James Brown Endows Local Institutions.—

The Will of the late James Daniel Brown was probated at Valleyfield on the 11th instant. Mr. Brown was well and favourably known throughout this district and was regarded as a very quiet and benevolent man. In his will he bequeathed to his brother, $20,000; to St. Andrew's Church, Huntingdon, $4,000; Huntingdon Protestant Cemetery, $2,000; Huntingdon Academy, $2,000; Findlayson Ross, Huntingdon, $500; Miss Hanna Cuthbert, $500. The residue of his estate was divided into fractions and devolved to Mrs. Annie McNeil, Winnipeg; Miss Mary McNeil, Winnipeg; Daniel McNeil, Winnipeg; Donald McNeil, Ormstown; Mrs. Lauria Brown, Springfield, Mass.; Horace Brown, Jr., Springfield, Mass.; Mrs. Bertha French, Brookline, Mass.; Mrs. Hilda McEwen, Pickering Ont.; Rev. J. B. Maclean, D.D., of Huntingdon and to Mrs. Margaret Whyte, of Huntingdon, who is blind.

Bowling Club Debt Reduced $340.—

Friday afternoon a meeting of the members of the Huntingdon Bowling Club was held in the Bank of Montreal. It was interesting to note that during the past year the Bowling Club indebtedness was reduced $340. The Club debt now stands at $1070.

The officers elected for the present season are: President, G. C. Stark; Vice-Pres., Alex. McEdward; Secy.-Treas., N. W. Sparrow; Executive: Paul Baldwin, W. A. Hunter, W. J. Goundry, E. C. Martin and Dr. H. R. Clouston; Match Committee: J. A. Lanktree, W. E. S. McNair and Adam L. Sellar.

Corpus Christi Celebrated.—

The feast of Corpus Christi was celebrated by St. Joseph's congregation on Sunday with a solemn procession of the Blessed Sacrement. The usual route of procession was followed and appropriate decorations were much in evidence. A beautiful repository had been erected at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. J. O'Connor where Rev. Father Derome gave the benediction of the Blessed Sacrement. The guard of honor was formed by pupils of the Convent. Hymns were sung en route by the Church and Convent choirs.

Decoration Day Brought Tourists.—

Monday was Decoration Day in the United States and a large number of our friends availed themselves of the extended week-end to spend a few days in Quebec. The Chateau was generously patronized on Saturday, Sunday and Monday, the attendance for dinner and dance on Monday night having been especially large.

Mission Band Food Sale.—

A food sale under the auspices of the Mission Band was held in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church Annex on Saturday afternoon. $10.25 was realized from the sale.

A 14 Classroom School for $110,000.—

The ridiculousness of the statement that the Huntingdon School Board has been requested to spend no money on schools in order to save money is again upset, and can be considered a joke in place of being seriously debated. A new school is to be built in Montreal and will be known as the St. Pascal Baylon School. The school is to have 14 classrooms, including accommodation for domestic science and manual training rooms. It is to cost approximately $110,000. A 14 room school would suit Huntingdon a whole lot better than what we have at present. Forget that pithyless circular, for most business men would confine it to the wastepaper basket. Huntingdon needs a new school, but we cannot have it until the Protestant School Board takes some progresive action. The Catholic School Board of Huntingdon built a new school, why not the Protestant Board with such a large municipal taxable property to support it?

Rev. Gordon R. Addie, who recently sustained severe injuries while fighting fire which threatened to destroy his home in Noranda, Que., is favorably recovering. He was removed to the hospital in Noranda following the fire and for several days was in a serious condition. Mr. Addie was formerly in charge of St. John's Anglican Parish.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Hunter are to be in Albany this week visiting relatives and friends. When in Albany they will take in the celebration marking the opening of the Albany harbor as an ocean going point.

Mr. and Mrs. Gustave Monat and son Pierre, Mrs. Lefebvre, Sr., Mrs. Charles Monat and daughter Diane, the Misses Irene Joly, Estelle Lefebvre, Helen Oliver, Anne Norman and Messrs. Ludovic Lefebvre and Rémi G. Lefebvre ow Montreal, were week-end guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Lebevre.

Mrs. Reginald French and Mrs. Oswald Renaud, of Franklin Centre, were Sunday guests of Mrs. Mary J. Williams.

Miss Sarah Tully and Miss Emily Kimball of Dobb's Ferry, N.Y., are spending a few weeks with Miss Lucy Tully.

Miss Ruth Weston, B.A., of Morrisburg, Ont., is a guest at the home of Rev. J. H. and Mrs. Miller.

Mr. Harold Miller of Queen's University is at his home for the summer holidays.

At the annual reunion of former students of Valleyfield Normal School held Saturday, Miss Lucille M. Lefebvre had the honour of having been elected vice-president of the Graduates' Association.

Mr. Moore Bannon, student in third year law at the University of Montreal won the Larue prize accorded to the student who has obtained highest honours throughout the entire third year course.

John Brown Retires from Express Service.—

For 29½ years John Brown has operated the Canadian National Express delivery service in Huntingdon. Mr. Brown has retired from this service, last evening being his last trip. In speaking to Mr. Brown, he stated that when he first commenced the work, some trains would come into Huntingdon without a single parcel to be delivered, sometimes only a few packages and occasionally large loads. The peak years for express were 1921 and '22 when it was a common occurence to be obliged to make several trips to the station in the evening, and often two trips for the morning express. During this long term of affiliation with the express service Mr. Brown has been very faithful and conscientious. The merchants of Huntingdon with whom Mr. Brown came in contact most, will regret missing his regular calls, for besides making the delivery he always had a pleasant word to speak. We know we speak for the people of Huntingdon when we say we hope Mr. Brown enjoys his days of leisure that lie before him. Mr. Paul Michaud is to conduct the express delivery and collection service, and commences his duties to-day.

Citadel Band Here June 19.—

The Oddfellows of Huntingdon and district are to observe Decoration Day on Sunday, June 19th. To assist in this Decoration Day service, the Noble Grand Gordon McLean will be materially assisted through the presence of the Salvation Army Citadel Band of Montreal. After decoration of the grave of the departed brethren with flowers, the Salvation Army Band will give a band concert in Prince Arthur Square. In the evening they will hold a special service in the United Church, and the music will be rendered by the Citadel Band.

I.O.O.F. Meeting.—

A delightful evening was spent in the Rebekah Lodge on Thursday evening at their regular meeting. A number of members from Valleyfield were up. The degree was put on and several ladies joined. After the meeting refreshments were served and a social hour was spent. Mr. Russel of Montreal gave several selections of Dr. Drummond's poems.

Fractured Arm in Fall.—

Following a meeting and initiation at the Oddfellows Lodge Room on Thursday night, Mr. Reginald Clifford of Valleyfield, went with a party of friends to the Empire Garage where their car had been parked. Walking about the garage he did not notice the oiling pit and fell into it causing a fracture of the right arm at the elbow. Dr. H. R. Clouston was summoned and treated the injured man.

Annual Meeting of Y.P.B.—

The annual meeting of the Y Society was held on Monday evening in the United Church parlor, with 35 members and friends in attendance. Satisfactory reports were given by the Officers, and the report of the Treasurer, Mr. Allan Biggar, showed a balance in the treasury of $68.54. Plans for a picnic in June were discussed. The following Officers were elected: Hon. Pres., Mrs. Thos. Kelly; Hon. Vice Pres., Mrs. Robt. Sellar; President, Miss Frances Turner; 1st Vice-Pres., Miss Elsie M. Sellar; 2nd Vice-Pres., Miss Eva G. White; Secretary, Miss Florence Farquhar; Treasurer, Mr. Allan Biggar. The following were elected as Superintendents of the several Departments; Flower Mission, Miss Dorothy Davis, Mr. Irvin McWhinnie; Parlor Meetings, Miss Dorothy Davis, convener, Mr. James McCoy; Press Correspondent, Mr. Gordon Ferry; Sailors and Lumbermen, Misses Alice McCartney and Ina Milne; Church notices—Presbyterian, Mr. Irvin McWhinnie, United Miss Eva G. White; Committee to send fruit to sick, Miss Dorothy Davis; Car conveyance, Messrs. Russell Hay, and Colin Campbell. After the business meeting a social hour was spent in games and music and ice cream and cake were served. The meeting closed with the singing of Auld Lang Syne.

Y.W.A. Meeting.—

The Presbyterian Y.W.A. met at Miss Frances Turner's on Friday afternoon, 25 present. Miss Martha Hamilton who has finished her first year in the Deaconess Training School, Toronto, was present and spoke briefly. A duet by the Misses Eleanor Moody and Grace Ryan, accompanied by the piano and guitar was enjoyed. The lesson was on Japan. Lunch was served by Mrs. Evans and Miss Turner.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Baskin of Barrington, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. George Harrigan, Huntingdon.

We are pleased to report that Miss Martha Hamilton has passed successfully the first year examinations at the Presbyterian Missionary and Deaconess Training Home, Toronto. Since early in April she has been engaged in survey work, having made over 5000 calls.

On Tuesday afternoon, the W.A. of St. John's Church met at the home of Mrs. James Johnston. Rev. Mr. Hatcher presided at the opening ceremony while Miss Helen Kelly supplied the music. A very pleasant afternoon was spent by all the members and friends present.

During the past week Mrs. Holmes, of Notre Dame de Grace and Mr. and Mrs. Davy and daughter of Montreal were guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Kelly, Fairview Ave.

HOME DAMAGED AT BEAUHARNOIS

Overheated Chimney Cause of $6,000 Fire at Rev. J. D. Anderson's

ACCIDENT AT PAPER MILL

Eighteen-inch Cement Walls Broken by Pieces of Flying Steel

An overheated chimney was the cause of a disastrous fire in the home of the Rev. J. D. Anderson, D.D., at Beauharnois, last Saturday evening at seven o'clock.

The family had just finished the evening meal, when the fire was first noticed in the chimney of a small built-in fireplace. The alarm was immediately turned in and was responded to by the local brigade. The fire had taken a firm hold between the walls, floors and in the roof. From first appearances it was feared that the whole house was doomed, but the three hose lines which had been connected, flooded the house with water and placed the fire under control. Fire Chief Caron pronounced the fire out at nine-thirty, but placed six firemen on guard till midnight, and two others remained on duty till early morning.

The loss is estimated at $6000. and is partly covered by insurance to the value of $4,500.

Accident at Paper Mill

The Howard Smith Paper mill was the scene of a serious accident last Thursday morning at eleven o'clock.

Due to some unknown cause the governor of the engine driving the main shaft of one of the big machines, did not function properly, with the result that the engine ran wild. The huge two hundred foot shaft under the whole length of the machine increased to such a speed that the pulleys and gears on this shaft were broken to bits. The shaft itself resembled a corkscrew after the accident. The large steam main was broken, releasing live steam into the shaft cellar. No one was in the cellar when the accident happened which accounts for the fact that there were no casualties, as large holes were broken through eighteen inch cement walls by pieces of flying steel.

It is understood that the damage is covered by insurance.

J. Buchanan Rollit Won Moyse Travelling Scholarship

For the first time one of the much prized Moyse Traveling Scholarships, of which two are offered each year at McGill University each having a value of $1,500, has been won by a former student of Huntingdon Academy. The announcement of the winners was made by Principal Sir Arthur Currie during the convocation proceedings Thursday.

The scholarships, established to commemorate the "splendid services of Dr. Charles E. Moyse, for 42 years professor of English, during 16 of which he was dean of the faculty of arts and vice-principal of the university," have this year been awarded to John Buchanan Rollit, B.A., former student at Huntingdon Academy and now residing in Westmount, and David L. Tough, B.A., of Paris, Ont.

Both students obtained their Master's degrees with signal distinction. Mr. Rollit had a brilliant career as a student, obtaining his education at Huntingdon Academy, Westmount High School, and McGill University, where he graduated with the B.A. degree at the end of last session with first class honors in economics and political science, obtaining, as well, the Montreal Manufacturers' graduate fellowship.

During the past session he has been engaged in research in the department of economics and political science under Dr. J. C. Hemmeon on the problem of railway and motor vehicle competition, submitting a thesis for his Master's degree on "The Taxation of Motor Vehicles." He will continue research work next session in the London School of Economics on the co-ordination of railway and motor transportation, rounding out his studies with special survey trips to Germany and France.

Mr. Rollit is a son of Dr. J. F. and Mrs. Rollit, formerly of Huntingdon.

CHATEAUGUAY LIBERALS MEET

Officers Re-elected at Annual Meeting County Ass'n.—Hon. Mr. Mercier and Gontran Saintonge, M.L.A., Speakers

The annual meeting of the Chateauguay County Liberal Association was held at Ste. Martine on Saturday afternoon with an attendance of more than three hundred supporters of the Liberal cause.

The meeting was presided over by the president, E. G. Mahon and the first item on the agenda was the election of officers. This resulted in all former officers being re-elected. Honorary Presidents—Pierre Laberge, Chateauguay, and R. R. Ness, Howick; president—E. G. Mahon, Howick; vice-presidents, Donald E. Black, Aubrey, and Dr. Léopold Savage, Ste. Philomene; secretary, T. T. Gebbie, Howick. On the platform with the above officers and the two provincial members were D. J. O'Connor, ex-M.P., and W. E. Lefebvre, of Huntingdon.

Hon. Honoré Mercier, Minister of Lands and Forests, and provincial member for Chateauguay, spoke of the present policy of economy adopted by the Quebec Gvernment, and went on to enumerate the methods employed to reduce expenditure mentioning that practically no new roads would be built, but that present ones would be well maintained. The Minister also explained the new taxes which had been adopted and how these affected only the people who had money.

