Don the Bookman prowls bookstores for the elusive hot find

Don "the Bookman" Bell is a small man, whose dress befits the Bohemian life that he leads. Today, he arrives at Restaurant Mocador in Sutton, the place where his career as a bookseller began, dressed in casual, weekend attire, the look of a man permanently on vacation.

With his wiry beard and sailors' cap, one might easily mistake him for a weekend fisherman who has blown into town for a quick pint. However, the casual look masks a high level of nervous energy focused like a laser on the two central themes in his life: writing and book scouting.

"I love books, love to read," says Bell, speaking in his rapid-fire staccato.

Ten summers ago, Bell set up a book sale table, where Restaurant Mocador's outdoor terrace now stands. He started by selling his treasures — second-hand books, some rare and collectible — procured during his regular rounds to booksellers in Canada, U.S. and France, where he lives during the long Quebec winters.

Though bookselling now pays the bills, Bell considers himself first and foremost a writer, author of numerous magazine articles, three published books and four unpublished manuscripts, including a non-fiction investigative examination of the death of illusionist and escape artist extraordinaire Harry Houdini.

Bell was born in Brooklyn, New York, but moved to Montreal when he was five-years-old. In 1977, he moved to Sutton, where for 14 years, he lived on and off in a "funky flat on Main Street in Sutton, followed by five years on Academy Street.

The barbecue debate: charcoal or gas?

By Murray McMillan
SOUTHAM NEWS
VANCOUVER

Gentlemen, choose your fuel - gas or charcoal? More consumers are now appearing to prefer the convenience of gas grills over the traditional flavour hardwood charcoal brings to outdoor cooking.

However, no one's right, no one's wrong in which they choose - it's just a choice. And some outdoor chefs admit to be crossover cookers - they own both types of gear, and make a choice depending on what they're cooking.

But ease of choice aside, each fuel has its passionate adherents. Just meet our charcoal and grill guys to see what we mean.

"Comparing gas to charcoal is like comparing a house-painter to Leonardo da Vinci." No question where Fred Roycroft of Port Coquitlam stands on this issue.

"Fred's a dinosaur; he's from Bedrock - and you can quote me." That's the word from Kelly Mullin, also from Port Coquitlam. Don't you hate wishy-washy opinions?

Read on for their good-natured views on a subject both obviously love to talk about - almost as much as they love eating what's cooked.

THE GAS GUY

The cook: Kelly Mullin, 49, a Vancouver firefighter for 27 years; he's now a captain at a downtown fire hall.

• Question: The fuel?

• Answer: Gas - what else?

• Question: How often do you grill/barbecue?

• Answer: "I barbecue all year round at home and at work, so I average at least twice a week." Every Vancouver fire hall has a gas grill, he says, because firefighters pool their money through contributions to a service fund, and the fund buys the equipment. Mullin says he started cooking with gas at home as soon as gas barbecues became widely available.

• Question: Why do you choose it?

• Answer: "I find the gas barbecue is so much quicker and more convenient [than charcoal]." On the job, that means being able to shut down the cooking operation if a fire call has to be answered, and being able to come back and start cooking again without having "lost our coals."

"With gas you can regulate your heat better; you can use wood chips if you want to add specific flavours."

• Question: Any safety concerns?

• Answer: "Propane tanks can have slow leaks - that's a concern. You have to check for faulty connections to the gas line."

• Question: What maintenance is required?

• Answer: "You have to clean the equipment and light it properly. Every couple of years, replace the venturi tubes (the tubes that connect the control valves to the burners). In between, clean them to make sure they're not clogged."

• Question: What's your favourite food from the grill?

• Answer: "Prime rib steak and lobster, which is my favourite food. And I really like oysters done on the barbecue." (Spareribs, chicken and loin steaks figured in the conversation, too.)

THE CHARCOAL GUY

The cook: Fred Roycroft, 54, spent 24 years in the wholesale food business, mostly handling produce; he's now a full-time union rep.

• Question: How often do you grill/barbecue?

