That Railroad Deal

Appropos of the recent deal between the Philadelphia and Reading and the Boston and Maine, which created no little stir in the railroad and commercial world, the following interview with President McLeod will be interesting.

He was questioned regarding the significance of the recent alliance of the two systems, and reiterated the statements made by himself at the time the arrangements was completed, namely, that the two proprietors are in no way amalgamated, but that each gives something to the other, which neither had before; that it is the intention of the management to conduct their business so as to meet with the approval of the communities they serve as well as the stockholders whom they represent. Being asked about the attitude of the New York and New England as regards the Philadelphia and Reading and Boston and Maine systems, Mr. McLeod said: "The New York and New England can be made a connecting link between the two great companies, and such would be valuable. While it may be said, in truth, that many of the friends of the companies, as I understand, are pretty much interested in the stock of the New York and New England road, they do not control its management and operation, and therefore no promises or predictions as to the future of the property by outsiders should have any weight. If I feel justified, however, in saying that as the connecting link of business between the two great systems of the Reading and Boston and Maine railroads will be large if the property arrangements can be made with the New York and New England road, and a very considerable part of it will pass over it as the connecting link, it certainly must prove of advantage to that property. So far as the recent speculation in the stock is concerned, neither myself nor friends have the slightest interest in the market fluctuations. Our sole aim will be to build up the roads we control. The alliance does not contemplate the interference by one road to the other of anything except the general direction of the affairs of each, which we believe will bring to all, under their separate organizations, better results than have heretofore been accomplished.

A HAPPY FAMILY.

A DEAR BOY IS RESCUED FROM DANGER!

A Loving Mother Tells Her Story.

A Powerful Warning to Parents!

Few Canadian artists have earned a more thorough and lasting reputation as soloists and teachers of vocal music than Mrs. A. J. Lawrence, of Montreal. This lady graduated under a celebrated German professor of vocal music. Mrs. Lawrence is thoroughly familiar with the true Italian method; she has, however, very advanced ideas which are entirely in keeping with the progress in the divine art. She has adopted many of the rules and methods of the most popular masters, thereby enabling her to give the pupils the best and most improved culture in the formation of tone and technique, which are essential in finished and artistic singing.

Her husband, Master James Lawrence, who is a handsome and bright lad of about ten years. The little fellow joyously said, when asked to show his hands and wrists, "Oh, they are all right now; Paine's Celery Compound cured me!" Not a trace of disease, nor any mark of trouble could be seen; the skin was natural, soft and rosy, and the joints were perfectly free.

Mrs. Lawrence expressed the hope that parents would give greater attention to the distressing skin troubles than has heretofore been given. She believes firmly that Paine's Celery Compound is the only medicine in the world that can give satisfactory results and bring a perfect cure. She has kindly permitted us to publish her letter of testimony, and also permitted us to use her boy's portrait. Under date of October 28th, 1892, Mrs. Lawrence writes:—"I am very pleased to tell you of an interesting cure wrought by Paine's Celery Compound in the case of my little boy."

For some weeks he has been pained to see his hands disfigured with Eczema, which at times caused him much suffering.

The grand results attending the use of the Compound by my father last spring, prompted me to test its qualities in the case of my little boy. To my great joy I could see a marked improvement after a short course of treatment; and, in a few weeks there was no trace of the disease to be seen about him; at the same time his general health and appetite have been improved. Seeing that experienced mothers had informed me that my boy would always have this disease to annoy him and to suffer from, it affords me all the greater pleasure to inform you of the cure."

As announced in previous issues of this paper, the proprietors of Paine's Celery Compound are willing to furnish a class of worthy people who are suffering, but who have not the means of procuring the great medicine. Wonderful results are reported from all quarters; and hundreds of estimable people are being rescued from distressing and painful diseases. This mode of reaching the poor but worthy sufferers is commended by our best clergymen and others, and will be continued without regard to cost. To obtain the benefit of the great free offer, it is only necessary to send in a recommendation from a Clergyman, Mayor, Reeve, Justice of the Peace or Postmaster. The Projectile of the Future.

What will happen when an irresistible force encounters an impenetrable body? The conditions of the case, remarks a science paper, appear to be pretty nearly answered, so far as the force is concerned, by a shot which was fired from a 100-ton gun at a recent trial at Shoeburyness. The diameter of the gun was 16 inches, and 900 pounds of powder were used in discharging the projectile, which was solid steel, four feet in length, and weighed 1800 pounds. These figures may serve to prepare the reader for the statement that the shot went through a plate of solid steel 20 inches thick, kept on through an eight-inch iron plate, 20 feet of solid oak, five feet of granite, 11 feet of concrete and stopped—for it had to stop somewhere—in a brick wall six feet thick. Assuming these particulars to be correct, the result was an astonishing one, and a shot such as is described would go through any two iron-clad now afloat.—[French Paper.]

He Lighted the Match.