Hon. Mr. Mercier is a strong advocate of the return to farming and maintains that "It is the city more than the country which youth should desert." In the province of Quebec there are 82,000 square miles of regulated forest cuts but there are yet 500,000 square miles untouched and we do not know what mining possibilities are under this extent of forest; only about one-quarter of our water powers are developed and one-tenth of our lands cultivated. He drew a comparison between the condition of the farmer who received low prices for his products and the condition of the laborer and workman in the city who had to depend on organized charity for his food and lodging.

In the course of his remarks the member also referred to the new agricultural school now being constructed at Ste. Martine under contract by Boudrier and Boulais of Quebec City.

Gontran Saintonge, M.L.A., for Beauharnois defined the Liberal policy in times of stress and gave a very interesting talk on some of the many achievements of the Liberal Government in the provice. His remarks were loudly applauded.

At the request of the chairman of the meeting Hon. Mr. Mercier gave a thorough explanation of the Dillon Act concerning contestation of elections. He told of the complaints having been filled out in a lawyer's office in the city of Montreal, of the money having been supplied by a central agency, and of the people having signed affidavits without knowing what the documents were or what they contained. Speaking of his own constituency in particular the Minister explained that when questioned under oath the men who signed for the protestation did not know of any irregularities in his election, declared that they had nothing against him, and that they didn't know what they had signed. In the contestation of Chateaguay Hon. Mr. Mercier did not avail himself of the protection by the Dillon Act, but just the same the case had to be dismissed from court at Valleyfield through the fact that the prosecutors had failed to establish a case.

In his closing remarks as chairman, Mr. Mahon referred to the fact that Hon. Mr. Mercier's twenty-fifth anniversary in politics would be celebrated this fall. He then adjourned the meeting to the last Saturday in May next year.

Rev J. Webster Dead

News reached here Saturday of the death in Syracuse, N.Y., of Rev. John Webster, 85, a veteran superannuated minister of the United Church of Canada, who served the former Methodist church on numerous fields in eastern Ontario and Quebec before his superannuation in 1919.

Amongst his more important charges were those of Valleyfield, North Bay, Cobden, Renfrew, Iroquois, Spencerville, Winchester, Kingston, Kemptville and Wesley Church, Ottawa.

Since superannuation he had preached 854 times in different churches in both the United States and Canada and his closing sermon was preached at Jasper, last October. The late Mr. Webster preached in Huntingdon on a great many occasions.

He was married to Miss Leverette, of Frankville, Leeds County.

He was buried at Malone, N.Y.

London's Pall Mall

The average American and Canadian tourist may have difficulty in recognizing Pall Mall, as the "Pell Mell," to which the London policeman directs him, when he asks for the famous street. It was named after the French game Paille-mail, which was first played here in the days of Charles I. On this street were the homes of Defoe of Robinson Crusoe fame, Swift of Gulliver's Travels, Sterne of the "Sentimental Journey," and Gibbon, the historian.

Report of District S. S. Convention

The 5th annual Convention of the Huntingdon-Kensington division of the Religious Education Council of the Province of Quebec was held in Huntingdon United Church on Friday, afternoon and evening, May 27th. Beautiful bouquets of spring flowers did much to add to the cheer indoors though the weather was not pleasant outside for the occasion.

Rev. David Irwin Forsyth, General Secretary, and Miss Janet M. Doxsey, Children's Work Secretary, were both present and gave a very interesting and helpful programme at both sessions. Mr. Stanley Arnold of Dundee presided.

The afternoon session was opened and led in worship by Rev. J. H. Woodside, of Kensington. Minutes and financial report were read by the Secretary-Treasurer, after which the nominating committee was appointed as follows: Mrs. A. Mack, Miss Elsie Elder and Mrs. Geo. W. Fraser. A short address on Convention Theme was given by Miss Doxsey, the basis for her remarks being taken from II Timothy, 2nd chapter, verse 15: "Study to show thyself a workman." The number of those receiving training for religious instruction is very rapidly increasing in this province, yet the need is much greater than in former times, as the task of the teacher today is a more difficult one, owing to the fact that influences outside the church and home are being brought to bear upon the child much more strongly and at an earlier age than before. One effect of this is that boys and girls are more wide awake, their leaders therefore need be correspondingly so, and in order to equip themselves they need to follow the advice given by St. Paul to Timothy; they must "study." More than the fringes of the teacher's time must be put into their work if they meet the needs of the young mind today. The work is a vital one and it should have the whole-hearted co-operation of parents and Sunday School teachers to make it successful. Round table conferences followed, led by Rev. D. T. I. Forysth and Miss Doxsey. The discussions were very helpful to both groups.

At 4 o'clock a number of Junior girls and boys assembled where they became acquainted with Miss Doxsey and were taught a Scripture lesson by her, entitled "David spares Saul's life." Several points of interest were noted in the methods of teaching this lesson. After the class was dismissed these methods were explained to the Convention, and it was felt that a lesson so taught would be most helpful in enabling the child to overcome a similar temptation to that of David's on this occasion, in a similar manner. Handwork dramatism and the project method taught following a lesson were recommended as being helpful in further impressing the lesson on the mind of the child.

The song service in the evening was led by Rev. D. I. Forsyth, Miss Sellar at the piano. Rev. J. H. Miller of Huntingdon read for the Scripture lesson, Luke 4, 14-21, following with prayer. At the close of the worship pearied the chairman called upon Mrs. Mack to give the report of the nominating committee. The following officers were appointed: President, Mr. Stanley Arnold of Dundee, re-elected; Secretary-Treasurer, Mrs. Geo. W. Fraser, Dundee, re-elected. Additional ladies on executive committee: Mrs. Braithwaite, Huntingdon, Mrs. D. L. Brown, Glenelm, Miss A. Wilson of Athelstan and Mrs. Jas. Colquhoun of Dundee.

A short address and general discussion on the subject "Taking Stock" was given and led by Miss Doxsey. A merchant takes stock to knew whether he has made progress or otherwise during the year, therefore Sunday School workers should seriously study themselves in their own minds and know what they have done and are trying to do; in other words "take stock." The importance of familiarizing the child with, and making appreciate the Bible was stressed. Methods for doing this may be a more general and always reverent use of the Bible in our Sunday Schools. It was noted that lesson helps which are intended for the preparation of the lesson in our homes are too often found in Sunday School supplanting the Bible. It was also noted that a fewer number make use of their Bibles in church service than formerly. Why this discarding of the Bible? Are we not treading on a danger line? We need to seriously think about this. In teaching children portions from the Bible it is thought best to give the portion to be taught a setting. This will arouse their interest and help them to more clearly understand. After singing a hymn a presentation of Leadership Camp by motion pictures was given by Rev. D. I. Forsyth, and illustrated by Miss Doxsey. These pictures were much appreciated and doubtless many would enjoy spending a holiday among such pleasant and attractive surroundings and also receiving the instruction and inspiration received there. Following this presentation Rev. D. I. Forsyth led the Convention in singing a very beautiful negro spiritual song, entitled "When they crucified My Lord."

An announcement was made by Miss Doxsey of the intended opening of a school in Montreal for volunteer Sunday School workers. Mr. Archibald, who for 25 years has been doing splendid work in England where he established a College for this purpose, is returning to Montreal and will assist in this project. Most efficient leaders will be employed and a good work is expected to be done in training teachers in religious instruction. A vote of thanks was given Miss Doxsey and Rev. D. I. Forsyth for their very helpful and interesting programme; also a vote of thanks to the kind friends in Huntingdon who opened their church and their homes for this occasion. This motion was moved by Rev. J. H. Woodside, and seconded by Mr. Jas. Wallace, and carried unanimously.

The closing address of the evening was given by Rev. David Irwin Forsyth, his subject being "Making People Care." Two pictures were brought to our mind by this address; the one of the person who does not care for others, who travels through life without taking time or caring to help those by the wayside, indifferent to the needs of the youth growing up about them; such lives must needs break down as did the fine appearing maple tree referred to by the speaker. This tree from no apparent reason crashed to the ground, but upon examination was found to be insect eaten inside. The other, brightly ending picture is of the person who cares. Two fine illustrations were given, one of a young man who travelled far on through a bitter cold night to see a sick friend who needed him and though he suffered severe frost bites seemed unconscious to his suffering his heart was so happy because he had brought help to his friend; he cared. The other was about a Sunday School teacher, who though discouraged at times, kept on trying to do her best and was rewarded by learning some years afterward that through her teaching she had led a boy to know Jesus at a time when she had felt her teaching was not bringing desired results. She had cared enough to keep on and was made happy. Those who care enough for others to give of their time and effort sufficiently to help are following in the footsteps of the Master who when nailed to the cross, in the midst of His awful agony, asked for forgiveness for His enemies, and brought the poor thief out of darkness into a world of hope. He cares. There is great danger to the careless. Keep thinking day by day until we care. A hymn and Benediction brought this Convention to a close.

Mrs. Geo. W. Fraser, Sec.-Treas.

The Programmes of Our District Women's Institutes

Set Programmes Entice Many Women to Become Active Members of an Institute—Members Gain Considerable Information From Speakers Versed in Set Topics

The Chateauguay-Huntingdon W. I. recently issued a booklet containing the programme of each Institute for the current year. In all 72 interesting programmes have been arranged, remarkable for the diversity of interest as well as the instruction afforded. For the most part, coming activities appear to be confined to the membership, which is a very healthy sign. The secret of successful organization is to keep everyone busy and interest is sure to be maintained. Aubrey-Riverfield will have papers on "Pioneer Days on the English River" and one on "The River of the Loyalists." Six short Biographies of noted people by different members and an address on "Folklore." Current Events by Each Convener and Community Singing are to be given attention. A Picnic, Annual Supper in October, a spelling match and sewing bee are interesting diversions in store for Aubrey W. I. and their friends.

Dundee Institute have selected a main topic for each meeting and on June 1st, Dr. J. C. Moore, M.P., will discuss "Tuberculosis, Prevention and Treatment," and a demonstration of an Invalid's Tray will be given by Mrs. J. D. Ferguson. For July they have an exhibit of relics, antiques, old-time costumes and a paper on Our County Catering to Tourist Trade. August is devoted to Canadian Industries with a paper by Miss Lefebvre and demonstration of Electrical Appliances. Household management will be discussed in September and a "Farm Girl's Budget on $150. a Year" by Mrs. Wm. Fleming. An Ideal Education for a Farmer's Daughter and an exhibit of copies of famous pictures will introduce the subject of Education in October.

November has been devoted to Legislation with a paper on What a Woman Should Know About Banking and a discussion on the value of Insurance. Roll Call—A Traffic Law. In December Dundee propose to deal with the subject of Christmas in a thoroughly comprehensive manner. Pros. and Cons. of eliminating Christmas gifts; demonstration—handmade Christmas gifts; exchange of gifts; paper—Are we Losing the True Christmas Spirit; Roll Call—How to Spend a Christmas Holiday. Hospitality is the main topic in January—Little Courtesies Worth Knowing and Observing; demonstration: Proper Introductions; Roll Call—A Duty of a Hostess. Should husband and wife holiday apart will be discussed in March.

Franklin Centre will hold a Birthday Party for King George on June 3rd with patriotic music and current events discussed. At an evening meeting in July when Mr. C. E. Petch will give an address on "Orcharding and Insects," followed by a White Elephant Party. This mysterious event will probably have nothing to do with the K. K. K. A social afternoon with the Grandmothers is promised for August at which the Roll Call is to be "My Oldest Dress and Hat." In September a demonstration on Hairdressing will be given and practical ideas on pickling. The October programme sounds interesting with a discussion on Education and ways to help the school; demonstration of quilt and crochet patterns; a book review and a spelling match. November will provide an address by Dr. Tolmie with practical ideas on invalid dishes and school lunches; a demonstration on photo-coloring and current events. December calls for an address on the League of Nations and World Peace by Rev. Mr. Duncan, with Events of the Month and Christmas Carols. A Debate in February: Resolved that a woman who spends two hours a month at a Club is a better home-maker than one who does not," and a roll call Why I Belong to This Institute will stimulate interesting ideas among this group.

Ormstown 23rd Annual Exhibition

The renowned exhibition of eastern Canada held each year in Ormstown opens its gates to the public for the 23rd time on Tuesday next. The exhibition which lasts for four days is unquestionably an asset, and an advertising feature for the benefit of Chateauguay Valley. Without Ormstown Exhibition one could hardly imagine the farms of this district being populated with such highly bred purebred dairy cattle. This district is noted for its dairy produce, which we believe has contributed materially towards reducing the infantile death rate in Montreal, due to our supplying pure, wholesome and clean milk free from bovine tuberculosis.

With the breeding of superior dairy cattle our farmers have developed an instinct for better stock throughout the farm. Ormstown Exhibition has encouraged the farmers to breed and rear better horses to work on the farm, and for that very reason we will see the best of horses to be found in Canada exhibited at Ormstown Exhibition next week. What can be said of cattle and horses is equally as applicable to swine, poultry and sheep, but on a much smaller scale.

As has often been said, we again repeat that, "Ormstown Exhibition is the Show Window of the Chateauguay Valley." The Directorate, exhibitors and many people in and about Ormstown have united and harmoniously worked for the building up of this exhibition. They have succeeded and it is now up to the people of the District and elsewhere to acknowledge their efforts by attending the exhibition as often as it is possible.

Profit Again Through Ormstown

Our Protestant School Board of Huntingdon continues refraining from making any progress towards building a new school. One Commissioner has stated that the Department of Education has sent out a printed circular requesting the Boards to refrain from building. What of that? If a Commissioner lost his barns or house by a fire, would he not rebuild today when building costs are low? He needs his barns, he needs his home, and being without them, but has his farm, he would certainly decide to build.

Huntingdon has a school population, but it has not a suitable school to accommodate all the pupils. Ormstown is in the same position, but they are showing alacrity, whilst the Huntingdon board, in part at least, is dormant.

Ormstown entered Consolidation after Huntingdon. Ormstown needs more class-room accommodation. In today's Gleaner is an advertisement calling for Tenders to tear down the present school in part. Tenders are being received for the building of new class-rooms.

