriately contextual Charter analysis, the various regulatory and penal considerations must all exert some influence.

The scope of Charter rights and freedoms will vary according to the circumstances. This case concerns both s. 7 and s. 8 of the Charter and the exclusion of evidence under s. 24(2) of the Charter from a trial for offences under s. 239. The taxpayer's liberty interest under s. 7 was engaged by the introduction at his trial of statutorily compelled information. In giving expression to the principle against self-incrimination, however, s. 7 does not envelop an abstract and absolute rule that prevents the use of statutorily compelled information in all contexts. A contextual analysis involves balancing the principle against self-incrimination with the principle that relevant evidence should be available to the trier of fact. The reasonable expectation of privacy guaranteed by s. 8 of the Charter also is context-specific. At some point, the public's interest in being left alone by government must give way to the government's interest in intruding on privacy to advance its goals. Generally, there is a diminished expectation of privacy in records produced during the ordinary course of regulated activities and there is a relatively low privacy interest in records relevant to a tax return.

A distinction can be drawn between the audit and investigative powers under the Income Tax Act. By their express terms, both ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) are available for any purpose related to the "administration" or "enforcement" of the Act. Although this wording seems broad, when read in context, these sections do not include the prosecution of s. 239 offences. In particular, the existence of a prior authorization procedure under s. 231.3(1) where an offence is suspected implies that the separate statutory inspection and requirement powers are unavailable for the purpose of prosecutorial investigations. A warrant under s. 231.3 of the Act covers generally the same ground as does the Criminal Code's s. 487 warrant. When a tax official exercises his or her investigative function, the parties are in an adversarial relationship because of the liberty interest that is at stake. It follows that there must be some measure of separation between the audit and investigative functions.

Digitized by Google

Where the predominant purpose of an inquiry is the determination of penal liability, there exists an adversarial relationship between the taxpayer and the state. To determine whether the predominant purpose of an inquiry is the determination of penal liability, one must look to all factors that bear upon the nature of the inquiry. Apart from a clear decision to pursue a criminal investigation, no one factor is determinative. Even where reasonable grounds to suspect an offence exist, it will not always be true that the predominant purpose of an inquiry is the determination of penal liability. The following factors assist in ascertaining whether an inquiry's purpose is to investigate penal liability: (a) Did authorities have reasonable grounds to lay charges or could a decision have been made to proceed with a criminal investigation? (b) Was the general conduct of the authorities consistent with a criminal investigation? (c) Did the auditor transfer his or her file to the investigators? (d) Was the auditor's conduct such that he or she was acting as an agent for the investigators? (e) Does it appear that the investigators intended to use the auditor as their agent? (f) Is the evidence relevant to taxpayer liability generally or only to penal liability? and, (g) Do other circumstances or factors suggest that an audit became a criminal investigation?

Wherever the predominant purpose of an inquiry or question is the determination of penal liability, all Charter protections that are relevant in the criminal context must apply. When this is the case, investigators must provide the taxpayer with a proper warning. With respect to s. 7 of the Charter, the constitutional protections against self-incrimination prohibit tax officials who are investigating the offences from having recourse to the inspection and requirement powers under ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1). Rather, tax officials who exercise the authority to conduct such investigations must seek search warrants under s. 231.3 of the Act or s. 487 of the Criminal Code in furtherance of their investigation. With respect to s. 8 of the Charter, taxpayers have very little privacy interest in materials they are obliged to keep under the Act or to produce during an audit. Once an auditor has inspected or required a document under ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1), the taxpayer cannot be said to have a reasonable expectation that the auditor will guard its confidentiality. As a consequence, there is no general rule that prevents auditors from passing files containing validly obtained audit materials to investigators. Nor is there any reason that the CCRA cannot conduct parallel administrative audits and criminal investigations. However, if the CCRA simultaneously conducts an administrative audit and criminal investigation, investigators can avail themselves only of that information obtained pursuant to the audit powers prior to the commencement of the criminal investigation. They cannot avail themselves of information obtained pursuant to such powers subsequent to the commencement of the investigation into penal liability.

Whether an inquiry is in furtherance of an audit or a penal investigation is a question of mixed fact and law and is not immune from appellate review. The record in this case does not support a finding that the auditor used her misleading tactics to obtain information from the taxpayer or his accountant under ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) for the predominant purpose of determining the taxpayer's penal liability under s. 239. There was no investigation into penal liability prior to May 4, 1994. Accordingly, the material that the trial judge excluded from the Information to Obtain A Search Warrant owing to a Charter violation was in fact validly gathered pursuant to the auditor's inspection and requirement powers. Since the searches were made pursuant to a valid warrant, the evidence obtained during these searches should be admissible in a new trial. The usage of the banking information obtained by the investigator pursuant to s. 231.2(1) requirement letters in early 1995, after the investigation was underway, violated the taxpayer's s. 7 rights and should be excluded.

Digitized by Google

Cases Cited

Referred to: British Columbia Securities Commission v. Branch, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 3; R. v. Norway Insulation Inc. (1995), 23 O.R. (3d) 432, aff'g [1995] 2 C.T.C. 451; R. v. Araujo, [2000] 2 S.C.R. 992, 2000 SCC 65; Del Zotto v. Canada, [1997] 3 F.C. 40, rev'd [1999] 1 S.C.R. 3; R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627; Thomson Newspapers Ltd. v. Canada (Director of Investigation and Research, Restrictive Trade Practices Commission), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 425; Knox Contracting Ltd. v. Canada, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 338; 143471 Canada Inc. v. Quebec (Attorney General), [1994] 2 S.C.R. 339; R. v. Hydro-Québec, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 213; Smerchanski v. M.N.R., [1977] 2 S.C.R. 23; R. v. Wholesale Travel Group Inc., [1991] 3 S.C.R. 154; Comité paritaire de l'industrie de la chemise v. Potash, [1994] 2 S.C.R. 406; R. v. Grimwood, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 755; R. v. Ling, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 814, 2002 SCC 74; Re Ramm, [1958] O.R. 98; Hunter v. Southam Inc., [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145; General Motors of Canada Ltd. v. City National Leasing, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 641; R. v. Nova Scotia Pharmaceutical Society, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 606; Baron v. Canada, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 416; Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326; Symes v. Canada, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 695; R. v. Lyons, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 309; Canadian Broadcasting Corp. v. New Brunswick (Attorney General), [1991] 3 S.C.R. 459; Re B.C. Motor Vehicle Act, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 486; Reference re ss. 193 and 195.1(1)(c) of the Criminal Code (Man.), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1123; R. v. S. (R.J.), [1995] 1 S.C.R. 451; R. v. P. (M.B.), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 555; R. v. Jones, [1994] 2 S.C.R. 229; R. v. Fitzpatrick, [1995] 4 S.C.R. 154; R. v. White, [1999] 2 S.C.R. 417; R. v. Plant, [1993] 3 S.C.R. 281; Smith v. Canada (Attorney General), [2001] 3 S.C.R. 902, 2001 SCC 88; Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership v. Rex, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 559, 2002 SCC 42; Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27; R. v. Gladue, [1999] 1 S.C.R. 688; Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Canada (Attorney General), [1962] S.C.R. 729; James Richardson & Sons, Ltd. v. M.N.R., [1984] 1 S.C.R. 614; R. v. Multiform Manufacturing Co., [1990] 2 S.C.R. 624; R. v. Bjellebo, [1999] O.J. No. 965 (QL); R. v. Pheasant, [2001] G.S.T.C. 8; R. v. Chusid (2001), 57 O.R. (3d) 20; R. v. Roberts, [1998] B.C.J. No. 3184 (QL); R. v. Dial Drug Stores Ltd. (2001), 52 O.R. (3d) 367; Samson v. Canada, [1995] 3 F.C. 306, leave to appeal refused, [1996] 1 S.C.R. ix (sub nom. Samson v. Addy); R. v. Yip (2000), 278 A.R. 124, 2000 ABQB 873; R. v. Anderson (2001), 209 Sask. R. 117, 2001 SKQB 334; R. v. Seaside Chevrolet Oldsmobile Ltd. (2002), 248 N.B.R. (2d) 132, 2002 NBPC 5; R. v. Warawa (1997), 208 A.R. 81; R. v. Coghlan, [1994] 1 C.T.C. 164; Gorenko v. La Reine, [1997] R.J.Q. 2482, aff'd [1999] Q.J. No. 6268 (QL); Roncarelli v. Duplessis, [1959] S.C.R. 121; Babcock v. Canada (Attorney General), [2002] 3 S.C.R. 3, 2002 SCC 57; Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Southam Inc., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 748.

Digitized by Google

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Act to amend the Income War Tax Act, S.C. 1944, c. 43, s. 11.
Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916, S.C. 1916, c. 11.
Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 7, 8, 24.
Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, s. 487.
Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.), ss. 2, 150(1), 151, 152(1), (4), 162, 163, 230(1), 231.1 [am. 1994, c. 21, s. 107], 231.2, 231.3 [idem, s. 108], 238(1), 239(1), (2), 241 [am. 1994, c. 7, Sched. VIII, s. 137(1)].
Income War Tax Act, 1917, S.C. 1917, c. 28, s. 8.
Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, s. 12.

Authors Cited

Driedger, Elmer A. Construction of Statutes, 2nd ed. Toronto: Butterworths, 1983.
Krishna, Vern. The Fundamentals of Canadian Income Tax, 6th ed. Scarborough, Ont.: Carswell, 2000.
Oxford English Reference Dictionary, 2nd ed. Edited by Judy Pearsall and Bill Trumble. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1996, "enforce".

APPEAL from a judgment of the Alberta Court of Appeal (2000), 149 C.C.C. (3d) 498, 271 A.R. 263, 234 W.A.C. 263, 87 Alta. L.R. (3d) 52, 193 D.L.R. (4th) 656, [2001] 3 W.W.R. 271, [2000] A.J. No. 1347 (QL), 2000 ABCA 304, affirming a judgment of Lutz J. (1998), 225 A.R. 225, 63 Alta. L.R. (3d) 236, 98 D.T.C. 6308, [1999] 3 W.W.R. 393, [1998] 3 C.T.C. 252, [1998] A.J. No. 651 (QL), allowing the Crown's appeal from a judgment of the Provincial Court acquitting a taxpayer of tax offences and ordering a new trial. Appeal dismissed.

Alan D. Macleod, Q.C., and Wendy K. McCallum, for the appellant.

S. David Frankel, Q.C., Bruce Harper and Janet Henchey, for the respondent.

Trevor Shaw, for the intervener the Attorney General for Ontario.

Gilles Laporte and Monique Rousseau, for the intervener the Attorney General of Quebec.

Scott K. Fenton, for the intervener the Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario).

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

1 IACOBUCCI AND MAJOR JJ. -- Is there a distinction between the Canada Customs and Revenue Agency's ("CCRA") audit and investigative functions under the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.) ("ITA")? If it is indeed correct to draw such a distinction, when does the CCRA exercise its audit function and when does it exercise its investigative function? Finally, what are the legal consequences for the taxpayer when the CCRA exercises its investigative function?

2 Ultimately, we conclude that compliance audits and tax evasion investigations must be treated differently. While taxpayers are statutorily bound to co-operate with CCRA auditors for tax assessment purposes (which may result in the application of regulatory penalties), there is an adversarial relationship that crystallizes between the taxpayer and the tax officials when the predominant purpose of an official's inquiry is the determination of penal liability. When the officials exercise this authority, constitutional protections against self-incrimination prohibit CCRA officials who are investigating ITA offences from having recourse to the powerful inspection and requirement tools in ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1). Rather, CCRA officials who exercise the authority to conduct such investigations must seek search warrants in furtherance of their investigation.

3 Here, the material that the trial judge excluded from the Information to Obtain A Search Warrant owing to a Charter violation was in fact validly gathered pursuant to the auditor's inspection and requirement powers. Accordingly, the searches ultimately carried out were authorized by warrant, and no s. 8 violation occurred. Therefore, we would dismiss the appeal and confirm the Court of Appeal of Alberta's order of a new trial.

Digitized by Google

I. Factual Background

4 The appellant, Warren Jarvis, is a farmer in Alberta. His wife, Georgia Jarvis, was, until the time of her death, an artist earning income from the sale of her works. Mrs. Jarvis reported this income on her annual individual tax returns.

5 Mrs. Jarvis died on October 22, 1990. A few of her original works and a number of limited edition prints remained unsold at the time; as well, it appears that the appellant may also have had some additional prints created subsequent to his wife's death. The appellant was therefore able to continue the sale of his late wife's art, which he did. In 1992, as art sales began to dissipate, the appellant, in an apparent attempt to put the past behind him, moved into a rural log cabin, roughly 80 kilometres north-west of Calgary.

6 Early in 1994, an anonymous informant addressed a typewritten letter ("the lead") to the Chief of Audit in the Calgary District Taxation Office of what was then Revenue Canada. For reasons of confidentiality, the lead is not in evidence in this case. We do know, however, that the lead alleged that the appellant had failed to report substantial income related to the 1990 and 1991 taxation years. Furthermore, the lead listed six Calgary art galleries that had purchased Mrs. Jarvis's art work from the appellant.

7 Although internal departmental policies identified all tax leads from informants as being the responsibility of the Special Investigations Section, the lead was in fact referred to the Business Audit Section. There, it was assigned to Donna Goy-Edwards, an experienced business auditor. Goy-Edwards took sole control over the file, reporting to her supervisor, John Moriarty.

8 On February 16, 1994, Goy-Edwards prepared an "Audit Plan," consisting of three separate tasks:

1) Clear lead.

2) Review disposition of all assets at date of death in Oct/90. Review all tax consequences.

3) Audit accordingly.

Not all leads received by the CCRA are substantiated; hence, "clearing" a lead refers to a process whereby the auditor reviews source documents for the purpose of determining the validity of the allegations contained in the lead. To this end, Goy-Edwards attempted on February 16 and 17 by telephone to reach the appellant and the accountant, Tom Burke, who had prepared the 1990 and 1991 tax returns. She was unable to reach either, but left two voice messages on the appellant's telephone answering machine.

9 Goy-Edwards then sent two letters to the appellant on February 17. The letters were addressed simply "General Delivery, Cremona, Alberta". One letter dealt with the appellant in his capacity as executor of his wife's estate, indicating that "[t]he file of the Late Georgia Jarvis has been selected for audit for the [1990] taxation year" and that "this letter will serve as a formal notice of the audit in progress". The other letter concerned the appellant in his personal capacity, and specified that his file had "been selected for audit for the taxation years 1990 & 1991", adding again that the letter constituted formal notice of the audit. In each instance, the appellant was requested to make available certain enumerated books and records. Finally, the letters stated that the respective files would be held in abeyance for a 15-day period to allow the appellant "an opportunity to contact the writer and make arrangements to have the books and records made available for the audit".

Digitized by Google

10 On March 7, 1994, shortly after the 15-day period elapsed without word from the appellant, Goy-Edwards commenced contact with third-party sources. She researched departmental library services for written information on Mrs. Jarvis's art work, to obtain facts about her works and discover where they were being displayed. Through these efforts, she was able to locate three additional galleries, not listed in the lead, that had purchased art from the appellant. Goy-Edwards then personally contacted or visited all nine galleries. She identified herself as a Revenue Canada employee and requested that she be granted access to certain of their books and records pertaining to art sales.

11 Between March 7 and 16, Goy-Edwards was able to obtain information from each of the galleries regarding the sale of Mrs. Jarvis's works. From the particulars contained in purchase invoices and cancelled cheques, the auditor determined that the appellant had grossed $358,409 from sales to the nine galleries between October 23 and December 31, 1990. For the 1991 calendar year, the figure was $221,366. Endorsements found on the reverse side of the cheques also disclosed information regarding the appellant's banking arrangements. Independently, Goy-Edwards calculated that, for sales accruing to Mrs. Jarvis from January 1, 1990 until her death, the cost of sales was 29.5 percent of gross. Based on all of this information, along with the appellant's tax returns for the 1990 and 1991 taxation years, Goy-Edwards determined that the lead had some validity.

12 Twice on March 8, the appellant attempted to reach Goy-Edwards by telephone, leaving messages that he had called. These calls were not immediately returned. On March 16, Jarvis's accountant, Burke, telephoned Goy-Edwards, who explained the audits that she was conducting, advised of the taxation years concerned, and made some enquiries as to the appellant's financial affairs. Burke informed the auditor that the file was likely to be in disarray, owing to the appellant's poor record-keeping skills and the general apathy towards financial and taxation matters that the appellant had exhibited since Mrs. Jarvis's death; in fact, Burke had seen no source documents, since the appellant was in the habit of providing only summaries of his income.

13 Burke explained that, for taxation purposes, after Mrs. Jarvis's death the income accruing from the sale of her art, net of expenses, was reported as part of the appellant's farming income. According to the accountant, the appellant netted somewhere in the vicinity of $58,000 for art sold in the 1990 taxation year, and precisely $43,061.79 for 1991. Goy-Edwards requested that Burke submit copies of the income summaries that the appellant had provided him. Burke replied that he would first have to speak to the appellant and obtain his authorization to release the information.

14 Later the same afternoon, Burke called back to advise Goy-Edwards that he had spoken to the appellant, and to pass on instructions for Goy-Edwards personally to call the appellant concerning the audit. The auditor immediately telephoned the appellant, confirmed that the latter was to gather the documentation requested in the February 17 letters, and made arrangements to meet at the appellant's farm on April 11, 1994 to "commence a review of the books and records". The record indicates that the parties might have chosen this date in order to provide the appellant with sufficient time to amass the documentation, since many of his belongings were still packed up from his move.

15 Goy-Edwards made no mention of the fact that she had already contacted third party sources. In response to one of her questions, however, the appellant confirmed the $58,000 figure relative to 1990 net art sales income. Finally, Goy-Edwards advised the appellant that she would be accompanied by an assistant during the audit. The appellant stated that he would not have any difficulties with this.

16 On April 11, Goy-Edwards was in fact accompanied to the appellant's residence by her supervisor, Moriarty, whom she introduced on this occasion as her "team leader". The judge at first instance expressly disbelieved Goy-Edwards' explanation that Moriarty came along to provide navigational assistance because of her lack of familiarity with the area in which the appellant lived. The supervisor was present in an observational role.

Digitized by Google

17 During the interview, Moriarty did not actively take notes. Moreover, Goy-Edwards took the lead in all discussions, with Moriarty interjecting only occasionally to obtain clarification.

18 The appellant was not cautioned as to his rights. He answered all of the auditor's questions, which dealt primarily with the art sales but which also touched upon his farming operations. The appellant stated that all information pertaining to art sales was contained in the contracts and receipt books he kept. He provided information about his banking arrangements, and indicated that he would take steps to access the records pertaining thereto. In addition, the appellant signed a bank authorization for an account held with the Bank of Montreal, the existence of which he had not disclosed until Goy-Edwards posed a question about it: the auditor knew of the account from her third-party source investigations. She agreed to hold the authorization in abeyance for a short while in order to give the appellant the opportunity personally to obtain the documentation.

19 Goy-Edwards enquired into the inventory of originals and prints at the date of Mrs. Jarvis's death, as well as the appellant's role in selling the art. Her purpose with these lines of questioning was to compare the responses given by the appellant to the information that she had previously obtained from the departmental library. Finally, the appellant provided the auditor with art sale-related materials, including the two receipt books tracking sales and a number of other receipts documenting expenses. Goy-Edwards removed these books and records for later examination.

20 A few days after the interview, on April 15, Burke telephoned Goy-Edwards for an updated report on the state of the file. Goy-Edwards briefed the accountant as to the April 11 meeting, and stated that she would keep him apprised of the audit's progress.

21 In late April 1994, Goy-Edwards obtained many of the records and much of the information requested from the appellant. Subsequently, she performed various calculations to determine whether all the income related to the art sales had been properly reported. As a result of these calculations, Goy-Edwards noted a discrepancy of approximately $700,000 between the appellant's earned and reported income over the two taxation years in question. On this basis, the auditor concluded that the appellant had grossly omitted revenues, suggesting that fraud was a possibility, and that further action was warranted.

22 Therefore, rather than completing the audit, on May 4, 1994, Goy-Edwards prepared a "Form T134" to refer the matter -- along with her entire file, which contained records of all contacts, conversations, and calculations made in respect of the matter -- to the Special Investigations Section of Revenue Canada. This latter division was charged in the present case with determining whether further investigation with a view to possible prosecution for tax evasion was merited. The record indicates that, in general, not every referral from the Business Audit Section necessarily results in charges being laid, and that files are on occasion returned to the Business Audit Section after Special Investigations makes a decision not to proceed with a criminal investigation.

23 Goy-Edwards did not attempt to contact the appellant or Burke to advise them that the file was no longer under her control. Two days later, on May 6, the appellant's son Jim left a telephone message with the auditor, indicating that he would be sending the requested Bank of Montreal statements on the following Monday. The statements were in fact delivered on that date, and were passed on to Special Investigations. Again, the appellant, his son and his accountant were not notified that the appellant's file had been referred to the investigative section.

Digitized by Google

24 Inside Special Investigations, the appellant's file was assigned to investigator Diane Chang. Chang met with Goy-Edwards for one to two hours towards the end of May 1994 in order to discuss the file. At some point shortly thereafter, Chang had to contact Goy-Edwards again in order to clarify certain of the notations contained in the auditor's file. There may have been one or two conversations of this nature, but there is nothing in the record that would suggest that Chang, or any other investigator, ever instructed or requested Goy-Edwards, under the guise of an audit, to obtain further information from or about the appellant.

25 The investigator then reviewed Goy-Edwards's files, performed her own calculations and analyses, and gathered some information from other internal sources in order to determine if there were reasonable and probable grounds to obtain a search warrant to further an investigation into tax evasion. In June 1994, Chang determined that such reasonable and probable grounds did exist, and began preparing an Information to Obtain A Search Warrant. For the next several months, Chang worked on the Information to Obtain and sought approval from her supervisors in Special Investigations to attend before an issuing justice. Departmental approval was not granted until November 1994, despite the fact that very little new information was received in the intervening period.

26 Meanwhile, Burke had been attempting to reach Goy-Edwards to obtain updates on the audit. As a consequence, Goy-Edwards contacted Chang. Goy-Edwards asked what an appropriate response would be. Chang told the auditor "to stall": she did not want the appellant to discover that his file had been referred to Special Investigation. Contrary to departmental policy, which specifies that all contacts about a file should be recorded on "Forms T2020", Chang did not record this conversation with Goy-Edwards.

27 On September 8, Burke again phoned Goy-Edwards to inquire about the file. She told him that she had been unable to make progress with the audit because of an injury; Goy-Edwards later testified that, shortly before that time, she had tumbled hard off of her bicycle, sustaining injuries to her head, torso, and legs. Goy-Edwards did not mention to Burke that she had referred the file to Special Investigations back in May. Burke left the appellant a message on the same day, keeping him abreast of what news the auditor had provided.

28 Burke left another message for Goy-Edwards on October 21, 1994, while the auditor was out of her office. Upon returning at the beginning of November, Goy-Edwards informed Moriarty that Burke had called. Moriarty, in turn, spoke to the Chief of the Special Investigations Section early on November 2 about how best to handle the issue. They determined, based on departmental policy, that if Goy-Edwards was asked about the file, she would have to "inform the [taxpayer] that the issue has been referred" to Special Investigations.

29 Also on November 2, and very shortly after this discussion, Goy-Edwards returned Burke's call. The auditor left a message with the accountant's wife to the effect that she had been out of town and that she "ha[d] nothing to report on the file". In addition, Goy-Edwards asked that Burke be informed that "the file has been in a holding pattern due to other work demands including other projects"; the auditor later acknowledged that it was a mistake to use these terms to describe the status of the file.

30 Goy-Edwards recorded the details of the November 2 call on a Form

Digitized by Google

T2020, which she then delivered to Chang. Concerned about the message Goy-Edwards had left for Burke, and troubled by the fact that she had personally given Goy-Edwards the instructions to stall, Chang approached her section manager.

31 Chang, the section manager, and the Chief of Special Investigations all met on November 3 to discuss the policy regarding disclosure to the appellant. Departmental policy was confirmed to be that, if Goy-Edwards or any other Revenue Canada official were asked anything about the appellant's file, that person should explain that the file was in Special Investigations. All parties were aware of the message that Goy-Edwards had left for Burke on the previous day, and the section manager and the chief expressed bewilderment as to why the auditor had spoken as she did. Still, subsequent to this meeting, no remedial steps were taken to advise either Burke or the appellant of the file's transfer.

32 On November 23, 1994, Chang swore the Information to Obtain before Fradsham Prov. Ct. J. in Calgary. Chang based her grounds for belief that the appellant had committed offences, in part, upon analyses that she had conducted from the books and records that the appellant had provided to Goy-Edwards at the April 11 meeting.

33 A warrant was issued under s. 487 of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, authorizing searches of the appellant's residence, Burke's residence (place of business), and the Calgary office of Revenue Canada (in order to seize the books and records that Goy-Edwards had borrowed from the appellant during the April 11 meeting). The warrant was executed at all three locations on November 29. The fruit of the searches ultimately served as a substantial portion of the respondent Crown's evidence at the appellant's trial.

34 In early 1995, Chang drew up requirement letters pursuant to s. 231.2(1) of the ITA. These were issued to the appellant's various banking institutions, which complied with the requirements and provided Chang with the documentation which she sought.

35 The appellant was brought to trial on three counts of making false or deceptive statements in an income tax return (s. 239(1)(a) of the ITA) and two counts of wilfully evading or attempting to evade payment of taxes (s. 239(1)(d) of the ITA). The respondent sought to tender documents seized pursuant to the warrant. The appellant objected, and two separate voir dires were held to determine the admissibility of the documents.

36 Coincidentally, the issuing justice, Judge Fradsham, was also the trial judge. He felt that the audit had effectively become an investigation as of March 16, 1994, and excluded all information obtained by ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) from that day forward: (1997), 195 A.R. 251 (Prov. Ct.) and (1997), 204 A.R. 123 (Prov. Ct.). Judge Fradsham granted the appellant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal on August 7, 1997. The respondent's appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta was successful, and a new trial was ordered: (1998), 225 A.R. 225. The Court of Appeal of Alberta dismissed a further appeal, and affirmed the summary conviction appeal judge's order for a new trial: (2000), 271 A.R. 263. The appellant was granted leave to appeal to this Court on May 17, 2001: [2001] 1 S.C.R. xii.

II. Relevant Statutory and Constitutional Provisions

37 Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.)

> 231.1 (1) An authorized person may, at all reasonable times, for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement of this Act,
>
> (a) inspect, audit or examine the books and records of a taxpayer and any document of the taxpayer or of any other person that relates or may relate to

Digitized by Google

the information that is or should be in the books or records of the taxpayer or to any amount payable by the taxpayer under this Act, and

(b) examine property in an inventory of a taxpayer and any property or process of, or matter relating to, the taxpayer or any other person, an examination of which may assist the authorized person in determining the accuracy of the inventory of the taxpayer or in ascertaining the information that is or should be in the books or records of the taxpayer or any amount payable by the taxpayer under this Act,

and for those purposes the authorized person may

(c) subject to subsection (2), enter into any premises or place where any business is carried on, any property is kept, anything is done in connection with any business or any books or records are or should be kept, and

(d) require the owner or manager of the property or business and any other person on the premises or place to give the authorized person all reasonable assistance and to answer all proper questions relating to the administration or enforcement of this Act and, for that purpose, require the owner or manager to attend at the premises or place with the authorized person.

(2) Where any premises or place referred to in paragraph (1)(c) is a dwelling-house, an authorized person may not enter that dwelling-house without the consent of the occupant except under the authority of a warrant under subsection (3).

(3) Where, on ex parte application by the Minister, a judge is satisfied by information on oath that

(a) there are reasonable grounds to believe that a dwelling-house is a premises or place referred to in paragraph (1)(c),

(b) entry into the dwelling-house is necessary for any purpose relating to the administration or enforcement of this Act, and

(c) entry into the dwelling-house has been, or there are reasonable grounds to believe that entry will be, refused,

the judge may issue a warrant authorizing an authorized person to enter the dwelling-house subject to such conditions as are specified in the warrant but, where the judge is not satisfied that entry into the dwelling-house is necessary for any purpose relating to the administration or enforcement of this Act, the judge may

(d) order the occupant of the dwelling-house to provide to an authorized person reasonable access to any document or property that is or should be kept in the dwelling-house, and to the extent that access was or may be expected to be refused and that the document or property is or may be expected to be kept in the dwelling-house.

(e) make such other order as is appropriate in the circumstances to carry out the purposes of this Act,

231.2 (1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Minister may, subject to subsection (2), for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement of this Act, by notice served personally or by registered or certified mail, require that any person provide, within such reasonable time as is stipulated in the notice,

(a) any information or additional information, including a return of income or a supplementary return; or

(b) any document.

Digitized by Google

. . .

231.3 (1) A judge may, on ex parte application by the Minister, issue a warrant in writing authorizing any person named therein to enter and search any building, receptacle or place for any document or thing that may afford evidence as to the commission of an offence under this Act and to seize the document or thing and, as soon as practicable, bring it before, or make a report in respect of it to, the judge or, where the judge is unable to act, another judge of the same court to be dealt with by the judge in accordance with this section.

(2) An application under subsection (1) shall be supported by information on oath establishing the facts on which the application is based.

(3) A judge may issue the warrant referred to in subsection (1) where the judge is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that

(a) an offence under this Act was committed;

(b) a document or thing that may afford evidence of the commission of the offence is likely to be found; and

(c) the building, receptacle or place specified in the application is likely to contain such a document or thing.

(4) A warrant issued under subsection (1) shall refer to the offence for which it is issued, identify the building, receptacle or place to be searched and the person alleged to have committed the offence and it shall be reasonably specific as to any document or thing to be searched for and seized.

(5) Any person who executes a warrant under subsection (1) may seize, in addition to the document or thing referred to in that subsection, any other document or thing that the person believes on reasonable grounds affords evidence of the commission of an offence under this Act and shall as soon as practicable bring the document or thing before, or make a report in respect thereof to, the judge who issued the warrant or, where the judge is unable to act, another judge of the same court to be dealt with by the judge in accordance with this section.

(6) Subject to subsection (7), where any document or thing seized under subsection (1) or (5) is brought before a judge or a report in respect thereof is made to a judge, the judge shall, unless the Minister waives retention, order that it be retained by the Minister, who shall take reasonable care to ensure that it is preserved until the conclusion of any investigation into the offence in relation to which the document or thing was seized or until it is required to be produced for the purposes of a criminal proceeding.

(7) Where any document or thing seized under subsection (1) or (5) is brought before a judge or a report in respect thereof is made to a judge, the judge may, of the judge's own motion or on summary application by a person with an interest in the document or thing on three clear days notice of application to the Deputy Attorney General of Canada, order that the document or thing be returned to the person from whom it was seized or the person who is otherwise legally entitled thereto if the judge is satisfied that the document or thing

(a) will not be required for an investigation or a criminal proceeding; or

(b) was not seized in accordance with the warrant or this section.

(8) The person from whom any document or thing is seized pursuant to this section is entitled, at all reasonable times and subject to such reasonable conditions as may be imposed by the Minister, to inspect the document or thing and to obtain one copy of the document at the expense of the Minister.

Digitized by Google

239. (1) Every person who has

(a) made, or participated in, assented to or acquiesced in the making of, false or deceptive statements in a return, certificate, statement or answer filed or made as required by or under this Act or a regulation,

(b) to evade payment of a tax imposed by this Act, destroyed, altered, mutilated, secreted or otherwise disposed of the records or books of account of a taxpayer,

(c) made, or assented to or acquiesced in the making of, false or deceptive entries, or omitted, or assented to or acquiesced in the omission, to enter a material particular, in records or books of account of a taxpayer,

(d) wilfully, in any manner, evaded or attempted to evade compliance with this Act or payment of taxes imposed by this Act, or

(e) conspired with any person to commit an offence described in paragraphs (a) to (d), is guilty of an offence and, in addition to any penalty otherwise provided, is liable on summary conviction to

(f) a fine of not less than 50%, and not more than 200%, of the amount of the tax that was sought to be evaded, or

(g) both the fine described in paragraph (f) and imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years.

(2) Every person who is charged with an offence described in subsection (1) may, at the election of the Attorney General of Canada, be prosecuted on indictment and, if convicted, is, in addition to any penalty otherwise provided, liable to

(a) a fine of not less than 100%, and not more than 200%, of the amount of the tax that was sought to be evaded; and

(b) imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years.

. . .

241. (1) Except as authorized by this section, no official shall

(a) knowingly provide, or knowingly allow to be provided, to any person any taxpayer information;

(b) knowingly allow any person to have access to any taxpayer information; or

(c) knowingly use any taxpayer information otherwise than in the course of the administration or enforcement of this Act, the Canada Pension Plan or the Unemployment Insurance Act or for the purpose for which it was provided under this section.

(2) Notwithstanding any other Act of Parliament or other law, no official shall be required, in connection with any legal proceedings, to give or produce evidence relating to any taxpayer information.

(3) Subsections (1) and (2) do not apply in respect of

(a) criminal proceedings, either by indictment or on summary conviction, that have been commenced by the laying of an information or the preferring of an indictment, under an Act of Parliament; or

(b) any legal proceedings relating to the administration or enforcement of this Act, the Canada Pension Plan or the Unemployment Insurance Act or any other Act of Parliament or law of a province that provides for the imposition or collection of a tax or duty.

Digitized by Google

. . .

(4) An official may

(a) provide to any person taxpayer information that can reasonably be regarded as necessary for the purposes of the administration or enforcement of this Act, the Canada Pension Plan or the Unemployment Insurance Act, solely for that purpose;

(b) provide to any person taxpayer information that can reasonably be regarded as necessary for the purposes of determining any tax, interest, penalty or other amount that is or may become payable by the person, or any refund or tax credit to which the person is or may become entitled, under this Act or any other amount that is relevant for the purposes of that determination;

. . .

(5) An official may provide taxpayer information relating to a taxpayer

(a) to the taxpayer; and

(b) with the consent of the taxpayer, to any other person.

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms

7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

8. Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.

24. (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

III. Judicial History

A. Provincial Court of Alberta -- Criminal Division (1997), 195 A.R. 251 (First voir dire)

38 Judge Fradsham's extensive reasons were issued on February 25, 1997. Applying the "predominant purpose" test enunciated in British Columbia Securities Commission v. Branch, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 3, he concluded at para. 50 that, during the April 11 meeting, Goy-Edwards was "seeking out confirmatory proof of her opinion that this was a matter of serious underreporting of income which should be prosecutorily [sic] pursued by Special Investigations". In his view, she was conducting an investigation, and not a mere audit.

39 Following R. v. Norway Insulation Inc. (1995), 23 O.R. (3d) 432 (Gen. Div.), Judge Fradsham held that s. 8 of the Charter precludes the use of s. 231.1(1) powers to further an investigation, in contradistinction to an audit. When an investigation of s. 239 offences is underway, the taxpayer who is the object of the investigation is entitled to exercise his or her right to silence. In this case, the appellant had been told that an audit was underway, and Judge Fradsham therefore took him to have been labouring under the presumption that he was obliged to co-operate. The failure to caution the appellant on that occasion violated his rights under s. 7 of the Charter. The statements and documents obtained at the meeting were therefore "tainted", and reference to them in the Information to Obtain had to be removed. Judge Fradsham also excised certain paragraphs from the Information to Obtain on the basis of the fact that they were erroneous. What remained, in Judge Fradsham's opinion, did not provide "reasonable grounds to believe that in the place sought to be searched there are things that will afford evidence of the commission of an offence" (para. 106). As a result, the execution of the search and seizure violated the appellant's s. 8 Charter rights. Judge Fradsham excluded the evidence under s. 24(2) of the Charter.

Digitized by Google

B. Provincial Court of Alberta -- Criminal Division (1997), 204 A.R. 123 (Second voir dire)

40 A second voir dire was held in June 1997, to determine the admissibility of the banking records obtained by the requirement letters. On this occasion, Judge Fradsham held that the audit had effectively become an investigation as of March 16, 1994, since by that date, "Ms. Goy-Edwards had already arranged for her supervisor to attend the April 11 meeting" (para. 5). In his view, Revenue Canada was unable to rely upon its "audit tools" from that day forward. Judge Fradsham found that all banking information obtained by way of s. 231.2(1) after March 16 should be excluded pursuant to s. 24(2) of the Charter.

C. Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta (1998), 225 A.R. 225

41 Subsequent to Judge Fradsham's granting a directed verdict of acquittal, the respondent sought to appeal this ruling, along with the earlier evidentiary rulings, to the Court of Queen's Bench. In an oral judgment, the summary conviction appeal judge held that only the appellant's utterances from the April 11 meeting should have been excluded from the Information to Obtain. Lutz J. found, at para.12, that the other evidence (i.e., the banking documents, sales books, etc.), was "to a great extent already in the possession of the [respondent]." Excising the tainted allegations from the Information to Obtain, he found that the search warrant was still validly issued; therefore, no s. 8 breach occurred.

42 Lutz J. did, however, uphold Judge Fradsham's ruling on the bank statements obtained pursuant to the requirements, as well as his ruling on the application of s. 24(2) of the Charter.

D. Court of Appeal of Alberta (2000), 271 A.R. 263

43 Berger J.A., for the court, affirmed the summary conviction appeal judge's order for a new trial. He held that only the appellant's statements ought to have been excluded from the Information to Obtain, pursuant to s. 7 of the Charter. The other documents and records were not "derivative evidence", and were admissible. Berger J.A. also upheld the warrant on amplification and found no s. 8 breach. He declined to find that the s. 7 breach was so egregious as to warrant excluding the evidence obtained by the searches under s. 24(2) of the Charter.

IV. Issues

44 This appeal raises the following specific issues:

- Did the Court of Appeal of Alberta err in ruling the April 11, 1994 oral statements inadmissible?
- Did the Court of Appeal of Alberta err in admitting the documents given to the auditors on April 11, 1994?
- Did the Court of Appeal of Alberta err in finding that amplification saved the search warrant?
- Should the banking records obtained under s. 231.2 of the ITA be excluded?

The respondent concedes the third issue, in light of R. v. Araujo, [2000] 2 S.C.R. 992, 2000

Digitized by Google

SCC 65. And in our analysis, we have melded the others for the purposes of discussion.

V. Analysis

45 The determination of this appeal will turn on the overarching questions set out in the first paragraph of these reasons. Is there an audit/investigation distinction under the ITA? Where is the line between the two functions drawn? To what extent do taxpayers under investigation for ITA offences benefit from the principle against self-incrimination under s. 7 of the Charter? Is a s. 8 violation made out where documents are obtained under colour of the ITA's "audit powers" after a prosecutorial investigation has commenced?

46 By way of introduction to these issues, it is useful to discuss the statutory context of the ITA, and whether s. 239 offences are properly considered regulatory or criminal for the purposes of Charter analysis. Second, we will turn to the Charter provisions at issue, and the manner in which they receive application. Third, we shall consider whether an audit/investigation distinction exists under the ITA, and whether ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) can be employed for the investigation of a s. 239 offence. After answering that question, we will set out a test to determine those circumstances in which the predominant purpose of an inquiry is the determination of penal liability. Finally, we will discuss the consequences under the Charter of an audit's having become a criminal investigation.

A. Overview of the Statutory Context

(1) The Income Tax Act

47 The ITA legislative scheme has received ample attention from this Court. While it is not necessary in this appeal to engage in a detailed review of ITA jurisprudence, in the interest of situating the statutory provisions at issue in their proper context, we shall commence our analysis with a brief overview of some important features of the Canadian income tax system and the manner in which it is administered.

48 Governments, indisputably, require revenue in order to finance their operations and to implement social programmes. Currently, the collection of federal income tax -- a measure first introduced at that level during the First World War by The Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916, S.C. 1916, c. 11, and The Income War Tax Act, 1917, S.C. 1917, c. 28, and thought to be temporary -- comprises a crucial source of federal revenue, not to mention a crucial source of revenue for a good number of provincial governments (see Del Zotto v. Canada, [1997] 3 F.C. 40 (C.A.), at para. 19, per Strayer J.A., whose dissenting reasons were affirmed by a unanimous panel of this Court: [1999] 1 S.C.R. 3). In this connection, because the ITA controls the manner in which federal income tax is calculated and collected, this Court has recognized it as being "essentially a regulatory statute": R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627, at p. 641, per Wilson J. (See also: La Forest J., concurring in the same case, at p. 650, where he described the ITA as "essentially of an administrative nature"; Thomson Newspapers Ltd. v. Canada (Director of Investigation and Research, Restrictive Trade Practices Commission), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 425, at p. 506, per La Forest J.; Knox Contracting Ltd. v. Canada, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 338, at p. 354, per Cory J.; 143471 Canada Inc. v. Quebec (Attorney General), [1994] 2 S.C.R. 339, at p. 378, per Cory J.; R. v. Hydro-Québec, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 213, at para. 46, per Lamer C.J. and Iacobucci J.) The ITA is both detailed and complex.

49 Every person resident in Canada during a given taxation year is obligated to pay tax on his or her taxable income, as computed under rules prescribed by the Act (ITA, s. 2; Smerchanski v. M.N.R., [1977] 2 S.C.R. 23, at p. 32, per Laskin C.J.). The process of tax collection relies primarily upon taxpayer self-assessment and self-reporting: taxpayers are obliged to estimate their annual income tax payable (s. 151), and to disclose this estimate to the CCRA in the income return that they are required to file (s. 150(1)). (See also in this regard: McKinlay Transport, supra, at pp. 636 and 648; V. Krishna, The Fundamentals of Canadian Income Tax (6th ed. 2000), at p. 22.) Upon receipt of a taxpayer's return, the Minister is directed, "with all due dispatch", to conduct an examination and original assessment of the amount of tax to be paid or refunded, and to remit a notice of assessment to this effect (ss. 152(1) and 152(2)). Subject to certain time limitations, the Minister may subsequently reassess or make an additional assessment of a taxpayer's yearly tax liability (s. 152(4)).

Digitized by Google

50 While voluntary compliance and self-assessment comprise the essence of the ITA's regulatory structure, the tax system is equipped with "persuasive inducements to encourage taxpayers to disclose their income": Krishna, supra, at p. 767. In this connection, Krishna writes at p. 772, the "system is 'voluntary' only in the sense that a taxpayer must file income tax returns without being called upon to do so by the Minister". For example, in promotion of the scheme's self-reporting aspect, s. 162 of the ITA creates monetary penalties for persons who fail to file their income returns. Likewise, to encourage care and accuracy in the self-assessment task, s. 163 of the Act sets up penalties of the same sort for persons who repeatedly fail to report required amounts, or who are complicit or grossly negligent in the making of false statements or omissions.

51 It follows from the tax scheme's basic self-assessment and self-reporting characteristics that the success of its administration depends primarily upon taxpayer forthrightness. As Cory J. stated in Knox Contracting, supra, at p. 350: "The entire system of levying and collecting income tax is dependent upon the integrity of the taxpayer in reporting and assessing income. If the system is to work, the returns must be honestly completed." It is therefore not surprising that the Act exhibits a concern to limit the possibility that a taxpayer may attempt "to take advantage of the self-reporting system in order to avoid paying his or her full share of the tax burden by violating the rules set forth in the Act" (McKinlay Transport, supra, at p. 637). The nature of the tax collection scheme, however, creates an obstacle in this regard:

> Often it will be impossible to determine from the face of the return whether any impropriety has occurred in its preparation. A spot check or a system of random monitoring may be the only way in which the integrity of the tax system may be maintained.
> (McKinlay Transport, supra, at p. 648)

Accordingly, "the Minister of National Revenue must be given broad powers in supervising this regulatory scheme to audit taxpayers' returns and inspect all records which may be relevant to the preparation of these returns" (ibid.).

52 The sections within Part XV of the ITA provide the Minister with "Administration and Enforcement" powers. They also impose reciprocal obligations upon taxpayers: for example, in furtherance of the overall reporting and verification scheme, s. 230(1) of the ITA requires all taxpayers, for various specified periods of time, to maintain books and records of account at their place of business or residence in Canada. These documents must be kept "in such form and containing such information as will enable the taxes payable under [the ITA] or the taxes or other amounts that should have been deducted, withheld or collected to be determined".

53 The provisions that are central to the instant appeal vest the Minister with extensive powers that may be used "for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement" of the ITA. Section 231.1(1) continues the inspection power that was introduced in An Act to amend the Income War Tax Act, S.C. 1944, c. 43, s. 11. Paragraph (a) allows a person authorized by the Minister to "inspect, audit or examine" a wide array of documents, reaching beyond those that the ITA otherwise requires the taxpayer to prepare and maintain. In the course of the inspection, audit or examination, para. (c) provides that the authorized person may enter into any premises or place that is not a dwelling-house; furthermore, para. (d) imposes a correlative duty upon persons at the premises or place to provide "all reasonable assistance and to answer all proper questions relating to the administration or enforcement of this Act". (Section 231.1(2) requires that, absent the occupant's consent, a judicial warrant be obtained for entry into a dwelling-house.)

Digitized by Google

54 The requirement power in s. 231.2(1) boasts an even longer pedigree: its origins are found in s. 8 of the original Income War Tax Act, 1917. By this power, the Minister may compel any person to produce any information or any document. Again, the scope of this power "reaches beyond the strict filing and maintenance requirements of the Act" (McKinlay Transport, supra, at p. 642, per Wilson J.).

55 To be effective, self-enforcing regulatory schemes require not only resort to adequate investigation, but also the existence of effective penalties: Thomson Newspapers, supra, at p. 528; R. v. Wholesale Travel Group Inc., [1991] 3 S.C.R. 154, at p. 250, per Cory J.; Comité paritaire de l'industrie de la chemise v. Potash, [1994] 2 S.C.R. 406, at p. 421, per La Forest J. In the ITA context, see Hydro-Québec, supra, at para. 46, and Knox Contracting, supra, at p. 355. To this end, s. 238(1) sets out a summary conviction offence that is triggered by non-compliance with the filing requirements or with other of the Act's provisions -- including ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1), and the documentary retention rules imposed by s. 230(1). Section 238's purpose is inherently pragmatic or instrumental: the offence exists "not to penalize criminal conduct but to enforce compliance with the Act" (R. v. Grimwood, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 755, at p. 756; McKinlay Transport, supra, at p. 641; 143471 Canada, supra, at p. 378).

56 Section 239(1) creates a number of additional offences. It speaks of false or deceptive statements, destruction or alteration of documents, false or deceptive documents, wilful evasion of income tax, and conspiracy to engage in prohibited activities. In Cory J.'s words from Knox Contracting, supra, at pp. 349-50: "Those who do evade the payment of income tax not only cheat the State of what is owing to it, but inevitably increase the burden placed upon the honest taxpayers." As a consequence, the s. 239(1) offences carry rather significant penalties. They may be proceeded on by way of summary conviction or by way of indictment at the election of the Attorney General (s. 239(2)).

57 As with the s. 238 offence, this Court has recognized the centrality of s. 239 to the income tax régime: see Strayer J.A.'s reasons, endorsed on appeal to this Court, in Del Zotto, supra, at para. 23, where he described s. 239 as being "designed to ensure compliance with the self-reporting requirements of the Income Tax Act". Moreover, the presence in the ITA of s. 239 does nothing to alter the regulatory or administrative nature of the inspection and requirement powers, even though s. 239 "relate[s] to conduct that might well be discovered by the[ir] exercise" (Thomson Newspapers, supra, at p. 516, per La Forest J. See also Comité paritaire, supra, at p. 421). As already mentioned, it is under ss. 239(1)(a) and (d) that the appellant in the present case was ultimately charged.

58 Having discussed the general statutory context, we will now deal specifically with the important distinction between regulatory and criminal statutory provisions.

(2) The Regulatory vs. Criminal Distinction

Digitized by Google

59 The parties have engaged in a spirited debate over the proper contextualization of the ITA offences for the purposes of Charter analysis. The respondent defines the ITA as comprising an "integrated regulatory scheme", the implication being that a person accused of offences thereunder attracts little Charter protection. Meanwhile, the appellants in both the present case and its companion, R. v. Ling, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 814, 2002 SCC 74, as well as the intervener, the Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario), submit that the Act is essentially a "dual-purpose statute" and that the s. 239 offences constitute "quintessential criminal law". It follows in the appellant Jarvis's submission that, where tax avoidance or evasion is being investigated, "the taxpayer must be afforded the Charter protection that is the right of any Canadian suspected or accused of a crime" (appellant's factum, at para. 33). It is plain that the s. 239 offences are no trifling matter as this provision bears at least the formal hallmarks of criminal legislation, namely, prohibitions coupled with penalties (see Hydro-Québec, supra, at para. 35). They may be prosecuted upon indictment, and conviction can carry up to five years' incarceration. It is because of these factors that the penal sanctions in s. 239 are, in certain contexts, referred to as "criminal".

60 That is not to say, however, that they are "purely" or "quintessentially" criminal for Charter purposes. The cases cited in support of the appellant's favoured characterization are of limited relevance. The present case does not consider a number of issues such as: whether the ITA offences are constitutionally supportable under the federal criminal law power (Hydro-Québec, supra); the characterization of s. 239 offences for the purpose of determining the appeal procedure from the issuance of a s. 231.3 search warrant (Knox Contracting, supra); or whether making false statements on an income tax return constitutes a "criminal offence" under provincial legislation, so as to render revocable a person's licence to practice as a public accountant (Re Ramm, [1958] O.R. 98 (C.A.)). In any case, the contextual approach to Charter application is not a mere exercise in taxonomy.

61 As La Forest J. stated in Wholesale Travel, supra, at p. 209, "what is ultimately important are not labels (though these are undoubtedly useful), but the values at stake in the particular context". In this connection, differing levels of Charter protection may obtain under the same statute, depending on the circumstances. Compare Hunter v. Southam Inc., [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145, and Thomson Newspapers, supra: each dealt with the former Combines Investigation Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-23, which, although it created penal offences, was recognized on the whole to embody "a complex scheme of economic regulation" (see General Motors of Canada Ltd. v. City National Leasing, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 641, at p. 676, per Dickson C.J.; Thomson Newspapers, supra; R. v. Nova Scotia Pharmaceutical Society, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 606, at pp. 648-49). The provisions impugned in Hunter v. Southam authorized entry onto private premises and hence attracted a much greater expectation of privacy than the provision ordering the production of documents in Thomson Newspapers.