• Answer: "I do probably 99 per cent of the cooking at home - my wife (Betty) likes the idea of a live-in chef. On average through the year I grill or barbecue three times a week. I barbecue the meat, but I prefer to eat the vegetables. I could eat steak two or three times a year and be happy. My wife, she's the fanatical meat-eater." Indeed she prefers it so rare, he adds jokingly, that even once it's cooked "a good vet could probably revive it."

• Question: The fuel?

• Answer: "I've got six barbecues - all charcoal, plus one gas barbecue that she won."

• Question: Why do you choose it?

• Answer: "For me, cooking is relaxation, getting away from the rush, the hurry. (With charcoal) you can take your time, you get back to the basics of cooking. There's more subtlety, more flavour, more flexibility."

• Question: Any safety concerns?

• Answer: "There are far fewer safety concerns with charcoal than with gas. The one thing I do is cook down on the ground, not on the deck."

He advises using high-quality, name-brand hardwood charcoal, such as Kingsford. Stay away from the cheap stuff in generic packages, he says.

As for lighting the fire, "If someone's stupid enough to use that liquid fire-starter they might get their beard burned off." He prefers to use a chimney starter: an upright metal can (they're sold commercially, but sometimes hard to find) with a grate toward the lower end.

Charcoal goes in the top, crumpled newspaper goes under the grate and is lit, which starts the coals. Then, working carefully using protective equipment, the coals are spread out in the barbecue.

"Paraffin starter pellets are pretty good too."

• Question: What maintenance is required?

• Answer: Little other than routine cleaning.

• Question: What's your favourite food from the barbecue?

• Answer: "There's nothing superior to pork shoulder that's been cooked at low temperature for 10 to 12 hours, then shredded and served with a little barbecue sauce and some coleslaw, on a bun. That's heaven, even without the bun. Brisket done the same way comes a close second."

Prince was one among the many jazz artists who lit up the stage at the Montreal Jazz Festival.

By Dylan Young
SPECIAL TO THE RECORD

When the schedule for Montreal's Festival du Jazz came out this year, you could practically hear the collective groan from the critics' gallery.

The festival invitees' relative lack of pizzazz seemed to be on everyone's lips. And if it wasn't that, it was the perceived pandering of festival organizers to record sales charts rather than to some high-minded musical imperative. But now that the Jazz festival has closed its doors on another year, even the staunchest critics would have to admit that the whole thing passed as sweetly as anyone could have hoped.

For Those who have discovered a renewed passion for traditional jazz in Ken Burns' fabulous PBS documentary earlier this year, they have ample opportunity to continue the indulgence.

Wynton Marsalis —jazz's foremost ambassador of tradition — has made a fine career of managing virtuoso performances alongside instruction in the history and nuance of the music. With the 14-piece Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra at his side, Marsalis' July 1 performance at Places-des-Arts was every bit the education fans have come to expect — a mincing set of mixed standards and contemporary classics linked by a narrative of jazz lineage.

And this was not all Trad-jazz-bos had to be thankful for, with performances by John Scofield, Joao Gilberto and Oscar Peterson dressing out the week.

For those jazz fans hungry for fresher expressions of the jazz spirit, the festival could hardly have done better. In a special series of invitational shows, two of Jazzdom's new voices, Michael Brecker and Roy Hargrove took up residency at Montreal's Monument National. Splitting the week between them, each musician set out to host an exploration of jazz's future.

Saxophonist Brecker, believed by many to be the most avant-garde talent in jazz today, was the first to commandeer the Monument's stage. Through five evenings, Brecker and his shifting cast of accompanists (among them Charlie Haden, Mike Manieri and brother Randy Brecker), provided a unique and blistering definition of jazz. Brecker's music is a style built on the explorations of a mid-career John Coltrane — fearsome, squirrely and emotional. Definitely not a sound to please every ear but provocative and expertly delivered to be sure.

Over the years, the festival has developed a strong reputation for attracting a high caliber of World Music. This year's international line-up was as varied as ever, from the radically political roots reggae of Steel Pulse, through the punkish World beat of Manu Chao, to the Cubano Jazz ministrations of Ibrahim Ferrer and Cesaria Evora.