Today many contractors are without work and from all appearances at least a dozen bids will be received for the building of the Ormstown School. Contractors bidding for the work in this manner indicate their willingness to do the work cheaply, in order to get employment. They have few jobs to go to today, so they will do what work they have well, therefore Ormstown can rest assured they will get a good school building and it will be cheap.

Irrespective of the fact that Huntingdon School Board had seen many object lessons, they are still slow to move. Dundee built a school; Howick built a school, St. Joseph's Parish, Huntingdon, built a school, and now Ormstown is to build one. Huntingdon, one of the principal places in regards to being foremost in regards to educational facilities lags behind, and sees its nearby places stepping ahead. It is gratifying to see these forward steps being taken, but it is exasperating to think that an intelligent community as is Huntingdon should not have modern and sufficient school building accommodation for its children.

What About Young Canada?

During the past few years there has been a tendency on the part of many college professors and some others to find fault with the growing young men and young women of the day. Much of this criticism is unfair, unjust and unreasonable, but that has not made it any the milder. The youth of the day have been pictured as careless, thoughtless, irreligious, profane, indolent, drunken, disrespectful of authority, and generally vicious and useless. In a measure the description is no more than a portrayal of the youth of a by-gone age, of any by-gone age. It is but a caricature of the spirit of youth—the carefree soul, the high spirits, the love of adventure, the restlessness and the assurance of youth, all run wild, unrestrained. There has been nothing wrong with the youth of this present generation, unless it be its parentage—parents too busy, too careless, too indolent or too incompetent to see that youth kept its feet and its head. This is not a condemnation of any individual parent. Many parents have been worried to the breaking point, because of the general situation that made it practically impossible for them to guide and to guard their boys and girls from the supposedly modern ways that did not seem right or good. It is a condemnation rather of the age of parents who condemn this age of youth. All through the ages men whose own youth would bear but little investigation have mourned around the chimney corner at the degenerate youth they imagined they saw growing up around them. Yet each age has made some little advance in the better things of life. The youth so roundly condemned has developed into better manhood than their fathers and left the world a little better than they found it. Dissolute youth, degenerate youth! Their manhood has given the lie to the charges against their happy, reckless boyhood and girlhood. The boys and girls under the test of responsibility in each succeeding generation have shown the true stuff of which they have been made. It is true that youth grown into manhood forget their own younger days and look with severity upon the escapades of the next generation. Perhaps, it is no more than the way of the world. Perhaps, it is a blessing in disguise, to hold down the exuberance of youth. In any case there seems to be no true case against the youth of to-day. Whether there is a case against the older folks of the present is another question.

With youth given a fair chance there will be little reason to fear for the coming generation. All history proves that fact. But at the present is youth given a fair chance? The unemployment question for the moment overshadows all else, but its relation to youth is not sufficiently emphasized. It is only right, only fair, only reasonable, that preference in employment should be given to those with families to keep. Under present conditions there is nothing else that can be done. But consider where this policy must leave the youth of the land! A young man leaves school or college after equipping himself as best he could to take his place in life. He does not want to be a burden on his people. He is indeed anxious to lift a little of the load that has been carried by his parents in the hope of giving him a chance in life. There are literally tens of thousands of such cases in Canada to-day. They go hopelessly from one firm or industry to another seeking work and finding nothing but discouragement. It was one of the big objections made to the "dole" so-called in Britain that young men were born, as it were, under the dole and entered active life in the world simply as pensioners under that dole. Such a system, it was argued, could not hope to be other than evil—breeding indolence, hopelessness and discontent. The system today in Canada is even worse. Fancy one or two young men, unable to secure work, seeing their family living on straight charity—direct relief! The Governments promised work! It is work and work only that decent Canadians need and desire. With work they will look after themselves. There is enough work needed for the development and expansion of this country to keep all employed. There is no valid reason, no fair excuse, why employment should not be provided and the people of this country work their own salvation. The fact that during the past year work of this sort cost too much is no fair argument against the plan. The answer is that all improper profits, all overlapping, and everything else that verges on graft should be wiped out. If this were done, every dollar expended would hasten the return of prosperity for Canada. Neither is there any real reason in the suggestion that Canada can not afford to take on the heavy expenditures required. As a matter of fact Canada can not let its people starve. Canada can not let its youth deteriorate in idleness and hopelessness. Give the youth of Canada a chance! The future of this country depends upon the young men who today can find no place for themselves. Under a general employment scheme they would look after themselves.

Fisherman's Line in Chicken Coop

Various methods of fishing are being used by fishermen, resulting in the capture of ordinary perch, bass, trout, and so forth, and sometimes fisherman's luck results in the capture of members of rare species, like the cowfish, dogfish, catfish, paddlefish, boarfish, bottlenose, bullhead, butterfly fish, eagle ray fish, wall-eyed pike, and even wolf fish and rabbit fish, but it is most unusual to see a "fisherman" go in for "chicken fishing." This addition, however, was discovered by a resident of Bouthillier street, at St. Johns, Que. This man, who was the owner of some fifty chickens, discovered from day to day that some of his birds were vanishing in a very mysterious manner. It was only following a long and patient vigil that he discovered his chickens were being "fished out" of the coop, by a neighbor. The equipment used was that of the ordinary fisherman, a long line, fishhook, and meat bait. The owner of the chicken coop, although at a loss to understand the disappearance of his birds, did not report the case to the police. For some time, and now and then, a fine chicken would be missing and a search for the missing rooster always proved futile. On one or two occasions, very healthy birds were found lying dead in the coop. The cause of death also could not be determined. The doors of the coop were always locked and never found to have been tampered with or forced open. The owner of the chickens, whose name was not divulged by the police, made up his mind that the only way to solve the problem, would be to hide in the coop and follow the movements of the birds. Following a long and patient wait, the watcher finally saw a chicken being pulled up in the air and about to pass through a window of the coop. It was rather dark in the coop and the man had not seen the "line." Astonished at the mysterious way the bird was being lifted in the air, the watcher nevertheless ran after his bird and pulled it back to the floor of the coop. The line was then discovered and severed; the bird was immediately killed and an "autopsy" was performed by the proprietor of the chicken coop. The paunch of the dissected chicken was found to contain an ordinary fish-hook with a piece of meat attached to it. The angry man then rushed to the home of his neighbor, who had a shed adjoining his chicken coop, and extorted from him an admission that he was the "fisherman." Following some plain talk to the culprit, and his undertaking that he would not fish any more in his coop, the proprietor of the chickens dropped the matter and even refused to report the case to the police.

Boys Suffocated in Refrigerator

Two little boys, one six years old and the other five, were suffocated in an ice box in a vacant apartment in the village of Scotia, near Schenectady, N.Y. The little lads were Robert Nicholson, six year old son of John Nicholson, and five year old William Rice, Jr. The Nicholson boy was dead when found nearly six hours after the disappearance of the children. The Rice boy died at a hospital. The children had been playing around the Rice home all afternoon. About 5.45 p.m. they disappeared. Police and neighbors aided in the search, which ended a little after 11 o'clock when the father of the Rice boy found the lads in a refrigerator in a vacant apartment above that occupied by the Rice family. Frank L. Craig, owner of the house, said the vacant apartment had been kept locked and that the children probably found the key which was hidden about the premises. Whether the refrigerator door was closed by the children themselves after they crawled inside or whether a gust of wind banged it shut is not known.

Miser Fooled a City

Discovery was made that Obadiah Markle, old-age pensioner recently given a pauper's funeral by the city of Hamilton, left a bank account of $14,000. A member of a law firm interviewed a woman in Toronto, believed to be his niece. The bank book was found hidden in Markle's bed by Mrs. Kent, 36 Park street, after he died in her rooming house last month. At first she considered the book worthless, but investigation by her lawyers disclosed it was good for deposits totalling $14,000, made in a local bank over a long term of years. Local old age pension officers also checked up and verified this. They will demand return of the pension payments, and the city will demand return of the money spent on his funeral. Markle, although never known to have regular work, was always dapper and neatly dressed. Prominent business and professional men, believing him a worthy object of charity, often assisted him. Friends got him into the home for the aged and infirm in 1929. He was 75 years old then. When the old-age pensions act came into effect that year he received a full pension of $20 a month, but as the home kept $18 of it, he moved out in December.

Horse Drowns Two Men

Accidental death was the verdict returned by Coroner Prince in the case of Samuel Braitman, 43 years of age, of McMasterville, Que., and of Romeo Vincent, 17 years of age of Chambly, Que., who were drowned in the Little Montreal river. Evidence was to the effect that the two men were crossing the river on a scow towards Meunier island. They had on board a horse and a cow. As half of the trip was completed the horse began to rear and finally fell into the water, causing the scow to overturn. A third man on board, Joseph Vincent, father of one of the victims, managed to catch hold of the overturned scow and was rescued. But his son and Braitman clung to the frightened horse and were drowned with the animal. The bodies were recovered some time later.

Hard Earned Funds Went

"Madame Esther," a fortune teller, and two unknown confidence men vanished from Rochester, N.Y., and with them the $3,000 life savings of two Rochesterians, one of them unemployed. "Madame Esther," a gypsy, convinced Mrs. Rebecca Zuckerman, who answered the fortune teller's newspaper advertisement, that she ought to draw her $1,000 from the bank and leave it with her for two days, so that the money would be touched by the gypsy charm and bring good luck. When Mrs. Zuckerman went back for it she learned that "Madame Esther" had moved. Quinto Ferraro, a laborer who has had no work recently, drew his $2,000 savings from the bank and lost it to the confidence men, who employed the age-old "handkerchief game."

Midget and Wife Separate

Outweighed and outclassed by his wife of normal stature, Howard A. Knowles, widely known screen and stage midget, described in Probate Court at Barnstable, Mass., a few days ago numerous domestic battles in which his wife, formerly Ruth Hoyt, vaudeville star never failed to get the nod. "Once she threw me 12 feet across the kitchen. I landed under a chair," Knowles told Judge Colin Campbell. Mrs. Knowles held a 90-pound weight advantage, scaling 158. Other dimensions were proportionately out of line. Knowles, for instance, is 3 feet, 6 inches high. His wife is 5 feet, 6 inches. The couple's domestic difficulties were aired before a packed courtroom in the midget's suit for absolute divorce, alleging cruel and abusive treatment. Mrs. Knowles in her own behalf, told the court that her husband contributed little toward the support of herself and their two children. The divorce action marks the end of an amazing romance which began in the old days when both were troupers in different acts. Their bookings threw them together and their friendship ripened into love. They married in Newark, March 27, 1927, and their nuptials were hailed as a great event in theatrical circles.

Frenchmen Now Living Longer

Frenchmen are living longer these days, according to statistics recently published, showing that they are fast catching up with the American, Englishman, German and Scandinavian. Before the revolution, the average span of life in France was 28 years and 9 months, 38 years in 1825, 40 years in 1880, 45 years 9 months in 1900 and 48 years in 1910. The war made it difficult to keep to figures, but it is estimated that the average length of life in Paris was 52 years and 3 months for men and a little less than 56 years for women, from 1920 to 1923. In 1911, there were only 13,901 persons more than 80 years of age living in the capital, nearly twice as many women as men, by the way. In 1926, the total had risen to 16,671, with the women nearly thrice the number of men. Figures for 1931 show that the number of people who died in every 1000 was 13.6 compared with 17.2 in 1909 and 30 in the year 1830.

Stained With Royal Blood

A unique carpet, stained with the blood of the murdered Russian Czar, Paul I, has been added to the Museum of Applied Arts in Leipzig. In 1782, the carpet was presented by the French King, Louis XVI, to Paul of Russia, who was then Crown Prince. Paul succeeded his mother, Catherine the Great, to the throne in 1796. His short rule was marked by various oppressive measures taken against the Russian peasants. Thousands of free peasants were made serfs and given away to his favorite courtiers. A palace conspiracy put an end to his reign and life. When he was assassinated the carpet now acquired by the Leipzig Museum was drenched with his blood.

To Avert a Quarrel

Linen masks to conceal the faces of her poker-playing guests were devised by a Warsaw hostess. Stakes had grown high at a game of poker started during a party which this lady was giving. Some of the players began to get very excited and distressed when they lost, and it seemed as though their expressions of disgust might lead to a quarrel breaking out at any moment. But the lady quickly cut out masks to hide the faces of the players, and the game proceeded harmoniously until the early hours of the morning.

Woman Heiress at Eighty

To take possession of a fortune of about $180,000,000, a white-haired Armenian woman, Marianne Djanikian, 80, has gone to India with her two sons. In 1882 Eli Amirhanian died in India and left the large fortune. His will stated that it should not be turned over to his heirs for 50 years. The fortune, administered by a group of lawyers, has grown until its value is now estimated at £36,000,000. With the expiration of the 50 years, the executors searched for the heirs and found Marianne Djanikian, a grand daughter.

May Seize Large Bequest

The Chinese nation has been left a fund of 1,500,000 lire (about $75,000) to be used to fight aggression by European powers under the will of Enrico Basse, who died at Bolzano, Italy, recently. Chinese diplomatic representatives in Rome have taken steps to secure the bequest, but it is doubtful if they will be successful. It is believed that the Italian government may confiscate the bequest under the law which makes invalid "bequests harmful to the public welfare or morality."

Hailstones Kill 13 in India

A fall of hailstones—some of which were reported to be nine inches in diameter—killed 13 persons and injured 120 others in villages surrounding Allahabad, official messages reported. Cattle were driven wild by the stones, which fell during a terrific thunderstorm. Some livestock jumped from cliffs and into wells, the messages said. The entire mango crop in the district was ruined, houses were smashed and large buildings severely damaged. The messages said "millions of rats" were killed.

