GENERAL BOOTH'S REPLY.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—General Booth, in a communication to the Times, says:—"I deeply regret that misapprehension and some differences of opinion as to the best plan for working his department led Commissioner Smith to resign. In view of the serious obligations I have publicly undertaken I naturally desire that the scheme shall be tried on lines entirely in harmony with my own ideas. I very highly esteemed Mr. Smith, and this extract from his letter shows no unfriendliness. Here he quotes Commissioner Smith: 'You need have no alarm regarding my intentions. I contemplate no opposition to you. I just as earnestly as ever agree as to the end desired. We differ as to methods. You may reckon on me for any outside assistance I can give.'"

DEED OF TRUST.
General Booth continuing, says: "A deed of trust for the funds will be executed in a few days. Nothing is yet done because the necessary funds are only now assured." General Booth adds that he hopes to answer criticisms of his scheme and deal with suggestions in a pamphlet which he expects to have published during January.

CANADIAN.
THE ANCIENT CAPITAL.
(Special to the Witness.)

QUEBEC, Dec. 27.—The members of the Opposition entertained their leader, the Hon. J. Blanchet, at dinner last evening at the Garrison Club, and presented him with a gold-headed cane. The Hon. Mr. Taitton was among those present.

DAMAGED BY FIRE.
The damage by the fire, which totally destroyed the stables of the St. John Street Railway Company, is estimated at about $15,000; insurance, $8,500, distributed as follows: The Western Union, $3,400; Royal, $2,500; Fire Insurance Association, $1,500; Imperial, $500, and the Atlas, $700.

KAMOURASKA VACANCY.
It is said that Mr. Thomas Chapais, having declined to run for the vacant Federal seat for Kamouraska, Mr. Dionne, advocate, will be the Government candidate. The Opposition candidate is likely to be either Mr. Carroll, advocate, of Kamouraska, or Sheriff Gagnon, of Quebec, the latter following the precedent set by Sheriff Thibault of Montreal, who still "sits" in the Federal Parliament.

MASONIC.
The different Masonic lodges of the city had their annual installations on Saturday evening, followed by their annual banquet at the Masonic Hall.

QUEBEC BRIDGE PROJECT.
MR. MERCIER DETERMINED UPON ITS CONSTRUCTION.
(From Our Own Correspondent.)

QUEBEC, Dec. 29.—It has leaked out that a deputation of the Quebec Bridge Company waited upon the Premier and the Hon. Chas. Langlois, a day or two ago, and offered to hand over their charter to the Local Government if the Government would undertake the construction of the bridge, or to obtain the resignation of any member of the Company to whom the Government might object. Mr. Mercier told the delegation that there was no question of any member of the Company resigning at present, and asked them to write officially to the Federal Government and to the Corporation of Quebec, asking those bodies to contribute towards the building of a bridge opposite Quebec. If they refused them, the Quebec Government would take means for giving more efficient aid to the enterprise. He was resolved that the bridge should be built, and built before Quebec, with a tunnel under the Plains of Abraham, connecting with the station at Palais. He had caused new plans to be prepared, and when he went to Europe next spring he would submit them to practical engineers. The delegation promised to follow the Premier's advice.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.
(From Our Own Correspondent.)

OTTAWA, Dec. 27.—The November exports were $9,899,000; imports, $8,001,000; duty collected, $1,821,000.

The German schooner "Adele," which made false clearance from Victoria, B.C., for Yokohama, when, in fact, she went to Pelly-lot Islands, in the Behring Sea, and poached seals, has been fined by the Customs $730.

The cotton monopoly, under the name of the Dominion Cotton Mills Company, has been allowed to increase its capital from $100,000 to $300,000.

EXTRACTS FROM GEN. BOOTH'S WORK.

On this farm I propose to carry on every description of "little agriculture." Fruits farming affords a great opening for female labor, and it will indeed be a change as from Tothet to the Garden of Eden when the poor lost girls on the streets of London exchange the pavements of Piccadilly for the strawberry beds of Essex or Kent.

It is quite certain that amongst the mass of people with whom we have to deal there is a residual remnant of persons some extent mentally infirm, or physically incapable of engaging in the harder tasks. For these people it is necessary to find work, and I think there would be a good field for their benumbed energies in looking after rabbits, feeding poultry, minding bees, and, in short, doing all those little odd jobs about a place which must be attended to, but which will not repay the labor of able-bodied men.

One advantage of the cosmopolitan nature of the Army is that we have officers in almost every country in the world. If an officer in Sweden can give us practical hints as to how they manage food kitchens for the people, or an officer in the South of France can explain how the peasants are able to rear eggs and poultry not only for their own use, but so as to be able to export them by the million to England; if a sergeant in Belgium understands how it is that the rabbit farmers that there can feed and fatten and supply our market with millions of rabbits we shall have him over, tap his brains, and set him to work to benefit our people.