62 In this measure, the ITA presents no different consideration. Wilson J. acknowledged as much in McKinlay Transport, supra, at p. 649, where she suggested that greater s. 8 protection would obtain under the ITA if tax officials were to enter onto private property in order to conduct a search or seizure for the purposes of the Act, rather than to compel the same documentation by way of requirement letters (see para. 53 of these reasons re: s. 231.1(2); see also Baron v. Canada, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 416, at pp. 443-44; Del Zotto, supra, at paras. 12-13, per Strayer J.A. (dissenting)). In sum, the ITA is a regulatory statute, but non-compliance with its mandatory provisions can in some cases lead to criminal charges being laid. In prosecution thereof, the state is pitted against the individual in an attempt to establish culpability. Stiff jail terms can result from a conviction. To conduct an appropriately contextual Charter analysis in these cases, the various regulatory and penal considerations must all exert some influence.

Digitized by Google

B. Contextual Approach to Charter Rights

63 At this stage, it is a firmly established principle that the Charter must receive contextual application. The scope of a particular Charter right or freedom may vary according to the circumstances: Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326, at pp. 1355-56, per Wilson J.; McKinlay Transport, supra, at p. 644; Symes v. Canada, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 695, at p. 793, per L'Heureux-Dubé J. (dissenting); 143471 Canada, supra, at p. 347 (per Lamer C.J.) and at pp. 361-62 (per La Forest J., dissenting); Comité paritaire, supra, at p. 420, per La Forest J.

64 For present purposes, where ss. 7 and 8 of the Charter are at issue, it is instructive to note both that the requirements of fundamental justice relevant to the former section "are not immutable; rather, they vary according to the context in which they are invoked" (R. v. Lyons, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 309, at p. 361, per La Forest J.) and that context will determine the expectation of privacy that one can reasonably expect the latter section to protect (Thomson Newspapers, supra, at pp. 495-96, per Wilson J., dissenting, and at p. 506, per La Forest J.; McKinlay Transport, supra, at pp. 645 and 647; Canadian Broadcasting Corp. v. New Brunswick (Attorney General), [1991] 3 S.C.R. 459, at p. 478, per Cory J.; Baron, supra, at p. 436, per Sopinka J.; British Columbia Securities Commission v. Branch, supra, at para. 51, per Sopinka and Iacobucci JJ.).

65 It is worth repeating that the appellant does not attack the constitutionality of ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1). Rather, his argument is that the admission into evidence in tax evasion proceedings of statements and documents that were compelled by Revenue Canada officials under these sections was a violation of his rights under ss. 7 and 8 of the Charter. He thus argues that the evidence should be excluded under s. 24(2) of the Charter. In McKinlay Transport, supra, this Court considered whether the predecessor provision to s. 231.2, employed in conjunction with an income tax audit, infringed s. 8 of the Charter. Wilson J. held that, although the provision authorized a "seizure" for Charter purposes, it provided "the least intrusive means by which effective monitoring of compliance with the Income Tax Act can be effected" (p. 649). Wilson J. noted that the taxpayer's privacy interest in the compellable records was also relatively weak, and ruled that the provision was constitutional. Faced with the McKinlay Transport decision, the appellant did not raise the constitutionality of ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) at his trial, but instead invoked s. 24(2) of the Charter in order to "deprive from the Crown (for prosecution purposes) the fruits of their [sic] deception" (appellant's factum, at para. 45).

(1) Section 7

66 Section 7 of the Charter reads as follows:

> 7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

A court conducting an analysis under s. 7 must first determine whether there exists a real or imminent deprivation of life, liberty, security of the person, or a combination thereof. Next, the court must identify the relevant principle or principles of fundamental justice and, finally, determine whether the deprivation is in accordance with this principle or principles.

67 It is beyond doubt that the appellant's s. 7 liberty interest is engaged by the introduction of statutorily compelled information at his trial for the s. 239 offences, owing to the threat of imprisonment on conviction: see Re B.C. Motor Vehicle Act, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 486, at p. 515, per Lamer J. (as he then was); Reference re ss. 193 and 195.1(1)(c) of the

Digitized by Google

Criminal Code (Man.), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1123. The relevant principle of fundamental justice in the present case is the principle against self-incrimination, an elemental canon of the Canadian criminal justice system, standing for the notion that individuals should not be conscripted by the state to promote a self-defeating purpose: R. v. S. (R.J.), [1995] 1 S.C.R. 451, at para. 81, per Iacobucci J. This Court has clearly established that the principle against self-incrimination finds residual expression under s. 7: Thomson Newspapers, supra; R. v. P. (M.B.), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 555, at p. 577, per Lamer C.J.; R. v. Jones, [1994] 2 S.C.R. 229, at p. 256, per Lamer C.J.; S. (R.J.), supra; Branch, supra; R. v. Fitzpatrick, [1995] 4 S.C.R. 154; R. v. White, [1999] 2 S.C.R. 417.

68 In giving expression to this principle, however, s. 7 does not envelop an abstract and absolute rule that would prevent the use of information in all contexts in which it is statutorily compelled: Jones, supra, at p. 257; S. (R.J.), supra, at paras. 96-100; Fitzpatrick, supra, at paras. 21 and 24; White, supra, at para. 45. A court must begin "on the ground", with a concrete and contextual analysis of all the circumstances, in order to determine whether or not the principle against self-incrimination is actually engaged: Fitzpatrick, at para. 25; White, at para. 46. This analysis necessarily involves a balancing of principles. One must, in assessing the limits on compellability demanded by the principle against self-incrimination, consider the opposing principle of fundamental justice suggesting that relevant evidence should be available to the trier of fact in a search for truth: S. (R.J.), at para. 108, per Iacobucci J. These competing interests will often be brought to the foreground in regulatory contexts, where the procedures being challenged have generally been designed (and are employed) as part of an administrative scheme in the public interest: Fitzpatrick, at para. 27. As the Court stated in White, at para. 48:

> In some contexts, the factors that favour the importance of the search for truth will outweigh the factors that favour protecting the individual against undue compulsion by the state. This was the case, for example, in Fitzpatrick, supra, where the Court emphasized the relative absence of true state coercion, and the necessity of acquiring statements in order to maintain the integrity of an entire regulatory regime. In other contexts, a reverse situation will arise, as was the case, for example, in Thomson Newspapers, supra, S. (R.J.), supra, and Branch, supra. In every case, the facts must be closely examined to determine whether the principle against self-incrimination has truly been brought into play by the production or use of the declarant's statement.

(2) Section 8

69 Section 8 of the Charter provides that:

> 8. Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.

For the application of s. 8, there must first be a search or seizure. Subsequently, it must be determined whether the search or seizure was unreasonable. Like the Fourth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, s. 8 protects a reasonable expectation of privacy: Hunter v. Southam, supra, at p. 159, per Dickson J. (as he then was). What is reasonable, however, is context-specific. In the application of s. 8, "an assessment must be made as to whether in a particular situation the public's interest in being left alone by government must give way to the government's interest in intruding on the individual's privacy in order to advance its goals, notably those of law enforcement" (id., at pp. 159-60).

70 In R. v. Plant, [1993] 3 S.C.R. 281, at p. 293, Sopinka J. listed several factors that will determine the parameters of the protection afforded by s. 8 with respect to informational privacy:

Digitized by Google

> Consideration of such factors as the nature of the information itself, the nature of the relationship between the party releasing the information and the party claiming its confidentiality, the place where the information was obtained, the manner in which it was obtained and the seriousness of the crime being investigated allows for a balancing of the societal interests in protecting individual dignity, integrity and autonomy with effective law enforcement.

71 The context-specific approach to s. 8 inevitably means, as Wilson J. noted in Thomson Newspapers, supra, at p. 495, that "[a]t some point the individual's interest in privacy must give way to the broader state interest in having the information or document disclosed". Naturally, if a person has but a minimal expectation with respect to informational privacy, this may tip the balance in the favour of the state interest: Plant, supra; Smith v. Canada (Attorney General), [2001] 3 S.C.R. 902, 2001 SCC 88.

72 Generally, an individual has a diminished expectation of privacy in respect of records and documents that he or she produces during the ordinary course of regulated activities: see, e.g., Thomson Newspapers, supra, at p. 507, per La Forest J.; 143471 Canada, supra, at p. 378, per Cory J.; Comité paritaire, supra, at pp. 420-21; Fitzpatrick, supra, at para. 49. In the particular context of the self-assessment and self-reporting income tax regime, a taxpayer's privacy interest in records that may be relevant to the filing of his or her tax return is relatively low: McKinlay Transport, supra, at pp. 649-50.

C. Audit vs. Investigation

73 As mentioned above, the Charter issues in this appeal touch upon the admission into evidence in a s. 239 prosecution of documents and utterances compelled by ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1). This problem did not arise in McKinlay Transport, where the appellants were charged under s. 238 for failing to comply with requirement letters, but there was no allegation that the requirements were themselves being used to further the investigation of an offence. In brief, this Court has yet to consider the extent to which the use of ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) to build a prosecutorial case infringes a taxpayer's constitutional rights.

(1) Submissions of the Parties

74 The submissions of the parties in this regard stand in stark opposition. The parties seeking to rely upon the distinction describe ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) as "audit" functions, i.e., fundamentally directed towards compliance and civil reassessment concerns. The appellant submits that the Crown can no longer use the ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) "audit powers" from the point at which its predominant purpose is to investigate a s. 239 offence. The Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario) and the appellant in the companion case, Ling, submit that the inspection and requirement powers may be used at any time, but that a person accused of a s. 239 offence must benefit from use and derivative use immunity relative to any information that is compelled from him during the audit process.

75 On the other hand, the respondent submits that there is no rigid audit/investigation distinction. It reiterates that the ITA is an integrated regulatory scheme, and argues that all of the powers are assigned to a single person, the Minister, whose function under the Act does not change: the fact that the Minister delegates the use of these powers to various CCRA functionaries is irrelevant, as is the internal organizational structure of the department. According to the respondent, the ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) powers are available in all circumstances, save two: where charges have been laid under s. 239 and the sole purpose for their exercise is to obtain prosecutorial evidence, and where the laying of charges is deliberately delayed in order for prosecutors to use the powers to build their case. The respondent concedes, as well, that s. 231.1(1)(d) does not countenance queries into the mental state, or mens rea, required to prove the ITA offences; the definition of "proper questions" in that paragraph does not extend that far, and answers to such questions should therefore be excluded under s. 24(2).

Digitized by Google

76 The intervening Attorneys General for Ontario and Quebec support the respondent's position. With respect to the proper use of ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1), the Attorney General of Quebec adopts a "sole purpose" approach, similar to the respondent's. For its part, the Attorney General for Ontario submits that there is no reasonable expectation of privacy in incriminatory information gathered pursuant to regulatory powers; however, the abuse of process doctrine and s. 7 of the Charter might find application in situations of improper conduct, such as "where there is no legitimate interest left in an audit and the auditors have become mere agents of an enforcement objective" (Attorney General for Ontario's factum, at para. 49).

(2) Our View

77 Analysis must begin with the words of the Act, and the proper construction of ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1). The approach to statutory interpretation can be easily stated: one is to seek the intent of Parliament by reading the words of the provision in context and according to their grammatical and ordinary sense, harmoniously with the scheme and the object of the statute (Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, s. 12; Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership v. Rex, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 559, 2002 SCC 42; Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27; R. v. Gladue, [1999] 1 S.C.R. 688; E. A. Driedger, Construction of Statutes (2nd ed. 1983), at p. 87).

78 By their express terms, both ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) are available "for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement" or, in French, "pour l'application et l'exécution" of the ITA. Although these terms are, at first glance, extremely broad, we ultimately come to the conclusion that, in the entire context, they do not include the prosecution of s. 239 offences.

79 As several of this Court's recent cases have illustrated, the words employed in the English and French versions of a federal statute are equally authoritative and should be read together in order to ascertain the proper meaning of the terms. The meaning of "administration" is clear. On the other hand, the ordinary sense of the term "enforcement" could conceivably encompass both assessment of tax liability and prosecution of offences (the Oxford English Reference Dictionary (2nd ed. 1996) defines "enforce" as "compel observance of (a law etc.)"). As for the French version, it provides negligible assistance here, since the two terms are rendered in equally wide scope, as "l'application et l'exécution". Hence, the question remains: does "enforcement" of the ITA include the prosecution of the s. 239 criminal offences?

80 This Court considered the scope of the requirement power in Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Canada (Attorney General), [1962] S.C.R. 729, James Richardson & Sons, Ltd. v. M.N.R., [1984] 1 S.C.R. 614. At p. 625 of the Richardson case, Wilson J. held that the provision could not be employed for a "fishing expedition", and that it was "only available to the Minister to obtain information relevant to the tax liability of some specific person or persons if the tax liability of such person or persons is the subject of a genuine and serious inquiry".

81 The respondent's interpretation of "proper questions" for the purposes of s. 231.1(1)(d) implies that the words "administration or enforcement", as they are used in the context of s. 231.1(1), do not extend to the investigation of ITA offences. Additionally and, in our view, more significantly, it is useful to contrast the language of ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) with that of s. 231.3(1), which sets out an ex parte application process for a warrant to search "for any document or thing that may afford evidence [of] the commission of [the] offence under this Act" (emphasis added). The existence of a prior authorization procedure where the commission of an offence is suspected creates a strong inference that the separate statutory inspection and requirement powers are unavailable to further a prosecutorial investigation.

Digitized by Google

82 In response to a question put to him during the appeal, counsel for the respondent submitted that the s. 231.3(1) warrant power was "residual", in the sense that it was intended to provide protection against the eventuality that a taxpayer, informed of an audit against him or her, would destroy his or her records in order to be charged with non-compliance under s. 238 rather than evasion under s. 239; the theory advanced being that the warrant, because of its being issued ex parte, would allow the authorities to act before the taxpayer were even aware of the audit.

83 We cannot accept that argument. First, we find it difficult to imagine why Parliament, if it truly desired to create such a safeguard for tax assessment purposes, would attach three such onerous pre-requisites to its issuance. The s. 231.3 warrant issues only in circumstances where the judge is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe: that an ITA offence was committed (s. 231.3(3)(a)); that a document or thing affording evidence of the offence is likely to be found (s. 231.3(3)(b)); and that the place specified in the application for the warrant is likely to contain the document or thing (s. 231.3(3)(c)). Plainly, s. 231.3 is concerned with offences against the Act, and not with auditorial verifications. It follows that the s. 231.3 warrant covers generally the same ground as does the Criminal Code's s. 487 warrant (see R. v. Multiform Manufacturing Co., [1990] 2 S.C.R. 624), which was in fact the route chosen by Revenue Canada to obtain evidence of the offences in the present case. According to one expert, it is now the CCRA's standard practice to use s. 487 of the Criminal Code rather than s. 231.3 of the ITA: see Krishna, supra, at p. 810. Second, and perhaps more fundamentally, Parliament made it an offence under s. 239(1)(b) to destroy records or books of account; substituting a charge under one paragraph of s. 239(1) for another would be a Pyrrhic victory for the miscreant taxpayer.

84 Although the taxpayer and the CCRA are in opposing positions during an audit, when the CCRA exercises its investigative function they are in a more traditional adversarial relationship because of the liberty interest that is at stake. In these reasons, we refer to the latter as the adversarial relationship. It follows that there must be some measure of separation between the audit and investigative functions within the CCRA. Of course, having determined this, it remains for us to determine the bounds between the ITA audit and investigation and then to discuss the legal consequences. To this, we now turn.

D. Delineating the Bounds Between Audit and Investigation: Nature of the Inquiry

85 We have been directed to a plethora of cases that have attempted to draw the line between audit and investigation for income tax purposes. There is a lack of consensus on the matter. Some courts have stated that the investigation begins at the time when there are reasonable and probable grounds to believe that an offence has occurred: see R. v. Bjellebo, [1999] O.J. No. 965 (QL) (Gen. Div.), at para. 171; R. v. Pheasant, [2001] G.S.T.C. 8 (Ont. C.J.), at para. 68; R. v. Chusid (2001), 57 O.R. (3d) 20 (S.C.J.), at para. 61.

86 Some cases have referred to "reasonable suspicions" of an offence as engaging the audit/investigation tripwire: R. v. Roberts, [1998] B.C.J. No. 3184 (QL) (Prov. Ct.), at paras. 39-40; R. v. Dial Drug Stores Ltd. (2001), 52 O.R. (3d) 367 (C.J.), at p. 387. Still other cases have held that the test is one of "predominant purpose": see the lower court judgments in the case at bar; Samson v. Canada, [1995] 3 F.C. 306 (C.A.), leave to appeal refused, [1996] 1 S.C.R. ix (sub nom. Samson v. Addy); R. v. Yip (2000), 278 A.R. 124, 2000 ABQB 873, at para. 34; R. v. Anderson (2001), 209 Sask. R. 117, 2001 SKQB 334, at para. 36; R. v. Seaside Chevrolet Oldsmobile Ltd. (2002), 248 N.B.R. (2d) 132, 2002 NBPC 5, at para. 51. Another has purported to have applied the same test, only to find that the predominant purpose will always be investigatory when "matters are placed in the hands of" Special Investigations Section: see R. v. Warawa (1997), 208 A.R. 81 (Q.B.), at paras. 11-12 and 134.

Digitized by Google

87 In Norway Insulation, supra, LaForme J. held, at p. 437, that the regulatory nature of an inquiry "changed after Special Investigations became involved and directed the subsequent work". He also agreed with the trial judge (reasons at [1995] 2 C.T.C. 451 (Ont. Ct. (Prov. Div.)) that it was when the first auditor developed the opinion, ultimately erroneous, that there was "sufficient evidence" of an offence, that the inquiry changed hue. Finally, in R. v. Coghlan, [1994] 1 C.T.C. 164 (Ont. Ct. (Prov. Div.)), at p. 172, Judge Ratushny opined that it was only when "Revenue Canada decides to lay criminal charges" that the criminal investigation begins. Otherwise, "the searches or seizures are for the bona fide purpose of determining compliance with the Income Tax Act, whether or not Revenue Canada suspects a criminal offence during that time" (ibid.). Coghlan was followed in Gorenko v. La Reine, [1997] R.J.Q. 2482 (Sup. Ct.), at p. 2500 (aff'd [1999] Q.J. No. 6268 (QL) (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. granted and appeal discontinued, [2000] 2 S.C.R. ix).

88 In our view, where the predominant purpose of a particular inquiry is the determination of penal liability, CCRA officials must relinquish the authority to use the inspection and requirement powers under ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1). In essence, officials "cross the Rubicon" when the inquiry in question engages the adversarial relationship between the taxpayer and the state. There is no clear formula that can answer whether or not this is the case. Rather, to determine whether the predominant purpose of the inquiry in question is the determination of penal liability, one must look to all factors that bear upon the nature of that inquiry.

89 To begin with, the mere existence of reasonable grounds that an offence may have occurred is by itself insufficient to support the conclusion that the predominant purpose of an inquiry is the determination of penal liability. Even where reasonable grounds to suspect an offence exist, it will not always be true that the predominant purpose of an inquiry is the determination of penal liability. In this regard, courts must guard against creating procedural shackles on regulatory officials; it would be undesirable to "force the regulatory hand" by removing the possibility of seeking the lesser administrative penalties on every occasion in which reasonable grounds existed of more culpable conduct. This point was clearly stated in McKinlay Transport, supra, at p. 648, where Wilson J. wrote: "The Minister must be capable of exercising these [broad supervisory] powers whether or not he has reasonable grounds for believing that a particular taxpayer has breached the Act." While reasonable grounds indeed constitute a necessary condition for the issuance of a search warrant to further a criminal investigation (s. 231.3 of the ITA; Criminal Code, s. 487), and might in certain cases serve to indicate that the audit powers were misused, their existence is not a sufficient indicator that the CCRA is conducting a de facto investigation. In most cases, if all ingredients of an offence are reasonably thought to have occurred, it is likely that the investigation function is triggered.

90 All the more, the test cannot be set at the level of mere suspicion that an offence has occurred. Auditors may, during the course of their inspections, suspect all manner of taxpayer wrongdoing, but it certainly cannot be the case that, from the moment such suspicion is formed, an investigation has begun. On what evidence could investigators ever obtain a search warrant if the whiff of suspicion were enough to freeze auditorial fact-finding? The state interest in prosecuting those who wilfully evade their taxes is of great importance, and we should be careful to avoid rendering nugatory the state's ability to investigate and obtain evidence of these offences.

Digitized by Google

91 The other pole of the continuum is no more attractive. It would be a fiction to say that the adversarial relationship only comes into being when charges are laid. Logically, this will only happen once the investigators believe that they have obtained evidence that indicates wrongdoing. Because the s. 239 offences contain an element of mental culpability, the state will, one must presume, usually have some evidence that the accused satisfied the mens rea requirements before laying an information or preferring an indictment. The active collection of such evidence indicates that the adversarial relationship has been engaged, since it is irrelevant to the determination of tax liability. Moreover, although there are judicial controls on the unauthorized exercise of power (Roncarelli v. Duplessis, [1959] S.C.R. 121; Babcock v. Canada (Attorney General), [2002] 3 S.C.R. 3, 2002 SCC 57, at para. 25), we believe that allowing CCRA officials to employ ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) until the point where charges are laid, might promote bad faith on the part of the prosecutors. Quite conceivably, situations may arise in which charges are delayed in order to compel the taxpayer to provide evidence against himself or herself for the purposes of a s. 239 prosecution. Although the respondent argued that such situations could be remedied by the courts, we view it as preferable that such situations be avoided rather than remedied. It is for this reason that the test is as set out above.

92 Whether a matter has been sent to the investigations section is another factor in determining whether the adversarial relationship exists. Again, though, this, by itself, is not determinative. An auditor's recommendation that investigators look at a file might result in nothing in the way of a criminal investigation since there is always the possibility that the file will be sent back. Still, if, in an auditor's judgment, a matter should be sent to the investigators, a court must examine the following behaviour very closely. If the file is sent back, does it appear that the investigators have actually declined to take up the case and have returned the matter so that the audit can be completed? Or, does it appear, rather, that they have sent the file back as a matter of expediency, so that the auditor may use ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) to obtain evidence for a prosecution (as was found to be the case in Norway Insulation, supra)?

93 To reiterate, the determination of when the relationship between the state and the individual has reached the point where it is effectively adversarial is a contextual one, which takes account of all relevant factors. In our opinion, the following list of factors will assist in ascertaining whether the predominant purpose of an inquiry is the determination of penal liability. Apart from a clear decision to pursue a criminal investigation, no one factor is necessarily determinative in and of itself, but courts must assess the totality of the circumstances, and make a determination as to whether the inquiry or question in issue engages the adversarial relationship between the state and the individual.

94 In this connection, the trial judge will look at all factors, including but not limited to such questions as:

(a) Did the authorities have reasonable grounds to lay charges? Does it appear from the record that a decision to proceed with a criminal investigation could have been made?

(b) Was the general conduct of the authorities such that it was consistent with the pursuit of a criminal investigation?

(c) Had the auditor transferred his or her files and materials to the investigators?

Digitized by Google

(d) Was the conduct of the auditor such that he or she was effectively acting as an agent for the investigators?

(e) Does it appear that the investigators intended to use the auditor as their agent in the collection of evidence?

(f) Is the evidence sought relevant to taxpayer liability generally? Or, as is the case with evidence as to the taxpayer's mens rea, is the evidence relevant only to the taxpayer's penal liability?

(g) Are there any other circumstances or factors that can lead the trial judge to the conclusion that the compliance audit had in reality become a criminal investigation?

It should also be noted that in this case we are dealing with the CCRA. However, there may well be other provincial or federal governmental departments or agencies that have different organizational settings which in turn may mean that the above factors, as well as others, will have to be applied in those particular contexts.

E. Charter Consequences

95 With respect to the consequences related to s. 8 of the Charter, McKinlay Transport, supra, makes it clear that taxpayers have very little privacy interest in the materials and records that they are obliged to keep under the ITA, and that they are obliged to produce during an audit. Moreover, once an auditor has inspected or required a given document under ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1), the taxpayer cannot truly be said to have a reasonable expectation that the auditor will guard its confidentiality. It is well known, as Laskin C.J. stated in Smerchanski, supra, at p. 32, that "[t]he threat of prosecution underlies every tax return if a false statement is knowingly made in it". It follows that there is nothing preventing auditors from passing to investigators their files containing validly obtained audit materials. That is, there is no principle of use immunity that prevents the investigators, in the exercise of their investigative function, from making use of evidence obtained through the proper exercise of the CCRA's audit function. Nor, in respect of validly obtained audit information, is there any principle of derivative use immunity that would require the trial judge to apply the "but for" test from S. (R.J.), supra. If a particular piece of evidence comes to light as a result of the information validly contained in the auditor's file, then investigators may make use of it.

96 On the other hand, with respect to s. 7 of the Charter, when the predominant purpose of a question or inquiry is the determination of penal liability, the "full panoply" of Charter rights are engaged for the taxpayer's protection. There are a number of consequences that flow from this. First, no further statements may be compelled from the taxpayer by way of s. 231.1(1)(d) for the purpose of advancing the criminal investigation. Likewise, no written documents may be inspected or examined, except by way of judicial warrant under s. 231.3 of the ITA or s. 487 of the Criminal Code, and no documents may be required, from the taxpayer or any third party for the purpose of advancing the criminal investigation. CCRA officials conducting inquiries, the predominant purpose of which is the determination of penal liability, do not have the benefit of the ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) requirement powers.

97 The predominant purpose test does not thereby prevent the CCRA from conducting parallel criminal investigations and administrative audits. The fact that the CCRA is investigating a taxpayer's penal liability, does not preclude the possibility of a simultaneous investigation, the predominant purpose of which is a determination of the same taxpayer's tax liability. However, if an investigation into penal liability is subsequently commenced, the investigators can avail themselves of that information obtained pursuant to the audit powers prior to the commencement of the criminal investigation, but not with respect to information obtained pursuant to such powers subsequent to the commencement of the investigation into penal liability. This is no less true where the investigations into penal liability and tax liability are in respect of the same tax period. So long as the predominant purpose of the parallel investigation actually is the determination of tax liability, the auditors may continue to resort to ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1). It may well be that there will be circumstances in which the CCRA officials conducting the tax liability inquiry will desire to inform the taxpayer that a criminal investigation also is under way and that the taxpayer is not obliged to comply with the requirement powers of ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) for the purposes of the criminal investigation. On the other hand, the authorities may wish to avail themselves of the search warrant procedures under ss. 231.3 of the ITA or 487 of the Criminal Code to access the documents necessary to advance the criminal investigation. Put another way, the requirement powers of ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) cannot be used to compel oral statements or written production for the purpose of advancing the criminal investigation.

Digitized by Google

98 In summary, wherever the predominant purpose of an inquiry or question is the determination of penal liability, criminal investigatory techniques must be used. As a corollary, all Charter protections that are relevant in the criminal context must apply.

F. Summary

99 By way of summary, the following points emerge:

1. Although the ITA is a regulatory statute, a distinction can be drawn between the audit and investigative powers that it grants to the Minister.
2. When, in light of all relevant circumstances, it is apparent that CCRA officials are not engaged in the verification of tax liability, but are engaged in the determination of penal liability under s. 239, the adversarial relationship between the state and the individual exists. As a result, Charter protections are engaged.
3. When this is the case, investigators must provide the taxpayer with a proper warning. The powers of compulsion in ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) are not available, and search warrants are required in order to further the investigation.

VI. Application to the Facts of the Jarvis Case

100 Whether or not a given inquiry is auditorial or investigatory in nature is a question of mixed fact and law. It involves subjecting the facts of a case to a multi-factored legal standard (Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Southam Inc., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 748, at para. 35) and, accordingly, Judge Fradsham's finding is not immune from appellate review.

101 In our view, although Goy-Edwards's conduct throughout her dealings with the appellant and his accountant was not praiseworthy — and at points appears deceptive — we do not think that the record rises to support a finding that she obtained information under ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) while conducting an investigation, the predominant purpose of which was a determination of Jarvis's penal liability. While Goy-Edwards did on several occasions mislead the appellant and his accountant as to the status of the file, she did not use misleading tactics in order to obtain information under ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) for the purpose of advancing an investigation into penal liability. Moreover, there seems to have been but minor contact between Goy-Edwards and Chang from the moment when the file was transferred to Special Investigations on May 4, 1994. In brief, Goy-Edwards should undoubtedly have been truthful when asked about the status of the appellant's file, but there is no evidence to show that she used her audit powers to obtain information for prosecutorial purposes.

Digitized by Google

102 We do not think it was improper for Goy-Edwards to have brought her supervisor to the April 11 meeting in order to provide a "second opinion" as to whether the file should be sent to the investigative section. The auditor should not have asked if the appellant felt comfortable with the attendance of an "assistant" when that person was in fact a supervisor, but this did not change the fact that the referral to Special Investigations was the auditor's determination. So long as there has been no crystallization of the adversarial relationship, there is, in our view, nothing wrong with an auditor seeking the counsel of another before completing the transfer paperwork.

103 The record indicates that very little new information came to light as a result of the April 11 meeting. Goy-Edwards was seeking confirmation of a suspicion that she held that tax evasion may have occurred, but her goal in this was to determine whether to refer the file. There is no suggestion that she was seeking information to be used in an eventual prosecution, which fact is borne out by the conclusions of the Court of Queen's Bench and the Court of Appeal: much of the material that was relied upon in the Information to Obtain was already in Revenue Canada's possession. In this respect, as previously stated, it is clear that, although an investigation has been commenced, the audit powers may continue to be used, though the results of the audit cannot be used in pursuance of the investigation or prosecution.

104 We conclude that, on the facts of this case, the April 11 meeting did not constitute an investigation into Jarvis's penal liability under s. 239 of the ITA. It follows that, other than the paragraphs struck from the Information by the trial judge as being erroneous, nothing should have been omitted from the application for the search warrant, and the warrant was therefore validly issued. Based on the application of the relevant factors as discussed above, we differ with the courts below and find that there was no investigation into penal liability prior to May 4, 1994, when Goy-Edwards filled out the Form T134 and referred her file to Special Investigations. The record establishes that Chang's efforts to determine whether reasonable grounds to obtain a search warrant commenced upon her receipt of the file, and that she concluded shortly thereafter that such grounds existed.

105 The searches of the appellant's residence, his accountant's residence, and Revenue Canada's Calgary office were therefore conducted pursuant to a valid warrant. The evidence obtained therefrom should be admissible in a new trial, if one is held. We point out, however, that some banking information was obtained pursuant to s. 231.2(1) requirement letters in early 1995. On the above analysis, this usage violated the appellant's s. 7 rights, since the investigation was at that point well underway. The respondent did not argue that the trial judge had erred in his application of s. 24(2) of the Charter, and we would therefore order that the banking records be excluded from any subsequent criminal proceedings against the appellant.

VII. Disposition

106 Accordingly, we would dismiss the appeal, and uphold the Alberta Court of Appeal's judgment and order for a new trial.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant: Macleod Dixon, Calgary.

Solicitor for the respondent: The Department of Justice, Vancouver.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General for Ontario: The Ministry of the Attorney General, Toronto.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of Quebec: The Department of Justice, Sainte-Foy.

Digitized by Google

Solicitor for the intervener the Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario): Scott K. Fenton, Toronto.

See also R. v. DiGiuseppe[74] when the local police were actively involved in the securing of documentary evidence while CRA conducting an audit, with the argued intent of having all the evidence brought together to prosecute tax evasion. It was held:

> Overview
>
> [1] By Notice of Application and Constitutional Issue dated September 23, 2005, as further refined by Mr. Irving's September 24, 2007 correspondence with the Crown, the applicant Riccardo DiGiuseppe seeks an order excluding the evidence tendered during the course of the trial and a further order setting aside the guilty verdict. Alternatively the applicant requests declaration of a mistrial or a stay of proceedings.
>
> [2] In the event the aforementioned relief is not granted, leave is sought to adduce further evidence to address alleged improprieties by the police during the course of their investigation of the applicant.
>
> The Issues Issue # 1
>
> [3] The applicant submits the York Regional Police Service contemplated the laying of tax evasion charges from the outset of the investigative initiative "Project Northern Greed". As particularized in paragraph 121 of the application's factum:
>
> "…the York Regional Police intended from the outset to use Project Northern Greed as a venue to collapse the business operations of Fantasia and Bunnies and to gather evidence to support charges of tax evasion and the eventual prosecution of the applicant for the very charge upon which he was convicted".
>
> [4] In effect the applicant contends the York Regional Police Service acted as Revenue Canada's "proxy" with the intention of assisting the tax authority to secure evidence in support of anticipated tax evasion charges.
>
> [5] During the execution of a series of Criminal Code search warrants by the police on September 10, 1998 documentation and financial information were seized. This information was ultimately secured by the revenue agency and that material formed the evidentiary foundation for Revenue Canada's successful prosecution of the applicant.
>
> [6] The failure of Revenue Canada to seek search warrants, at the outset of the project, in furtherance of their own investigation of the applicant's personal tax liability is submitted as undermining the legality of the search warrants that were secured and executed by the police. As a consequence the legitimacy of Revenue Canada's receipt and reliance on the documents seized has been compromised.
>
> Issue # 2
>
> [7] The applicant summits Revenue Canada personnel were actively engaged in a tax evasion investigation from the outset. This initiative was intentionally concealed under the guise of a tax compliance audit. While acting in complicity with the York Regional Police Service, Revenue Canada is alleged to have instituted and exercised investigative authority without regard to the applicant's constitutional entitlement to be free from unreasonable search and seizure. As a consequence the applicant contends a section 8 violation has occurred as incriminating information was obtained under the false pretence of an audit for tax assessment purposes.
>
> [8] By "recourse" to the provisions of subsection 231.1 (1) and section 231.2 (1) of the Income Tax Act and, while under the guise of a compliance audit, the tax department invalidly gathered and reviewed information in accordance with the tax auditor's inspection

[74] 2008 ONCJ 126

Digitized by Google

and requirement powers. As Revenue Canada investigators must secure a search warrant to lawfully advance their investigations the materials ultimately obtained and relied upon by the tax investigators ought to be excluded as evidence in the applicant's trial.

Issue # 3

[9] Finally, the applicant submits the undercover police investigators engaged in illicit and illegal conduct, without lawful authority or justification, in order to gather evidence which ultimately resulted in bawdy house and other prostitution related offences and proceeds of crime charges.

[10] The illegal activities of the investigating officers were not subsequently fully disclosed to the judges who issued wiretap authorizations and the September 10, 1998 search warrants. Failure to disclose such activities is contended to constitute an abuse of process as such authorizations require that the issuing justice have full disclosure of all relevant facts in order to insure the discretion to issue process is exercised judicially.

[11] By engaging in and permitting illegal acts of sexual touching the evidentiary base for the lawful issuance of the September 10, 1998 search warrants has been compromised and the administration of justice called into disrepute.

[12] As a result the fairness of the applicant's trial has been affected. The unseemly methods employed to gather evidence of sexual activity at the clubs controlled by the applicant is viewed as having "tarnished" the judicial process. The evidence thus obtained ought therefore be excluded.

[13] In order for this concern to be fully explored the applicant seeks leave to cross-examine the various undercover officers who participated in the gathering of evidence by posing as patrons at the Fantasia and Bunnies strip clubs.

The Crown's Position

[14] In the view of the Crown the historical involvement and interest of the York Regional Police and other government agencies in the applicant's business operations serves to undermine the Applicant's assertion that the initiative known as "Project Northern Greed" was actually a tax evasion investigation concealed as a large scale police action into alleged bawdy house activities.

[15] The genesis, development, and timing of Project Northern Greed does not support the applicant's contention that Revenue Canada illegally "piggy-backed" it's tax evasion inquiry on the York Regional Police Services bawdy house investigation.

[16] The fact the accused and/or the business operations he is alleged to have controlled had been prosecuted for morals offences on two previous occasions adds further support to the legitimacy of the declared Criminal Code offence based objectives of Project Northern Greed.

[17] The Crown asserts Revenue Canada officials, who were initially involved in an audit of the applicant and his related business enterprises, properly secured all necessary legal authorizations prior to reviewing the documents seized by the police on September 10, 1998.

[18] As the documentation was lawfully obtained at the time of the initial seizure by the police there was a substantially "reduced expectation of privacy" in the seized materials thereafter.

[19] Once an investigation was commenced to determine the applicant's penal tax liability the Revenue Canada investigators relied on information that had been lawfully obtained by the auditors in accordance with a section 490 (15) of the Criminal Code and the powers of inspection pursuant to section 231.1 (1) and section 231.2 (1) of the Income Tax Act.

[20] The applicant's expressed desire to widen the scope of the abuse of process motion by exploring allegations of alleged sexual misconduct by certain undercover officers is viewed as an unwarranted and irrelevant consideration given the applicant's primary contention that the police were carrying out a tax evasion inquiry under the guise of a bawdy house investigation.

Digitized by Google

[21] In summary, the respondent submits this application is without merit with any infraction or transgression, in either the audit or tax investigation of the applicant, arising as a consequence of inadvertence, "honest" mistake or unintended procedural irregularity.

Summary of the Evidence on the Motion

[22] On April 24, 1998 the Operational Plan for the proposed investigation of the applicant's alleged criminal enterprise was approved for funding by the Criminal Intelligence Service of Ontario.

[23] The "Investigative Objectives" of the project were noted to include the establishment of a data base of potential "targets", their assets, properties and businesses; elimination of the applicant as a "criminal element" within the communities affected and collection of intelligence information in order to conduct a criminal investigation of the applicant's "syndicate" with the intention of ultimately securing the closure of both the Major Mack Hotel (Fantasia) and Bunnies.

[24] Upon successful completion of the project twenty charges were expected to be laid. These charges were anticipated to include morals offences, other Criminal Code offences including assault, extortion, intimidation, possession of stolen property, money laundering, obstruction of justice and conspiracy; drug offences; Liquor Licence Act infractions; Immigration Act charges; municipal bylaw infractions and Income Tax Act violations. [25] Constable Purves of the York Regional Police Service, the officer responsible for the drafting of the operational plan, advised the inclusion of anticipated charges under the Income Tax Act was speculative and based on his assumption that evidence of such offences would be secured as a consequence of the proposed investigations and information provided by Integrated Proceeds of Crime (IPOC) investigator Dan Corbeil.

[26] No evidence was presented during the hearing of the application to indicate Revenue Canada had any input or involvement in the decision to include Income Tax Act charges in the list of anticipated offences in the projects Operational Plan. This inclusion was acknowledged by Constable Purves as being a product of his own expectations.

[27] On implementation of Project Northern Greed the police investigators set about to gather evidence relating to the stated objects of the investigative plan with the focus of the initiative on the applicant's alleged bawdy house operations.

[28] The investigation employed undercover operatives, surveillance teams, wiretaps and informants.

[29] The project culminated with the execution of a number of search warrants on September 10, 1998 and seizure of voluminous documentation and financial information.

[30] In due course the analysis of this information by Revenue Canada officials would form the evidentiary basis for the prosecutions case in the applicant's fraud trial.

Revenue Canada's Involvement

[31] During the course of the application most of the Revenue Canada personnel who had dealings with either the audit or investigative initiatives relating to the Applicant's business affairs were called to testify.

[32] The first confirmed contact between the police and Revenue Canada in relation to the applicant appears to have occurred on July 10, 1998 when Tracy Gualberto, who was at that time a Revenue Canada forensic auditor seconded to the Newmarket based "I.P.O.C. section of the R.C.M.P. pursuant to a Memorandum of Understanding, was asked by one of the I.P.O.C. investigators Dan Corbeil to assist in Project Northern Greed.

[33] Following a July 16, 1998 meeting between Constable Corbeil, Tracy Gualberto and the Assistant Director of Investigations with the Toronto North office of Revenue Canada, Don Renaud, it was agreed Revenue Canada would endeavour to lend computer expertise to assist with evidence recovery when the contemplated search warrants were executed at the culmination of the Project Northern Greed investigation. [34] Ron Allen, the co-ordinator for Revenue Canada's Computer Search and Evidence Recovery (C.S.E.R.'s) assumed responsibility for securing and assigning Revenue Canada personnel to assist with the anticipated computer searches.

Digitized by Google

[35] Ron Allen also lent his technical expertise and previous litigation experience by assisting in the drafting of portions of the Information to Obtain related to computerized information.

[36] On September 10, 1998 several Revenue Canada C.S.E.R.'s participated in the searches of the accused's residence, business offices and related business operations.

[37] Tracey Gualberto was also present and participated in the September 10, 1998 search warrant initiative. [38] During the September 10, 1998 searches Ron Allen secured a copy of the New Views accounting program from the offices of the Applicant's financial controller Peter Fuller which he retained. This program contained detailed financial records of the Applicant's various business enterprises.

[39] A copy of this program was installed in a computer that was provided to Tracey Gualberto on November 13, 1998. At that time Instructions were provided to enable Tracy Gualberto to operate the program and access the financial data it contained. The installation of a further computer program took place on November 17, 1998. This program was required to facilitate computer access to the Newviews Program which Ms. Gualberto indicated she did not attempt until after an access order was obtained.

[40] On November 18, 1998, Tracey Gualberto applied for and secured an order under section 490 (15) of the Criminal Code authorizing access to the records for audit purposes.

[41] In January 1999 Revenue Canada auditors Neil Reine and Zahur Jiwa were assigned, at the request of Tracy Gualberto, to # 5 Division Headquarters of the York Regional Police Service where over two hundred boxes of seized documentary items, secured during the execution of the September 10, 1998 search warrant, were to be reviewed. The auditors and the York Regional Police investigators were provided with spread sheets Tracey Gualberto had prepared based on her review of the Daily Revenue Summary Sheets. [42] At the direction of Angelo Villella, Special Enforcement Program Team Leader at Revenue Canada, Reine was to perform a Goods and Services Tax audit with Jiwa directed to consider the documentation to be reviewed for a potential Income Tax audit.

[43] Jiwa and Reine continued their review of the seized documentation until August 1999.

[44] During the timeframe of this review Tracy Gualberto advised she had no further involvement in the audit procedures with the auditors conducting their work without direction or involvement by other Revenue Canada personnel or the police.

[45] At the direction of Dan Renaud, Revenue Canada Investigator Gail McNeil variously met with Dan Corbeil, Angelo Villella and Tracy Gualberto in late March 1999 to assess the file for a potential G.S.T. investigation.

[46] McNeil prepared a written report of her assessment of the files investigative potential. In that report McNeil concluded the file had potential noting that "all procedures for a normal investigation are still required and a civil audit has not yet commenced".

[47] In her oral testimony on the application McNeil observed she had intended to indicate the audit had not yet been completed. Reine testified he and Jiwa spent most of their time "vouching" or verifying Gualberto's work product. He recalled dovetailing the time devoted to the discharge of their audit function while at #5 District to the general IPOC Code and not a designated audit file.

[48] The audit review was completed in August 1999 at which time Reine and Jiwa met with Angelo Villella their immediate supervisor on the Special Enforcement Program team. Villella directed that a proposal letter not be forwarded to the applicant detailing the results of the audit. Following a subsequent meeting with Don Renaud on August 24, 1999 the auditors prepared three referrals (one for Fantasia, two for Bunnies) to Special Investigations. During the months of August and September 1999 Reine issued bank requirements relating to the audit.

Digitized by Google

[49] On October 8, 1999 Villella approved the referrals for transmission to Special Investigations based on his assessment of the results of the audit. The referrals were accepted by Investigations on October 29,1999.

[50] By the end of October 1999 Special Investigators, Frank Menniti and Don Lee, had reviewed the auditors working papers, Gualberto's financial analysis, the audit file and related documentation. On confirmation of the reliability of the internal financial controls employed in the operation of both Fantasia and Bunnies notification of the tax reassessment and a legal caution was delivered in written form to the applicant's corporate controller Peter Fuller.

[51] On November 17, 1999 a Prosecution Report prepared by Menniti and Lee was forwarded to the Department of Justice. This report included a summary of the proposed tax evasion prosecution, anticipated offences, a description of the alleged fraud, a list of proposed witnesses and a summary of the testimonial evidence anticipated to be adduced.

[52] On June 21, 2000 a Criminal Code search warrant was served by Menniti on Dan Corbeil in order to secure copies of the records that had been seized during the September 10, 1998 investigation.

[53] These records had been previously secured by Gualberto pursuant to a section 490 (15) Criminal Code search warrant on November 18, 1998. These were the same records that were reviewed by Reine and Jiwa during the months of January to August 1999. Items secured included daily summary sheets, bar reports, cash register tapes, drop envelopes, computer accounting records and corporate documentation.

[54] In February 2001, Menniti issued requirements to obtain his own records for use in the investigation.

[55] On November 4, 2003 a subsequent section 487 warrant was obtained by Menniti in order to secure the original documentation seized during the course of the September 10, 1998 searches. This action was prompted by a concern that the withdrawal of certain Criminal Code charges against the applicant at that time might lead to the return of the original seized documentation to Mr. DiGiuseppe.

[56] The Information to Obtain filed by Menniti in support of the November 3, 2003 warrant differed from that employed in securing the June 21, 2000 warrant as the initial Information to Obtain indicated that Neil Reine and Zahur Jiwa had been assigned to perform audits of a number of companies controlled by the applicant. The 2003 version asserted, in part, that Reine and Jiwa had been assigned to assist Tracy Gualberto in her review of the records she had seized pursuant to an access order obtained under section 490 (15) of the Criminal Code. The 2003 Information to Obtain indicates audits for G.S.T. and Income Tax Act purposes were "performed" by Reine and Jiwa respectively in "August 1999".

[57] Menniti accounted for the noted changes as having arisen based on additional information he received in consultation with the Crown at the time and information reportedly contained in Villella and Renaud's will say statements that the audit did not commence until August 1999.

Applicable Legal Principles Stay of Proceedings

[58] In O'Connor v. The Queen 103 C.C.C. (3d) 1 affirming 89 C.C.C. (3d) 109 (S.C.C.), L'Heureux Dube J,. for the majority, adopted the Ontario Court of Appeals conclusion in R. v. Young and affirmed that [at page 31]:

"there is a residual discretion in a trial court judge to stay proceedings where compelling an accused to stand trial would violate those fundamental principles of justice which underlie the community's sense of fair play and decency and to prevent the abuse of a court's process through oppressive and vexatious proceedings".

Digitized by Google

[59] This power is subject to the additional directive that it is to be exercised only in the "clearest of cases", (paragraph 59 and 62) as "a last resort, to be taken when all other acceptable avenues of protecting the accused's right to full answer and defence are exhausted" (paragraph 77) and where "the accused's right to make full answer and defence cannot be remedied or where irreparable prejudice would be caused to the integrity of the judicial system if the prosecution were continued" (paragraph 82).
[60] Principles of fundamental justice including consideration of trial fairness require "a balancing of societal and individual interests".
[61] In O'Connor L'Heureux Dube J. sets down guidelines to evaluate whether there has been a violation of the Charter invoking analagous concerns to those traditionally raised under the doctrine of abuse of process at common law and situations under which a remedy of a judicial stay of proceedings will be "appropriate and just in the circumstances" as required by section 24 (1) of the Charter (para 72).
[62] The criteria in which a stay of proceedings is warranted are noted in circumstances where:
the prejudice caused by the abuse in question will be manifested, perpetuated or aggravated through the conduct of the trial, or by its outcome; and no other remedy is reasonably capable of removing that prejudice (para 75)
[63] Factors to be considered in applying this criteria include, but are not limited to, the seriousness of the violation; the conduct and intention of the Crown; and, the societal interests in obtaining a determination of guilt or innocence with the interests of society increasing "commensurately to the seriousness of the charges against the accused" (para 81).
[64] Despite "shoddy and inappropriate" conduct by the Crown in failing to effect full and timely disclosure the Supreme Court of Canada concluded in O'Connor that the accused's ability to make full answer and defence had not been compromised or prejudiced to the point a stay of proceedings was warranted.
[65] In the Supreme Court of Canada decision Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) v. Tobias
118 C.C.C. (3d) 443 the court considered the consequences arising from the fact an Assistant Deputy Attorney General in the Department of Justice had contact with the Chief Justice of the Federal Court, without notice to other parties, regarding a matter before that court involving the Justice Department.
[66] In concluding there was no persuasive evidence of bad faith on the part of any of the officials involved, or actual interference with judicial independence, the Supreme Court of Canada affirmed the decision of the Federal Court of Appeal that the damage to judicial independence in this case was not sufficient to warrant a stay of proceedings. The societal interest in the proceedings was held to outweigh any affront to the appearance of interference or infringement of judicial independence.
[67] In Tobias the Court concludes the two criteria referenced in O'Connor must be satisfied before a stay arising from the unfair conduct of a prosecution by the state or other damage to the integrity of the judicial system is granted. These considerations are repeated in summary form as follows:
the prejudice caused by the abuse in question will be manifested, perpetrated or aggravated through the conduct of the trial, or by its outcome;
no other remedy is reasonably capable of removing the prejudice (para 90 Tobias; para 75 O'Connor). [68] In Tobias a third factor for consideration is specified in circumstances "where the affront to fair play and decency is disproportionate to the societal interest in the effective prosecution of criminal cases, then the administration is best served by staying the proceedings" "L'Heureux Dube J. R., v. Conway [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1659 at p. 1667, 49 C.C.C. (3d) 289 (para 92, Tobias).

Digitized by Google

Summary

[69] Applying these considerations to this application the applicant must establish on the balance of probabilities:

misconduct by the state amounting to an abuse of process affecting either trial fairness or the integrity of the judicial process;

irreparable prejudice arising from the abusive conduct alleged that is manifest during the conduct of the trial, or the verdict, resulting in a circumstance where no lesser remedy, other then a stay of proceedings, is appropriate;

circumstances where the "affront" to the applicant's individual fair trial interests favouring the granting of a stay outweigh the societal interest in seeing serious criminal cases effectively prosecuted to their conclusion and, finally;

that this is one of the "clearest of cases" where the discretionary power to grant a stay of proceedings should be granted even if a section 7 Charter violation is established.

Revenue Canada's Audit and Investigative Authority

[70] Section 231.1 (1) of the Income Tax Act R.S.C. 1985 C. 1(5th Supp) provides that authorized representatives of the Minister of National Revenue may "inspect, audit and examine the books and records of any taxpayer" for any purpose related to the administration of the Income Tax Act.

[71] Section 231.2 grants authority to an "authorized person" (defined as a person authorized by the Minister of National Revenue for the purposes of sections 231.1 to 231.5) to require that a tax payer produce requested information or documentation within a specified time frame for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement of the Income Tax Act.