Five-Year-Old Leads Orchestra

One of the youngest orchestras in America, led by a talented 5-year-old boy, has been formed at Seattle, Wash. Ten children, ranging from 3 to 7 years of age, make up the group under the direction of Ethen-Ann Reinig, former director of the Hollywood Baby Orchestra. Jackie Wroten, 5, conducts the orchestra, and Jackie Le May is master of ceremonies, making all announcements.

Four Legs, Three Wings

A chick with four legs and three wings emerged from an egg in the Yorkton, Saskatchewan, hatcheries. This freak was the object of a close scrutiny by many of the townspeople during the past two weeks. The two extra legs are useless to the chick as is the extra wing.

You Can't Get Away From Use of Wood

Smetimes it appears as if the people of the rest of the continent thought that there is nothing but woods up in this North. As a matter of fact it may be noted that one thing that troubles a lot of people in the town of Timmins, for example, is that there are so few trees here. People in town who have planted trees around their homes guard them with as much care and anxiety as their youngsters or their flowers. Nevertheless although the towns in this North have appeared to have been determined to leave not a tree standing in any of the centres, everything forces attention here to the value of the forests and their products. If the pulp and timber business of the Noth could get back on as good a basis as it was some years ago, there would be work for all and there would be no depression. Between the governments and the high finance crowd, however, the pulpwood and lumber businesses have been shot to pieces, and there are even pessimistic people who pretend to believe that the industries will never come back. There is reason to believe, however, that the water will be squeezed out of a lot of stock. There will be hardship for many, but eventually the forest industries will be more truly prosperous than ever. There are supposedly sophisticated people who affect to suggest that wood has lost its popularity and is being replaced by other materials. In answer to this it may be noted that every day seems to see new uses for wood discovered. The average man does not stop to think of all the many uses made of wood in everyday business. An advertisement published recently in a trade paper gave a list of some of the uses. Here is the list! Check it up! In most cases you will know at once that it is correct in the matter mentioned. A little study will prove the truth of any of the other items. And nearly any item on the list will suggest to you several other uses for wood that are not listed. Here are some of the uses given:—

"Arising in the morning you step on a wood floor and continue to do so almost continually until retiring at night.

"You lock or unlock your wood door.

"You burn wood as kindling or in a fire place.

"You invariably use wood stairway.

"You read a newspaper made from wood.

"You sit at a wood table or desk on a wood chair.

"You use a wood pencil.

"You use a match made of wood.

"You smoke a wood pipe.

"You glance at pictures in wood frames.

"You wear rayon socks, ties, shirts, etc.; they are made from wood.

"Cigarettes, confectionery, and other food products are now wrapped in cellophane, made from wood.

"The records you use on your phonograph contain wood flour.

"Certain parts of your radio, also your auto contain wood flour.

"The linoleum in your home is made with wood flour.

"In your coal—wood mine props are vital in mining it.

"A great deal of the twine you now use is made from paper. Similarly upholstery webbing in your arm chair is made from twisted paper twine.

"The modern ocean steamer contains more wood than the frigate of Nelson's day.

"Railways use wood in car construction, ties, bridge timbers and trestles.

"Plywood and veneers and the many composition boards with their thousands of uses are made from wood.

"The modern steel skyscraper uses more wood during construction than the buildings constructed before the inception of the steel structure.

"Wood boxes and cases are used for packing of almost every commodity existing."—The Porcupine Advance, Timmins, Ont.

Death Adder Fourth in List of Deadly Snakes

The Australian death adder is said to have long borne an undeservedly bad name. People said the death adder was the most virulently poisonous of Australian snakes. Now Mr. le Souef, director of the Sydney zoo, states that it is not nearly so fearsome as has been imagined. The average farmer will say emphatically that the death adder is one of the most dangerous reptiles in the bush. At the week-end a man was bitten by one. The fact that the bite had little ill-effect on him prompted inquirers to seek Mr. le Soeuf's opinion. Mr. le Souef declared that he would have been surprised if the man had died, as he would rank the death adder as only fourth among Australia's poisonous snakes. The most deadly is the tiger snake, capable of killing a healthy man in 70 minutes. Next comes the brown snake, a potential killer in two hours. Then, says Mr. le Souef, the black snake, which can make man desperately sick for 12 to 24 hours, but gives him a chance of life. Then the death adder and other varieties.

Very Ancient Eggs

What are believed to be the oldest ostrich eggs in the world have been unearthed during excavations at Maadi, a suburb of Cairo. They were found perfectly preserved in a large earthen jar, and it is estimated that they are over fifty centuries old.

BETTER BRAN FLAKES

Canning Without Sugar

By Mrs. P. M. Tourond, Spalding, Sask.

Last year when the canning season opened, financial embarrassment seemed the chief obstacle. To can fruit without sugar! Well, I decided to give it a try. The first in season were wild strawberries. I sterilized my jars as usual. The berries were picked clean and washed, and then placed in an open kettle in a hot oven for ten minutes. Then I packed them tightly in the sterile jars. I filled the jars with boiling water to half inch of the top, and partly sealed them. I processed them according to standard time for that particular fruit. Some housewife would object to this process of canning, but to my astonishment the berries are all good, none spoiling so far. Furthermore I canned other wild fruits such as raspberries, blueberries, sloanberries and also rhubarb, using the same process. It saves considerably on the number of jars in use as well as solving the sugar problem. When one gets a sugar supply in the fall, then as a jar is opened it may be served in different ways. The fruit remains as fresh as when picked and retains its natural flavor.

Rhubarb

The rhubarb is cleaned and cut in about one inch lengths and then placed in an enamel dish with just enough hot water to cover bottom of dish. When heating, the rhubarb is stirred constantly to prevent burning. Heat thoroughly, then pack tightly in sterile jars. No water is required to fill jars. Process as per schedule. Rhubarb packed in this way is as fresh and as tasty as when picked out of the garden.

Gooseberries canned in this way, without sugar, have a tendency to ferment. High bush cranberries are kept fresh when packed in open crocks and covered with cold water and placed in a cool, not necessarily dark, place. Change water about every two or three weeks and you will have cranberries as fresh as when picked. They can be dried successfully, but lose a great deal of their flavor in the process, yet they can be used in making sauces, catsup and delicious puddings and pies.

Fresh Pork

Another item, which helps wonderfully in planning a menu is the canning of fresh meat in the spring or summer whenever slaughtering occurs. The fat can be salted down or rendered as desired. The lean, such as the hams and forequarters, may be cured, smoked or canned. Usually I roast a few lean cuts and season to taste. When tender, I cut the meat in small pieces and pack neatly in sterile jars. The jars are then filled with meat stock or boiling water. Jars are partly sealed, then processed. Again I boil the boney cuts until tender, cut in small pieces, then pack in sterile jars. Stock is used to fill the jars, then party seal and process. Another way is to grind meat scraps in food chopper, adding half quantity of chopped fat, seasoning and spices according to taste. The sausage meat is then thoroughly mixed with other ingredients mentioned. The mixture may be put in casings or else just made into patties. These are fried a delicate brown and placed in sterilized jars and processed same as other meat. If jars are not plentiful the fried patties may be arranged in lacquered tins or crocks and covered with fat. The tenderloins, dressed, roasted and packed in sterile jars will also serve an appetizing dish. The head may be made into headcheese, seasoned and packed the same way. These various ways of preparing meat, pork, beef or fowl offer a variety of dishes during hot summer days. It can be served cold as well as hot. Meat prepared in this way is a great help to the busy housewife in preparing a quick lunch or a meal, as a farm wife is often called upon to do.

Monarch Before His Birth

Sapor, king of Persia, probably holds the record for the earliest age at which a king has been crowned. He was crowned about two months before he was born. His father, the reigning king, died at that time, and an uncle, finding the throne vacant, organized a usurpation. The queen, anxious for the succession of her son, proclaimed a coronation ceremony and had her unborn child crowned in her own person. Such was the veneration of the people for the dynasty that the ceremony was effective in forestalling the uncle's usurpation. The child proved to be a boy and ruled as King Sapor.

ADVERTISING for the MERCHANT of TO-DAY

HAROLD S. EDGAR

A series of weekly articles on advertising and merchandising prepared for the merchants of the Chateauguay Valley with the co-operation of the Huntingdon Gleaner.

Window Signs

In one of my earlier articles, I mentioned the various types of window signs and recommended the use of small panel signs, to be used in various locations in the floor of the window. Small panel signs are signs which carry your name and perhaps a slogan, either cut out, embossed, or painted, which are used in your window as part of your display.

I find this type of sign being used most effectively and therefore am giving further details regarding it. There are several different types of these signs from the best and more expensive type to a very simple and inexpensive affair.

A most effective sign for an exclusive store is by the use of individual block letters cut from blocks of wood about two by four inches, or even larger if the windows are very large. If the letters are about two inches thick and made flat on the bottom they will stand by themselves. A careful placing of these letters in the window will be an asset in attracting attention.

If the letters will fit into a space not more than 30 inches long they can be mounted on a permanent base which will make it easier to move when the window is being changed. Have the base made in a wedge shape—a little higher at the front than at the back. This will throw the light from window lights onto the face of the letters.

A neat little name plate can be made in the form of an electric sign lighted from behind and illuminating a glass transparency. This type is very effective after the main lights of the window have been turned off, if a flasher plug is used in connection with the sign. The main difficulty with this type of sign is in making it effective for both day and night use, as a glass transparency which is effective at night is usually not clear when the sun is shining in the window. Some stores use a small panel of bronze with raised letters.

A very serviceable sign can be made by having the name engraved on a brass plate which is then chromium plated. The letters are then emphasized by finishing them in black. This type of sign is easily kept shining, and the initial cost should be around ten dollars.

A number of merchants use a sign which is cut by a fret saw. There are a number of varieties. Some have the name written in a scroll and have the sign cut from a single piece of thin wood. The supports are bent wire fastened to the back. Others have individual letters cut and mounted on a panel background. Some cover these letters with a metallic substance sprinkled on while others paint the letters. The background is usually varnished. This is not an expensive type of sign, and can often be used for other window signs beside the name. Avoid letters which are hard to read. Avoid fancy borders. Make them simple and clear.

The painted panel sign is still a popular type of sign, and will serve the purpose for many merchants. There are various types. Some run a panel across the full length of the window with large letters. I prefer a smaller sign which is movable. The panel on which the name is painted is better if the block is triangular in shape on the end. This will give a flat bottom to the sign to enable it to stand alone in the window without any support, and also give a proper slant to the face of the panel, so those standing in front of the window can read it easily.

Some signs have a small support fastened to each end of a wooden panel, but there is the danger of this piece being broken off. Others have a support fastened in the centre. This does not make as sturdy a sign as the solid base mentioned above.

If you are using a painted sign, be careful in your choice of color schemes. Choose colors that will suit the types of goods you can display. Choose colors that will stand out. Choose colors that will withstand the sun. Have your signs frequently repainted. A faded sign detracts from your display.

It is difficult to specify any particular sizes for window name signs, as it depends largely on the length of the name to be shown. Letters need only be large enough to read from the sidewalk in front of the store or from passing cars on your side of the street. Your larger sign on the outside identifies your store from a distance.

Generally speaking I would say that a window name sign should not be over 4½ inches in height, or more than 24 inches long.

One of the main advantages of all the above types of window signs is the flexibility with which they can be made part of the display. They can be placed in any position in the window. They can be put in the front of a display, or they can be placed in the centre of a display of small articles. They show up well when put on an angle at one side of the window. If the object display is a large one such as a stove or a refrigerator, the sign can be placed immediately below, or at one corner of piece displayed. In this way your name is automatically associated with the object being displayed.

Next Week—COLOR IN YOUR WINDOWS.

Corsica Worth a Visit

Those who want a short holiday off the beaten track will appreciate a visit to the French island of Corsica in the Mediterranean, says a traveler. Its rugged mountains and superb forests tower up from the sea as do those of Norway. The island is covered with pines, beaches and chestnuts, and, like nearby Italy, has acres and acres of olive yards. The artists who have long favored the island for its beauty called it "the impossible island," where unbelievable loveliness, not found elsewhere, become true and seen by all. At Ajaccio is to be seen in the Palace Letitia, the birthplace of Napoleon Bonaparte with relics and memories of his career.

The Wisdom of the Tree

Near a mansion on the side of a picturesque mountain stood a big locust tree. During a storm, one summer day, lightning clove the big tree, ripping a great dash down one side of the bole.

The man who owned the tree fearer that it would die. Spring came. The tree awoke from its sleep and sent out myriads of blossoms. And the bees came to the tree on their annual outing for honey.

Then nature began to heal the tree's wounds. A little green edge of fresh bark appeared on each side of the great rent, and in a few short seasons the big tree had recovered from its hurt and stood forth again in grand majesty.

This is a world of lightning strokes. Difficulties come of their own making—out of mistakes, out of ignorance. They pounce upon us like a stroke of lightning. And we exhibit our hurts, our difficulties, and feel comfort in pity. How foolish! To dwell upon our troubles magnifies and perpetuates them. The old locust tree hastened to cover up its affliction with a new growth. It never missed a blooming.

Let us be as wise as the locust tree.

Gather Honey For Ants

A German scientist who has been studying ants says that these insects probably deserve to rank as the world's heaviest eaters. They eat half their own weight at a meal, and all of this banquet is sugar, or "honey dew." The scientist computes that the 100,000 population of the average size ant heap annually collects and consumes more than 22 pounds of sugar.

This huge amount of sweets was found to be supplied by the ants' own "domesticated animals," or plant lice. The lice are free to "graze" on forest vegetation, event to the topmost leaf of the tallest tree, but are carefully attended by their masters and constantly drained of the sugar they obtain.

