W. I. CONVENTION HAD VERY LARGE ATTENDANCE

Dr. Brunt of Macdonald College Was Chief Speaker

MISS MORRIS RE-ELECTED

Miss Jarvis of Macdonald College and Mrs. W. F. Stephen Address Meetings on the Work of Institutes

The second Annual County Convention of the Women's Institute of the counties of Chateaugay and Huntingdon was held in the lecture room of the Huntingdon Methodist Church on May 1st. The sessions were held morning, afternoon and evening with a splendid attendance at every session. Luncheon and supper provided by all the Branches was served in the lecture room and thus afforded an opportunity for a social hour.

Miss Barbara Morris, Aubrey, County President, presided at all the sessions in an able manner.

Morning Session

Mrs. Geo. Hyde gave a most cordial address of welcome. Mrs. Geo. Hope, Howick, in responding urged all to live up to the Institute and creed. She mentioned the "You go, I go, Club," formed by some ladies in the country. If you go call for me, if I go I call for you and so both go. Women's Institutes foster a love for home and country and a desire to do both to better things. The President in her address said Huntingdon and Chateaugay had the largest County Convention in the Province and she hoped it would be the largest and greatest in good works. The Women's Institute is affiliated with the Women's Council. Miss Morris thought the Women's Institute should have a representative at Ottawa, and the County Institute ought to take up some united piece of work, such as social service.

The reports of the secretaries, treasurers, the Branch Institutes and the convener all showed actively and worthily interest. Agriculture, Mrs. H. T. Cunningham Household Science, Mrs. Charles Smallman; Legislation, Mrs. R. C. Manning; Education and Better Schools, Miss Pearl Cleland; Publicity, Mrs. Smallman for Miss Cameron; Immigration, Mrs. Alf. Greig; Social Service, Mrs. George Hope; Child Welfare, Mrs. Jos. McLeod. Two additional conveners were elected. National Events, Mrs. R. W. Blair; Canadian Industries, Mrs. A. L. Sellar. The Committee for the next Convention to be held in May, 1924, to consist of the County President, the Branch Presidents, and Branch Secretaries.

The election of officers followed: Miss Barbara Morris, President; Miss Annie Rose, Vice President; Mr. W. A. Orr, Secretary Treasurer; Convener to hold office for two years.

Afternoon

Miss Jarvis, Superintendent of Women's Institute for Quebec, gave an instructive address on the origin, work, operations and policy of the Institute. She dwelt at length on the duties of conveners of the various departments, defining the duties of each so as to eliminate overlapping. Several Institutes put on a demonstration as follows:

Dundee: Maple Sugar especially maple crystals; Howick, the boning of a chicken; Huntingdon, the lining of rugs; Hemmingford, binding a buttonhole. There was also a fine exhibit of Handicraft including embroidery, crochet, hooked rugs, and knitting, etc.

All the Branches were invited to attend a picnic in August at Riverfield under the sponsorship of Rev. R. Ballantyne.

Evening Meeting

Many interested in Women's Institute, although not directly connected with it attended the evening session, some coming from quite a distance. They were not disappointed as it proved to be a most interesting and profitable session. Although presiding at two heavy sessions during the day, Miss Morris, the President, again acceptably filled the chair. The Rev. R. C. Ballantyne, was to have presided, but was unable to be present owing to indisposition and conveyed his regrets. Miss Morris stated that in her fourteen years of her work in the Women's Institute she had seen no discord. The organization was not built up of office seekers, but rather of workers who had high ideals of home and community life.

The first speaker was Mrs. Laura Rose Stephen, who told of how, twenty-seven years ago, the first Women's Institute was organized at Stoney Creek, Ont.—fourteen miles from Hamilton, by Mrs. Hodless. This woman considered that as farmers met together, discussed their problems and got profit thereby, therefore, why should not women meet to discuss the problems of the home. The real object of the Women's Institute was the bettering of home and community conditions and their motto is "For Home and Country." Mrs. Stephen said that she had spoken in almost every Province in Canada in connection with the Women's Institute. She was the first Government Organizer in Ontario and had organized the first Institute in Nova Scotia and British Columbia. The Continued on Page 5

LORD ATHOLSTAN DESIRES TO BEAUTIFY H'DON

Mr. W. Ormiston Roy, Well Known Landscape Architect Accompanies Lord Atholstan Who Select Two Spots to be Beautified

It will be remembered that some time ago a letter appeared in the Gleaner written by Lord Atholstan intimating his desire to give the people of Huntingdon and Atholstan an opportunity to secure a root or two of the much thought of Peony Rose. Mr. W. Ormiston Roy is a well known Landscape Architect and a great friend of Lord Atholstan. These two gentlemen were in Huntingdon yesterday and met a number of our townsmen and Lord Atholstan intimated his desire to have a couple of places suitably cultivated and have a collection of Peonies planted at his expense.

Mr. Roy has been importing peonies for a number of years and has had much success in their growing. Although the peony originally came from China it flourishes in the Canadian climate much better than in any other country. He stated that it was best to plant peony bushes towards the south where they will receive the sun-light away from shaded spots. Of the 1400 varieties of peonies there are 100 that were really worth while growing. At present he has one hundred varieties and it is his intention to plant the selected plots here with one or more of these varieties. They will be all marked so that people who may take a fancy to one variety will know its correct name and be able to buy one accordingly. Whilst looking around the town for a suitable location for the planting of the peonies he thought the grounds most suitable would be across the front of the Methodist Church and along on the west side, near the sheds. The bushes would be planted about three feet apart and laid out in an artistic manner by himself. To soften the background of brick and stone he would plant a creeping vine. The Rev. Mr. Hughes received a rough sketch of the proposed plan and will take the matter up with the Church Board.

The second location thought most suitable by Mr. Roy was that at the east corner of St. Andrew's Church near the tennis court. Here he recommended for a background against the stone to have some shrubbery or lilac bushes planted. Dr. Maclean was present when Mr. Roy was looking over the location and thought it would certainly make an artistic and beautiful corner. Other places were looked at in the town but these two places lent themselves as most adaptable for the cultivation of the peony rose. The planting of the peonies will take place sometime between August 15th and October 15th. People who replied to Lord Atholstan's letter regarding his gift peonies will also receive them during this period. The people in Huntingdon and Atholstan will certainly appreciate this kindness, and we trust that Lord Atholstan will long continue to enjoy life and take such pleasure as he does in making such generous donations. With the peony rose about to receive such a start in Huntingdon our town will be known to many as Peony Town of Quebec. Thanks to his Lordship and his good friend Mr. W. Ormiston Roy.

PAINT! PAINT! PAINT!