[72] Section 231.3 details the criteria that govern the application for a search warrant in circumstances where there are i) reasonable and probable grounds to believe an offence has been committed under the Act; ii) a document or "thing" to be seized that is likely to be found may provide evidence of the commission of the offence alleged; iii) the building, receptacle or place specified in the application is likely to contain the document or thing.

[73] The distinction between Revenue Canada's audit and investigative functions was reviewed in detail by the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of Regina v. Jarvis (2002), 169 C.C.C. (3d) 1 (S.C.C.).

[74] In Jarvis the court endeavoured to delineate the bounds between a compliance audit and an investigation where the predominant purpose of the inquiry is the determination of penal liability (paras 88- 94).

[75] When exercising their audit function revenue officials are lawfully entitled to use the inspection and requirement powers under section 231.1(1) and section 231.2 (1). In circumstances where the "predominant purpose of a particular inquiry is the determination of penal liability" these powers must be relinquished. (para 88).

[76] Factors indicated as bearing on the determination of the nature of the inquiry and whether the predominant purpose of the inquiry is the determination of the tax payers penal liability include but are not limited to the following:

the presence of reasonable grounds to lay charges and/or confirmation of a decision to proceed with a criminal investigation;

general conduct of the tax authorities consistent with the pursuit of a criminal investigation;

transfer of files from the auditor to the investigator; conduct consistent with the auditor performing an agency role for the investigation;

evidence to support a finding that the investigators were using the auditors as their agents for the purpose of collecting evidence;

Digitized by Google

the nature of the information being sought from the tax payers and its relevance to taxpayer liability generally (the audit function) on the taxpayer's intention or mens rea (a consideration that is only of importance in an inquiry relating to the taxpayer's penal liability); the presence of any other factors, or consideration of the totality of the evidence, that could lead to the conclusion that a compliance audit had become a criminal investigation. (para 94).

[77] Factors that are not necessarily determinative of the existence of an investigation are also canvassed in the "mere existence of reasonable grounds that an offence has occurred" (para 89) Even when there are reasonable grounds to believe an offence has occurred "the courts must guard against creating procedural shackles on regulating officials" by restricting or removing the possibility of a lesser regulatory sanction in circumstances "mere culpable" conduct might reasonably be believed to exist;

Jarvis (para's 89-92). In summary form these non-determinative considerations include:

The "mere suspicion that an offence has occurred" is similarly an insufficient basis to distinguish an audit from an investigation. Mere suspicion of taxpayer wrong doing by an auditor during an audit is an insufficient reason to "freeze auditorial fact finding". (para 90).

As indicated in Jarvis supra at para 30:

Whether a matter has been sent to the investigations section is another factor that is not determinative of whether an adversarial relationship exists between the taxpayer and the tax department. As the possibility exists the file may be returned to the auditor and may not be accepted for criminal prosecution a referral for investigation is, by itself, not determinative of the audit/investigation issue. (para 92)

All relevant factors must be considered on the totality of circumstances, and considered in context, in order to determine whether the inquiry in issue "engages the adversarial relationship between the state and the individual". (para 93)

[78] In R. v. Norway Insulation Inc. [1995] O.J. No. 1073 a decision of Justice Laforme then of the Ontario Court (General Division) the trial judge's decision to exclude evidence secured by Revenue Canada during the course of an audit and an order quashing two search warrants secured on the basis of the audit findings was upheld.

[79] In Norway Insulation, following referral to Special Investigations by a Revenue Canada auditor, the investigators directed the auditor to gather further information in order that charges could be laid.

[80] In Norway both the trial judge and the summary conviction appeal court concluded factors such as the transfer of files from the auditor to the investigator; conduct by the auditor consistent with the auditor acting in an agency capacity for the investigation; and, evidence to support the contention the investigators use of the auditor for the purpose of collecting evidence relating to the taxpayers penal liability, infringed the taxpayers section 8 Charter right as an unreasonable search and seizure.

Improper Conduct by the Police

[81] In R. v. P (N.M) 188 D.L.R. (4th) 350 the Nova Scotia Court of Appeal considered the circumstances of a seventeen year old accused who alleged her rights under section 7 and section 15 of the Charter had been violated as a result of the touching of her pubic hair by a police officer during the course of a prostitution related investigation. Citing R. v. Sharose (1999), 133 C.C.C. (3d) 257, 171 D.L.R. (4th) 193 (S.C.C. and R. Regan (1999), 179 N.S.R. (2d) 45, 137 C.C.C. (3d) 449 (N.S.C.A.) the court concluded each case must be determined on a case by case basis with the "drastic remedy" of a stay of proceedings only being available in "the clearest of cases".

[82] Where the fairness of the accused's trial is not in issue the applicant must show "the fundamental principles that underlie the community's sense of fair play and decency were violated".

Digitized by Google

[83] In R. v. P (N.M.) the act of touching by the undercover officer in the circumstances in which it occurred was held to be justified as falling "in the category of situational police conduct" (page 9). The court noting "undercover police operatives would be of little value if officers were expected to make full disclosure to all and sundry of their true purpose". The legislation relating to the offence of sexual assault being directed to the protection of "dignity, bodily integrity and safety of the person" not the facilitation "for law breakers to circumvent legitimate undercover police operatives". (page 11).

[84] The effect of alleged police misconduct on an application for a stay of proceedings was considered by the Alberta Court of Appeal in R. v. Bond (1993), 135 A.R. 329 (leave to appeal refused) [1993] 3 S.C.R.v. at p. 333:

"illegal conduct by the police during an investigation, while wholly relevant to the issue of abuse of the court's processes, is not per se fatal to prosecutions which may follow: Mack; supra at 558. Frequently it will be, but situational police illegality happens. Police involve themselves in high speed chases, travelling beyond posted speed limits. Police pose as prostitutes and communicate for that purpose in order to gather evidence. Police buy, possess, and transport illegal drugs on a daily basis during undercover operations. In a perfect world this would not be necessary but, patently, illegal drug commerce is neither successfully investigated, nor resisted, by uniformed police peering through hotel room transoms and keyholes or waiting patiently at police headquarters to receive the confessions of penitent drug-traffickers".

Project Northern Greed as a Tax Fraud Investigation

[85] The applicant submits the investigative initiative Project Northern Greed was an elaborately disguised tax evasion investigation.

[86] The facts viewed as supportive of this conclusion include the following:

reference to "Income Tax Act violations" as one of the "anticipated charges" in the Operational Project Plan for Project Northern Greed ;

the inclusion of the offence of income tax evasion contrary to section 239 (1) of the Income Tax Act and the related factual assertions referenced in Appendix "A" in Constable Kirk Dickson's September 10, 1998 Information to Obtain Search Warrant;

the involvement of certain Department of Justice and Revenue Canada personnel in Project Northern Greed prior to the execution of the search warrants and the arrest of the Applicant on September 10, 1998;

the continuing interest of Revenue Canada auditors, investigators and management personnel in the financial documentation seized during the course of the September 10, 1998 searches of the applicant's residence, office and businesses.

The fact all Criminal Code charges were ultimately withdrawn against the applicant with the sole exception of a single count of fraud over $5000, section 380 (1) (a), founded on the applicant's evasion of payment of both G.S.T. and Income Tax.

[87] A review of the application record and the exhibits filed on this application confirm the historic involvement of the York Regional Police Service with Fantasia. Previous bawdy house investigations occurred in 1992 and 1995. The facility had attracted previous regulatory enforcement from the Town of Richmond Hill and the Liquor Licence Board or Alcohol and Gaming Commission.

[88] While the Operational Plan for Project Northern Greed referenced a new investigative focus, with an emphasis on proceeds of crime, the object of the investigation was directed at the elimination of the applicant's continuing operation of both Fantasia and Bunnies as alleged bawdy houses.

[89] The application record demonstrates that efforts were made by the investigators to encourage Revenue Canada to take part in the project. On July 7, 1998, Constable Dickson spoke to Rosemary Warren, a prosecutor with the Department of Justice, to advise he suspected the investigation might yield evidence of tax evasion. As a consequence of the meeting Constable Purves met with Dan Renaud and Tracy Gualberto to further define the role Revenue Canada would play as the police investigation drew to a close.

Digitized by Google

[90] Notes of these meetings and related CISO bi-weekly reports confirm Revenue Canada's awareness, interest and involvement in the project.
[91] The limited scope of that involvement is reflected in the record of Dan Corbeil's September 15, 1998 meeting with Rosemary Warren where it is agreed Revenue Canada will be requested to perform a net worth analysis and financial inquiry of the applicant.
[92] In furtherance of that initiative Tracey Gualberto secured an access order on November 18, 1998 authorizing Revenue Canada personnel to review the financial material seized by the police on September 10, 1998.
[93] In due course charges were laid under the Income Tax Act and Excise Tax Act on March 9, 2001. A further charge of fraud over $5000. was laid by Revenue Canada investigator Frank Menniti on July 9, 2001. [94] While bawdy house charges were withdrawn on November 2, 2003, I conclude, based on consideration of the totality of the evidence presented on this application, that the primary focus of the police initiative Project Northern Greed was the investigation of bawdy house and proceeds of crime offences as detailed in the projects Operational Plan.
[95] Revenue Canada or Justice Department personnel had no involvement in the formulation of the Operational Plan and very limited peripheral input prior to the execution of the search warrants on September 10, 1998. Apart from the provision of technical expertise during the searches the evidence establishes involvement of a significant degree by the tax department did not begin until after the access order was secured by Tracy Gualberto in November 1998.
[96] The applicant's assertion that the York Regional Police Service exercised Revenue Canada's investigative "proxy" from the genesis of Project Northern Greed through to the culmination of that investigation is concluded to be unfounded in fact.
[97] Speculation aside, the suggestion Revenue Canada and the York Regional Police Service wilfully conspired, one with the other, to subvert the judicial process through a series of fraudulent representations leading to the issuance of wiretap and search warrant authorizations with the ultimate intention of securing evidence to support a charge of tax evasion, the logical extension of the argument advanced on this issue, is not supportable on the facts presented here.
[98] The fact the applicant was ultimately prosecuted on a single Criminal Code charge of fraud relating to the evasion of income tax and GST is not, in itself, proof or confirmation that prosecution on this charge was the prosecutorial goal of both the York Regional Police Service and Revenue Canada from the outset of Project Northern Greed.
[99] As noted, the charge of fraud upon which the applicant was ultimately convicted was not laid until July 9, 2001. There is no evidence to suggest the "proxy" or "piggy back" theory advanced on behalf of the applicant was even contemplated by any of the law enforcement agencies involved in this investigation let alone intentionally implemented.
[100] The evidence on this application supports the charge of fraud being laid after an extensive review and independent assessment of the seized documentary materials and financial information by Revenue Canada investigators.
[101] At its highest the evidence establishes Constable Purves and Corbeil were aware, at the outset of the planning process for Project Northern Greed that undeclared income might reasonably be anticipated as being generated as a consequence of the observed conduct of the dancers at Fantasia and Bunnies.
[102] As the police had reasonable and probable grounds to support their belief that these establishments were bawdy houses it was not unreasonable for them to assume income tax was not being fully reported on income that had not been lawfully earned.

Digitized by Google

[103] The contention that the York Regional Police Service and/or Revenue Canada planned to carry out a tax fraud investigation and prosecute that offence from the outset is concluded to be speculative at best and without any factual substance or support. While one of the investigative goals of Project Northern Greed may have been to "collapse the business operations of Bunnies and Fantasia" there is no evidence to suggest the police and/or Revenue Canada planned from the outset of the project to resort to the offence of tax evasion in order to do so.

Investigation or Audit

[104] Having concluded the applicant has failed to establish proof on a balance of probabilities that the York Regional Police Service planned "from the outset of Project Northern Greed to carry out their investigation with the focus on prosecuting the applicant for tax evasion or "tax fraud" (para 107 Applicant's factum), consideration turns to the assertion Revenue Canada initiated certain "paths of investigation under the guise of an audit" contrary to the Supreme Court of Canada ruling in R. v. Jarvis, supra.

[105] Having reviewed the Application Record in its entirety, the documentation presented and the testimony offered by the various tax officials, I conclude there is no merit to the allegation Revenue Canada officials misused the requirement and inspection authority sections 231.1 and 231.2 of The Income Tax Act.

[106] As previously noted Revenue Canada's involvement during the planning and implementation stages of Project Northern Greed was limited. While technical assistance was provided by Revenue Canada CSER's on September 10, 1998 and Revenue Canada's Special Enforcement Program was kept informed of the investigative initiative, no involvement by Revenue Canada personnel, of any meaningful consequence, took place until November 1998.

[107] Following the obtaining of an access order by Tracy Gualberto the documentation seized by the police on September 10, 1998 was subject to review by Revenue Canada auditors Reine and Jiwa.

[108] Reflecting on the nature of the work they performed rather than Revenue Canada's designation or description of that work I conclude there is no evidentiary support for the applicant's submission Reine and/or Jiwa, or any other Revenue officials, were in fact conducting an investigation to determine the applicant's penal liability without lawful authority.

[109] Applying the distinguishing considerations referenced in Jarvis I conclude as follows:

Revenue officials did not have reasonable grounds to lay charges prior to August 1999 at the earliest when Reine and Jiwa completed their review of the seized business records.

The fact the audit report disclosed evidence of unreported income and unpaid income tax and GST does not in itself support the conclusion that the "predominant purpose" of Reine and Jiwa's efforts was the determination of the applicant's penal liability. Their activities and the resultant report are consistent with an audit.

Based on the results of the audit it may be fairly concluded the auditors had reason to suspect an offence had occurred but there is no evidentiary support to suggest this conclusion was reached prior to the completion of their review in August 1999. As stated in Jarvis the "whiff of suspicion" of taxpayer wrong doing is not enough to "freeze auditorial fact finding" (para 90).

The reference to a Revenue Canada "investigation" in Tracey Gualberto's November 18, 1998 access order application, which may well be attributable to an error based on her stated lack of awareness of the legal import of that term, and the initial posting of Jiwa and Reine's time to "IPOC" rather than on assigned audit file notwithstanding, I conclude the determination of the Applicants penal liability did not become the "predominant purpose" of Revenue Canada's inquiry until August 1999 at the earliest. It is at this time, following completion of the audit process by Reine and Jiwa, that reasonable grounds to lay charges were developed.

Digitized by Google

The evidence establishes a further independent assessment of the auditors report was subsequently conducted by investigator Frank Menniti to confirm the auditors assessment and to prepare the case for prosecution. The fact reasonable grounds to support the offence of fraud may have existed prior to the formalization of charges in March 2001 is not in itself a sufficient basis to conclude that the predominate purpose of the Reine/Jiwa inquiry was the determination of penal liability.

As stated in Jarvis:

"Even where reasonable grounds to suspect an offence exists, it will not always be true that the predominant purpose of an inquiry is the determination of penal liability".

(R. v. Jarvis, supra at para 89)

[110] Further, there is no evidentiary basis for the applicant's assertion that the auditors were performing an investigation function simply as a result of their review of documentation originally seized by the police and accessed by Revenue Canada personnel through a section 490(15) Criminal Code order.

[111] Based on the evidence of Tracy Gualberto I am satisfied that the reference to the word "investigation" in paragraph 6 of the November 4, 1988 affidavit filed in support of the section 490(15) order must be read in context by reference to the "inquiry" into the applicant's financial affairs detailed in paragraph 5 of the affidavit. Tracy Gualberto's limited involvement in the file following the securing of the access order and the subsequent August 1999 audit report of Reine and Jiwa are factors that offer strong support for the Crown's assertion that a Revenue Canada investigation did not commence until the fall of 1999 at the earliest.

[112] Finally, I am not persuaded that the inquires made by the police and/or revenue officials into the applicant's banking records prior to the formalization of the penal focus of Revenue Canada's inquiry render the evidence secured inadmissible. There is no evidence of bad faith by the requesting officials, the procedure employed complied with the law as it was understood and applied at the time and warrants were subsequently secured to access the information which was discoverable by other means in any event. R. v. Bjellebo [2003] O.J. No. 3946 (CA) paras 8-9; R. v. Zuk [2004] O.J. No. 4379 (CJ) paras 31-33, 42-43.

Characterization of the Conduct of the Revenue Canada Personnel

[113] The evidence presented on the application establishes that a strict protocol existed within the administrative organization of Revenue Canada in order to maintain separation of the audit and investigation departments of that organization.

[114] I conclude that protocol was followed in this case as demonstrated by the stated and confirmed reluctance of Don Renaud, to involve the Special Investigators Department in the applicant's file unless and until independently assessed factual information was secured to support the suspicion of revenue offences harboured by the police.

[115] The cautious approach taken by Renaud; his insistence on the maintenance of Revenue Canada's investigation protocols; his awareness of the potential conflict in Tracy Gualberto's role with IPOC and the fact she remained a Revenue Canada employee and his efforts to ensure her activities complied with the Memorandum of Understanding between Revenue Canada and the R.C.M.P. IPOC unit; his direction to investigators Pat Pope (in November 1998) and Gail McNeil (in March 1999) to assess the applicant's file for potential as an investigative file, and the directive that ultimately led to the involvement of Special Enforcement Program auditors Reine and Jiwa to review the file, are all actions that are consistent with the implementation of a cautious, measured procedurally based and lawful consideration of the applicant's financial affairs by the tax department.

Digitized by Google

[116] While McNeil determined potential existed for the GST investigation based on her brief review and assessment of the applicant's file as at March 1999 there is no evidence to suggest the normal procedures associated with the audit process did not continue through to the fall of 1999.

[117] In the absence of express authorization from Don Renaud to commence an investigation and in view of an assessment of the actions of the Revenue Canada personnel from July 1998 through to August 1999, I conclude the general conduct of the tax authority was not consistent with the pursuit of a criminal investigation. It is acknowledged suspicions of criminal wrong doing by the applicant in relation to tax or revenue issues existed but that fact alone is not a sufficient basis to characterize Revenue Canada's actions as being consistent with a tax evasion investigation.

[118] The actions of the Revenue Canada officials who dealt with the applicant's file thorough to the fall of 1999 are viewed as being consistent with the actions one might reasonably attribute to the determination of tax liability and not the determination of penal liability.

Transfer of Files

[119] There is no evidentiary basis to suggest files were ever transferred from either Reine or Jiwa to the investigators at Revenue Canada prior to the formal referral to investigation in the fall of 1999.

[120] The McNeil inquiry in March 1999 took place when the audit was continuing but there is no evidence to suggest she accessed any of the work product of the auditors relying instead, in large measure, on the financial analysis performed by Tracy Gualberto in her capacity as a forensic accountant at IPOC.

The Auditors as Agents for Special Investigations

[121] There is no evidence any contact took place between either Jiwa or Reine and any member of the investigative staff at Revenue Canada until after their audit file was transferred to the Special Investigations Program for a prosecution viability assessment.

Collection of Investigative Evidence By the Auditors

[122] The audit was conducted on financial information originally secured by the police pursuant to search warrants and accessed by Reine and Jiwa under the authority of an access order. The application record does not contain any evidence to suggest Revenue Canada investigations had any contact with the auditors during the course of their documentary review (January to August 1999), requested any information, were given any information, initiated any inquiries, or gave any directions to the auditors.

Assessment of Tax Payer Liability Generally or Criminal Intent and Penal Liability

[123] The auditors work product reflects and confirms the focus of their review as being directed to the assessment of tax liability only.

[124] The conclusions referenced in each of the three audit referrals (Treesann Management Inc. (Fantasia), 1038345 and 1246434 Ontario Limited (Bunnies I and II) variously confirm under - reporting of sales, taxable income and GST. Each referral proposes issuance of civil assessments. The result of the auditors inquiries are consistent with an assessment of the applicant's compliance with the reporting requirements of both the Income Tax Act and Excise Tax Act. The determination that the results of the audit might form the basis for an investigative or "penal liability" inquiry and the determination to provide evidence to assist in the establishment of mens rea occurred only after the audit report was subject to further review and independent assessment by Revenue Canada investigators according to the evidence presented.

Compliance Audit as a Criminal Investigation

[125] Having heard from almost every Revenue Canada official who had even peripheral involvement with the applicant's tax file I conclude there is no evidence to suggest Reine and Jiwa ever engaged in any investigative actions or performed any functions that were not consistent with their roles as auditors. There is no evidence they shared any information with anyone else or had contact with any potential witnesses or the police. The information they accessed was indicated as being limited to the materials in the #5 District police exhibit room, the Newviews accounting records and Tracy Gualberto's preliminary financial review.

Digitized by Google

Conclusion

[126] For the foregoing reasons I conclude the applicant has failed to establish any contravention of the guidelines established in R. v. Jarvis.

[127] There is no evidence to support the contention that Revenue Canada's review of the applicant's financial records was predominantly directed to the determination of penal liability at any point prior to August 1999 at the earliest.

Leave to Call Evidence of Alleged Sexual Misconduct by the Police

[128] This request has been the subject of previous consideration and the subject of submissions and an interim ruling on October 1, 2007.

[129] The applicant has consistently asserted that reliance on evidence secured as a consequence of the actions of the police in securing evidence of sexual misconduct in the clubs he operated would tend to bring the administration of justice into disrepute. In the applicant's view consideration of this evidence should be excluded and the search warrants issued as a result of this evidence set aside.

[130] I have reviewed and considered the detailed notes of the various undercover officers who participated in gathering evidence in support of bawdy house charges during the course of Project Northern Greed.

[131] It is evident that a number of these officers both touched dancers and were touched by dancers in a sexual manner.

[132] The applicant's complaint pre-supposes standing exists to challenge the actions of these officers and is predicated on the absence of any lawful justification of the officers actions in such circumstances, as has been recognized by the Nova Scotia Court of Appeal in R. v. P. (N.M.) supra.

[133] In the circumstances of this prosecution and this application I am not persuaded any inquiry into the allegations of sexual misconduct by the police is warranted.

[134] In my view, this proposed area of inquiry is not relevant to the charge upon which the applicant has been convicted and the availability of legal standing to challenge the actions of the police within the context of this prosecution is dubious at best.

[135] The assertion the officers conduct might establish a serious violation of the communities sense of fair play and decency disproportionate to societies interest in the effective prosecution of a serious criminal case, is undermined by the fact that a significant factual basis justifying the issuance of the search warrants sought to be impugned by the applicant remains even if the applicant successfully addresses issues of relevance, standing and investigative justification and succeeds in excluding consideration of the offending conduct alleged.

[136] In the context of this prosecution, the applicant's unrealized expectations that this issue would be litigated notwithstanding, I conclude the proposed inquiry is unwarranted and without practical import. Leave to further explore this issue is therefore refused.

Conclusion

[137] The Applicant has failed to establish the police acted as Revenue Canada's "proxy" during the course of Project Northern Greed or violated the principles specified by the Supreme Court of Canada in Jarvis. [138] The applicant has not established a violation of his rights under section 7 or section 8 of the Charter.

[139] In the absence of any misconduct by the state amounting to an absence of process,

Digitized by Google

either through conduct that affects the fairness of the trial or the integrity of the judicial system the application in its entirety fails and is therefore dismissed.

Mere Potential for Situation Leading to Special Investigations Not Enough to Prevent Response

In Paul S. Bining et al. V. Her Majesty The Queen[75] the Trial Ct. had to also deal with the Charter issue when, while there no special investigations started by CRA, the taxpayer attempted to argue that the mere possibility of such applying to large bank deposits with possible inference of hidden income and thus tax evasion was enough to prompt his Charter protections against self-incrimination when CRA made a RFI of the bank account. The Court held:

> [7] On May 21, 2003, the Applicants filed an application under section 18 and 18.1 of the Federal Court Act for a declaration that the Requirements are an abuse of process and constitute an infringement of section 7 and 8 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and should be set aside pursuant to subsection 24(1) of the Charter, and a declaration that the Requirements are otherwise invalid and unlawful and should be set aside in accordance with paragraph 18.1(a) and 18.1(3)(b) of the Federal Court Act. The Applicants are now requesting an order for a stay of the May 1, 3003 Requirement to Provide Information on the basis that this application raises a serious issue, that the Applicants will suffer irreparable harm if the Requirement is not stayed, and that the balance of convenience favours the Applicants.
>
> …
>
> [9] The Applicants suggest that responding to the Requirement would have the purpose of eliminating any non-income source for the unidentified bank deposits and to lead to the conclusion that the unidentified deposits are unreported income. The Applicants suggest that the purpose of the Requirement is only to eventually proceed with a criminal investigation based on the unexplained bank deposits found in the audit, and that the Requirement in this context is used with the objective of a criminal investigation and that the Applicants should not be in a position to self-incriminate with responses to those Requirements.
>
> [10] The Applicants rely on recent Supreme Court of Canada decisions R. v. Jarvis 2002 SCC 73 and > R. v. Ling 2002 SCC 74 where "the Court found that the predominant purpose of a particular enquiry is to determine penal liability, CCRA officials must relinquish the authority to use the statutory compulsion powers in section 231.2 of the Income Tax Act."
>
> [11] On the other side, the Respondent suggests that it is in possession of bank statements of the Applicants and that those statements show unidentified deposits.
>
> [12] The Respondent suggests that this Requirement is totally reasonable in the circumstances, and that "the May 1, 2003 Requirements request legitimate information regarding non-taxable sources of income to the Applicants, such as gambling winnings, lottery winnings, loans, inheritance, etc." The Respondent also disagrees with the suggestion by the Applicants that the Respondent has only to reassess the Applicants and it will be up to the Tax Court to decide on whether those deposits eventually would be considered as revenues and could be taxable.
>
> [13] The Respondent finally mentioned that the possibility that the Applicants should be the object of criminal prosecution is there anyway, and that the answers that would be provided to the Requirements would allow the Respondent to make a more accurate assessment.

[75] 2003 FCT 689

Digitized by Google

…

[17] The Applicants suggest that they will suffer irreparable harm if a stay is not granted because they will be compelled under criminal penalty to provide potentially incriminating evidence that could eventually be used against them in a criminal prosecution for tax evasion and, at the same time, if the Applicants fail to comply with the Requirements, they may be liable to criminal prosecution for such failure to comply suggesting that they are in a catch-22 situation.

[18] The Respondent reacts to those allegations by saying that if the Minister is not provided with an answer within a reasonable time-frame the Minister will be statute-barred from reassessing, and also argues that if the information that is requested is provided and it is decided later that the information was collected in violation of the Applicants' constitutional rights, it will not be possible to use that information in any subsequent criminal proceedings anyway.

[20] As I mentioned at the hearing, as it is suggested by the Applicants, if the majority of the responses to the Requirement would be rendered in the negative, I don't see how the natural inference could be drawn that the amount of deposits in the bank account should be considered as revenue and could imply criminal prosecution for tax evasion.

[21] How could one suggest that by providing no information on the origin of bank deposits, it could be seen as self-incriminating? The wording of the Act would have to be stretched considerably to arrive at such conclusions, which I am not ready to do.

In Roger Ellingson v. The Minister Of National Revenue[76] the Trial Ct. had to consider whether to prevent a RFI when it had been sent pursuant to CRA';s Special Enforcement Program that acts in conjunction with the R.C.M.P. to counter organized crime. The tax auditor had heard about a drug arrest in the US and sent out the request for income tax returns and net worth statements, as "an auditor for the SEP auditor" and the court had to decide whether to allow it when the taxpayer objected. It provided:

[4] The Applicant refuses to answer the Requirement on the basis that, in the circumstances, its issuance is beyond the jurisdiction of the Auditor. Therefore, it is agreed that the standard of review of the decision to issue the Requirement is correctness.

[5] The jurisdictional issue arises from the Supreme Court of Canada decision in R. v. Jarvis, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 757. Jarvis stands for propositions of law respecting protection from self-incrimination; a taxpayer is required to comply with a Requirement when its "predominant purpose" (the "Purpose") is determining the taxpayer's tax liability, however, a Requirement is not to be used for the investigation of penal liability. Therefore, when the Purpose changes from determining tax liability to the investigation of penal liability under the Act, the taxpayer need not answer the Requirement. Of course, this result follows if the Purpose from the outset was the investigation of penal liability. With respect to the use of evidence obtained from an answer to a Requirement, if it was obtained before a penal liability investigation is commenced, the answer is admissible evidence which can be used in the penal liability investigation and potential prosecution, but once the penal liability investigation is commenced, any information obtained thereafter will only be admissible if the taxpayer's rights are protected under the Charter.

[6] It is agreed that, in the present case, the sole question for determination is as follows: "When the Auditor made the decision to issue the Requirement, was a penal liability investigation under way?" If the answer is "yes", on the authority of

[76] 2005 FC 1068

Digitized by Google

Jarvis*, it is agreed that the Auditor acted beyond his jurisdiction.

[7] The standard of proof for coming to the answer to the question is low. In Jarvis, certain factors for consideration are suggested in determining the Purpose, the first of which includes this question: "Does it appear from the record that a decision to proceed with a criminal investigation could have been made?". The Federal Court of Appeal has determined that this text "is cast in terms of a mere possibility as opposed to a probability" (Létourneau J.A. in Kligman v. Canada (M.N.R.), [2004] F.C.J. No. 639 at para. 31).

[8] In the present case, the answer depends on an analysis of an evidentiary contest between the Auditor's own stated understanding and intention in issuing the Requirement versus the institutional obligation and intention within which he was operating.

The contest in the evidence

[9] It is agreed that the whole of the evidence with respect to the issuance of the Requirement must be considered in order to determine the Purpose. That is, the Auditor's opinion on the Purpose is not determinative; the Purpose must be derived from an "objective" analysis of the evidence, being an analysis of all of the evidence (see Capital Vision v. M.N.R., [2002] F.C.J. 1797 (T.D.)).

The Auditor's understanding and intention

[10] The Auditor's evidence is found in his affidavit filed for the purposes of the present Application as follows:

I am employed as a Special Enforcement Program Auditor in the Investigations Division of the Southern Interior B.C. Tax Services Office ("SITSO") of the Canada Customs and Revenue Agency ("CCRA").

I have made a diligent search of CCRA's records and have made appropriate inquiries of others to inform myself in order to make this Affidavit.

I have personal knowledge of the facts and matters deposed to in this Affidavit except where they are stated to be on information and as to those facts and matters, I believe them to be true.

I currently have conduct of the audit of the Applicant. I have reviewed the files carefully and this Affidavit is based on the information in the file as well as my own personal knowledge.

I have been a Special Enforcement Program ("SEP") auditor in SITSO since December 2001. Prior to that, I was an auditor in the Verification and Enforcement Division of SITSO.

The SEP Unit is a separate audit unit within the Investigations Division. In the same that business audit deals with audits of legal businesses, the SEP Unit deals with audits of taxpayers where there is an indication they may have earned income from illegal activities. The SEP Unit does not conduct investigations. Where, during the course of a SEP audit, it is determined that an offence may have been committed, the file is referred to an investigator within the Investigations Division.

My duties within SEP are to gather information necessary to determine whether an audit should be commenced and to conduct audits of non-filers where there is an indication that income may have been earned from illegal activities. I do not conduct criminal investigations as a member of SEP.

Since December 2001, I have done several dozen SEP audits. I have never referred any of my files to an investigator within the Investigations Division. Since beginning with Investigations in December 2001, all of my files have concluded by either assessments being issued by me or in no action being taken.

On or about April 16, 2004, the Investigations Division of SITSO received a copy of a Suspicious Transaction Referral Form (the "Referral") received by FINTRAC from the HSBC Bank, which detailed a deposit to the Applicant's account of $5,000 all in $20 bills. Attached as Exhibit A to this Affidavit is a copy of the Referral.

Digitized by Google

The Referral came to the SEP Unit of the CCRA from the RCMP Proceeds of Crime Unit and was initially received by [JL], the liaison between the CCRA and the RCMP Proceeds of Crime Unit.
The Referral then went to [DW], a SEP investigator in the Investigations Division of the CCRA. [DW] is also located in SITSO.
[DW] found a newspaper article published in the April 7, 2004 edition of the Penticton Herald (the "Article"). The Article is attached as Exhibit D to the Affidavit of [RW] sworn September 1, 2004 and filed in these proceedings.
[DW] then conducted an "Option I" search of the CCRA electronic database to determine what tax returns the Applicant had filed with the Respondent. Attached as Exhibit B to this Affidavit is a copy of the Option I printout (the "Printout").
The Printout shows the Applicant did not file any tax returns for the years 1997 to 2003.
Once [DW] determined that the Applicant was a non-filer, the Referral, Article and Printout were given to me for action.
Had there not been any hint that the Applicant's income may be from illegal activities, the Applicant's file would have gone to the Non-Filer Non-Registrant Unit of the Collections Division of the CCRA.
On July 20, 2004, I issued the letter dated July 20, 2004 (the "Requirement") to the Applicant.
The first and, to date, only action taken by me with respect to the Applicant has been to issue the Requirement.
The Requirement contained standard requests in situations where the taxpayer has not filed tax returns and we have no, or very little, financial information on them:
As the Applicant was a non-filer, paragraph (A) of the Requirement was inserted in the Requirement to require the Applicant to file a tax return, which could be reviewed and verified by me.
As it is my experience that many of these audits do not turn up sufficient information regarding income sources but rather, end of with assessments being issued on a net worth basis, paragraphs (B) and (C) of the Requirement were inserted in the Requirement to gather the type of information necessary to determine whether a net worth assessment is warranted and, if so, the amount of such assessment.
The Respondent issued the Requirement to the Applicant for purposes related to the administration and enforcement of the Income Tax Act (the "Act") and not for the purpose of further a criminal investigation of the Applicant.
The Applicant is not under criminal investigation.
The Applicant is being audited to determine his correct tax liability under the Act.
Prior to being shown the Affidavit of [RW] sworn September 1, 2004, I had never seen the documents attached as Exhibits A, B and C to the Affidavit of [RW].
I make this Affidavit in opposition to an application by the Applicant for an Order quashing the Requirement.
[11] Thus, when the Requirement was issued, the Auditor did not have knowledge of the Grand Jury decision or the Attorney General's news release. However, he did have some greater knowledge of suspicious conduct than that precisely stated in his affidavit. The complete statement under the heading "Description of Suspicious Activity" in the Referral is as follows:
(STR 9584804) Description of suspicious activity*
Client brought in $5000.00 in cash all in 20s to be applied to two car loans he has with HSBC. The CSR noticed that the money had the distinct odor of marijuanna [sic]. A further review of the loans revealed that client consistently makes payments to the loans by way of cash.

Digitized by Google

Loan #1 opened Aug 30/02-original amount was $50,084.00- current loan balance is $23,799.73. Has paid off over $25M in 15 months.
Loan #2 opened June 10/03-original amount was $19,218.00- current loan balance is $7,769.42. Has paid off over $10M in 6 months.
It is certainly not difficult to understand why the Applicant would be of interest to the SEP as a potential target for pursuing earned income from illegal activities.
[12] In any event, during the course of oral hearing of the Application, Counsel for the Applicant agreed that the Auditor was acting on an honest belief and intention that the issuance of the Requirement was for tax liability purposes only.
[13] Counsel for the Respondent argues that the Auditor's evidence should be accepted as conclusive proof that the Purpose of issuing the Requirement was with respect to tax liability:
There is nothing but speculation on the part of the Applicant that the purpose of the Requirement was to further a criminal investigation of the Applicant (whether it be for tax or other offences). The unequivocal evidence of the Auditor was that the sole purpose was for audit. This stated purpose is in accord with common sense given no evidence of any contact between anyone involved in the US indictment and the CCRA, the lack of material in the possession of the CCRA at the time of the Requirement and the very preliminary type of information being sought in the Requirement.
There is no question the CCRA is at a very early stage of its look (to use neutral language) into the tax affairs of the Applicant. The problem with hindering the CCRA at such an early stage was recognized by the SCC in Jarvis at para. 90:
90. All the more, the test cannot be set at the level of mere suspicion that an offence has occurred. Auditors may, during the course of their inspections, suspect all manner of taxpayer wrongdoing, but it certainly cannot be the case that, from the moment such suspicion is formed, an investigation has begun. On what evidence could investigators ever obtain a search warrant if the whiff of suspicion were enough to freeze auditorial fact-finding? The state interest in prosecuting those who wilfully evade their taxes is of great importance, and we should be careful to avoid rendering nugatory the state's ability to investigate and obtain evidence of these offences.
As well as thwarting any criminal prosecution, prohibiting the Minister from using its requirement powers to gather the very preliminary type of information requested in the Requirement may lead to the Applicant's tax affairs being immune from scrutiny because it is far from certain that the Minister could satisfy the requirements necessary to obtain a search warrant given the Minister's lack of knowledge.
(Respondent's Memorandum at paras. 29-31)
[14] Relying on the affidavit of the Auditor, Counsel for the Respondent also submits that the function of the SEP is to conduct audits and that it does not conduct criminal investigations. That is, the preliminary information being requested, and the scant information in the possession of the Auditor, is indicative of a gathering of information to determine whether or not to commence an audit.
[15] Counsel for the Applicant argues that, effectively, the Auditor's belief and intention is irrelevant to the true Purpose of issuing the Requirement, being the institutional obligation and intention.

The institutional obligation and intention [16] Counsel for the Applicant argues that the Purpose of issuing the requirement is proved by the nature of the institutional framework within which the Requirement was issued. That is, regardless of the Auditor's personal belief and intention, the institutional obligation and intention within which he was operating, was, from the outset, to investigate the Applicant for penal liability.

Digitized by Google

[17] The Requirement was issued by the Auditor as an employee of the Special Enforcement Program ("the SEP"), being part of the Special Investigations Division ("SID") of the Canada Customs and Revenue Agency ("the CCRA"), and operating according to a 1992 Taxation Operations Manual, and a 1992 Working Arrangement ("the Arrangement") (AR, pp. 136-144) between the Royal Canadian Mounted Police ("RCMP") and the predecessor of the CCRA. The Arrangement details the governing of the SEP as follows:

The various activities which are carried out under these Working Arrangements will be categorized by the RCMP as the Tax Program and by the RCT as the Special Enforcement Program.

The parties acknowledge that their overall objective is:

"In order to address more effectively the accumulation of unreported illicit wealth amassed by Organized Crime and increase the effectiveness of criminal law enforcement and thus cause maximum disruption to Organized Crime, stem the infiltration of legitimate business by criminal elements, and reduce the activities of Organized Crime on society, RCT and the RCMP agree to act in concert with one another in combatting [sic] Organized Crime through enforcement under the Income Tax Act."

[Emphasis added] (AR, p. 136)

[18] Thus, Counsel for the Applicant characterizes the SEP as a "quasi criminal investigatory program" and argues that "members of the SEP are either directly or indirectly involved (as agents of the RCMP or agents of other officers of the Special Investigations Division) in the advancement of criminal investigations" (Applicant's Memorandum, para. 33).

[19] In support of this characterization, Counsel for the Applicant relies on the decision in R. v. Harris, [1995] B.C.J. No. 1467, in which Justice Oliver of the British Columbia Supreme Court upheld a judicial stay of proceedings where the accused was charged with failing to meet the very same type of Requirement as was issued to the Applicant in the present case. Justice Oliver had this to say about the functioning of the SEP:

9. It is uncontradicted that Mr. Anderson, in serving Mr. Harris with the Requirements pursuant to s.231.2(1), was doing so in his capacity as an officer advancing the goals and objectives of the Program. Clearly, the function of the Income Tax Act here as it was used with the "assistance and support of the Department of the Solicitor General, represented by the R.C.M.P." in all fairness cannot be said to be solely regulatory or administrative. Indeed the first step in Anderson's procedure is to identify persons earning income from illegal activities and determine their position in the criminal community. The appellant would have the Court turn a blind eye to the close working relationship between the Department of National Revenue and the R.C.M. Police existing under the Special Enforcement Program. With respect, I am not prepared to do that. It is not the function of the Income Tax Act alone which must be considered in this case (as it was in McKinlay); rather, it is the function of the Income Tax Act in conjunction with the Special Enforcement Program which must be considered. I am in agreement with the Court below which found that McKinlay is distinguishable, and further, that in the context of this case there is a criminal or quasi-criminal function apparent in the procedures and methods which were followed.

[Emphasis added]

[20] Counsel for the Respondent does not dispute that, at the time the Requirement was issued, the Arrangement was still in effect, but in the following argument advances the proposition that its application has changed significantly:

The Applicant fails to refer to the subsequent 2002 publication by the CCRA

Digitized by Google

(Applicant's Application Record, pages 149-163) dealing specifically with the Special Enforcement Program, however. The very first paragraph of that publications casts doubt on the relevance of the older material, and the relevance of the case R. v. Harris, [1993] B.C.J. No. 3140 (B.C. Prov. Ct.) aff'd [1995] B.C.J. No. 1467 (B.C.S.C.), as it states "This [SEP] program has evolved through the years and its focus has shifted from a criminal to a mainly civil approach." Whatever was the situations in 1992, 1993 or 1995, the program clearly had changed by 2002 into one focusing on civil audits rather than criminal investigations. It would appear the focus since 2002 has shifted yet again as it was the evidence of [the Auditor] that currently SEP only conducts audits and not criminal investigations.

This shift is understandable given the Supreme Court of Canada decision in Jarvis and Ling rendered on November 21, 2002. It would strain credulity to argue that, after the clear decision of the SCC in Jarvis and Ling, the CCRA would leave in place an entire program that would use requirement powers to conduct criminal investigations.

...

[21] Counsel for the Applicant responds that, in effect, no measure of self serving statements in the 2002 Guidelines can change the fact that the Arrangement, and actions taken thereunder, are all about prosecution. That is, regardless of the stated purpose in the 2002 Guidelines that "SEP audits are carried out to determine, as accurately as possible, the taxes, duties, interest and penalties payable under the law by those persons earning income from illegal activities", by the Arrangement, the purpose of this action is the investigation of penal liability.

Conclusion on the contest

[22] I find I agree with the Applicant's arguments. In particular, I find that the comments of Justice Oliver in Harris are applicable to the Requirement issued in the present case.

[23] In my opinion, the Arrangement is the most important piece of evidence from which to conclude that the Purpose of issuing the Requirement was to investigate the Applicant's penal liability. The Arrangement provides cogent evidence that this was the CCRA's institutional obligation and intention. A stated purpose of the Arrangement is to "stem the infiltration of legitimate business by criminal elements, and reduce the activities of Organized Crime on society". In addition, by its terms, the RCMP and the CCRA agree to "act in concert with one another in combating organized crime through enforcement under the Income Tax Act". I find it is difficult to understand how stemming the infiltration of, and reducing the activities of, organized crime through "enforcement" can be conducted by the RCMP and the CCRA in any other way but prompt concerted effort to investigate for the Purpose of attempting to ultimately impose penal sanction.

[24] During the course of oral argument, I asked whether there is any doubt that any answer the Applicant might provide to the Requirement would be immediately sent to the RCMP. There was no debate on the point. Acting in concert with the RCMP is to be expected of the CCRA under the Arrangement, and there is no doubt about the RCMP's intention under the Arrangement: the imposition of criminal sanction for wrongdoing. By the same token, as a obliged partner in the Arrangement, I cannot find that the CCRA's institutional Purpose in gathering information, that both partners to the Arrangement might use, is anything but the imposition of penal tax sanction.

[25] I give no weight to the evidence that inside the SEP there is a bureaucratic division between "audit" and "investigation" functions. In my opinion, on an objective examination of all the evidence, the whole of the activity of the SEP is dedicated to the investigation of penal liability, with different roles being performed by different persons. In this respect, I find that the Auditor, in fact, took a preliminary investigative step in issuing the Requirement.

Digitized by Google

[26] I also give no weight to the statements in the 2002 Guidelines that SEP "has evolved through the years and its focus has shifted from a criminal to a mainly civil approach" as proof of the Purpose of issuing the Requirement. It might very well be that a "civil approach" is ultimately adopted in many cases, but this does not mean that the obligation and intention when first approaching a given case is not the imposition of penal sanctions.

The Trial court found for the taxpayer and the RFI was quashed. On Appeal[77], however, the court looked into the issues with a finer eye and held:

[11] Mr. Matheson's first task was to gather information to determine whether an audit should be undertaken. Having the sole conduct of this file, Mr. Matheson issued the Requirement on July 20, 2004. This is the only activity undertaken by Mr. Matheson. There is no evidence of any criminal investigation by the Investigations Division nor was Mr. Ellingson ever interviewed by any CRA official.

IV. ANALYSIS

[12] In Jarvis, the Supreme Court of Canada was called upon to settle the line of demarcation between audits and criminal investigations for income tax purposes pursuant to subsection 231.2(1) of the Act. Writing for a unanimous court, Iacobucci and Major JJ. wrote as follows:

Although the taxpayer and the CCRA [now CRA] are in opposing positions during an audit, when the CCRA exercises its investigative function they are in a more traditional adversarial relationship because of the liberty interest that is at stake. It follows that there must be some measure of separation between the audit and investigative functions within the CCRA.

…

…where the predominant purpose of a particular inquiry is the determination of penal liability, CCRA officials must relinquish the authority to use the inspection and requirement powers under ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1). In essence, officials "cross the Rubicon" when the inquiry in question engages the adversarial relationship between the taxpayer and the state. There is no clear formula that can answer whether or not this is the case. Rather, to determine whether the predominant purpose of the inquiry in question is the determination of penal liability, one must look to all factors that bear upon the nature of that inquiry.

…

…Apart from a clear decision to pursue a criminal investigation, no one factor is necessarily determinative in and of itself, but courts must assess the totality of the circumstances, and make a determination as to whether the inquiry or question in issue engages the adversarial relationship between the state and the individual. [emphasis added]

….

…the test cannot be set at the level of mere suspicion that an offence has occurred. Auditors may, during the course of their inspections, suspect all manner of taxpayer wrongdoing, but it certainly cannot be the case that, from the moment such suspicion is formed, an investigation has begun. [emphasis added]

(See Jarvis, paragraphs 84, 88, 93 and 90)

[13] This predominant purpose test is not a bar to the Minister conducting parallel criminal investigations and audits (see Jarvis at paragraph 97). However, the timing of such processes is important. Auditors can share information they obtain with CRA investigators, provided that the information was gleaned prior to the start of the criminal investigation. At that stage, the adversarial relationship arises and Charter protections are engaged. At paragraph 103 of Jarvis, the Supreme Court of Canada summarized the law in the following words:

[77] 2006 FCA 202

Digitized by Google

…as previously stated, it is clear that, although an investigation has been commenced, the audit powers may continue to be used, though the results of the audit cannot be used in pursuance of the investigation or prosecution. (See also R. v. Ling, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 814 at paragraph 30)

[14] Jarvis requires a reviewing court to consider what the dominant purpose in issuing a requirement was: the conduct of an audit or the pursuit of an investigation. This is a two step test. The first step is to determine whether there is a clear decision to pursue a criminal investigation based on the evidence. If the answer to the first step is yes, the inquiry ends there and the power to issue a requirement can no longer be exercised by the Minister (see for example Kligman v. Canada (Minister of National Revenue), 2004 FCA 152).

[16] In the present case, there is no evidence of a clear decision by either the RCMP or the Investigations Division of the CRA to embark on a criminal investigation. The record is silent on this point. Accordingly an inquiry in accordance with step two of Jarvis must be conducted. Instead of proceeding in that fashion, the Applications Judge chose to state the issue in the following words:

…the sole question for determination is as follows. "When the Auditor made the decision to issue the Requirement, was a penal liability investigation under way?" If the answer is 'yes', on the authority of Jarvis, it is agreed that the Auditor acted beyond his jurisdiction.

[17] That is clearly an error of law. As indicated in Jarvis at paragraphs 97 and 103, audits and investigations are permissible on parallel tracks. The issue of whether the Applications Judge correctly applied the relevant case law to whether the CRA had the jurisdiction to send the Requirement is a question of law, which suggests the least deferential standard of review (see Zenner v. Prince Edward Island College of Optometrists, 2005 SCC 77*)*.

[18] I turn now to an analysis of the Jarvis factors relevant to the Requirement issued to Mr. Ellingson; the key question being whether its predominant purpose was to further a criminal investigation against him. In this analysis, the standard of proof as to whether his Charter rights have been engaged is on a balance of probabilities (see R. v. Collins, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 265).

Factor A – Reasonable Grounds to Lay Charges

[19] At the time the Requirement was issued, the inquiry by the CRA through its audit function was responding to mere suspicion of unreported income from illegal activity. While it was open to the CRA to conduct both a criminal investigation and audit, the evidence does not show that the CRA were doing both. Rather the evidence is that the pre-audit inquiry was but a first step in determining whether Mr. Ellingson was a non-filer for the taxation years 1999 to 2003. Accordingly, I can see no basis on the present evidence to conclude that the CRA had reasonable grounds to lay criminal charges under the Act at this early stage.

Factor B – Basis to Proceed with Criminal Investigation

[20] While Mr. Matheson was unaware of the indictment at the time he issued the Requirement, presumably the Referral and the grand jury indictment could provide a basis upon which an investigation under the Act could be commenced by the RCMP or criminal investigators within the CRA. This factor favours Mr. Ellingson.

Factor C – General Conduct

[21] The general conduct of the CRA with respect to Mr. Ellingson is also not consistent with the pursuit of a criminal investigation, in that the CRA did not issue a search warrant or conduct an interview. Rather its conduct is consistent with simply gathering information to determine whether to commence an audit.

Digitized by Google

Factor D – Have the Files Been Transferred to Investigators

[22] Whether a file has been transferred to an investigator is yet another factor in determining whether an adversarial relationship exists. However, by itself it is not conclusive (see Jarvis at paragraph 92). The present case does not involve a situation where the file is first transferred from the audit to investigation section and then returned to the auditor who then issues a requirement for documents. In such circumstances, the Supreme Court of Canada has directed that courts must pay close attention to determine whether an investigations section has truly declined to pursue the case or whether the auditor is merely collecting information on its behalf.

[23] Here, the file relating to Mr. Ellingson has only been acted upon by Mr. Matheson. It is his undisputed evidence that while the file could have been transferred to the Investigations Division if he had determined that an offence had been committed, that was not done in this case. While it is true that Mr. Matheson does work as an auditor in the SEP unit, which is part of the Investigations Division, the current policy indicates that the SEP unit only conducts audits and Mr. Matheson said that he had never conducted a criminal investigation. Accordingly, there is nothing in this record to suggest that information was exchanged that could give rise to an adversarial relationship.

Factors E and F – Auditor as Agent of Investigators

[24] There is also no evidence of any conduct by Mr. Matheson which could suggest that in his audit function he was being used as an agent of the Investigations Division or the RCMP in the collection of evidence. Rather, the record suggests that there was no contact once Mr. Matheson assumed conduct of the file.