By the establishment of this farm colony we should create a great school of technical agricultural education. It would be a working men's agricultural university, training people for the life which they would have to lead in the new colonies they will go forth to colonize and possess.

Every man who goes to our farm colony does so, not to acquire his fortune, but to obtain a knowledge of an occupation and that mastery of his tools which will enable him to play his part in the battle of life. He will be provided with a cheap uniform, which we shall find no difficulty in rigging up from the old clothes of London, and it will go hardly with us, and we shall have worse luck than the ordinary gardener, if we do not succeed in making suitable client profit to pay all expenses of the concern, and leave something over for the maintenance of the hopelessly incompetent, and those who, to put it roughly, are not worth their keep.

Every person will be taught the elementary lesson of obedience, and will be instructed in the needful arts of husbandry, or some other method of earning his bread. The agricultural section will learn the lessons of the soil, and of the best kind of seeds and plants. Those belonging to the section will learn how to build and ditch, how to make roads and hedge bridges, and generally to subdue the earth and make it yield to him the riches which it never withholds from the industrious and skilful workman. It is a training school for emigrants, a place where a man can be made to feel the value of his own labor, and to be able to do something for himself, and to be able to feel themselves at home wherever there is land to till, stock to rear, and harvest to reap. We shall rely greatly for the peace and prosperity of the colony upon the sense of brotherhood which will be universal in it from the highest to the lowest. There will be no systematic wage paying there, but there will be some sort of reward and remuneration for honest industry, which will be stored up, for his benefit, as afterwards explained.

The dulness and deadness of country life, especially in the colonies, lead many men to prefer a life of hardship and privation in a city slum. But in our colony they will be near to each other, and will enjoy the advantages of country life and the association and companionship of life in town.

SECTION 2.—THE INDUSTRIAL VILLAGE.

In describing the operations of the household salvage brigade I have referred to the enormous quantities of good sound food which would be collected from door to door every day of the year. Much of this food would be next door to sin. Imagine, for instance, the quantities of soup which might be made from boiling the good fresh meaty bones of the great city! Think of the dainty dishes which a French cook would be able to serve up from the scraps and odds and ends of a single West End kitchen. Good cookery is not an extravagance but an economy, and many a tasty dish is made by our continental friends out of materials which would be discarded indignantly by the poorest tramp in Whitechapel.

But after all that is done there will remain a mass of food which cannot be eaten by man, but can be converted into food for him by the simple process of manure. The whole bread of London, the soiled, stale crusts can be used in foddering the horses which are employed in collecting the waste. It will help to feed the rabbits, whose hutches will be close by every cottage on the estate, and the husks of the colony will flourish on the crumbs which fall from the table of lives. But after the horses and the rabbits and poultry have been served, there will remain a residuum of eatable matter, which can only be profitably disposed of to the voracious and necessary pig. I foresee the rise of a pigery in connection with the new social scheme, which will dwarf into insignificance all that exist in Great Britain and Ireland. We have the advantage of the experience of the whole world as to the choice of breeds, the construction of styes, and the rearing of stock. We shall have the major part of our food practically for the cost of collection, and be able to adopt all the latest methods of Chicago for the killing, curing, and disposing of our pork, ham, and bacon. There are few animals more useful than the pig. He will eat anything, live anywhere, and almost every particle of him, from the tip of his nose to the end of his tail, is capable of being converted into a salable commodity. Your pig also is a great producer of manure, and agriculture is, after all, largely a matter of manure. Treat the land well and it will treat you well. With our pigery in connection with our farm colony there would be no lack of manure.

With the pigery there would grow up a great bacon factory for curing, and that again would make more work. Then as for sausages they would be produced literally by the mile, and all made of the best meat instead of being manufactured out of the very objectionable ingredients too often stowed away in that poor man's favorite ration.

Food, however, is only one of the materials which will be collected by the household salvage brigade. The barges which float down the river, with the tide, laden to the brim with the cast-off waste of half a million homes, will bring down an enormous quantity of material which cannot be eaten even by pigs. There will be, for instance, the old bones. At present it pays speculators to go to the premises of America and gather up the bleached bones of the dead buffaloes, in order to make manure. It pays manufacturers to bring bones from the end of the earth in order to grind them up for use on our fields. But the waste bones of London, who collects them? I see, as in a vision, barge loads upon barge loads of bones floating down the Thames to the great bone factory. Some of the best will yield materials for the knife handles and buttons, and the numberless articles which will afford ample opportunity in the long winter evenings for the acquisition of skill on the part of our colonist carvers, while the rest will go straight to the manure mill. There will be a constant demand for manure on the part of our ever-increasing nests of new colonies and our co-operative farm, every man in which will be educated in the great doctrine that there is no good agriculture without liberal manuring. And here will be an unfailing source of supply.

IF AND PERHAPS.

BY EMMA C. DOWD.