Obituary

The late Robert Roy Forrester

The death occurred on Tuesday, May 24th, 1932, of Robert Roy Forrester, aged 16 years, 2 months, third son of Mr. and Mrs. George Forrester, Lower Ormstown. He had been suffering from an attack of pneumonia for the past two weeks, and all that medical skill could do was done but all in vain. He was a member of the Presbyterian Young People's Society and Sunday School and his name was among those about to join the church but his illness prevented him from being present at the communion. The funeral service took place on Thursday afternoon, a short service at the home at 1 o'clock and at the Presbyterian church at 2 o'clock. The services were conducted by Rev. W. Ross, assisted by Rev. Mr. Payne. The services were largely attended showing the esteem in which he was held. The pallbearers were Mervyn, Lorne and Bert Forrester and Argyle, Arnold and Russell Milne. Interment at the Union Cemetery.

Man's Food Consumption

A healthy man, with a normal appetite, who reaches seventy has eaten 700 times his own weight, according to the calculation of experts of the faculty of Paris. They have figured that in his span of seventy years the average man of 140 pounds would have eaten 13 tons of bread, 15 tons of vegetables, 7 tons of meat or 13 whole cows; 7 tons of fruit, 1,600 pounds of candy and sugar, drunk 15,000 quarts of milk and 20,000 quarts of beer, in Europe, or water, in America.

The world measures a man's worth with the yardstick of appearance. One sight, he's doomed . . . . or made for life.

Shabbiness may cover the brains of a genius . . . . that counts for nothing. The appearance of success must be there before the world will cede it.

Appearance always counts! More so today than ever! Lefebvre apparel alone will carry you far on the road to success.

Oil From Tung Tree

For centuries the Chinese have grown tung oil trees in a primitive way and manufactured oil from their fruit by the crudest methods. Yet this oil has been the chief paint oil of China and has become the basis for some of their finest lacquers, for the waterproofing of their finest fabrics and the main vehicle for their paints. From the soot of tung oil has been made the finest "India" ink. The oil has been used for dressing leather, for waterproofing silk and for oiling and calkink junks. The tung oil tree is a beautiful ornament. It has large leaves like the catalpa and a profusion of white blossoms in Marih. It grows rapidly, giving a pleasant shade while still young. The tree was introduced into the United States in 1905.

Reply To Historical Sketch Of Presbyterians Of Ormstown

To The Editor of the Gleaner,
Mr. Adam Sellar,
Huntingdon, Que.
My Dear Mr. Sellar—

I enclose herewith a copy of the reply to charges preferred against St. Paul's United Church, Ormstown, P.Q., in a lengthy historical sketch reported to be written by Revd. A. S. Reid, D.D., Montreal, P.Q. We request that you will give it a prominent place in your next issue. Thanking you in anticipation.

Sincerely,
On behalf of St. Paul's,
A. F. POLLOCK,
Minister of St. Paul's United Church

In replying to the charges preferred against the officials, organizations and congregation of St. Paul's United Church, Ormstown, P.Q., we would state.

1st. That the charge of undue influence in favor of Church Union is not correct. The opponents of Church Union within the Congregation had been exceedingly active, before the Unionists in the Congregation took any action whatever in favor of union, and moreover, in so doing the Unionists were but following the leading advice given by the Courts of the Presbyterian Church in Canada which the writer of the historical statement well knows. From that time on, both sides did their utmost. Why therefore should those in favor of Union be criticized and censured for their faithfulness to the guiding hand held out to them by the Mother Church: the Presbyterian Church in Canada and seek to enter the union with her?

2nd. Re. The number of names on the voters' list, the following extract from the minutes of the Session ought to settle for all time the charge that more voted than there were names on the Roll. On January 8, 1925, the Congregation met prior to adjournment and was constituted with prayer. Revd. D. N. Coburn spoke briefly to the Congregation, requesting that they refrain from applause when the decision of the vote was made known. The Clerk of the Session was then called to declare the results of the Poll which were as follows:—

Total names on voters list—629.
There were 543 votes cast.
Three hundred and three in favor of Union—303.
Two hundred and thirty-seven (237) opposed to Union.
And three spoiled ballots.
Majority in favor of Union—Sixty-six (66).
This meeting was closed with the Benediction.

JOHN HASTIE, Session Clerk. D. N. COBURN, Moderator

And if this is not sufficient evidence, I give below an extract from the document presented by the Presbyterian minority of St. Paul's Church, Ormstown, P. Q., to the Quebec Commission.

Voters on list 629.
Votes for Union 303, equal to 56%.
Votes against Union 237, equal to 44%.

3rd. Re decision as to those entitled to vote. Rev. A. S. Reid, then clerk of the Montreal Presbytery for the Presbyterian Church in Canada had been written to by the Clerk of St. Paul's Session, asking for information as to those entitled to vote on church matters and gave the following reply:

(First) That it rests entirely with the local Session as to whose name shall be on their Communion Roll. Also the length of time that any name shall be retained on the Roll, in case the member is absent from Communion.

(Second) Only those in full Communion whose names are on the regular Communion Roll have any right to vote on church matters.

(Fourth) Re irregularities in connection with the vote taken in St. Paul's.

4th (a) The charge that the ballot box had been tampered with and the seal broken is absolutely untrue and of this we have positive proof, even to a recently signed statement that all things were regularly and honestly done by one of the men Mr. Reid states signed the affidavit charging irregularities, etc.

(b) The scrutineers were furnished with a voters list in due time.

(c) The statement about certain scrutineers not being permitted to count unused ballots at the close of the vote is also untrue. In fact it never was requested.

5th. The request for the use of McDougall Hall was made prior to June 10, 1925. This request was "peremptorily refused" because the matter of Church Union had not then been settled by Act of Parliament.

6th. Regarding the statement that the only item of consideration offered to the non-concurring Presbyterians at Ormstown through the Church Property Commission was to the effect that the United Church at Ormstown would sell them the former Methodist Church for the sum of $5000., a property estimated at $20,000 by the Unionists, but said property was afterwards sold to the Roman Catholics at Ormstown for $2,500 and St. Paul's considered that they were doing well in the sale thereof. To this misrepresentation we call the attention of the public to the following minute taken from our Church Minute Book: "The following resolution was passed at a joint meeting of Committees of St. Paul's Church and the former St. John's Church, held in St. Paul's Church on October 10, 1926. Moved by Jas. Winter, seconded by H. B. Patton, that the Non-Concurrents be given the former Methodist Church for three years at a nominal rental of $1.00 per year with the option of buying it outright at once for $5,000, or at the end of the three years period at $6,000, and if the church is bought outright that the west half of the Glebe land north of the highway be given along with the Church at this price. Carried unanimously.

Rev. Dr. Wilson and Messrs. John Hastie and W. G. McGerrigle were appointed to sign papers to this effect before the Commission appointed by Government for settlement of Church properties and to attend meetings of Settlement Committee to be held in Montreal on Oct. 12. 1926.

(2) The property was not sold to the Roman Catholics for $2500, but for the cash price of $4000.

(3) The offer of the Church for $5000. with half the Glebe land still remaining unsold would have made the purchase price round $4000.

(4) The Non-Concurrents were invited by St. Paul's Unionists to make use of her church sheds as formerly, which offer many of the congregation accepted and are still making use of the same with the good will of St. Paul's.

In concluding our reply we make the following observations:

(1) We note that the writer of the slanderous publication after charging the Unionists in St. Paul's congfegation with all manner of irregularities, and dishonesty in general, finds cause at the close of his historical sketch for thanksgiving that God was operating throughout for their advantage.

(2) If the scrutineers had been treated as he represents why was not justice demanded at the time, instead of waiting nearly six and one half years to officially make said charges. Moreover, such charges were not made before the Quebec Commission. Why?

(3) A statement was signed at the close of the vote by all scrutineers to the effect that the vote had been conducted in a manner satisfactory to both sides. This document was entrusted to the Session Clerk, John Hastie, for safe-keeping. And the important papers even including all ballots are in his possession at the present time.

(4) The charges against the Quebec Property Commission composed as it was of outstanding disinterested men is not a pleasant reflection at least.

(5) The members of the Official Board of St. Paul's United Church have passed a resolution exonerating her organizations and officials from any complicity, or unfairness, in the matter of the church union vote.

(6) In presenting our refutation of the serious charges preferred against us and represented in your paper as coming from the Clerk of the Montreal Presbytery of the Church of the Non-Concurring Congregations, for the fair and thoughtful consideration of the general public we ask them to judge of the situation for themselves. And so far as we are concerned this press controversy on this important matter is ended.

We have dispassionately stated the facts and can verify all statements we have made. We have nothing more to add, except that in British fair play an apology is due St. Paul's.

This statement was prepared by a Committee of the Official Board, at the Boards request. It afterwards received the approval of the Official Board our Law and Legislation Committee, Montreal and the Congregation of St. Paul's, with the request that it be printed in full in the Gleaner from which paper the charges have been broadcast.

ELECTRIC HOT BED EXHIBIT AT ORMSTOWN

Beauharnois Electric Co. Ltd to Feature Electrical Hot Beds in Industrial Building

The Beauharnois Electric Co. Limited has been following the developments taking place in regards to commercialized hotbeds equipped with electrical appliances for quite some time. The following reports of a visit to Isle Jesu, where these appliances are operating to a marked degree and making handsome profits.

Electric hotbeds were first used in Norway about ten years ago. Their development since then has been rapid. In 1929 there were some 24,000 square yards of electric hotbeds in Sweden, and over 19,000 in Germany.

The first installations in the United States were made about five or six years ago, and the electric hotbed is rapidly gaining favour in that country.

In Canada, the use of electric beds is just beginning, but the possibilities are practically unlimited.

It should be realized, however, that the electric hotbed here discussed is on employing electric heating and is not to be confused with experiments which have been carried out with a view to stimulating growth by electricity, without heat. The idea is simply to replace the manure at present used to provide heat (through decomposition) by electric heat in the soil.

Heating cables are placed about six inches under the soil in the hotbed frame, and the soil temperature is automatically maintained at any temperature desired.

Advantages:—1. The soil temperature best suited to any particular product can be selected and maintained by thermostatic control. This greatly improves growing conditions and prevents plant loss due to extremes of temperature.

2. Crops may be advanced or retarded at will. By bringing a crop to the market a week or two earlier higher prices are obtained.

3. Several successive crops may be raised per season without moving the soil in the bed to replace manure, whose heating value lasts only about 6 weeks.

4. The hotbed is clean, inexpensive, and easy to operate. It is free from ammonia fumes.

5. A uniform temperature is maintained throughout the hotbed. In a manure heated bed the heat is invariably concentrated at the centre, and the plants near the edges are of poorer quality.

6. Considerable labour savings are effected, as once installed the bed can be used for several seasons without disturbing the heating cables, and all costs of transporting, placing and changing manure are eliminated.

7. The hotbed can be converted into a cold bed simply by turning off the current.

Cost: The cost of installation is not excessive, and because of the durability of the equipment used can return its cost many times to the owner.

The cost of power, if the hotbed is properly constructed, compares very favourably with the cost of manure, particularly when the many advantages of the electric bed are considered.

Suitable power rates are available for electric hotbed operation.

At present, the Shawinigan Water & Power Company has installed electric hotbeds at Ste. Dorothée, L'Abord à Plouffe, and Oka Agricultural Institute. It is expected that many installations will be made during the summer for next season's operation.

GRAND OPENING ARRANGED FOR ORMSTOWN EX.

150 School Children to Take Part in Opening Programme Tuesday Night

HICKVILLE RUBE BAND

Industrial Hall Floral and Domestic Manufacture Exhibits to be Greatly Increased

The entries for Ormstown Exhibition closed on Monday, but owing to the mail, delays might be incurred, so that it will be impossible to say just what the entry will be until Tuesday night's mail is checked over. At the time of going to press, Secretary W. G. McGerrigle informed the Gleaner that he had every hope of seeing the entry equal that of previous exhibitions. The fact that the Federal Government grant was received, making it possible to increase the prize awards to 70% of that listed in the premium lists, has had its telling affect.

Tuesday night sees the opening of the 23rd annual exhibition, which is today considered the premier live-stock show of eastern Canada. It is a show we are all proud of, and one we might well all pull together and give it unanimous support through giving it patronage. Tuesday night will be a great night for the children of this District and their parents. Last year, Tuesday night was considered one of the finest performances presented during the four day show. Under the able direction of Mrs. Lindsay, Directors D. A. McCormick and H. H. Chambers claim the exhibition to be presented by 150 school children will merit a good attendance. The Ormstown Chautauqua recently held, conducted a dress parade. As a result of this parade four young people were presented prizes for the excellence of their make-up. These four prize winners will figure in the school children's parade, dressed in their prize costume and driving in the old habitant vehicle called a "caleche." Ormstown, as its floral emblem, selected the rose, and to complete the children's parade, a float will be seen depicting "Ormstown's Rose." Those who have seen the rehearsals proclaim the event to be something really well worth seeing. On Tuesday night the children of the district are admitted free to the show.

Besides the children presenting this feature attraction a number of the Wirth & Hamid attractions will be presented. The Hickville Rube Band is to furnish the music throughout the exhibition.

The horse classes that will be judged on Tuesday evening will be those open to the District of Beauharnois.

Wednesday and Thursday nights the beautiful cattle parades will be presented. On Friday night the horse parade will be featured.

Upon inquiring about the Industrial exhibits we were informed that Macdonald Tobacco Co., Canada Linseed Oil Mills, Beauharnois Electric Co., Holstein-Friesian Association, DeLaval Cream Separator Co., Lake of the Woods, and The Gleaner have all reserved spaces. The Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, have reserved 50 feet of space for their educational and interesting display that is always fascinating.

The Women's Department which will be exhibited in the Industrial Hall points to being greatly increased over that of 1931. The prize list and classes have been greatly extended, and will naturally draw a greater variety and number of entries. What applies to the fancy work and domestic manufacture, is equally applicable to the floral exhibit. To see the features of Ormstown Exhibition do not fail to visit this department.