Factor G – Evidence Sought Relevant to Penal Liability Only

[25] In my analysis, the information sought in the Requirement is relevant to Mr. Ellingson's tax liability generally and is not only relevant to penal liability. It contains what can only be viewed as a normal CRA request in a situation where the taxpayer has not filed any tax returns and little or no financial information is available. For example, it sought the actual tax returns for the relevant years so as to be reviewed or verified by Mr. Matheson. It also sought information regarding income sources, assets, liabilities and personal expenditures also necessary so as to determine whether a net worth assessment was warranted. Again, in and of itself, this factor does not point to an adversarial relationship.

Factor H – Other Circumstances – The 1992 Working Arrangement

[26] Key to the Applications Judge's order was his determination that regardless of Mr. Matheson's personal intention, his role as auditor was tainted by the 1992 Working Arrangement. That document obliges the RCMP and the CRA to act in concert to disrupt and combat organized crime in the enforcement of the Act. This, according to the Applications Judge, can only mean cooperative investigations and a sharing of information with the ultimate purpose to impose penal sanctions. Respectfully, I do not read the 1992 Working Arrangement and the surrounding exhibits in that light, especially when the unrefuted evidence of Mr. Matheson is considered.

[27] As early as 1972, the Department of National Revenue, Taxation and the Department of the Solicitor General had a signed protocol in place with the stated objective to disrupt and combat organized crime through criminal prosecutions only. That protocol was replaced by the 1992 Working Arrangement with the same objective, but with a methodology expanded beyond criminal prosecutions to include: identifying those earning income from illegal activities and determining their position in the criminal community, carrying out preliminary investigations in relation to case development, carrying out audits towards assessment/re- assessment where the criteria for tax evasion prosecution is not met and providing the maximum information to the Collections Division in order to maximize actual collection of taxes, penalties and interest.

Digitized by Google

[28] The Applications Judge found it difficult to understand how stemming the activities of organized crime could be carried out other than by investigations for the purpose of imposing criminal sanctions. However, it is self-evident that auditing those involved and issuing a reassessment for taxes, interest and penalties is also highly disruptive to organized crime.

[29] The Applications Judge also gave no weight to a subsequent 2002 publication by the CRA dealing specifically with the Specific Enforcement Program (SEP Manual). While that publication does not have the force of an act or regulation, it can be used to provide legal context and inform decisions. Here, the SEP Manual is a helpful source for discerning the operation of the SEP and should be accorded some weight.

…

[33] This change in focus of the SEP unit is also evident from Mr. Matheson's evidence that since at least the time when he joined the SEP unit in 2001, it only conducts audits and not criminal investigations. Accordingly, there is no evidentiary basis for the Applications Judge's conclusion that at the time that the Requirement was issued in 2004 the SEP unit could only conduct criminal investigations. In reaching that conclusion, the Applications Judge chose to marginalize and ignore Mr. Matheson's evidence and the above provisions of the SEP Manual.

[34] Accordingly, considering the Jarvis Factors, as well as the 1992 Working Arrangement and the SEP Manual and based on a balance of probabilities, I am unable to conclude that Mr. Matheson was acting in any way beyond mere suspicion when he issued the Requirement. On the present facts, an adversarial relationship simply does not arise.

In Hugh Stanfield et al v. The Minister of National Revenue[78] the court had to ascertain whether "the rubicon had been crossed" when a massive audit send-out of RFIs that resulted from SI's involvement with a potential tax loss scheme that was being promoted and there was some seemingly integration between Audit and SI on the matter. It held:

[1] On 17 August 2002 the Minister of National Revenue (the "MNR"), had become concerned about what are characterized as "tax loss arrangements", being in the nature of currency and commodity transactions, spanning a year end, upon which various taxpayers had claimed losses. The MNR therefore sent to the Applicant, Hugh Stanfield, demand in the form of a questionnaire under cover of a letter dated 27 August 2002, the letter containing the statement:

Please be advised that a criminal investigation regarding the promotion of transactions of the type claimed on your income tax return has been undertaken. You are not under investigation at the present time but we wish to advise you that any information submitted may be provided to our Investigations Division for review.

The letter did not say that the recipient would never be under investigation. This uncertainty concerned Mr. Stanfield, who wondered why he should hand over information to the Minister if he was in fact under investigation. He was concerned enough that he sought review of the Minister's demand.

…

[3] The Applicants' position is based upon Jarvis v. The Queen [2002] 3 S.C.R. 757, the effect of which is summed up by Justices Iacobucci and Major, at pages 765-766:

Ultimately, we conclude that compliance audits and tax evasion investigations must be treated differently. While taxpayers are statutorily bound to co-operate with CCRA auditors

[78] 2004 FC 584

Digitized by Google

for tax assessment purposes (which may result in the application of regulatory penalties), there is an adversarial relationship that crystallizes between the taxpayer and the tax officials when the predominant purpose of an official's inquiry is the determination of penal liability. When the officials exercise this authority, constitutional protections against self-incrimination prohibit CCRA officials who are investigating ITA offences from having recourse to the powerful inspection and requirement tools in ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1). Rather, CCRA officials who exercise the authority to conduct such investigations must seek search warrants in furtherance of their investigation.

In essence, taxpayers must cooperate with Canada Customs and Revenue Agency (the "CCRA") audits for tax assessment purposes, even though the result may be a regulatory penalty, but an adversarial relationship crystallizes when the predominant purpose of the inquiry is the determination of a penal liability: when this line is crossed the CCRA no longer has recourse to inspection and requirement procedures under the Income Tax Act, but must obtain search warrants in order to further their investigation.

…

[8] In April 2001 members of the CCRA Investigations Division met with the auditors from the Tax Avoidance Division, who included Ms. Pumple, to share information. As a result of a request by the Investigations Division Ms. Pumple referred various of her files to them and created a chronology for their assistance. At about this point the Investigations Division instructed the Tax Avoidance Division to cease auditing the 1998 and 1999 returns.

[9] The Investigations Division was involved for the purpose of evaluating whether the Applicants were involved in criminal activities. From time to time Ms. Pumple received requests for and forwarded additional information to the Investigations Division. This seems to have been an ongoing process, with Ms. Pumple from time to time taking or seeking directions from the Investigations Division.

[10] Some time after April of 2001 a Mr. Kuhn, of Tax Avoidance in Vancouver, was seconded to work for the Investigations Division in Vancouver. He was a member of what was called the Global Prosperity Group Team in the Investigations Division, working directly with its members, although he held himself out as belonging to Tax Avoidance. From the transcript of the examination of Ms. Pumple it is clear that he at least acted as the liaison person between the Tax Avoidance and the Investigations groups.

11] About a year after the Investigations group became involved, March 2002, the Investigations Division told the Tax Avoidance Division to recommence the audit for 1998, the result being a Notice of Reassessment for 1998.

[12] In July 2002 Investigations told Tax Avoidance to recommence auditing the Applicants for their 1999 and 2000 taxation years. This resulted in Ms. Pumple and various other Tax Avoidance officers sending out letters and attached questionnaires, the subject of the present judicial review application.

[13] Between June 2002 and September 2002 there was a regular exchange of information between Investigations and Tax Avoidance. Examples of the exchange of information show up in a series of emails from Mr. Kuhn, the liaison person between Investigations and Tax Avoidance, instructing CCRA officers as to the audit approach to be taken upon resumption of audit activities. As an example of the interrelationship of the two groups, at the time of the cross-examination of Ms. Pumple, in January of 2003, the tax returns of many of the Applicants were still in the possession of Investigations.

[14] The Applicants set out in the material that Ms. Pumple did not always have personal knowledge and this is reasonable enough given the magnitude of the project. To inform herself Ms. Pumple communicated with other Tax Avoidance officers. She determined where various of the tax returns were located. However she did not make any inquiries of the head office of the CCRA or speak with anyone at Investigations. Counsel for the Applicants goes on to make a case that Ms. Pumple had really only limited knowledge, for she knew nothing about internal communication within the CCRA, the communications path between head office and Investigations, the concept of a tax shelter, and the role of Investigations. She was unable to speak for Investigations. Further, Ms. Pumple did not prepare the letter or questionnaire at issue, although she did sign the letter. The discovery does indicate that Investigations had some input in drafting the letter, specifically I think the advice of the criminal investigation and that the recipient was not at that point under investigation. From the point of view of the Applicants, the evidence of Ms. Pumple and the documents that she brought with her to the cross-examination do not, in their view, make clear the predominant purpose of the investigation itself, the concept of predominant purpose demonstrating, in some instances, in the crystallization of an adversarial relationship. Thus the Applicants submit they are unable to determine both whether an adversarial situation has crystalized and the clear line between provision of information in an audit setting and the right to refuse information, except as against a search warrant, in an investigation setting.

Digitized by Google

…

Minister's Predominant Purpose

[30] Before turning to the requests for individual documents, answers to specific questions and the matter of re-attendance for further cross-examination, I should consider the nature of the predominant purpose test referred to in Jarvis (supra). The propriety of a requested document or answer may depend on their relevancy in the context of the predominant purpose test. More specifically, the Supreme Court of Canada has suggested an open-ended list of factors which may go to indicate whether the line, between a cooperative audit for tax assessment purposes and the crystallization of an adversarial relationship when the predominant purpose of an investigation is a determination of penal liability, has been crossed.

[31] In Jarvis the Supreme Court of Canada speaks of the necessary balance required between the principle against self-crimination and the need to make all evidence available in order to do fundamental justice, in essence a tension between privacy and state interest (see pages 795 and 797). In Jarvis, just as in the present instance, a liberty issue is at stake, there being no presumption of confidentiality, for once an auditor has information or documents, that material may go to the Investigations Division.

[32] The predominant purpose test is not satisfied by a mere suspicion raised by minor contact between auditor and investigator: that does not signify a cross of the Rubicon between the section 231 requirement that documents be produced to an auditor and a clear adversarial relationship between the taxpayer and the Minister.

[33] Jarvis teaches that there is no crystallization until there has been a formal referral of a file to the Investigations Division, however in the present instance, there was such a referral followed by a return of the file to the Audit Division, where upon the Audit Division sent out the 27 July 2002 letter to which was attached the very pointed investigation type questionnaire, raising more than a mere suspicion relating to the predominant purpose.

[34] Certainly, applying Jarvis, where a file has been sent to the Investigations Division, that is a factor going to define the relationship between the taxpayer and the CCRA, just as is the reason for the return of the file from the Investigations Division to the Audit Division. As the Supreme Court of Canada observed at page 806 in Jarvis, one must consider whether the return of the file is because the Investigations Division has declined to take part on the basis there should merely be an audit, or because there is another agenda, that of allowing the Audit Division to use their easy entry into the taxpayer's records to obtain evidence to support a later prosecution and penal liability. Included in the factors to examine which may bear on determination of the one dominant purpose of the CCRA are:

Digitized by Google

Did the authorities have reasonable grounds to lay charges? Does it appear from the record that a decision to proceed with a criminal investigation could have been made?
Was the general conduct of the authorities such that it was consistent with the pursuit of a criminal investigation?
Had the auditor transferred his or her files and materials to the investigators?
Was the conduct of the auditor such that he or she was effectively acting as an agent for the investigators?
Does it appear that the investigators intended to use the auditor as their agent in the collection of evidence?
Is the evidence sought relevant to taxpayer liability generally? Or, as is the case with evidence as to the taxpayer's mens rea, is the evidence relevant only to the taxpayer's penal liability?
Are there any other circumstances or factors that can lead the trial judge to the conclusion that the compliance audit had in reality become a criminal investigation?
[Jarvis at 806-807] This list contains a broad range of factors and moreover is, as I have said, open-ended.
…
[36] Just as there may be no clear and absolute line between a CCRA investigation and a CCRA audit there is, in the present instance, no clear and absolute evidence indicating whether the predominant purpose has gone from an initial audit intent, to an investigative and penal intent and whether it reverted to an audit purpose when the file subsequently went from the Investigations Division to the Audit Division, for there is no clear indication that the audit process will be the final disposition. As I read the transcript of the cross-examination of Ms. Pumple, who signed the 27 August 2002 letter, it is, as set out in that letter, that the Applicants are not presently under investigation, although "... a criminal investigation regarding the promotion of transactions of the type claimed on your income tax return has been undertaken.". The 27 August 2002 letter is thus far from an assurance that the Applicants are not at risk of a very real criminal investigation. Moreover, the cross-examination of Ms. Pumple establishes that she had no direct personal knowledge that the Applicants were not under criminal investigation and that she had made no inquiries of the Investigations Division personnel who might have personal or direct knowledge as to what the Investigations Division intended of the criminal investigation.
[37] Here I accept various indicia, as submitted by counsel for the Applicants, that those individuals reasonably believed that they had been and perhaps continue to be under investigation by the Investigations Division for a number of reasons including:
The files of the Applicants went to the Investigations Division in April of 2001.
From that time until at least January of 2003 there was regular contact between the Audit Division and the Investigations Division as to the 1998 through 2001 taxation years.
An Audit Division's employee, Mr. Kuhn, worked with the Investigations Division for some time, although still maintaining, or holding himself out as a member of the Audit Division.
In March 2002 the Investigations Division instructed the Audit Division to recommence gathering information for the 1998 taxation year.
In July of 2002 the Investigations Division instructed the Audit Division to recommence gathering information in respect of the 1999 and 2000 taxation years and at that point the Audit Division sent out letters and questionnaires, the questionnaire being a point to which I will shortly return.
Between June of 2002 and September of 2002 there was a regular exchange of information and emails between the Investigations Division and the Audit Division as to the approach to be taken on resumption of audit activities.

Digitized by Google

All of this reasonably raises alarm, on the part of the Applicants, that they may still be under investigation, or at least that there may be a clearly contemplated investigation and that for practical purposes there has been a crystallization of an adversarial relationship between the applicant taxpayers and the tax officials, with the predominant purpose of the inquiry being the determination of penal liability, once documents have been gathered from the Applicants by the Audit Division through the so-called cooperative approach with the taxpayers.

[38] Counsel for the Applicants urged a thoughtful reading of the questionnaire sent out by the CCRA with the 27 August 2002 letter. The letter itself calls upon the taxpayers to produce a very thorough and comprehensive package of documents and information. In effect it is a letter requesting books and records: the questionnaire clearly goes far beyond being a request for books and records, but seeks a good deal of information which either was clearly not covered in the extensive production request in the letter and indeed, looks for information which one might be hard pressed to justify merely on the basis of an audit. A thoughtful reading of the questionnaire can easily lead one to the conclusion that the questionnaire was not something dictated by the needs of and drafted by the Audit Division, but rather is a far more pointed and searching request for information which could well have bearing on the criminal investigation. Finally, and this has direct bearing on the provision of answers and production of documents well before June of 2002, Ms. Pumple did agree, in cross-examination, that the review by the CCRA of the 1998 taxation year was connected to an ongoing review of the taxation years 1999 through 2001, and that investigations undertaken by the CCRA dealt not only with the 1998 taxation year, but also with the 1999 through 2001 taxation years. Indeed, it is fair to say that investigations as to the 1998 taxation year were relevant to the subsequent three taxation years, all being a part of one investigation over a number of years.

At Trial on the issue[79] the Trial Ct. further held:

[1] This is an application for judicial review in respect of a request for audit information by the Minister of National Revenue ("Minister") contained in letters and questionnaires sent to each of the Applicants between August and October 2002. The Applicants have opposed responding to these letters and questionnaires on the basis that the request was not done for audit purposes but rather, for criminal investigation purposes. The Applicants seek an Order declaring that the letters, including the questionnaires, requesting the information are invalid or unlawful, and furthermore, an Order prohibiting or restraining the Minister from taking any action or proceedings against the Applicants for their failure to respond to the letters and questionnaires.

ISSUES

[2] Was the issuance of the letters and questionnaires within the parameters of the audit functions as contained in subsection 231.1(1) of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.) (the "Act")?

[3] If necessary, does this action by the Minister then engage the Applicants' rights pursuant to section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, s. 7, Part I of the Constitution Act, 1982, being Schedule B to the Canada Act 1982 (U.K.), 1982, c. 11 (the "Charter")?

…

[10] From April 4 to 6, 2001, Rod Jamieson ("Mr. Jamieson") and Chris Fleming ("Mr. Fleming"), investigators with the investigations division in Vancouver ("Investigations"), met with some of the Audits personnel, including Ms. Pumple and Larry Kuhn ("Mr. Kuhn"), an auditor in the Vancouver office, in order to discuss commodities trading losses and the financing of these losses by some of the taxpayers by means of loans from a certain Yukon company. Specifically, CCRA had learned from a newspaper article that some people had been arrested in the U.S. in relation to a similar tax evasion scheme. Also, a taxpayer's lawyer in Penticton, British Columbia, had told an auditor that his client wished to meet with CCRA officers in order to discuss why these commodities trading and financing schemes were considered frauds. The taxpayer met with Mr. Kuhn and Mr. Fleming. As a result of this interview, Mr. Jamieson announced on April 6th, 2001 to all auditors during a conference call that "the audit was now considered a criminal investigation ... [and] that no contact [should] be made by tax avoidance auditors with any taxpayers or their representatives on these files and that no further work [should] be done at the present time" (see memo to file dated April 6th, 2001, in volume 5 of the Applicants' Record at page 811).

[79] Hugh Stanfield et al v. The Minister of National Revenue, 2005 FC 1010

Digitized by Google

[11] As a consequence, copies of the partially-audited tax return files of all the taxpayers (including the Applicants) were transferred to Investigations. On June 3rd, 2002, Mr. Fleming informed Audits that he wanted the original tax returns of all the taxpayers, promoters and any other relevant persons, including the returns of all of the Applicants, to be kept by Investigations for prosecution purposes in case such became necessary (such as forensic tests, original signatures of taxpayers for evidence purposes, etc.) (see email from Mr. Fleming to Ms. Pumple dated June 3rd, 2002, in volume 3 of the Applicants' Record at page 631). As of June 2nd, 2004, the control of the taxpayers' original returns was still with Mr. Fleming in Investigations. The information was maintained on 9 compact discs containing 18,000 pages of documents on the schemes and each individual taxpayer. As an example, about 500 of these pages concerned Mr. Stanfield's returns (see the affidavit of Ron D.F. Wilhelm dated June 18, 2004, counsel for the Department of Justice, in volume 1 of the Applicants' Record at pages 43 and 46-48).

[12] From the beginning of the investigation until late August 2002, Ms. Pumple kept in regular contact with Investigations by answering technical matters, giving advice, and supplying further information when needed. She even sought Mr. Fleming's consent for her 2002 holidays even though she was an auditor and not an investigator (see email from Ms. Pumple to Mr. Fleming dated June 3rd, 2002, in volume 3 of the Applicants' Record at page 630). As will be discussed later on in these reasons, Ms. Pumple kept in contact with Mr. Fleming even after August 2002 (see paragraph 20 of this decision).

[13] From November 28th, 2001 to September 9th, 2002, Mr. Kuhn, auditor of thirteen (13) Applicants, was seconded to work for Investigations in Vancouver. He also acted as "liaison" between Audits and Investigations. He was actively involved in all matters of the investigation and was of "tremendous help" to investigators (see email from Cheryl Hildebrand to Mr. Fleming dated August 29, 2002, in volume 4 of the Applicants' Record at page 710).

[14] In March 2002, Investigations gave the "green light" to Audits to recommence auditing the 1998 tax returns of the Applicants. Notices of Reassessment were forwarded to the Applicants in the spring and summer of 2002. These disallowed the commodity losses claimed and levied penalties pursuant to subsection 163(2) of the Act. The Applicants filed appeals against these reassessments.

…

[17] Early in July 2002, Investigations told Audits to recommence auditing the 1999-2000 returns of the Applicants. A verbal green light was given by Investigations. This directive from Investigations was given by Mr. Kuhn (on secondment) to auditors at a meeting in Edmonton held on July 3rd and 4th, 2002. Mr. Kuhn advised that:

Digitized by Google

Vancouver SI had given the green light to go ahead on resuming contact with the investors for all years and all schemes ... should the taxpayer wish to provide any information on how the scheme works ... we should immediately refer the taxpayer to Vancouver SI and not take the information ourselves ... if we are able to arrange an interview ... we should advise Vancouver SI prior ... the taxpayer should be informed that they are NOT under investigation however, there is an investigation ongoing ...

…

SUMMARY OF THE SUBMISSIONS OF THE PARTIES

The Applicants

[23] The Applicants submit that the predominant purpose of the letters and questionnaires was to further a criminal investigation. Pursuant to ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) of the Act, the Minister may exercise inspection and requirement powers, but this authority is not allowed where the predominant purpose of the inquiry is to determine penal liability.

[24] The Applicants claim that it is clear in the circumstances that Audits had transferred its files to Investigations, and that nothing in the file shows that Investigations ever actually ended their investigation of the Applicants. The auditor Ms. Pumple was therefore effectively acting as an agent for Investigations. Investigations and Audits were in regular communication regarding the Applicants' files. There was no reason for Audits to desire the information requested in the letters and questionnaires, other than to obtain information for Investigations, since, in the Applicants' submission, Audits already had determined the basis for the reassessment of the Applicants' 1999 taxation year.

[25] Finally, the Applicants submit that a number of other factors give the appearance that Investigations was using Audits as its agent in the collection of evidence, including the wording of the letters themselves, Mr. Kuhn's dual role within Investigations and Audits, Ms. Pumple's assertion that Investigations had given Audits a "green light" to continue its audits despite the fact that no such evidence is in the file, and the fact that many of the Applicants' files continued to be held by Investigations despite the resumption of the audits.

[26] The Applicants believe that allowing the Minister to proceed with its request for information at this point, two years after the normal reassessment period for the Applicants has expired, and in this manner, asking for information which can only be reasonably used for the purposes of investigation, would be an abuse of process by the tax authorities. The letters and questionnaires clearly promote a criminal tax investigation rather than a civil reassessment, and should be declared invalid or unlawful pursuant to s. 7 of the Charter.

The Respondent

[27] The Respondent claims that the letters and questionnaires are properly issued and a necessary tool to better determine the Applicants' tax liability for 1999 and 2000. Without an understanding of how the 1998 arrangements worked, Audits will be unable to properly reassess the Applicants' 1999 and 2000 taxation years.

[28] The purpose of the letter, issued pursuant to s. 231.1(1) of the Act, was to verify compliance by the Applicants with the duties and obligations imposed upon them by the Act, and in particular, to verify whether they correctly reported their taxable income under the Act for that year. The requests in the letter were standard. The questionnaire itself was developed in order to understand the tax aspect of the transactions as well as whether the Applicants had invested in non-qualified investments for RRSP purposes. Both were drafted by persons in Audits without input from Investigations, with the exception of the second paragraph of the letter dealing with the criminal investigation, which was drafted by Mr. Fleming.

Digitized by Google

[29] The Respondent further submits that none of the Applicants were under criminal investigation at the time Audits was told by Investigations that it could recommence its audits. It is standard practice that audits are not conducted while investigations are ongoing and that audits will only recommence once advised accordingly by Investigations. This sequence of events, of files moving from Audits to Investigations then back to Audits, is not uncommon. It is also not uncommon that personnel confer with each other as necessary, or that occasionally an auditor will be seconded to Investigations. None of these practices, in the particular circumstances of this case, can be shown to amount to abuse.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

[30] For the purpose of the present decision, the most relevant provisions of the Act are ss. 231.1(1), 231.2(1) and 239(1). These are attached to this decision as an annexe for reference.

[31] No explicit right of review is granted in s. 231.1(1). In determining the appropriate standard of review for decisions made pursuant to this section, Wilson J. for the Court in R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627, stated at page 648 that "the Minister of National Revenue must be given broad powers in supervising this regulatory scheme to audit taxpayers' returns and inspect all records which may be relevant to the preparation of these returns." These powers are explained further by Iacobucci and Major JJ. in R. v. Jarvis, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 757 at 788-89 (Jarvis):

The sections within Part XV of the ITA provide the Minister with "Administration and Enforcement" powers. They also impose reciprocal obligations upon taxpayers: for example, in furtherance of the overall reporting and verification scheme, s. 230(1) of the ITA requires all taxpayers, for various specified periods of time, to maintain books and records of account at their place of business or residence in Canada. These documents must be kept "in such form and containing such information as will enable the taxes payable under [the ITA] or the taxes or other amounts that should have been deducted, withheld or collected to be determined."

The provisions that are central to the instant appeal vest the Minister with extensive powers that may be used "for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement" of the ITA. Section 231.1(1) continues the inspection power that was introduced in An Act to amend the Income War Tax Act, S.C. 194, c. 43, s. 11. Paragraph (a) allows a person authorized by the Minister to "inspect, audit or examine" a wide array of documents, reaching beyond those that the ITA otherwise requires the taxpayer to prepare and maintain. In the course of the inspection, audit or examination, para. (c) provides that the authorized person may enter into any premises or place that is not a dwelling-house; furthermore, para. (d) imposes a correlative duty upon persons at the premises or place to provide "all reasonable assistance and to answer all proper questions relating to the administration or enforcement of this Act.

[32] In James Richardson & Sons, Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, [1984] 1 S.C.R. 614 (James Richardson), the Supreme Court, in its review of a previous decision (Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Attorney General of Canada, [1962] S.C.R. 729) which was based on s. 231(3) of the Act (roughly the equivalent of today's s. 231.2(1), but with broader wording than s. 231.1(1)), outlined four criteria that serve to narrow the interpretation of that section:

(a) the test of whether the Minister is acting for a purpose specified in the Act is an objective one and has to be decided on the proper interpretation of the subsection and its application to the circumstances disclosed;

the obtaining of information relevant to the tax liability of some specific person or persons

Digitized by Google

whose liability to tax is under investigation is a purpose related to the administration or enforcement of the Act;
it is not necessary that the person from whom the information is sought be one whose liability to tax is under investigation;
the fact that giving of the information may disclose private transactions involving persons who are not under investigation and may not be liable to tax does not invalidate the requirement.
[My emphasis.]

[33] Relying on the jurisprudence reviewed above, especially factor a) outlined in James Richardson, and keeping in mind the Federal Court of Appeal's approach in Kligman v. Canada (Minister of National Revenue), [2004] F.C.J. No. 639 (Kligman), the Court views the question before it as being one of applying facts to a particular legal situation. That is to say, the Court must look at the exact facts of this case in order to determine whether the predominant purpose of the letters and questionnaires was one of audits or investigations. Although this litigation is a fact-finding mission, it remains that it is a question of mixed fact and law - see Jarvis, supra at para. 100; Housen v. Nikolaisen, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235 at para. 27; Kligman, supra, at paras. 97-111 - and therefore the applicable standard of review is that of correctness.

THE GUIDING FACTORS

[34] The guiding factors to assess whether, at the time the letters and questionnaires were created and then issued, CCRA was exercising an audit function or an investigative one, were established by the Supreme Court in Jarvis, supra.

[35] We learn from the Act and the Jarvis decision that the process of tax collection relies on the assessment and reporting done by individual taxpayers. There is an obligation on taxpayers to estimate their yearly income and to assess and disclose the income tax consequently payable on their income tax return which they are obliged to file. The success of such a system depends fully on the honesty, integrity and collaboration of taxpayers. Only then do CCRA's audit powers, which permit auditors to examine and assess income tax returns within a certain period of time (according to ss. 152(3) and (4) of the Act, reassessments can be made within three years of filing) come into play ("the statute-bar problem"). Furthermore, the audit powers granted to CCRA provide for penalties where tax returns are not filed or are inaccurate. An audit is not a criminal process but an administrative one which does not trigger the implication of Charter rights.

[36] CCRA also has at its disposal investigative functions which are completely distinct from its audit functions. The purpose of these investigative functions is to investigate cases of importance which might divulge schemes of suspected tax evasion of a criminal nature which are punishable as criminal offences pursuant to s. 239 of the Act. The investigative functions include the collection of evidence for prosecutorial purposes. When exercising its investigative functions, CCRA and the taxpayer are in an "adversarial relationship", bringing into play the whole panoply of constitutional protections against self-incrimination, including the right to remain silent.

[37] Therefore, how should a trial judge assess a situation of an audit requirement to provide documents and information when there is evidence of a possible concurrent criminal investigation or an investigation that had begun but was later stopped?

In our view, where the predominant purpose of a particular inquiry is the determination of penal liability, CCRA must relinquish the authority to use the inspection and requirement powers under ss 231.1(1) and 231.2(1). In essence, officials "cross the Rubicon" when the inquiry in question engages the adversarial relationship between the taxpayer and the state.

Digitized by Google

[39] While indicating that CCRA can conduct parallel criminal investigations and administrative audits, the judges at para. 97 make the following precision:

However, if an investigation into penal liability is subsequently commenced, the investigators can avail themselves of that information obtained pursuant to the audit power prior to the commencement of the criminal investigation, but not with respect to information obtained pursuant to such powers subsequent to the commencement of the investigation into penal liability.

Thus, the transfer of information from Audits to Investigations is not forbidden as long as there is no "commencement of the investigation into penal liability." What is the situation if such an investigation has begun but later stopped, and then an audit requirement is made, such as is the situation in the present case? Subject to analysis later in these reasons, there must be a clear indication that the penal investigation has in reality stopped in order to permit the flow of information from Audits to Investigations.

[40] The judges in Jarvis, supra, also express, at para. 92, their thoughts on the location of a file (i.e., whether it is held by Audits or Investigations) as a matter of inquiry, though this, in itself, is not determinative:

Still, if in an auditor's judgement a matter should be sent to the investigators, a Court must examine the following behaviour very closely. If the file is sent back, does it appear that the investigators have actually declined to take up the case and have returned the matter so that the audit can be completed? Or, does it appear rather, that they have sent the file back as a matter of expediency, so that the auditor may use ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) to obtain evidence for a prosecution.

First, the Court notes that the word "appear" is used twice. Appearance is different from factual reality in that appearance must be assessed through the eyes of a neutral observer who has general knowledge of similar situations, and not through the eyes of one of the Applicants. A neutral, unbiased assessment must be done. Second, the situation is here further complicated since the originals of the Applicants' files were still being held by Investigations even though the criminal investigation had allegedly stopped. As the evidence shows, as of June 2004, the originals of most of the files (including Mr. Stanfield's own 500-page file) were under the control of team leader investigator Mr. Fleming. This is a full two (2) years after the criminal investigation had ended.

…

[44] Lastly, the Court has to look at the situation that would result should the Minister be deprived of the results of the letters' and questionnaires' requests for documents and information. Will that create an unacceptable situation, or will the Respondent still be in a position to achieve its audits objective? This last factor is not determinative of the issues but helps in assessing the prejudice alleged by the Respondent.

…

[46] In order to determine the answers to these questions, the evidence will be assessed according to the preponderance of proof as required in such a situation. That is to say, the Applicants do not have to prove that the Respondent issued the letters and questionnaires with the intention of furthering a criminal investigation; rather, they must show that the predominant purpose of the letters and questionnaires was to garner information for such an investigation. There need only be a preponderance of evidence which supports that finding: see, e.g., Kligman, supra, at paras. 11 and 13. This is also made clear by the wording of the factors enumerated in Jarvis above at paragraph 38, in that many of the criteria are worded in relative, not absolute, terms; i.e., whether it "appears" from the record that a decision to proceed with criminal charges "could have been" made, whether the "general conduct" of the authorities was "consistent" with the pursuit of a criminal investigation, whether the auditor's "conduct" indicated he or she was "effectively

Digitized by Google

acting" as an agent for Investigations, whether it "appears" that Investigations was using Audits' powers for investigative purposes, etc.
Without getting into the particulars of the fact situation of what CRA had specifically done and asked here, the Ct. held:
CONCLUSION
[74] Therefore, having decided, based on the particular facts of this case, that the predominant purpose of the letters and questionnaires was to aid in the furtherance of a criminal investigation, it was not within the parameters of the audit functions as contained in section 231.1(1) of the Act for the Minister to issue the letters and questionnaires, at least at the time and in the manner this was done. Additionally, since the predominant purpose was a criminal investigation involving the Applicants, the Applicants' Charter rights were engaged, specifically the right to remain silent and to avoid self-incrimination.

In Les Plastiques Algar (Canada) Ltée, Modern Wood Fabricators (M.W.F.) Inc., Snapshot Theatrical Productions Inc. (Indexed as Kligman v. MNR) v. Minister Of National Revenue[80] the Appeal Ct. had to consider the taxpayer's argument as to whether a RFI was to be respected if it would lead to penal processes under the Act when CRA attempted to argue that even if it would, at that later stage, it would be argued, maybe successfully, that it would be excluded evidence. It held[81]:

[3] I do not accept the respondent's contention that the appellants should comply with the requirements and, as it was done in R. v. Jarvis, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 757, later oppose the admissibility into evidence of the information thus provided. In Jarvis, the documents had already been obtained and the only option left to the accused in his criminal trial for tax evasion was to object to their admissibility. The respondent's contention means that a taxpayer would be prohibited from asserting preventively his Charter right to protection against unreasonable searches and seizures and from impeding its imminent violation. He would only be entitled to apply for a discretionary remedy under section 24 (2) of the Charter. This would seriously undermine the beneficial and protective effect of the Charter.

[4] In Hunter v. Southam Inc., [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145, at page 160, Dickson J. stressed the importance of prior authorization before a search is conducted:

If the issue to be resolved in assessing the constitutionality of searches under s. 10 were in fact the governmental interest in carrying out a given search outweighed that of the individual in resisting the governmental intrusion upon his privacy, then it would be appropriate to determine the balance of the competing interests after the search had been conducted. Such a post facto analysis would, however, be seriously at odds with the purpose of s. 8. That purpose is, as I have said, to protect individuals from unjustified state intrusions upon their privacy. That purpose requires a means of preventing unjustified searches before they happen, not simply of determining, after the fact, whether they ought to have occurred in the first place. This, in my view, can only be accomplished by a system of prior authorization, not one of subsequent validation.

(Emphasis in

[80] 2004 FCA 152
[81] I have quoted this case extensively since it shows the differing view-points of how CRA handles a file and what Charter protections are prompted thereby, after Jarvis.

Digitized by Google

original)
Wilson J. extended this rationale to seizures in Thomson Newspapers Ltd. v. Canada (Director of Investigation and Research, Restrictive Trade Practices Commission), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 425. At paragraph 93, she wrote:
In my opinion, Dickson J.'s remarks with regard to searches are equally applicable to seizures. It makes no sense to say that s. 8 is only engaged once the private information becomes public. If that were the case, the protections afforded by s. 8 would be completely illusory. The fact that an individual can challenge the validity of the order before producing the documents goes, in my opinion, not to the question whether a seizure has occurred but to the question whether the seizure is a reasonable one.

(Emphasis added)

[5] Furthermore, I believe that the Supreme Court made it clear, in the Jarvis case, supra, that subsection 231.2(1) of the Act is not available for the purpose of criminal investigations, i.e. investigations whose predominant purpose is to establish the penal liability of the taxpayer. At pages 803-804 and 809, Iacobucci and Major JJ. wrote in this respect:
In our view, where the predominant purpose of a particular inquiry is the determination of penal liability, CCRA officials must relinquish the authority to use the inspection and requirement powers under ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1)...
Put another way, the requirement powers of ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) cannot be used to compel oral statements or written production for the purpose of advancing the criminal investigation...

In summary, wherever the predominant purpose of an inquiry or question is the determination of penal liability, criminal investigatory techniques must be used. As a corollary, all Charter protections that are relevant in the criminal context must apply.

(My emphasis)
These conclusions of the Supreme Court mean that, in the context of a criminal investigation, barring exigent circumstances, searches and seizures are subject for their validity to prior judicial authorization. Their legality cannot be secured by an after-the-fact validation as it turned out to be the case in the present instance.
[6] I should add that the Supreme Court's conclusions relating to the availability of the requirement powers in subsection 231.2(1) of the Act do not distinguish between a physical and a corporate taxpayer: such powers are not available for the purpose of advancing a criminal investigation. I agree with my colleague that the motions judge, after having found that the investigation was a criminal investigation, could not use Charter considerations to authorize the use of the requirement powers. The Charter protections are a corollary to a finding that the investigation is a criminal investigation. They cannot be resorted to in order to undermine, or circumvent, the legal consequences of that finding.
The determination of a preliminary issue

[7] Whether the inquiry's predominant purpose was to establish the penal liability of the taxpayers was a key issue common to all five applicants before the motions judge. Two of the applicants were individuals who were the directors of the three other corporate applicants. The conclusion of the judge was adverse to the Minister who did not appeal it with respect to the two individuals. However, the Minister attacked that conclusion in the context of this appeal by the corporate appellants.

Digitized by Google

[8] At the hearing, an issue arose as to whether the Minister could re-litigate this adverse conclusion without either appealing it or filing a cross-appeal in the present appeal. The Minister, having failed to appeal against the decision favourable to the two individuals on this issue, the argument goes, would be prohibited from seeking a reversal of that conclusion. Concerns were expressed about the possibility of conflicting decisions whereby the very same inquiry would receive two different and incompatible qualifiers: criminal in nature for two of the applicants and civil or administrative for the other three.

[9] Upon careful consideration of the matter, I have come to the conclusion that the doctrine of issue estoppel, which can arise when a party wants to re-litigate an issue that has been decided in an earlier case, does not apply in the present case because there is no identity of parties acting in the same qualities: Toronto (City) v. Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 79 (C.U.P.E.) 2003, S.C.C. 63, paragraph 23; Blueberry River Indian Band v. Canada (Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development), [2001] 4 F.C. 451, paragraph 45. The doctrine requires for its application that the parties to the earlier judicial decision on the issue be the same as the parties to the proceedings in which the estoppel is raised. The corporate applicants are legal entities and parties different from the individuals.

[10] I am also satisfied that the Minister did not have to file a cross-appeal under Rule 341 of the Federal Court Rules, 1998 because he is not seeking a different disposition of the order appealed from. He is, in fact, simply submitting an additional reason for which the order should be maintained and, therefore, the appeal dismissed.

Whether the motions judge erred in finding that the investigation was a criminal investigation

[11] Unlike my colleague, I believe that the motions judge committed no error when he came to the conclusion that the appellants were the subject of a criminal investigation. The motions judge found that there was overwhelming evidence to that effect on the record. Unfortunately, he mentioned only one reason in support of his finding, namely, that investigator Faribault, whose function at the Special Investigation (SI) branch of the Canadian Customs and Revenue Agency (CCRA) was to investigate and gather evidence of a tax evasion offence (see his testimony at pages 113, 119-120 and 124 of the Appeal Book), admitted that such was the purpose of the investigation. At paragraph 90 of his reasons for order, he wrote:

The evidence on the record as a whole leads to the conclusion that the predominant purpose of the investigation of CCRA, from its outset, was prosecution of the applicants for tax evasion and eventual imposition of penal sanctions against them. The statements on discovery by Faribault are not the only indicia of this predominant purpose; they are simply among the most succinct elements of evidence which support this conclusion. Accordingly, I find that the predominant purpose of the investigation was prosecution of the applicants for tax evasion.

(My emphasis)

I will come back later to the impact of that witness' statement.

[12] In Jarvis, at paragraph 94, the Supreme Court gave a non-exhaustive list of

Digitized by Google

factors to be considered in determining whether the relationship between the state and a taxpayer has reached a point where it has become adversarial:

In this connection, the trial judge will look at all factors, including but not limited to such questions as:

À cet égard, le juge de première instance examinera tous les facteurs, y compris les suivants :

(a) Did the authorities have reasonable grounds to lay charges? Does it appear from the record that a decision to proceed with a criminal investigation could have been made?

a) Les autorités avaient-elles des motifs raisonnables de porter des accusations? Semble-t-il, au vu du dossier, que l'on aurait pu prendre la décision de procéder à une enquête criminelle?

(b) Was the general conduct of the authorities such that it was consistent with the pursuit of a criminal investigation?

b) L'ensemble de la conduite des autorités donnait-elle à croire que celles-ci procédaient à une enquête criminelle?

(c) Had the auditor transferred his or her files and materials to the investigators?

c) Le vérificateur avait-il transféré son dossier et ses documents aux enquêteurs?

(d) Was the conduct of the auditor such that he or she was effectively acting as an agent for the investigators?

d) La conduite du vérificateur donnait-elle à croire qu'il agissait en fait comme un mandataire des enquêteurs?

(e) Does it appear that the investigators intended to use the auditor as their agent in the collection of evidence?

e) Semble-t-il que les enquêteurs aient eu l'intention d'utiliser le vérificateur comme leur mandataire pour recueillir des éléments de preuve?

(f) Is the evidence sought relevant to taxpayer liability generally? Or, as is the case with evidence as to the taxpayer's mens rea, is the evidence relevant only to the taxpayer's penal liability?

f) La preuve recherchée est-elle pertinente quant à la responsabilité générale du contribuable ou, au contraire, uniquement quant à sa responsabilité pénale, comme dans le cas de la preuve de la mens rea?

(g) Are there any other circumstances or factors that can lead the trial judge to the conclusion that the compliance audit had in reality become a criminal investigation?

g) Existe-t-il d'autres circonstances ou facteurs susceptibles d'amener le juge de première instance à conclure que la vérification de la conformité à la loi était en réalité devenue une enquête criminelle?

[13] These factors are designed to assist in the determination of the predominant purpose of an inquiry. They apply unless there is a clear decision to pursue a criminal investigation. At paragraph 93, before listing the factors, the Supreme Court wrote:

Digitized by Google

To reiterate, the determination of when the relationship between the state and the individual has reached the point where it is effectively adversarial is a contextual one, which takes account of all relevant factors. In our opinion, the following list of factors will assist in ascertaining whether the predominant purpose of an inquiry is the determination of penal liability. Apart from a clear decision to pursue a criminal investigation, no one factor is necessarily determinative in and of itself, but courts must assess the totality of the circumstances, and make a determination as to whether the inquiry or question in issue engages the adversarial relationship between the state and the individual.

(My emphasis)

The evidence reveals that such a decision was made.

[14] In the present instance, the SI branch of the CCRA began, on November 12, 1998, a criminal investigation of a number of charitable organizations with respect to charitable donations. Targeted were the "Rabbinical College of Montreal", "Construit toujours avec Bonté", "Yeshiva Oir Hochaim", "L'Association Gimilis Chasodim Chava B'nei Levi" and others. It investigated tax evasion offences under section 239 of the Act which are criminal in nature: Knox Contracting Ltd. v. Canada, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 338, at pages 350 and 356. The appellants had made very substantial donations to the Rabbinical College of Montreal and, in one case, to Yeshiva Oir Hochaim. I reproduce the three lists of donations as they appear in the Appeal Book:

MODERN WOOD FABRICATORS (M.W.F.) INC.
LIST OF DONATIONS

Year ended February 28, 1993
College Rabinique de Montreal	54 000 $
Year ended February 28, 1994
College Rabinique de Montreal	212 000
Year ended February 28, 1995
College Rabinique de Montreal	128 000
Year ended February 28, 1996
College Rabinique de Montreal	200 000
Yeshiva Oir Hochaim	100 000
Year ended February 28, 1998
College Rabbinique	50 000

* *

LES PLASTIQUES ALGAR (Canada) Ltée
LIST OF DONATIONS

Year ended May 31, 1994
College Rabbinical de Montreal	86 000 $
Year ended May 31, 1995
College Rabinique de Montreal	72 000
College Rabinique de Montreal	18 000
Year ended May 31, 1996
College Rabbinique de Mtl	36 000

Digitized by Google

Year ended May 31, 1997
College Rabbinique de Mtl 100 000
Year ended May 31, 1998
College Rabbinique de Mtl 50 000

* *

SNAPSHOT THEATRICAL PRODUCTIONS
LIST OF DONATIONS

Year ended December 31, 1994
College Rabbinique de Montreal 36 000 $

[15] Therefore, in October 1999, in the context of that criminal investigation, the CCRA began an investigation of the appellants. It sent an informal requirement to one of them, Les Plastiques Algar (Algar), requesting various documents and informations, relative to donations made to the Rabbinical College of Montreal, including charitable donations receipts, with respect to taxation years 1994 to 1998. The following month, the CCRA informed Algar that the investigation against it was suspended. However, in the meantime, the criminal investigations continued against the targeted beneficiaries of the charitable donations.

[16] A charge of tax evasion under section 239 of the Act was laid against the charitable organization "Construit toujours avec Bonté" and the organization pleaded guilty on September 20, 2000 to that charge which consisted in the delivery of false charitable gift receipts. On September 21, 2000, the SI branch of the CCRA completed the investigation of the Rabbinical College of Montreal and, for reasons that were not provided to us, no criminal charges were laid against that institution.

[17] On October 18, 2000, the SI branch of the CCRA informed Algar that its file had been internally reassigned to another investigator by the name of Faribault. On January 12, 2002, investigator Faribault, on behalf of the Minister, sent letters to the three appellants requesting various documents and informations, such as cancelled cheques, bank statements, donation receipts and accounting books and records, all related to the donations to the Rabbinical College of Montreal.

[18] I have related these facts in chronological order because they shed a needed light on the context in which the appellants were summoned to provide information pursuant to subsection 231.2(1) of the Act. An investigation was actually undertaken with respect to false charitable donations and receipts. The investigation first looked at the recipients of the donations. Evidently, a fraudulent scheme of that nature requires, for success, the participation of accomplices, i.e. donors. I believe that the SI branch of the CCRA then turned its attention to the search and identification of the accomplices as well as to the search of evidence which could incriminate them and, by the same token, the charitable organizations which received the fraudulent donations. In fact, the investigation by Mr. Faribault was purely an extension of the so far unsuccessful criminal investigation directed initially towards the Rabbinical College of Montreal. Mr. Faribault was now trying to obtain evidence of fraud by looking at the same matter, but from a different perspective, i.e. that of the donors.

[19] Indeed, Mr. Faribault, at page 132 of the Appeal Book, admitted that much in his cross-examination under oath:

Q - [Me Rheault] Alors, votre objectif, donc... si je comprends bien, votre objectif principal à l'égard des requérants était d'établir qu'ils avaient commis une évasion fiscale, c'est ça?

R - [M. Faribault] Enquêter l'évasion fiscale, oui...

Digitized by Google

Q - [Me Rheault] Oui.
R - [M. Faribault] ... c'est...
Q - [Me Rheault] Mais si évidemment, ça arrivait pas en bout de ligne, vous avez toujours l'opportunité de cotiser au civil?
R - [M. Faribault] Voilà.
Q - [Me Rheault] O.K. O.K. Mais vous êtes pas en train de me dire que votre objectif principal dans le dossier ici, c'était simplement d'établir des cotisations d'impôt?
R - [M. Faribault] Non...

(My emphasis)

[20] Counsel for the respondent, in an effort to attenuate the adverse impact of that admission, contends that that statement of Mr. Faribault merely represents his personal views or motivation. He relies upon a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in United States v. La Salle National Bank, 98 S.Ct. 2357, at page 2367, (1978), which held that while a special agent is an important actor in the process, his motivation is hardly dispositive of the issue. With respect, I think that, in the present factual context, it is an unfair and inaccurate characterization of Mr. Faribault's clear stated objective to view his testimony as a mere expression of his personal motivation.

[21] As I have already mentioned, Mr. Faribault resumed the suspended investigation against the appellants undertaken in the context of a broader criminal investigation of a fraudulent scheme involving charitable organizations and their donors. He was in charge of the file, autonomous and making the appropriate decisions to lead it to its ultimate admitted objective, i.e. the gathering of evidence of a tax evasion offence under section 239 of the Act. At page 120 of the Appeal Book, he admitted that such was his main responsibility and function:

Q - [Me Rheault] Dans le présent dossier... ici, on mentionne "Où l'on soupçonne qu'il y ait eu évasion fiscale", dans le présent dossier, vous aviez des soupçons qu'il y... qu'il y avait eu évasion fiscale au moment où vous avez émis les demandes péremptoires. C'est exact?
R - [M. Faribault] Des soupçons? Oui.
Q - [Me Rheault] Donc... et votre principale responsabilité comme enquêteur des enquêtes spéciales était de... d'enquêter dans ce cas qui occupe les requérants ici...
R - [M. Faribault] Oui.
Q - [Me Rheault] ... dans le but de recueillir des preuves de toute infraction criminelle, conformément au paragraphe 7, qui ont pu être commises, et si de telles preuves sont recueillies, de prendre les... des dispositions en vue de porter l'affaire devant les tribunaux en vertu de l'article 239 de la loi?
R - [M. Faribault] Oui.

(My emphasis)

This is consistent with paragraph 7 of Circulaire 73-10R3, dated February 13, 1987, entitled "Évasion fiscale" which reads:

"La principale responsabilité des enquêtes spéciales est d'enquêter sur les cas importants où l'on soupçonne qu'il y a eu évasion fiscale, dans le but de recueillir des preuves de toute infraction criminelle qui a pu être commise, et si de telles preuves sont recueillies, de prendre des dispositions en vue de porter l'affaire devant les tribunaux en vertu de l'article

Digitized by Google

239 de la loi. Les enquêtes spéciales ont aussi la responsabilité de faire connaître au public les condamnations judiciaires dans le but de décourager l'évasion fiscale chez les autres contribuables et de favoriser les divulgations volontaires."

If unsuccessful in that endeavour, it could still lead to a tax reassessment: see the excerpt from Mr. Faribault's testimony, at page 132 of the Appeal Book, previously cited.

[22] Moreover, the facts of our case are quite distinguishable from the facts in the La Salle National Bank case. In making its statement that the motivation of a special agent is hardly dispositive, the U.S. Supreme Court referred to the multilayered system of reviews of decisions in place and found that the motivation of a single agent attempting to build a criminal case, without regard to the enforcement policy of the Service as an institution, does not necessarily overturn the institutional responsibility of the Service to calculate and to collect civil fraud penalties. Obviously, the U.S. system is different from ours. In addition, in our case, the file was with the SI branch and assigned by that authority to a specific investigator to conduct a criminal investigation of a tax evasion offence. I would also point out that the La Salle National Bank case goes back some 26 years and contained strong dissenting views. No attempt has been made by counsel for the respondent to show that the ruling of the majority still represents the state of the law in this respect.

[23] Counsel for the respondent also argued that Mr. Faribault had no reasonable grounds to believe that an offence had been committed. The fact is that Mr. Faribault knew that between November 11, 1998 and September 22, 2000 a colleague of the SI branch had investigated the legitimacy and legality of donations made to the Rabbinical College of Montreal and to "Construit toujours avec Bonté". He knew that tax evasion charges had been laid successfully against "Construit toujours avec Bonté". He knew that the investigation against the Rabbinical College of Montreal had been so far inconclusive. Bearing in mind the context, I think that Mr. Faribault's testimony under cross-examination at the examination discovery dispels all my doubts as to what his real beliefs and objectives were when he resumed the investigation against the appellants.

