

Sherbrooke Tenants Association protest social housing spending

Record Staff
SHERBROOKE

As part of a series of regional actions by the Popular Action Front in Urban Development (FRAPRU), of which the Association des locataires de Sherbrooke is a member, a series of actions and demonstrations began with an opening march on Monday afternoon from the ALS offices at 421 Wellington South to the site of the former Maysen Pub where a Press Conference revealed its demands and its activities.

According to the ALS, the coming months will be crucial. The Quebec government has announced plans to review its housing approaches, particularly in the area of social housing, and the Trudeau government has promised a Canadian housing strategy for the fall.

The ALS agrees that the budgets tabled in March 2017 in both Ottawa and Quebec contain new investments, notably through mobilization, but that they also demonstrate a lack of political will to implement the Right to Decent and Accessible Housing, as described in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR), which both governments ratified in 1976. At best, these investments will result in the development of 100 new housing units, which is insufficient for the 6,105 local renters who currently pay more than half of their income for housing, an increase of 8.7 per cent between 2006 and 2011 according to the 2011 Statistics Canada Census.

In its latest budget, Quebec will finance 3,000 units of new social housing. The Couillard government was limited to financing a meager 1,500 units due to

SHEILA QUINN

So, here you are in the last few weeks of high school.

I'll bet sometimes you thought you'd never make it. There were a lot of reasons. Academic success has never really been a big priority in your family. No one was getting you up in the morning except you. You were the one making your breakfast, if you had it, and sometimes you were also making sure that other people in your family had breakfast too.

The same goes for lunch - so, imagine that, at a time when it is clear that good food and a proper diet makes it easier to learn, you didn't always have regular meals, let alone healthy ones. Maybe your school doesn't even have a cafeteria, so the possibility of joining a kitchen team and having lunch every day wasn't an option.

You had a feeling that you could succeed though - and it turned out that you could learn, some things came easier and some were much more challenging (or even seemed alien in a way - it was probably strange to watch some other fellow students pick those subjects up more easily than you). You may at times have found yourself asking for help, often from other students, and maybe you helped them out too, in the subjects that you found easier to absorb.

People always complain about the legendary bad teachers, but there have been a few really incredible teachers too. You might feel a little like they changed you - you know you're different because extracting them from your life just leaves a totally different landscape - and I assure you that appreciation won't go away - in fact it will most likely deepen. You will remember them again in other times where the things they taught you come to the surface and you think about what it was like learning from them

Here you are

(how they believed in you, or how they were a little more strict (but did that because they were determined to help you to truly LEARN), or how they gave you bonus credits for extra work...or any other number of reasons).

You are an unlikely statistic and success story, but as lonely as that has felt at times, you aren't alone. There are other people out there like you, possibly reading this column right now; who went down that road too. Maybe they didn't have parents around. Maybe they had other responsibilities, duties, pressures, and even things that no one at school ever knew they went through when the bell at the end of the day rang and everyone ran for their busses or pushed open the big silver doors to walk home, feeling a little freer, your day possibly became more challenging or complicated.

Maybe the people around you at home didn't necessarily mean to come across as unsupportive. Maybe they just didn't know how to be there for you (or maybe they flat-out thought school was stupid). Perhaps there were also things going on around you that were sketchy, or worrisome, and maybe over the course of your seventeen-or-so years on the planet you've seen quite a lot - the kind of thing you know some of your friends and acquaintances from school might not be able to handle.

Here you are though.

And now, maybe the world both seems pretty exciting, because you know something you've worked towards is looming there in the distance. A different life. A different living space. Different opportunities, different experiences and a different atmosphere. You are right about all of that.

It might feel like the world is a little bigger too.

You are right about that too, but you can make that work for you.

The thing about exceptions to rules, and unlikely statistics, is that there is a built-in kind of resilience. It is now up to you to use that resilience for something.

You may find yourself right now where many people in your family have not - preparing to write (and succeed at) your final exams for high school, preparing to put on a cap and gown and walk across a stage to receive a high school diploma...and maybe there are moments where you sort of don't feel like going to that ceremony - you might not have many folks who are interested in attending, you might feel strange with the mixture of home and school in the same place at the same time...but if you can find it within yourself - DO IT. Be celebrated. Receive that piece of paper. Feel proud of yourself. Know that what you have accomplished is outstanding, exceptional, and is a big piece in the future good things in this world. Because those who withstand and rise above circumstances that do not indicate positive results, but yield them, are among the true wonders.