He stood on Sadbury street in front of a large, black, rough-glass sign-board, next to a window filled with illustrated sporting papers, the flaming pages of which had attracted his inebriate gaze. A Journal man watched him in his heroic endeavor. First he drew from his vest pocket a small, black pipe, and in the bottom of one of his trousers' pockets he found the lighted end of a match. He faced the rough-glass sign and slowly lifting his right leg applied the phosphorous to the under side of the up-lifted leg with a quick motion slid it along to the crook at the knee. But it did not light.

Nor was that all. The momentum caused by the quick jerk carried him up against that rough sign.

The first part of him to reach the sign was the brim of his stiff hat, and it had just time to lift itself in a sort of apologetic way when his head, closely cropped, met it with terrific force, flattening the hat and mashing the head. Then his acquiline nose, that so accentuated a strong facial outline, scraped along in perfect rhythm with the greasy front of his buttonless Prince Albert. The nose stopped first—deep in a square cut period; and almost at the same moment the tight-squeezed coat in front, caught in the tail of a shallow comma. With an automatic jerk he freed himself, and with blazing blinking eye and skin-peeled nose and hands surveyed the innocent looking mark of torture. The shock was so sudden and dazing, and with nobody or nothing in sight, in front, behind or either side of him, that he was utterly at loss to grasp the situation. Three times this was repeated. For the fourth time he braced himself in front of the sign. The match was again applied to his trousers' leg and the knee slowly lifted. But the match was not stirred. He stood on the one leg, moving as little as possible, and sort of suspiciously regarding the blackboard. Two or three paces by hunched him rudely with their swinging arms; still they did not topple him over—only the mysterious force could do that. So his eye was quite immovably fixed on the particular gory period when the charm was broken—the match began to move along the sulphur-marked torture. Half way over the surface of the match was again applied to his trousers' leg and the knee slowly lifted. But the match was not stirred. Mrs. Geo. W. Clark left on Tuesday night to join her husband in Halifax, N. S.

You can save more than a year's subscription for the JOURNAL by reading E. R. Webster's ad.

Mrs. Jondro left for Chicopee, Mass., on Tuesday, to spend Thanksgiving with her friends there.

Note the change in C. P. Story's ad. This week. He always has something worth reading.

Don't forget that F. T. Caswell, Derby Line, is in the rush. Read his new ad. and see for yourself.

When I see you! We are having a "cold-snap" with a very little snow. A little more is falling this morning.

Keep your horses in good condition for the winter. To do so, at a small expense, use Dr. Barton's Pick-Me-Up Horse Powders. See ad.

The Sherbrooke Examiner has changed its form from four to eight pages. It gives more chance for advertisers who demand "top of column next to reading matter."

We have a marriage notice sent to this office without signature of sender or of any clergyman. We do not publish such notices unless authenticated. This notice we have given before, and propose to abide by it.

Miss Grace Norton, of West Charleston, Vt., is staying at Derby Line for the winter, to continue the study of music under the instruction of Prof. Fasolt, of Stanstead College.

C. P. Story, one of the leading clothiers of Newport, has found it necessary, on account of his growing trade, to get larger quarters, and so moved into the centre store of the Lane block on Monday.

The lecture course at Newport will be held at Lane's new Opera House, which is reported to be so well arranged that none of the seats are undesirable. Over $1000 was realized from the sale of seats on Tuesday last.

Mining.—This industry is looking up throughout the Townships. Mining Engineer Mr. A. Leofred, is kept busy as he can be, all the year around, making assays, and preparing reports on American and Canadian mines.

What is the need of you going out of town to buy goods, when you can secure such grand bargains at home? Read the advertisements in this issue, and you will learn just where to purchase all goods at the right prices.

The Great Star Almanac and Year Book of Montreal is not to be out until the 22nd of this month, but it has leaked out that it is a wonderful Almanac, and there is a perfect rush for it. The scramble to get a copy of it is just tribute to its marvellous worth. It is Almanac, Year Book, Atlas, Encyclopedia and Ready Reckoner all combined.

There will be a Grand Ball at the Mephringog House, Newport, Vt., on Thanksgiving night, Thursday Nov. 24th, to which all are cordially invited. Music will be furnished by Cline's Orchestra of Sherbrooke.

The poor man Larives, who was a familiar figure in Granby for many years, passed away last week at the ripe age of 100. Granby has but few beggars, and he has now reduced the number to a minimum.

A contract has recently been signed by the Corporation of Iverville and the St. Johns Electric Light Co., whereby the latter engage themselves to light the town of Iverville by electricity.

The Granby Leader states that the Village Council have taken pity on the poverty of the C. V. R. and voted an amount to illuminate the Station yard there. Some of the leading citizens offered to pay half, if the railroad would pay the other half, but they could not see it. We wonder if any of the officials will be able to see the light.

THE BEST PLASTER.—Damp a piece of flannel with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bind it on over the seat of pain. It is better than any application on the chest and another on the back, between the shoulder blades, will often prevent pneumonia. There is nothing so good for a lame back or a pain in the side. A sore throat can nearly always be cured in one night by applying a flannel bandage dampened with Pain Balm to 50 cent bottles for sale by J. T. Flint, Druggist.