The usual thing for a visitor or old time citizen to do is to take a walk around the town and see the changes. Here is the chance for our many painters to get together and make a campaign upon the householders and have them get the property painted up before they are ashamed to it by our visitors. Paint not only improves the appearance of a property but preserves it and naturally saves it from depreciating in value. Here mention might be made of the marked improvements that have already been made to the following business places: Gay's Restaurant, interior painted and enameled, A. C. H. Picard and J. F. Gardner's Meat Markets painted on the interior, J. R. Oney's Furniture Store was painted on the interior and Brathwaite Bros. have had considerable painting done on the exterior as well as on the interior, and the cottages are now being touched up by the painter. Everyone might take notice of these marked improvements and see what they themselves can then do towards making Huntingdon the Cleanest Town in Canada.

On motion it was decided to ask the Women's Institute if they would appoint ladies to act in conjunction with the men on the Reception Committee and the Children's Parade committee.

TOTED BOTTLES HELD FOR COURT

John Tassie Arrested for Transporting 23 Bags of Empty Beer Bottles

Is it unlawful to transport empty beer bottles in the United States? That's a question which is bothering the dry representatives along the northern frontier.

John Tassie, a highly respected farmer who resides alongside a boundary line in the town of Fort Covington, was brought before U.S. Commissioner M. H. Burno on a charge of transporting foreign merchandise unlawfully. Tassie waived hearing and was held for the next term of federal court, now in session at Syracuse, Bail of $1,000 was furnished by Mrs. Tassie.

On the afternoon of April 24th Tassie was hauling 23 bags of empty beer bottles in a Ford truck in the town of Fort Covington. Members of the border patrol halted Tassie and turned the case over to U.S. Customs, John F. Lacombe, of Fort Covington. Officer Lacombe seized the truck and bottles and arrested Tassie.

The Late John Liggett

The residents of Ormstown and community were shocked and grieved on Saturday morning when they learned of the sudden passing of Mr. John Liggett. Mr. Liggett was taken ill on Tuesday, pneumonia developed on Wednesday, and Saturday he passed quietly and peacefully away. He was one of the oldest, best known, and most men having conducted a tailoring and gents' furnishing establishment for many years. But his activities were not wholly confined to his business, for he was always ready and willing to take an interesting part in anything pertaining to the improvement and social welfare of the town. He was also prominent in sporting and fraternal organizations, being a member of the Curling and Bowling Clubs, and a past Master of the Masonic and Odd-fellow Societies. He was also a loyal member and a liberal supporter of St. James' Church, and served as warden for the past eight years, and in this capacity did splendid service in helping to plan and carry out many improvements and repairs to the property. At the funeral service on Tuesday afternoon the church was filled to its utmost capacity by sorrowing friends who came from far and near to pay this last tribute of honour and respect to one who had been so highly esteemed. The members of the Masonic and Odd-fellow fraternities attended in regalia. The Rector in his address extended deepest sympathy to the bereaved, and paid a sincere tribute to one who was a worthy citizen, a good churchman and a valued friend. Mr. Liggett is survived by his widow, his son Thomas, his daughter, Mrs. D. Doughty of Loreburn, Sask., a sister and a brother.

FIVE LIVES MAKE NARROW ESCAPE FROM DEATH

John McFarlane's Farm Residence Burnt to Ground Tuesday Midnight

$1050 INSURANCE

Three Sons, Ages 14, 10, and 8 Escape With Clothes in Hand and Dress Outdoors in Cold.

Shortly after midnight the reflection of a house burning was distinctly seen by many people in Huntingdon. The house that was prey to the destruction of fire was the farm residence of Mr. John McFarlane, who lives on what is known to many as the Helm farm on the Ridge road, about a mile east of Atholstan. The house was not a new structure but in recent years it had an addition built onto the original house. Mrs. McFarlane had been making maple sugar during the evening, and in the making of good sugar it is necessary to have a good hot fire and such was the case on Tuesday night in the McFarlane home. Mrs. McFarlane had been making sugar until late in the evening and retiring between 11 and 12 o'clock everything appeared in order. At about 12:30 or 12:45 Mr. and Mrs. McFarlane, who were sleeping in the downstairs bedroom, were awakened by a noise and a bright light but thought it was a car on the main road. The noise continued and the light excessive and upon arising they found the old part of the original house as a ball of fire.

The fire had gained such a headway that nothing could be done but to save their lives. They rang the phone but before they could give an alarm they were obliged to leave the phone on account of the terrific heat. Mr. Talbot Irwin, the nearest neighbor, was awakened by the phone call and thinking it was a car, but before reaching the phone he saw his neighbour's house enveloped in flames. Mr. and Mrs. McFarlane have a family of five but on this particular night the two girls were away from home whilst the three boys were sleeping in the upstairs part of the new addition to the house. The parents ran up stairs and awakened the boys who jumped up and carried their clothes and shoes down the stairs accompanied by the parents. As all five reached the bottom step the stairway collapsed into the cellar. The boys were obliged to dress in the open where the cold wind was blowing. Mr. McFarlane was only able to save but a dress or two belonging to his daughter. In the parlor was the piano which was prized by Mr. McFarlane and assisted by his son Donald, who is but 14 years of age, they succeeded in moving the instrument out of the house into the orchard.

The piano was somewhat scorched as was also Mr. McFarlane's face and hands. A number of the neighbours quickly gathered but were unable to lend any valuable assistance.

BIG SHIPMENT OF BEER SEIZED

Malone U. S. Customs Officers Seize Freight Car With Booze Concealed in Lath—1,000 Bags Taken Out

A big consignment of contraband beer, which was concealed in a freight car ostensibly containing a load of lath, is being uncovered under the direction of U.S. Customs officers of the Malone office. The car was stopped at Malone Junction on inspection by the U.S. Customs officers, where the big load of beer was discovered and the shipment was at once seized under Federal authority.

It was found that the car was shipped from Cote St. Paul, P.Q., and was consigned to Carlstead, N. J. It was found that the freight car contained only a small amount of lath, the rest of which was apparently the attempted concealment of the beer.

At two o'clock eight hundred bags, each containing twenty-four pint bottles of beer had been taken from the freight car under the direction of Customs officers, and 200 bags, each containing 24 quart bottles of beer. More beer was being taken out at that hour and the full amount of the haul will not be known until the work of emptying the freight car is completed. It is evident that the seizure is one of the most extensive made here via the freight car route in recent months.

The beer is being destroyed under the direction of the Customs department as it is taken from the car, with the exception of a small part held in custody as evidence in the case.