What is to come is perhaps going to be a little challenging at times, because again, unlike many of your peers who have grown up privileged, with supportive families, what you might experience isn't the fear of failure that hangs about them on a regular basis, but rather, fear of success and what that means in your family and the community you grew up in. It is possible that they don't know what to do with success, and won't applaud or praise your accomplishments. It is possible that they'll even make fun of you for being studious, committed, for doing things that are different from their lifestyle. If you need it though, seek out the applause, seek out the support, ask for help and never give up on yourself. When you struggle, knock on doors (yes multiple doors), make phone calls, do online research to find out where there are people who are not just ready to cheer you on, but motivated and happy to do so. You deserve to keep succeeding.

For now though, even if at times you felt alone, scared, hungry, uncertain, tired, sick of it all, even if you had moments where you really, really felt like giving up, even if what was to come didn't make sense and you didn't know why you bothered or where it would lead, YOU HAVE SUCCEEDED, AND THAT IS A BEAUTIFUL THING.

In this moment, with this little column, I hope to lead an ovation of people who are prepared to come forward and recognize people like you. Who are ready to help you to lead us in building the future. You are promising, you are hope, and you are allowed to do all of the awkward and strange things that happen next. You are allowed to make mistakes - just always learn from them and while you can decide to let some things end in your life, never, ever give up on yourself. Getting this far already shows that you were meant for wonderful things, and that you've already begun to shape the path that will lead you to more.

It is okay to want this. You have our permission as a greater community, not

Talented Sutton Elementary students take the stage on Friday

Submitted by Anne Emanuelli

Sutton Elementary School is in the final stages of preparing its annual talent show, which will take place this Friday, May 26, at the school. Students from K-Grade 6 from the French and English school boards will have the chance to shine bright on stage, displaying a variety of talents with their artistic performances.

The young artists, in groups and solo, have been preparing and rehearsing for several months, offering a varied programme of music, song, dance, magic and theatre. Created by the students, and performed by them in front of an audience gives each enterprising performer the experience of the stage, which in turn gives them self-esteem and confidence. All aspects of backstage and décor has been made by and with the students.

Such an event requires energy and commitment of a devoted team. In this case, the enthusiasm of our students was matched by the collaboration of teachers and volunteers alike. Particular support was given by the spearhead organisation, Espace Sutton, who not only provided the gymnasium with acoustic panels in 2015, but also equipment and hours of volunteer time

The show will take place this Friday, May 26 at 6.30p.m. at the school, located at 19 Highland Street, Sutton.

The ticket price is $7 for adults, $3 for children, and free for kids under five-years-old.

Tickets are available at Sutton school by calling 450 538-2318, or at the door the night of the show.

What's your best auction win?

By Gordon Lambie

Anyone passing through Lennoxville around 7pm on Wednesday evening might have noticed an unusual vehicle parked between the fire hall and the railroad tracks. The vehicle, a 1985 Walter CP-4500 crash tender, is designed for fire fighting at airports and recently became the property of Claude Beaudoin, a resident of Cookshire-Eaton.

"It was just a fluke. I was in the right place at the right time," Beaudoin said, explaining that in this case the right place was a Ritchie Bros. Auction in Montreal, where he had gone with a friend to look at trucks. "When we saw it, right away we said wow, that's one of a kind."

The truck is, according to Beaudoin, the same vehicle acquired by the municipalities of Bromont, Brigham, and Saint-Alphonse de Granby in 2013 to help serve the airport in Bromont. In the end, the Johnville resident said that he was able to buy it, uncontested, for the price of the tires.

"I'm sure some people really regret the sale," The truck's new owner reflected. "The auction lasted maybe 25 seconds. No one was bidding on it. For sure there was no firefighter there or someone would have seen the value."

Beaudoin said that he is now in talks with the director of the Cookshire-Eaton fire department to be trained in the use of the truck's equipment so that he can use it to help support firefighting services in the area.

"You cannot believe how many things there are on this," The man said, explaining that the vehicle is designed to be operated by a single person from inside the cabin.

Whether or not the conversation with fire departments goes well, though, Beaudoin said that he would like to bring his truck to more public events like Friendship Day.

"I would love to be there in the parade," he said.

Housing protest

due to budget cuts in the last two years, despite having a staggering surplus of $3.7 billion before payment to the Generations Fund. The government has and is still depriving itself of important revenues by closing both eyes to the tax shelters enjoyed by the wealthiest taxpayers and large corporations and by refusing to fight their tax evasion and avoidance strategies.

