Timely Tips On

TELEVISION

First of the new David Niven series scheduled for Tuesday nights on NBC-TV will feature Cameron Mitchell in "Reach for the Gold Ring" April 14.

Other up-coming April programs include the Three Stooges' return match on the April 5 Allen Show; Clark Gable and Cary Grant on the April 6 Oscar telecast; an hour-long special from Las Vegas, site of the World Congress of Flight, April 19, via NBC-TV, with the accent on outer space; and Anna Maria Alberghetti's visit to The Garry Moore Show April 21.

Milton Berle will do his last show of the season May 13. He does not plan to return next season for Kraft. Sometime in the future he will probably set up a re-run of the current season's 26 color tapes, which belong to him personally.

World of Giants, which was to begin on CBS-TV last fall, will be in a Friday night spot starting early in May. The film series stars Marshall Thompson, a Secret Service agent reduced to about six inches as the result of a radiation accident.

Lawrence Welk's Wednesday night show may end in May also for lack of a sponsor. His Saturday night hour will continue.

May 15 is the date set for "The Leprechaun Hunt," filmed in Ireland for WALT DISNEY PRESENTS. The little people are said to inhabit these parts.

As the word goes now, VOICE OF FIRESTONE will return to ABC next Fall, but this time it will be at 10 Monday nights. Also in the Fall, Colgate is planning to revive its old COMEDY HOUR format, rotating big personalities in an hour-long show each week.

CBS is working on an audience-participation show, The TV Game, which will be scheduled for a weekday evening, starting this Spring. The network emphasizes that it's not to be a big money-give-away show.

Pock's Bad Girl, with Patty McCormack and Wendell Corey, is now equipped with two sponsors and will definitely be on CBS in the Fall.

Continental travellers will be happy to know that the London County Council has decided not to fill London parks with television sets this summer.

The two-hour "Meet Me in St. Louis" special scheduled for television April 26, originally meant to be a live production, will be pre-taped. MGM, it appears, has discovered it owns rights only for reproduction, and not for an original show. The net cost is estimated at $750,000 only $75,000 less than TV's all-time high, "Wonderful Town."

General Artists Corp. is planning a fall special based on Pat Boone's best seller "Twist Twelve and Twenty." It will be carried on ABC, channel 5.

PREVIEW

APRIL 4 - APRIL 10, 1959

Pity the two-legged heroes—the four-legged have it made

Many a television actor would be happy to lead a dog's life. That's the opinion of Doyle Brooks, now a stunt man on the ABC-TV "Naked City" series (Saturday 10:30-11 p.m., CBMT), and for three-and-a-half years previously with the "Rin Tin Tin" show.

He was discussing the mail protest that usually follows a television program in which an animal is seemingly roughed up.

"Actually," he said, "all precautions are taken during production to protect the animals. A corps of handlers, trainers, veterinarians and humane association observers are always there to see that they are not injured."

But a western hero, for instance, can be belted over the head with a gun butt, choked, pummeled by heavies, thrown from a horse, tossed over a cliff—and nary a word of protest will be forthcoming.

"The animals are fed as well as we are—and often much better," said Doyle. "They get specially prepared meats—steaks and other good cuts. None of that dog food for them."

"They have stalls that are cleaned every day—beds, too. They're brought to, and taken from work in station wagons. And they're treated gently. There's not much sense in bawling out an animal for taking direction poorly, now is there?"

Doyle pointed out that when you see a horse coming up lame in a western it's simulated limping. It can be prompted either by a highly trained animal or a tightly-bandaged leg. When the bandage is employed, its use is strictly supervised—and after the scene is photographed the leg is inspected and the bandage discarded. The horse is not deliberately made lame as some viewers seem to believe.

In one of the Rin Tin Tin episodes that Doyle was connected with, the script called for the dog hero to stop an Indian arrow. This action was necessary for the plot. The letter writers were furious.

Actually, the feathered shaft of the arrow was carefully attached to Rinty's rump, giving the illusion of penetration. But his skin was not even scratched.

In a "Cheyenne" story, the hero and his horse were seen going over a cliff. More complaints. But it was done this way: the star was photographed in a close-up astride his mount. Then followed a long shot showing the approach to the cliff. This was taken from stock footage. The actual spill was taken by a stunt man and a horse trained to dive into water. No injuries to the animal—and, oh yes, the stunt man wasn't hurt, either.

Doyle concluded that since animal actors are pampered more than the human variety, they shouldn't be pitied. "If anything," he said, "some of that concern should be saved for the two-legged heroes."