BADGER TO SERVE HIS SENTENCE

Badger's Appeal Denied by Judge Paddock

The case of Fred R. Badger which appeared in the Gleaner last Thursday stated that he was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment. Since that date an appeal was made and was heard on Tuesday before Judge Paddock. The arguments were ably presented but the Judge denied the application and Badger must now begin to serve his sentence at once.

INSPECT. PARKER SPEAKS HIGHLY OF ACADEMY

Recommends Additional Teacher—Makes note of Great Progress Being Made in the Teaching of French.

The Huntingdon Academy School Commissioners were gratified to receive Inspector Parker's report on the academy. The School Board have advertised for an additional teacher and the tenders for this position are to be opened at the meeting to-night. The report reads:

RECOMMENDATIONS
Huntingdon High School

That an additional teacher be engaged for next year. The enrolment of pupils in the higher grades shows that the engagement of another teacher is absolutely essential. The vacant room on the ground floor of the High School building, may be utilized as a classroom.

I am pleased to report that the pupils are making excellent progress in the study of French (especially Oral French), under the efficient methods of teaching employed by Mr. Hall. I may also add that the school board, parents and pupils are fortunate in having Mr. J. B. Macmillan in charge of the High School. In the matter of School Organization, School Management, Methods of Teaching, Mr. Macmillan's ideas are pedagogically sound. He believes that Education in its highest sense means a full and free development of the mental, moral and physical powers of the child, to the end that he may become a strong, wise and useful citizen. In carrying out this three-fold policy, he pays as much attention to the development of the physical and the moral as to the mental. In order to attain the highest measure of success in this good work, he should receive the hearty support of the School Board and the sympathy of the parents.

Inspector of Superior Schools.

ST. MARTINE

The regular monthly meeting of the Municipal Council of St. Martine was held on Monday evening at seven o'clock, there being present the Mayor, Mr. L. P. Chaput, and the following councillors: Messrs. Philom Mallette, Donat Yelle, Honorius Faucher, Jos. Roy and Armand Dubuc. The Council considered the report of the Fire Commissioner, Mr. P. J. Jobin, regarding the tests given to the Fire Fighting Apparatus at St. Martine on Thursday, April 23rd, 1923. Mr. P. J. Jobin, Fire Commissioner, stated that the municipality had followed all the instructions given by the Department of Public Works and that they had even done more than required by the Department as regards the water tanks. Two tanks have been constructed in concrete and give complete satisfaction to the commissioner. The Fire Station was constructed according to the approved plans of the department. The Fire Engine underwent four tests and the water pumped reached the quantity of 440 imperial gallons a minute. The pressure reached 150 lbs. and was forced to a horizontal height of 135 feet and a vertical height of 90 feet. This endurance test proved entirely satisfactory. Under the recommendation of the Fire Commissioner, the Minister of Public Works has agreed to forward a cheque covering the balance of the grant allotted to St. Martine for the purchase of their Fire Fighting Apparatus. It can now be said that St. Martine is protected against fire in so far as it is possible to have fire protection in a country village and everyone is rejoicing over this fact.

The Minister of Roads has offered the necessary money at 2% to permit us to construct in 1925, that portion of the Beauharnois-St. Jean road within our municipality. This money has been offered to us on the recommendation of the Honorable Honoré Mercier, our member. This offer is a most advantageous one and gives St. Martine an opportunity to follow the example of the neighboring municipalities in the matter of good roads. The people are certainly grateful to the Hon. Mr. Mercier for giving them the golden opportunity to surround ourselves with good roads. The offer of the minister is being considered.

Seeding has been practically finished in our parish and everything looks fine while awaiting a little warm weather. Monseigneur Rouleau, our bishop, was in St. Martine attending the demonstrations given at the Convent by the Domestic Science Class. We hope to have with us on Saturday evening the Hon. H. Mercier to attend a reunion of the Farmers' Club, which will be followed by a concert and moving pictures.

FARMERS' TEL. COMPANY MOVE TO NEW QUARTERS

1212 Phones Connected in This Rural Telephone Company

The Central Office of the Farmers' Telephone Company, at Howick, was moved, last Monday night into permanent quarters. The Switchboard was taken out of the old office at 9:30 p.m. and by 10 p.m. long distance connection was again established and certain rural lines were also in operation.

Although it sounds simple to say, "The Telephone Company has moved its Central Office," yet, in reality, it is far from a simple procedure, if the service is to be carried on practically without interruption.

Many days of preparation are needed, each line has to be run to its new place on the Rack and through the rack to the Cable which is to serve the switchboard in its new location but still must continue to give service on the old switchboard. Thus, the new rack, as the time set for the "Cut over" draws near, becomes a maze of wires, seemingly running to nowhere from nowhere but actually carrying wires, or rather, lines through rack positions which will, after the "Cut over" be two working lines instead of one. A clear head is required to do all this without becoming "mixed up" and often, in spite of very careful handling, after the "Cut over" it is discovered that some lines have been "lost." In the present move only three lines, out of one hundred and fifty handled, were lost. These were located the following day by testing.

Mr. Charlebois, who built the new rack and made all the cable ends and splices is to be congratulated upon a "Cut over" with so small a percentage of "errors."

The managers' office and also the main store room of the Company will be located in the same building.

The Farmers' Telephone Company, in spite of the general business depression is showing progress. At July 1st, 1920 the company had 800 telephones in service connected to its various central offices and at May 1st, 1923, has 1212 and has over fifty signed applications for service to be connected to its St. Martine and St. Remi Centrals.

WE ARE DOING OUR PART

Every Dentist knows the frightful toll in lost teeth and broken health that results from decayed teeth. Every Dentist worthy of the name is doing what he can to reduce the number of victims, and to lessen the effects of decayed teeth.

Before any noticeable improvements can be made, however, the public must be awakened to the need of better oral care—to the necessity of regular tooth and gum inspection, as well as to everyday measures of precaution.

It is to such a campaign of education that we have dedicated our efforts in the inspection of the children's teeth in the schools. Working under such principles, we have decided to open a Free Clinic for the poor, every Saturday from 9-11, with the ambition of doing something good for the future generation.

We ask the support of everyone in such a campaign.

Reclaiming The Zuider Zee

The Dutch people are engaged, in a very literal sense, in "reclaiming" the lands submerged beneath the Zuider Zee, that great inlet of the sea, 2,000 square miles in extent, which is bounded by the Frisian Islands on the north and the provinces of North Holland and Friesland on the west and east. A great dam is to be built across the mouth of the Zee from North Holland to Friesland; there will be locks for the passage of shipping; and the remnant of the old Zee will gradually be transformed by river and drainage waters off the land.

