WHO'S WHO

Cat with no tail and journalists with winning tales

By Tadeusz Letarte

"Can't hear with the waters of.
The chittering waters of."

James Joyce

(1) Morning

-Morning, said the cat in her own way.

-Morning, said he in his and let the screen door slam behind her. The cat with no tail paraded down the hall, back feet wide, complaining all the way. He followed.

-June 16th, he told her, is Bloomsday.

-Milk, said the cat.

-June 16th, 1904, he insisted. A Thursday. Day like any other.

-Milk, said the cat.

-Coffee first, said he. Juan Valdez with his mule peering over his shoulder. Mountain grown.

-Milk! said the cat, louder, and he gave in, poured a saucer and set it down. Cat stopped complaining, lapped.

As he watched, he considered the inner organs of beasts and fowl for breakfast - nice sheep kidney with the tang of faintly scented urine - and chose instead a box from the cupboard. Kay-ee double-el owe double good-good. Poured a bowl, added milk.

-Free Inside, said the box. Cornelius Rooster Bicycle Reflector.

-You never know, said he. Bicycle in the next one.

He turned the box sideways and shook it carefully, peering deep. Nothing. Turned it on the other side and shook again. There. In a plastic pouch.

-Collect Cornelius Rooster, said the box, and Tony the Tiger bike reflectors in six exciting colors!

Pea-green. Exciting color for a chicken all right. Beak agape, cockle-doodle-dooing. Hole in its side for a yellow reflector. He slide it into his pocket - you never know, you know - picked up mug and bowl and went out on the porch to breakfast in the sun.

Soft morning. Infernal clamor of birds. Goldfinch on the raspberry canes. Couple grackles picking up a living on the lawn. Smell of new-mown grass and cow manure. Hummingbird among the irises - more bee than bird. Pair of swallows building a nest above the window and arguing over the masonry work. Robin on the electric wire yelling Wilf! Wilf! Wilf!

But Wilf is off in the bushes with another bird and will not be summoned to his urgent duty.

(2) Journey

Changes since 1904, he thought as he backed his car out of the garage. Dear dirty Dublin traded for dear queer Quebec and Leopold Bloom roaring off to sell advertising in a 1986 Toyota Corolla.

-Loving you, said the radio, is the right thing to do, 'cos ah love yew, behby, behby, behby.

Paternal instinct, he thought, is very strong in pop singers. Phenomenon.

Stopped at the post office for his mail. Grocery flyers. Junk mail in its very own garbage bag. Pre-packaged. Free Gifts from gas stations. Win a free trip for two to lovely Chibougamau-by-the-sea! Hydro bill.

-Our bills and envelopes, said the bill, will soon be made of recycled paper. Waste not, want not.

That nice man on the television talking about saying electricity for future generations. Where will they keep all the electricity we save? Mason jars? And if they sell less, won't they have to raise prices to cover their debts? Use less, pay more. Progress.

Letter from Milly;

-Dear Paw, said the letter. Thanks for the money. I've applied for summer jobs but this year the government thinks high school students need the money more than we do. In any case, I won't hear until the end of June. Isn't that crazy? I'll need another month's rent before.

He lay on the couch reading the paper and little Milly clambered up with a book under her arm, turned about and plumped down on his stomach. Ooof! You wanna read me, paw? University now.

Back in traffic. Baby on Board, said the traffic. It lied. Furry dice. What is the sound of one hand waving? Watch Out! I Drive Like You Do! Garfield stuck to a window. Did I leave the cat out? L.O. Cass & Son. Paddy Dignam beastly dead.

(3) Underworld

-No Checks. No Credit, said the sign on the door of the ice-maker.

-Evening, said he. I'll have a draft.

The Muskrat, Moose, Mechanical Brown talking of trucks at a table. The Undertaker alone in the corner saying his prayers over a quart of Blue. Molly at the jukebox wagging her tail for attention. Molly?

-Thar's a tear in mah beer, said the jukebox, 'cos ah'm cryin' for you, dear..

Hurtin' song. He dropped a couple loonies on the bar, picked up his frosted mug and walked over to sit opposite The Undertaker.

-June 16th, he said, is Bloomsday.

-What?

-Bloomsday.

-That some sort of florists' festival?

-No, he said. Leopold Bloom. Ulysses.

-I what?

-Ulysses. Joyce's masterpiece.

-Who's she when she's at home?

He got up and carried his mug back to the bar, sat by himself. Roy Orbison. Only the lonely. He felt something in his pocket, took it out and laid it on the bar.

-The best to you each morning, he said to himself. You don't even have a bicycle. Just a pea-green chicken and a cat with no tail.

-Will you have another draft, sir? said the bartender.

-Yes, said he and his heart was going like mad and yes he said yes I will Yes.

Townships journalists were recognized as some of the tops in the province at the annual meeting of the Association of Quebec English Regional Medias. At the meeting held at Bishops' University, the organization of Quebec community newspapers changed its name to the Quebec Community Newspaper Association.

Top winner this year, as usual, was the Stanstead Journal which walked away with seven awards including three top prizes. Former editor Peter Scowen received the award for best editorial, John Mahoney got the top column award and Malcolm Stone got the prize for best photo feature.

The Record walked away with two awards and four certificates of appreciation to longtime contributors.

Record photographer Grant Simeon received an honorable mention for a photo of the president of Hyundai getting conked on the head by the roof of a car during a press conference on the opening of the new sheet metal section at the Bromont plant.

Departed Record Townships Week editor Avril Benoit also received an honorable mention for a feature she wrote on Township's president Myrna McAuley in which she reveals McAuley's penchant for all things British, including a Union Jack bikini.