[24] Counsel for the respondent finally argued that the investigator Faribault had no reasonable grounds to apply for a search warrant since he had no reasons to believe that a crime had been committed. I believe it is more accurate to say that he had suspicions that a crime had been committed, but not enough evidence at this stage to seek a warrant. That is why Mr. Faribault who, by his own admission, was conducting a criminal investigation, resorted to the requirement powers of subsection 231.2(1) which eliminate the hurdle of prior judicial scrutiny. A short review of his testimony is instructive in this respect.

[25] At pages 137 and 140 of the Appeal Book, Mr. Faribault testified as to what the policy was regarding his gathering of evidence of a tax evasion offence:

Q - [Me Rheault] Donc... mais il y a une... il y a une politique, là, qui est reflétée au paragraphe 13, applicable aux enquêtes spéciales, qui est celle à l'effet que... je... et je lis :

"L'enquêteur doit donc obtenir tous les documents et registres en la possession ou sous le contrôle du contribuable qui peuvent servir d'éléments de preuve, et les conserver sous sa garde et son contrôle jusqu'à ce qu'ils soient présentés au Tribunal."

C'est exact?

R - [M. Faribault] Oui, oui. Oui.

Q - [Me Rheault] Puis pour les fins de preuve, comme enquêteur, votre rôle c'est d'obtenir les originaux?

R - [M. Faribault] À un moment donné, oui. À un stade de l'enquête, oui.

Digitized by Google

[...]
Q - [Me Rheault] Puis la politique du ministère au moment des demandes péremptoires était exposée dans cette circulaire-là, ici, entre autres, et dans le cadre de cette politique-là, on demandait à l'enquêteur d'obtenir les documents et les registres en la possession ou sous le contrôle du contribuable qui peuvent... qui pourraient servir de... d'éléments de preuve, et de les conserver jusqu'à ce qu'ils soient présentés au Tribunal, c'est exact?
R - [M. Faribault] Dans la circulaire, oui, c'est indiqué, oui.
Q - [Me Rheault] Puis est-ce que c'était ça la politique du ministère à l'époque?
R - [M. Faribault] Bien, oui.

(My emphasis)

[26] Mr. Faribault explains at page 145 what he was trying to do to fulfill, as an investigator, his necessary obligation to gather the evidence of the tax evasion offence that he was investigating:

Q - [Me Rheault] Vous, comme enquêteur, vous deviez vous satisfaire que vous aviez des motifs raisonnables et probables de croire qu'une infraction avait été commise, avant d'aller demander l'émission d'un mandat de perquisition?
R - [M. Faribault] Oui.
Q - [Me Rheault] Puis dans le présent dossier comme vous l'avez mentionné tantôt, vous entreteniez des soupçons qui ont... qui ont résulté, là, à l'enquête que vous avez amorcée, mais vous nous dites que vous ne... n'aviez pas des motifs encore, là, raisonnables et probables de croire qu'une infraction d'évasion fiscale avait été commise?

R - [M. Faribault] Oui.
Q - [Me Rheault] Donc vous avez pas procédé, là, à... à demander un mandat de perquisition?
R - [M. Faribault] Non.
Q - [Me Rheault] Vous avez plutôt procédé par le biais de demandes péremptoires?
R - [M. Faribault] Oui.
Q - [Me Rheault] Selon l'article 231.2 de la loi?
R - [M. Faribault] Oui.

(My emphasis)

[27] In my respectful view, Mr. Faribault who was embarked upon a criminal investigation of the appellants attempted to do, indirectly, what he could not do directly, i.e. obtain the incriminating evidence without a warrant. The events go back to a time when the line between the use of the requirement powers and the search powers pursuant to a warrant was blurred and the decision in Jarvis had not yet been rendered: see the facts in Jarvis and in R. v. Ling, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 814 which attest to the blurring. In any event, both the admission and conduct of Mr. Faribault reveal that he was clearly engaged into the criminal investigation of the appellants and that a clear decision to that effect had been made.

[28] There would be no need for me to consider the factors identified by the Supreme Court. I will, nonetheless, do it and review the evidence on the record to ascertain whether the factors also establish that the respondent's investigation had crossed the Rubicon to become a criminal investigation. The record before us is somewhat succinct, probably more so than it was before the motions judge. In any event, the transcript of the cross-examination of investigator Faribault of the SI branch has been included in the Appeal Book. I will analyse the first two factors together since the relevant facts already enumerated are intertwined.

Digitized by Google

Factor	Facteur
(a) Did the authorities have reasonable grounds to lay charges? Does it appear from the record that a decision to proceed with a criminal investigation could have been made?	a) Les autorités avaient-elles des motifs raisonnables de porter des accusations? Semble-t-il, au vu du dossier, que l'on aurait pu prendre la décision de procéder à une enquête criminelle?
(b) Was the general conduct of the authorities such that it was consistent with the pursuit of a criminal investigation?	b) L'ensemble de la conduite des autorités donnait-elle à croire que celles-ci procédaient à une enquête criminelle?

[29] Factor (a) addresses two different issues that may arise at different times in the process. A decision to proceed with a criminal investigation may be made early in the process and such investigation may eventually, at a later stage, provide the authorities with the required reasonable grounds to lay a charge. However, a criminal investigation does not cease to be a criminal investigation because, in the end, the authorities do not have reasonable grounds to lay charges or no charges are laid. It may be that the criminal investigation is inconclusive with respect to the commission of an offence or that, although conclusive in that respect, the offenders have yet to be identified. It is the very purpose of a criminal investigation to determine whether a crime has been committed and by whom so that charges can be laid. L'Heureux-Dubé J. said in Starr v. Houlden, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1366, at page 1425, from a criminal law perspective, "specific individuals are targeted for the express and exclusive purpose of indicting them".

[30] The fact that the authorities have reached a stage in their inquiry where they have reasonable grounds to lay charges is not, in and of itself, sufficient to conclude that the threshold has been crossed and that the inquiry has become a criminal investigation: see Jarvis, supra, paragraph 93. It is, however, an important factor to be considered in the determination of the subsequent relationship between the parties. "In most cases", the Supreme Court writes, "if all ingredients of an offence are reasonably thought to have occurred, it is likely that the investigation function is triggered": ibidem, paragraph 89. This is no doubt the case when the situation has reached a stage where charges can be laid. Usually, the criminal investigation is over since the laying of charges is the outcome of the investigation.

[31] Conversely, the fact that there are yet no reasonable grounds to lay charges does not mean that the on-going inquiry is not a criminal investigation because, as I have already pointed out, the purpose of such investigation is to lead to a point where the prosecuting authorities acquire reasonable grounds to lay charges. As the second question in factor (a) indicates, it is important to look at the record to see if it appears "that a decision to proceed with a criminal investigation could have been made". I note that the test is cast in terms of a mere possibility as opposed to a probability and that the Supreme Court itself has underlined that fact.

[32] In the present instance, not only a decision to proceed with a criminal investigation could have been made as factor (a) indicates, but such investigation was actually undertaken as evidenced by the facts and the admission and conduct of investigator Faribault of the SI branch.

Digitized by Google

(c) Had the auditor transferred his or her files and material to the investigators?	c) Le vérificateur avait-il transféré son dossier et ses documents aux enquêteurs?

[33] This factor as defined does not apply because the appellants' files were at all times with the SI branch of the CCRA which was conducting a criminal investigation of a fraudulent ring of charitable donations and receipts. The appellants were generous donors to one of the charitable organisation under criminal investigation and were part of that investigation.

(d) Was the conduct of the auditor such that he or she was effectively acting as an agent for the investigators?	d) La conduite du vérificateur donnait-elle à croire qu'il agissait en fait comme un mandataire des enquêteurs?

[34] This factor does not apply in the case at bar.

(e) Does it appear that the investigators intended to use the auditor as their agent in the collection of evidence?	e) Semble-t-il que les enquêteurs aient eu l'intention d'utiliser le vérificateur comme leur mandataire pour recueillir des éléments de preuve?

[35] This factor does not apply directly per se. However, if what was really intended was a mere compliance audit and if the criminal investigation was really closed, why wasn't the file sent to the audit section to achieve that result. This would have had the advantage of dissipating any ambiguity as to the real objective of the investigation although, in my view, the testimony of investigator Faribault left none when he clearly stated the objective of the investigation that he had undertaken.

(f) Is the evidence sought relevant to taxpayer liability generally? Or, as is the case with evidence as to the taxpayer's mens rea, is the evidence relevant only to the taxpayer's penal liability?	f) La preuve recherchée est-elle pertinente quant à la responsabilité générale du contribuable ou, au contraire, uniquement quant à sa responsabilité pénale, comme dans le cas de la preuve de la mens rea?

(My emphasis)

[36] Factor (f), as worded, which states its objective in terms of mere relevancy of the evidence and exclusive relevancy with respect to penal liability, is difficult to apply in the present instance. By definition, an investigation with a predominant purpose is an investigation that has secondary or subsidiary purposes. Therefore, the evidence sought and obtained for the predominant or primary purpose may also be relevant and useful to the secondary purpose. Even if the evidence is sought to establish the penal liability of the taxpayer, such evidence will generally remain relevant to establish his tax liability and civil penalties. It may be, for example, that the evidence obtained in the context of a criminal investigation of a taxpayer falls short of proving a crime beyond a reasonable doubt, but still reveals irregularities in that taxpayer's compliance with the Act which affect his tax liability. As the U.S. Supreme Court said in the LaSalle National Bank case supra, at page 2365, "the Government does not sacrifice its interest in unpaid taxes just because a criminal prosecution begins". Thus, it is difficult, if not impossible to say, that the evidence will be, or is relevant, only to the taxpayer's penal liability even though this was the primary reason why that evidence was sought and obtained and even though the taxpayer's penal liability was the predominant purpose of the investigation.

Digitized by Google

[37] All the evidence sought from the appellants, i.e. cancelled cheques, bank statements, accounting books and records, was in connection with their donations to the Rabbinical College of Montreal whose investigation led to the sending, on March 3, 2000, of a notice of revocation of its charitable registration for alleged numerous and serious irregularities relating to transfers of money and books and records keeping. That evidence was relevant to establish their penal liability. It could be used also to complement the unsuccessful criminal investigation of the Rabbinical College of Montreal and establish its involvement in the alleged organized fraud. The appellants' penal liability could not be proven solely with the evidence obtained from the College in the course of the criminal investigation that it was subject to.

(g) Are there any other circumstances or factors that can lead the trial judge to the conclusion that the compliance audit had in reality become a criminal investigation?	g) Existe-t-il d'autres circonstances ou facteurs susceptibles d'amener le juge de première instance à conclure que la vérification de la conformité à la loi était en réalité devenue une enquête criminelle?

[38] This factor does not apply in this case.

Conclusion

[39] Like the motions judge, I have come to the conclusion that the investigation of the appellants was a criminal investigation. It was led at all times by the SI branch of the CCRA whose primary function is to fight tax evasion and establish the penal liability of taxpayers in this respect. The investigator in charge of the file clearly stated that the investigation was a criminal investigation and that its purpose was to gather evidence of a tax evasion offence committed by the appellants. His evidence has remained uncontradicted. It is significant that none of his superiors came to testify that this was not the case. He testified that he resorted to the requirement powers of subsection 231.2(1) of the Act because he did not yet have reasonable grounds to apply for a warrant to obtain the evidence that he wanted. The events occurred at a time when the line between the requirement powers of subsection 231.2(1) and the search powers of subsection 231.3(1) was blurred.

[40] Furthermore, the investigation of the appellants was a resumption of the earlier criminal investigation that had been suspended. In addition, it was interconnected with other criminal investigations of charitable organizations. All these interconnected investigations were conducted by the SI branch of the CCRA. The evidence sought was relevant to the penal liability of the appellants as donors as well as that of the beneficiaries of the donations. The relevant factors, when analysed in their proper context, also point to an investigation whose predominant is criminal in nature. If this investigation of the appellants is not a criminal investigation, one is then left to wonder what is, and what will ever be, a criminal investigation.

Digitized by Google

[41] For these reasons, I would allow the appeal with costs and set aside the decision of the motions judge. Rendering the judgment that he should have rendered, I would allow the application for judicial review with costs and quash the requirements for production of documents issued on behalf of the Minister on January 12, 2001 against the appellants, Les Plastiques Algar (Canada) Ltée, Modern Wood Fabricators (M.W.F.) Inc. and Snapshot Theatrical Productions Inc.

"Gilles Létourneau"

J.A.

NADON J.A. (concurring)

[42] For the reasons which my colleague Létourneau J.A. gives, I would also allow this appeal with costs. However, as I have reached this conclusion only after much hesitation, a few words are in order.

[43] I need not recite the facts, as they are clearly set out in the Reasons of my colleagues Desjardins and Létourneau JJ.A., which I have had the benefit of reading in draft.

[44] For their respective conclusions, my colleagues rely on the Supreme Court of Canada's decisions in R. v. Jarvis, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 757, and R. v. Ling, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 814. In Jarvis, the Supreme Court elaborated a test so as to determine the boundary between the audit and investigation functions of Revenue Canada. At paragraphs 93 and 94 of its Reasons in Jarvis, the Supreme Court directed trial judges to consider, absent a clear decision on the part of Revenue Canada to pursue a criminal investigation, a number of factors with a view to making the proper determination.

[45] In these Reasons, I wish to address one of the issues dealt with by both of my colleagues, namely whether, at the time the Requirements to provide information and documents were sent to the appellants, pursuant to paragraph 231.2(1)(b) of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1996, ch. 1, 5th Supplement (the "Act"), Revenue Canada had made a clear decision to pursue a criminal investigation.

[46] At paragraph 27 of his Reasons, Létourneau J.A. concludes that, at the relevant time, the investigator, Mr. Faribault, was clearly "embarked upon a criminal investigation of the appellants". Although that conclusion is sufficient to dispose of the issue, Létourneau J.A. then goes on to examine, in light of the evidence, the factors set out in Jarvis at paragraph 94. That examination leads him to conclude that an adversarial relationship between the state and the appellants was in existence when the Requirements were sent.

[47] Desjardins J.A. arrives at a different conclusion. At paragraphs 112 to 122 of her Reasons, she deals with the issue of whether a clear decision to pursue a criminal investigation had been made at the time the Requirements were sent and, at paragraphs 118 and 122, she makes the following remarks:

[118] When Faribault's statements are analysed in context, it cannot be said, under the Jarvis test, that a clear decision had been made to pursue a criminal investigation. Nothing of that sort could have been decided at that stage. The directive given by CCRA to Faribault was an assignment to look principally for evidence of a penal nature. It cannot be drawn from that directive that CCRA had made the decision to pursue a criminal investigation. Such decision could not be made. CCRA had no evidence on which to base such a decision and no search warrant could have been issued to implement it.

Digitized by Google

[...]
[122] It is my view that "a clear decision to pursue a criminal investigation" had not been made and could have been made at that preliminary stage. Paragraphs 88 and 93 of Jarvis stand for the proposition that it is for the judge to objectively assess the nature of the inquiry and determine whether a clear decision is made to pursue the taxpayer for a criminal offence. If a clear decision is made, an analysis of the enumerated factors is not necessary. A contextual analysis of circumstances and attitudes is superfluous, because the evidence is clear. I do not understand Jarvis to say, however, that from a mere directive to conduct principally a penal investigation in circumstances where there is not one iota of evidence and where no search warrant can be issued, one can draw the conclusion that a decision to pursue a criminal investigation has been made.

[48] As I understand Desjardins J.A.'s Reasons, the fact that the investigator believed that he was conducting a criminal investigation, or that he had been so instructed by his superiors, is not determinative of the issue. As she states at paragraph 122, it is for the trial judge to determine whether, in a given case, a criminal investigation has been undertaken. In order to make that decision, the judge must examine all of the evidence and decide whether there was a proper basis or foundation to justify the commencement of a criminal investigation. That approach appears to be the one which the Supreme Court instructs judges to take when assessing the factors listed at paragraph 94 of Jarvis and, in particular, when assessing factor (a):
(a) Did the authorities have reasonable grounds to lay charges? Does it appear from the record that a decision to proceed with a criminal investigation could have been made?
[49] I repeat that the Supreme Court, at paragraphs 93 and 94 of its Reasons, instructed trial judges to have recourse to the enumerated factors only when a clear decision to pursue a criminal investigation has not been made. However, that approach is not applicable here, because the issue is whether a clear decision to proceed with a criminal investigation has been made, and not whether a criminal investigation ought to have been commenced.

[50] In order to properly understand paragraphs 93 and 94 of Jarvis, it must be remembered that the conduct of the inquiry in both Jarvis and Ling was, at all times, in the hands of the auditors and not in the hands of the investigators. That is the context which drives both decisions and, in particular, the discussion commencing at paragraph 85 of Jarvis, the sub-title of which is "Delineating the Bounds Between Audit and Investigation: Nature of the Inquiry".
[51] In Jarvis and Ling, the Supreme Court sought to elaborate a test which would allow judges to determine whether an inquiry conducted by auditors had, in fact, become a criminal investigation, even though the matter remained at all times in their hands. The discussion which commences at paragraph 85 and which concludes at paragraph 99 can only be understood in that context. That is why, at paragraphs 88 and 89 of its Reasons in Jarvis, the Supreme Court speaks of crossing the Rubicon and determining the predominant purpose of an inquiry.
[52] Of the seven factors listed in paragraph 94 of Jarvis, three of these factors, (c), (d) and (e), have in mind the investigative branch. They are as follows:
(c) Had the auditor transferred his or her files an materials to the investigators?

Digitized by Google

(d) Was the conduct of the auditor such that he or she was effectively acting as an agent for the investigators?
(e) Does it appear that the investigators intended to use the auditor as their agent in the collection of evidence?
[53] These factors must be read in the light of what the Supreme Court states at paragraph 92:

[92] Whether a matter has been sent to the investigations section is another factor in determining whether the adversarial relationship exists. Again, though, this, by itself, is not determinative. An auditor's recommendation that investigators look at a file might result in nothing in the way of a criminal investigation since there is always the possibility that the file will be sent back. Still, if, in an auditor's judgment, a matter should be sent to the investigators, a court must examine the following behaviour very closely. If the file is sent back, does it appear that the investigators have actually declined to take up the case and have returned the matter so that the audit can be completed? Or, does it appear, rather, that they have sent the file back as a matter of expediency, so that the auditor may use ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) to obtain evidence for a prosecution (as was found to be in the case in Norway Insulation, supra)?
[54] When factors (c), (d) and (e), and paragraph 92 are read in their proper context, it is clear that the Supreme Court, in elaborating its test, intended to prevent the audit section from conducting a disguised criminal investigation. That is why, at paragraph 92 of Jarvis, the Supreme Court states that whenever the audit section sends a matter to the investigative section, the judge must pay close attention. The purpose of the exercise is, as I have already indicated, to assess whether a criminal investigation has begun.
[55] In the various scenarios outlined at paragraph 92 of Jarvis, i.e. where the audit section has referred a matter to the investigative section, it is clear that the assumption which the Supreme Court makes is that no decision to commence a criminal investigation has yet been made. In directing judges to pay close attention, the Supreme Court is reminding judges that there is a line which the auditors cannot cross.
[56] At paragraph 97 of Jarvis, the Supreme Court outlines another scenario, i.e. where parallel investigations are being conducted by the audit and the criminal investigation sections. In such a situation, the Court states that the audit inquiry can continue to resort to subsections 231.1(1) and 231.2(1), but makes it clear that once a criminal investigation has been undertaken, a taxpayer cannot be forced by the investigators to comply with the Requirement powers of subsections 231.1(1) and 231.2(1). Specifically, the Court says at paragraph 97:

[...] It may well be that there will be circumstances in which the CCRA officials conducting the tax liability inquiry will desire to inform the taxpayer that a criminal investigation is also underway and that the taxpayer is not obliged to comply with the requirement powers of subsections 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) for the purpose of a criminal investigation.
[57] What is before us in this case is a situation quite different from that which prevailed in Jarvis and Ling. When the Requirements were sent, the matter was clearly in the hands of an investigator. On that part of the evidence, which Létourneau J.A. recites at paragraphs 14 to 17 of his Reasons, there cannot be much doubt that the matter had been sent to Mr. Faribault for the specific purpose of carrying out a criminal investigation. Whether or not, when the Requirements were sent, Revenue Canada and Mr. Faribault had sufficient information to commence a criminal investigation is, in my respectful view, irrelevant. The plain fact is that Mr. Faribault had been directed to conduct a criminal investigation and that is what he was doing.

Digitized by Google

[58] Consequently, when no clear decision to commence a criminal investigation has been made, it is entirely proper to go to factor (a) so as to determine whether there were reasonable grounds to lay charges and whether the record was such as to justify the commencement of a criminal investigation. That approach has as its objective the determination of whether a matter in the hands of auditors has become a criminal investigation, even though it has not been referred to the investigative section with a mandate to commence a criminal investigation. However, when the matter is in the hands of the investigators, as is the case here, and they are clearly conducting a criminal investigation, there is no necessity of examining the factors set forth at paragraph 94 of Jarvis.

[59] For these reasons, I can only give an affirmative answer to the question of whether a clear decision to conduct a criminal investigation had been made when the Requirements were sent to the appellants. I would, therefore, dispose of the appeal in the manner proposed by Létourneau J.A.

"Marc Nadon"

J.A.

DESJARDINS J.A. (dissenting)

[60] Three corporate appellants, Les Plastiques Algar (Canada) Ltée., Modern Wood Fabricators (M.W.F.) Inc. and Snapshot Theatrical Productions Inc. appeal a decision of a Motions Judge of the Federal Court (reported at [2003] F.C.J. No. 70) holding that their rights under sections 7 and 8 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (the Charter) were not violated when they were served with requirements to provide documents pursuant to paragraph 231.2(1)(b) of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.) (the Act).

[61] In the Federal Court, two individuals, Messrs Sam Kligman and Allan Sandler, directors of the corporate appellants, were also parties to the proceedings. The Motions Judge held in their favour under section 7 of the Charter. Consequently, they are not parties to this appeal.

[62] At issue are the scope of the Minister's powers to conduct an inquiry into the affairs of the three corporate taxpayers and the determination of the moment at which the predominant purpose of the inquiry became an investigation, as a consequence of which their rights under the Charter were allegedly violated.

I. The Facts

[63] Before the Motions Judge, the two individuals and the three corporations challenged, by way of judicial review, letters issued on January 12, 2001, by the Special Investigations division (SI) of the Canada Customs and Revenue Agency (CCRA) titled Requirements to Provide Information and Documents (the requirements). The letters addressed to the three corporations were sent pursuant to paragraph 231.2(1)(b) of the Act while those addressed to the two individuals were sent pursuant to paragraphs 231.2(1)(a) and (b) of the Act.

[64] CCRA stated in those letters that it required information from the five taxpayers with respect to donations made to four charitable organizations, being the Montreal Rabbinical College, the Yeshiva Oir Hochaim, l'Association Gimilis Chasodim Keren Chava

Digitized by Google

B'Nei Levi and Les Amis Canadiens des Institutions de la Terre Sainte.

[65] CCRA required information for various periods between 1994 to 1998 inclusive. The relevant periods differed for each party. Les Plastiques Algar (Canada) Ltée was required to produce documents regarding six charitable donations all made to the Montreal Rabbinical College between 1994 and 1998 totalling $362,000. Modern Wood Fabricators (M.W.F.) Inc. was required to produce documents related to six charitable donations made from 1995 to 1998 totalling $744,000 to the Montreal Rabbinical College and Yeshiva Oir Hochaim. Snapshot Theatrical Productions Inc. was asked to produce documents in connection to a $36,000 charitable donation made to the Montreal Rabbinical College in 1994.

[66] The information required from Kligman and Sandler, the two individuals, consisted of account numbers (and the identification of the banks and branches at which the accounts were held) from which cheques were drawn to pay the donations and the cancelled cheques related to these donations. The material requested from the three corporations included cancelled cheques, bank statements and donation receipts related to donations to the organizations mentioned in the letters. Also requested were the cash disbursements journal, general ledger, adjusting entries and trial balance for the periods specified in the letters.

[67] Each of the five letters concluded with the following:

Your attention is directed to subsections 238(1) and (2) of the Income Tax Act for default in complying with this requirement.

[68] At the time the requirements were issued, two registered charities had been investigated by Gaétan Ouelette, an SI investigator, for falsely issuing tax receipts. The first, Construit Toujours avec Bonté, had pleaded guilty to an offence under paragraph 239(1)(d) of the Act. The other, the Montreal Rabbinical College, was not charged and no further charges would be laid against it (see the affidavit of the SI investigator André Faribault, A.B. p. 75, p. 77, par. 17).

[69] The appellants claimed deductions in respect of donations to the Montreal Rabbinical College but not in respect of donations to Construit Toujours avec Bonté.

[70] The five taxpayers challenged by way of judicial review the requirements of the Minister on the basis that their constitutional rights under sections 7 and 8 of the Charter had been violated. A notice under section 57 of the Federal Courts Act (R.S. 1985, c. F-7) was given.

II. The decision of the Motions Judge

[71] Relying on the decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Jarvis, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 757 (Jarvis), and R. v. Ling, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 814 (Ling), the Motions Judge stated that while taxpayers are bound to cooperate with CCRA auditors for tax assessment purposes, an adversarial relationship crystalizes between CCRA and the taxpayer when the predominant purpose of the inquiry is the determination of a taxpayer's penal liability.

[72] At that stage, he said at paragraphs 74 and 75 of his reasons, the fundamental protection against self-incrimination guaranteed by the Charter comes into play. As a matter of statutory construction, the inspection and requirement powers granted by subsections 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) cannot be used for the purpose of criminal investigations. Rather, search warrants must be obtained pursuant to section 231.3 of the Act. He reiterated the non-exhaustive list of factors set out by the Supreme Court of Canada to assist in the determination of whether the taxpayer's penal liability had become the predominant purpose of the inquiry. He concluded, based on his reading of the evidence, that there was "from the outset" an investigation where penal sanctions were sought by CCRA. He stated, at paragraph 90 of his reasons:

Digitized by Google

[90] The evidence on the record as a whole leads to the conclusion that the predominant purpose of the investigation of CCRA, from its outset, was prosecution of the applicants for tax evasion and eventual imposition of penal sanctions against them. The statements on discovery by Faribault are not the only indicia of this predominant purpose; they are simply among the most succinct elements of evidence which support this conclusion. Accordingly, I find that the predominant purpose of the investigation was prosecution of the applicants for tax evasion.

[Emphasis added.]

[73] The Motions Judge concluded, at paragraphs 91 and 92 of his reasons, that the section 7 Charter rights of the two individuals concerned would be in jeopardy if the requirements were maintained. He wrote:

[91] In Jarvis, the Supreme Court noted that where the s. 7 requirements of fundamental justice are engaged by a finding that the predominant purpose of an investigation is penal in nature, self-incrimination is the primary principle of fundamental justice on which the determination will be based. However, the Court added that protection against self-incrimination does not mean an absolute ban on requirements to provide information. The right of a person not to provide information adverse to his liberty interest must be balanced against the opposing principle of fundamental justice which posits that relevant evidence should be available to the trier of fact in the search for the truth.

[92] With these conflicting principles in mind, I am inclined to follow the findings in Jarvis and Ling that CCRA cannot expect taxpayers to provide information that has the effect of assisting the state in its efforts to deprive them of their liberty. Accordingly, I find that the rights of Kligman and Sandler would be compromised by requirements to provide information to further an investigation which is geared mainly toward assessing criminal liability.

[Emphasis added.]

[74] With regard to the three corporations involved, the Motions Judge concluded at paragraphs 95, 103 and 104 of his reasons that section 7 did not apply to corporations, and that their privacy interests in the requested records were minimal under section 8 of the Charter. He wrote:

[95] A corporation cannot enjoy life, liberty or security of the person. Accordingly, s. 7 of the Charter does not apply to corporations. The Supreme Court has held that a corporation cannot invoke this right in order to shield itself from criminal investigation or prosecution. This rule was originally stated in Irwin Toy Ltd. v. Québec (Attorney General), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 927. The rule has been reiterated in Thomson and British Columbia Securities Commission, supra. It therefore remains only to be determined whether s. 8 can be applied in respect of the corporate applicants.

[...]

[103] Although the corporate applicants in the case at bar are not publicly traded companies like the company in question in British Columbia Securities Commission, they still have records that they must maintain for regulatory purposes, including purposes related to the ITA. The privacy interest in these records will be minimal.

[104] The privacy interests of corporate entities are substantially limited compared to those of individuals. The values on which the privacy interests of individuals include recognition of,

Digitized by Google

and respect for, the physical and psychological integrity of human beings, are simply not present in the case of corporate entities. Accordingly, I find that neither s. 7 nor s. 8 of the Charter would be violated by compelling the corporate applicants to comply with the Requirements as issued by the CCRA.

[75] The Motions Judge then applied subsection 24(1) of the Charter and, in doing so, he quashed the requirements received by the individuals but upheld those received by the corporate appellants. He said, at paragraphs 110 and 111 of his reasons:

[110] Subsection 24(1) allows me to provide "such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances" in the event of a breach of the Charter. Technically, a Charter breach has not yet occurred since the evidence has not yet been delivered. However, I have found that the Charter rights of Kligman and Sandler will be violated if they are compelled to provide the materials sought by CCRA. It is possible to order that they provide what they have been told to provide by the Requirements, and leave it to the presiding judge to make a decision as to the exclusion or admission of that evidence in the event that Kligman and Sandler are charged with tax evasion. However, Iacobucci and Major JJ. addressed this hypothesis in Jarvis at para. 91:

Although the respondent argued that such situations could be remedied by the courts, we view it as preferable that such situations be avoided rather than remedied.

[111] I agree. Accordingly, I exercise my discretion under subsection 24(1) of the Charter to quash the Requirements issued personally to Sandler and Kligman. As I have found no breach of the Charter in respect of the Requirements issued to the corporate applicants, these Requirements shall be upheld.

III. The position of the parties

[76] The three corporate appellants claim that, having made the finding that the predominant purpose of the inquiry conducted by the SI division was to determine the corporate appellants' penal liability, the full panoply of their rights under sections 7 and 8 of the Charter applied and that, as a result, the requirements should have been quashed.

[77] The respondent claims that the reviewing judge exceeded his jurisdiction in finding that the Jarvis and Ling analyses, which were developed in the context of a criminal trial, applied to pre-charge proceedings such as a judicial review application to quash the requirements to produce tax records. The respondent further claims that the Motions Judge erred in finding that the predominant purpose of CCRA's requirements was to determine the corporate appellants' penal liability. He submits that, notwithstanding these errors, the reviewing judge correctly held that section 7 of the Charter does not apply to corporate entities and that the use of the requirements to compel the corporate appellants to produce pre-existing banking and business records did not violate their rights under section 8 of the Charter.

IV. The relevant statutory provisions

[78] The Act provides the following:

Part XV - Administration and Enforcement

Digitized by Google

231.1: Inspections

(1) An authorized person may, at all reasonable times, for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement of this Act,

(a) inspect, audit or examine the books and records of a taxpayer and any document of the taxpayer or of any other person that relates or may relate to the information that is or should be in the books or records of the taxpayer or to any amount payable by the taxpayer under this Act, and

(b) examine property in any inventory of a taxpayer and any property or process of, or matter relating to, the taxpayer or any other person, an examination of which may assist the authorized person in determining the accuracy of the inventory of the taxpayer or in ascertaining the information that is or should be in the books or records of the taxpayer or any amount payable by the taxpayer under this Act,

and for those purposes the authorized person may

(c) subject to subsection 231.1(2), enter into any premises or place where any business is carried on, any property is kept, anything is done in connection with any business or any books or records are or should be kept, and

(d) require the owner or manager of the property or

231.1: Enquêtes

(1) Une personne autorisée peut, à tout moment raisonnable, pour l'application et l'exécution de la présente loi, à la fois:

a) inspecter, vérifier ou examiner les livres et registres d'un contribuable ainsi que tous documents du contribuable ou d'une autre personne qui se rapportent ou peuvent se rapporter soit aux renseignements qui figurent dans les livres ou registres du contribuable ou qui devraient figurer, soit à tout montant payable par le contribuable en vertu de la présente loi;

b) examiner les biens à porter à l'inventaire d'un contribuable, ainsi que tout bien ou tout procédé du contribuable ou d'une autre personne ou toute matière concernant l'un ou l'autre dont l'examen peut aider la personne autorisée à établir l'exactitude de l'inventaire du contribuable ou à contrôler soit les renseignements qui figurent dans les livres ou registres du contribuable ou qui devraient y figurer, soit tout montant payable par le contribuable en vertu de la présente loi;

c) sous réserve du paragraphe (2), pénétrer dans un lieu où est exploitée une entreprise, est gardé un bien, est faite une chose en rapport business and any other person on the premises or place to give the authorized person all reasonable assistance and to answer all proper questions relating to the administration or enforcement of this Act and, for that purpose, require the owner or manager to attend at the premises or place with the authorized person.

Digitized by Google

Prior authorization

(2) Where any premises or place referred to in paragraph 231.1(1)(c) is a dwelling-house, an authorized person may not enter that dwelling-house without the consent of the occupant except under the authority of a warrant under subsection 231.1(3).

Application

(3) Where, on ex parte application by the Minister, a judge is satisfied by information on oath that

(a) there are reasonable grounds to believe that a dwelling-house is a premises or place referred to in paragraph 231.1(1)(c),

(b) entry into the dwelling-house is necessary for any purpose relating to the administration or enforcement of this Act, and

(c) entry into the dwelling-house has been, or there are reasonable grounds to believe that entry will be, refused,

the judge may issue a warrant authorizing an authorized person to enter the dwelling-house subject to such conditions as are specified in the warrant but, where the judge is not satisfied that entry into the dwelling-house is necessary for any purpose avec une entreprise ou sont tenus ou devraient l'être des livres ou registres;

d) requérir le propriétaire, ou la personne ayant la gestion, du bien ou de l'entreprise ainsi que toute autre personne présente sur les lieux de lui fournir toute l'aide raisonnable et de répondre à toutes les questions pertinentes à l'application et l'exécution de la présente loi et, à cette fin, requérir le propriétaire, ou la personne ayant la gestion, de l'accompagner sur les lieux.

Autorisation préalable

(2) Lorsque le lieu mentionné à l'alinéa (1)c) est une maison d'habitation, une personne autorisée ne peut y pénétrer sans la permission de l'occupant, à moins d'y être autorisée par un mandat décerné en vertu du paragraphe (3).

Mandat d'entrée

(3) Sur requête ex parte du ministre, le juge saisi peut décerner un mandat qui autorise une personne autorisée à pénétrer dans une maison d'habitation aux conditions précisées dans le mandat, s'il est convaincu, sur dénonciation sous serment, de ce qui suit:

a) il existe des motifs raisonnables de croire que la maison d'habitation est un lieu mentionné à l'alinéa (1)c);

b) il est nécessaire d'y pénétrer pour l'application ou l'exécution de la présente loi;

c) un refus d'y pénétrer a été opposé, ou il existe des motifs raisonnables de croire qu'un tel refus sera opposé.

Dans la mesure où un refus

Digitized by Google

relating to the administrationde pénétrer dans la maison or enforcement of this Act, thed'habitation a été opposé ou judge may pourrait l'être et où des (d) order the occupant of thedocuments ou biens sont dwelling-house to provide togardés dans la maison an authorized persond'habitation ou pourraient reasonable access to anyl'être, le juge qui n'est pas document or property that isconvaincu qu'il est nécessaire or should be kept in thede pénétrer dans la maison dwelling-house, and d'habitation pour l'application (e) make such other order asou l'exécution de la présente is appropriate in theloi peut ordonner à l'occupant circumstances to carry out thede la maison d'habitation de purposes of this Act, permettre à une personne to the extent that access wasautorisée d'avoir or may be expected to beraisonnablement accès à tous refused and that thedocuments ou biens qui sont document or property is orgardés dans la maison may be expected to be kept ind'habitation ou the dwelling-house. devraient y être gardés et

Requirements to provide rendre tout autre ordonnance documentation or indiquée en l'espèce pour information 231.2 (1) l'application de la présente loi.
Notwithstanding any other Production de documents ou provision of this Act, the fourniture de renseignements Minister may, subject to 231.2 (1) Malgré les autres subsection (2), for any dispositions de la présente loi, purpose related to the le ministre peut, sous réserve administration or enforcement du paragraphe (2) et, pour of this Act, including the l'application et l'exécution de collection of any amount la présente loi, y compris la payable under this Act by any perception d'un montant person, by notice served payable par une personne en personally or by registered or vertu de la présente loi, par certified mail, require that any avis signifié à personne ou person provide, within such envoyé par courrier reasonable time as is recommandé ou certifié, stipulated in the notice, exiger d'une personne, dans (a) any information or le délai raisonnable que additional information, précise l'avis:
including a return of income or a) qu'elle fournisse tout a supplementary return; or renseignement ou tout
(b) any document. renseignement
[...] supplémentaire, y compris
Search warrant une déclaration de revenu ou 231.3 (1) A judge may, on ex une déclaration parte application by the supplémentaire; Minister, issue a warrant in b) qu'elle produise des writing authorizing any person documents.
named therein to enter and [...]

Digitized by Google

search any building, receptacle or place for any document or thing that may afford evidence as to the commission of an offence under this Act and to seize the document or thing and, as soon as practicable, bring it before, or make a report in respect of it to, the judge or, where the judge is unable to act, another judge of the same court to be dealt with by the judge in accordance with this section.

Evidence in support of application

(2) An application under subsection 231.3(1) shall be supported by information on oath establishing the facts on which the application is based.

Evidence

(3) A judge may issue the warrant referred to in subsection 231.3(1) where the judge is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that

(a) an offence under this Act was committed;

(b) a document or thing that may afford evidence of the commission of the offence is likely to be found; and

(c) the building, receptacle or place specified in the application is likely to contain such a document or thing.

[...]

Offences and punishment

238. (1) Every person who has failed to file or make a return as and when required by or under this Act or a regulation or who has failed to comply with subsection 116(3), 127(3.1) or 127(3.2), 147.1(7) or 153(1), any of

Requête pour mandat de perquisition

231.3 (1) Sur requête ex parte du ministre, le juge saisi peut décerner un mandat écrit qui autorise toute personne qui y est nommée à pénétrer dans tout bâtiment, contenant ou endroit et y perquisitionner pour y chercher des documents ou choses qui peuvent constituer des éléments de preuve de la perpétration d'une infraction à la présente loi, à saisir ces documents ou choses et, dès que matériellement possible, soit à les apporter au juge ou, en cas d'incapacité de celui-ci, à un autre juge du même tribunal, soit à lui en faire rapport, pour que le juge en dispose conformément au présent article.

Preuve au soutien de la requête

(2) La requête visée au paragraphe (1) doit être appuyée par une dénonciation sous serment qui expose les faits au soutien de la requête.

Preuve

(3) Le juge saisi de la requête peut décerner le mandat mentionné au paragraphe (1) s'il est convaincu qu'il existe des motifs raisonnables de croire ce qui suit:

a) une infraction prévue par la présente loi a été commise;

b) des documents ou choses qui peuvent constituer des éléments de preuve de la perpétration de l'infraction seront vraisemblablement trouvés;

c) le bâtiment, contenant ou endroit précisé dans la requête contient vraisemblablement de tels

Digitized by Google sections 230 to 232 or a regulation made under[...] subsection 147.1(18) or with an order made under subsection 238(2) is guilty of an offence and, in addition to any penalty otherwise provided, is liable on summary conviction to (a) a fine of not less than $1,000 and not more than $25,000; or (b) both the fine described in paragraph 238(1)(a) and imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months.

documents ou choses.

Infractions et peines

238. (1) La personne qui ne produit ou ne présente pas ou ne remplit pas une déclaration de la manière et dans le délai prévus à la présente loi ou à son règlement ou qui contrevient au paragraphe 116(3), 127(3.1) ou (3.2), 147.1(7) ou 153(1) ou à l'un des articles 230 à 232 ou à une disposition réglementaire prise en vertu du paragraphe 147.1(18) ou encore qui contrevient à une ordonnance rendue en application du paragraphe (2) commet une infraction et encourt, sur déclaration de culpabilité par procédure sommaire et outre toute pénalité prévue par ailleurs:

a) soit une amende de 1 000 $ à 25 000 $;

b) soit une telle amende et un emprisonnement maximal de 12 mois.

Compliance orders

Where a person has been convicted by a court of an offence under subsection 238(1) for a failure to comply with a provision of this Act or a regulation, the court may make such order as it deems proper in order to enforce compliance with the provision.

Saving

(3) Where a person has been convicted under this section of failing to comply with a provision of this Act or a regulation, the person is not liable to pay a penalty imposed under section 162 or 227 for the same failure unless the person was assessed for that penalty or that penalty was demanded from the person before the information or complaint giving rise to the conviction was laid or made.

Ordonnance d'exécution

(2) Le tribunal qui déclare une personne coupable d'une infraction prévue au paragraphe (1) peut rendre toute ordonnance qu'il estime indiquée pour qu'il soit remédié au défaut visé par l'infraction.

Réserve

(3) La personne déclarée coupable, par application du présent article, d'avoir contrevenu à une disposition de la présente loi ou de son règlement n'est passible d'une pénalité prévue à l'article 162 ou 227 pour la même contravention que si une cotisation pour cette pénalité a été établie à son égard ou

Other offences and punishment

239. (1) Every person who has

(a) made, or participated in, assented to or acquiesced in the making of, false or deceptive statements in a

Digitized by Google

return, certificate, statement or answer filed or made as required by or under this Act or a regulation,

(b) to evade payment of a tax imposed by this Act, or destroyed, altered, mutilated, secreted or otherwise disposed of the records or books of account of a taxpayer,

(c) made, or assented to or acquiesced in the making of, false or deceptive entries, or omitted, or assented to or acquiesced in the omission, to enter a material particular, in records or books of account of a taxpayer,

(d) wilfully, in any manner, evaded or attempted to evade compliance with this Act or payment of taxes imposed by this Act, or

(e) conspired with any person to commit an offence described in paragraphs 239(1)(a) to 239(1)(d), is guilty of an offence and, in addition to any penalty otherwise provided, is liable on summary conviction to

(f) a fine of not less than 50%, and not more than 200%, of the amount of the tax that was sought to be evaded, or

(g) both the fine described in paragraph 239(1)(f) and imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years.

[...]

[Emphasis added.]

que si le paiement en a été exigé d'elle avant que la dénonciation ou la plainte qui a donné lieu à la déclaration de culpabilité ait été déposée ou faite.

Autres infractions et peines

239. (1) Toute personne qui, selon le cas:

a) a fait des déclarations fausses ou trompeuses, ou a participé, consenti ou acquiescé à leur énonciation dans une déclaration, un certificat, un état ou une réponse produits, présentés ou faits en vertu de la présente loi ou de son règlement;

b) a, pour éluder le paiement d'un impôt établi par la présente loi, détruit, altéré, mutilé, caché les registres ou livres de comptes d'un contribuable ou en a disposé autrement;

c) a fait des inscriptions fausses ou trompeuses, ou a consenti ou acquiescé à leur accomplissement, ou a omis, ou a consenti ou acquiescé à l'omission d'inscrire un détail important dans les registres ou livres de comptes d'un contribuable;

d) a, volontairement, de quelque manière, éludé ou tenté d'éluder l'observation de la présente loi ou le paiement d'un impôt établi en vertu de cette loi;

e) a conspiré avec une personne pour commettre une infraction visée aux alinéas a) à d), commet une infraction et, en plus de toute autre pénalité prévue par ailleurs, encourt, sur déclaration de culpabilité par procédure sommaire:

Digitized by Google

f) soit une amende de 50 % à 200 % de l'impôt que cette personne a tenté d'éluder;
g) soit à la fois l'amende prévue à l'alinéa f) et un emprisonnement d'au plus 2 ans.
[...]
[Non souligné dans l'original.]

[79] Sections 7, 8 and subsection 24(1) of the Charter provide:

7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.	7. Chacun a droit à la vie, à la liberté et à la sécurité de sa personne; il ne peut être porté atteinte à ce droit qu'en conformité avec les principes de justice fondamentale.
8. Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.	8. Chacun a droit à la protection contre les fouilles, les perquisitions ou les saisies abusives.
24. (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.	24. (1) Toute personne, victime de violation ou de négation des droits ou libertés qui lui sont garantis par la présente charte, peut s'adresser à un tribunal compétent pour obtenir la réparation que le tribunal estime convenable et juste eu égard aux circonstances.

V. Was a cross-appeal necessary?

[80] A preliminary matter was raised as to whether the respondent had the obligation to file a cross-appeal if he wished to attack the finding of the Motions Judge that the predominant purpose of the inquiry conducted by CCRA was the determination of the penal liability of the corporate appellants for tax evasion.

[81] This query may be summarized along the following lines.

[82] The finding of the Motions Judge that the predominant purpose of the inquiry was penal in nature was binding on the corporate appellants, on the individuals and on the respondent. The respondent, not having cross-appealed, is prevented from reopening the judge's finding vis-à-vis the corporate appellants since by doing so, he is making a collateral attack on a vital point of the Motions Judge's reasons in a proceeding where he was a party. The corporate appellants could reasonably expect that the only issue on appeal would be related to the application of sections 7 and 8 of the Charter. By not cross-appealing, the respondent takes the corporate appellants by surprise.

[83] I hold that the respondent is entitled to question, as he does, the finding of the

Digitized by Google

Motions Judge that the dominant purpose of the inquiry was penal in nature, although he has not filed a cross-appeal.

[84] The statutory source for an appeal in this Court lies in section 27 of the Federal Courts Act, which reads:

27. (1) An appeal lies to the Federal Court of Appeal from any of the following decisions of the Federal Court: (a) a final judgment, [...] (4) For the purposes of this section, a final judgment includes a judgment that determines a substantive right except as to any question to be determined by a referee pursuant to the judgment. [Emphasis added.]	27. (1) Il peut être interjeté appel, devant la Cour d'appel fédérale, des décisions suivantes de la Cour fédérale : a) jugement définitif; [...] (4) Pour l'application du présent article, est assimilé au jugement définitif le jugement qui statue au fond sur un droit, à l'exception des questions renvoyées à l'arbitrage par le jugement. [Non souligné dans l'original.]

[85] Subsection 2(1) of the Federal Courts Act, defines "final judgment" as follows:

"final judgment" means any judgment or other decision that determines in whole or in part any substantive right of any of the parties in controversy in any judicial proceeding;	« jugement définitif » Jugement ou autre décision qui statue au fond, en tout ou en partie, sur un droit d'une ou plusieurs des parties à une instance.

[86] Rule 341(1) of the Federal Court Rules, 1998, [SOR/98-106] makes it clear that a respondent who intends to participate in an appeal shall, within 10 days after service of the notice of appeal, serve and file a notice of appearance; or where he seeks a different disposition of the order appealed from, a notice of cross-appeal.

[87] Rule 341(1)(a) and (b) reads:

341. (1) A respondent who intends to participate in an appeal shall, within 10 days after service of the notice of appeal, serve and file (a) a notice of appearance in Form 341A; or (b) where the respondent seeks	341. (1) L'intimé qui entend participer à l'appel dépose et signifie, dans les 10 jours suivant la signification de l'avis d'appel : a) soit un avis de comparution établi selon la formule 341A; b) soit, s'il entend demander la

Digitized by Google

a different disposition of the order appealed from, a notice of cross-appeal in Form 341B. [Emphasis added.]	réformation de l'ordonnance portée en appel, un avis d'appel incident établi selon la formule 341B. [Non souligné dans l'original.]

[88] A cross-appeal is only appropriate where the respondent seeks a disposition different from that of the judgment under appeal. (See Roberts v. Canada, [1999] F.C.J. No. 1529; Air Canada v. Canada (Commissioner of Competition), [2002] F.C.J. No. 424, at paragraphs 32 and 33).

[89] In the case at bar, the respondent could not have filed a cross-appeal against the corporate appellants since that part of the disposition of the case which dealt with the corporate appellants was favourable to him. The cross-appeal is directed at the decision under appeal and not at the reasons for judgment (Redpath Industries Ltd. v. Fednav Ltd. (F.C.A.), [1994] F.C.J. No. 397). The respondent was under no obligation to cross-appeal that part of the decision that dealt with the individuals in order to reach the corporate appellants.

[90] The corporate appellants appealed the decision. This gave the respondent the opportunity to raise all issues that were before the Motions Judge. In Devinat v. Canada (Immigration and Refugee Board) (C.A.), [2000] 2 F.C. 212, leave to appeal to the S.C.C. refused [2000] 2 S.C.R. vii) this Court held, at paragraph 12, that "an appeal from the judgment by the appellant allows the respondent to make all the arguments it considers relevant and which have a bearing on the questions of law or fact that were before the Motions Judge or that led to the judgment". It is open to the respondent therefore to try to convince this Court that the Motions Judge erred on some issues, although he may have come to the right conclusion in the end.

[91] John Sopinka and Mark A. Gelowitz state at page 7 of their book The Conduct of an Appeal, 2nd ed. (Toronto: Butterworths, 2000):

The importance of a lower court's reasons for judgment should not, of course, be understated. As mentioned above, those reasons often contain the foundation upon which an appellate court will draw its conclusions concerning whether the judgment or order below was based upon a reviewable error, and those reasons are generally the focus of an appeal.

[92] The corporate appellants were not taken by surprise. Appellants generally know or ought to know that an appeal of a judgment opens for scrutiny the grounds on which it is based. In casting doubt on the Motions Judge's finding that the predominant purpose of the inquiry was penal in nature, the respondent is not making a collateral attack on the decision rendered below. A collateral attack presupposes that a party attacks in the wrong forum a decision which could have been attacked directly but was not. In Toronto (City) v. Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 79 (C.U.P.E.), [2003] S.C.J. No. 64, 2003 S.C.C. 19, Arbour J. for the Court cited, at paragraph 33, the case of Wilson v. The Queen, [1983] 2 S.C.R. 594 at page 599, where it was said that the rule against collateral attack:

has long been a fundamental rule that a court order, made by a court having jurisdiction to make it, stands and is binding and conclusive unless it is set aside on appeal or lawfully quashed. It is also well settled in the authorities that such an order may not be attacked collaterally - and a collateral attack may be described as an attack made in proceedings other than those whose specific object is the reversal, variation, or nullification of the order or judgment.