The cost is estimated at just over thirty millions—not, one would have thought, an excessive amount for so large and promising a scheme. At all events, it is scarcely possible that now, when the first part of the lam (between North Holland and the island of Wieringen) has been completed, there should be any hesitation in finding the required capital when the expected loan is issued to the Dutch public.

W. I. Convention Had Very Large Attendance

Women's Institutes had spread to almost every civilized country and were particularly strong in all English speaking countries. The Women's Institute was now the largest Women's organization in the world. The Institute was out to do unselfish work and it made us think more of our homes and our communities. It had broken down social barriers in our communities by "the get acquainted idea." In the Women's Institute there was common ground where all could get together, discuss their common problems and exchange ideas of value to the community. The Women's Institute developed latent talent and was a great educator. It is the one body in the community that can do all kinds of community work. Mrs. Stephen told of several cases where towns in Canada had been cleaned up by the influence of the Women's Institute. The organization was undenominational and the age limit was 14 to 90. By way of encouragement she told her audience not to be disappointed if they did not achieve all they aspired to, but to keep at it. She invited those who were not members of the Home Institute to come with them and assist the Women's Institute of Huntingdon in their objective—a membership of one hundred; establishing a Women's Rest Room and the getting together of a library. In this there could be splendid co-operation between the town and country. She considered that a Women's Rest Room was very much needed in Huntingdon. The Women's Institute presented an opportunity to learn, to do, to live.

Following Mrs. Stephen's address, Mr. W. F. Stephen told of a high tribute paid to the Women's Institute at their last meeting of the National Health Council in Ottawa, where Dr. Young, Chief Health Officer of British Columbia, stated that if he had any health measure that he wanted carried out he gave it into the hands of the Women's Institute and it was always done effectively. In this Dr. Young was supported by the Chief Health Officers of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Mrs. Reece of Athelstan sang with fine effect a spring song "Wake Up" which enlisted an encore when she rendered "All the world loves a lover."

Dr. Brunt of Macdonald College, gave a very interesting and timely address on "Rural Life and Literature." He said that part of his work was to teach girls from the rural towns and country. He found that many of them were not as well versed in the ordinary things of the country as could be supposed and their education in literature had been more or less neglected. The fact that man is supposed to live "by bread alone," or altogether by work, indicated that there is another side to our nature. When we are interested in our work there is joy. The boy or girl brought up in the country sees things from a creative standpoint and this should be impressed upon their mind, but too often this is neglected and therefore the rural worker often has not that joy in his work that he might have. The country worker creates things, the city dweller is often an automatic machine. The speaker said he was often amazed that rural folks take so little interest in their own surroundings. He thought that something must be wrong. He said that life is an adjustment of our inner life to the outward. The country boy or girl even if placed in a rich environment of natural art is not always appreciative of it while the city child would become enthusiastic trying to grow a geranium so as to get some color and beauty. He wondered if the rural folk appreciated the fresh air, the blue sky, and the varied color with which they are surrounded.

Touching on literature he told of a man who was journeying through the Alps in Switzerland. He was busily engaged reading a book and from time to time his wife called his attention to the beautiful scenery all about him, but he did not see it. The book he was reading was a description of the Alps. This was literature gone mad. Sometimes we cry out eyes out in reading about "Little Nell," but we are not moved when we read that thousands of babies die in Montreal each year because of unsanitary conditions. He said that literature was a record of everything that men thought. Go back to primitive man in Southern Europe or other places and we find inscribed on walls certain pictures of animals, etc., that tell their story. Man was no sooner created than he wanted food and then made a rude attempt at art, thus have the expressions of the ages been preserved in our literature. Literature stands for four things. First it is the record of thought. If there was no record of thought each new generation would commence at the same place as the old one, now they commence where the former generation left off. Second, literature is an opportunity to a further effort. It spurs us on to nobler things. He contrasted the altitude of the lark singing in the sky to the mole digging underground. He likened the lark to the beauty of poetry and the other to the sombre prose. Third, because literature is beautiful, it is a justification for its existence. He referred here to the fairy tales which were artistic facts of life that were very beautiful and appeals to the individual, particularly to the child. On being asked as to the modern stories, he said it was better to read something than nothing at all, as then the imagination of the mind was developed. Fourth, poetic literature brought inherent rhythm. All persons are more or less susceptible to rhythm which has come from the earliest period of man. Following out these four thoughts the speaker showed the great possibilities of development in reading good but varied literature.

At this part of the program Miss Sellar and Dr. Douglas rendered a piano and mandolin duet which was deeply appreciated by the audience. Mrs. James McKell of Riverfield, then moved a vote of thanks to the speakers. To Miss Sellar, Mrs. Reece and Dr. Douglas for their splendid entertainment, and to the people of Huntingdon for their hospitality and to all others who contributed to the success of the meetings. This was seconded by Mrs. Reddick and unanimously carried.

The singing of the National Anthem closed a very interesting and profitable day.

THE ASTONISHING ADVENTURE OF JANE SMITH

BY PATRICIA WENTWORTH
AUTHOR OF "A MARRIAGE UNDER THE TERROR," ETC.

The idea of descending into the passage again, of creeping up to the laboratory in order to put back the lists before they were missed filled her with shuddering repugnance. To allow her mind to dwell upon this idea was to become incapable of carrying it out. She therefore held her attention firmly to the endless names, and drove an industrious pen. She had to get up twice for more ink. Each time as she stretched herself and walked the few paces to the table and back, she thought came to her like a cold breath, "It's coming nearer."

At last, in the dead stillness of the sleeping hours, the lists were finished. She pinned the copies on to the cupboard ceiling in the same way that she had pinned the originals, carefully covered with a piece of cartridge paper. Then she took the originals in her hand and faced the necessity for action. Her feet and hands were very cold. She felt as if it were days since she had had anything to eat. She wanted most dreadfully to go to bed and sleep. She wanted to have a good cry. What she had to do was to go down into the passage, possibly rat-tat-tat passages and risk waking an Amurthis Uncle out of his beauty sleep. Jane gave herself a mental shake.

"Don't be a rabbit, Jane Smith," she said. "It's got to be done. You know that just as well as I do. If it's got to be done, you can do it. Get going at once."

She got going. First she put the lists back in her stocking top. Then she put on the old serge dress. Her fancy played hopefully with the thought that some day she would give herself the pleasure of burning that abominable garment. She extracted the maroon felt slippers from the paper parcel to which she consigned them. They were still sopping. She put them on. They felt limp, damp, and discouraging, but they had the merit of making no noise. Then she took a good length of candle and a box of matches and opened her door.