If every one were wise and sweet,
And every one were jolly;
If every heart with gladness beat,
And none were melancholy;
If none should grumble or complain,
And nobody should labor
In evil work, but each were fain
To love and help his neighbor,
Oh, what a happy world 't would be
For you and me—for you and me!
And if, perhaps, we both should try
That glorious time to hurry;
If you and I—just you and I—
Should laugh instead of worry;
If we should grow—just you and I—
Kinder and sweeter hearted—
Perhaps in some near-by-and-by
That good time might get started.
Then what a happy world 't would be
For you and me—for you and me.

BOYS' PRINTING.

Eleven years ago there were thousands of boys' newspapers in the United States, and the interest was so great that a National Amateur Press Association was formed. These papers exchanged with each other. Each boy thus had a chance to see what his brother publishers were doing, and the desire to excel was so great that many of the papers were brightly edited and handsomely printed.

The boys of that decade have grown to larger duties, and the interest in boys' papers has diminished, though there are still boys' printing-offices. Some who then took up printing as a pastime are now owners of newspapers or printing-offices; and I am convinced that a much larger number, who are now engaged in other occupations, are doing better work because of their experience with types and press.

One cannot estimate the value to any boy of work which requires the united action of head and hands; and printing is an excellent work for boys, because it makes exacting demands upon so many faculties. There is also a fascination about printing which takes the whole boy captive.

It is no insignificant part of an education for a boy to know how books and newspapers are made. Boys' printing is not only a primer to such knowledge, but it induces the boy to visit the newspaper offices and the printing offices to see with understanding eyes how the work is done there.

Printing gives a boy practice in the use of words and in the arrangement of words, and also in spelling and grammar. The handling of types also makes a boy desire to put his own thoughts on paper for the public eye, and the boys are few who engage in printing and do not become authors in a small way.

The boy printer becomes proficient in the much-sought art of punctuation. Punctuation points mean something to him; for he has handled them. He thus gets a practical knowledge of a subject which is often slighted by men who are in other ways well educated, and do not become authors in a small way.

Printing cultivates patience. It cannot be hurried; it will not do itself. It cultivates skill; a clumsy, blundering boy cannot set type or put a form to press. It cultivates exactness; every line must be of the right length, every form must be perfectly true, every space of the exact size, and every letter in its proper place.

The boy printer has constant demands upon his taste in selecting type and in arranging the lines. A well-printed sheet is a work of art, and so, like all other arts, printing offers unlimited opportunity for study and development. The boy printer becomes a critic, and every scrap of printing which comes under his eye is approved or condemned.

Boys' printing calls so many faculties into action that it has a valuable educational influence independent of other work. Its best service to a boy is, however, to supplement his work in school; and I am sure it will be found an excellent tonic for the boy who, through too long or too mechanical application, has lost his appetite for books.—David C. Torrey, in Look-Out.

WHAT BESSIE ENJOYED IN EUROPE.

Bessie had been spending the summer in Europe with her father and mother, and had just arrived home.

Uncle Fred took her on his knee, and asked her if she had had a nice time.

"Oh yes," answered Bessie. "I had a lovely time! I scraped the kettle!"

At first nobody knew what Bessie meant, but then her mother recollected the night they had spent in a peasant's cottage in Switzerland, when the good Swiss dame had allowed Bessie to scrape the porridge kettle, to the little girl's unbounded delight.

At Bessie's home the kitchen was under the care of trained servants, and Bessie rarely was allowed to enter it. Therefore she missed the fun of the kitchen, which falls to the lot of poorer children, who follow their mothers around the kitchen, sometimes being allowed to "help" and often obtaining a bit of some new made dish before it is seen upon the table. And so it was that of the enjoyments which Europe gave to Bessie, she counted scraping the porridge kettle as the most precious one of all.—Youth's Companion.

SALVATION AND GLORY.

I will place salvation in Zion for Israel my glory.—Isaiah xlii. 13.

Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him; that glory may dwell in our land.—Psalm lxxxv. 9.

I AM AN OPTIMIST of the optimists. I believe that never has so bright a day dawned upon the church of God as this day; but I believe that when a church door swings open, when a prayer is offered, or a song is sung, or a sermon is preached, and these things are not inspired by the Spirit of God, they are useless. Nay, more, I believe that they are a curse. Churches multiply and ministers increase, but the shining day and the burning tongue are far to seek and hard to find. Some one has well said that on the day of Pentecost one sermon converted three thousand souls, but that to-day it sometimes seems as though it took three thousand sermons to convert one soul. The church of God needs something more than she has to-day, with all her prestige and all her energy. She needs an upper chamber, she needs the power of the Holy Ghost, she needs a continued Pentecost; and nothing less than this can bring to her the slightest possible particle of power.

The sword of the Spirit is the sword of the Spirit, and without the Spirit's hand it is as useless as any other handless sword. Nay, more, it will be turned against the impious hand that touches it save in the power and mission of the Holy Ghost.—Rev. B. Fay Mills.