Digitized by Google

The respondent is in the proper forum. He was taken here by an appeal process lodged by the corporate appellants who, by doing so, took all the risks inherent to an appeal.

[93] I conclude that the respondent does not seek a different disposition than the one arrived at by the Motions Judge and, consequently, that it would have been inappropriate for him to cross-appeal. Since the corporate taxpayers are appealing the decision of the Motions Judge, it is open to the respondent to oppose those reasons which he finds in error. The decision of the Motions Judge has become res judicata between the respondent and the individuals but not between the respondent and the corporate appellants.

VI. Issues

[94] The issues before us are the following:

(1) Whether the Motions Judge exceeded his jurisdiction in finding that the Jarvis and Ling analyses apply not only to criminal proceedings but also to pre-charge proceedings, such as a judicial review directed at the requirements;

(2) Whether the Motions Judge erred in finding that the letters issued under section 231.1 of the Act were requirements issued for the predominant purpose of determining the corporate appellants' penal liability;

(3) Whether the Motions Judge erred in deciding that the requirements did not infringe the corporate appellants' rights against self-incrimination under section 7 of the Charter and their rights against unreasonable search and seizure pursuant to section 8 of the Charter.

VII. Analysis

(1) Charter protection and pre-charge proceedings

[95] The Motions Judge made no error in applying Jarvis and Ling to the case at bar.

[96] It is uncontested that the issues examined in both Jarvis and Ling were raised during criminal trials for tax evasion. But as recognized by Iacobucci and Major JJ. in Jarvis, at paragraph 91, "[i]t would be a fiction to say that the adversarial relationship only comes into being when charges are laid". The adversarial relationship may appear at an earlier stage. It is at this stage that the taxpayer needs the protection of the Charter. It is then that he should obtain it. Iacobucci and Major JJ. have explained that situations where Charter rights are violated should be avoided rather than remedied (paragraph 91 of their reasons). The Motions Judge was therefore justified in applying the analyses developed in those two cases in order to determine the validity of the requirements on a judicial review application.

(2) The letters issued under section 231.1 of the Act

[97] In R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627 (McKinlay), Wilson J. qualified the Act as "essentially a regulatory statute" since it controls the manner in which federal income tax is calculated and collected (at paragraph 20). In the same decision at paragraph 37, La Forest J. in concurring reasons described the Act as "essentially of an administrative nature."

[98] Based on self-assessment and self-reporting characteristics, the success of the administration of the tax scheme depends primarily upon a taxpayer's honesty. As Cory J. noted in Knox Contracting, "[t]he entire system of levying and collecting income tax is dependent upon the integrity of the taxpayer in reporting and assessing income." (Knox Contracting Ltd. v. Canada, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 338 at paragraph 18). To short-circuit the possibilities that taxpayers may omit to report revenues, "a system of random monitoring may be the only way in which the integrity of the tax system can be maintained." (McKinlay, at paragraph 33).

Digitized by Google

[99] To achieve such an end, the Minister is granted broad supervisory powers to audit and inspect relevant documents to the productions of those returns. However, to be effective, the self-enforcing regulatory scheme that is the Act requires resort to adequate investigation and the existence of effective penalties (Thomson Newspapers Ltd. v. Canada (Director of Investigation and Research, Restrictive Trade Practices Commission), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 425).

[100] In Del Zotto v. Canada, [1997] F.C.J. No. 795, r'ved [1999] 1 S.C.R. 3 (Del Zotto) Strayer J.A., dissenting, but confirmed by a unanimous panel of the Supreme Court of Canada, noted at paragraph 50 of his reasons that, when trying to label the Act as 'regulatory' or 'criminal', "one must look at the total context of the particular process in question." Strayer J.A. stated at paragraph 51 that "the nature and the purpose of the legislative scheme whose administration or enforcement is in question" constitute contextual elements to be considered in the interpretation of provisions related to mandatory production of documents.

[101] The Act already requires from the taxpayer to disclose an important amount of information. As found by Strayer J.A. at paragraph 62 of his reasons:

[62] [...] The Act requires all manner of disclosure. The taxpayer must, for example, disclose: his place of residence; his age; his social insurance number; his marital status or whether he is living common law; his sources and amounts of income; his dependants, their ages and possible physical conditions if handicapped; the amounts and objects of his charitable or political donations, if he is to claim tax credits; whom he employs and entertains if he seeks to deduct the costs as business expenses; and details of his pension arrangements. If he is employed he must disclose many of these details not only to Revenue Canada but also to his employer so that mandatory tax deductions can be made.

[102] Subsection 238(1) of the Act sets out a summary conviction offence that is triggered by non-compliance with the filing requirements or with other of the Act's provisions - including subsections 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) and the documentary retention rules imposed by subsection 230(1) (see Jarvis, paragraph 55).

[103] For its part, section 239 creates a number of additional offences. In Del Zotto, supra, Strayer J.A., at paragraph 61, described section 239 as a section "designed to ensure compliance with the self-reporting requirements of the Income Tax Act". The existence in the Act of section 239 does nothing to alter its regulatory or administrative nature but rather ensures that taxpayers act in conformity with its requirements. Non-compliance with the mandatory provisions of the Act can, however, lead to criminal charges being laid under section 239, which bears the formal hallmark of criminal legislation.

[104] At that stage, the Charter must receive contextual application (Jarvis, at paragraph 63). The powers of the Minister, under subsections 231.1(1) and 231.2(1), which are available "for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement" of the Act, do not include the prosecution of offences under section 239 (Jarvis, at paragraph 78). Recourse must be had to subsection 231.3(1), which sets out an ex parte application process for a warrant to search "for any document or thing that may afford evidence [of] the commission of [the] offence [under this Act]" (Jarvis, at paragraph 81).

Digitized by Google

[105] The Court in Jarvis noted, at paragraph 88, that "where the predominant purpose of a particular inquiry is the determination of penal liability, CCRA officials must relinquish the authority to use inspection and requirement powers under ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1)" of the Act. The Minister must then apply to the court for a search warrant pursuant to section 231.3 of the Act. At that stage, officials have crossed the Rubicon. The adversarial relationship between the taxpayer and the state is engaged and the inquiry has become an investigation (paragraph 88).

[106] An analysis is required to determine whether the Rubicon has been crossed (Jarvis, at paragraph 88). The predominant purpose of the inquiry in question may be found in a clear decision to pursue a criminal investigation. Apart from that clear decision, one must weigh all the factors that have a bearing on the nature of the inquiry in order to characterize the inquiry. A finding on the predominant purpose of an inquiry is a question of mixed fact and law. In Jarvis, at paragraphs 88, 93 and 94, the Court sets the test in the following manner:

[88] [...] In essence, officials "cross the Rubicon" when the inquiry in question engages the adversarial relationship between the taxpayer and the state. There is no clear formula that can answer whether or not this is the case. Rather, to determine whether the predominant purpose of the inquiry in question is the determination of penal liability, one must look to all factors that bear upon the nature of that inquiry.

[Emphasis added.]

[...]

[93] To reiterate, the determination of when the relationship between the state and the individual has reached the point where it is effectively adversarial is a contextual one, which takes account of all relevant factors. In our opinion, the following list of factors will assist in ascertaining whether the predominant purpose of an inquiry is the determination of penal liability. Apart from a clear decision to pursue a criminal investigation, no one factor is necessarily determinative in and of itself, but courts must assess the totality of the circumstances, and make a determination as to whether the inquiry or question in issue engages the adversarial relationship between the state and the individual.

[Emphasis added.]

[94] In this connection, the trial judge will look at all factors, including but not limited to such questions as:

[Emphasis added.]

(a) Did the authorities have reasonable grounds to lay charges? Does it appear from the record that a decision to proceed with a criminal investigation could have been made?

(b) Was the general conduct of the authorities such that it was consistent with the pursuit of a criminal investigation?

(c) Had the auditor transferred his or her files and materials to the investigators?

(d) Was the conduct of the auditor such that he or she was effectively acting as an agent for the investigators?

(e) Does it appear that the investigators intended to use the auditor as their agent in the collection of evidence?

(f) Is the evidence sought relevant to taxpayer liability generally? Or, as is the case with evidence as to the taxpayer's mens rea, is the evidence relevant only to the taxpayer's penal liability?

(g) Are there any other circumstances or factors that can lead the trial judge to the conclusion that the compliance audit had in reality become a criminal investigation?

[Emphasis in original.]

Digitized by Google

[107] The Minister acknowledged that criteria (c), (d), (e) and (g) of the analysis did not apply since at no time was the Audit Section of CCRA ever involved. The Motions Judge noted, at paragraph 84 of his reasons, that although the list of factors was not exhaustive, his analysis would focus on factors (a), (b) and (f).

[108] The Motions Judge did not, however, proceed with an analysis of the three factors he mentioned. He quoted an excerpt from Faribault's testimony in examination for discovery and then promptly concluded that, "from the outset", the predominant purpose of the investigation was the determination of penal liability. He said at paragraph 90, which I repeat, that:
The evidence on the record as a whole leads to the conclusion that the predominant purpose of the investigation of CCRA, from its outset, was prosecution of the applicants for tax evasion and eventual imposition of penal sanctions against them. The statements on discovery by Faribault are not the only indicia of this predominant purpose; they are simply among the most succinct elements of evidence which support this conclusion. Accordingly, I find that the predominant purpose of the investigation was prosecution of the applicants for tax evasion.
Yet, the Motions Judge pointed to not even one of the indicia he found, "on the record as a whole", to support his conclusion.
[109] The Supreme Court of Canada in Jarvis, at paragraph 100, stated:
Whether or not a given inquiry is auditorial or investigatory in nature is a question of mixed fact and law. It involves subjecting the facts of a case to a multi-factored legal standard (Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Southam Inc., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 748, at para. 35) and, accordingly, Judge Fradsham's finding is not immune from appellate review.
[110] That same Court observed in Housen v. Nikolaisen, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235, that questions of law can sometimes be mistaken for questions of mixed fact and law. Iacobucci and Major JJ. wrote at paragraph 27:

[27] Once it has been determined that a matter being reviewed involves the application of a legal standard to a set of facts, and is thus a question of mixed fact and law, then the appropriate standard of review must be determined and applied. Given the different standards of review applicable to questions of law and questions of fact, it is often difficult to determine what the applicable standard of review is. In Southam, supra, at para. 39, this Court illustrated how an error on a question of mixed fact and law can amount to a pure error of law subject to the correctness standard:
... if a decision-maker says that the correct test requires him or her to consider A, B, C, and D, but in fact the [page258] decision-maker considers only A, B, and C, then the outcome is as if he or she had applied a law that required consideration of only A, B, and C. If the correct test requires him or her to consider D as well, then the decision-maker has in effect applied the wrong law, and so has made an error of law.
Therefore, what appears to be a question of mixed fact and law, upon further reflection, can actually be an error of pure law.
[111] The absence of a proper application of the legal test to the facts in the case at bar would justify this Court to intervene if an error of law or of mixed fact and law is committed. The standard of review on appeal is one of correctness.
[112] Before I go into the detailed examination of factors (a) (b) and (f) of the list in Jarvis which were mentioned by the Motions Judge, I must examine whether there was, in the words of the Supreme Court of Canada, at paragraph 93 of Jarvis, "a clear decision to pursue a criminal investigation".

Digitized by Google

[113] The evidence is clear that Faribault suspected that a tax evasion had occurred and was mandated by CCRA to investigate the matter.
[114] Faribault explained in his cross-examination the principal purpose of his investigation (A.B., p. 120, questions 72 to 74):

72. Q- Dans le présent dossier. . . ici, on mentionne "Où l'on soupçonne qu'il y ait eu évasion fiscale", dans le présent dossier, vous aviez des soupçons qu'il y. . . qu'il y avait eu évasion fiscale au moment où vous avez émis les demandes péremptoires, c'est exact ?
R- Des soupçons ? Oui.
73. Q- Donc. . . et votre principale responsabilité comme enquêteur des enquêtes spéciales était de. . . d'enquêter dans ce cas qui occupe les requérants ici. . .
R- Oui.
74. Q- . . . dans le but de recueillir des preuves de toute infraction criminelle, conformément au paragraphe 7, qui ont pu être commises, et si de telles preuves sont recueillies, de prendre les. . . des dispositions en vue de porter l'affaire devant les tribunaux en vertu de l'article 239 de la loi ?
R- Oui.
[Emphasis added.]
[115] He admitted that, while the principal objective of his investigation was to look for evidence of tax evasion, special investigations do not always lead to such a finding and may result in a reassessment. He stated (A.B., p. 132, questions 129-132):
129. Q- Alors, votre objectif, donc. . . si je comprends bien, votre objectif principal à l'égard des requérants était d'établir qu'ils aient commis une évasion fiscale, c'est ça ?
R- Enquêter l'évasion fiscale, oui. . .
130. Q- Oui.
R- . . . c'est. . .
131. Q- Mais si évidemment, ça arrivait pas en bout de ligne, vous avez toujours l'opportunité de cotiser au civil ?
R- Voilà.
132. Q- O.K. O.K. Mais vous êtes pas en train de me dire que votre objectif principal dans le dossier ici, c'était simplement d'établir des cotisations d'impôt ?
R- Non. . .

[Emphasis added.]
[116] The following specific questions were later put to him and the following answers were given (A.B., p. 145, questions 164-167):
164. Q- Puis dans le présent dossier, comme vous l'avez mentionné tantôt, vous entreteniez des soupçons qui ont. . . qui ont résulté, là, à l'enquête que vous avez amorcée, mais vous nous dites que vous ne. . . n'aviez pas des motifs encore, là, raisonnables et probables de croire qu'une infraction d'évasion fiscale avait été commise ?
R- Oui.
165. Q- Donc vous avez pas procédé, là, à. . . à demander un mandat de perquisition ?
R- Non.
166. Q- Vous avez plutôt procédé par le biais de demandes péremptoires ?
R- Oui.
167. Q- Selon l'article 231.2 de la loi ?
R- Oui.

Digitized by Google

[Emphasis added.]

[117] The characterization of whether "a clear decision to pursue a criminal investigation" was made, is not to be considered with a pure criminal law perspective in mind. Quite the contrary, it flows from the nature and purpose of the Act which is essentially administrative and regulatory.

[118] When Faribault's statements are analysed in context, it cannot be said, under the Jarvis test, that a clear decision had been made to pursue a criminal investigation. Nothing of that sort could have been decided at that stage. The directive given by CCRA to Faribault was an assignment to look principally for evidence of a penal nature. It cannot be drawn from that directive that CCRA had made the decision to pursue a criminal investigation. Such decision could not be made. CCRA had no evidence on which to base such a decision and no search warrant could have been issued to implement it.

[119] The principle applicable in income tax cases is that the Minister must be capable of exercising his broad supervisory powers whether or not he has reasonable grounds for believing that a particular taxpayer has breached the Act (Jarvis, at paragraph 89). Faribault's firm intent and directive did not act as shackles. No adversarial relationship had yet crystalized between the parties (Jarvis, at paragraph 88, Ling, at paragraph 30). CCRA had not yet crossed the Rubicon.

[120] The gathering of evidence, through the administrative process, could therefore legally continue. The request to produce documents, which taxpayers are required to keep under section 230 of the Act, is in order. The gathering of evidence must cease when the collaboration of the taxpayer could cause his auto-incrimination. CCRA has then the duty to warn the taxpayer of such a potential consequence. The taxpayer may in turn invoke the protection of the Charter.

At that stage, either through a clear decision or de facto, CCRA chooses to pursue a criminal investigation. Before that stage has been reached, and when only a directive to look principally for evidence of a penal nature has been given, it cannot be said that a criminal investigation has begun. Faribault entertained suspicion. He had a clear mandate, a strong intent but no evidence whatsoever. At paragraph 90 of Jarvis it is said:

[...] On what evidence could investigators ever obtain a search warrant if the whiff of suspicion were enough to freeze auditorial fact-finding? The state interest in prosecuting those who wilfully evade their taxes is of great importance, and we should be careful to avoid rendering nugatory the state's ability to investigate and obtain evidence of these offences.

[121] The absence of evidence is not an irrelevant consideration. It goes to the essence of the making of a "clear decision to pursue a criminal investigation". A clear decision must be distinguished from the appearance of a decision. What is the reality of a decision if the decision-maker knows from the start that he cannot implement it?

[122] It is my view that "a clear decision to pursue a criminal investigation" had not been made and could have been made at that preliminary stage. Paragraphs 88 and 93 of Jarvis stand for the proposition that it is for the judge to objectively assess the nature of the inquiry and determine whether a clear decision is made to pursue the taxpayer for a criminal offence. If a clear decision is made, an analysis of the enumerated factors is not necessary. A contextual analysis of circumstances and attitudes is superfluous, because the evidence is clear. I do not understand Jarvis to say, however, that from a mere directive to conduct principally a penal investigation in circumstances where there is not one iota of evidence and where no search warrant can be issued, one can draw the conclusion that a decision to pursue a criminal investigation has been made.

Digitized by Google

[123] I now turn to a detailed analysis of factors (a), (b) and (f) of Jarvis. This will allow me to further explain my position.

(a) Did the authorities have reasonable grounds to lay charges? Does it appear from the record that a decision to proceed with a criminal investigation could have been made?
[124] Faribault, at paragraph 22 of his affidavit, made it clear that:
[...] au moment de l'émission de cette demande préemptoire, je n'avais aucun motif raisonable et probable de croire à la commission d'une infraction d'évasion fiscale par la requérante.
[125] He repeated that proposition during his testimony (A.B., page 145).
[126] The evidence shows that at the time the requirements were issued, the authorities did not have reasonable grounds to lay charges. It is clear from the record that a decision to proceed with a criminal investigation could not have been made at that point.
(b) Was the general conduct of the authorities consistent with a criminal investigation?
[127] The fact that Faribault had a long experience with CCRA, that he was the sole person assigned to the inquiry directed at the corporate appellants, that he suspected that a tax evasion had occurred, that his main responsibility was to gather evidence of a criminal offence and that, if found, he was to bring the matter before the court under the penal provision of section 239 of the Act, do not lead to the conclusion that a criminal investigation is in process as these words are to be understood in an income tax context. In Jarvis, the Supreme Court of Canada accepted that criminal investigations and administrative audits may be conducted in parallel (paragraph 97). It said that the mere existence of reasonable grounds that an offence may have occurred is by itself insufficient to support the conclusion that the predominant purpose of an inquiry is the determination of penal liability (Jarvis, at paragraph 89). All the more, the test cannot be set at the level of mere suspicion that an offence has occurred. Even where reasonable grounds to suspect an offence exist, it will not always be true that the inquiry has become an investigation. The Minister must be capable of exercising his broad supervisory powers whether or not he has reasonable grounds for believing a particular taxpayer has breached the Act. The existence of reasonable grounds is not a sufficient indicator that CCRA is conducting a de facto investigation. In most cases, if all ingredients of an offence are reasonably thought to have occurred, it is likely that the investigation function is triggered. Paragraphs 88 to 90 of Jarvis set the tests in the following manner:
[88][...] In essence, officials "cross the Rubicon" when the inquiry in question engages the adversarial relationship between the taxpayer and the state. There is no clear formula that can answer whether or not this is the case. Rather, to determine whether the predominant purpose of the inquiry in question is the determination of penal liability, one must look to all factors that bear upon the nature of that inquiry.

[89] To begin with, the mere existence of reasonable grounds that an offence may have occurred is by itself insufficient to support the conclusion that the predominant purpose of an inquiry is the determination of penal liability. Even where reasonable grounds to suspect an offence exist, it will not always be true that the predominant purpose of an inquiry is the determination of penal liability. In this regard, courts must guard against creating procedural shackles on regulatory officials; it would be undesirable to "force the regulatory hand" by removing the possibility of seeking the lesser administrative penalties on every occasion in which reasonable grounds existed of more culpable conduct. This point was clearly stated in McKinlay Transport, supra, at p. 648, where Wilson J. wrote: "The Minister must be capable of exercising these [broad supervisory] powers whether or not he has reasonable grounds for believing that a particular taxpayer has breached the Act." While reasonable grounds indeed constitute a necessary condition for the issuance of a search warrant to further a criminal investigation (s. 231.3 of the ITA; Criminal Code, s. 487), and might in certain cases serve to indicate that the audit powers were misused, their existence is not a sufficient indicator that the CCRA is conducting a de facto investigation. In most cases, if all ingredients of an offence are reasonably thought to have occurred, it is likely that the investigation function is triggered.

Digitized by Google

[90] All the more, the test cannot be set at the level of mere suspicion that an offence has occurred. Auditors may, during the course of their inspections, suspect all manner of taxpayer wrongdoing, but it certainly cannot be the case that, from the moment such suspicion is formed, an investigation has begun. On what evidence could investigators ever obtain a search warrant if the whiff of suspicion were enough to freeze auditorial fact-finding? The state interest in prosecuting those who wilfully evade their taxes is of great importance, and we should be careful to avoid rendering nugatory the state's ability to investigate and obtain evidence of these offences.

[Emphasis added.]

[128] The Rubicon is crossed when the inquiry in question engages the adversarial relationship between the taxpayer and the state (Jarvis, at paragraph 88).

[129] At paragraph 97, the Court further explains in Jarvis that if an investigation into penal liability is subsequently commenced, the investigators can avail themselves of the information obtained pursuant to the audit powers prior to the commencement of the criminal investigation but not with respect to information obtained pursuant to the commencement of the investigation into penal liability. This is no less true where the investigations into penal liability and tax liability are in respect of the same tax period.

[130] The test set by the Supreme Court to determine when an administrative audit has become a criminal investigation is a demanding one. The evidence in the case at bar shows that the general conduct of the authorities was not consistent with a criminal investigation under the Jarvis test at the time the requirements were issued because the Rubicon had not and could not be crossed.

(f) Is the evidence sought relevant to taxpayer liability generally? Or, as is the case with evidence as to the taxpayer's mens rea, is the evidence relevant only to the taxpayer's penal liability?

[131] Faribault's affidavit indicates that he was given the principal responsibility to gather evidence of a criminal offence and, if found, to bring the matter before the court under the penal provision of section 239 of the Act. Faribault did not indicate, however, whether that was the only evidence sought except to say that if no evidence of a penal nature was found, he had jurisdiction to reassess and impose a penalty under section 163 of the Act (see A.B. at p. 76, paragraphs 10 and 11, and p. 119, question 68).

[132] The record does not allow a calculation that would determine if a reassessment could be done in a timely fashion since we have no evidence of the date of mailing of the various notices of assessments. It may be that the Minister would still be in time for a reassessment for the 1998 taxation year in the cases of Les Plastiques Algar (Canada) Ltée and Modern Wood Fabricators (M.W.F.) Inc., but one can only speculate. Faribault's mandate was however clear. He was definitely looking for evidence relevant to the appellants' penal liability. This was the principal evidence he was looking for.

[133] The statement of Faribault, mentioned in the above paragraph, read in the light of the two other relevant factors, does not detract however from the fact that CCRA did not and could not make a clear decision to cross the Rubicon when the letters were issued. The superior interest of the income tax system must therefore prevail.

Digitized by Google

[134] The fact that CCRA started the inquiry after the Montreal Rabbinical College was cleared of the charges against it does not alter my conclusion. The Motions Judge erred by misapplying the legal tests elaborated in Jarvis.

VII. Conclusion

[135] I conclude from the evidence that the Minister is still capable of exercising these broad supervisory powers given to him under subsections 231.1(1) and 231.2(1) of the Act.

[136] The requirements are valid and I need not consider the third issue raised in this appeal, namely whether the appellants' Charter rights were violated.

[137] I must stress, however, that the Motions Judge made another error in the context of his reasons for judgment. Having concluded that the predominant purpose of the inquiry had become criminal in nature, a conclusion I do not share, he nevertheless concluded in the end that the requirements directed at the corporate appellants were valid under the Charter. That, he could not do.

[138] In Jarvis, Iacobucci and Major JJ. stated at paragraph 78 that by their express terms, both subsections 231.1(1) and 231.2(2) of the Act are available "for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement" or, in French, "pour l'application et l'exécution" of the Act. And that although these terms are, at first glance, extremely broad, they do not include the prosecution of section 239 offences. At paragraph 88, they observed that "where the predominant purpose of a particular inquiry is the determination of penal liability, CCRA officials must relinquish the authority to use the inspection and requirement powers under ss. 231.1(1) and 231.2(1)" of the Act. Search warrants under section 231.3 of the Act or section 487 of the Criminal Code are then required (paragraph 83).

[139] Having found that a criminal investigation had begun, a conclusion, I repeat, I do not share, the Motions Judge could not have concluded to the validity of the requirements under the Charter. As a matter of statutory construction, search warrants would have been required if such a situation had arisen.

VIII. Disposition

[140] For the above reasons, I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

"Alice Desjardins"

J.A.

Jean Breau v. The Minister Of National Revenue, 2013 FCA 215, Appeal Court Disagreeing to Interfere with RFI Due to PURPORTED CRIMINAL Investigation

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT OF THE COURT

(Delivered from the Bench at Toronto, Ontario, on September 16, 2013).

STRATAS J.A.

[1] Mr. Breau appeals from the judgment dated October 17, 2012 of the Federal Court (per O'Reilly J.): 2012 FC 1207.

[2] In the Federal Court, Mr. Breau applied for judicial review of the respondent Minister's decision under the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985 (5th Supp.), c. 1 to require Mr. Breau and others to provide information concerning a particular tax plan. The Federal Court dismissed the application for judicial review.

[3] Before the Federal Court, Mr. Breau submitted that the Minister issued the requirement for the improper purpose of gathering evidence for a criminal investigation, contrary to section 7 of the Charter and the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in R. v. Jarvis, 2002 SCC 73, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 757.

Digitized by Google

[4] Examining the interactions between the Canadian Revenue Agency's audit and enforcement branches and applying Jarvis (especially paragraph 97), the Federal Court rejected Mr. Breau's submission. It held that the Minister's predominant purpose in issuing the requirement was civil in nature.

[5] In this Court, Mr. Breau accepts Jarvis as the controlling authority. In Mr. Breau's view, the Federal Court mischaracterized certain matters, thereby wrongly concluding the requirement was civil in nature. In particular, Mr. Breau that submitted the audit branch was acting as an agent for the enforcement branch in collecting evidence, the evidence gathered by the audit branch was relevant to penal liability, and the contact between the audit and enforcement branches while the criminal investigation was ongoing was important and significant.

[6] In our view, the Federal Court's rulings on these matters are questions of mixed fact and law suffused by fact. Therefore, in this Court, Mr. Breau must demonstrate palpable and overriding error in order to set them aside.

[7] This he has not done. In our view, the Federal Court examined the particular constellation of evidence before it, which included some isolated incidents of contact between the audit and enforcement branches after the criminal investigation started. Based on this constellation of evidence, it made defensible findings.

[8] In this Court, Mr. Breau also challenged the Federal Court's overall conclusion that the Minister's predominant purpose in issuing the requirement was civil in nature under the Jarvis test. We see no reversible error on the part of the Federal Court based on the particular evidence before it.

[9] In rejecting Mr. Breau's submissions, we do not foreclose a court in any later criminal proceedings from reaching a different conclusion if, based on the evidence then available, a different light is cast on the matter.

[10] For the foregoing reasons, we shall dismiss the appeal, with costs.

"David Stratas"

J.A.

Supporting Documents to Arrive at Stated Amounts

Since any type of document pertaining to a taxpayer's statements or transactions can be requested, it should come as no surprise that such would include any supporting documents used in arriving at the stated amounts, be they in the tax return itself, or in any statement made to the tax authorities.

This was the case in Javed Ahmad, Naheed Surrya Ahmad, Tahira Parveen Chaudhry, Khush B.R. Chaudhry V. The Minister Of National Revenue[82] where the taxpayers had supplied net worth statements to CRA on preliminary request, but CRA further asked for the supporting calculations that led to the amounts being presented. When contested the Ct. held:

PURPOSE OF THE REQUEST

[16] The evidence reveals that the Minister is auditing each applicant on his/her tax liability.

[17] The tax system is a self-reporting and self-assessing one and the Minister of National Revenue has the task of administering and enforcing the Income Tax Act. To achieve this purpose, Parliament enacted several provisions, among which section 231.2 of the Income

[82] T-2570-96

Digitized by Google

Tax Act, empowering the Minister to investigate and audit taxpayers.

[18] Pursuant to the demand made under paragraph 231.2(1)(a) of the Act, the applicants did provide signed statements of their net worth for the years 1991, 1992 and 1993. The respondent is not seeking, in these proceedings, to obtain information for 1989 and 1990.

[19] The respondent is seeking, under paragraph 231.2(1)(b) of the Act, the supporting documents and working papers relative to the preparation of the net worth statements which were signed and provided by the applicants through their accountant on July 10, 1995.

[20] To establish the tax position of each applicant, authorized officers of Revenue Canada are seeking to review the supporting documents and working papers relative to the preparation of the statements of net worth already provided to Revenue Canada in July 1995.

[21] The test to be applied in determining whether the Minister is acting for a purpose related to the administration and enforcement of the Income Tax Act was stated by the Supreme Court of Canada in Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Attorney General of Canada, [1962] S.C.R. 729 and applied by that same Court in James Richardson & Sons, Ltd. v. M.N.R., [1984] 1 S.C.R. 614 at 623 as follows:

The Canadian Bank of Commerce case, however, makes it clear that the subsection is not to be construed that broadly. It establishes through the majority judgment written by Mr. Justice Cartwright as:

the test of whether the Minister is acting for a purpose specified in the Act is an objective one and has to be decided on the proper interpretation of the subsection and its application to the circumstances disclosed;

the obtaining of information relevant to the tax liability of some specific person or persons whose liability to tax is under investigation is a purpose related to the administration or enforcement of the Act;

it is not necessary that the person from whom the information is sought be one whose liability to tax is under investigation;

the fact that the giving of the information may disclose private transactions involving persons who are not under investigation and may not be liable to tax does not invalidate the Requirement.

[22] At this point, a tax audit is underway and the furnishing of the documents serves the purpose of continuing the audit of each of the applicants' taxable income for the years under review.

In Fraser Milner Casgrain LLP et al. v. MNR[83] the Minister served a RFI on the tax planning notes of a law firm in attempt to determine the rationale by which a set of transactions had been structured. They thought that GAAR (s. 245) applied and by obtaining the information they could better assess the situation. When contested the Trial Court held:

[5] Three of the Requirements ("Sale Strategy Memorandum Requirements") demand production of a Sale Strategy memorandum referred to in certain Fraser & Beatty invoices.

[6] The remaining six Requirements ("Tax Planning Requirements") demand production of certain documents relating to tax planning. The tax planning information is subject to a claim of solicitor-client privilege which is being adjudicated upon by the British Columbia Supreme Court.

[83] 2002 FCT 912

Digitized by Google

[7] The applicants also submit that:
The purpose of the Requirements was to determine whether there was an avoidance transaction as defined in subsection 245(3) of the Act, thereby attracting the potential application of the general anti-avoidance rule ("GAAR").
Other than the documents demanded by the Requirements, the Minister has been provided with access to all documents relating to the reorganization.
[8] Those facts are not admitted by the Minister. The Minister submits that the purpose of the Requirements was not only to determine whether there was an avoidance transaction, but also to verify the audit subjects' compliance with the Act.
…
[10] Two issues are raised with respect to the Requirements:
Should the purported Sale Strategy Memorandum Requirements be quashed because the invoices to which they refer do not contain any reference to a "Sale Strategy memorandum"?
Should the Tax Planning Requirements be quashed on the ground that they were not requested for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement of the Act?

ANALYSIS
Sales Strategy Memorandum Requirements

[12] The Minister admits that the Sale Strategy Memorandum Requirements cannot be complied with because no "Sale Strategy memorandum" is referred to in any of the invoices referred to in the Sale Strategy Memorandum Requirements.
[13] Therefore, the application will be allowed in respect of these requirements.

Tax Planning Requirements
[14] The applicants argue that the Tax Planning Requirements should be quashed because the Requirements only seek tax planning information, and that information is irrelevant to the issue of whether any of the transactions under investigation are avoidance transactions as defined in subsection 245(3) of the Act.
…
[15] More particularly, the applicants say that a requirement to provide information under section of the Act is valid only if it is issued for a purpose related to the administration or enforcement of the Act. See: James Richardson & Sons Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, [1984] 1 S.C.R. 614 at page 623; AGT Limited. v. Canada (Attorney General), [1997] 2 FC 878 (CA), leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada denied [1997] SCC No 314.
[16] The applicants assert that while the Tax Planning Requirements were issued to determine if the reorganization is an avoidance transaction as described in subsection 245(3) of the Act, the purpose test contained in subsection 245(3) is objective, not subjective. See: OSFC Holdings Ltd. v. The Queen, 2001 FCA 260 at paragraph 46, leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada refused [2001] SCC No. 522; The Queen v. Canadian Pacific Limited, 2001 FCA 398 at paragraph 16.
[17] Therefore, the applicants say that GAAR's applicability depends upon objective criteria and not upon the thoughts of a particular taxpayer. If it were otherwise, identical transactions and circumstances could lead to different tax results, depending solely upon the thoughts of a taxpayer. It is said that GAAR is not about thought, but rather applies equally whether a taxpayer consulted a tax lawyer or took no advice at all. It follows, it is said, that the tax planning information requested in the Requirements cannot be relevant. [18] Moreover, the applicants say that by making imprisonment a potential consequence of the failure to comply with a requirement issued pursuant to section 231.2 of the Act, Parliament indicated its intention that such a requirement is to be issued sparingly and judiciously, and only where there is a purpose related to the administration or enforcement of the Act. Examining a taxpayer's thoughts is not such a purpose.

Digitized by Google

[19] In response to those submissions, the Minister says that, first, in order for a requirement issued under subsection 231.2(1) to be valid, it is not necessary that the information or documents requested be relevant for a particular issue. Second, the Minister says that the purpose of the Tax Planning Requirements was not merely to determine whether the transactions in the reorganization are avoidance transactions as defined in subsection 245(3) of the Act.

[20] Proper consideration of these submissions begins with subsection 231.2(1) of the Act which provides that the Minister may issue a requirement under this section "for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement of this Act".

[21] The scope of the Minister's power under the predecessor to this subsection was considered by the Supreme Court of Canada in James Richardson & Sons, supra, where it was determined that the scope of the Minister's power was not so broad as would appear on the face of the provision. Justice Wilson, writing for the Court at pages 622 and 623, wrote as follows:

The language of s. 231(3) of the Income Tax Act is unquestionably very broad and on its face would cover any demand for information made to anyone having knowledge of someone else's affairs relevant to that other person's tax liability. It would, in other words, if construed broadly, authorize an exploratory sortie into any taxpayer's affairs and require anyone having anything to contribute to the exploration to participate. It would not be necessary for the Minister to suspect non-compliance with the Act, let alone to have reasonable and probably grounds to believe that the Act was being violated as required in s. 231(4). Provided the information sought had a bearing (or perhaps even could conceivably have a bearing) on a taxpayer's tax liability it could be called for under the subsection.

The Canadian Bank of Commerce case, however, makes it clear that the subsection is not to be construed that broadly. It establishes through the majority judgment written by Mr. Justice Cartwright (as he then was) that:

the test of whether the Minister is acting for a purpose specified in the Act is an objective one and has to be decided on the proper interpretation of the subsection and its application to the circumstances disclosed;

the obtaining of information relevant to the tax liability of some specific person or persons whose liability to tax is under investigation is a purpose related to the administration or enforcement of the Act;

it is not necessary that the person from whom the information is sought be one whose liability to tax is under investigation;

the fact that the giving of the information may disclose private transactions involving persons who are not under investigation and may not be liable to tax does not invalidate the requirement.

[22] Justice Wilson went on, at page 624, to further clarify that a prerequisite to the statutory purpose is that someone's tax liability be the subject of investigation.

[23] This decision was referred to with approval by the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. McKinlay Transport Limited, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627, where the Court upheld the constitutionality of the predecessor to section 231.2. There, Justice Wilson, writing for the majority, observed at paragraph 38 that:

In my opinion, subsection 231(3) provides the least intrusive means by which effective monitoring of compliance with the Income Tax Act can be effected. It involves no invasion of a taxpayer's home or business premises. It simply calls for the production of records which may be relevant to the filing of an income tax return. A taxpayer's privacy interest with regard to these documents vis-a-vis the Minister is relatively low. The Minister has no way of knowing whether certain records are relevant until he has had an opportunity to examine them. At the same time, the taxpayer's privacy interest is protected as much as possible since section 241 of the Act protects the taxpayer from disclosure of his records or the information contained therein to other persons or agencies.

Digitized by Google

[underlining added]

[24] In her analysis, Justice Wilson concluded, at paragraph 36, that the criteria established in the criminal context to be met in order for a search to be reasonable were not applicable to regulatory provisions under the Act. In particular, Justice Wilson found no requirement that there be reasonable grounds to believe that a requirement will lead to disclosure of something related to a particular assessment, or that only documents strictly relevant to the assessment may be authorized to be seized.

[25] In AGT Ltd. v. Canada (Attorney General), [1996] 3 FC 505 (TD) Justice Rothstein, as he then was, considered the validity and enforceability of notices of requirements issued under subsection 231.2 (1) of the Act in circumstances where, among others, it was asserted by the taxpayer that much of the information sought by the Minister was irrelevant and where there were admissions in the cross-examination of the Minister's deponent to that effect. Justice Rothstein summarized the guiding principles with respect to subsection 231.2(1) as follows, at paragraph 17:

Having considered Richardson and McKinlay, I conclude:

The expectation of privacy in relation to business records is relatively low.

As long as the Minister's purpose is related to the administration and enforcement of the Income Tax Act, relevance of the material sought to a particular issue is not a prerequisite to a requirements notice under subsection 231.2(1).

Documents may be compelled even if they are not required to be prepared or kept under the Income Tax Act.

It is not necessary that a requirements notice set out the grounds or particulars for which the documents sought are required.

As long as the documents pertain to a genuine inquiry into the tax liability of a person, they may be the subject of a requirements notice under subsection 231.2(1).

[underlining added]

[26] Justice Rothstein's decision was upheld by the Federal Court of Appeal, [1997] 2 F.C. 878. At paragraphs 23 and 24 of that decision, Justice Desjardins for the Court wrote:

Under the Income Tax Act, the Minister is concerned with verifying the tax liability of the taxpayer which is first revealed in the taxpayer's return. It will often be "impossible to determine from the face of the return whether any impropriety has occurred in its preparation". Because of the nature of the conduct regulated by the Income Tax Act, there are, in many cases, no ways of determining whether proscribed conduct has been engaged in, short of studying the process by which a suspected corporation or business has made and implemented its decision. Investigatory mechanisms which force corporations and other businesses to divulge what they and only they can know about their internal affairs are part of the state's interest in the enforcement of the Act.

While an individual or a corporation's interest in having business strategies kept in confidence is recognized, the balancing no doubt favours the state. Wilson J. in McKinlay recognizes that the "Minister has no way of knowing whether certain records are relevant until he has had an opportunity to examine them". There is an ultimate safeguard. Not all of those documents are necessarily admissible against the taxpayer in a court of law or in another proceeding. Only those in accord with the rules of evidence shall be admissible.

Digitized by Google

[underlining added] [27] I accept that from this jurisprudence the following principles emerge:

The determination of a taxpayer's tax liability is a purpose related to the administration and enforcement of the Act.

In order for a requirement to produce records to be valid, the Minister need not show the records will be relevant, he need merely show the records requested may be relevant.

Relevance is tested by determining whether the particular record requested may be relevant in the determination of a taxpayer's tax liability and not whether the particular record requested is relevant with respect to a particular issue under audit.

[28] It follows, in my view, that even if the sole purpose of the Requirements was to determine whether there was an avoidance transaction, this does not impair the validity of the Requirements. Relevance to a particular issue is not a prerequisite, it is sufficient that the material may be relevant to the determination of a taxpayers' tax liability.

[29] Here, the Tax Planning Requirements were served upon a director, officer or agent for the audit subjects, and the tax planning documents sought pertain to their tax liability.

[30] Moreover, while without doubt the purpose test found in subsection 245(3) of the Act is objective, that does not necessarily make irrelevant the factual matrix which led to the transactions at issue, or preclude evidence as to what motivated certain actions. In applying the purpose test, the Court will look to all of the relevant facts and circumstances, determining intent at the time the transactions in question were carried out. Looking to what a party expected to receive from a transaction may be relevant, and a comparison of the amount of the estimated tax benefit to the estimated business earnings may be helpful. See, for example, the comments of the Federal Court of Appeal in OSFC Holdings, supra, at paragraph 58. [31] By way of further example, in Duncan v. Canada [appeal by Water's Edge Village Estates (Phase II) Limited] 2002 FCA 291, when considering whether the impugned transactions reasonably could be considered to have been undertaken primarily for a purpose other than to obtain a tax benefit, the Federal Court of Appeal had regard to the taxpayers' evidence as to their motivations and to the findings of fact made below with respect to that evidence. This evidence of motive was not excluded or considered irrelevant or inadmissible.

[32] Therefore, I am not satisfied that tax planning information is per se irrelevant to a proper subsection 245(3) analysis. In any event, even if such information is in the end found not to be relevant, as Justice Desjardins noted for the Federal Court of Appeal in AGT Ltd., supra, the ultimate safeguard is that the documents are not necessarily admissible against the taxpayers in another proceeding.

Accountant's Files While No Accountant-Client Privilege

Further, in Leslie Tower et al v. MNR et al[84] the Trial court had to consider whether there was accountant- client privilege over the tax files of a client when CRA issued a RFI in respect of them. It held:

[1] This is an application under section 18.1 of the Federal Court Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-7, for judicial review of two decisions of the Minister of National Revenue to issue two "Requirements to Provide Information", dated July 11, 2001 and July 18, 2001 respectively, requiring the applicants' accountants BDO Dunwoody LLP to provide all the tax files, tax planning documents and all other files relating to the applicants.

[84] 2002 FCT 929

Digitized by Google

[2] The issues in this application are (a) whether the documents and information in the possession of the applicants' accountants (the respondent BDO Dunwoody LLP) are subject to a privilege protecting them from disclosure, and (b) whether the Requirements are within the legal scope of subsection 231.2(1) of the Income Tax Act (the "Act").
[12] On July 11, 2001, the Minister prepared a 'Requirement to Provide Information' pursuant to paragraphs 231.2(1) of the Act. The Requirement was served on BDO Dunwoody's Kelowna BC office. The three- page Requirement requests a broad range of documents, including:
[...all documents in your possession for the period January 1, 1997 to July 10, 2001, relating to [the applicants], and any corporation the shares of which were owned by any of them, directly or indirectly at any time [...], including but not limited to:
All Working Paper files...]

All tax files and planning documents relating to, but not limited to, the taxpayers listed above.
All correspondence files including:
all correspondence in any form, including electronic, to or from any of the taxpayers above,
[...]

The reasons each individual sought financing through BDO as opposed to a lending institution.
The reason financing was required by each individual....]
[13] On July 18, 2001, a second Requirement was prepared and subsequently served on BDO Dunwoody's Calgary office. This document is similar to the first Requirement.
[14] The Requirements called for BDO Dunwoody to provide documents and information to the Minister, pertaining to the applicants' CIBC interest deductions and other business and tax matters related to the 1997 and subsequent taxation years. Both Requirements' due dates have been extended indefinitely pending the outcome of this matter.

ANALYSIS WITH RESPECT TO PRIVILEGE
[17] The applicants submit that their communications with their accountants should be protected by either a "class privilege", by virtue of the relationship akin to that between a solicitor and client, or by virtue of a "case- by-case privilege" if the party seeking the privilege meets the four-part test of Wigmore (Wigmore, Evidence in Trials at Common Law, vol. 8, McNaughton Revision, para. 2285).The Respondent BDO Dunwoody takes no position on whether a privilege applies.
[18] Privilege was discussed by by Lamer C.J. (as he then was) in R. v. Gruenke [Man. C.A. Indexed as: R. v. Fosty], [1991] 3 S.C.R. 263, [1991] S.C.J. No. 80 (S.C.C.). Part of this discussion is useful to clarify the issue here:
¶ ¶ 26 Before delving into an analysis of the issues raised by this appeal, I think it is important to clarify the terminology being used in this case. The parties have tended to distinguish between two categories: a "blanket", prima facie, common law, or "class" privilege on the one hand, and a "case-by-case" privilege on the other. The first four terms are used to refer to a privilege which was recognized at common law and one for which there is a prima facie presumption of inadmissibility (once it has been established that the relationship fits within the class) unless the party urging admission can show why the communications should not be privileged (i.e., why they should be admitted into evidence as an exception to the general rule). Such communications are excluded not because the evidence is not relevant, but rather because, there are overriding policy reasons to exclude this relevant evidence. Solicitor-client communications appear to fall within this first category (see: Geffen v. Goodman Estate, [1991] 2 S.C.R. 353 and Solosky v. The Queen, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 821). The term "case-by-case" privilege is used to refer to communications for which there is a prima facie assumption that they are not privileged (i.e., are admissible). The case-by-case analysis has generally involved an application of the "Wigmore test" (see above), which is a set of criteria for determining whether communications should be privileged (and therefore not admitted) in particular cases. In other words, the case-by-case analysis requires that the policy reasons for excluding otherwise relevant evidence be weighed in each particular case.

Digitized by Google

Proposed Accountant-Client Class Privilege

[19] There is a high threshold for finding a class privilege. Solicitor-client privilege, the standard to which the applicant seeks to draw an analogy, is ensconced in the common law and is a fundamental and necessary aspect of the dealings between lawyers and their clients.

[20] BDO Dunwoody has a "client confidentiality policy", which reads, in part:

Client Confidentiality [...]

All information concerning the affairs of any client of the Firm must be held under strict confidence and will not be released or disclosed to any other party outside the office unless required by law or other specific written request by the client, and in all cases, it can be released only by a Partner.

[21] It is well established that accountants and their clients do not have a class privilege with respect to income tax litigation. The Federal Court of Appeal in Baron v. Canada, [1991] 1 F.C. 688 (F.C.A.), varied at [1993] 1 S.C.R. 416 (but not on this point) stated:

¶ ¶ 64 As far as the claim for accountant/client privilege is concerned, a claim based on a number of provisions of Quebec law, the Trial Judge said [at pages 292-293]:

Even if I accept that the law of Quebec provides for an accountant-client privilege in the context of litigation, I am not persuaded that such a rule has been adopted with respect to federal income tax litigation. If such a rule were intended to apply one would expect to find it expressly so provided in either the Canada Evidence Act [R.S.C., 1985, c. C-5] or the Income Tax Act.

and again [at pages 293-294]:

It is not at all strange that solicitor-client communications are privileged in so far as compellable evidence before the courts is concerned, while those between an accountant and client are not. The purpose of the solicitor-client privilege is to ensure free and uninhibited communications between a solicitor and his client so that the rendering of effective legal assistance can be given. This privilege preserves the basic right of individuals to prosecute actions and to prepare defences. As Mr. Justice Lamer indicated, in Descôteaux et al. v. Mierzwinski, [1982] 1 S.C.R. 860; (1982), 141 D.L.R. (3d) 590; 70 C.C.C. (2d) 385; 28 C.R. (3d) 289;1 C.R.R. 318; 44 N.R. 462 at page 883 S.C.R., the privilege is recognized because it is necessary for the proper administration of justice. I do not think there is an overriding policy consideration, of this nature, in the case of accountant-client communication. An accountant may, as a matter of professional ethics, be required to keep communications and other information concerning his or her client confidential. But this is not founded upon a need to ensure an effective system of the administration of justice.

¶ ¶ 65 We could see nothing to criticize in her treatment of either matter and accordingly did not require to hear from the respondents.

[emphasis added]

[22] Further, in 1997 this Court in Vancouver Trade Mart Inc. (Trustee of) v. Canada (Minister of National Revenue - M.N.R.), [1997] F.C.J. No. 1467 (F.C.T.D.) reiterated that communications between an accountant and his client are not privileged unless the communication was directed by a lawyer:

Digitized by Google

¶ 35 Jackett P. [in In Susan Hosiery Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, (1969) 69 D.T.C. 5278 (ex. ct.), following a discourse on the nature of solicitor client privilege] then went on to examine the application of the solicitor/client privilege to "accountant's materials". At 5283, he put it as follows:

Applying these principles, as I understand them, to materials prepared by accountants, in a general way, it seems to me

that no communication, statement or other material made or prepared by an accountant as such for a business man falls within the privilege unless it was prepared by the accountant as a result of a request by the business man's lawyer to be used in connection with litigation, existing or apprehended; and that, where an accountant is used as a representative, or one of a group of representatives, for the purpose of placing a factual situation or a problem before a lawyer to obtain legal advice or legal assistance, the fact that he is an accountant, or that he uses his knowledge and skill as an accountant in carrying out such task, does not make the communications that he makes, or participates in making, as such a representative, any the less communications from the principal, who is the client, to the lawyer; and similarly, communications received by such a representative from a lawyer whose advice has been so sought are none the less communications from the lawyer to the client.

[emphasis mine]

[23] Counsel for the applicants rely upon R. v. McClure, [2001] S.C.J. No. 13, 2001 SCC 14 (S.C.C.) to show that there can be identified a new "class privilege" on a principled basis if the privilege is essential to the effective operation of the legal system. Major J. wrote:

¶ 28 For a relationship to be protected by a class privilege, thereby warranting a prima facie presumption of inadmissibility, the relationship must fall within a traditionally protected class. Solicitor-client privilege, because of its unique position in our legal fabric, is the most notable example of a class privilege. Other examples of class privileges are spousal privilege (now codified in s. 4(3) of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5) and informer privilege (which is a subset of public interest immunity).

¶ 29 Other confidential relationships are not protected by a class privilege, but may be protected on a case-by-case basis. Examples of such relationships include doctor-patient, psychologist-patient, journalist-informant and religious communications. The Wigmore test, containing four criteria, has come to govern the circumstances under which privilege is extended to certain communications that are not traditionally-recognized class privileges (Wigmore, supra, at p. 527):

The communications must originate in a confidence that they will not be disclosed.

This element of confidentiality must be essential to the full and satisfactory maintenance of the relation between the parties.

The relation must be one which in the opinion of the community ought to be sedulously fostered.

The injury that would inure to the relation by the disclosure of the communications must be greater than the benefit thereby gained for the correct disposal of litigation.