As for Ottawa, the $255 million allocated to the provinces from 2019-2020 for a variety of housing initiatives is barely higher than that under the Conservative regime's last budget, which had announced a new National Housing Fund of $5 billion over 11 years, but without specifying how the money was to be invested. The amounts projected for the implementation of the Canadian Housing Strategy are not up to current needs and are being planned over a much longer time horizon.

It is for these reasons that housing groups in the various regions, including Sherbrooke, are organizing actions and occupations since ill-housed people cannot wait for years.

Local activities can be followed on the ALS Facebook page, Association des locataires groupe.

MEET YOUR NEIGHBOURS

‘Enfant Soleil’ pays it forward

By Matthew McCully

Everyone has a story to tell. On Friday afternoon, there were probably a few hundred shoppers that passed through the Walmart in Cowansville. On their way through the door they may have seen a young man holding out a container, asking for donations.

That was Matthew Gibson.

He had the day off school from Massey-Vanier High School, so he decided to volunteer to gather donations at an Opération Enfant Soleil fundraiser.

Matthew has been an ambassador for the non-profit organization ever since 2015 when he was chosen to be the official Enfant Soleil representative for the Monteregie region.

Even though he completed his year, Matthew has remained involved with Enfant Soleil and its umbrella group, the Children’s Miracle Network, to share his story of determination with peers and encourage support for the foundation, which raises money for pediatric care.

When he was around 12-years-old, Matthew didn’t feel well. He had chronic stomach pain and was often tired and lethargic.

At first, his family doctor couldn’t pinpoint any visible symptoms, but upon further testing, Matthew received a diagnosis of Crohn’s disease.

“The best way I could illustrate it is you know when you have a cancer sore?” Matthew said. “You can tolerate it, but it’s annoying,” he said, pointing out that there is a sharp reminder it’s there every time you eat.

“I had about 20 centimetres of cancer sores in my intestines,” he explained.

While Crohn’s can be managed with medication, Matthew’s doctor recommended that he avoid aggressive treatment with hard drugs that had major side effects.

The alternative was several three to four month stints over a four-year period where Matthew couldn’t eat at all. He had to endure a liquid diet through a feeding tube.

“It was to kind of give my intestines a break,” he said. “It was like a big protein shake, but it didn’t taste good at all.”

Thanks to a machine provided by Enfant Soleil, Matthew was able to use the feeding tube at home rather than be hospitalized. He was fed up to 3,000 calories per night, he said, and also had to do feedings during the day.

Matthew said he used to binge watch Storage Wars, his favourite show at the time, while being fed.

At 12-years-old, Matthew said he weighed around 60 lbs.

Now 17, he is around 135lbs, and close to six feet tall.

His 20 centimetres of excruciating intestinal pain is down to four centimetres, making Matthew the patient with the best results from the treatment regimen, according to his doctors.

Matthew credits his recovery to a positive attitude and a strong family support network.

“I didn’t get discouraged,” Matthew said. Because his parents noticed he had a competitive spirit, they told him, “This is just a challenge in life that you need to go through.”

“I know there are many people worse off than me,” Matthew said, which is the reason he stays involved with Enfant Soleil and the Children’s Miracle Network, to pay his positive attitude forward.

Matthew recently had the opportunity to travel to Ottawa as one of the Quebec representatives for the Children’s Miracle Network.

He had the chance to meet with other families from the network with children battling sickness and exchange stories.

“I met one little kid from Newfoundland with a feeding tube,” Matthew said. Not wanting him to feel discouraged, Matthew told him, “Hey, I went through that for four years, but look at me now.”

As an ambassador for the non-profit organization, Matthew also got to meet Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, play twister with super heroes, skate with some pro hockey players, and even hang out with Miss America and Miss Teen U.S.A. during a recent trip to Orlando.

“I’m really grateful,” Matthew said, for the recovery he has had thanks to the support he received from Enfant Soleil.

“They definitely have an impact on families,” he said.

Matthew finishes high school this year, and then intends to study pure and applied sciences at Cégep de Granby next year.

While he has no set schedule, he said he will continue, whenever possible, to volunteer his time to share his story and encourage kids to stay strong and positive in the face of adversity, and continue to help fundraise for Enfant Soleil to help the organization that helped him.