Caring for the Public

One of the problems that has always confronted the Ormstown Exhibition has been that of catering to the public in regards to meals. To help fill this gap the women of St. Paul's United Church are shouldering this responsibility and are operating the dining hall in the building directly opposite the main arena. It is sure to be a laborious task, but with the ladies taking this matter in hand the show people can feel relieved for they know the public will be well served, and as a reward for their efforts they are sure to net a handsome sum.

The public love to be amused, and so it is that the Canadian Amusement Company will be present with their midway attractions.

Everything indicates to Ormstown Exhibition being well maintained and now what is wanted is good weather and a bumper attendance. Go yourself, and take your friends.

On each side of the passageway leading to the altar were several little tots wearing summery dresses with angelic wings attached to their shoulders making a pretty symbolism. Solemn benediction of the Blessed Sacrament was given. The procession then returned to the church where final benediction was given.

Mexican Treasure Trove

A small bagful of pearl and gold beads, some of them almost too small to handle, have been added to the Oaxaca treasure trove, discovered in a Mixtecan tomb at Monte Alban. Prof. Alonzo Caso and his aides carefully screened the sandy dust on the floor for several weeks to add these small objects to the treasure. Some of the beads were so small that the finest needle would not penetrate their perforations, and the excavators have been convinced that many still smaller ones have been lost in the sandy floor of the tomb.

STAR OF THE NORTH

A Romance

OF THE BIG WOODS

CHAPTER XXVII

It snowed steadily for three days and night, with temperature near zero. Three feet of snow had fallen, and the little camp was nearly buried, which kept it very comfortable inside. With his axe, Dan made a rough snow shovel, and shoveled a path to the creek. It was near the last of January, and at night through the little openings between the tree tops, Petol would discover the North Star, as her father had taught her when she was a little child. The storm had cleared some days ago, and the northern light (Aurora Borealis) illumined the sky in great brilliancy, streaming in long narrow streaks to the zenith. Temperature dropped on these nights to a low figure.

A few days more, and the snowshoes were finished. Ben weighed slightly over two hundred pounds, and had never had a pair of snowshoes on his feet before. Consequently, he was very clumsy—could scarcely handle himself and the shoes at the same time. His antics drew ripples of laughter from Petol as she watched him floundering in the snow.

"Get on your snowshoes, little girl, and show Seagraves how to dance the caribou step," laughingly suggested Dan.

"Oh, Uncle Dan, you should not make fun of Mr. Seagraves. He has never had on a pair before, and is much heavier than you."

"Ben doesn't mind a little joke, and he will soon learn to handle them all right," said Dan. "I will leave you here, Ben, to practice, while I make a trip to the northwest."

With a light pack, Dan started out next morning, and Ben was perfectly satisfied to remain where he could see and admire daily the graceful child of the forest. And Petol delighted in skipping about on her light snowshoes and, with her bow and arrows, practiced shooting at the red squirrels. She disliked the red squirrels, as they were arch enemies of the flying squirrels, which were her pets.

Dan was gone a week, but had discovered a few clues which greatly encouraged them. "I think it best to remain here awhile. In two months more the snow will be about gone, then we can travel faster, and their trail will be easy to follow," said Dan, as he returned. "You see," continued Dan, "they are not in a hurry to reach the trading posts on Hudson Bay, for fear of being snapped up by the authorities as outlaws, so they will, I think, keep under cover of the forest as long as possible."

The fishing hole on the creek was kept open, and while the men were cutting wood Petol would catch a mess of trout.

"Mother," said Petol one day when the men were out, "did you know that Rand Goodwyn and Bill Preston are somewhere in this north country trapping?"

"Yes," Petol, Mrs. Goodwyn told me the last time we were in the settlement."

"And they don't know that my father was shot, because they left about two weeks before it happened. How I wish we could find them. They would be such a good re-enforcement to our party and would help to run down the murderers."

"Yes, Petol, that has been in my mind, but it is not likely that we will see anything of them, as they will soon be returning to Montreal with their furs," said Mrs. Barntre.

"Rand was such a nice bright boy. I am jealous of his little Cristie. But," continued Petol slowly, "he will never see her again. She has gone to the States with her father. Mr. Preston (Bill's father) told me just before we left the settlement."

Mrs. Barntre did not answer. She was beginning to suspect Petol's secret, and wisely kept her own counsel, knowing that in time Petol would tell her all.

"You know, mother, Mr. Smithwicks and Mrs. Goodwyn were married, so Cristie will have a nice home in the States, and I am told white girls are fickle. She will have many beaus to choose from."

Still Mrs. Barntre remained silent. She had been hoping Petol and Seagraves would sometime marry. She knew that Ben was enamoured of her and thought Petol would see his good qualities, but the little half-breed had her own opinion, and meant to keep it.

It was a long two months for the campers, and eagerly they watched for the first signs of spring. Many miles to the west of them, Dan had found unmistakable signs of humans, though the marks were quite old. The trail was crooked, showing signs of being covered, which told in plain Indian translation, that the trail was made by the fugitives. Sure that he was now on the right track, Dan had returned considerably encouraged.

Spring came at last, as it always will, and as soon as the ground was showing in spots, they broke camp and started westward, going to where Dan had found the signs. They had no trouble following. The trail led northwest, in general, but swerved to right and left alternately. And on the banks of a little pond a camp had been erected. Dan surveyed the surroundings carefully, and then made his deductions, "Three in the party; all white men," said Dan.

They decided to camp there that night. The weather was spring-like, with warm days and cold nights. Early in the morning they were awakened by an orchestra of singing birds. The air was alive with sweet music, occasionally interrupted by the harsh pounding of a red-headed woodpecker on a dead stub, and the "Ock-ouck! Ock-ouck!" of the bittern, on the boggy side of the pond.

Dan had already skipped out to locate the direction the fugitivies had taken from the pond. Seagraves had kindled a little fire, over which Mrs. Barntre and Petol were cooking breakfast. Dan soon returned.

"They have taken to the west again," said Dan.

For the next two weeks they kept nearly straight west, until they came to comparatively a large river.

"This river is the outlet of Lake Kempt," said Dan, "a large lake about fifteen miles long and two or three miles wide. We are now about twenty-five miles from the lake."

They halted here, while Dan scouted up and down the river banks. The river was still swollen by the spring freshets, which made a strong current. Marks showed the culprits had gone upstream, which direction was nearly north. Dan's deductions were that the fugitives had made for Lake Kempt and, accordingly, they lost no time in getting started that way. Only twenty-five miles, yet it seemed a good hundred to Seagraves.

When at last they came in sight of this beautiful sheet of shining water, the trail of the fugitives was quite plain to Dan, although it must have been about two months old. They camped back of a little knoll, just out of sight of the lake, which precaution was Dan's sugestion.

"On account of the fact, you know, that this lake sometimes has fishermen camping here all summer, Caughnawaga Indians, who take their catches to the Hudson Bay fur companies. Then they trap all winter for the same companies. They guard the lake from all other fishermen or trappers, and will shoot a man quick, if they find him fishing or trapping on the lake. It is better if we keep out of sight while we travel by the lake."

"Oh, Uncle Dan, can I not take a swim in this beautiful lake in the morning?"

"No, my child, the water is ice cold yet. It would not be safe, and you might be seen by the fishermen somewhere."

The trail led out to the lake shore, where a bough camp had been thrown up, then it tacked abruptly to the east, and struck into the forest. "Speed was the slogan, and Seagraves showed good grit, not being used to such forced hikes. He was now gaining in endurance, and was as anxious to run down the murderers as was Dan.

Passing the lake, they continued easterly, gradually swinging to the north again. Petol was as agile as a panther, as fresh at the end of the day as in the morning. Day after day, like a hound on a deer trail, they kept doggedly on, and now Dan could see that they were gaining on the culprits. At each camping place of the fugitives, the departing trail was fresher.

"We must get them before they make the Hudson Bay trading post for there's no telling what they will do then," said Dan.

"You are right, Dan, and it looks to me as if we could do it."

Time was reckoned by the blossoming of different kinds of flowers. When the Shadberry bushes were in bloom they knew it was about the last of May or first of June. Other flowers coming later told the approach of each successive month. Black flies and mosquitoes were another help to the Indian calendar, and when the tormenting deer flies came, they knew June was going, and July coming.

A few more days and they sighted a beautiful little pond and, as usual, Dan made a survey of its shores before the little party ventured out in sight. This caution would prevent the fugitives, provided they were encamped on the shores, from escaping before being apprehended by Dan and Seagraves.

The result of this survey was very satisfactory. A substantial and comfortable log camp was discovered back of a huge boulder, and entirely hidden from the little pond.

As Dan carefully approached the camp, his practiced eye took in all the signs. He returned to the little group, and motioned them to follow. Great was the surprise of all when they came suddenly upon the little camp that Dan led them to. A stone fireplace and chimney proved that it was the winter quarters of someone, perhaps trappers. perhaps the fugitives. One thing was certain; the trail of the fugitives led the searchers to this camp.

And now Dan's skilled training came to their advantage. After a close scrutiny of all signs, Dan gave out his opinion. "We have been following only three people, but four have left this camp, six days ago. They are starting north from here."

"That means that the murderers did not build this camp, because another man was here when they came, and this other man has joined them," said Seagraves.

"I see you understand. That is my opinion also," answered Dan.

CHAPTER XXVIII

Petol, who had been a quiet listener, also had formed her opinion, but was puzzled over there being but one man in the camp when the fugitives arrived. However, her quick wits soon found a solution of the puzzle.

"Uncle Dan, let us remain here a few days, while you make scouting trips to the north. Can't you see, this is Rand Goodwyn's and Bill Preston's trapping camp. One of them was out when the murderers came, or else they killed one and have forced the other to accompany them north."

Seagraves, who had taken in Petol's words, was astounded at the probable truth and quickness of her decision.

"Ah, that dear girl is a jewel," thought Ben, "smarter than the best detectives in Montreal." Aloud he said, "Dan, I believe the girl is right."

"And," continued Petol, "you know, Uncle Dan, we are out of meat, and while you are locating the fugitives, Mr. Seagraves will let me take one of his small guns, and I will kill a deer when the flies drive them to the pond. And I can catch some trout. You know we must have meat."

"Petol, my niece, you are right again; without you we would be lame," said Dan.

"Yes, yes, Petol is always right," said Ben.

It was late in the afternoon, so they decided to rest until the next morning before trying out their plans. Accordingly, at 5 a.m. all were astir. After a light breakfast, Dan, taking a small lunch in his pocket, started to circle the pond. For three days, Dan scoured the woods to the north, and found unmistakable signs of the trail having four in the party, instead of three as heretofore.

On the second day of their stay in the newly found camp, Petol had succeeded in shooting a dandy big buck, and now all hands were preparing the meat for the drying racks. And here we will leave them for the present.

Bill Preston had not reckoned on the canoes being stolen, so had taken a light pack of grub for his journey to Montreal, but, fortunately, he had in his pocket some fishing tackle which they had used in the little pond. His little raft, drifting with the current, made slow progress. At dark on the first night, he tied up under an overhanging cedar, and slept the sweet sleep of the laboring man. He had made a very comfortable bed between the two big packs of fur, and covered himself with the bear skin, which would keep him dry in case of rain. Before starting in the morning, he went ashore and cut a small dry cedar stick, about six feet long, and with his axe hewed out a rough paddle. Then he dug in the rich alluvial soil, and found several worms, which he placed, with a handful of dirt, in his jacket pocket.

Pushing his ship into the stream, he paddled to the centre, then as he drifted with the current, he rigged his fish line, baited his hook and threw it far to one side. Slowly his hook settled, and then all at once a mighty splash, and he landed a two-pound trout. But not until the big trout was completel tired out did he succeed in getting it onto the raft. He soon had two more slightly smaller ones, and as the weather was quite warm, he did not care to catch more than would keep fresh until he could devour them.

He now put all of his energy into the paddle, and instead of tying up at night, he drifted in mid stream thereby gaining considerable distance during the night. In this manner, it took three weeks to reach the little town of Three Rivers. There he hired a canoe, and was not long getting up to Montreal. And here he was again doomed to disappointment. The little German fur dealer had just departed for New York City to get a stock of merchandise and quotations of the prices of the different kinds of furs. His son, left in charge of the store, declared his father would be back in a day or two, at most.

There were other fur dealers in the city. Bill visited them all, but could get no satisfactory prices. They were all waiting for the German dealer to set the price of furs. While here, Bill heard of Barntre's murder and also that Mrs. Barntre and daughter, accompanied by Dan Emmet and a detective, were searching for the murderer.

It was a week before the fur dealer returned, and two days of bantering before a satisfactory trade was made. As Rand had asked him to, he placed his share of the money in the bank in Cristie Smithwicks' name, with Rand as guardian. He also left his own money in the same bank, then went in search of a friend who had a canoe to rent.

After another day's delay, he secured a commodious canoe, and started on his return trip. He made good time, considering the slow current against him. Instead of landing where they had previously lost their canoes, he paddled some distance further up the little creek, and hunted up a good hiding place, where he left the canoe. He had a light pack, as he figured they would very soon be returning to Montreal. The sweet perfume of the summer flowers pervaded the air. Birds were carolling their different songs, while the poodpeckers bored the dead trees for grubs, and purple grackles darted among the balsams. The wood thrust and whippoor-wills were calling to their mates, as Bill hurried through the dark glades under the aromatic balsams. As he neared their cabin, the blue-jays screamed their warning, and Petol heard them.

"Someone is coming, mother."

Seagraves was out cutting some wood, and as Petol opened the door, Bill Preston came into view.

"Oh, Bill!"

Bill stopped in astonishment "Why, Petol! Why, Seagraves! Where is Rand?"