[emphasis mine]

Digitized by Google

[24] Therefore McLure does not extend the protection of a class privilege, however, leaves open the possibility of a case-by-case privilege following the Wigmore test.
[25] The applicants submit that tax advice from an accountant with respect to the Income Tax Act is no different than tax advice from a lawyer and, accordingly, ought to be accorded the same class privilege. I cannot agree for the reasons referred to by Mr. Justice Lamer (as he then was) in Descôteaux, supra. Privilege for lawyer-client communications is necessary for the proper administration of justice as it preserves the basic right of individuals to prosecute actions and to prepare defences. None of this applies to a client's communications with an accountant because the accountant does not represent the client with respect to the administration of justice.
[26] Therefore, no class privilege attaches to the material set out in the Requirements.
Case-by-Case Privilege
[27] I deal next with the alternative claim of "case-by-case privilege" as set out in Wigmore, based on the analogy of advice from a tax accountant as being akin to advice from a tax lawyer, and entitled to similar protection. The Wigmore test was set out by Lamer C.J. in R. v. Gruenke, supra.:
¶ ¶ 22 Given that the Wigmore criteria play a central role in this case, I will set out the "test" below for ease of reference (Wigmore, Evidence in Trials at Common Law, vol. 8, McNaughton Revision, para. 2285):
The communications must originate in a confidence that they will not be disclosed.
This element of confidentiality must be essential to the full and satisfactory maintenance of the relation between the parties.
The relation must be one which in the opinion of the community ought to be sedulously fostered.
The injury that would inure to the relation by the disclosure of the communications must be greater than the benefit thereby gained for the correct disposal of litigation.
[28] In my view, the applicants fail the Wigmore test. The relationship between a client and his tax accountant is not one which in the opinion of the community ought to be sedulously fostered. The Income Tax Act is complicated and individuals rely upon their accountants to prepare their returns and to deal with the tax department about their returns. The records which a client provides his accountants are his income tax records, and must be produced upon demand so that the tax department can verify or question an individual's tax return. Clients understand that information must be produced to the tax department upon demand.
[29] Moreover, the "community" of North America is currently experiencing a crisis of confidence in the accounting of financial information with respect to many public companies, and public outrage over accounting misdeeds (such as with Enron Corporation and Worldcom Inc.). Such events, and the resulting outcry, are illustrative of the view of the "community" that a client-accountant privilege is not to be "sedulously fostered" as per Wigmore.

The taxpayer further argued that the legal scope of the RFI was at issue, that it was beyond the limits of what the ITA allows for which is the securing of any information that relates to the tax affairs of the taxpayer. The court held:

ANALYSIS WITH RESPECT TO THE LEGAL SCOPE OF THE REQUIREMENTS
[30] The applicants and the respondent BDO Dunwoody challenge the legal scope of the Requirements as being too broadly drawn and authorizing "an exploratory sortie" or "fishing expedition" into the applicants' affairs beyond the subject of the Minister's "genuine and serious inquiry" with respect to the loans from the CIBC and the deduction of the interest costs of these loans in the applicants' last two tax years prior to leaving Canada. Moreover, the Requirements demand that BDO Dunwoody not only provide documents and information with respect to the applicants, but "subjective" explanations as to the purpose and intention of the applicants with respect to the loan transactions and their decision to emigrate from Canada. In the applicants' submission, this is beyond the scope of the Requirements.

Digitized by Google

[31] The case law is clear that the Requirements under subsection 231.2(1) of the Income Tax Act cannot be construed, as the Supreme Court of Canada held in Richardson v. Minister of National Revenue, [1984] 1 S.C.R. 614, to "authorize an exploratory sortie into any taxpayer's affairs and require anyone having anything to contribute to the exploration to participate". The Court stated that it would be necessary for the Minister to suspect a taxpayer's non-compliance with the Act and to require information which had a bearing on the taxpayer's tax liability.

Evidence from the Minister's Representative

[32] The Minister's representative, Mr. S.M. Marischuk, deposed at paragraph 13 of his affidavit that the applicants are the subject of audits to determine their correct tax liability. He testified that the Requirements relate to this general audit, as well as the only "serious and genuine inquiry" identified to date: whether the applicants are entitled to the interest expense deduction on the loan transactions, which the Minister characterizes as a "Departure Trade".

Test of Relevancy and Reasonableness under Subsection 231.2(1)

[33] In AGT Limited v. The Attorney General of Canada (1997) 97 D.T.C. 5189, [1997] F.C.J. No. 398 (F.C.A.), the Federal Court of Appeal held that the requirement to provide information under subsection 231.2(1) is drafted in broad language but has been "reduced through the rules of interpretation" to situations where the information sought by the Minister is relevant to the tax liability of a specific person and the tax liability of such person is the subject of a "genuine and serious inquiry". The Court found that it is often impossible to determine whether an impropriety has occurred in the preparation of a tax return without studying the process by which a suspected business or person has made and implemented a decision. The Court held at page 5193:

"....[I]nvestigatory mechanisms which force corporations and other businesses to divulge what they and only they can know about their internal affairs are part of the state's interest in the enforcement of the Act. While an individual or a corporation's interest in having business strategies kept in confidence is recognized, the balancing [sic] no doubt favours the state..."

[34] The Court of Appeal further stated that the Minister has no way of knowing whether certain records are relevant until he has had an opportunity to examine them.

[35] In the case at bar, the general tax liability of the applicants is the subject of an audit. This is a genuine and serious inquiry as required in AGT, supra.

[36] Under the Act, the Minister is entitled to require the production of "information" for the purpose of studying "the process by which a suspected corporation or business has made and implemented its decision". The applicants seek to restrict the Requirements to only information relevant to the loans from the CIBC to the applicants at the end of the 1997 tax year. I cannot unduly restrict the Minister's right to require the production of information to only these loans. These loans triggered a concern with verifying the general tax liability of the applicants. The tax liability of the applicants is the subject of a genuine and serious audit and the Requirements thereby meet the test of relevancy and reasonableness.

[37] When the applicants decided to emigrate from Canada and undertake sophisticated multi-million dollar loans to obtain income tax deductions to off-set off capital gains on leaving Canada, it is reasonable to expect that the Minister may audit the applicants not only with respect to the loan transactions, but also with respect to their total income tax liability.

Digitized by Google

Subjective Information

[38] The applicants and BDO Dunwoody object to the parts of the Requirements that BDO Dunwoody create and produce documents and information which does not exist. The Requirements ask individuals at BDO prepare new documents with their subjective understanding of the intention of the applicants and BDO. [39] The broad powers of subsection 231.2(1) require the production of documents and information in existence. It is not framed so broadly that accountants can be required to respond to written interrogatories. This subsection does not authorize the Minister to demand responses to written interrogatories. If subsection 231.2(1) of the Act were intended to be so broad as to provide the Minister with the option to conduct a written examination for discovery, Parliament would have so provided. Accordingly, the parts of the Requirements which require the creation of responses to questions are outside the legal scope of subsection 231.2(1) of the Act, and will be set aside.

[40] In R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627, [1990] S.C.J. No. 25 (S.C.C.), the Supreme Court considered the nature of the Requirement to Provide Information. That Court's findings were summarize by the Federal Court of Appeal in Bisaillon v. Canada, [1999] F.C.J. No. 1477 (F.C.A.) at paragraph 3, as follows:

the Act is essentially a regulatory measure;

s. 231(3) (the predecessor of s. 231.2(1)) is not criminal or quasi-criminal law; [...]

in a taxation system based on the principle of self-reporting and self-assessment, the Minister of National Revenue has to have broad powers to audit taxpayers' returns and inspect records which may have been used to prepare those returns;

the Minister of National Revenue must be able to exercise these powers whether or not he has reasonable grounds to believe that a particular taxpayer has breached the Act;

s. 231(3) provides the least intrusive means by which effective monitoring of compliance with the Act can be carried out; and the taxpayer's privacy interest with regard to documents which may be relevant in income tax returns is relatively low in relation to the Minister.

[41] Implicit in the Supreme Court's decision is the concept that a Requirement to Provide Information under the Act only applies to documents and other records already in existence.

[42] Any ambiguity as to the information subject to a Requirement under subsection 231.2(1) shall be resolved in favour of the taxpayer. See Seaspan International Ltd. v. Canada, [2002] F.C.J. No. 911(F.C.T.D.) as per Blais J.:

¶ ¶ 40 [... The Supreme Court of Canada has already repeated many times that any ambiguities found in the taxing statutes shall be resolved in favour of the taxpayer as per Mr. Justice Estey in Johns-Manville Canada Inc. v. The Queen, 85 D.T.C. 5373 (SCC) at 5384 where he stated:

Such a determination is, furthermore, consistent with another basic concept in tax law that where the taxing statute is not explicit, reasonable uncertainty or factual, ambiguity resulting from lack of explicitness in the statute should be resolved in favour of the taxpayer.

¶ ¶ 41 In addition, Justice Sopinka of the Supreme Court of Canada held in Fries v. The Queen, 90

D.T.C. 6662 (SCC) said that:

We are not satisfied that the payments by way of strike pay in this case come within the definition of 'income... from a source' within the meaning of s. 3 of the Income Tax Act. In these circumstances the benefit of the doubt must go to the taxpayers.

[43] Therefore, the scope of the Minister's power in a Requirement to Provide

Digitized by Google

Information under 231.2(1) extends to documents and records already in existence. The power does not provide the Minister with the right to conduct a written examination for discovery.

Right to Redaction to Expunge Names of Any Person Unrelated to the Applicants
[44] If any of the documents or information to be produced under the Requirements refer to a client of BDO Dunwoody unrelated to the applicants, BDO Dunwoody has the right to redact the documents to expunge that person's name before the document or information is submitted.

On appeal[85] the Appeal Ct. had to consider 4 issues raised by the taxpayer:

- Whether the RFI could be made in such a way as to compel the taxpayers tax accountants to actually create relevant documents (answer questions posed to them by CRA),
- Whether the taxpayer's tax accountants had a right of redaction of non-related party identities,
- Whether there existed a class-privilege over the communications between the taxpayer and his tax accountants that would prevent the documents from being released, and
- Whether the RFI was based on the legality of administration and enforcement of the Act.

The judgment is well worth reading as an Appeal case that speaks of so many issues regarding this important instance and it provided:

[2] In his Requirements, dated July 11 and July 18, 2001, the Minister required BDO Dunwoody (Dunwoody), the accountants for Bruce Kitsch, Leslie Tower and Robert Tower (the Taxpayers) to deliver up all the tax files, tax planning documents and all of the files relating to the Taxpayers, and to provide written responses to certain questions. The Applications Judge ordered the Taxpayers to comply with the Minister's Requirements, except for those parts which required written responses to questions, or which compelled Dunwoody to create new documents; these latter demands being said to be outside the scope of subsection 231.2(1).
On Appeal

- does subsection 231.2(1) allow Dunwoody to refuse to answer the Minister's written questions or to create new documents?
- does subsection 231.2(1) permit Dunwoody to redact, that is, remove, confidential references and information in respect of persons other than the Taxpayers from the documents to be delivered in response to the Minister's Requirements?

On Cross-appeal were the Requirements issued for the purpose of the administration and enforcement of the Act within the meaning of section 231.2?
was certain of the requested material that was prepared by Dunwoody for the purpose of providing tax advice to the Taxpayers privileged?
[11] The Requirements required production of numerous documents, including all tax files, planning documents, working paper files, permanent files, records, minutes or notes of all conversations or meetings, detailed billings, detailed telephone records, promotional material, and correspondence relating to the Taxpayers. In addition, they required answers to a number of questions to be answered by Mr. Hughes, the Taxpayers' accountant at the Kelowna office of Dunwoody, and Mr. Butalia. The questions would appear to be designed to elicit facts that were likely to be within the knowledge of Mr. Hughes and Mr. Butalia. There has been no suggestion that Mr. Hughes and Mr. Butalia did not possess the knowledge required to answer the questions. However, the Minister conceded that if they did not possess the information, an answer to that effect would have complied with the Requirements.

[85] Minister of National Revenue v. Bruce Kitsch et al, 2003 FCA 307

Digitized by Google

[12] The Taxpayers and Dunwoody commenced an application for judicial review challenging the validity of the Requirements, and also making a claim of privilege with respect to the required documents and information. The Applications Judge allowed the application in part. He found that the general tax liability of the Taxpayers was the subject of a genuine and serious inquiry by the Minister, and that the Requirements met the tests of relevance and reasonableness established by this Court in AGT Limited v. Canada (Attorney General) (C.A.), [1997] 2 F.C. 878. However, he interpreted subsection 231.2(1) as giving the Minister the right to require the production of documents, but not the right to require the answers to questions, and on that basis he held that the Requirements were invalid with respect to the questions asked of Mr. Hughes and Mr. Butalia.

[13] The Applications Judge also indicated that if any of the documents or information to be produced under the Requirements referred to a client of Dunwoody unrelated to the appellants, Dunwoody had the right to redact the documents to expunge that person's name before the document or information was submitted to the Minister. Dunwoody did not redact any information from the requested material which it prepared but did not deliver to the Minister, pending the ultimate outcome of these proceedings.

Analysis

Issue a): Does subsection 231.2(1) allow Dunwoody to refuse to answer the Minister's written questions or to create new documents?

[14] The Applications Judge held that the powers of subsection 231.2(1) require the production of documents and information in existence, but that it is not framed so broadly that accountants can be required to respond to written interrogatories. He reasoned that if subsection 231.2(1) of the Act were intended to be so broad as to provide the Minister with the option to conduct a written examination for discovery, Parliament would have so provided. It is my respectful opinion that the learned Applications Judge erred in his interpretation of subsection 231.2(1). His error, in my view, lies in his failure to give a meaning to paragraph 231.2(1)(a).

[15] In statutory interpretation there is a presumption against redundancy. The governing principle has been described in Ruth Sullivan, Sullivan and Driedger on the Construction of Statutes, 4th ed. (Markham: Butterworths, 2002) at 158:

It is presumed that the legislature avoids superfluous or meaningless words, that it does not pointlessly repeat itself or speak in vain. Every word in a statute is presumed to make sense and to have a specific role to play in advancing the legislative purpose.

[16] The same principle is expressed as follows by Iacobucci J. in Communities Economic Development Fund v. Canadian Pickles Corp., [1991] 3 S.C.R. 388 at paragraph 36:

It is a principle of statutory interpretation that every word of a statute must be given meaning: "A construction which would leave without effect any part of the language of a statute will normally be rejected" (see also Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes (12th ed. 1969), at p. 36).

[17] Applied in this case, that principle dictates that meaning must be given to both paragraphs (a) and (b) of the subsection 231.2(1), and unless there is good reason to the contrary, a different interpretation must be given to both paragraphs, and different meanings to the words "information" and "document".

Digitized by Google

[18] The word "information", used in paragraph 231.2(1)(a), is not defined in the Act. Referring to the The Concise Oxford English Dictionary, 10th ed., "information" is defined as "facts or knowledge provided or learned as a result of research or study" or "what is conveyed or represented by a particular sequence of symbols, impulses, etc." The French version of paragraph 231.2(1)(a) uses the word "renseignement". In Collins Robert Unabridged French-English Dictionary (5th ed.), "renseignement" is defined as "information, piece of information".

[19] Turning to paragraph 231.2(1)(b), it provides the Minister with the power to compel production of "any document". Again, referring to The Concise Oxford English Dictionary, 10th ed., "document" is defined as "a piece of written, printed, or electronic matter that provides information or evidence or that serves as an official record." However, the word "document", as used in the Act, is not restricted to writings. It is defined in section 231 to include "money, a security and a record". "Record" in turn is defined in subsection 248(1) as including "an account, an agreement, a book, a chart or table, a diagram, a form, an image, an invoice, a letter, a map, a memorandum, a plan, a return, a statement, a telegram, a voucher, and any other thing containing information, whether in writing or in any other form".

Issue b):

Does subsection 231.2(1) of the Act permit Dunwoody to redact, that is, remove, confidential references and information in respect of persons other than the Taxpayers from the documents to be delivered in response to the Minister's Requirements?

[21] In preparing to disclose the requested material to the Minister, Dunwoody was concerned that some material might contain the names of or information concerning other clients not legally associated with or related to the Taxpayers. Accordingly, during the course of argument, Dunwoody asked the Applications Judge for permission to redact such names or information from the material if it became necessary to protect confidential third party information. The Applications Judge agreed with this proposal.

[22] Once Dunwoody assembled the required documents, it was discovered that there was nothing to be redacted. It is argued for the Taxpayers that this issue should not be dealt with at all because it is moot, in the sense that there is no live controversy between the parties on the question of redaction of the documents. The Crown argues that this is an appropriate case in which to deal with the issue despite its mootness (see Borowski v. Canada (Attorney General of Canada), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 342 at 353. In my view, it is appropriate to deal with the Applications Judge's conclusion on the redaction issue, despite its mootness, because of the likelihood of uncertainty and confusion that could result from the Applications Judge's comments, and also because the issue is amenable to a simple resolution.

[24] That is sufficient to dispose of the redaction issue in this case. I recognize that this resolution of the matter leaves unanswered theoretical questions. For example, it is debatable whether there is a right of redaction at all with respect to documents that fall within the scope of a valid requirement under subsection 231.2(1). In this regard, there is jurisprudence from the Supreme Court of Canada that supports the proposition that a requirement is not invalid merely because it results in the disclosure of private transactions involving persons who are not under investigation and may not be liable to tax (see Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Attorney General of Canada (1962), 35 D.L.R. (2d) 49 at 54; James Richardson & Sons v. Minister of National Revenue, 9 D.L.R. (4th) 1 at 7; and R. v. McKinlay Transport, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627 at paragraph 16.)

Digitized by Google

[25] If a right of redaction exists in theory, there is an issue as to who ought to determine whether the right should be exercised in a particular case, the person to whom the requirement is directed, or the Minister, or the Court. If a dispute should arise in future about the right to redact a document that is within the scope of a valid requirement but contains third party information that for some reason the Minister ought not to have, I have no doubt that the parties will find a way to have the issues debated in an appropriate forum. Meanwhile, I prefer to express no opinion on issues that do not arise in this case.

[26] For these reasons, the Minister's appeal is well founded and should be allowed, subject only to the resolution of the issues raised in the cross-appeal.

Issue c):

Were the Requirements issued for the purpose of the administration and enforcement of the Act within the meaning of section 231.2?

[27] The evidence establishes that the Requirements are intended to test the Taxpayers' entitlement to the interest deduction. Broadly speaking, entitlement to the interest deduction depends upon whether the statutory conditions in paragraph 20(1)(c) of the Income Tax Act are met, and if not, whether the general anti-avoidance rule in subsection 245(2) applies.

[28] The position of the Taxpayers is that the Requirements would result in the disclosure of tax planning documents and information about their subjective intention in entering into the transactions that gave rise to the claim for the interest deduction. They argue that the Minister cannot possibly require tax planning documents and evidence of subjective intention for the purpose of the administration and enforcement of the Income Tax Act, because those matters are not relevant to the applicability of paragraph 20(1)(c) or subsection 245(2). I am unable to accept this argument. The scope of subsection 231.2(1) is not as limited as the Taxpayers suggest.

[29] A number of cases have dealt with the scope of subsection 231.2(1) (see R. v. McKinlay Transport, supra; James Richardson & Sons v. Minister of National Revenue, supra; AGT Limited v. The Attorney General of Canada, supra; and R. v. Jarvis, 2002 D.T.C. 7547 (S.C.C.) at paragraph 51). The relevant principles from these authorities establish that the determination of a taxpayer's tax liability is a purpose related to the administration and enforcement of the Act. A requirement is valid if the requested information may be relevant in the determination of the tax liability of the named taxpayer. This is a low threshold. Subsection 231.2(1) gives the Minister a broader authority to obtain information than would be the case if, for example, the Minister were conducting pre-trial examinations for discovery in the context of an income tax appeal.

[30] In my view, the information which the Taxpayers object to producing may be relevant to determining their tax liability under the Act. As Desjardins J.A. stated at paragraph 23 for an unanimous panel of this Court in AGT Limited v. The Attorney General of Canada, supra:

Because of the nature of the conduct regulated by the Income Tax Act, there are, in many cases, no ways of determining whether prescribed conduct has been engaged in, short of studying the process by which a suspected corporation or business has made and implemented its decision.

[31] First of all, tax planning information can shed light on intention and therefore may be important in interpreting contracts or determining whether persons are acting at arm's length. Further, it may be relevant in determining the residency of the Taxpayers, which is an issue in the present case, since a relevant factor is whether they intended to sever their ties to Canada permanently or only temporarily. Finally, the subjective intention of the Taxpayers may be relevant in determining interest deductibility or the applicability of the general anti-avoidance provision. The purpose test may be an objective one, but a taxpayer's intention is certainly a relevant consideration (see Ludco Enterprises Ltd. v. Canada, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 1082 at paragraphs 54-55; and Fraser Milner Casgrain v. Minister of National Revenue, 2002 D.T.C. 7310, [2002] 4 C.T.C. 210 (F.C.T.D.)).

Digitized by Google

[32] The Taxpayers also assert that the Requirements, which are intended to elicit information about the 1997 and 1998 taxation years, were issued more than three years after the initial assessment of those years, and thus after the expiry of the normal limitation period for those years. They argue that because the Minister cannot reassess those years, they need not produce any documents covered by the Requirements. I cannot agree. First, there is no statutory time limit for requirements. Second, the record does not establish that the Minister cannot reassess the Taxpayers for 1997 and 1998. Assuming, without deciding, that the Requirements relate only to those years, there are numerous statutory provisions that permit the Minister to reassess within three years after the expiry of the normal limitation period. There are also statutory exceptions that remove all time limitations.

[33] Finally, the Taxpayers argue that the Requirements improperly subvert the Tax Court of Canada Rules (General Procedure), SOR/90-688a, relating to pre-trial discovery. The simple answer to this argument is no income tax appeal has been commenced in this case. In any event, the Minister's right to investigate the affairs of a taxpayer is not necessarily limited by the commencement of an appeal (see Canada v. Imperial Oil Limited and Inco Limited, 2003 FCA 289). There may be situations where the exercise of a statutory power of investigation is abusive, but this is not such a case.

[34] For the foregoing reasons, in my analysis, the Applications Judge correctly determined that the Requirements were issued for the purpose of the administration and enforcement of the Act.

Issue d):

Was certain of the requested material that was prepared by Dunwoody for the purpose of providing tax advice to the Taxpayers privileged?

[35] This issue raised the question as to whether tax memoranda, notes of tax advice, or other documents which set out or show the tax advice given by a tax accountant to a client and the reasoning or analysis behind the tax advice are privileged communications. If so, such communications would not be subject to disclosure under Canadian law even though the subject matter may be relevant to an income tax audit or Tax Court proceeding.

[36] The Supreme Court of Canada has recognized that there are two types of legal privilege - "class" privilege and "case-by-case" privilege (see R. v. Gruenke, [1991] 3 S.C.R. 263 at paragraph 26). The Taxpayers urge that their confidential communications with Mr. Butalia, when properly understood, can fit within either category of privilege. They assert that the evidence establishes that they dealt with Dunwoody, and Mr. Butalia in particular, on the understanding that the tax advice they received was confidential. They argue that had they known that tax advice could only be shielded by solicitor-client privilege they would not have discussed the matters with Dunwoody.

[37] In 1990, this Court confirmed that an accountant-client privilege does not exist in relation to advice given by an accountant in connection with the search and seizure provisions of the Act (see Baron v. Canada, [1991] 1 F.C. 688, (1990) 91 D.T.C. 5055, [1991] 1 C.T.C. 125). The Taxpayers say it is now time to recognize a class privilege for communications between tax accountants who provide professional tax advice to their clients in the course of a professional relationship and such privilege should extend to all types of tax advice; income tax, excise tax, goods and services tax, sales tax and real property tax. It is urged that the categories of privilege are not static and can evolve over time, with the identification of a new class on a principled basis (see Lamer C.J. in R. v. Gruenke, supra, at paragraph 35).

Digitized by Google

[38] I see nothing in the submissions of the Taxpayers that militates against the earlier ruling rendered by this Court in Baron v. Canada, supra. Solicitor-client privilege is rooted in the proper administration of justice, made necessary by the need for confidential advice in prosecuting one's rights and preparing defences against improper claims (see R. v. McClure, [2001] 1 S.C.R. 445 at 457-459). Lawyers are legally and ethically required to uphold and protect the public interest in the administration of justice (see Fortin v. Chrétien, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 500 at paragraph 49). In contrast, accountants are not so bound. Nor do they provide legal advice, as to do so would constitute a breach of provincial and territorial laws governing the legal professions. In my analysis, no overriding policy consideration exists so as to elevate the advice given by tax accountants to the level of solicitor-client privilege.

[39] As for case-by-case privilege, the Supreme Court of Canada has directed that the principles set out by Professor Wigmore in his American treatise on evidence provide a general framework to determine whether or not a communications is privileged. Within this framework, policy considerations and the requirements of fact-finding can be weighed and balanced on the basis of their relative importance in each case. Consequently, a principled approach to the question of case-by-case privilege should always be employed, taking into account each of the four factors, and the particular circumstances of each case (see R. v. Gruenke, supra, at paragraph 35).

[40] The four Wigmore principles are these:

The communications must originate in a confidence that they will not be disclosed.

This element of confidentiality must be essential to the full and satisfactory maintenance of the relation between the parties.

The relation must be one which in the opinion of the community ought to be sedulously fostered.

The injury that would inure to the relation by the disclosure of the communications must be greater than the benefit thereby gained for the correct disposal of litigation.

(see John Henry Wigmore, Evidence in Trials at Common Law, vol. 8. (Boston: Little, Brown, 1961) at 527.) [41] In discussing the first Wigmore principle, the Supreme Court of Canada has stated that "it is absolutely crucial that the communications originate with an expectation of confidentiality . . .. Without this expectation of confidentiality, the raison d'être of the privilege is missing" (see R. v. Gruenke, supra, at paragraph 39). While a chartered accountant, as a matter of professional ethics, is required to keep his communications with clients confidential, the accountant knows, or should know, that this confidentiality is restricted by the power of the Minister to require disclosure. Therefore, Dunwoody and the Taxpayers have not discharged their onus of showing that the relationship in issue carried with it an expectation of confidentiality sufficient to meet this first Wigmore principle.

[42] The Taxpayers have also not shown that confidentiality was essential to the full and satisfactory maintenance of their relationship with Mr. Butalia so as to satisfy Wigmore's second principle. Confidentiality may be desired, as with all personal and professional relationships, but the relationships here did not depend on confidentiality for their existence. Indeed, according to his evidence, had Mr. Kitsch believed that there was no confidentiality involved, he would have still used the same firm of accountants for business and financial advice.

[43] Further, the Taxpayers have not shown that the tax accountant-client relationship is one that in the opinion of the community ought to be sedulously fostered to the degree that would attract privilege. While confidentiality may be preferred, the tax accountant-client relationship is in no way as fundamental to society and the administration of justice as the solicitor-client relationship.

Digitized by Google

[44] The rare situations where case-by-case privilege has been extended to certain specifically identified communications have included clients and their doctors, sexual assault therapists and clergy. These relationships are sedulously fostered to the extent that privilege may apply to them in certain limited circumstances. The reason is obvious. Canadian society puts a much higher value on the physical, mental and spiritual integrity of a person than on personal wealth. It is recognized that unnecessary harm and suffering could result from deterring an individual from consulting a doctor, a sexual assault therapist, or a member of the clergy. The worst that could happen if a person is discouraged from seeking income tax advice is that the person might fail to take advantage of a tax saving opportunity, unfortunate perhaps, but not a threat to one's physical, mental or spiritual well being.

[45] In considering the fourth Wigmore principle, it must be determined whether the interests served by protecting the communications from disclosure outweigh the interest in getting at the truth and correctly disposing of the matter (see M.(A.) v. Ryan, [1997] 1 S.C.R. 157 at paragraphs 16 and 31). The balancing of the injury to the relationship against the benefit of the correct disposal of the matter involves purely public policy considerations. As Chief Justice McLachlin held, at this stage of analysis, an occasional injustice should not be accepted as the price of extending privilege from disclosure. While it is true that the traditional categories of privilege necessarily run the risk of occasional injustice, "that does not mean that courts, in invoking new privileges, should lightly condone its extension." (M.(A.) v. Ryan, supra, at paragraph 32). In that case, the potential injury to be suffered due to the disclosure of the disputed information was described, at paragraph 30, as one that:

perpetuates the disadvantage felt by victims of sexual assault, often women. The intimate nature of sexual assault heightens the privacy concerns of the victim and may increase ... the difficulty of obtaining redress for the wrong. The victim of a sexual assault is placed in a disadvantaged position as compared with the victim of a different wrong... She is doubly victimized, initially by the sexual assault and later by the price she must pay to claim redress - redress which in some cases may be part of her program of therapy.

Nonetheless, the Court affirmed the disclosure of all documents except the personal notes of a person who would not be called as a witness at trial and whose opinion was of no consequence. The unsuccessful claim of privilege in that case illustrates the high threshold of injury necessary to overcome the benefit of correctly disposing of the matter.

[46] The Taxpayers have not shown that any public injury would occur should these tax accountant- client communications continue to be subject to review by the Minister. Innumerable tax accountant-client relationships have functioned fully in the past notwithstanding the Minister's opportunity to review their communications. Whatever the public injury feared by the Taxpayers may be, it has not precluded the full and satisfactory maintenance of those past relationships despite the Minister's powers of review. If tax accountant-client communications are subject to the spectre of case-by-case privilege, the harm done to the verification and enforcement of the Act would be considerable, and would outweigh whatever injury, if any, that would inure to such relationships. Overall, in my analysis, the balancing of public interests favours disclosure.

[47] The disputed communications in this appeal and cross-appeal do not meet any of Wigmore's four principles and are therefore not covered by case-by-case privilege. The Applications Judge correctly held that the documents requested in the Requirements are not subject to either class or case-by-case privilege. [48] It was drawn to the courts attention that since July 22, 1998, the United States, pursuant to I.R.C.

Digitized by Google

§ 7525 (1986), has afforded a class privilege to federally authorized tax practitioners with respect to tax advice given to their clients. Except for criminal matters, the scope of that privilege, where the tax advice given involves either the Internal Revenue Service or United States Federal Court proceedings, is the same as for attorney-client privilege. While a matter of policy interest, it is of no consequence to the task at hand. In addition, a review of the content of that legislation undoubtedly reveals that enactment of the class privilege for accountants is better left with Parliament.

143471 Canada Inc. v. Quebec (Attorney General); Tabah v. Quebec (Attorney General), [1994] 2 S.C.R. 339, Impounding Seized Documents under a Provincial Tax Act

Present: Lamer C.J. and La Forest, L'Heureux-Dubé, Sopinka, Cory, McLachlin and Iacobucci JJ.
on appeal from the court of appeal for quebec

Procedure -- Interlocutory relief -- Documents seized pursuant to provisions of tax legislation -- Motions for orders impounding seized documents granted -- Documents sealed until final judgment rendered on legality of search warrants -- Whether impounding orders should be set aside.

Commercial documents were seized at the places of business of the corporate respondents and the homes of the respondents Arcuri and Tabah. In both cases the respondents challenged the legality of the search warrants by means of motions in evocation, certiorari and mandamus in which they sought to quash the warrants and attacked the constitutionality of ss. 40 and 40.1 of the Act respecting the Ministère du Revenu ("AMR"), which authorize searches, alleging inter alia that these sections infringe ss. 7 and 8 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. By way of interlocutory relief the respondents appended to their actions motions to have all the seized documents impounded pending a final judgment on the legality of the search warrants. In 143471 Canada Inc., the Superior Court allowed the motion to impound but dismissed the motion in evocation, certiorari and mandamus 15 months later, concluding that s. 40 AMR was constitutional. The respondents appealed that decision. In the meantime the Court of Appeal allowed their motion to impound the seized documents for the duration of the appeal. While this Court's judgment on the appeal from that decision was still under reserve, the Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal with respect to the motion in evocation, certiorari and mandamus. In Tabah, the Superior Court allowed the motion to impound and the Court of Appeal dismissed the appellants' appeal from that judgment. This appeal raises the question whether interlocutory relief in the form of an impounding order should be granted until the validity of the provisions in the AMR authorizing searches has been determined under the Charter.

Held (La Forest, L'Heureux-Dubé and McLachlin JJ. dissenting): The appeal should be dismissed.

Per Sopinka, Cory and Iacobucci JJ.: In considering an interim measure in the context of a Charter challenge to the validity of the underlying law, a court must consider three criteria: (1) the seriousness of the question to be tried; (2) the possibility of irreparable harm to the applicant if the interim order is refused; and (3) the balance of inconvenience caused to the parties by the interim order. A consideration of these three criteria in this case leads to the conclusion that the impounding orders should be maintained.

First, there is a serious question of law raised in this case.

Second, if the respondents are successful in the main applications, they would suffer irreparable harm if the impounding orders were to be set aside. The searches were made pursuant to the provisions of a regulatory statute dealing with a highly regulated business and the expectation of privacy in the commercial documents seized was thus relatively low. However, there is still some measure of privacy in commercial documents. Since the purpose of the impounding orders is to preserve the rights of the respondents pending a final determination of a legal question which will affect those rights, if the orders are not maintained and the warrants are quashed, the loss of that privacy interest, small as it may be, would in itself constitute irreparable harm. But there is a more significant aspect in this case. The documents were obtained by means of intrusive searches of residential and business premises and so long as the documents are held by or on behalf of the government there is a continuing violation of the respondents' very real and significant privacy interest in those premises. There would thus clearly be irreparable harm to the respondents if the warrants are quashed. The government will have had the continuing possession of these documents in the absence of any authority and in violation of the Charter. The intrusive nature of the searches cannot be isolated from the taking of the documents. Section 69 AMR does not adequately protect the respondents' privacy interests. It prohibits the public release of information contained in the documents but does not protect the respondents from having their privacy interests in their homes and offices violated by the state -- the very interest that s. 8 of the Charter is aimed at protecting. Finally, it is highly speculative to expect that a breach of privacy interests, not only in the documents, but also in the homes and offices of the respondents, could be compensated in damages.

Digitized by Google

Third, and most importantly, the balance of inconvenience favours the respondents. The impounding orders protect both the integrity of the documents and the privacy interest of the respondents, and this sensible interlocutory measure does not harm the public interest. The evidence clearly establishes that the granting of impounding orders will not paralyse the enforcement of taxation laws in the province of Quebec, even if in every case where searches were carried out, impounding orders were in fact issued. The Minister of Revenue is still at liberty to carry out searches and effect seizures and can still investigate and proceed under other sections of the Act. An impounding order does no more than delay the Minister viewing the documents seized. Further, the statistics do not disclose a problem of a flood of impounding orders and there is nothing to indicate that there is a probability, or even a real possibility, that there would be a flood of similar requests as a result of granting these applications. There are so few searches and seizures carried out each year under taxation statutes in the province that this case is still one of exemption and not of suspension. Since there is no serious interference with the enforcement of taxation statutes resulting from the granting of the impounding orders, there is no interference with the public interest and, on this basis, the impounding orders should be granted. Moreover, even if it can be said that the irreparable harm the respondents would suffer from the refusal of the impounding orders is small, the impounding orders should be upheld since there is no significant interference with the public interest.

Per Lamer C.J.: Cory J.'s reasons were generally agreed with, subject to one comment. Since the scope of a right guaranteed by the Charter must be assessed in context, it is necessary to take into account all the relevant factors which indicate the importance of a right to the person who enjoys it. This means that one should avoid creating rigid categories that will be used to determine the scope of a constitutional guarantee in a mechanical fashion. The "licensing" theory is therefore of no value in determining the extent of the respondents' expectations of privacy. While the distinction between criminal acts and regulatory offences is a useful and very real one, it should not be used to obscure other aspects of the context of a given case. Yet that is precisely what is likely to happen if one presumes that those who engage in "regulated" activities have accepted a lower level of constitutional protection. The licensing theory is based on an erroneous factual premise since it cannot be said, in a general and abstract manner, that any person engaging in a regulated activity, whatever it may be, automatically acquiesces in a limited application of the Charter to him- or herself. Here, when all the relevant factors are taken into account, it can be concluded that the respondents had reasonable expectations of privacy with respect to the documents seized and that they are sufficiently important to justify upholding the impounding orders.

Digitized by Google

Per La Forest, L'Heureux-Dubé and McLachlin JJ. (dissenting): A prima facie case, irreparable harm and the balance of convenience are the three criteria relevant in determining whether interlocutory relief should be granted. This analytical framework permits the reconciliation of the rights and freedoms guaranteed in the Charter with the conduct of governmental affairs.

In the present case the first criterion has been met. In view of the serious arguments raised by the respondents against the constitutionality of ss. 40 and 40.1 AMR, it cannot be concluded that the motions in evocation, certiorari and mandamus are frivolous or vexatious. The dismissal of the motion by the Superior Court in 143471 Canada Inc. is a relevant factor, but is not sufficient to alter the fact that serious questions have been raised. Moreover, the precedents regarding stay of proceedings should not be applied without qualification when the constitutionality of legislation is challenged under the Charter, in view of the importance and complexity of the rights and freedoms it guarantees.

With respect to the second criterion, it cannot be concluded that the respondents will suffer irreparable harm if the impounding orders are set aside. The existence of irreparable harm cannot be inferred simply because a breach of a right protected by the Charter is alleged or because the main proceeding itself involves the infringement of a guaranteed right. Both the right and the alleged infringement must be placed in context. In the present case the harm claimed by the respondents relates solely to the fact that the tax authorities will learn the content of the documents seized. Any reasonable expectations of privacy the respondents may have regarding the content of those documents are considerably reduced owing to their relevance in establishing the tax profile of their business and the responsibilities they assume as agents of the government. The search warrants and the seizures were directed only at the respondents' business documents, production of which may be required under the AMR. By allowing a person to object to the production or seizure of documents containing information protected by professional privilege, and prohibiting disclosure of the information obtained in the course of the investigation, the AMR minimizes the risk that the respondents may suffer harm as a result of the implementation by the tax authorities of the investigative scheme provided by that Act. Finally, the possibility that the seized documents may contain information of a personal nature is not sufficient to alter the reasonable expectations of privacy of taxpayers in respect of such documents. On the one hand, the AMR itself does not permit the seizure of documents containing personal information; on the other hand, the respondents themselves have never claimed that such documents were in fact seized. It can therefore not be concluded that the respondents will suffer irreparable harm if the tax authorities examine the contents of the documents seized.

With respect to the third criterion, an assessment of the balance of convenience does not favour the respondents. As the existence of irreparable harm has been ruled out, it is hard to see how the respondents could suffer significant hardship if they were denied the impoundment. Since the only effect of the impounding order is to delay the examination of the documents, it can be assumed that at some point or other the respondents will suffer the hardships associated with an investigation by the Ministère du Revenu, whether or not the sections are declared unconstitutional. On the other hand, if the impoundment is upheld, the delays imposed on the appellants in examining the contents of the seized documents are likely to jeopardize proof of the offences. Even if it is admitted that impoundment does not have the effect of suspending the Minister's investigative powers, there is nothing to suggest that he could make significant progress with his investigation if the impoundment were upheld.

Digitized by Google

Be that as it may, the present case has ramifications that go beyond the immediate interests of the parties, if only because of the mandate underlying the action of the Ministère -- namely the implementation and execution of tax legislation. It is thus necessary to take the public interest into account in determining the balance of convenience. Because the AMR is based on the principle of self-declaration and self-assessment, the implementation of the investigative provisions contained in ss. 40 and 40.1 AMR is essential if the integrity of the collection system is to be maintained and these investigative powers form the principal tool available to the Ministère to fight tax evasion. Although it is not possible to speak of a "flood of actions", the systematic nature of recent impounding orders cannot be ignored. Since the Ministère must adduce proof beyond a reasonable doubt and in view of the difficulties of proof inherent in the nature of offences against the tax laws, even temporarily watering down investigative powers has more than a symbolic effect on the public interest.

Cases Cited

By Cory J.

Applied: Manitoba (Attorney General) v. Metropolitan Stores Ltd., [1987] 1 S.C.R. 110; RJR -- MacDonald Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 311; referred to: Hadmor Productions Ltd. v. Hamilton, [1982] 1 All E.R. 1042; Aetna Financial Services Ltd. v. Feigelman, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 2; Friends of the Oldman River Society v. Canada (Minister of Transport), [1992] 1 S.C.R. 3; Thomson Newspapers Ltd. v. Canada (Director of Investigation and Research, Restrictive Trade Practices Commission), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 425; R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627; R. v. Wholesale Travel Group Inc., [1991] 3 S.C.R. 154; Baron v. Canada, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 416; Ameublement Jeanne Inc. v. Québec (Procureur général), Sup. Ct. Montréal, No. 500-05-003335-872, April 15, 1987; Brochetterie Tino Inc. v. Québec (Procureur général), [1989] R.D.F.Q. 98; Restaurant le Gourmet grec Inc. v. Séguin, [1989] R.D.F.Q. 80; Courrier grec du Canada Ltée v. Québec (Procureur général), Sup. Ct. Montréal, No. 500-05-002016-895, February 24, 1989; Cuisines Multiform internationales Inc. v. Angers, [1992] R.D.F.Q. 46; Cuisines Multiform internationales Inc. v. Angers, [1992] R.D.F.Q. 126; Électro Marine Diesel Inc. v. Québec (Procureur général), [1992] R.D.F.Q. 125; Groupe Shakiba Inc. v. Québec (Procureur général), [1993] R.D.F.Q. 70; Zeppetelli v. Canada, [1990] 2 C.T.C. 354.

By Lamer C.J.

Referred to: Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326; Rocket v. Royal College of Dental Surgeons of Ontario, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 232; Kindler v. Canada (Minister of Justice), [1991] 2 S.C.R. 779; R. v. Généreux, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 259; R. v. Wholesale Travel Group Inc., [1991] 3 S.C.R. 154.

By La Forest J. (dissenting)

Manitoba (Attorney General) v. Metropolitan Stores Ltd., [1987] 1 S.C.R. 110; RJR -- MacDonald Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 311; R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627; Thomson Newspapers Ltd. v. Canada (Director of Investigation and Research, Restrictive Trade Practices Commission), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 425; Zeppetelli v. Canada, [1990] 2 C.T.C. 354; Baron v. Canada, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 416, aff'g [1991] 1 F.C. 688; Re B.C. Motor Vehicle Act, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 486; Hunter v. Southam Inc., [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145; Kourtessis v. M.N.R., [1993] 2 S.C.R. 53; R. v. Dyment, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 417; United States of America v. Cotroni, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1469; Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326; R. v. Wholesale Travel Group Inc., [1991] 3 S.C.R. 154; Air Canada v. British Columbia, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1161; Fafard Buildings System Inc. v. R., J.E. 90-1187; Ameublement Jeanne Inc. v. Québec (Procureur général), Sup. Ct. Montréal, No. 500-05-003335-872, April 15, 1987; Brochetterie Tino Inc. v. Québec (Procureur général), [1989] R.D.F.Q. 98; Restaurant le Gourmet grec Inc. v. Séguin, [1989] R.D.F.Q. 80.

Digitized by Google

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Act respecting the Ministère du Revenu, R.S.Q., c. M-31, ss. 34(1) [rep. 1983, c. 49, s. 40], 38(a) [am. 1986, c. 95, s. 190], 39, 40 [rep. 1986, c. 95, s. 191; am. 1988, c. 21, s. 104], 40.1 [ad. 1986, c. 95, s. 191], 40.2 [ad. 1986, c. 95, s. 191], 46 [rep. 1990, c. 4, s. 587], 53 [idem, s. 589], 69, 78 [am. 1982, c. 38, s. 28].

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 7, 8.

Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms, R.S.Q., c. C-12, s. 24.1 [ad. 1982, c. 61, s. 1].

Criminal Code, R.S.C., 1985, c. C-46.

Meals and Hotels Tax Act, R.S.Q., c. T-3.

APPEAL from judgments of the Quebec Court of Appeal (1992), 32 A.C.W.S. (3d) 226 and [1992] R.D.F.Q. 44, granting the motion to impound seized documents brought by the respondents 143471 Canada Inc. et al., and affirming a judgment of the Superior Court, [1991] R.D.F.Q. 90, granting the motion to impound seized documents brought by the respondents Tabah et al. Appeal dismissed, La Forest, L'Heureux-Dubé and McLachlin JJ. dissenting.

Michel Dansereau, Judith Kucharsky and Pierre Gonthier, for the appellants.

Guy Du Pont, Basile Angelopoulos and Ariane Bourque, for the respondents.

English version of the reasons delivered by LAMER C.J. -- I am generally in agreement with the reasons of Justice Cory. With respect, however, I would like to add a comment concerning the factors he takes into account in assessing the respondents' expectations of privacy.

It is now well settled that the scope of a right guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms must be assessed in context. This method was first explained by Wilson J. in Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326, at pp. 1352-55, and again applied by the Court in Rocket v. Royal College of Dental Surgeons of Ontario, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 232; Kindler v. Canada (Minister of Justice), [1991] 2 S.C.R. 779; and R. v. Généreux, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 259. It is thus necessary to take into account all the relevant factors which indicate the importance of a right to the person who enjoys it. This also means that we should avoid creating rigid categories that will be used to determine the scope of a constitutional guarantee in a mechanical fashion.

I am concerned about the fact that Cory J. relies on the so-called "licensing" theory in determining the extent of the respondents' expectations of privacy. This theory, which he explained in detail in his reasons in R. v. Wholesale Travel Group Inc., [1991] 3 S.C.R. 154, at pp. 227-33, essentially holds that persons engaging in "regulated" activities are presumed to have accepted the existence of such regulation, greater intervention by the state in their activities, and a lower measure of constitutional protection.

In my humble opinion this theory is open to two kinds of criticism.

First, it tends to give credence to the idea that there is a clear distinction between regulatory offences and truly criminal acts, and that there are two different definitions of the rights guaranteed by the Charter corresponding to these two categories of offences. This approach reflects a formalism alien to the contextual method. The distinction between criminal acts and regulatory offences is a useful and very real one, but it should not be used to obscure other aspects of the context of a given case. That is precisely what is likely to happen if we presume that those who engage in "regulated" activities have accepted a lower level of constitutional protection. If there were such a waiver there would be no need to examine the other aspects of the context.

Second, with respect, I am of the view that the licensing theory is based on an erroneous factual premise. It cannot be said, in a general and abstract manner, that persons engaging in regulated sectors of life in society expect a lower level of constitutional protection. It is true that intervention by government officials is generally accepted in certain areas and that accordingly the expectations of privacy of persons working in those areas may be lower. However, this observation cannot be transformed into a general rule presuming that any person engaging in a regulated activity, whatever it may be, automatically acquiesces in a limited application of the Charter to him- or herself. In the present case I cannot say that the respondents agreed to allow the state to search their homes when they set up their restaurant and hotel businesses. In my opinion, there is no factual foundation for such a proposition. We may also take the example of driving an automobile, a highly regulated activity. Can it be said that people who obtain a driver's licence thereby accept that they will not have the full benefit of the rights set forth in the Charter? I do not think so.

Digitized by Google

In reality the only factual proposition that can be taken as valid is the one set out by Cory J. at p. 377: "Those who enter a regulated field must accept regulations as an integral part of their business operations". The same can be said about the criminal law: anyone who lives in society must accept the rules laid down in the Criminal Code, R.S.C., 1985, c. C-46. There is nothing surprising in this: the validity of legislation does not depend on the consent of those to whom it applies. Accordingly, although the statement by Cory J. is correct, it cannot be used as the basis for a valid distinction between various types of offences, depending on whether or not the individuals concerned "accept" the rules in question. All things considered, I do not feel that the "licensing" theory can be of any value in determining the scope of the rights guaranteed by the Charter.

I have nevertheless come to the same conclusion as Cory J. regarding the extent of the respondents' expectations of privacy. Cory J. notes the following factors.

1. The Act respecting the Ministère du Revenu, R.S.Q., c. M-31, does not create criminal offences in the strict sense. Its purpose is instead to set up an administrative mechanism for the collection of taxes.
2. The Minister may seize a considerable number of documents whose connection with enforcement of the Act may be tenuous.
3. The Act allows for searches at the premises of third parties who are not the subject of an investigation and who may have been in compliance with the Act.
4. Certain searches took place at the respondents' private homes, not their commercial establishments.
5. Searches involve a greater intrusion into individual privacy than a mere demand for production of documents.

From factors 2, 3, 4 and 5 it can be concluded that the respondents had reasonable expectations of privacy with respect to the documents seized by the appellants. The first factor suggests that the scope of these expectations should be treated as relative, but like Cory J. I am of the view that they are sufficiently important to justify upholding the impounding orders.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

English version of the reasons of La Forest, L'Heureux-Dubé and McLachlin JJ. delivered by LA FOREST J. (dissenting) -- This case raises the question whether interlocutory relief in the form of an impounding order should be granted until the validity of the provisions authorizing searches in the Act respecting the Ministère du Revenu, R.S.Q., c. M-31, has been determined under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Facts

The facts in the two cases giving rise to these appeals are similar and may be summarized as follows. Judges of the Court of Quebec issued written authorizations to conduct searches pursuant to s. 40 of the Act respecting the Ministère du Revenu (hereinafter the "Act"), based on sworn informations that the respondents had inter alia attempted to avoid the payment of sums of money pursuant to the Meals and Hotels Tax Act, R.S.Q., c. T-3. These authorizations were executed at the places of business of the corporate respondents and the homes of the respondents Arcuri and Tabah. Several documents were seized.

Digitized by Google

In both cases the respondents challenged the legality of the search warrants by means of motions in evocation, certiorari and mandamus, seeking to quash the seizure authorizations and their execution and to attack the constitutionality of ss. 40 and 40.1 of the Act in light of ss. 7 and 8 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (hereinafter the "Charter") and s. 24.1 of the Quebec Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms, R.S.Q., c. C-12. By way of interlocutory relief the respondents appended to their actions motions to have all the seized documents impounded so they could be sealed and given into the custody of a third party pending a final judgment on the legality of the search warrants.

In the 143471 Canada Inc. case, on November 7, 1990, Hannan J. of the Quebec Superior Court allowed the motion to impound the seized documents, until such time as judgment was rendered at trial on the legality of the search warrants: [1990] R.D.F.Q. 104. On February 10, 1992 Croteau J. of the Quebec Superior Court dismissed the motion in evocation, certiorari and mandamus and concluded that s. 40 of the Act was constitutional: [1992] R.D.F.Q. 48. The respondents appealed that decision and asked the Court of Appeal to issue an order impounding the seized documents for the duration of the proceedings. On March 9, 1992, the Court of Appeal allowed the motion to impound the seized documents: (1992), 32 A.C.W.S. (3d) 226. While this Court's judgment on the appeal from that decision was still under reserve, the Quebec Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal with respect to the action in evocation, certiorari and mandamus, on May 18, 1994: J.E. 94-934.