Potton proudly presents a team of youth with babysitting training

THE SCOOP

MABLE HASTINGS

On Saturday, May 20 certified Red Cross instructor Marta Gubert Gomes welcomed thirteen youth who took part in the Canadian Red Cross Babysitting course in Mansonville.

Organized by the Missisquoi North Volunteer Youth Centre’s Sarah Jersey, the training was a big success. The course covered everything from managing difficult behaviours to essential content on leadership and professional conduct as a babysitter. Babysitting deepens and enhances the responsibility that older youth feel when caring for younger children and give the appropriate care in the event of an emergency.

The duration of the 7-8 hour course designed for youth 11 years and up, was held from 8:30am to 4pm at the Mansonville Town Hall and included a visit to the Youth Centre during the lunch break. With six boys and seven girls, the group was diverse and interesting. The cost per youth was $65.00 and included the manual.

“I had a great group today,” shared instructor Marta Gubert Gomes at the end of the day. “The group was impressive and I believe they learned a lot.”

Marta treated the group to a pizza lunch which was a real treat for the kids. The course was bilingual and the material covered was presented in both languages.

The course filled up quickly and a list of participants for another session has already been compiled. The next session will likely take place in November. The youth who took part were all smiles as children will be in good hands as these youth put their skills learned to practice.

EDITORIAL

The abolition of religious school boards in favour of linguistic ones in 2000 provoked the inevitable question of what to do with two aging, antiquated high schools now both managed by the English board.

Overcoming rivalry first step towards new English school

PETER BLACK

Depending on your sensibility, being in a crowd of about 100 loud (but remarkably well-behaved) grade school students can be either a terrifying or edifying experience. What is perhaps even more enlightening is these youngsters were all speaking English, boisterous, French-influenced English.

That was the scene last week at a compact theatre in Quebec City that used to be a synagogue. It's only a block or two away from St. Patrick's High School, whose Senior Drama Profile group staged a spirited production of the popular musical Hairspray.

St. Pat's, you can conclude, does not have a modern auditorium equipped with the facilities to put on a standard theatrical production, so the school has to rent proper space off-campus.

One wonders if the dozens of elementary students watching the wonder of live theatre will take into account such limited educational resources when it comes time for them, and their parents, to decide on which high school to attend once they are ready to move on from Grade Six.

That is the dilemma and challenge facing the Central Quebec School Board as it takes on the mission entrusted to it by a joint committee of parents and alumnae from St. Patrick's and Quebec High School. It's called The Project, which has a certain mysterious air to it, but its goal is unambiguous: Make the English high school experience competitive with the French schools.

The urgency of the situation driven by the steady loss of potential students to the French system, has compelled the two school governing boards to act on what would have been unthinkable a few years ago. The plan is to merge the two schools into one institution housed in a brand new and efficient building, equipped with modern facilities - full size gym, auditorium, adequate parking, synthetic sports field - that are pretty much standard equipment in high schools under the French language boards.

It is one of those oddities of Quebec City that there are two English high schools within a five minute's drive of each other in the central Montcalm district. For outsiders arriving here, the fact there is even one English secondary school in such a homogeneously francophone city comes as a surprise. Two? How can that be? (Three actually, if you include Dollard des Ormeaux School up by the Valcartier military base.)

Of course the answer lies in history and what was once a much larger English-speaking population in the provincial capital, as well as a French-speaking population that was legally entitled to attend English schools. Catholic kids went to English Catholic schools under the French Catholic board; Protestants, Jews and others went to schools under the Greater Quebec School Board.

The abolition of religious school boards in favour of linguistic ones in 2000 provoked the inevitable question of what to do with two aging, antiquated high schools now both managed by the English board, in the face of competition from the French secondary system.

Several years back an idea circulated to rationalize the use of QHS and St. Pat's, by consolidating grades, secondary I and II in one school, for example, and secondary III, IV and V in another. The idea went nowhere, blocked largely by a powerful force not to be taken lightly: rivalry.

There are decades' worth of tradition in the city, probably unlike anywhere in the French system, whereby the Fighting Irish and the Blazers have battled it out over the years in sports and academics. The trophy cases in each school are witness to that rivalry.

Now, though, supporters of a new merged school recognize the time has come to put aside traditional differences, which, quite frankly, are not as intense as years past.

The public discussion has just begun on what could well be a prolonged process. The Quebec government might not be in a hurry to spend millions on a new English school, and schools don't come cheap. The education minister last August announced two new 800-student high schools for the Gatineau region, each of which will cost $36 million.