Longtime Record contributors John McCaghey, Réal Hébert, Gil Smith and Bernard Epps were also awarded for their regular contributions as correspondents to the paper.

Congratulations to all the winners - you deserve it.

Charles Bury, the distinguished editor of the Record, moderated the weekend's main symposium entitled "Quebec Canada: Where will we be in 2041."

When Charles agreed to be the moderator, he talked about setting the correct tone for it. He felt there were more important issues we should be discussing and felt the tone of the symposium should be light.

"In fact if I could I would wear a pair of pink leotards to the thing if I could get them in my size," he is quoted as saying.

Well, AQREM past president Sharon McCully, known to Record readers as that woman from Knowlton, and AQREM convention co-ordinator Lydia Rice set out to find a pair of leotards and another convention worker sewed up a pink tulle tutu to finish off the ensemble.

Ever the affable editor, Bury modelled the ensemble for the convention.

The best quote of the weekend symposium came from a delegate from a British Columbia.

"The only thing more boring than listening to a bunch of politicians pontificating about the Constitution is listening to a bunch of newspaper editors pontificate about politicians pontificating about the Constitution," said Jerry MacDonald, publisher for the Quesnel Cariboo Observer, in Quesnel B.C.

It was no surprise that the symposium didn't resolve the issue.

Ever wondered what happens at a journalists' convention? Charles Bury kept the mood light by modelling his new pink leotards and tutu to AQREM conventioners.

LOCAL NEWS

Singer Dave Lapp performs tonight at Blaz Bar

"I want to be touched by music as much as I want (my music) to touch people," Lapp says.

By Catherine Cheng

LENNOXVILLE — Local singer-songwriter and acoustic-guitar player Dave Lapp recalls a magic moment in his life:

"I had had three encores, I was soaking wet and feeling good. I turned the PA system off and played a folk song — without the sound system — and I walked out of the bar, down the sidewalk, and left (the audience) singing."

This wasn't the only magic moment Lapp has experienced during his artistic career.

He doesn't remember where or when he first experienced this magic. After all, he's been performing for 17 years.

Lapp, who is married and has a four-year-old daughter, is a sensitive musician who likes to evoke his audience's emotions and leave them reflecting about what he has said. The night he picked up and left the Quebec City bar, Lapp must have felt he accomplished what he sets out to do in his performances.

DISTINCTIVE STYLE

His style is unique around here, he said.

"I'm a guitarist. I use different styles of music and a personal sense of rhythm — I accent the rhythm in various ways. I can't add percussion without taking something away," he explains.

Lapp used his distinctive style in producing his latest tape, called Live — which is his second.

"My new tape takes advantage of a live show I performed at the Blaz Bar in Sherbrooke in March."

He basically wanted to see if it would be good enough to listen to afterwards.

"I wanted to capture the way I was playing," he said.

Although both his tapes are considered to be "classical contemporary," his first, Night Life, was "a commercial venture - to make (his) music pop - and hit the radio stations."

Dave Lapp is a singer who carries no distinctive label. His music is harmless, he said. He borrowed styles from Bruce Coburn and John Renbourn's music, which he includes in his repertoire.

"I listen to all types of music all the time," Lapp said. He doesn't particularly look to imitate other artists but he draws from the music he hears to form his own sound.

"I want to be touched by music as much as I want (my music) to touch people."

He plays many instrumental songs but when he sings, his recurring theme revolves around dreams: "people's dreams, what they dream about, how they're going to realize them."

Although his songs may sound sad at first, Lapp said that they would like to find a percussionist and a bass player.

He wants to please his audience by making them feel good. He now enjoys performing "one or two nights in a venue that's set up just for the music."

LOW PERIODS AND HARD WORK

Like every artist, Lapp has his occasional low moments. They can occur as often as once a week.

"When I can't find anything I think is of value to write about, or when I'm not playing well. I usually try to find out why. It's painful because I can't just stop playing."

The thing to do to escape as many lows as possible, is "to play all the time and maintain a certain standard," he said.

Lapp works hard. During the last three weeks, while touring in Gaspé, he worked 10 hours a day. He'd write for six straight hours in his hotel room, without eating. When inspired by a melody, he would sing it into his tape deck.

At nine in the evening, he'd head for the club and perform.

As a rule, he tries not to spend more than three weeks on a tour, so that he can spend time with his daughter and his wife, who is a professor at Sherbrooke University and Champlain Regional College.

"I wouldn't live another way. It's right for me."

"The magic is to be able to say things and create imagery just on day-to-day things in a way that no one else can."

"have a positive tag."

'EVERYONE WILL MAKE IT'

"The songs say someone's got it (freedom or love), or everyone will have a chance, and that eventually everyone will make it."

"I try to deal with situations that everyone has already experienced or situations that they can understand. I want them to be able to see it, spark their memory if they've lived it, or wish they were there," he explains. "The stories are interesting and easy to remember."

"The magic is to be able to say things and create imagery just on day-to-day things in a way that no one else can."

Lapp prefers to perform solo, as opposed to playing with a band, because it's more challenging.

"It's stimulating to play with other musicians. All songs can become better with a good band. However, playing solo is another situation. The melody is easy to find, the lyrics are right there. It's more challenging because it leaves no room for any air. It's right out there. Every minute counts. And financially, playing solo insures a lifestyle."

Even so, Lapp said he'd like to work in a trio to produce his next record and perform during festivals. He said bands are sometimes hired more easily than soloists. He Lapp comes from a musical family. He was born and raised in Montreal. His parents both played the violin in the Montreal Symphony Orchestra. They encouraged Lapp, his brother and sister to play instruments, but never thought they would all become professional musicians. Brother Jimmy is a jazz pianist in Montreal and sister Susan is a flute player and a song writer.