"Well, here goes," said Jane, and stepped into pitch darkness. This time she shut the door behind her. As she took her hand off the handle she felt as if she were letting go of her last hold on safety, an idiotic thought, as she instantly told herself. She knew by now just how many paces took one to the place where the light should have been burning, and just how many more to the stairhead. The rose window showed like a pattern painted on the dark. It gave no light, but it marked the position of the door.

Jane felt the soles of her feet stick and cling to the damp slippers as she crawled down the stairs. They just didn't squelch and that was all; they only felt like it.

She hated moving the big chair in the dark, but it had to be done. Suppose she dropped it with a crash, suppose she pulled Wiloughby Luttrell's picture down when she was feeling for the catch; suppose a mouse ran over her foot—there is no end to the cheerful suppositions which will throng one's brain in circumstances like these.

Jane did not drop the chair with a crash, neither did Wiloughby Luttrell's picture fall down, nor did a mouse run over her foot. She passed through the panelled door, shut it behind her, groped her way to the foot of the steps, and lighted the candle. It was then that the cheering thought that she might perhaps encounter Henry came to her, only to fade as she remembered how long past midnight it was. However, if she had not Henry she had at least a light. It is much harder to be brave in the pitch dark even when, as in the present case, the darkness is really a protection.

Jane walked quite blithely up the second passage on the left until she came to the point where she knew that she must put the light out again. Molloy might be awake. She blew out her candle and began to feel her way forward. She came to the corner and passed it. Moving very slowly and cautiously, she crept up to the study gate and stood with her finger-tips on it, listening, and thinking hard. She could feel that the gate was ajar. That struck her as strange, very strange. If there ever was a man badly scared, Molloy was that man when she had said that the secret of the passages was not confined to himself and Ember. Yet he had gone to sleep leaving the gate slightly ajar. Had he? Jane's mind gave her a clear and definite answer. He had not, he would not. She had been so sure that the gate would be shut, so ready with her plan. She was going to unfold the papers, push them between the bars, and jerk them as far across the room as possible. Molloy might think they had fallen from the bench, or, if he had his her stocking. She was still holding the unlighted candle in her left hand. The list bothered her. She moved toward the bench to put them down, but first she laid the candle carefully on its side so as not to stub the wick, and, sitting down, began to smooth the papers out upon her knee. It was whilst she was doing this that she saw the note.

It lay on the end of the bench propped up against a book. It was addressed to Jeffrey Ember, Esquire. The capital E's were magnificent flourishes; an underlining like an ornamental scroll supported the superscription. Jane, like other well-brought-up people, was not in the habit of opening letters not addressed to herself. It may be said, however, that no solitary scruple so much as raised its head on this occasion. She tore open the rough linen envelope, and unfolded a lordly sheet. Molloy wrote a good, bold hand and legible withal. Every word stood clear.

"My dear Ember—I'm off. The place is getting altogether too crowded. I've seen Ronata, and she tells me that there are two men use the passages. One has a beard, but she couldn't tell me their names or describe them further. She knows all about the passages herself. She confessed to having found them through following Number One. She has also seen you come in and go out. I don't think this place is very healthy, so I'm making my get-away whilst I can. Drop the whole thing and get out quick, is what I advise. I'm staunch, as you'll find. Why did you take the lists after saying you'd leave them for me to look through? I'll not work with a man who doesn't trust me. You can write me at the old place."

The letter was signed with a large Roman three. It appeared that Mr. Molloy was more careful over his own identity than over that of Mr. Jeffrey Ember. Jane sat looking at the letter. It made her feel rather sick. If she had not come down, if she had shirked putting the papers back, if the letter addressed to Jeffrey Ember, Esquire, had reached Jeffrey Ember's hands—well, it was a good enough death-warrant, and Molloy must have known that very well when he wrote it.

"It's exactly like a Moral Tract," said Jane. "I hated coming back, and I did it from a Sense of Duty, and this is the Reward of Virtue."

She put the Reward of Virtue down rather gingerly on the bench beside her. She felt about touching it rather as she had felt when she touched the slug. She wanted to wash her hands. An odd creature Molloy. He had given her away exactly and completely, yet he had left her any small shred of protection which she might be supposed to derive from passing as his own daughter.

Jane turned her thoughts from Molloy to the more pressing consideration of her own immediate course of action. Ember would come in the morning, and would find Molloy gone, and no word to say where he had gone, or why. The idea of following in Molloy's footsteps, of imagination. Why should she stay any longer at Luttrell Marches? The idea of getting away set her heart dancing. And what was there to stay for? She had all the evidence necessary to procure Ember's arrest and the smashing of the conspiracy. The sooner she was out of Luttrell Marches and with her precious papers in a place of security the better. For a moment she contemplated taking the originals of the lists; Ember would naturally conclude that it was Molloy who had gone off with them. But on second thoughts she decided that it would be in the highest degree unwise to put Ember on his guard. His distrust of Molloy might be so great as to induce flight. She decided to leave the originals and to take the copies—but she had left the copies in her room, pinned to the cupboard ceiling. Go back for them she could not. Even if she could have forced herself to the effort, the risk was too great. They must stay where they were, whilst she found Henry. The sooner she got off the better. She had no watch, but the night must be very far spent, and if Ember were to take it into his head to come back—

The bare idea brought a shiver to her feet. She picked up her candle, lit it, and with feelings of extreme satisfaction set to Molloy's letter.

making a little pent roof of it like the beginning of a cardhouse on the stone floor. She had often admired the way in which masses of compromising documents are consumed in an instant by the hero or heroine of the adventure novel. She used four matches before she considered that this particular letter was really harmless. The envelope took two more. Then she collected the ash very carefully, crumbled it up well, and scattered it amongst the rubble in the broken-down passage where Molloy had found her. Then, having taken a good look round to make sure that nothing compromising remained, she picked up her candle and passed through the gate, leaving the laboratory in darkness behind her. When she came to the turn she hesitated, and finally went straight on, following the passage which she had not yet explored, down which Molloy and Ember had come the day before. She was almost sure that it would lead back into the main corridor just short of the headland exit; but she had not gone more than a yard or two along it when she heard something that brought her heart into her mouth.

FACTS ABOUT TEA SERIES—No. 6

Appearance of Tea No Guide

The only way to test tea is to taste it. Many people have the idea that a finely rolled and tippy tea is superior in flavour to a large rough leaf. In reality this is not of necessity the case. The altitude at which the tea plant grows determines the amount of essential oil and alkaloid theine in the leaf. The essential oil gives tea its flavour; the theine contributes the stimulating value. The only way to insure always receiving a uniform quality is to insist upon a skillfully blended and scientifically sealed tea like "SALADA" whose reliability, goodness and delicious flavour have become a household word.