The most controversial of the festival's offerings was the much anticipated appearance of Prince (henceforth to be known as). The show sold out within hours but this fact could not stem the flurry of cynical conjecture over the pop icon's appearance at the jazz festival.

On the day of the show, tongues were still wagging furiously but his Purple-ness quickly squashed the critics' reservations with a fabulous set of pure, albeit R&B inflected, jazz.

Many fans were certainly surprised at not getting a faithful retrenching of his classics 'Red Corvette' or 'Purple Rain', but I doubt any were disappointed. As eccentric and mystifying as Prince may be he is ever capable of keeping us on our toes.

Every year, the Montreal Jazz Festival seems to raise the ire of some quarter. Much of the hullabaloo seems to flow from the varying perceptions of what is meant by the word jazz.

Clearly the word means something different to everyone, and so it seems immaterial to get hot over. But if people insist on revisiting the issue every year, maybe the event should be rechristened as the Montreal Festival of Music and leave it at that. It won't alter the fact that it remains one of the most phenomenal cultural events in North America.

Bookman explores passion for books

BOOKMAN:

During recent years, Bell has spent his winters living in Paris with his wife, Odile Perret-Bell, an editor and proof-reader who works there. Every summer, Bell returns to Quebec to visit his daughter, Valerie, in Montreal, or to return to Sutton, which serves as his North American home base.

When working, he travels a regular circuit with collectors and book dealers in Boston, New York, Montreal and, during winters, in France. Bell describes France as the vanguard of francophonie, and a surprisingly fertile hunting ground for works by English authors because of the unusual number of English expatriates who have settled there.

In the mid-1960s, Bell worked in a variety of media outlets, including two years with the CBC. There, he enjoyed a brief on-air career with CBC Tuesday Night, interviewing authors such as Ray Bradbury and Jorge Luis Borges. Bell followed this up with a year at the Gazette and a brief stint in public relations during Expo '67.

However, Bell considers his most formative experience, during a stint at Weekend Magazine during the late '60s to early '70s. There, he produced what he considers to be his best work: short stories about Montreal and its characters, many of which would later be reprinted in his collection, Saturday Night at the Bagel Factory (McClelland & Stewart, 1972), recipient of the 1972 Leacock Honour Award.

Bell also published Pocketman (Dorset 1979), a collection of short stories based on an itinerant Montreal philosopher/existential poet who travels with no possessions other than those that he can stuff into his seven pockets.

More recently, Bell published Bookspeak (Typographium, 2000), a hand-printed, limited edition book which he describes as a "dialogue between a horny couple using book terms and puns".

He has also authored four unpublished manuscripts: 'The Great Cosmos Debate and Other Stories' (a collection of short stories), a soon-to-be published pamphlet on artist Marcel Duchamp, a collection of articles published by MVP magazine entitled 'Frenchy's Hockey Fantasy and Other Nonsportodox' and finally, his magnum opus, 'Who Killed Harry Houdini?'

The final work is the result of decades of investigative work on Gordon Whitehead, who was the mysterious McGill student and alleged Houdini assailant who dealt the blows to Houdini's abdomen that are widely believed to have cost the world's greatest escape artist his life.

Bell's second career, which he describes "book scouting", was the likely convergence of his passion for writing and his knowledge of collecting, fueled by a boyhood interest in stamps.

Bell considers his most exciting find to date a first edition of Bram Stoker's Dracula, purchased in a bookstore in Versailles for 50 francs ($10 Canadian) and resold for $4,000.

Book scouting has also provided a wealth of experience that Bell has spun into articles published in both magazines and newspapers, including the National Post, Agni, Biblio and Globe and Mail.

The U.K.-based Antiquarian Book Monthly also recently published 'Moby Dick', Bell's account of how a Saratoga, New York bookseller discovered the find of a lifetime: a Herman Melville manuscript and letters in a barn (The New York Public Library purchased the documents for $500,000).

