INVERNESS

BY C. W. MCVETTY
Special To The Record

Those who keep track of these sort of things, will tell you that folks born in Inverness remain attached to area, no matter where they live or how long they live.

This statement is borne out by the fact that those who have moved away from here are called "Down-homers," due to the great interest they still take in the business, and social life of those who remain here. Needless to say, we who "tarried by the stuff" appreciate deeply their interest in us, and value highly the healthy bond of friendship which unites us.

We naturally wonder why the names of the Township of Inverness, and the Village of Inverness were chosen by our forebears, because, unfortunately, no local official records of that period are available, as the first Court House erected in Inverness, (1860), and all its contents were destroyed by fire. No doubt many valuable papers were burned, some of which could have thrown light on this question.

However, we remember some of the information given by our grandparents on this subject. It seems that those migrating here from Scotland in the early 1830's saw a strong resemblance in the topography of Inverness to that of Inverness-shire in Scotland, in which the city of Inverness is located.

Here the hardy pioneers saw mountains, valleys, streams, lakes, and a river flowing deep and wide—at that time free from pollution—and willing, at Lysander and the Red Falls, to be harnessed to grind their grain and saw their lumber.

Then, later, in 1839, when the village of Inverness was started, we can only applaud the good sense, and taste, of the new settlers in giving the name Inverness to the little settlement at the base of the Lambly hill, because, was not Inverness in Scotland something of which to be proud? It is a large, royal burgh, a seaport, and on account of its beauty is often called the capital of the Highlands. The name Inverness is of very ancient origin, because we find that King Edwin, who reigned before Julius Caesar landed in Britain, 55 B.C., built a town on the River Ness and named it INVERNESS.

CHALLENGE TO PIONEERS

It is a recorded fact, also, that Inverness has been a centre of education from remote times, when at different periods in its long history there had been a Bardia College there, a Monastic School, and still later, a renowned Grammar School. Was this not then a challenge to the pioneers of British parentage to make a replica here, in miniature, of that famous Capital of the Highlands?

And in some respects they succeeded. Before long three churches were built, also an Academy—the first such school was soon found to be too small—so a new building, the present one, was built in 1889. From the doors of that Academy have come graduates who have done honor to themselves and to the school where the foundation of their education was laid, together with a patriotic fervor instilled into the pupils for Loyalty to God, Queen, and Country by dedicated teachers. The success of that teaching can be seen by viewing the bronze Honor Roll of the school on which are engraved the names of forty-seven former pupils who had served their Country in World Wars One and Two. We regret that this list is not complete, because the name of Signaller W. G. Ward was inadvertently omitted. Signaller Ward was killed in action, on Nov. 5, 1918.

Today, before the Honor Roll, polished, and bright, adorned by the Flags under which they fought, stands a wreath of flowers, given by the members of L.O.L. No. 678, and the members of Orange Lily Lodge, No. 1041 of the L.O.B.A., the joint-owners of the building since early in 1968. These two lodges will do all in their power to keep the building in good repair as a monument of the past.

The Academy was closed in 1965—the pupils now going by bus to Thetford Mines, but the reputation of its wonderful career as a School will not pass away lightly.

The Roman Catholic element of our population deserve much praise for having erected not only a new church within the past few years, but a large modern school as well, where, to give evidence to the splendid spirit of good will existing here between the two founding races, large parties, receptions and suppers are given by members of all denominations in this spacious building.

The village of Inverness which became the County seat in 1860, is situated on the Sixth and Seventh Range Road of Inverness which forms a part of the most direct route between Thetford Mines and Ste. Julie Station on the C.N.R.

ONE THRIVING INDUSTRY

In this little village we find three churches, a brand new Post-office building, one large school, a Registry Office, a Notary's office, two lodge halls, two general stores, three garages, two butcher shops, two feed stores, also a small but thriving industry Les Trophees G. B. Inc., and a number of comfortable homes in which many from outside points come to spend their retirement.

The tale of the conquest by our first pioneers of the area known as the Township of Inverness is one laden with courage, hard labor, and perseverance, but all too often we find privation, suffering, even tragedy, woven into the picture as well.