HUNTINGDON

For many years it has often been thought that it would be advisable to have the teeth of the scholars attending the Academy, Convent and R. C. Boys' School examined and if dental work were required, have the parents see to it that the child's teeth are attended to at once. Dr. J. E. Caza proposed to the school boards that they allow him to make an inspection of the teeth of all pupils in the institutions; this he would do free of charge and he would take his chances on securing necessary work from a number of the pupils. The school commissioners have just passed a resolution granting this permission to Dr. Caza and to-day he starts inspecting the children. In the event of a child having defective teeth and the parents unable to pay for having the dental work done, a clinic will be held on Saturday morning when the work will be done at the expense of Dr. Caza.

Welcome the Tourist To Huntingdon

We bespeak in our territory a warm welcome for the automobile tourist traffic which the present motoring season will bring. It is to be hoped that those who come in contact with the visitors will spare no effort to show a spirit of real hospitality to the strangers within their gates.

There are many ways by which automobile visitors especially can be made to feel so welcome that they will want to come back again. Even the average passerby in the street of whom information is asked by visiting motorists can reflect pride in his citizenship and in his town by giving service in a courteous manner.

Hotel keepers can make or break a town for visitors. In a majority of cases the impressions of most people regarding the cities and towns they visit are formed round the hotel at which they stay. If the accommodation is good, meals tastefully served and prices moderate, they are favourably influenced frequently even to the point of prolonging their stay. This means more revenue for the hotel man and his fellow townsmen.

Of course, one of the most important factors in attracting tourist trade is the quality of garage service available. Most motorists on a tour call at some garage or other either for repairs or supplies of gas or oil, or both. When the motorists finds combined with a high quality of individual service, a scale of prices which are reasonable, he carries away with him impressions which are assets to the community concerned.

Money expended by towns on the provision of camping or other facilities for automobile tourists is money well spent, and will be repaid many times.

Some people are not satisfied to do nothing, even when they have nothing to do.

A Reuter correspondent from Le Bourget says that a French pilot flew from Le Bourget to Amsterdam on Monday in one hour fifty minutes with several passengers and a considerable cargo. Leaving Le Bourget at 3 a.m. (French summer time), they arrived at Amsterdam at 10.50 a.m. (Greenwich time), thus covering the distance of about 300 miles at an average speed of about 165 miles an hour, the highest yet attained, it is claimed, in a commercial aeroplane.

TWO NORTH POLE FLIGHTS TO BE MADE IN MAY

Temperature at Pole Reckoned to be 23 Degrees Fahrenheit

READY FOR EMERGENCIES

Grettir Algarsson a young Canadian to Leave Early in May, Amundsen's Expedition to Leave Later in Month

Mr. Grettir Algarsson, the young Canadian who is leading the first expedition to attempt to fly to the North Pole by airship, expects to set out from Liverpool early in May. It is understood that the expedition is being financed by prominent business men in Manchester and Liverpool, and that the Island has been lent for the adventure by one of the Liverpool fitting firms.

Mr. Algarsson's plan is to sail from Spitzbergen and make his way by ship as near the Pole as the ice will allow, which he thinks may be within 500 miles. He will then, with three or four other members of the expedition, set off in the airship in the attempt to reach the Pole, the intention being if all goes well, to drop within 20 ft. of the Pole, to take observations, and so on, and then to continue the journey by air to the coast of Alaska. All depends upon the conditions he finds at the Pole. It may be possible to land and remain there some little time.

The "Blimp" Pattern

The airship is now being built for the expedition by the well-known firm of G. C. Spencer, Ltd., at their works at Highbury. It resembles in general type the patrol airships that were known as "Blimps" during the war. It will be approximately of 60,000 cubic feet capacity, and is a good deal longer than the Blimp type. It is more tapering in shape, so as to offer less resistance to the fierce winds that are to be expected in the Polar regions. The gondola is being specially designed for the purposes of the expedition. It is fitted with appliances that will enable the airship to float if it should fall into the sea. Some experts think it possible that the airship will be able to come down on to the water and be moored in such a way that the explorers could remain on the spot for some time. The engineering and technical details of the airship are being worked out by Commander Boothby, R.N.A.S. (retired).

The ship will be equipped to give a radius of about 1,500 miles flying under fair weather conditions, and it will be so strongly constructed that it will be able to stand up against very severe wind. The airship will be inflated with hydrogen.

In Case of Disaster
The airship will carry as part of equipment a sledge of a special construction so that in case of disaster on the ice it might be possible for Mr. Algarsson and his companions to try to save themselves by dragging their food and equipment.

They will carry in the airship sufficient provisions in a highly concentrated form to last about a fortnight. They will also take a parachute for each member of the flying crew. The pilot, who will be a man of experience, has not yet been selected.

One of the problems the experts are working out at present is the amount of petrol it will be necessary to take to serve both as ballast and fuel. The airship will be 147 feet long and 27 ft. 3 in. in circumference at the thickest part. The gondola will be about 20 feet long. The material is a kind of ply rubber with an aluminium coating inside.

The island will set out with a crew of eighteen. The ship is especially equipped for ice-boat work, and its timbers are strengthened with cement. Among the members of the expedition are several explorers who took part in Shackleton's last expedition, who was at that time a Boy Scout but is now a well equipped young scientist of twenty-two. Captain Worsley will be in charge of the Island.

The Norwegian Government has established a meteorological station at Spitzbergen, which will be used by the expedition. Mr. Algarsson's calculation is that even if the Blimp is destroyed they ought to have a fair chance of reaching safety by sledge. He thinks that the use of an airship of this kind gives at least as great a likelihood of success as Amundsen's reliance on aeroplanes.

The Amundsen Expedition
The factors which decide whether a flight to the North Pole is feasible or not are the meteorological conditions and the possibility of landing. The meteorological conditions are by no means as discouraging as a superficial study of them would suggest. If, for instance, we take the last half of May as the best time for the flight, we find that the percentage of foggy days is not higher than from 2 to 3 per cent. Moreover, the fog at that time is very local. Previous experience shows that the force of the wind is not likely to cause trouble, and the temperature, which one might expect to be very low, averages about 23 degrees Fahrenheit (or 5 degrees Centigrade). Of special interest for our flight is the fact that, at the above-mentioned time of year and in the region over which we intend to fly, the air is warmer at a height of about 1,000 metres than down by the ice.

The problem of preventing the water in the engines from freezing, if a lengthy stay had to be made on the ice, has also been discussed. But this is not likely to cause any trouble either, for by adding about 40 per cent of glycerine to the cooling water we obtain a mixture which will not freeze before 5 degrees Fahrenheit (or 15 degrees Centigrade).