Bell is currently working on a book scouting column that he hopes to market to major newspapers. One entry in the series ('The Debate Rages On') uses 'Traveler Tales of China' by Hezekiah Butterworth to discuss the very subjective business of assessing value.

"I compare the appeal of this shoddy-looking book of little (monetary) value to that of an expensive John Milton with handsome binding that will put one to sleep," he said.

"(It's) the argument of contents versus condition. For me, as a writer, I'm definitely in the content camp."

Bell's most treasured volume is a children's book, Tales of Laughter, collected by Kate Douglas Wiggin, a book with more sentimental than monetary value. This may come as a surprise, coming from a man who has handled more than his share of literary classics.

Bell is always on the lookout for antiquarian or rare books in good condition (preferably with original book jackets) in literature, illustrated, travel, poetry, Canadiana, and old sports books (pre-1940). He is not, however, interested in Readers' Digests, Book-of-the-Month selections, *National Geographic*s, library discards or books in very bad condition.

MANY OF BOOKMAN'S ANTIQUARIAN BOOKS WILL SOON BE ON SALE AT BROME LAKE BOOKS AND EX-LIBRIS, LOCATED ON PINE STREET IN SUTTON. TO PURCHASE A COPY OF BELL'S LIMITED EDITION PRINTING OF 'BOOKSPEAK', OR TO INQUIRE ABOUT SELLING OR BUYING BOOKS, CONTACT HIM AT DON-THEBOOKMAN@HOTMAIL.COM OR AT (514) 487-4889 UNTIL MID-AUGUST.

Who killed Harry Houdini?

By Caroline Kehne
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

In his unpublished manuscript on illusionist Harry Houdini, author Don Bell investigates the strange circumstances surrounding his death.

The fatal abdominal punch was not one, but several punches delivered in Houdini's dressing room following a performance at Montreal's Princess Theatre. These would result in Houdini's death from peritonitis in Detroit nine days later, on Halloween Night, 1926.

Bell notes that two eyewitnesses were present in Houdini's dressing room when the punches occurred: Montreal lawyer Sam Smiley, who was sketching Houdini, and Smiley's friend, Jacques Price. Records from McGill University show that Gordon Whitehead, Houdini's alleged assailant, registered for classes twice, but showed no record of his graduation. The eyewitnesses reported that Whitehead entered the dressing room to return a book to the magician.

While Houdini sorted through his mail, the student asked Houdini if it were true that he could withstand a punch to the abdomen. When Houdini answered that it was true, Whitehead, according to Price and Smiley, delivered between three to five punches to the unprepared illusionist.

In his book, Bell investigates Whitehead, who seems to drop out of sight after the fatal punches were delivered. Bell tracked down people, many of whom are now deceased, including Whitehead's former girlfriend, who was in her 80s when Bell interviewed her in British Columbia.

He even discovers an intriguing Sutton connection: Bell says that the women spent two years convalescing with a family in Sutton after Whitehead's death in the mid-50s.

Bell was also able to obtain from other sources a photograph of Gordon Whitehead, the only known likeness in existence.

What were the motives for the attack on the famous illusionist? While eyewitness Smiley believed Whitehead to be a crackpot acting on impulse, Bell investigates the possibility that Whitehead may have been put up to the deed by spiritualists and occultists who faced exposure and ridicule at Houdini's hands.

If Bell is able to capture a publisher's attention, we may be able to understand more about the death of the world's greatest escape artist and illusionist.

Words on a String festival to celebrate literacy

By Nancy Nourse
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

The St. Francis Literacy Council and Frontier College invites everyone to join them in a fun festival to celebrate everyone's right to learn how to read and write.

The festival will take place on Saturday, July 14 in the field owned by St. Francis Literary Council co-ordinator Jackie Hall. Hall hopes people will bring their friends, family, a blanket and picnic to join in for a day of stories, music and dance.

There will also be clowns, a petting zoo and much more to interest the children as well as artisan and food booths.

"We have to find new ways to approach this problem," Hall said.