In the Tabah case, on June 18, 1991, Marquis J. of the Quebec Superior Court allowed the motion to impound the seized documents until a judgment was rendered on the legality of the search warrants: [1991] R.D.F.Q. 90. The appellants appealed that judgment. On March 9, 1992, the Court of Appeal dismissed their appeal: [1992] R.D.F.Q. 44.

Judgments of the Courts Below

Quebec Superior Court, 143471 Canada Inc. Case, [1990] R.D.F.Q. 104

Hannan J. characterized the motion to impound as an exemption case since it applied only to the respondents, was confined to the documents seized, and related to the offences alleged. In ruling on the validity of the motion he considered the three criteria set out in Manitoba (Attorney General) v. Metropolitan Stores Ltd., [1987] 1 S.C.R. 110, namely, whether there was a serious question to be tried, the irreparable harm the respondents might suffer if the motion was dismissed and the balance of convenience.

Hannan J. noted that the first criterion was difficult to apply at the interlocutory stage. He referred to the opinion expressed by Beetz J. in Metropolitan Stores that the courts are reluctant to grant an interlocutory injunction unless the public interest is weighed in the balance of convenience. Relying on R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627, and Thomson Newspapers Ltd. v. Canada (Director of Investigation and Research, Restrictive Trade Practices Commission), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 425, Hannan J. noted that the distinction between the criminal and regulatory contexts with regard to what constitutes a reasonable invasion of privacy was likely to increase that reluctance to order interlocutory relief. He concluded, however, that it was difficult to assess if a prima facie case was made out and proposed to review the other criteria.

In determining whether irreparable harm existed, Hannan J. relied on the Quebec Court of Appeal's decision in Zeppetelli v. Canada, [1990] 2 C.T.C. 354. In that case the court noted that impoundment was an essential preventive measure for the constitutional protection of privacy against a seizure that might eventually be declared unreasonable. In the court's view refusing the impoundment would cause irreparable harm since the disclosure would be an invasion of privacy and would render the protection conferred by the Charter meaningless. Hannan J. considered he was bound by this decision and concluded as follows (at p. 109):

[TRANSLATION] In this unanimous judgment in Zeppetelli it is possible to draw

Digitized by Google

the inference that once protection of privacy is sought in a case where the intrusion is allegedly unconstitutional (or at least anti-constitutional), the Court of Appeal considered that the criterion of irreparable harm has been met and, apparently, that the judgment in Dyment would support such a conclusion.

With respect to the balance of convenience criterion, Hannan J. pointed out that the exemption sought by the respondents was very limited in its application and did not have the effect of paralysing any other investigation or prosecution for other offences relating to different periods. He noted the comments made by Baudouin J.A. in Zeppetelli, supra, who pointed out that [TRANSLATION] "as between inconveniences of an essentially administrative nature and those involving a constitutionally protected fundamental right, the balance must tip in favour of the latter" (p. 357). Hannan J. came to the following conclusion (at p. 110):

> [TRANSLATION] In the present case, where the exceptional stay is restricted to the items already seized, and does not suspend the application of the tax legislation, except in this regard, and where the irreparable harm and balance of convenience are in favour of the applicants until this Court renders a judgment on the motion in evocation, and although the merits of the case are not crystal clear, there is a good basis for granting the present motion to impound.

Quebec Superior Court, Tabah Case, [1991] R.D.F.Q. 90

Like Hannan J., Marquis J. of the Quebec Superior Court relied on Metropolitan Stores and Zeppetelli, supra, in deciding whether to grant the impounding order. He characterized the case as one of exemption since the effect of the motion to impound was only to suspend pendente lite the application of the impugned provisions of the Act as they affected the respondents. Marquis J. proceeded to apply the three relevant criteria in determining whether to grant the respondents' motion.

Marquis J. concluded that the respondents met the prima facie case criterion since the case raised a serious question. In his view the contention put forward by the appellants was not so immediately obvious as to exclude from consideration that put forward by the respondents. In support of this conclusion he relied on the reasons of Hugessen J.A. of the Federal Court of Appeal in Baron v. Canada, [1991] 1 F.C. 688.

Regarding the irreparable harm criterion, Marquis J., after referring to the Court of Appeal's decision in Zeppetelli, supra, concluded (at p. 96):

> [TRANSLATION] While it is true that the seizures have already been made, the evidence shows that the examination of the documents seized is far from being complete. The very purpose of that examination is to identify evidence which might eventually lead to the prosecution of one or more of the [respondents]. It is also this examination of the seized documents which is an invasion of privacy: if the seizures were eventually quashed, irreparable injury would be caused to the [respondents] which could have been prevented by the impoundment.

With respect to the balance of convenience criterion, Marquis J. also relied on the foregoing passage from the Court of Appeal's decision in Zeppetelli, which noted that [TRANSLATION] "as between inconveniences of an essentially administrative nature and those involving a constitutionally protected fundamental right, the balance must tip in favour of the latter" (p. 357). On the question of the public interest, he noted that although the public is entitled to have the law respected and to have offenders prosecuted, the appellants' fear -- that applications to impound would become so numerous as to paralyze the operation of the Act -- was not based on any factual evidence. Accordingly, since the exemption was limited to specific persons and documents and the case raised a serious question, Marquis J. ordered that the documents be impounded until a final judgment was rendered on the legality of the searches.

Digitized by Google

Quebec Court of Appeal

The Quebec Court of Appeal allowed the motion to impound in the 143471 Canada Inc. case, relying on the principles set out in Zeppetelli and the reasons given in the judgment it rendered the same day in the Tabah case. In the latter the Court of Appeal dismissed the appellants' appeal, being of the view that the purpose of the motion to impound was not to suspend the effect of the Act but simply to delay temporarily access to the seized documents, which might also contain information of a personal nature. The judgment was as follows:

> [TRANSLATION] Whereas in the present case the purpose of the respondents' motion was not to suspend the effect of the Act, since according to its terms the investigations and other measures undertaken against the respondents can continue and have in fact continued;
>
> Whereas the purpose of the motion was only to suspend, on a purely temporary basis, the appellants' access to documents, books and registers which might contain personal items of information and so contravene the protection of privacy guaranteed by law;
>
> Whereas, although this Court is not ruling on the reality or existence of the other criteria, the respondents have both in the Superior Court and in this Court demonstrated a prima facie case and so met the first condition set out above;
>
> Whereas further the Supreme Court of Canada recently heard two cases on not exactly identical but similar points of law in Baron v. Canada and Kourtessis v. M.N.R. and those cases are currently reserved;
>
> In view of Attorney General of Manitoba v. Metropolitan Stores Ltd.; Hunter v. Southam Inc.; Bâtiments Fafard inc./Fafard Building System Inc. v. R. [J.E. 91-1611] and Zeppetelli v. R.
>
> For these reasons:
>
> Dismisses the appeal with costs.
>
> ([1992] R.D.F.Q. 44, at p. 45.)

Analysis

In Metropolitan Stores, supra, this Court expressly rejected the presumption of constitutional validity of legislation, understood in its literal sense, as it considered it to be "not compatible with the innovative and evolutive character" of the Charter (p. 124). The presumption of constitutional validity of legislation is at variance with the flexible and generous interpretation that should be given to the Charter in view of the nature of the rights and freedoms entrenched in it: see Re B.C. Motor Vehicle Act, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 486. Interlocutory relief was refused in Metropolitan Stores, however, and the disputed provisions continued to apply while their constitutionality was being determined. That decision indicates that interlocutory orders suspending the application of legislation will not be granted automatically.

A cautious approach is all the more necessary as the government's activities have ramifications throughout all aspects of life in society. There is much other legislation, in addition to taxation statutes, that includes inspection or investigation systems the implementation of which might give rise to applications designed to impede their operation: legislation on the environment, the professions, labour, health and safety and securities transactions are some examples. The orchestration of a large number of activities regulated by the government might be compromised if litigants could easily avoid the application of legislation adopted by democratically elected legislatures, presumably in the public interest.

In addition there is the problem of systemic delays in court challenges. This cannot be ignored in deciding whether to grant interlocutory relief suspending the application of legislation for the duration of the proceedings. In the present appeal the search authorizations were issued in June 1990 in the 143471 Canada Inc. case and in March 1991 in the Tabah case. In the former case the appeal from the motion in evocation, certiorari and mandamus was dismissed by the Quebec Court of Appeal on May 18, 1994. In the latter the motion has not yet been dealt with at first instance. A final ruling on the validity of these motions, if it were to be made by this Court, is not to be expected for some time.

Digitized by Google

In this light, it is necessary to adopt an analytical framework that permits the reconciliation of the rights and freedoms entrenched in the Charter with the conduct of governmental affairs. Although this point was not expressly made by the parties, it seems to me entirely appropriate to use the analytical framework developed in Metropolitan Stores, even though this appeal does not raise the question of a stay of proceedings or an injunction. If granted, the remedy sought will exempt the respondents for all practical purposes from the application of the provisions of the Act regarding investigations until the legality of the searches has been determined.

The three criteria set out in Metropolitan Stores -- prima facie case, irreparable harm and balance of convenience -- have recently been revisited by this Court in RJR -- MacDonald Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 311. My colleagues Sopinka and Cory JJ. there made an analysis of the principles with which I entirely agree. There is no need to repeat it except as necessary to explain its application to the present case.

Prima Facie Case

The requirement of a prima facie case is explained by the concern with preventing a litigant from avoiding the application of legislation by simply arguing that it is unconstitutional. There must be a mechanism to ensure that frivolous or vexatious actions will not systematically result in interlocutory relief intended to impede the application of legislation. In cases involving a constitutional challenge, particularly when it is based on the Charter, the application of this criterion will be more flexible if the public interest is considered in the analysis of the balance of convenience. It will then be sufficient to note that there is a serious question to be tried. This greater flexibility is necessary in view of the inherent difficulties of determining, at the interlocutory stage, the validity of the constitutional challenge, given the limited evidence and the effect that an exemption from or suspension of the application of a statute can have not only on the parties but also on the public interest.

The appellants argue that the provisions authorizing the searches are in accordance with the principles set out in Hunter v. Southam Inc., [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145. They criticize the Court of Appeal for relying on the fact that Baron v. Canada, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 416, and Kourtessis v. M.N.R., [1993] 2 S.C.R. 53, were still reserved at the time it rendered its decision concluding that there was a prima facie case. In this Court they argued that there is no longer a prima facie case in view of the Court's conclusions in Baron.

In the 143471 Canada Inc. case, although the issue is limited to the constitutionality of ss. 40 and 40.1 of the Act, the respondents put forward other arguments that s. 40 of the Act is unconstitutional, in addition to those dealt with by this Court in Baron. They concede that the latter are now academic. The respondents rely inter alia on the fact that there is no requirement to allege the commission of an offence, or the identification of the premises or the things to be seized; on the argument that s. 40 of the Act is unconstitutional since it is the Minister who technically issues the search warrant; on the fact that there is no express requirement that the judge's authorization be given before the warrant is issued or even before the seizure is carried out; and on the combined effect of ss. 40 and 40.1 of the Act and the legality of "fishing expeditions".

The respondents also plead the unconstitutionality of s. 40.1 of the Act, which refers to the "plain view" doctrine, in support of the motion in evocation, certiorari and mandamus in the Tabah case. This practice has been approved on several occasions by Canadian courts. However, this Court has never ruled on its constitutionality under s. 8 of the Charter. Finally, in addition to the argument that the provision authorizing the seizures is unconstitutional, the respondents argue that the information was inadequate and the seizures were unreasonable.

Digitized by Google

Since this Court has taken a liberal approach to the application of the first criterion, I am prepared to conclude that there is in both cases a prima facie case. I hasten to add that the Quebec Court of Appeal could not have come to any other conclusion at the time it dealt with the matter since its decision was rendered when Baron and Kourtessis, supra, were under reserve.

One can certainly question whether the fact that the Quebec Superior Court dismissed the motion in evocation, certiorari and mandamus in the 143471 Canada Inc. case imposes a heavier burden in meeting the first criterion. This argument was made by the appellants, who objected that the Court of Appeal had not applied its own case law on stays of proceedings, by virtue of which a stay will very seldom be ordered when there is no apparent defect in the lower court judgment. The dismissal of the motion in evocation, certiorari and mandamus by the Superior Court is certainly a relevant factor, but is not, in this case, sufficient to alter the fact that serious questions have been raised by the respondents. I do not think that the precedents regarding stay of proceedings should be applied without qualification when the constitutionality of legislation is challenged under the Charter, in view of the importance and complexity of the rights and freedoms it entrenches.

Having thus not been persuaded that the respondents' motions in evocation, certiorari and mandamus are frivolous or vexatious, I propose to analyse the other two steps of the test set forth in Metropolitan Stores.

Irreparable Harm

The irreparable harm criterion refers to the harm the applicant may suffer if the interlocutory relief is not granted. If there is no harm or it can be adequately compensated for by an award of damages, there will be little reason to exempt the applicant from the application of the law. In RJR -- MacDonald, supra, this Court noted that this view of harm is of limited application when a breach of the Charter is alleged. The concept of "irreparable harm" is often associated with that of damages. However, a monetary remedy is not always contemplated in cases where the Charter is invoked. This results from the nature of the rights it guarantees and of the parties. That is why the Court held that in most situations the existence of irreparable harm must be presumed. But when the alleged harm itself takes the form of a breach of a right protected by the Charter, as it does here, the judge who has the responsibility for ruling on the merits of the interlocutory motion is in the best position to determine its nature and extent and whether it is irreparable.

Harm is generally viewed from the standpoint of the person seeking to benefit from the interlocutory relief. Others view it from the standpoint of the person against whom the motion is directed. Although one could at this stage consider the type of harm the Ministère du Revenu might incur if an impounding order were upheld, in my view it is preferable to consider this issue when the balance of convenience is being determined. The same is true of irreparable harm to the public interest. This was the approach taken by this Court in RJR -- MacDonald, and, as I see it, it is the right one.

The respondents contend that if no impounding order is made they will suffer harm since the examination of the contents of the seized documents by the tax authorities will result in an infringement of their right to privacy. Such harm, they say, would by its very nature be irreparable. The respondents argue that if individuals have the right to be protected against state intrusions and to have the legality of such intrusions tested, it follows that the courts have the power -- and the duty -- to protect the privacy of the documents seized and preserve the status quo by ordering that the documents be impounded until the legality of the searches has been determined. The appellants, on the other hand, argue that the respondents would suffer no harm because any reasonable expectations of privacy they might have are limited or perhaps even non-existent.

The conclusion that the respondents will suffer irreparable harm seems at first sight

Digitized by Google

irrefutable, since they are relying on a breach of a constitutionally protected right, the infringement of which is itself an extension of that resulting from the search. This was the view taken by the Quebec Court of Appeal in Zeppetelli, supra, relied on by Hannan and Marquis JJ. in the case at bar, in concluding that there was irreparable harm. In that case Baudouin J.A. relied on the following passage from this Court's decision in R. v. Dyment, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 417, at p. 430, in support of the conclusion that if there was no impounding the respondents would suffer irreparable harm:

> One further general point must be made, and that is that if the privacy of the individual is to be protected, we cannot afford to wait to vindicate it only after it has been violated. This is inherent in the notion of being secure against unreasonable searches and seizures. Invasions of privacy must be prevented, and where privacy is outweighed by other societal claims, there must be clear rules setting forth the conditions in which it can be violated. This is especially true of law enforcement, which involves the freedom of the subject. [Emphasis in original.]

In Zeppetelli Baudouin J.A. concluded as follows, at p. 356:

> [TRANSLATION] In this case, therefore, impounding is a preventive measure inherent in the constitutional protection of privacy from a seizure which might eventually be found to be unreasonable. According to the rule stated by the Supreme Court, the injury caused would thus be irreparable, as disclosure would be an invasion of privacy and make the protection afforded by the Charter meaningless.

However, the present case can be distinguished from Dyment, where the respondent was challenging the seizure of a bodily fluid without prior authorization. The respondents are objecting here to the examination by the tax authorities of the contents of business documents the seizure of which was previously authorized. The existence of irreparable harm cannot be inferred simply because a breach of a right protected by the Charter is alleged or because the main proceeding itself involves the infringement of an entrenched right. In the present case not only have the courts not yet made a final ruling on whether the searches are unreasonable, but the Quebec Superior Court dismissed the motion in evocation, certiorari and mandamus in the 143471 Canada Inc. case. It seems wrong to conclude as a matter of principle that the right to privacy must in all circumstances take priority over any other interest, for example over giving effect to legislation adopted in the public interest. Both the right and the alleged infringement must be placed in context: see United States of America v. Cotroni, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1469, and Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326. Accordingly, before concluding that the harm is "irreparable", as required by the second criterion, the existence and extent of the harm must be determined, something which the Court of Appeal seems to have failed to do in the case at bar since it simply said that the seized documents might [TRANSLATION] "contain personal items of information and so contravene the protection of privacy guaranteed by law" (p. 45 R.D.F.Q.).

There is considerable merit in the proposition that persons who decide to engage in activities regulated by the government are subject to a diminution of their expectations of privacy. In that case, it can be presumed that they have agreed to be subject to the obligations imposed by the legislature that are inherent in the conduct of such activities; see R. v. Wholesale Travel Group Inc., [1991] 3 S.C.R. 154. While in McKinlay Transport, supra, this Court was of the view that power given by s. 231(3) of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1952, c. 148, came within the ambit of s. 8 of the Charter, it held that the criteria laid down in Hunter v. Southam Inc. could be applied more flexibly in a regulatory context. After analysing several lower court decisions, Wilson J. wrote, at p. 647:

> I refer to these cases not to approve or disapprove the results achieved but rather as evidence of the need to take a flexible and purposive approach to s. 8 of the Charter. It is consistent with this approach, I believe, to draw a distinction between seizures in the criminal or quasi-criminal context to which the full rigours of the Hunter criteria will apply, and seizures in the administrative or regulatory context to which a lesser standard may apply depending upon the legislative scheme under review.

Digitized by Google

McKinlay Transport dealt with the constitutionality of a provision authorizing the tax authorities to require the production of documents. Such a power, though it was characterized as a "seizure" within the meaning of s. 8 of the Charter, was nonetheless different from the power to "search". This distinction was the basis for the qualification to the application of the criteria set out in Hunter v. Southam Inc. In Thomson Newspapers, I underlined that the more invasive character of a search was referable to the importance individuals attached to the inviolability of their homes, and of their workplaces. I added, at p. 522 of the judgment:

> The requirement to submit to a search of business premises by agents of the state can therefore amount to a requirement to reveal aspects of one's personal life to the chilling glare of official inspection. It seriously invades the right to be secure against unreasonable search and seizure. This is not the case with a power to order the production of records and documents relevant to the investigation of anti-competitive offences; there the eyes of the state can see no further than the business records it is entitled to demand. [Emphasis in original.]

The reasons of L'Heureux-Dubé J. were essentially to the same effect, at p. 594:

> Although they are functional equivalents, a requirement to produce documents impairs considerably less on a corporation's or an individual's privacy than the actual entry into, and search of, its place of business or home. This is especially so, in the case of corporations, since, for the reasons given above, a corporation's privacy interest with respect to a request for documents is relatively low.

Wilson J. also made the point in McKinlay Transport, at p. 649:

> Thus, when the tax officials seek entry onto the private property of an individual to conduct a search or seizure, the intrusion is much greater than a mere demand for production of documents. The reason for this is that, while a taxpayer may have little expectation of privacy in relation to his business records relevant to the determination of his tax liability, he has a significant privacy interest in the inviolability of his home.

In the case at bar the warrants have already been executed. The question whether the searches were unreasonable is currently before the Quebec courts. In the context of the present appeal the harm claimed by the respondents relates solely to the fact that the tax authorities will learn the content of the documents seized. Any reasonable expectations of privacy the respondents may have regarding the content of those documents are considerably reduced owing to their relevance in establishing the tax profile of their business and the responsibilities they assume as agents of the government in collecting the meals and hotels tax. In this regard, the keeping of several documents seized by the appellants is required by the Act. Section 34(1) provides:

> 34. (1) Every person who carries on a business or is bound under a fiscal law to deduct, withhold or collect an amount must keep registers and books of account, including an annual inventory in the prescribed manner, at his place of business or residence or at any other place designated by the Minister.
>
> The registers and books shall be kept in the appropriate form and contain information enabling the establishment of the amount that must be deducted, withheld, collected or paid under a fiscal law.

The Act gives the Minister of Revenue certain powers to audit books and registers. Section 38(a) of the Act provides:

> 38. Any person authorized to do so by the Minister may, for every purpose dealing with the application or enforcement of a fiscal law, enter at any suitable time the premises or places in which a business is carried on or property is kept or in which anything is done relating to any business or where books or registers in accordance with a fiscal law are or must be kept.

Digitized by Google

The person so authorized by the Minister may:

(a) audit or examine the books and registers and any account, voucher, letter, telegram or other document which may relate to the information contained or that should be contained in the books or registers or to the amount of any duty that must be paid, deducted, withheld or collected under a fiscal law;

Section 39 of the Act gives the Minister of Revenue power to require the production of information and documents:

39. The Minister may, by a formal demand delivered by registered or certified mail or personal service require from any person that he file by registered or certified mail or personal service, within a reasonable delay fixed in the demand:

(a) information or additional information, including a return, report or supplementary return or report exigible under a fiscal law, or

(b) books, letters, accounts, invoices, financial statements or other documents.

The constitutionality of a similar provision has already been determined by this Court in McKinlay Transport, supra, as it relates to the expectation of privacy of a taxpayer. In any event, it does not arise in the present case. The way in which the tax authorities obtained copies of the documents does not alter the nature of the information they contain. In either case the same documents are in question. The search warrants in the case at bar and the seizures resulting from their issuance were directed only at the respondents' business documents, production of which may be required under the Act.

The Act further provides that a person may object to the production or seizure of documents containing information protected by professional privilege: see ss. 46 and 53 of the Act respectively. Some of the respondents raised this objection in the present case, and documents seized in the accountants' offices were sealed and entrusted to the prothonotary of the Superior Court pursuant to s. 46 of the Act.

Finally, disclosure of the information contained in the seized documents is itself prohibited by the Act: the tax authorities may not disclose information obtained in the course of their investigation. The first paragraph of s. 69 of the Act provides:

69. All information obtained in the application of a fiscal law is confidential. No public servant shall use such information for any purpose not provided for by law, communicate such information or allow it to be communicated to a person not legally entitled thereto or allow such a person to examine a document containing such information or have access to it.

These provisions minimize the risk that the respondents may suffer harm as a result of the implementation by the tax authorities of the investigative scheme provided by the Act. Their significance cannot be disregarded. They echo the concerns I expressed in Dyment, supra, at pp. 429-30:

> Finally, there is privacy in relation to information. This too is based on the notion of the dignity and integrity of the individual. . . . In modern society, especially, retention of information about oneself is extremely important. We may, for one reason or another, wish or be compelled to reveal such information, but situations abound where the reasonable expectations of the individual that the information shall remain confidential to the persons to whom, and restricted to the purposes for which it is divulged, must be protected.

Similarly, in McKinlay Transport, supra, Wilson J. noted at p. 650:

A taxpayer's privacy interest with regard to these documents vis-à-vis the Minister is relatively low. The Minister has no way of knowing whether certain records are relevant until he has had an opportunity to examine them. At the same time, the taxpayer's privacy interest is protected as much as possible since s. 241 of the Act protects the taxpayer from disclosure of his records or the information contained therein to other persons or agencies.

Digitized by Google

Some may be concerned that the seized documents may contain information of a personal nature. However, that possibility is not, in my view, sufficient to alter the reasonable expectations of privacy of taxpayers in respect of such documents. On the one hand, the Act itself does not permit the seizure of documents containing personal information. Sections 38 and 40 of the Act, as well as s. 39 which authorizes a demand for the production of documents, are directed only at documents the contents of which have some connection with the application of tax legislation to taxpayers. In the highly unlikely event that documents containing information of a personal nature were seized in the course of exercising investigative powers, a taxpayer could always apply to the courts, seeking their exclusion and any other appropriate relief on the ground, for example, that this went beyond the investigators' statutory authority. On the other hand, the respondents themselves have never claimed that documents of that kind were in fact seized in the case at bar. Indeed, the appellants submitted uncontradicted evidence that all the documents seized, including those seized in the private homes of some of the respondents, were covered by the search warrants and related to their business affairs, in particular to the application of the Act to them. This can be seen by examining the written authorizations and the inventory of the documents seized. In the 143471 Canada Inc. case, for example, the written authorization of the Deputy Minister of Revenue limited the search as follows:

> [TRANSLATION] . . . to search for documents, books, registers, papers or things described in the said written authorization from the judge of the Court of Quebec, namely documents, books, registers, papers or things concerning the operation by 143 471 Canada Inc. of its establishment . . . and the collection by it of the tax provided for in the Meals and Hotels Tax Act (R.S.Q., c. T-3) during the period from June 26, 1985 to June 30, 1988, in particular:
>
> (a)general ledger, sales journal, purchases journal, cash receipts journal, cash disbursements journal, subsidiary journals, wages journal, general journal;
>
> (b)extra-accounting registers and work sheets, sales invoices, purchase invoices, financial statements, bank statements, cheques returned paid, deposit slips and other supporting documents, including contracts concluded with its customers and all documents appended thereto;
>
> (c)lists, notebooks or other documents containing information relating or that may be related to the sales of 143 471 Canada Inc. or to the collection by it of the meals and hotels tax;
>
> which may serve as evidence of the offence mentioned in the said written authorization by the judge of the Court of Quebec . . .

The documents seized in the search made in the 143471 Canada Inc. case correspond to those identified in the search warrant: bank statements, journal entries, purchase invoices, cheque stubs, cheques debited, financial statements, wages book, receipt contracts and so on. The same is true of the documents seized in the Tabah case, though the written authorizations and corresponding seizures are more detailed since the information indicated several breaches of the Act. In any event both the authorizations to search and the documents seized related only to the respondents' business affairs, in particular those required to conform with the Act, and did not concern any document likely to contain personal information. Further, unless a party complains of the seizure of information of a personal nature I do not think it is desirable for the judge who has the responsibility to rule on the motion to impound to examine the contents of the documents seized in order to determine whether the order is appropriate. That would make his task more onerous in view of the difficulties inherent in determining whether the information contained in the documents seized is personal.

Digitized by Google

Accordingly, I find it difficult to see how the respondents will suffer irreparable harm if the tax authorities examine the contents of the documents seized. Since the respondents have not established any other harm, I now propose to consider the final stage of the Metropolitan Stores test.

The Balance of Convenience

The balance of convenience, which constitutes the third criterion relevant in determining whether interlocutory relief should be granted, is designed to weigh the respective hardships the parties may incur depending on whether or not the interlocutory relief is granted.

As the existence of irreparable harm has been ruled out, it is hard to see how the respondents could suffer significant hardship if they were denied the impoundment. As they themselves argue, the only effect of the impounding order is to delay the examination of the documents. It can thus be assumed that at some point or other the respondents will suffer the hardships associated with an investigation by the Ministère du Revenu, whether or not the sections are declared unconstitutional. It should be added that under s. 40.2 of the Act the respondents may obtain copies of the documents seized.

The hardships the appellants are likely to suffer if the impoundment is upheld derive from the delays imposed on the examination of the contents of the seized documents. We may immediately dispose of their effect on the limitations against penal remedies under the Act. Although the impoundment for all practical purposes suspends the investigative proceedings, the actions against the respondents are not jeopardized -- at least in theory -- since the Act provides that the five-year limitation period may be extended to one year from the date the Minister of Revenue learns of evidence sufficient to justify prosecution; see s. 78 of the Act. In the circumstances it is hardly surprising that the appellants placed no great emphasis on the existence of such harm at the hearing; sufficient proof probably could not come to the knowledge of the Minister of Revenue until he had the documents covered by the order in his possession, after the impounding order was lifted.

The appellants added that if the impounding orders are upheld the resulting delays would jeopardize proof of the offences. In this connection they note the difficulties associated with gathering information, the credibility of witnesses, even with the recovery of fees, interest and fines, in view of the risks that the corporate vehicle might be altered or cease to exist. The respondent 143471 Canada Inc. made an assignment of its property on September 1, 1992. While at the present stage of the proceedings this is speculative, the Court can nevertheless take note of the probable occurrence of such hardships. In Zeppetelli, Baudouin J.A. acknowledged that impoundment would prevent the Minister of Revenue [TRANSLATION] "from having access for the moment to a great deal of information which might allow him to build his case and achieve substantive progress on the matter" (p. 357).

The respondents argued that in any case impoundment does not have the effect of suspending the Minister of Revenue's investigative powers: he can complete his evidence by other means. However, this option, which appreciably moderates the effect of the measure, disregards the fact that the Minister of Revenue must adduce proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Not only is this a weighty burden, but the proof of offences is complicated here by the very nature of tax evasion, which requires a comprehensive analysis of the accounting system of the respondent companies. In the circumstances there is nothing to suggest that the Minister of Revenue could make significant progress with his investigation if the impoundment were upheld. Further, if the measure had the negligible effect suggested by the respondents, then the applicability of the test set forth in Metropolitan Stores would be open to question.

Even if we admit that these hardships are negligible and of a purely administrative nature, the fact remains that the present case has ramifications that go beyond the immediate interests of the parties, if only because of the mandate underlying the action of the Ministère du Revenu. In such a situation Metropolitan Stores invites the courts to take the public interest into account in determining the balance of convenience. In the case at bar the Court of Appeal is not only silent on the point but specifically refused to rule on [TRANSLATION] "the reality or existence" of this criterion, which is strange to say the least since in the 143471 Canada Inc. case it was not sitting in appeal from the judgment of Hannan J. In Zeppetelli Baudouin J.A. simply stated that [TRANSLATION] "as between inconveniences of an essentially administrative nature and those involving a constitutionally protected fundamental right, the balance must tip in favour of the latter" (p. 357).

Digitized by Google

In this regard the appellants rely essentially on the public interest in having the Act observed and enforced. The importance of tax legislation clearly needs no elaboration; see Air Canada v. British Columbia, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1161, and McKinlay Transport, supra. Because such legislation is based on the principle of self-declaration and self-assessment, the existence of mechanisms making it possible to verify whether taxpayers are subject to the Act is essential. The imposition of such controls is all the more necessary for individuals who act as agents of the government. In Quebec the Act imposes on the Ministère du Revenu the duty of supervising the implementation and execution of tax legislation and confers on it all the powers necessary for this purpose. The implementation of the investigative provisions contained in ss. 40 and 40.1 of the Act is essential if the integrity of the tax collection system is to be maintained. These considerations alone are sufficient to meet the public interest criterion. In RJR -- MacDonald the Court wrote (at p. 346):

> In our view, the concept of inconvenience should be widely construed in Charter cases. In the case of a public authority, the onus of demonstrating irreparable harm to the public interest is less than that of a private applicant. This is partly a function of the nature of the public authority and partly a function of the action sought to be enjoined. The test will nearly always be satisfied simply upon proof that the authority is charged with the duty of promoting or protecting the public interest and upon some indication that the impugned legislation, regulation, or activity was undertaken pursuant to that responsibility. Once these minimal requirements have been met, the court should in most cases assume that irreparable harm to the public interest would result from the restraint of that action.

The respondents added, however, that the delay in examining the contents of the documents seized causes no injury to the public interest since the interlocutory relief is limited to the present case. The argument in this Court centred on proof of a "flood of actions" since the judgments of the Quebec Court of Appeal in Zeppetelli and Fafard Buildings System Inc. v. R., C.A. Montréal, No. 500-10-000409-894, July 10, 1990, J.E. 90-1187. Such proof was viewed as important by both sides in demonstrating the real effect of the impounding order on the public interest.

In my view proof of a flood of actions -- or the lack of it -- is not determinative of whether or not interlocutory relief should be granted. Depending on the nature and scope of the measure contemplated, as well as the particular circumstances of each case, the court might take note of the impact of a decision exempting a party from the application of a statute on future litigants, who would be tempted to rely on it. In Metropolitan Stores Beetz J. wrote (at p. 146):

> The reason why exemption cases are assimilated to suspension cases is the precedential value and exemplary effect of exemption cases. Depending on the nature of the cases, to grant an exemption in the form of a stay to one litigant is often to make it difficult to refuse the same remedy to other litigants who find themselves in essentially the same situation, and to risk provoking a cascade of stays and exemptions, the sum of which make them tantamount to a suspension case.

Digitized by Google

It is not desirable to impose on the party arguing that an interlocutory application should be dismissed a requirement that he prove the harmful effect of previous orders. How could the threshold of such evidence be determined? Such a burden would not only be likely to trivialize the public interest considerations underlying the balance of convenience test, it would be at odds with the preventive purpose of interlocutory relief.

The parties drew the Court's attention to about ten decisions on applications to impound documents incidental to a constitutional challenge based on ss. 40 and 40.1 of the Act. Clearly these few decisions are far from suggesting the existence of a "flood of actions". It is significant, however, that all motions to impound subsequent to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Zeppetelli, supra, have been granted. Needless to say, the orders expressly cited the reasons given by Baudouin J.A. By way of contrast, the applications to impound prior to that decision were denied (except the one in Ameublement Jeanne Inc. v. Québec (Procureur général), Sup. Ct. Montréal, No. 500-05-003335-872, April 15, 1987, which was granted on consent). For example, in Brochetterie Tino Inc. v. Québec (Procureur général), Sup. Ct. Montréal, No. 500-05-008861-898, July 17, 1989, [1989] R.D.F.Q. 98, Lesyk J. wrote (at pp. 3-4):

> [TRANSLATION] Granting impoundment of the documents seized would set a precedent in enforcement of the Act that might be followed in seizures of the same kind and might accordingly render ss. 40 and 40.1 of the Act respecting the Ministère du Revenu inoperative for a more or less extended period, with the consequences that might follow for the obligations and duties imposed on the operators of the establishments subject to the Meals and Hotels Tax Act.
>
> Granting the application to impound without extremely sound and exceptional grounds, which do not exist in the present case, would also amount to suspending the application of ss. 40 and 40.1 of the Act respecting the Ministère du Revenu adopted by the democratically elected National Assembly in the common interest. Such impoundment would be likely to temporarily frustrate pursuit of the common interest and would have the effect of preventing the Minister of Revenue from carrying out the duty imposed on him by law, namely of applying tax legislation.
>
> When a Minister of the Crown is prevented from exercising the powers conferred on him by law the public interest of which the Minister is the guardian suffers irreparable harm.

This approach seems to me to be consistent with the above-cited passages from RJR -- MacDonald and Metropolitan Stores. See also Restaurant le Gourmet grec Inc. v. Séguin, Sup. Ct. Montréal, No. 500-05-004272-892, April 5, 1989, [1989] R.D.F.Q. 80, where Brassard J. refused to order impoundment on the ground that the harm alleged by the applicant could not override the public interest.

In any event, although it is not possible to speak of a "flood of actions", the systematic nature of the impounding orders since Zeppetelli cannot be ignored, and this can only be enhanced by the Court of Appeal decisions in the present case. To the extent that trial courts are bound by decisions of the Quebec Court of Appeal, it is doubtful whether they have much real manoeuvring room in the exercise of their discretion. Under the present case law it appears that any well-informed litigant can have an investigation suspended by attaching to his motion for evocation, certiorari and mandamus a motion to impound the documents seized.

The marginal nature of motions to impound is best explained by the limited number of searches conducted each year. As an indication of the impact of impoundment on the public interest the number of searches is certainly a better yardstick than the total of Quebec taxpayers. The evidence shows that implementation of the investigative powers set out in ss. 40 and 40.1 of the Act is likely to lead to the recovery of large sums estimated at about a hundred million dollars in fees, interest and fines, just for the period from April 1, 1988 to March 31, 1992. The amounts involved in the present cases are also non-negligible since they exceed $250,000, not including, in the Tabah case, an amount of some one million dollars which was allegedly not included in calculating income. Further, if we are to believe certain studies estimating at several hundred million dollars the annual losses resulting from tax evasion, the amounts recovered through the implementation of investigative powers are only the tip of the iceberg. That being the case, we cannot minimize the importance of ss. 40 and 40.1 of the Act, which form the principal tool available to the Ministère du Revenu to fight tax evasion, not only in dealing with ongoing offences but especially for its deterrent value. In view of the burden of proof -- beyond a reasonable doubt -- and the difficulties of proof inherent in the nature of offences against the tax laws, even temporarily watering down investigative powers has more than a symbolic effect on the public interest.

Digitized by Google

The respondents made no arguments regarding the public interest in maintaining impounding orders. It is clear that there is also a public interest in having the government respect the fundamental rights of taxpayers, including the right to privacy and protection against unreasonable intrusions by the government. However, bearing in mind that in the present case the courts have not yet found the intrusion to be unreasonable -- a question which will be decided in the principal action, with the appropriate relief if necessary -- this aspect cannot have much weight here, especially when considered in light of the comments I have made regarding irreparable harm. In other words, to paraphrase the reasons of my colleagues in RJR -- MacDonald, the respondents have not persuaded me of the advantages to the public interest of granting impoundment of the documents seized.

Conclusion

For these reasons I would allow the appeal with costs, set aside the decisions of the Court of Appeal and quash the impounding orders.

The judgment of Sopinka, Cory and Iacobucci JJ. was delivered by CORY J. -- In this matter I have had the pleasure of reading the careful reasons of my colleague La Forest J. I am in complete agreement with his view that the governing principles to be applied in this case are set out in the reasons of this Court in Manitoba (Attorney General) v. Metropolitan Stores Ltd., [1987] 1 S.C.R. 110, and in RJR -- MacDonald Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 311. These decisions indicate that in considering an interim measure such as an injunction or an impounding order in the context of a Charter challenge to the validity of the underlying law a court must consider three factors. The first, is whether a serious question of law is raised. The second, is whether irreparable harm will be occasioned to the applicant if the interim order is refused. The third, requires the court to consider and weigh in the balance the inconveniences caused to the parties by the interim order.

Further, I am in agreement with my colleague that there is a serious question of law raised in this case. It is in the application of the factors pertaining to irreparable harm and the balance of inconvenience that I differ with his views.

The facts giving rise to this appeal are set out in the reasons of La Forest J. and need not be repeated.

The Nature of the Questioned Orders

At the outset I would observe that the orders in issue on this appeal are discretionary in nature. Like all discretionary decisions, they should be accorded a measure of deference. See, for example, Hadmor Productions Ltd. v. Hamilton, [1982] 1 All E.R. 1042; Aetna Financial Services Ltd. v. Feigelman, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 2, at p. 37; Metropolitan Stores, supra, at pp. 154-56; and Friends of the Oldman River Society v. Canada (Minister of Transport), [1992] 1 S.C.R. 3, at pp. 76-77. Since I am of the view that the decisions of the judges hearing the original motions were correct, I need not consider the question of deference.

Digitized by Google

Irreparable Harm

There are a number of matters that must be conceded at the outset. The documents seized in this case are commercial in nature. It follows that there cannot be the same privacy interest in those documents that there would be in personal papers. The expectation of privacy in business records is necessarily low. They do not ordinarily contain the type of personal information that lies at the heart of the constitutional protection of privacy. Further, it must be recognized that the state must have the power to regulate business, both for economic reasons and in order to provide protection to the vulnerable individual against private power. This was set out with great cogency by La Forest J. in Thomson Newspapers Ltd. v. Canada (Director of Investigation and Research, Restrictive Trade Practices Commission), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 425, at pp. 517-18. It follows that since the search in this case was made pursuant to a regulatory statute in the highly regulated field of restaurants and hotels the expectation of privacy must of necessity be diminished.

Those who enter a regulated field must accept regulations as an integral part of their business operations. It has been recognized that there is a significant distinction between searches and seizures effected pursuant to a regulatory statute and searches and seizures made pursuant to the Criminal Code, R.S.C., 1985, c. C-46, or statutes of a quasi-criminal nature. This was the view of four of five judges in both Thomson Newspapers and in R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 627.

In R. v. Wholesale Travel Group Inc., [1991] 3 S.C.R. 154, although there was disagreement as to its application, eight of nine judges affirmed the principle enunciated in Thompson Newspapers and McKinlay Transport that there is a relevant and significant distinction to be drawn between a statute that is criminal and one which is regulatory in nature when the application of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms to those statutes is to be considered.

In Wholesale Travel Group, I attempted to indicate the basis for the distinction. The distinction can properly be based upon both the licensing concept and the need to protect the vulnerable. In today's complex society, individuals are frequently placed in vulnerable situations. An individual often does not and cannot have the requisite knowledge or training to determine what may be safe and what is dangerous. For example, it is essential that there be regulations to protect the environment from poisonous effluent; to protect individuals from the sale of dangerous products or patent medicines; to ensure there is a reasonable standard of safety in mines, factories, construction sites and all workplaces; to ensure that food is prepared in sanitary conditions and that public and commercial buildings are constructed in a reasonably safe manner. The protection of all, and particularly the vulnerable, by regulation requires that government agencies be authorized to inspect premises and to review books and records. Those who enter a regulated field must be aware of those regulations. By entering that field they have accepted that their business will be regulated.

In McKinlay Transport, the majority of this Court held that the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1952, c. 148, is regulatory in nature, since in the words of Wilson J., at p. 641, "it controls the manner in which income tax is calculated and collected". There, it was held that the purpose of the investigation and enforcement provisions of the Act was not so much to penalize criminal conduct as to secure compliance with the provisions of the Act. The legislation at issue in this case (An Act respecting the Ministère du Revenu, R.S.Q., c. M-31) serves the same purpose as the Income Tax Act and like that statute is regulatory in nature. There is, then, a relatively low expectation of privacy in the documents seized in this case.

With all of that stated and accepted, there still remains some measure of privacy in commercial documents. They will inevitably reveal aspects of the business that the operator would rather have kept private. For example, one supplier may be paid on a COD basis and another 90 days after delivery. These arrangements may have arisen from circumstances which prevailed years ago and have continued without thought of change to the present time. A business would never want to have those arrangements made public. Similarly, the record of wages paid to employees may reflect a higher wage rate to a particularly loyal and trusted employee than to another carrying out the same function. This information too is sensitive and something that the business operator would prefer to keep private. It is true that under the Act respecting the Ministère du Revenu the government employees are forbidden to disclose information obtained from the documents. However, the mere fact that the documents have been seized and must be reviewed by the government officers will be a cause for concern for the proprietor of the business.

Digitized by Google

It must be remembered that ss. 40 and 40.1 of this Act provide for searches and seizures of a wide range of documents ("books, registers, papers or other things that may be used as evidence of an offence against a fiscal law or a regulation made by the Government under such law"). Thus, the government may seize a far broader range of documents than those required by the Act and its regulations to be prepared and maintained by the business enterprise. As well, the Act allows for searches and seizures of documents in the possession of third parties who are not the subject of an investigation. It was these same factors that led four of the five judges sitting on McKinlay Transport to conclude that the compelled production of documents provided for in s. 231(3) of the Income Tax Act constituted a seizure for the purposes of s. 8 of the Charter because there was, for the proprietor, a privacy interest in the documents. That same reasoning is applicable to the facts presented by these cases.

The purpose of an interlocutory stay is to preserve the rights of applicants (the respondents before this Court) pending a final determination of a legal question which will affect those rights. Here, the respondents seek not the return of their documents, but simply the maintenance of the orders that they be held by the court pending the determination of this issue. If it is found that the respondents are correct and that the searches and seizures were unconstitutional, then the privacy right will have effectively been lost as a result of the unconstitutional provisions of the Act. Small as it may be, there is such a privacy interest. If it transpires that the respondents are correct in their constitutional contention, then I would think that the loss of that privacy interest would, in itself, constitute irreparable harm.

Yet there is another aspect which I consider to be far more significant in this case. Namely, that the documents were obtained by means of intrusive searches of residential and business premises.

In Baron v. Canada, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 416, at p. 444, it was recognized that although characterizations such as "regulatory" and "criminal" are useful for purposes of Charter analysis, they do not provide a complete answer. What must always be considered are the values which are at stake on the facts of the particular case. Here, it is true that the search was made pursuant to the provisions of a regulatory statute dealing with the highly regulated business; however, a court must still be concerned with the nature of the physical searches of private premises. Obviously, searches of private property are far more intrusive than a demand for production of documents. The greater the intrusion by the searchers into the business premises and private residences, the greater weight should be attached to the provisions of s. 8 of the Charter. Thus, although the privacy interest of an individual in business documents pertaining to a regulated field is relatively low, there remains a very real and significant privacy interest in maintaining the inviolability of residential premises, and to a lesser extent of business premises. This was recognized by Wilson J. in McKinlay Transport, supra, at p. 649:

> The greater the intrusion into the privacy interests of an individual, the more likely it will be that safeguards akin to those in Hunter will be required. Thus, when the tax officials seek entry onto the private property of an individual to conduct a search or seizure, the intrusion is much greater than a mere demand for production of documents.

Digitized by Google

> The reason for this is that, while a taxpayer may have little expectation of privacy in relation to his business records relevant to the determination of his tax liability, he has a significant privacy interest in the inviolability of his home.

It is on this issue that I find that I must take a position diametrically opposed to my colleague. The documents were seized from homes and business premises. The seizure of those documents cannot be divorced from the intrusion into private premises. The search and seizure of the documents are part and parcel of the same sequence of events. They are an integral part of the whole. It should not be said that once the documents are seized it is no longer necessary to consider the intrusion into homes and offices. The documents were obtained as a result of that intrusion. The violation of privacy interest resulting from that intrusion cannot end with the removal of the documents. So long as the documents are held by or on behalf of the appellants there is a continuing violation of the privacy interest of the respondents in their residences and business premises.

The constitutionality of ss. 40 and 40.1 of An Act respecting the Ministère du Revenu will be determined in the principal applications to quash the warrants. Should those sections eventually be found to be unconstitutional, then the searches and seizures will have violated the privacy interest of the respondents in their homes and offices. The government will, without authority, have entered the premises and searched for and seized the documents. Thus the government will have had the continuing possession of the documents in the absence of any authority and in violation of the Charter. This, it seems to me, would constitute irreparable damage to the respondents.

The provision for the impounding orders seems eminently fair for all parties. While the documents are impounded they cannot be altered or changed in any way by the respondents. The documents will thus remain protected while the court carries out the judicial function of determining the constitutionality of the legislation. There could be no question of the fairness and efficacy of such an order if the issue could be determined in a reasonable time; say two weeks or two months, or even six months. If the court cannot determine the issue within a reasonable time, then I wonder whether it is the respondents or the government that should suffer as a result of the delays.

In my view, it is irrelevant that the appellants could have lawfully gained possession of these documents by means of a demand made pursuant to ss. 38 or 39 of the Act. The fact remains that they were gained through searches and seizures conducted pursuant to ss. 40 and 40.1. The appellants chose the method of proceeding. They obtained the documents by means of intrusive searches of residential and business premises. The appellants cannot now rely on the fact the documents might have been obtained in some other way.

I cannot accept the appellants' argument that since s. 69 of the Act provides for the confidentiality of tax documents this section will protect the privacy interests of the respondents. Although s. 69 protects the respondents from public release of information contained in the documents, it does not protect them from having their privacy interests in their homes and offices violated by the state. This is the very interest that s. 8 of the Charter is aimed at protecting. Section 69 does not adequately protect the respondents' privacy interests in the documents. Nor can I accept that the breach of the privacy interest can be quantified and the respondents compensated in damages. There will always be problems in any attempt to quantify and to compensate the breach of a Charter right. The nature of the right to compensation for breaches of Charter rights is still highly uncertain. See RJR -- MacDonald, supra, at p. 342.

In summary then, there is some small privacy interest in commercial documents. The seizure by way of intrusive searches of business premises and private residences was and continues to be an integral part of the seizure. The intrusive nature of the search cannot be isolated from the taking of the documents. It is highly speculative to expect that a breach of privacy interests, not only in the documents, but also in the homes and offices of the respondents, could be compensated in damages. Thus, if the respondents are successful in the principal motions, they would suffer irreparable damage if the impounding orders, which constitute a very fair disposition of the matter, were to be set aside. It is then necessary to consider whether the public interest would be harmed by this apparently fair solution.

Digitized by Google

Balance of Inconveniences

It is under the balance of inconveniences branch of the Metropolitan Stores test that this case should really be decided. Obviously, the public interest is a very important consideration in determining whether an interlocutory impounding order should be set aside. What is being considered is a regulatory scheme dealing with the restaurant and hotel business. All who enter this field must be aware of the governmental regulations and know that they must comply with them. Those regulations are of great importance for the health and safety of the public. Thus, there clearly is a public good derived from the regulations. That public good must weigh heavily in the public interest in considering whether the interlocutory impounding orders should be set aside. Further the public good which results from the collection of revenues derived from taxation statutes is obviously a factor that should weigh heavily in assessing the balance of convenience. There is no question that to ensure compliance with any taxation legislation powers of investigation and enforcement are essential. These are all factors to be taken into account and considered to be favourable to the position of the Ministère du Revenu.

With all that recognized, it still must be determined whether the holding in escrow of the documents seized pending the determination of the constitutional validity of the search provisions of the Act should be upheld in light of the remaining privacy interest in those documents and in the homes and offices of the respondents. My colleague begins his analysis of the balance of inconveniences by observing that the impounding orders will merely delay the appellants' opportunity to look at the documents seized. Therefore, he continues, it can be presumed that the respondents will at one time or another suffer the inconveniences related to the investigation by the Ministère du Revenu (i.e., the appellants seeing the documents seized). With respect, I disagree. His approach assumes that the respondents will lose the main applications to quash the warrants. Any remedy in the nature of an interlocutory stay or impounding order is predicated on the possibility that the party applying for the stay will eventually be successful. Obviously, if the respondents are successful in the main applications, then they will not suffer a violation of their privacy interests. As I have observed, the impounding orders protect both the integrity of the documents and the privacy interest of the respondents. The impounding order is an eminently sensible interlocutory measure, provided that it does not harm the public interest.

What then is the detriment that the Ministère du Revenu will suffer if the impounding orders are upheld? After a review of the evidence provided in this case, I have come to the conclusion that the Ministère du Revenu and the public interest in the enforcement of taxation statutes would suffer little, if at all, from the granting and maintaining of these orders.