Explanations followed in quick succession, but all were ignorant of the whereabouts of Rand. As usual, it was Petol who held the key, and Dan who had found it. Rand had either been killed or was a prisoner in the hands of the fugitives. Dan was out scouting, but appeared just before dark, and settled the question. "Tracks show that Rand is travelling with the murderers, but is an unwilling captive," said Dan.

"Oh, Uncle Dan, you did not see them, did you?"

"No, Petol, but the signs are plain. They are three weeks ahead of us, but are traveling slow. Rand is retarding their progress all that he can. They have loaded him heavily with their packs," said Dan.

"The devilish miscreants! Let us hustle and catch them," said Ben.

"What a fortunate coincidence, Bill's coming at this critical period. The sisters would say that Providence had intervened in our behalf."

The venison had all been "jerked" and packed, and early next morning the little party, with Dan in the lead, made fast time. For several miles Dan had already marked the trail, so nothing hindered fast traveling. For several days they doubled the speed of the culprits, as they would pass two of the fugitives' night camps each day, and each morning before starting Dan would scout ahead to ascertain, as far as possible, how far ahead the culprits were.

For ten days they followed the trail which was growing fresher each day, and the fugitives' night camps were constantly getting nearer together. Then one morning, Dan returned from his spying earlier than usual. "I have seen the renegades. They are resting. Rand is bound, hands behind his back, stretched on the ground between two of the devils. He is no doubt tired out, and perhaps sick. We must plan an attack in a way that will give them no chance to put an end to Rand."

Petol listened intently to her uncle and, stoic though she was, had to turn her face while tears flowed down her perfectly chiseled features. But only for a moment. And, as usual she had the rescue instantly planned.

"Uncle Dan, the moon will be full in two days more. Let me visit the camp at a distance with you tonight, and tomorrow night, at two in the morning, we can rescue him."

Dan knew the girl's judgment was even better than his own. "Well, Petol, that sounds good and, if careful enough, we may succeed."

Bill wanted to go at once, and shoot down the miscreants, but he saw the wisdom of Petol's plan and willingly waited further developments. Seagraves knew that Dan and Petol held the reins, and eagerly looked forward now to the capture of the renegades.

Behind large tree trunks, Dan and Petol, a hundred feet from the fugitives' camp, viewed the sleeping men as best they could. For two hours they stood there as silent as the moon itself, taking in all the little details for a successful release of Rand and capture of the outlaws. At last their plans were made.

CHAPTER XXIX

The next night, at about 2.30 a.m., Dan, Bill, Seagraves and Petol crept stealthily toward the outlaws' camp, knowing well that the outlaws would be desperate if given any chance. Petol carried one of Seagraves' six-shooters, and her own sharp hunting knife. Bill and Dan each carried their loaded muskets, while Seagraves had his other six-shooter.

When within one hundred feet of the sleepers, the three men stopped behind the tree trunks, where Dan and Petol had watched the night before. Petol waited until she could plainly see the forms of the three men, one of each side of Rand, and another at Rand's feet, like a phantom, noiselessly she crept, as stealthily as a cat, to the sleepers. She cut his bonds, and quietly led him, tottering and staggering, toward the men concealed behind the tree trunks.

Rand was muttering incoherently, and nearly fell. Dropping his hand, she clasped him with both arms around his emaciated form and gently laid him on the mossy carpet beneath the balsams. A dry stick cracked beneath his weight, and awakened the two men who had been lying on either side of Rand. Instantly they raised up, muskets in hand.

"Jed! Jed! Wake up! Our man's gone. Sumun's bin here an' got 'im."

The other man jumped up. "We'd better be gittin 'outen here, and very quick," said the man called Jed.

"Hell, what's goin' ter hurt us? Youse allus ben a coward, anyway," said the first speaker.

Dan then gave the agreed signal, and Seagraves, Dan and Bill all started, with muskets drawn.

"Surrender, ye devils," shouted Seagraves. "You're our prisoners."

In answer, three shots rang out. Bill Preston fell headlong, tried to get to his feet again, but sprawled on the ground. One bullet grazed Dan's thigh. The other bullet went wild.

Seagraves' six-shooter spoke twice in quick succession, and one outlaw fell flat. The other two, knowing they had no more shots, started to run. Dan had been expecting that, and dropped one of them before he had taken three steps. Then the last man threw up his hands. "I surrender," was all he could stammer.

"Come up here, and keep your hands up," commanded Seagraves.

Tremblingly he slowly walked up to them.

"Bind his hands behind his back, Dan, and then search him. No doubt he's got a knife."

Petol sat on the mossy cushion, with the unconscious Rand's head in her lap, while she tenderly rubbed his feverish forehead. Mrs. Barntre had gone quickly to Bill Preston and examined his wound. It proved to be an ugly cut, just below his thigh and close to the bone above his knee.

Dan not only tied their prisoner's hands, but bound him securely to the nearest tree, allowing him to stand on his feet, however.

"There, you cowardly whelp, stay there for a while," said Dan.

As the night was cool, Dan built a fire, and the little party finished the night there in peace. Expert in the line of nature's remedies, Mrs. Barntre, who was much concerned over the two young men, scoured the nearby forest for herbs and roots, while the two uninjured men discussed the difficult conditions this encounter had left them in. The two dead outlaws would have to be buried. A comfortable camp would be needed while Rand and Bill remained in their now serious condition, and the prisoner would have to be watched and fed.

All this necessary work kept Dan and Ben on the jump, nor were Petol and her mother idle. They, indeed, were perhaps the most-needed and hardest-worked of the whole party. Petol assumed the whole care of Rand, while Mrs. Barntre carefully bandaged and applied healing fluids to Bill's ugly wound. Rand was in for a regular run of what Mrs. Barntre called "swamp" fever, which all Abenakis Indians dreaded. A comfortable bed of dry moss and balsam boughs was soon made for the two boys, but separated by about forty feet. Petol could not be induced to leave Rand for a minute until, exhausted by lack of sleep, she had her mother watch the fevered boy while she snatched a few hours of much-needed sleep.

The men were untiring in their necessary tasks, and soon a temporary but comfortable camp was thrown up. The supply of meat would soon be exhausted, as the party was now quite large, there being seven adults to feed, although Rand was taking no nourishment, as yet. Bill was fast gaining, but not yet able to travel.

Mosquitoes and black flies caused them much annoyance, and the prisoner, while bound to a tree, was allowed to have his hands freed to protect his face from the insects. When asked his name, the prisoner replied "Er—I—er Jed."

"Jed what?" demanded Seagraves.

"Er—Per—Prevost," he tremblingly answered.

"You mean Joe Perry, darn you. We know you, so don't try any of your lies here."

With his axe, Dan hewed out two rough wooden shovels, and managed to dig a shallow grave for the outlaws, which they covered as well as they could.

It was four moons before Bill was able to travel. Owing to his rugged constitution and Petol's devoted care, Rand, at the end of ten days, had routed the dreaded fever, and was now taking small quantities of nourishment but, as Mrs. Barntre said, it would be many moons before Rand would be fully recovered.

They were very anxious to get back to the boys' little trapping camp on the pond, where they could get trout and better hunting. As yet Rand was urged to keep from talking or trying to sit up, though he whispered his great thankfulness to Petol, while his eyes told more than his tongue. He had not yet been allowed to see the prisoner, as they thought the excitement of seeing him would bring back a high temperature, while he was too weak to battle it.

Dan and Seagraves had made a litter and, with moosehide strips and red osier stalks, had woven a mattress filled with dry moss and green balsam twigs. Petol had kept Rand posted on all their plans, since he was able to listen and understand With the assistance of a crutch, made by Dan, Bill could now handle himself pretty well. Rand was slowly but surely gaining strength, thanks to Petol's watchful care, and Mrs. Barntre's deliciously concocted broths and soups.

Another week went by, and one morning Mrs. Barntre, urged by Rand, agreed that he could be moved on the litter and carried without danger of a relapse. There was general rejoicing in the little camp when Dan and Seagraves laid Rand carefully on the litter. Bill was to lead the party, with the prisoner next, then Dan and Seagraves with Rand stretched on the litter, Petol next, with Mrs. Barntre bringing up the rear.

Dan's physical endurance was a constant wonder to Ben Seagraves, who was not yet hardened to extra physical exertion. After making several stops to rest, Dan proposed to have the prisoner take a turn at it.

"You walk just behind the scoundrel with your six-shooter in your hand, Ben, and if he makes one false move, drop him," said Dan.

"That I will, with a good heart," said Seagraves.

As the prisoner's hands were released, Ben, with cocked gun, looking him square in the eye, said, "Joe, if you drop your end of that litter, a bullet will end your miserable existence, do ye hear?"

"Yes, I won't drop it," said the shivering culprit.

In this way they made better time, which was slow at the best. Each night, the prisoner was securely bound to a tree.

Rand was anxious to talk to Petol, but she put her hand to her mouth for silence. "Not yet, Rand, wait till you are stronger—and we'll have more time." And he had to be content to feast his eyes on his beautiful "Indian Princess" as Cristie had called her.

They were ten days reaching the boys' camp and, without stopping to rest, Dan commenced building an addition to the camp. His plan was that he and Ben would take the prisoner to Montreal as quick as they could make it, leaving Rand in the care of Mrs. Barntre and Petol until Rand had sufficiently recovered his health and strength to carry himself out. Bill declared he would remain with his partner and furnish the necessary meat and firewood to keep them all in good condition which, by the way, was no small job. Seagraves gladly left one of his six-shooters, with plenty of cartridges, with Petol, with instructions that she must deliver it back to him in person on her arrival at Montreal.

"You are very kind, Ben, and I shall surely do as you ask," said Petol, soberly.

Ben clasped her hand, as they said good-bye. He would have liked to say more to her, but words failed him. As he turned away, he thought, "Good and beautiful, and a prize for any man."

FOOD COMBINATIONS

A considerable amount of interest is evidenced at the present time in certain ideas regarding food combinations. We have come to this conclusion because of the numerous questions which are asked as to whether such food combinations as vegetables and fruits, starches and fruits or milk and fruits should be used at the same meal.

The idea that a mixture or combination of certain foods is harmful is one that is widely held. It is not limited to any particular foods but to all sorts of food in different combinations.

There is no scientific basis or dietetic reason for these ideas. The person who says that milk should not be used with acid fruit because of the acid, ignores the fact that when food reaches the stomach it meets the digestive juices of the stomach which are acid.

The person who complains that his stomach is acid or sour does not realize that if it were not, it could not digest food, in which case, there would be something to worry about. A large percentage of our foods contain protein, fat and carbohydrate, the proportions varying in the different foods. Whether you eat them all in one food or in several different foods, makes no difference from the point of view of their digestion. As a matter of fact, it is desirable to use a wide variety of foods in order to make sure that the body receives a sufficiency of all the elements required to maintain it in a condition of good health. What we need to guard against is not food combinations but rather omitting from the diet milk, fresh fruits and green vegetables.

The idea of food combinations causing harm is due in part to our own indulgences. Someone gorges himself on strawberries and cream with the result that he is upset. Instead of blaming himself for overeating, he is sure that it was the combination of the strawberries with the cream that was responsible.

It is a human trait to blame anything or anybody rather than ourselves. How often is the ill effect of some failure on our own part to be moderate in eating or drinking blamed on something we ate, and as a matter of convenience, we usually select the last food used to attach the blame to. We are often so insistent on this that we will continue to protest that this or that food disagrees with us and refuse to use it again.

Use a wide variety of food. Chew food well so that it will be broken up into small pieces to which the digestive juices can readily gain access. Be moderate in the use of all foods and avoid indulgences in any one food. Continue your food combinations with the knowledge that there is no harm in such combinations.

A PERSONAL MATTER

The progress which has been achieved during recent years in the conquest of disease has been made possible through the accumulation of scientific knowledge concerning the cause or manner of spread of certain diseases.

Diseases such as typhoid fever and cholera are practically non-existent where water and milk supplies are safeguarded. Proper diet banishes scurvy and rickets. We have available the means whereby we can be successfully armed against smallpox and diphtheria. The application of our knowledge of infant care has reduced infant mortality.

There are many diseases concerning the cause of which we know little or nothing, and we are therefore unable to prevent or to control them. We do know, however, how to treat some of these diseases successfully and so reduce the number of deaths which they cause. In general, it may be said that such treatment must be given early in the course of the disease if it is to be of real value.

Diseases which cannot be prevented but which can be cured by early adequate treatment are entirely a personal matter. It rests with the individual to secure the treatment required early in the disease. It is necessary for each one to have a sufficient understanding of these diseases because they are a personal matter, purely individual diseases.

We notice that appendicitis take an unnecessary toll of human lives year after year. The reason for this is failure to secure early treatment. The pain in the abdomen caused by appendicitis, is not considered to be of any significance, and, worst of all, it is often treated with a laxative which leads to disaster.

Cancer is another disease which, in many cases could be cured if treated early. It is because we fail to pay attention to sores which do not heal, to persistent or growing lumps, to unusual discharges or bleeding, or to chronic indigestion, that cancer cases so often come too late to the doctor's attention.

Pain is a danger signal, and pain should never be disregarded. Appendicitis causes pain, but cancer, (and this is the most important point) does not, as a rule, cause pain in its early stages, at the time when it may be cured by proper treatment.

It is obvious that the responsibility in such cases rests with the individual. Neither the public health department nor the medical profession can take the responsibility over. It is a personal matter, first and last.

SUNLIGHT FOR BABIES

The direct rays of the sun are an important aid to health. The rays which tan the skin and which promote normal growth are the ultra-violet rays which we do not perceive as light. The light rays of sunlight which enable us to see are able to pass through glass and light our rooms, but the ultra-violet rays do not pass through ordinary window glass or clothing. So it is that if the baby is to benefit from the sun's rays the sunshine must fall directly on his skin, nothing must come between his skin and the sunlight.