"Quebec is kind of stuck. Sixty per cent of government funding goes to making adults more literate. I think family literacy is the way to go. If you can spark a child's interest when he is young, he will acquire an appreciation for books and learning that he will carry with him throughout his life.

Living with low literacy skills seriously limits an individual's ability to reach his full potential."

The organizers hope that this festival will increase the public's awareness of the low literacy rates both in our own community and across the country. Increased publicity will also help those with low literacy skills realize that they are not alone, and feel more confident to step forward and ask for help.

"I have worked in the literacy program for several years," said Bernie Epps, who will be one of the readers on Saturday.

"One gentleman of 70 years young came to me. He desperately wanted to learn to read and write. His self-esteem was at a low level because he was forced to accept things the way they were and could do little to better himself. It really felt good to help him achieve such a worthwhile goal. He proved that one is never too old to learn."

Epps, who has been writing for 40 years, began by writing stories for his daughter as birthday and Christmas presents.

Roch Carrier, best known for his children's story, 'The Hockey Sweater', will also be treating folks to his unique style of story telling. Copies of his book will also be raffled off.

Well-known folk singer Penny Lang, also featured this Saturday, will present her endless energy in creating songs with strong lyrics, both humorous and provocative.

Matthew Shephard of Flood Magazine, and folk singer Linda Morrison from Montreal will be the Masters of Ceremonies. Flood is perhaps better known for its highlights of poetry and prose by local writers.

Brenda Hartwell, well-known locally for her delightful children's stories, will also be on hand, presenting 'The Butterfield Garden.' She hopes that the puppet characters will appeal to the little ones, as well as deliver the message about the importance of learning to read.

There will also be several interludes of Contra Dance, in which Sandy Ward and her group, Roadhouse, will lend their support.

In addition to her singing career, Ward is also a teacher and psychologist. One of the courses that she instructs at Bishop's University is Psychology of Reading.

"School is different than it used to be," Ward said. "Students must travel farther away from home. School life used to be a part of the community. This is no longer possible. The program 'Books and Buddies', which matches up young children with those from higher grades, helps to increase the interest in reading but practice at home is also important.

"If books are treated with respect and care at home, the results are positive. Those children lacking contact with books when they start kindergarten, are definitely at a disadvantage. Most of them catch up but it takes determination and support from their teachers and parents."

The festival will be held from 1 to 11 p.m. on Saturday, July 14. The festival location is at the corner of Griffin Road (HWY 247) and Chemin Lapierre, 10 minutes outside of Stanstead. Watch for the signs. Admission is free.

Director brings unique touch to 'Travels'

Travels With My Aunt, the third of four plays in Theatre Lac Brome's repertory season, opens this weekend. An adaptation of the Graham Greene book, 'Travels' directed by Greg Kramer, the show promises to be the highlight of an exciting summer.

Kramer, whose inspired vision brought us last year's delightful production of 'The Importance of being Ernest,' is bringing his own unique touch to 'Travels.'

"In this production we use three men and a woman; it is usually done with four men," Kramer noted, referring to the fact that three actors will be playing Henry Pulling, and another male taking the role of Aunt Augusta.

"Now that I've seen Diana (Fajrajsl) doing Aunt Augusta, I can't imagine a man doing it. She brings such a different slant to the part."

'Travels' is the story of staid Henry Pulling, who retires at 55 from his career as a bank manager, and ends up traveling with his eccentric Aunt Augusta around the world.

"Superficially, it is a story about a man trying to find his mother," Kramer said, grimacing at his own clichés. "But it's mainly about finding freedom through travel and travelling to another continent in order to find yourself."

As 'Travels' involves numerous exotic settings, Kramer had to devise a way to suggest a change of locale without using big set changes.

Kramer admitted that the schedule is quite trying.

"I am going mad, of course," he said, shaking his head ruefully.

"We've really only had 10 days rehearsal to get this together, and I am also doing three other projects as well."

Kramer started working on the play months ago. He spent a lot of time planning the vision of the play in terms of moves and changes.