At least, though, it seems the Irish are no longer fighting and QHS no longer ablaze, as the two schools ponder uniting for a brighter and sustainable future for English language education in Quebec.

Tim Brink making a splash for Waterville water park

By Matthew McCully

Townships singer songwriter Tim Brink and his band mates will cap off a family activity fundraising event this Saturday, organized by the town to help raise money for a water park in Parc Bellevue.

"I just moved to Waterville," Brink said, when asked what his connection was to the town.

"I don't know a lot of people in town. I thought it would be a good way to meet the community," he commented.

"It's a neat little town. I'm impressed by how forward-thinking and green people are here. It's a real community oriented place," he said, happy to lend his musical services to the town on Saturday.

Organized by Loisirs Waterville, the goal of the activity filled day is to try and raise funds to add a water park to Parc Bellevue.

"It's a $95,000 project," Brink said, explaining that around half of the budget has been raised already through grants and other initiatives.

Activities will begin at 2 p.m. with family friendly fun and inflatable games.

The music will begin at around 7 p.m. with opening band Queen St.

Brink said he had been shopping around for an opening band when he happened upon the young group at La Petite Boite Noire in Sherbrooke.

Tim Brink and his band.

"They were really together," Brink said, feeling they would be a great compliment to his music.

Brink and his band will take the stage around 9 p.m.

Tickets are available at the Waterville town hall, Salon Majente in town, or at the door of the event.

Are you working on a kitchen renovation right now? When choosing countertops, many homeowners prefer a solid surface, like marble or granite. But the reality is that these surfaces are mined from deep in the Earth, are very heavy and can come from faraway places, which means large amounts of fuel are used to transport them across the world. If you want a solid surface, consider quartz countertops instead. They are made using one of the most abundant minerals on Earth, have the look and feel of marble or granite and are more durable over time. Quartz countertops are nonporous, never stain and can be cleaned with just soap and water. There is no resealing that has to be done, and dollar-for-dollar, they are usually less expensive than marble and granite.

You're wrong about my life

MAY 23, 2017

Dear Annie

Dear Annie: I have read your advice column off and on for a while and am excited to see you have a Facebook page that you post things to.

I'd like your advice, as I have in-laws who have sent me various columns of yours that feature letters from people whose situations they think mirror my situation. Though I appreciate their wanting to offer your recommendations, their perspective on what my husband and I are facing is rarely accurate. They're almost always off base when it comes to knowing what is really going on. What ends up happening is that I become irritated that they are meddling in our lives, and it causes hurt feelings, as well as more problems between my husband and me. What is your advice to in-laws who want to offer advice, and what is your advice to me on how to handle them and prevent them from interfering in the future? — J.

Dear J.: Unsolicited advice is unheeded at best and offensive at worst. Perhaps you should send them a column about meddlesome in-laws straining a marriage. All kidding aside, of course their not-so-subtle hints are annoying. The phrase "too many cooks" comes to mind. Your husband needs to be the one to intervene by speaking with his parents. He should tell them that this marriage is just between you and him and that it is up to the two of you — and no one else — to find the right recipe.

Dear Annie: This is in response to the recent letter from "Sad Nana With So Much to Be Thankful For." Her husband is dying, and her children are helping with hospice care.

Under Medicare, she may be entitled to the hospice benefit, which entails more than just a weekly hospice nursing visit. She needs help from a home health aide, and she may be able to get one through this benefit. The aide would bathe him, dress him, help him get up or down, make his bed, clean his room, throw in a load of his laundry, etc.

She also may be entitled to a social worker for assistance with other community resources and emotional support for her and her children.

Hospice volunteers can come during certain time windows, so "Sad Nana" would know they are coming and could get out of the house for her own appointments, go for a walk or just take a nap (as she is probably sleep-deprived).

Many families benefit from a hospice chaplain, someone who is used to dealing with the spiritual issues surrounding death and dying, which your own clergy may be uncomfortable discussing.

I am sad to hear that the needs of "Sad Nana" and her family are not being met by hospice. Hospice care is a wonderful benefit that Medicare and most insurance providers offer at the end of life. It supports patients and families. — Retired Hospice Nurse Manager

Dear Retired: I'm printing your letter in case anyone in a similar situation has not considered or looked into the possibility of home hospice care. Thank you, nurse.

Send your questions for Annie Lane to dearannie@creators.com.