"Music was part of my cultural background but it was never my parents' aim to make it our profession," Lapp said. "It was a hobby, a social thing," as it was for his parents.

But Lapp made music his life. He has been performing for the past five years, averaging four nights a week during a year.

In the last year, he toured Quebec City (his main audience), Montreal, the Magdalen Islands, Rimouski, St. Jean-Port-Joli, Ottawa, and St. Pierre and Miquelon Islands off the coast of Newfoundland, just to name a few.

He just came back from a three-week tour of Gaspé and will be performing at the Blaz Bar in Sherbrooke the June 14-15-16. He will also be performing the 19th of July at Point Massé in Magog, during La traversée internationale du Lac Méphremagog.

Actress McGraw recounts alcoholism

By Bob Thomas

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Ali MacGraw came to the sudden realization that she was an alcoholic at the Betty Ford Centre 4½ years ago.

"I remember sitting there in my perfect outfit saying 'I really don't know why I'm here. I don't think I'm an alcoholic because I don't drink all the time.'"

A counsellor at the centre told her that many alcoholics are not constant guzzlers.

"I would look absolutely, evidently perfect, the woman who was pulled together, in control, behaving like a lady," says MacGraw. "Then I would go home at 11 o'clock at night and drink by myself. I did it because I had been putting on a performance 24 hours a day. It was much better than anything I ever did on film."

The actress' self-revelation is the subject of her autobiography, Moving Pictures, which jumped on to the best-seller list shortly after publication.

She writes with surprising candor, but without the shock value that has marked recent film memoirs.

ACCEPTS CRITICS

In an interview MacGraw was equally frank. She was even conciliatory toward the critics.

"The last time I saw Candice Bergen, I thought she was a worse actress than MacGraw," Pauline Kael wrote in her review of The Getaway, in which MacGraw starred. "Now I think that I slandered Bergen."

After making a comeback in the TV miniseries The Winds of War, MacGraw read a review that termed hers "the only really bad performance."

"It comes with the territory," she philosophized about bad reviews. "I'm not being a Pollyanna about this, but there's certain stuff that comes with the fact that I'm a celebrity."

From the time she soared into view in Goodbye, Columbus, MacGraw seemed to have had a perfect life. She had grown up in Bedford Village, N.Y., the daughter of gifted parents, both commercial artists. She won a scholarship to Wellesley, worked on fashion magazines before becoming a model and then an actress.

MARRIED BOSS

She won an Academy nomination as best actress in Love Story, the highest grossing film of its time, married her studio's boss, Robert Evans, and had a son, Joshua. That marriage broke up when she fell in love with her Getaway co-star, Steve McQueen, then the screen's hottest property.

But her early life was not as idyllic as it seemed.

There was never much money in the MacGraw household, and her father was an alcoholic at a time when little treatment was available.

"He dealt with it by just stopping drinking," she said. "One day when my mother was pregnant with me, he stopped. He was always referred to in our house as 'was an alcoholic.' Now we know that it is an illness that has a daily reprieve."

Even though Steve McQueen was himself an alcoholic and drug user, as well as womanizer, the actress writes kindly of him.

"I also loved Steve. . . . But we didn't do the homework on each other. . . . I got up and said 'Good morning,' and he said, 'What do you mean by that?' It was really tempestuous, passionate, angry, vulnerable, frail. It was everything 24 hours a day, in a typical alcoholic family, until you never knew what the mood of the moment was."

NEVER IN PUBLIC

Her own alcoholism continued long after she divorced McQueen.

"I am the sort of alcoholic who can do a perfect performance in front of everybody — the public. Even my ex-husband and my closest friends had no idea that there was another life going on. I didn't do it in public because I was too image-concerned."

Still a stunner at 52, she is philosophical about her acting career — "if it happens, it happens." Meanwhile, she is savoring the success of Moving Pictures and continuing her process of self-revelation.

"Having the book succeed has given me the strength to put all that bad stuff where it belongs. Which is in a little spot somewhere, instead of having it the centre of my life."

Moving Pictures, by Ali MacGraw. Published by Bantam Books; pages: 228 ($25).

Francis and Perron learn about human beings and life

By Catherine Cheng

NORTH HATLEY — Montreal-born David Francis at 49, and Richmond-born Michel Perron at 31, both lead enjoyable, unpredictable, flexible and fascinating lives of professional actors.

They've decided to sacrifice security for opportunity.

And they're happy!

Francis has been living this way for 32 years, and Perron seven. "Monotony kills me... It's important not to fall into set patterns every day, to be an automatic pilot. (In acting), what you say has to be fresh every day. That's where the challenge is," Perron says.

The two have performed together three times with Geordie Productions in Montreal, a children's theatre company which has toured the Eastern Townships. Starting next week they will merge their talents once again, this time in Perils of Persephone at The Piggy theatre.

LEARN ABOUT LIFE

Both enjoy being on stage and making audiences laugh. "I like being able to provoke. It's a good feeling — a feeling I can't find anywhere else," says Francis.

Perron has enjoyed playing humorous roles, and still does because he "can make people forget their problems." Lately he has acquired a taste for tragic roles because "it makes people think about certain things."

Francis says that if you can "look at serious things through humor spectacles, then the problems won't drive you insane."

Both enjoy playing different characters because by doing so, they learn about human beings and about life.

"I enjoy becoming somebody else. I like to be thrown into an arena with people I don't know and create something. Through the process, friendships are created. It's a perpetual learning experience — to get into a character that reacts differently than you do. As a result, I learn about life that way. I pick up a lot about people," Perron says.