"I feel that it is the overall art of Henry's journey that is important to find," he said.

"I think this is an appropriate play for Lac Brome. There is a big English contingent here. And Graham Greene is a beautiful storyteller. Plus he has nice things to say about the Brits, things like... like... well, they are good travellers."

Following that statement, Kramer laughed. He is, of course, an expatriate Brit.

TRAVELS TAKES YOU FROM SEA TO SEA

"It is a tough play to do," admits Kramer of the finished product. "Act One is so different from Act Two. The first act is so precise and demanding, while the second act takes place in South America and everything slows down and relaxes a bit."

Henry finds out where he belongs — on the other side of the Atlantic, which comes as a complete surprise to him.

Kramer pointed out that Greene wrote the play in the 60s, and Aunt Augusta's character reflects the change in attitudes that swept through that decade.

"Aunt Augusta turns into something unknown to Henry," Kramer explained.

"And Greene lets us know that moral rectitude, which many of us think comes with age, in fact does not. It is really the generation involved.

"The 20s and the 60s produced similar types, while the generations in-between were much more moralistic."

If 'Travels With My Aunt' proves to be anything as delicious as last year's 'Ernest,' than Kramer will have a runaway hit on his hands.

Comedy Lucien kicks off Piggery summer season

By Diahann Nadeau
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

The Piggery opens its 36th season this weekend, starting with the first of its three summer productions, Lucien by Marshall Button. All three shows at the Piggery this summer are touring shows.

Lucien, a one man show, will run until July 28. In it, Button stars as Lucien, an Acadian mill worker from Northern New Brunswick who has opinions on everything under the sun and is happy to share them. Lucien has made appearances on CBC television and played to audiences across the country.

Second City follows on July 31, playing only for one week. The fabled improv group has been around for decades; the late John Candy, Dan Akroyd, Dave Thomas and Andrea Martin are just a few who started there.

'Two Pianos Four Hands' by Ted Dykstra and Richard Greenblatt, is a revival of the original presented by the Piggery five years ago. With a new cast, the show's simple premise of the dreams and opportunities of two characters told through music and words should please audiences as much as it did in 1996.

General Manager Shane Corrigan noted that "while it is a shorter season, it is a balanced one."

Balanced on the side of comedy, that is. "We have had numerous surveys that indicate that people want comedy. That is what they want, and that is what we are giving them."

Corrigan wants to make it clear there is not a crisis at the Piggery.

"We are trying to avoid a crisis! We have had fair warning — if things continued as they had been going, we would not exist in five years. So we wanted to give ourselves some breathing space; this season reflects that. It is shorter, and since all the shows come from outside, it gives us time to rethink our programme while still giving our audience what they want.

Lucien has been a hit across the country — it is kind of a down home version of 'Wingfield' but with a Maritime twist.

"We are trying something new with Second City; that is why it is only on for a week. We want to see how it goes. As with all theatres we are always trying to attract the younger crowd; a lot of younger people have said they wanted to see this show.

"We have even marketed it differently, advertising in the art magazines in Montreal like the Mirror. Advance ticket sales are already going well," Corrigan enthused.

The Piggery also hopes to start a festival featuring local talent next season.

Tickets and information are available at the Piggery box office at 819-842-2431.

Eight years and a sequel after the original, the third Jurassic Park movie will be in theaters July 18

By Jamie Portman
SOUTHAM NEWS

First came the 1993 Jurassic Park with its revolutionary visual effects, plus box-office returns that made it the highest grossing movie in the world up to that time.

Then, four years later, Steven Spielberg and his colleagues unveiled its successor, The Lost World, and triggered an astonishing public response which even they - in all their optimism - had failed to anticipate. That film's opening weekend gross of $92.7 million U.S. set a new box-office record that has yet to be matched. It was then the filmmakers realized that audiences couldn't get enough of Jurassic Park's dinosaurs in all their animatronic, computer-enhanced glory. They saw a gilt-edged franchise looming - one that could prove as durable as the James Bond films.