Chances of Landing
An important feature of our organization is the meteorological station which the expedition will establish in Spitzbergen. The station will be put up in the middle of April in order that it may have good time to collect information of value for the flight and be able to forecast a spell of fine weather on the basis of previous observations.

The second factor which determines the feasibility of a flight to the North Pole is, as I said, the possibility of landing. No doubt a flight over the base even if no landing be effected will be of great geographical interest, and even in that case it will be possible to make meteorological observations by means of the instruments we are taking with us. But there may be a chance of landing, and, given a type of aeroplane that can land under various conditions without incurring too great risks, the flight will then be all the more interesting.

In selecting our flying machines we have two suitable types to choose between: aeroplanes with floats or skis, or else flying-boats with a bottom suitable for landing on snow. The objection to skis and floats is that the dimensions become too large when we try to keep the load per superficial unit under the maximum that experience has shown to be necessary in the different states of the snows. The advantage of having an aeroplane with floats or a flying-boat is that one can more easily choose a starting-place, inasmuch as it can start equally from the water or the ice, and that one can land on leads when there is no flat space of sufficient size, should a forced landing become necessary.

The width of a flying-boat is small, and it does not capsize so easily. If the boat is made of duraluminium instead of wood it can stand a good deal more, besides being easier to repair with such appliances as one can carry on an expedition of this kind. For these reasons we have decided to use flying-boats. The strength of these boats depends on the width and shape of the bottom, for the friction is partly the ordinary resistance as its surface rubs against the snow, and is in part due to the manner in which the snow is pushed down or out of the sides. A computation has been made of the load per superficial unit which must not be exceeded. Given a large surface underneath and a light load the boat will not sink much in the snow, and the bow of the boat will be pushed aside; in other words, there will not be much friction on account of the shape of the boat. On the other hand, the bottom must not be too large, for this will increase the friction against the snow. We believe that we have found the golden mean in choosing Dornier Wal machines, which have other very strong points as well. With the exception of the covering of the planes, which is made of ordinary aeroplanes, both for the sake of lightness, they are entirely built of duraluminium.

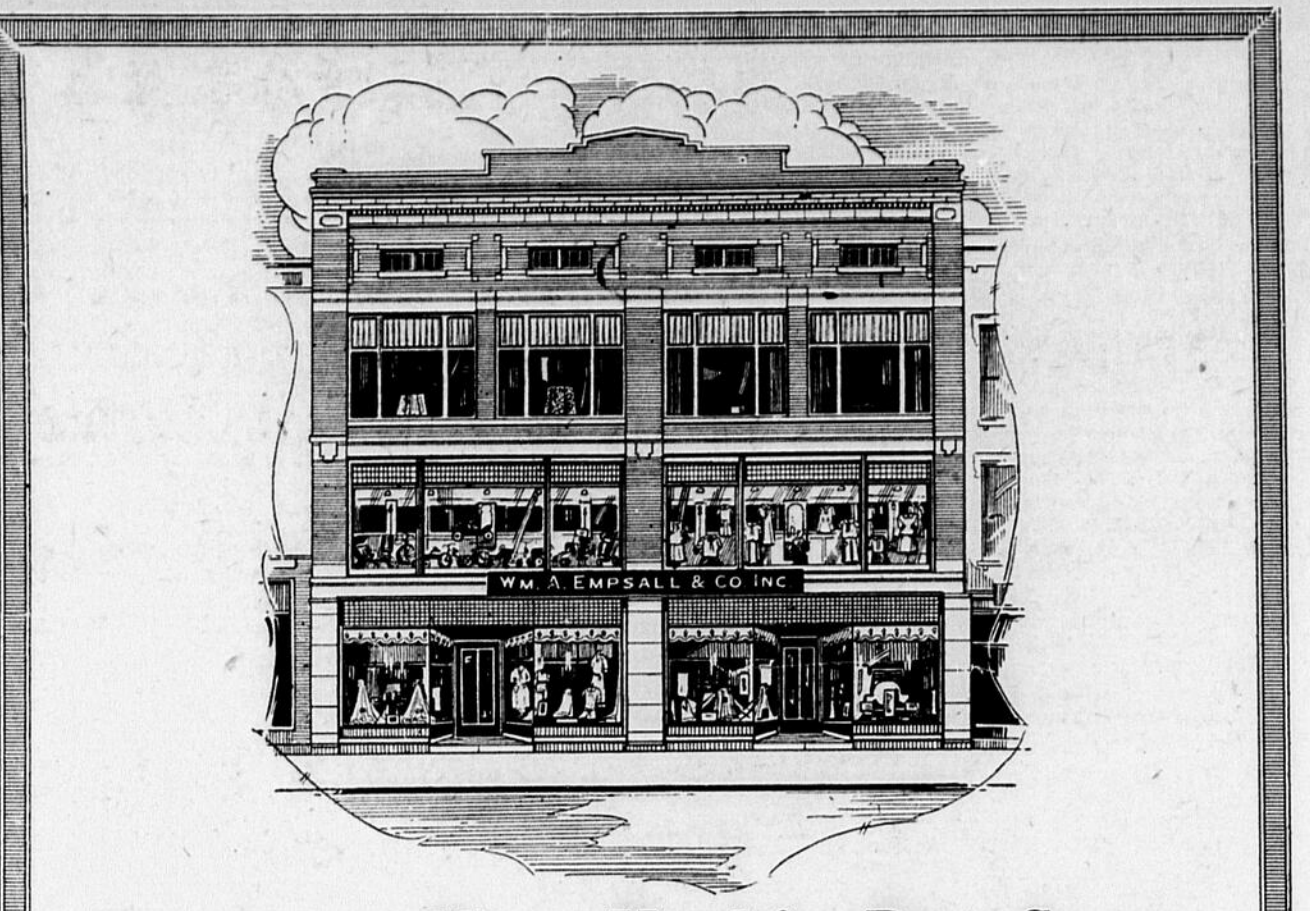

Each of our two flying-boats has two Rolls-Royce engines of 360 h.p. I could not wish for better engines. They are placed in tandem position—one behind the other—on the boat, instead of on either wing. Should one of the engines stop, the boat can be manoeuvred in the same manner as before, and when the heavier load can be carried, with only one engine working, there would be possible otherwise—an advantage which adds considerably to the safety of the boat.

My decision to use two flying-machines was likewise due to the desire to make the expedition as safe as possible for those taking part in it. If one of these machines is damaged in landing, or is forced to land on account of motor trouble, the other machine will be able to take its crew on board. If a forced landing has to be made in an unfavourable place or on ice which does not allow the undamaged machine room to start, the latter must try to find a landing-place as near as possible to the damaged machine.