"Playing various characters shows you not to get too stuck in one particular self-image — not to a beer can got stuck in it during his McGill years!

Meanwhile, at Westmount High School, he acted and sang in Gilbert and Sullivan productions, "a big thing — half the school participated."

He also played the cymbals and the trombone while studying English and languages at McGill.

In 1959, Francis was hired as an apprentice actor at the North Hatley Playhouse, where he first worked with professional actors.

He paid his way through acting school in England after he completed his BA in Montreal. He stayed in England for the next 18 years

Perron, too, started to explore his artistic talents early in his life, but took a different route. It was during the 10 years he spent at a French Presbyterian Biblical two-week summer camp that he discovered he liked to act. During the evenings he and his peers had to prepare skits. Before long acting had become a passion which "carried through to school."

He acted in the Christmas pageant at his South Shore Montreal elementary school. He took drama classes for three years at his Greenfield Park high school. Perron also sang tenor. After graduation he moved to Richmond for a said as long as I enjoyed what I was doing, then things were okay," he says. His younger brother is a professional actor in Toronto.

Both Francis and Perron have worked in many theatre and movie productions but have no preference despite the different medias. They find it different, but equally challenging.

"It's not a great century for theatre because its function is overlooked, but it's still a powerful medium because it can do things that other mediums can't do. For instance in Czechoslovakia, where restrictions are applied to people, theatre becomes an important means of communication because actors can say things to an audience they can't say in person," Francis explains.

They have their low moments too, and "learn to get over it," Perron says. "There are ups and down, and that's what makes life interesting. It keeps you on your toes."

For the moment Perron is not selective in the type of roles he plays. "I just do what I do the best way I can. As long as I have a foot in theatre, I'm happy."

As for Francis, he'd like to save up some money to travel more. He's been across Europe, to the Himalayas, to Nepal twice and came back from his fourth excursion to India last fall.

"I enjoy the pace of that country, how it looks, and the food." Since he's taken up photography as a hobby, he can take advantage of it while travelling.

His next destination? Tibet.

"Playing various characters shows you not to get too stuck in one particular self-image — not to get attached to personality. I like to find out why people do what they do and find out how they explain themselves. It teaches you about the conditions of being human — a broadening experience," Francis says.

get attached to personality. I like to find out why people do what they do and find out how they explain themselves. It teaches you about the conditions of being human — a broadening experience," Francis says.

EARLY START

Francis discovered his love for acting and music at a young age. His mother played the piano and his brother played keyboards and the organ.

He was a soprano in several choirs during his childhood. He also played tuba for 10 years — until and worked as a full-time actor, a CBC freelance writer and a broadcaster for Swedish and Danish radio stations.

"Staying in London was exhilarating — the sense of being a part of a very large theatre community."

He spent time travelling around Europe and speaks French and German fluently, and some Italian and Czech. Although he says he's as happy acting there as he is here, Francis said he came back to Canada because his relatives are here.

year-and-a-half, as he puts it, "looking for myself".

It was then that he experienced the drudgery of routine life. He dreaded all his nine-to-five jobs so much he decided to go back to school.

So Perron signed up for the theatre program at Dawson College in Montreal because he "felt he needed some formal training."

Unlike Francis' parents who, at first, didn't approve of his career choice, Perron's parents approved of his.

"They always supported me and

Music Competition declines to award a first prize

By Maxine Ruvinsky

MONTREAL (CP) — Great talent but no transcendent magic: that was the judgment call as world-renowned jury members at the 22nd Montreal International Music Competition declined to award a first prize in the prestigious event.

"First prize is an absolute standard," Irving Heller, artistic director for the competition, said Wednesday night. "It's not just the best in the competition — it's got to transcend the competition."

Heller said the Montreal competition — devoted this year to violin — set an international trend about 20 years ago.

"Most of the other competitions wanted a first prize at any cost, they felt it was a failure not to have a first."

"We applied standards more rigorously, and others followed our lead."

A tinge of sadness, however, accompanied the upholding of standards.

FEEL SADNESS

"We're all sort of sad it worked out that way," said Raphael Hillyer, one of the competition's eight jury members, after the event's concluding gala concert Wednesday night.

Hillyer, co-founder of the famed Juilliard String Quartet and eminence grise in the world of classical music, said awarding first prize in the high-calibre event — which is devoted to piano, violin and voice in successive years — is unpredictable, a matter "bordering on the tangible."

"It's a special feel that you're in the presence of something wonderful, something unique."

Still, Hillyer lavished praise on the three top prize winners, as on the entire array of talent at the three rounds of the competition, which began May 22.

"We still feel great admiration for them," Hillyer said of the 42 contenders from a dozen countries. They showed "great talent and great potential."

The proof was in Wednesday's gala, when the three top prize winners — second-prize winner Hiroko Suzuki of Japan, and the two third-prize winners, Kyung-Sun Lee of South Korea and Canada's only finalist Martin Beaver — performed as soloists with the Montreal Symphony Orchestra conducted by Franz-Paul Decker.

SPECIAL WORK

The performances began with 26-year-old Kyung-Sun Lee — the undeclared darling of the competition — as soloist in Alexina Louie's searing Thunder Gate, an unpublished work commissioned especially for the competition.

The musicians had one month to learn the score of Thunder Gate, which Louie herself called "very difficult — but not impossible."

Lee, in addition to sharing third place with Beaver, won both the $700 prize for best interpretation of Thunder Gate and the newly created Prix du Public, chosen by the public through ballot and also worth $700.