Which is why Spielberg's longtime producing colleague, Kathleen Kennedy, is talking to reporters today about the newest instalment in a saga that has consumed her for a decade.

"We knew there had to be a Jurassic Park III when we did The Lost World," Kennedy said.

"Believe me, once everybody gets wind of the fact that there's a franchise possibility, there's so much pressure to keep it going. It's twofold: it's not just the studio (Universal) putting on the pressure. It's the audience as well because we wouldn't do this if the people didn't come."

The new movie, arriving July 18, should prove there's a life for Jurassic Park beyond Michael Crichton, author of the first two novels, and beyond Spielberg, who is still on board as executive producer but who this time has relinquished the directing chores to Joe Johnston, the innovative filmmaker responsible for Jumanji and Honey, I Shrank the Kids.

Kennedy, however, remains the linchpin for the ongoing series, again fulfilling the job of senior producer.

"I enjoy doing this because I thrive in an atmosphere of controlled chaos," she said.

"I enjoy the process of organizing things and opening a script and saying, 'My god, how are we going to do that?' I enjoy breaking it down and beginning the process of analyzing how we're going to execute it."

For the current instalment, Amblin Entertainment decided to reward fans by serving up a bigger, more frightening monster. To be sure, the Tyrannosaurus Rex, which dominated the first two films, is still wreaking havoc, but this time it's challenged by a vicious rival - the Spinosaurus, a creature with a long jaw, formidable teeth and a sail-like back fin.

Jack Horner, the film's consulting paleontologist, commented during shooting that this was "a massive carnivore... the biggest meat-eating dinosaur that ever lived."

The only reconstructed Spino skeleton in existence was destroyed during a Second World War bombing, so in re-creating it, designer Stan Winston and the high-tech wizards at Industrial Light and Magic had to rely on written records. But Horner says existing resource material provided considerable detail.

"We do know that it had a skull that was eight feet long and a body that was about 60 feet long," Horner said.

"If we base the ferocious factor on the length of the animal, there was nothing that ever lived on this planet that could match this creature. Also my hypothesis is that T-rex was actually a scavenger rather than a killer. Spinosaurus was really the predatory animal."

Jurassic Park III provides an additional bonus by bringing the flying Pteranodons into sinister play. But Kennedy argues that it's not enough simply to aim for a movie that's "bigger and better." While she foresees a continuing lucrative life for Jurassic Park, she also cautions that it cannot happen without good scripts.

"These days, you can do anything with time and money... but none of that matters if you don't have some sort of inherently interesting story and characters," Kennedy said.

"So that's really where we begin - first of all focusing on story and characters. In that sense, the dinosaurs become secondary."

Sam Neill is back as Alan Grant, the dedicated paleontologist who in the first film was lured onto the remote Caribbean island of Isla Nublar where a groundbreaking company called InGen had created a unique tourist attraction that allowed visitors to interact with genetically engineered dinosaurs. What promised to be a dramatic journey into the prehistoric past turned into a terrifying nightmare after the giant creatures took over the amusement park and terrorized everyone in it.

Now, Grant has yielded once again to his scientific zeal. He is persuaded by a wealthy adventurer (William H. Macy) and wife (Tea Leoni) to lead them on an aerial tour of a second InGen island, Isla Soma. But the couple's real motive is to land the plane and have Grant lead a search and rescue mission to locate their missing 14-year-old son (Trevor Morgan).

Kennedy says Jurassic Park III seeks to add some enjoyable new wrinkles to the time-tested dinosaur formula.

"Bill Macy and Tea Leoni are so much fun in this movie," Kennedy enthuses.

"I don't want to give too much away because the whole setup of their relationship is a large part of the story."

That, Kennedy says, creates a dynamic to which a family audience can respond. "But in addition there are these new dinosaurs - like the flying dinosaur which everyone has been waiting to see."