In order to enable the crew of the damaged boat to find their way to the second boat if the machines have landed out of sight of each other, both will have smoke bombs on board. These, when ignited, send up large, thick black columns of smoke for about fifteen minutes. In this connection I may mention that we have also small smoke bombs which can be dropped before landing so that the pilots may see which way the wind is blowing and thus decide in which direction it is best to land. The expedition will thus be accompanied by its own relief expedition as it were.

Chances of Return on Foot
It is extremely improbable that flying will become impossible owing to the total breakdown of both machines. But we have taken such eventualities into account and are prepared for the worst—namely, that we might have to return all the way from the Pole on foot. We are therefore taking a complete Polar outfit of clothes, footwear, ski-sledges, boats, sleeping bags, rifles, shotguns, ammunition, cooking utensils, etc. As regards provisions per head, thirty kilograms of pemmican, chocolate, dehydrated milk, and biscuits—the same rations that we took with us on the Antarctic expedition. The distance from the Pole to the depot already established on Cape Columbia is about 437 miles. With provisions sufficient for six weeks, and taking twelve miles as the average day's march, we should be well on the safe side.

A brief account may now be given of the scientific aspects of the expedition and the instruments we are taking with us. For taking soundings we shall have in addition to the ordinary outfit for sounding comparatively small depths, the German Behm Ekko apparatus for deep sounding. We have a fine outfit of instruments for meteorological observations. Our compasses were chosen after thorough consideration. Both the steering and the standard compasses impress one as being first-rate in compass constructed by Goerz extremely useful. It may be described as a periscope in which the image of the sun is thrown on to an opaque glass plate with a reticle. The periscope is provided with a clockwork mechanism which causes it to revolve once in the course of a solar day. We shall make a previous calculation of the true bearing of the sun at our base in Spitzbergen, at certain intervals of time from the hour we start. Directly after starting, the periscope will be adjusted to the true bearing and the pilot will shape his course for the "North" by bringing the image of the sun on to the reticle, where he will have to keep it.

THE SUPERIOR COURT

In April 1924, James Lockhart, then of Lachine, but formerly of the Township of Hemmingford took action in the Superior Court, Valleyfield, against Hiram English of the Parish of St. Clothilde, County of Chateaugay for $500 as damages for alleged defamation of character. At the same time, Moses Cousineau of the Township of Hemmingford, took another action against Mr. Hiram English for $500, also on the ground of alleged defamation of character. The trial of these cases took place at Valleyfield during April last. Judge Cousineau, after hearing the witnesses, dismissed Mr. Lockhart's action from the Bench with all costs, and took under advisement the case of Moses English. On the 1st of May, at Valleyfield, Judge Cousineau rendered judgment in the latter case, dismissing it also with costs against the Plaintiff. James Lockhart and Moses English were represented by Numa E. Brosseau, Esq., of Valleyfield, and Mr. Hiram English was represented in both cases by W. Patterson, Esq., K.C., of Montreal.

In rendering judgment in the case of Moses English against Hiram English, Judge Cousineau spoke in part as follows:

"Considering that the Plaintiff and Defendant are cousins living in the neighborhood of each other and were equal neighbors in June 1923 of Fred Baskin, whom the defendant used to visit from time to time; that at that time and before, Baskin complained of having lost certain things by theft at different times when absent from his home and that having communicated his troubles to the defendant Hiram English, the latter, according to the testimony of Mr. Baskin and his wife, advised them to keep an eye on their neighbor Moses English; that nevertheless, Baskin never saw fit to make inquiries nor to assure himself as to defendant's statements; that on the said dates Baskin and his wife were on good terms with Hiram English, but that subsequently following a small trouble between the defendant, Hiram English and the Baskins, the latter informed the plaintiff Moses English of the alleged defamation of himself by the defendant; that the plaintiff Moses English never appeared to have been anxious about the matter nor to have taken any steps to sue the defendant nor to claim from him damages for the alleged defamation, but that Baskin himself went to plaintiff's lawyer and communicated to him defendant's alleged defamation of plaintiff and undertook to have the plaintiff sign a letter authorizing plaintiff's lawyer to take the proceedings. In a word, it was Baskin who appears to have been the instigator himself of the proceedings in damages taken by plaintiff against the defendant."

"Considering that in the face of the evidence given by Baskin and his wife, the defendant, Hiram English, who is a respectable citizen, has categorically denied ever having made any statements reflecting on the character of plaintiff; that the Court prefers to accept the evidence of the defendant in preference to that of Baskin and his wife both of whom appear to be inspired in this affair by a motive of vengeance as regards the defendant."

"Considering that another witness for plaintiff, a man named Jas. Lockhart, declared that the defendant had mentioned to him that Plaintiff Moses English had removed certain boundaries, but the witness Lockhart said nothing precise in this regard, neither as regards the date when the declaration was made, nor as regards the circumstances; nor as regards the exact nature of the declaration and that the pretended statements of Lockhart are equally denied by the defendant;

"Considering that plaintiff was wrong, under the circumstances, in placing confidence in the statements of Baskin and his wife, or to take notice of the reports which were made to him by these people, the pretended conversations with the defendant and that instituting the present action plaintiff acted rashly."

"Considering that plaintiff's action is unfounded, doth maintain the defendant's plea and dismiss plaintiff's action with costs."

Watch That Watch

If you have a watch, here are a few things to remember: Wind the watch in the morning, and not at night, as directly after winding it works best, and can thus better stand the movements of its wearer during the day.

Wind it slowly, holding it quite still in the hand and be careful to avoid any jerks.

Keep it as nearly as possible in the same position; that is, if worn in the pocket during the day, do not lay it down flat in the night.

Avoid sudden changes of temperature; do not wear it in a warm pocket all day and hang it on a cold wall at night.

Frequently clean out the pocket in which it is carried or the dust present action plaintiff acted rashly."

Did you ever think of stopping that habit of buying on credit? Cutting out altogether those store bills? May be not. Well now is the time to think it over.

J. A. H. Caza, store-keeper of St. Anicet, wants to notify you that after the 1st of June 1925 his books will be closed for credit. So, start with him, get the benefit of new prices, go where you want to go, don't be a slave to your debts.

I don't intend to make a bluff out of that, it will be cash and nothing but cash. Don't form your mind that the reductions will be made for a week or two and then return to the same old price, no it's reductions on all lines and I want to keep it.

But I will have specials every month.

The biggest slash on prices that has ever been made in this store will take place the First of June.

Watch for further advertising in the Gleaner at later dates.