PEACE OFFICER. A devotion to law and order, cool judgment and an accurate scatter gun help Sheriff Clay Hollister (Pat Conway) maintain frontier justice in "Tombstone Territory." Based on true incidents from the oldest files of the newspaper, "The Tombstone Epitaph," the series is seen Friday at 9 p.m. on channel 8.

Patient Cran controls cast

Anyone overhearing certain telephone conversations in the office of ABC-TV's "You Asked for It" (Sundays, 7-7:30 p.m., channel 8, would label its producer, Cran Chamberlin, a most solicitous man about his cast. A visitor in his office the other day noted the following:

"How is Alice? Happier about her dress? I thought it much prettier on her than the full-skirted one. I do want her comfortable on the show but hope she can wear the blue.

The next call: "Is Billy still hitting so hard? I'm sorry to hear that. It isn't necessary at all for you to have to take that punishment. It's a shame; however, it is entirely up to you if you want to continue taking the beating. Let me know if things ease up."

All subjects of his concern are animals, and he is trying to get them in shape for his show. Alice is a trained poodle who is refusing to wear a new costume. Billy is a boxing kangaroo with a mighty left, and he might knock out his trainer right on the show, which Chamberlin wants to avoid.

Chamberlin, who has produced "You Asked for It" for the eight years of its existence, attributes much of the program's appeal to the unusual animals whose talents and foibles have been patiently captured by the show's cameras.

"However," Chamberlin notes, "sometimes the quadrupeds are easier to deal with than the famous entertainers or show business acts we present."

Ambrose in TV-land

by ARTHUR GORDON

First I had to locate the real Meecher. I found him sitting near his television in just the right frame of mind for my experiment. He fell into a deep sleep. Using my specially devised broadcast device, I appeared before him representing myself to be a person named Andrai Czhaborka . . .

"You — you — you snake in the grass, you insidious trickster," exploded Sandring; his face turning purple with anger. "I know what's coming. You planted this Meecher creature into Laport's miserable carcass and let me think Laport was having another of his damned spells. Get out, you confounded necromancer: you're fired."

"So, I'm fired, eh," Doctor Meklon replied coolly. "Very well, I'm a necromancer and I'm fired. I go and my little bag of tricks goes with me. Then where do you fit. Without me, you haven't the ability to run a Punch and Judy show. I am satisfied to go for with the knowledge I have gained I can do better elsewhere. You are but a pompous windbag. If a pin were stuck in that fat belly of yours, you would explode like a burst balloon. He turned and started to walk away.

Ambrose felt that discovery was but seconds away. He did some rapid thinking. He now understood the situation. The doctor's story had made everything clear. Should he side with him or with the director, or would both be against him? He was however, given a reprieve.

Sandring, half rising from his chair called out, "Doctor Meklon, stop! wait! Perhaps we should talk this thing over."

The doctor turned his head and answered coldly, "I think everything necessary has been said. Goodbye Sandring."

"No! No!" the director pleaded, "I've been a bit hasty . . . but my poor nerves, you know. You will listen, won't you Doctor?"

"Your devilish temper, you mean," growled the doctor. "You're admitting that you can't get along without me."

"After all these years of working together in friendly cooperation you can't just walk out like that," Sandring's voice was almost a whine. Doctor Meklon turned back. "I always was a soft-hearted fool. What have you got to say, Sandring." "I was just thinking . . ." Sandring began. "With what?" queried the doctor sarcastically.

Brennan's limp offered help

Walter Brennan would like to clarify a point:

"It's Amos McCoy who has the sciatica, and limps — not Walter Brennan," says the star of ABC-TV's "The Real McCoy's".

Walter mentions the fact because this mail indicates great concern about the limp he affects on the high-rated television series.

"Most of the mail is quite sympathetic," says Walt, "and if a man with sciatica would try only half of the home remedies that have been suggested to me, he'd have little time to do anything else."

Brennan was impressed with one letter from a woman who wrote that her husband had suffered for 21 years with the complaint.

"She told me," reports the 64-year-old actor, who enjoys fine health in his personal life, "that he had tried most of the remedies and obtained no relief."

"Then one day a neighbor gave him an old pioneer formula for making a poultice, to be applied along with a warming pan at night, and that did the trick."

The letter enclosed the recipe with directions for applying the remedy, but Walt didn't try it.

Walter is pretty sure though that the limp, as he portrays it, must be authentic.

"I've had letters from viewers who said they are doctors," he notes. "They asked questions and suggested things I might do for relief."