Jurassic attack

TVDATA

Sir Richard Attenborough stars as John Alfred Hammond, a theme park entrepreneur who thinks big — really big — in Jurassic Park. The 1993 adventure airs Saturday, July 14, on NBC. Hammond and his team of scientists fill an island with dinosaurs cloned from ancient DNA. They're supposed to be all the same sex and incapable of reproducing, but Mother Nature has other ideas. Sam Neill, Laura Dern, Jeff Goldblum and Samuel L. Jackson also star.

Determined social worker

TVDATA

Bonnie Bedelia plays Iris Sayer, a social worker who heals her own wounds by bonding with a very special client, in To Live Again, airing Sunday, July 15, on CBS. Iris has been retired since suffering a loss in her life. At a friend's urging, she agrees to take on the case of Karen (Annabeth Gish), a young woman whose mother (Frances Sternhagen) has kept her captive for 16 years. As Iris helps Karen adjust to the world, she finds her own enthusiasm for life returning. And she'll need it to fight for Karen when her mother attempts to regain custody.

Teenage troubles

TVDATA

Delta Burke and Ryan Merriman star as Sally and Jack Cambridge, a mother and son with a secret, in Dangerous Child, premiering Monday, July 16, on Lifetime. Jack is experiencing a run of fairly typical teenage frustrations, but he has his father's short fuse. It isn't long before his adolescent defiance escalates into violence against his mother. When one of his outbursts critically injures his little brother, however, it's Sally who faces criminal charges.

EXHIBITS

The beauty of the Townships will be brought to life by featured artist Jocelyne Rollin, in an exhibition entitled REALISTIC PASTEL SCENES by local artists at Pettes Memorial Library throughout July. Rollin works primarily in textile art, touching on the many aspects of the discipline which include fashion design, knitting, crochet, knotting, weaving, embroidery and quilting. The works on display this month range from the picturesque Quilliams dinner to the serenity of Barrage Mill Pond in Knowlton. Hours of operation are Mon., Tues., Thurs. and Fri., noon - 4:30 p.m., Wed., 10 a.m. - 4:30 p.m., Sat. and Sun., 10 a.m. - 4 p.m. For more information on Rollin or her exhibit, call (450) 243-5544.

This summer, the Colby-Curtis Museum in Stanstead will act as a port of entry to Lake Memphremagog with its exhibition: ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF NAVIGATION ON LAKE MEMPHREMA-GOG. Altogether, nine historical, heritage societies or museums around the lake, including two in Vermont, will present different aspect of the international body of water under the general title of Lake Memphremagog, Crossroads of History and Legends throughout the summer. The exhibition, now open at Colby-Curtis, focuses on navigation on the lake, with a special highlight on a very important dugout canoe, found in the lake in 1967 and now part of the Museum's Collection.

FREDERICK AMSDEN GALLERY presents the 3rd Annual Eastern Townships Art Competition until Sept. 2 with 63 participating artists. Adults and young people are invited to vote for their favourite exhibit at 531 Dufferin, Stanstead. For info. call (819) 876-5987.

Lodging at Old Orchard Beach

Vacationers have flocked to Old Orchard Beach for generations. Wherever you choose to stay while in the Old Orchard Beach area, you'll find "Downeast Hospitality" and accommodations for every taste and budget. Whether you're looking for a traditional New England Country Inn, a beachside condominium, motel, motor inn, private cottage, or a quaint bed and breakfast, we have it all. Old Orchard Beach offers an unmatched family vacation experience for all ages. A family can even rent an entire house by the week, the month, or the entire summer.

Many of our accommodations come with full kitchens or kitchenettes, allowing you to save some money by cooking in. And while many also have air conditioning, most all benefit from the sea breeze and moderate summer temperatures. Major credit cards are generally accepted in most establishments. Some properties have non-smoking rooms available, and a few have on-premise restaurants for your convenience. Please utilize the "Lodging Reference Guide" on the website to determine which accommodations have the amenities you desire most.

When making your reservation please be sure to mention that you got your information from the Old Orchard Beach Chamber of Commerce Home Page on the Internet.

If you are arriving in town without reservations (not recommended "in season") be sure to stop by the Chamber of Commerce office located on First Street or call 207-934-2500.