Lee also performed the first movement of Jean Sibelius's Concerto in D Minor.

Beaver — who in addition to placing third, won the $700 Prix Mozart, offered to commemorate the bicentennial of the composer's death — followed with the second and third movements of Brahms's Concerto in D Major.

Beaver, 23, who was born in Winnipeg and now lives in Toronto, said he was "a little tired but happy to have done well for Canada." He follows a path blazed by pianist Angela Cheng, who became the first Canadian to win the $15,000 top prize at the competition in 1988.

Japan's Hiroko Suzuki, who won the $10,000 second prize, ended the evening with a forceful and poignant rendering of the entire Sibelius concerto.

Maureen O'Hara returns to the screen after 20 years

By Bob Thomas

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Maureen O'Hara returns to the screen for the first time in 20 years in Only the Lonely, and the Irish-born actress is meaner than ever as John Candy's bigoted, domineering mother.

Still very much in possession of the luminous beauty that earned her the title "Technicolor Queen" a half-century ago, the fiery 70-year-old actress says she felt at home in the role.

"I think I've always been strong and bossy in almost every movie."

She has appeared in 56 films and "enjoyed 52 or 53 of them — not a bad record." She was never less than a star, from the very beginning opposite Charles Laughton in Jamaica Inn, directed by Alfred Hitchcock.

In Only the Lonely, her character tries to sink her son's romance with a mortuary makeup artist played by Ally Sheedy, and insults an amorous Greek neighbor, Anthony Quinn.

Born Maureen FitzSimons near Dublin in 1920, the second of six children, she was acting on radio at 12, studied at the Abbey Theatre at 14 and graduated from the London College of Music.

Laughton brought her to Hollywood to star with him in The Hunchback of Notre Dame, and she became a major star with How Green Was My Valley.

ACTION PACKED

Her flawless complexion and flame-colored hair proved ideal for color swashbucklers with Tyrone Power, Errol Flynn and Douglas Fairbanks Jr., and Westerns with Joel McCrea and John Wayne — her favorite, six-time co-star.

She is best known to today's generation for the Christmas movie Miracle on 34th Street.

After Big Jake with Wayne in 1971, O'Hara quit films.

"For love," she explains. "I married Charlie Blair, one of the great pioneering aviators of the world. He was senior pilot of Pan Am for 30 years. He was a general in the air force, and he had a very wonderful, glamorous, exciting, adventurous life. So I just became part of his life and lived the adventures that I had acted."

"It was wonderful. I travelled all over the world with him and had an absolutely marvelous and glorious life. Who wouldn't quit the movies for that?"

In 1978 his amphibious plane exploded and crashed into the ocean near St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands, killing Blair and three passengers on the small airline the couple operated.

MUCH TO DO

O'Hara, who still makes her home on St. Croix, describes her life now:

"I go to Ireland for the summer, spend the whole summer there. I have a big golf tournament that I sponsor: it's called the Charles F. Blair Classic, and the Maureen O'Hara Blair Golf Classic."

"I work with a lot of charitable organizations. I'm on the board of Co-operation Ireland. I spend the winters in the Caribbean. In between that, I fly to New York. I come out to Los Angeles. I'm pretty busy, though not in the theatrical world. I had a magazine that I published, but I sold that. And I sold the airline. So at the moment, I'm footloose and fancy free."

That was her condition when Chris Columbus, who wrote and directed the phenomenally successful Home Alone, approached her with his script for Only the Lonely.

Will there be more films for O'Hara? Only if she likes the role and the people involved — "if that should happen, fine; if it doesn't, fine."

She admits that she doesn't see many films. "I see them on airplanes," she added. "The films are censored on airlines, so I don't hear the bad language."

"Wasn't it nicer when (sex and swearing) were left to our imagination? I think so. I don't want to see what other people want me to see. I want to see what I dream about or believe. I think everybody feels the same way."

MUSIC

The real pop singer Rick Astley finally stands up

By Sunil Mahtani

When pop singer Rick Astley was a freckle-faced sixteen-year-old, he was as restless as any teenager can be.

He formed a music group with his friends, drove a van for his father's garden centre, collected bottles and even made a Level 42 album cover out of clay when he went through his pottery phase.

The English crooner did become a music megastar in the late eighties with such worldwide hits as "Never Gonna Give You Up", "Together Forever" and "She Wants to Dance With Me", and recently released his third disc, featuring songwriting collaborations with King, the piano stylings of Elton John and the lush string arrangements of Art of Noise's Ann Dudley.

Astley triumphantly proclaims his freedom on the cover of his latest release. He called the album Free — his first to be recorded without the men who discovered and nurtured him — and, arguably, who took control over his professional life — British producers Mike Stock, Matt Aitken and Pete Waterman (S/A/W).

In a telephone interview, the 25-year-old singer says he acknowledges the lift that S/A/W gave to his career, but says they've changed.

"When I first met them, they were very huge, creative, that sort of thing," Astley explains, "whereas now, they've found a formula and they just stick to it, you know, which I don't particularly want to do in my career. I want to be able to take on different kinds of music and different approaches and things."

Without the powerful producers standing in his way, Astley says "free" is exactly how he feels. "I'm free to choose the songs I want to sing, how I want to have them produced, everything," he says gleefully. "So many avenues have opened up."

Astley involved himself in every conceivable creative aspect of the Free project — from writing and producing to choosing musicians and sleeve design.

To fully understand how this drastic change came about, one must go back to the beginning of his career and the origins of the Rick Astley phenomenon.

SANG IN CHURCH CHOIR

Richard Paul Astley grew up in a small town called Newton-Le-Willows. The youngest of four children, he began his musical career by singing in the local church choir, then progressing through piano lessons to an interest in drums.