Inverness was erected into a Township on Aug. 9, 1802, and, at time, was ten miles square, with eleven ranges of twenty-eight lots of two hundred acres, each, in each range. The Township is much smaller now with portions of the South-West side being absorbed into the Municipalities of St. Jean-Brebeuf and St. Pierre Baptiste.

Much of the original surveying of the Township was done under the supervision of the late Alexander Russell, who is buried in the cemetery belonging to the "chapel", which, for years stood on the tenth range of Inverness, roughly one-and-a-half miles north-west of the Craigs Road. On the opposite side of the same road as the one on which the chapel was located, the body of William H. Plummer lies in a small private cemetery. Mr. Plummer was born in Wexford, Ireland, in 1794, and died in 1831. It is also engraved upon his tombstone that he was the first settler in Inverness. We also find that in the upper part of the Township that Daniel Redman, and his family, settled in Lower Ireland in 1818.

The Craig's Road built in 1810, and the Gasford Road, completed in 1830, were the two main arteries of communication between the settlers and Quebec City. The Gasford which turned off the Craig's Road at Maple Grove, passed through the villages of St. Ferdinand and Halifax, Inverness, and Ste. Agathe de Lotbiniere, before merging with the Craig's Road near St. Giles. From there it was easy to proceed to St. Nicholas, where one could board a boat for the Ancient Capital, some fifteen miles downstream.

On June 25th, 1829, a considerable number of settlers arrived from the Isle of Arran on the good ship, Caledonia, with Captain Archibald McKillop in command. Some time was lost in indecision as to whether proceed to the Renfrew district in Ontario, or settle in Inverness. At last the decision was made, and the little band set out from St. Nicholas, in carts, to follow the Craig's Road to where a sign-board showed that they had reached the fourth concession of Inverness, where, turning right, they followed the bank of the Bullard Brook to the point where that stream empties into the Thames.

Here the settlers, "houseless, and lonely," pitched their tents. We must remember that their pitiable wigwags were only covered with blankets, quilts, and carpets, and that there was not one stove of any kind in the entire settlement. Another serious delay occurred with the government official failing to put in an appearance to apportion grant lands. As might be expected, sickness broke out, and conditions worsened in the camp because of a shortage of food. It can be truly said that had it not been for the kind-hearted United Empire Loyalists in Upper Ireland, who sent down boat loads of provisions on the broad waters of the Thames that the entire band of settlers might have perished. As it was, seventy-four of the little band of settlers died between 1829-1844, a fact which is recorded on the monument, erected in 1919, in the original burying ground of the pioneers, high up on the wooded north bank of Lake Joseph, which for a time, was named Loch Lomond.

I desire to acknowledge, (with my sincere thanks for same) that much of the information in this article was gleaned from The Annals of Megantic County, by Dugald McKenzie McKillop: Highland Heritage by Grace Campbell; Men of Today, 1917 edition by V. E. Morrill and Erastus G. Pierce.

My warm thanks are also extended to Father Lemay, present Incumbent of the Roman Catholic Church here, to Mr. John Hoy, and Mr. Delphis Bilodeau for their valuable assistance.

But, in spite of the tales of hardship suffered by the first settlers, other large groups soon arrived from Scotland, Ireland, England and Wales determined "to seek, to find, and not to yield" to the trials and hardships of the pioneer, and with fresh courage, the forests were moved back, clearings enlarged, with comfortable homes and barns replacing the wigwags of the past.

Now these pioneers were deeply religious and no work of any kind was tolerated on Sunday, hence the need of a church was sorely felt in which to congregate and worship. It does not surprise us to learn that soon, in 1832, the first meeting-house, known as the "Old Log Meeting House" was built near the "Glen". The door of this place of worship was in the south with one window in the end. The fire place was at the farther end with a hole overhead to let out the smoke—and, perhaps most of the heat, as well, because we are told on cold days, the congregation took turns getting before the fire, and then retreat to the sides of the building to allow others to enjoy the benefits of their heating system.

Then a second log meeting house was built by the Congregationalists and Presbyterians in 1838. The following year the "Old Kirk" church was built by the Presbyterians in the cemetery grounds in Inverness Village. Later, in 1862, St. Andrew's, the present building, was erected on the same street a couple of hundred yards farther west, where the congregations of the Presbyterian and United Churches worship together.