Every baby should have the advantages of sun baths. The sun's rays will not hurt the baby's eyes unless his face is turned directly toward the sun and the eyes are open. Sun baths should begin early in life. The age at which they should begin will depend upon the time of year the baby is born. A summer baby should, as a rule, begin his sun baths when he is two weeks old.

Summer sun baths are given between 8 and 10 in the morning or late in the afternoon when the heat of the sun is not too intense. On very hot days the baby should not be exposed to the direct rays of the sun but placed so that he gets only reflected light.

The baby is placed so that the eyes are turned away from the sun. Begin with a five-minute exposure of the face, arms and legs. Gradually increase the surface exposed and the strength of exposure until the whole body is exposed for about three-quarters of an hour.

The ultra-violet rays tan the skin. The baby's skin should be tanned, but it should be done gradually. Harm may result from over-exposure and no good comes from doing things too quickly. Sunshine is good, but like other good things it is to be used in moderation. Because a certain amount is good it does not follow that more is better.

The sun bath does more for the baby than secure for him the benefits of direct sunlight. It keeps him out in the fresh air and the exposure of the body to the air, when the temperature allows of such exposure, has a desirable stimulating effect.

The baby requires sunlight. If he does not have it, he will not develop as sound and strong a body as he would otherwise have. He may develop rickets, a serious condition which can and should be prevented by plenty of sunlight and cod-liver oil.

A colored man came running down the lane as if a wild animal were after him.

First Submarine Craft Was Built Back in 1773

The first submarine we hear of being used in warfare was built by David Bushnell in between the years 1773 and 1776. The vessel was oval in shape, slightly flattened at the sides. A conning tower wide enough to admit the head and shoulders of the operator, rose above the hull of the boat. The hull was only large enough to accommodate one man, who had to drive, steer and cause it to rise to the surface or descend to the depths. The air supply was only enough for half an hour, and at the end of that time it was necessary to rise to the surface and take in fresh air. There was no engine in the boat and the navigator had to turn a crank, to which was attached a propellor, you can see therefore, that progress was necessarily very slow.

A machine of this type, manned by Sergeant Lee, attempted to destroy the British man-of-war Eagle in New York harbor and it was only due to the fact that Lee could not attach the gunpowder magazine he was carrying to the bottom of the Eagle that the attempt failed. When the operator of one of these vessels wished to descend he would open the valves, which would let water flow into the tanks on the side of the vessel, thus weighing it down. A hand pump was employed in regaining the surface again.

The next attempt to build a submarine was made by Robert Fulton who made several boats that were of better design for speed than those of Bushnell. The latest one he built was over 80 feet in length, and was powered by a steam engine. The steam engine was so quiet the boat was called the Mute. Fulton, however, died before the trials of this boat were finished.

These are, however, by no means the earliest submarines. The first known submarine was used as early as the time of Alexander the Great. It was in the form of a diving bell. An Englishman, William Bourne, is said to have built a submarine boat in 1580 and Magnus Pegelius is credited with building one about 1605. During the next hundred years there were many submarine boats designed and built, but none is worthy of notice. The next inventor we hear of is Borelli, who designed a boat about 1680. It was he who thought of using water as ballast, and used this system on his vessel. In 1747 a man named Symons built a boat, which he tried on the Thames. The illustration of his boat in the Gentlemen's Magazine of 1747 is the oldest known picture of a submarine boat.

Germany, Austria and Russia, made attempts to produce practicable submarines in the early part of the 19th century, but none of them was successful.

The Plongeur, a French vessel, was built in 1860, and although the boat was not a success, it was interesting, because the motive power was derived from compressed air.

Spain also experimented with a submarine in 1860, named El Ictieo, designed by Monturiol. While the results of the trial were satisfactory nothing more was done for thirty years, when Lieutenant Peral designed a boat known as the Peral.

During the American Civil War several boats were built, designed to run with only the ventilating surface above the surface. One of these craft, known as the David, sank the U.S.S. Houatonic with a torpedo, but foundered in the attempt with all her crew.

The development of the submarine from 1885 to 1905 was chiefly due to the French. Seeking substitutes for expensive battleships, they took up submarines.

In 1888 the Gymnot was launched by the French at Toulon. It was 30 tons and 56 feet in length. It was propelled by electricity from storage batteries. The Gymnot was followed in 1893 by the much larger Gustave Zede. This boat was 159 feet long and had a displacement of 266 tons when submerged. The next submarine to be built by France was the Narval, which was of an entirely different type, and was given the name of Submersible. It had a double hull. The inner one was the submarine proper and contained the machinery and living quarters. The outer hull was shaped like that of an ordinary torpedo boat. The space between the hulls was divided into compartments that were used for ballast tanks and oil fuel. It took twenty minutes to submerge the Narval, but in later boats this was reduced to two minutes.

Great Britain, which viewed the submarine with dislike and distrust began to build submarines in 1903, but once started she took hold of it with energy, and when the war broke out had the largest submarine flotilla of any navy.

The defects of the earlier boats were numerous. They lacked speed, seaworthiness, ease and certainty of control, and many other features of the later vessels.

Gyroscopic compasses, speed indicators, track races, ground detectors, high and romming conning towers, and increased size has enormously improved the modern submarines of today.

"Christopher! Did I see you raising your hat to our parlormaid?"

"Yes, my dear."

"Christopher!"

"Well, my dear, if I ignored her she'd give notice. She's too smart to be nodded to; and if I winked at her you'd be annoyed."

The Hunting Season Opens

(From the London Advertiser)

The dawn of 1932 ushered in another of those periodical open seasons for bachelors known as Leap Year. Through the lad modern Dianas have already taken the field in the hope of bringing down a noble stag which they can exhibit as a trophy throughout their future careers. Upon reflection of the statement that some are "preparing to take the field" is entirely incorrect, for where is the modern Diana who is not perpetually prepared at any moment to start in pursuit of that fascinating game animal, the human male?

There are no game laws governing the sport and hunting methods vary widely from the well-known "catch-as-catch-can" idea to the most elaborate schemes of still-hunting involving the employment of baited traps and deadfalls of various sorts. And yet it is a curious thing that the modern ideal of co-operation has not yet invaded this particular field. When men start out on a jackrabbit hunt it is the usual thing nowadays to organize a drive, the hunters by systematic co-operation driving the game before them and affording little or no chance of escape. But in the equally exciting sport of husband-hunting, the modern miss still prefers to hunt or trap alone. This is probably a good thing, for not only would the idea of a mass attack probably stampede the quarry hopelessly beyond each, but even in the event of a successful hunt there would be certainly some trifling unpleasantness afterwards over the division of the spoil.

And so, when the open season of Leap Year comes around the chase is quickly on, and it is a curious fact that those who were unsuccessful in previous hunts are the keenest in the pursuit. With so much experience on their side they constitute a deadly menace to the bachelor in his effort to continue life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. One such huntress while remaining silent as to methods of capture, generously gives her fellow-sportswomen some pointers as to the life and habits of the bachelor which we gladly pass on for what they may be worth. There are two kinds of bachelors, she points out—the kind like a peach, soft and sweet on the outside but stony as to heart; and the kind who looks like a nut (there are many such), hard on the surface but tender at heart. The latter variety a little cracked to begin with.

Bachelors are very shy game, she declares, their bump of self-preservation being highly developed in nearly every case. Some men, she finds, are born for matrimony, some achieve matrimony, but every bachelor, old or young, lives in the deadly fear that matrimony is going to be thrust upon him. Hence the necessity of stalking them with great caution. Even a slight mis-step may frighten the quarry and stampede him straight into the net of some other fair hunter.

The older the bachelor the more wily and wary he becomes, making his final capture all the more thrilling. When a man stays single, says this earnest student of the species, it isn't because he has never met a woman with whom he could exist, but because he has never met a woman without whom he couldn't exist.

The quickest way to a man's heart is through his stomach, it used to be said. "Applesauce, sister, applesauce," replies this lady of ripe experience, whose considered verdict is that the only tender spot in a bachelor's make-up is the bald spot on the top of his head. She doesn't say so, but we infer that a kiss on the bald spot is calculated to work wonders. Repeated at intervals, it would probably result in softening of the brain, which is the inevitable prelude to matrimony. At any rate, girls, it's worth a trial. But if it doesn't work don't blame us.

Named For Developer

The wilt-resistant tomato, "Scarlet-Topper," was developed by Fred J. Pritchard, internationally known tomato breeder of the Department of Agriculture, who died in January, 1931. As a memorial to him, the name of this variety has been changed to Pritchard.

Love Intelligently

In their courting days young people ask each other: "Do you love me madly, wildly, passionately romantically? Do you love me with a love that will never die? Do you love me with all your heart and soul?" It never occurs to them to ask: "Do you love me intelligently? Do you love me with your mind? Do you love me with your common sense?"

Yet intelligent love is the only love that brings any peace and happiness with it. It is the only love that is a blessing and not a curse to its recipient. And it is the only love that lasts. Sensible love is what we should pray the gods to send us, instead of wasting our petitions in demanding temperature or adhesiveness in love, which, after all, are merely the virtues of a hot mustard plaster.

To begin with, the man and woman who love intelligently have used some discretion in what they set their affections upon. They are not enamored of a beautiful face or an athletic figure that have nothing behind them any more than a pretty picture of which they will be sure to weary in time. Nor are they swept off their feet by the thin veneer of the surface attraction of an agreeable personality which is apt to crack in the arid atmosphere of domesticity. Nor do they fall in love on the general principle enunciated by the old Floradora sextette who used to sing "We must love somebody and it might as well be you."

People who love intelligently do not make the mistake of thinking that love is some mysteriously indestructible thing that nothing they can do will hurt and that once a man or woman care for you they are bound to go on adoring you to the end of the chapter because they can't help themselves. Far from it.

Those who love wisely know that if you would keep love alive you must cherish it as you would a fragile flower. They know that if you neglect it and if you trample over it, it will inevitably die. They know that it can be choked to death for lack of liberty. That it can be crushed by tyranny. That it can perish for lack of warmth. That it can be worn out by nagging and that it just withers and gives up the ghost under perpetual fault-finding.

Perhaps in all the world there is nothing stranger than these two things; that husbands and wives who really love each other treat each other worse than they do their deadliest enemy and that husbands and wives who would die for each other make their lives together so unhappy that either one would be glad to die to get out of it. All because they do not love intelligently.

The Gleaner of 1863

Free miniature copies of initial edition to be given away at Ormstown Exhibition.

For 69 years the Gleaner has been printed and published by the Sellar family in Huntingdon. In September, its 70th birthday will be celebrated. In order to avail itself of coming in contact with thousands of people, it will have a booth in the Agricultural Hall at Ormstown Exhibition, and from that stand thousands of copies of its pioneer edition will be distributed.

For 69 years the Gleaner has been pouring into the District weekly. It has always had community support and been the principal news and advertising medium. After all these years of continuous publication, the question arises, how many column miles of news and advertising have been printed in the Gleaner during this interval? That is a question for you to solve. During the Ormstown Exhibition you can register a guess at the Gleaner booth. The 10 people who come nearest the correct number of column miles will receive a prize of a year's subscription to the Gleaner.

There are two other prizes of $10.00 and $5.00 in cash.

Heated Meteorites

Scientists believe that all meteorites which fall from space to the earth are raised to high temperature by their passage through the atmosphere. It has not been proved, however, that all meteorites are actually hot when they reach the ground. The subject has some bearing upon the theory that the earth may have received its animal and plant life from germs brought to it from space by meteorites.

Our own solution would be to tax out of existence the corner around which prosperity is hiding.

Jill, accompanied by her dog, is out walking.

She meets Jack, who invites her to the matinee.

Jill is willing—but what to do with the dog?

Jack suggests taking it to the police station.

Jill does so, pretending she has found it.

Matinee enjoyed.

Jack now calls at police station and claims "lost" dog.

Is told he must leave two dollars reward for the finder; does so.

Jill then drops in and as "finder" receives the two dollars. All square.—Boston Transcript.

At Ormstown Fair June 7-10 Hickville Rube Band

America's famous Rube comedians as presented by Roy Brownlee, and his original Hickville Rube Band, is an offering that never fails to keep the crowds entertained with their nonsensical mimicry and foolish antics.

They are all clever musicians and adepts at portraying the rustic type of character, their entertainment represents the weekly get-together of a village Band and the spontaneous wit entailed therewith keeps the crowds in one continuous roar of uncontrollable merriment.

One of the features of this mirth provoking number is Micky Kane the "boy that sings to beat the Band" and his tuneful renderings never fail to elicit thunderous applause from the listeners.

Two Fords

Act 2. If you are fond of a good hearty laugh, you should not fail to witness the side-splitting exhibition performed by the Two Fords at the Ormstown Fair, during the week of June 7-10th, as it is beyond a question of a doubt a laughing riot. Their buffoonery takes the form of a burlesque adagio number, in which they cavot and prance lightly all over the greensward in a series of hops and leaps, floating as gracefully through space as a flock of flying elephants, alighting hither and yon, sometimes on their ears, sometimes around one another's necks, but usually in a very delicate nose stand in the mud.

These two boys know the act of panto-mimicry and grimacy from its inception, and their antics are such that could not fail to lead the audience into a state of utter collapse from button-busting laughter.

Tarantulas

The tarantula is a large spider with a body about an inch in length; its bite was formerly supposed to produce a kind of frenzy in human subjects called tarantism. The nervous actions of those victims are supposed to be imitated in the wild musical dance known among the Italians as "tarantella." Doubtless in some cases its bite produces disagreeable symptoms. The species named is a native of Italy, but varieties, or closely allied species, are found throughout the south of Europe. The so-called tarantulas of Texas and adjacent countries are a large species of Mygale belonging to the Tarantula family. There is a very large burrowing wasp of Texas and the Southwest, which stings trantulas, depositing its eggs in their bodies and carrying the paralyzed spider off to its nest. These are known as "tarantula-killers."

People of the United States consume 45,000,000 pounds of pecans a year.