He drummed in a group called Give Way before turning to singing with FBI, the first serious band he formed with friends in Manchester, England. They played covers of songs from such groups as the Beatles and Big Country. It was during this time that he began writing his own songs. (One of Astley's early efforts, "The Bottom Line", appears on Free.)

One fateful night the band was spotted at a club by producer Pete Waterman, who didn't like the band, but was wowed by Astley's distinctive voice. A few months later, Waterman signed Astley to his record company.

For over a year, Astley worked at S/A/W's base of operations, PWL Studios, as the "tea boy" and a technician. Quiet and unassuming, he watched, listened and learned. The big producers adopted him into their "family" and soon began recording with him, molding Astley into their style. The S/A/W formula had worked wonders for Samantha Fox, Bananarama, Kylie Minogue, Jason Donovan and scores of other young artists. Astley was put through the same musical motions.

S/A/W wrote a song especially for Astley and, in July, 1987, "Never Gonna Give You Up" burst onto the airwaves and dancefloors. The infectious single shot to #1 on the British charts, where it stayed for five weeks, becoming the top selling single in the U.K. for the year. The debut album that followed, Whenever You Need Somebody, sold a million units in the U.K. alone.

#1 IN 15 COUNTRIES

His success did not stop on that side of the Atlantic. Astley-mania swept the charts worldwide. His debut single hit #1 in fifteen other countries, including Canada, and the album spawned more hits, including "Whenever You Need Somebody", "Together Forever" and "It Would Take a Strong Strong Man". It sold over 400,000 copies here and almost 2 million in the United States. Astley toured the Far East and Australia and sang for Prince Charles and Lady Di.

Although he remains proud of the work he accomplished with S/A/W, Astley was not allowed any creative input, a fact he began to resent. All the hits that propelled him to stardom were written by his famous producers. Four of Astley's compositions were on the album, but none were released as singles.

By the time his second album, Hold Me In Your Arms, hit the streets in January, 1989, Astley was already moving away from the "factory-style" production team. S/A/W wrote and produced just three songs on the disc, while Astley himself wrote and co-produced most of its songs and released only those singles in North America. "She Wants to Dance With Me" hit #1, "Giving Up On Love" entered the Top 5 and the beautiful title ballad became a romantic favorite. He was only beginning to taste the pleasures of creative freedom.

After Astley's world tour in support of Hold Me In Your Arms, his first-ever global concert trek that saw him perform over seventy shows in fifteen countries, he ended his professional relationship with S/A/W and decided to follow his own vision.

"They did me a lot of good," he reflects, "but I think I've got enough to offer in my own right to carry on and do things the way that I want to do it."

MOODY, ROMANTIC

The result is an album that might come as a surprise to his fans. From the words and music to the sleeve design, Free is moody and romantic and much more interesting than his first two discs. Astley's own style proves to be less danceable than his former producer's, though it is still definitely pop, and the songs are more mid-tempo and tinted with Latin percussion. On the whole, Free shines with the care and craftsmanship that was put on it.

Astley, who is mounting a tour this summer, says it was time for a change. "I was 21 when I released Never Gonna Give You Up," he says, "and (now) I'm 25. Time has passed. People are expecting something different. Whether people are expecting something this different I don't know."

Free was co-produced by Astley and Gary Stevenson. The first single, the soulful "Cry For Help", was co-written by Astley and Rob Fisher, of Climie Fisher.

It is an album that Astley truly believes in. "People think 'He's quiet and shy and isn't he a nice-fella'?' I'm like that in some ways but in some aspects I'm very different," says the singer. "Maybe people don't see how possessed I am with my career because I'm so mild-mannered. The true Rick Astley, the real Rick Astley, I don't think many people have seen yet."

Moody, romantic, soulful and fun. With Free, the real Rick Astley has finally stood up.

Rick Astley ... before.

TRAVEL

Try to be an environmentally friendly traveller

By Felicity Munn

CP Travel Writer

Concern about the environment has been growing in the travel industry, as elsewhere.

The main business at the recent annual conference of the Pacific Asia Travel Association, for example, was to approve resolutions calling for conservation of the region's natural, social and cultural resources.

More and more countries, including Canada, are promoting themselves as "green" destinations.

North American hotel companies are getting in on the act too. Canada's biggest chain, Canadian Pacific Hotels and Resorts, and the big U.S. chain, Hyatt Hotels and Resorts, are the latest to introduce major environmental programs.

That means they'll be recycling, conserving energy, buying only recyclable products and so on.

But while ecotourism, sustainable development and ethical travel have become the new industry buzzwords, it seems individual travellers could do more to help preserve the environment.

International ReCycleCo, a consulting firm hired by Hyatt to study waste management at its hotels, found that most items brought to hotels by guests are not recyclable.

They include disposable razors, shaving cream cans and plastic bags from purchases.

Yet "environmentally friendly travel" is relatively easy, says John Allegretti, senior analyst for International ReCycleCo.

"It takes a little longer to plan, to purchase products and to think about the decisions made while travelling but it's worth the time."

WHAT TO DO

Here are some suggestions from the Hyatt-ReCycleCo research and from environmental guidelines for travellers issued last year by the American Society of Travel Agents.

- Try to travel with products that can be recycled. Anything in glass, aluminum, paper or cardboard can potentially be recycled.

- Find out ahead of time from the local tourist board or visitors' bureau about recycling facilities and drop-off centres. If there are no recycling facilities in the area, try within reason to save recyclable trash, including cans and bottles, until you return home.

