

French Domination?

So much has been said by the organs of the Tory party about French Domination, and the fallacy is still clung to so pertinaciously by some persons, notwithstanding the irrefragable proofs to the contrary, that we have been induced to look into the public accounts to see how the public money is distributed amongst the two classes of different origins; and, as money and office are power, we leave the world to judge from the following statement, taken from the public documents of 1848, in whose hands that power rests.