- Do not buy or travel with disposable products like razors, which add to landfill. Take the time to pack reusable products.

- Buy small or sample-size products for travel. Keep the containers, refill them with your own toiletries and use them on future trips.

- To cut down on the number of plastic bags, pack a canvas tote or other type of bag to carry purchases made while travelling.

- Have a car tuneup done before long road trips. Tuned-up cars use less gas and discharge fewer fumes into the environment. Similarly, make sure the tires have the right amount of air. A car with correct tire pressure will roll more efficiently and use less fuel.

- When renting a car, choose a model with a record for good gas mileage.

- Within reason, avoid using the car's air conditioner, since operating it requires more gas.

- Pack beverages for a long car trip in a Thermos or reusable containers. Likewise, pack snacks in reusable containers.

- When travelling with kids, play a game called Adopt a Highway. Ask them to be on the lookout for trash at rest stops. Award a small prize to the child who collects the most paper.

- Take children to places that promote recycling or environmental awareness, like zoos, nature trails and parks.

- Always follow designated trails. Do not disturb animals, plants or their natural habitats.

- Whenever possible, use public transportation for such things as getting to the airport.

- Don't use disposable cameras. Save and recycle film containers.

- Choose hotels, resorts, airlines and cruise lines that have recycling programs. More and more do these days.

"Respect the frailty of the Earth," conclude the guidelines from the American Society of Travel Agents. "Realize that unless all are willing to help in its preservation, unique and beautiful destinations may not be here for future generations to enjoy."

Australia cracks down on tourist medical cheats

By Dennis Passa

SYDNEY, Australia (CP) — Travellers to Australia who have taken advantage of the government's lenient attitude on tourists' medical care will find a much tougher situation on their next visit Down Under.

The government of New South Wales, the country's most visited state, has announced foreign travellers now must pay up front for out-patient treatment at public hospitals.

In the past, many doctors and clinics have provided services free of charge to tourists who didn't buy travellers' medical insurance before arriving in the country. Medicare cards carried by all Australian citizens or residents were never requested.

Even public hospital emergency wards were lenient, providing free coverage for genuine emergency care.

But some bad examples spoiled the system.

One man, on a tourist visa to visit friends in New South Wales, left Australia owing $20,000 (about $18,000 Cdn) after having a cancerous growth removed from his arm.

"The man's family refused to pay the bill, even though they were financially secure," said state Health Minister Peter Collins.

He said many travellers have been using hospital emergency wards as a backdoor method of being admitted to public hospitals for expensive treatment.

Collins said from now on, overseas visitors will be charged for out-patient services. And they will be required to pay before they receive treatment.

"The fact is these people are not eligible for medicare services," said Collins. "It has proved very difficult in many cases to recover the costs associated with their stay in hospital. As a result, many hospitals have reported high levels of bad debts."

He said the tougher rules may discourage overseas visitors from going to hospitals for minor ailments.

Overseas visitors will be charged for out-patient services in Australia.

Singapore plans to be an 'Electronic Island'

By Reginald Chua

SINGAPORE (Reuter) — Singapore is striving to become a push-button city.

From cashless shopping to electronic paperwork and even a computerized pig auction, Singapore is plugging its 2.6 million people into electronic grids linking the entire island nation.

In less than a decade, it plans to build computerized electronic pathways to enable people to shop, book theatre tickets, check information, and to allow companies to send documents.

Already a number of electronic networks are in place and running successfully.

The Network for Electronic Transfers, a cashless shopping system, has been operating for five years and is now used by more than a third of the population and 1,500 stores.

Under the system, consumers have the cost of their purchases automatically deducted from their bank accounts.

"Certainly there was resistance at first. There was a lot of resistance, primarily from the retailers," said the network's general manager, Patrick Yi. "We now have a critical mass of consumers and retailers."

In the next five years, the network plans to expand to 6,000 outlets and boost transactions from about $300 million last year to $1 billion in 1995.

'BIG BROTHER' FEARS

Plans also include an "electronic purse," which could replace several electronic cards being used at the moment.

There are also other electronic networks — for air cargo (StarNet), medical claims (MediNet), and company registry (LawNet).

Singapore's small size and highly centralized bureaucracy has made it relatively simple to establish the groundwork for the electronic society.

All citizens carry a numbered identification card, allowing information about them to be cross-indexed between ministries and government bodies.

Not all Singaporeans are thrilled at the prospect of life in this version of a brave new world with an electronic Big Brother keeping tabs on them.

Some were unhappy to find that census takers calling at their homes already had detailed information about them printed on the census forms.

"It seems like they know more about me than I do," one woman said.

The advantages of being plugged in, however, have become obvious to many.

"The purpose ... is to turn Singapore into an intelligent island in which IT (information technology) will be fully exploited to improve business competitiveness and, more importantly, to enhance the quality of life," said Tay Eng Soon, minister of state for Education.

'SMART TOWN'

A new master plan, IT 2000, will be unveiled at the end of the year, Tay said. Parts are already in place.

TradeNet — which allows companies to submit documents electronically to the state Trade Development Board — now accounts for 90 per cent of all trade documentation, a TDB official said.

"We're going to phase out the remaining 10 per cent by the end of the year," she said.

"Up-to-date knowledge and information become of utmost importance when a country or company seeks to be competitive in the international arena," Minister of Communications Yeo Ning Hong said at the launch of a teletext system, Teleview.

The next futuristic concept is Smart Town, which envisions a national electronic grid to which households would be linked.

"The idea here is to build into the town a whole range of IT services," Tay said. "People who live and work in such a town will have maximum and convenient access to many services."

Even the local pig market has entered the microchip age. Wholesalers at the Hog Auction Market, or HAM, bid silently for swine on an electronic system which deducts winning bids from traders' deposits.

Only the odor remains.

Fathers are... special, because they're so different than mothers.

They tend to be labelled as breadwinners, supporters of the family, pals, or the "authoritative one". They tend to be looser with kids and more aloof within a family. I still haven't figured out why men are the way they are. All I know is that my biological father was not as present in my life as I would've liked him to be.

Perhaps that's the reason why I turned to a Spiritual Father at a very young age. He, I know, has and will provide for all my needs.

Maybe you, too, keep a certain distance with your own father and refuse to become closer to him. However, it's never too late to show him that you do care for him. A friend once told me "I love my father but I don't like him." Is that the way you feel? Remember that before we can be healed from any pain, we need to forgive.

Happy Fathers' Day to all daddies!

The Concerts at Place de la Cité has a mascot this year, but she doesn't have a name yet. Organizers are counting on concert goers to give her a name. The mascot will be on hand at all of the free concerts which take place at lunchtime every Wednesday, Thursday and Friday till the end of August at Place de la Cité, behind the Sherbrooke Courthouse. There will also be a series of evening concerts Wednesday night at the same location. The nameless-for-now mascot will also be handing out free t-shirts at some of the concerts and touring various activities and festivals about town promoting the free concerts. The popular concert series, which is in its fourth year, is sponsored by the City of Sherbrooke and the accounting firm of Raymond, Chabot, Martin, Paré. For details on this week's concerts see MUSIC.

TV DIALOGUE

BY TONI REINHOLD

KURT REPLY - Was Kurt Russell a regular on "Wagon Train"? I seem to recall that he worked in a Western years ago, but I'm not sure which one. - L.P., Hoquiam, Wash.

Kurt Russell in "The Quest"

Russell was not a regular on "Wagon Train," but he did star in two Westerns, "The Travels of Jaimie McPheeters" (1963-64) and "The Quest" (1976), as well as the adventure series "The New Land" (1974).

VISIONS OF JOANNA - In what TV series did Joanna Kerns star prior to her role in "Growing Pains"? - R.D., Madison, Maine

Kerns' only previous series was "The Four Seasons," which aired in 1984.

CASBAH CAPER - What is the name of the movie that came out in 1950 and starred Peter Lorre and Marta Toren? I believe that in it a man committed a murder and escaped to the Casbah. - B.J.T., Lethonia, Ga.

And "Casbah" is, in fact, the name of this film. Released in 1948, it also starred Yvonne de Carlo and Tony Martin. It was a musical remake of "Algiers" (1938) and featured tunes by Harold Arlen and Leo Robin.

'STONEY' LOOK - Jack Lord was in a weekly Western before "Hawaii Five-O." What was the name of it? Where does Lord live now? - M.B., Buffalo, N.Y.

Jack Lord starred as a modern-day rodeo rider in the 1962-63 series "Stoney Burke." He currently lives in Hawaii.

CAMPBELL'S BIRTHDAYS - What is Glen Campbell's age? - R.W.C., Lewiston, Maine

Take your pick: Various references have given the country/pop singer's birthday as April 22, 1935; March 22, 1936; or April 10, 1938, which would make him 56, 55 or 53.

CLINT IN OUR EYE - What was the name of the TV show in which Clint Howard was a child star? My husband thinks it was "Leave It to Beaver" or "My Three Sons," but I think he's wrong. - E.D., Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, Canada

Ron Howard's younger brother was 5 years old when he joined the cast of "The Baileys of Balboa" (1964-65), age 8 when he began acting opposite a bear in "Gentle Ben" (1967-69), and turned 15 on the set of "The Cowboys" (1974). He was not a cast member of "Leave It to Beaver" or "My Three Sons."

Powerful, human look at AIDS on 'P.O.V.'

BY BOB REMINGTON

The old notion that talking heads don't make for good television is a misconception that has been put to rest in recent years by such outstanding documentaries as "Shoah" and "The Hand of Stalin."

In "Shoah," a gripping work spanning nine hours, victims of Hitler's "final solution" told of their experiences surviving Nazi concentration camps.

Peter Adair

The three-hour "Hand of Stalin" was comprised almost exclusively of interviews of people who survived Stalin's brutal regime in the Soviet Union during the '30s.

Now comes "Absolutely Positive," a documentary that proves talking heads can make for very good television, if they have something to say. And this 90-minute film, which launches another season of PBS's "P.O.V." documentary series, says a lot.

The subject is AIDS, as related by 11 people who have tested positive for the HIV virus. These are not the sickly, deathbed victims portrayed in such TV movies as last month's "Our Sons," but outwardly healthy people coping with the uncertainties of a terrible disease. It is an emotional and enlightening work by independent filmmaker Peter Adair, who undertook the project as a form of therapy after he tested HIV positive.

"Absolutely Positive" (airing Tuesday, June 18, on most PBS stations), presents a cross-section of people living with their diagnoses, from gay men to female IV drug-users to a logger who tested positive after receiving a transfusion of contaminated blood and later passed the disease sexually to his wife. Their reactions are wide-ranging.

"It was like getting an 'F' on a report card: You did something really bad and now you're going to pay for it," says one man, who is less fearful for himself than afraid of the pain that his illness will cause his loved ones. The wife of the logger had an understandable reaction: "I decided I was going to drink myself to death."

The 11 people profiled by director Adair were selected from 120 HIV patients interviewed. The film elicits a great deal of compassion from the viewer. By the end, you feel you know these people through their openness and the childhood photos that are interspersed throughout the film.

"Absolutely Positive" is absolutely compelling TV.