The Methodist church at the extreme west end of the Village was erected in 1862, on a site donated by the late Mr. W. H. Lambly, and was closed as a place of worship on July 17, 1960, after having given ninety-eight years of service to the community—a period in which thirty-one dedicated ministers gave unselfish and real leadership to their communicants.

SEASONAL CHURCH SWAP

Following church union in 1925, the congregations of St. Andrew's and the United Church worshipped together in St. Andrew's in the summer, and because of its smaller size, and being more easily heated—the United Church, in the winter. However, seeing the futility of keeping two churches in repair, it was decided on Jan. 7, 1960 that the smaller church should be closed. Ministers of the Presbyterian and United Church teachings now serve, alternately, in the work of the church.

The story of the progress of the Roman Catholic Church here is most interesting. On Oct. 4, 1866, the first Roman Catholic priest arrived here in the person of Abbe Ambrose Fafard. For a time, mass was celebrated in the Court House on two Sundays of each month. Then, later, mass was celebrated every week in the home of the late Thomas Devaney in a room, eight by twelve feet. In January, 1867, a contract was given to Andrew Kennedy and William Powell to build a church 46 x 84 feet, a Sacristy, 24 x 30 feet, and a Presbytery 30 x 40 feet. Consecration of this church was on December 19, 1867.

In 1962, the old church was taken down, and replaced by a fine, attractive building, but, somehow, to those of mature years, a void remains. The writer remembers the fine bell in the belfry of the old church, the notes of which, mellowed by distance, brought real music to those of all faiths, and how joyously it pealed forth the glad news—exactly fifty-one years ago today, (Nov. 11, 1918)—that the guns were silent on the western front.

The Anglican Church in the village is a new arrival, comparatively speaking, as it did not come into being until 1924. Prior to that time, those of the Anglican Communion, residing in the village, attended the Church of the Ascension, at Campbell's Corners, two miles north-east of the village. Therefore, in 1924, it was moved to a site immediately adjacent to the Anglican Parsonage. Memorial tablets on the interior walls of the church bring back the past to those who attend services there.

I am sorry but I must now confine myself to a few notes on account of lack of space.

About 1840, the first Inverness Post Office was kept by a Mr. Redfern in a small building near the junction of the Craig and Hamilton Range Roads. Later, in 1844, it was moved to Inverness Village with Robert Layfield being the first Postmaster. High postage rates were in effect then, as it cost 4 shillings and 10 pence to send a letter to England. Please do not tell the Hon. Mr. Kierans about this—he might consider it a challenge!

The first school house was built in the Scotch Settlement in 1832, with another on the Dublin Range the next year, and the small school house at Campbell's Corners being built in 1835.

EIGHTY DOLLARS A SEASON

We are told that the first teacher received around eighty dollars for the school season—he was also the first to leave the settlement, and never returned!

The first child born in the Scotch Settlement was Dugald McKenzie, son of Dugald, and Isabella McKenzie, born in the fall of 1829, and died March 17, 1886.

The first marriage among the settlers took place in Sept. 1830 when the contracting parties were John Cook and Mary McKillop who walked forty miles to and from St. Nicholas—from this point they took a ferry to Quebec City, where they were married by a minister licensed to marry. Who, today, would consider tramping eighty miles before the honeymoon?

However, the main asset of this Inverness of ours is the wonderful people who reside here. The original settlers coming for the greater part, from the British Isles, and United States, were slowly but surely displaced by French-Canadians, mostly from Beauce, who were quick to appraise the potential of this area. But the original settlers of French ancestry who came here were all treated with the utmost courtesy and kindness, and now they—their descendants—in turn, return the comradeship in full measure. The two groups, in my mind, resemble two strands of a rope which when woven around an unbreakable core called Friendship becomes a cable of great strength. Such is the case here, because

Our school Headmaster, Mr. Lester, has been appointed to the Executive of the Canadian Headmasters' Association at a Conference held recently at Rothesay Collegiate School in New Brunswick. The president of the Association is Robert A. Speirs of Selwyn House, Montreal.

"A real drawer can never kick the habit," writes Harold Town, "he's an ink junkie for life, and that is never long enough."

Town should know — he is, unquestionably, Canada's most prolific and versatile artist. His works hang in all the world's major museums. He has won numerous awards and has had one-man and group shows throughout the world.

A systematic presentation of Town's drawing and the directions in which it has moved has been prepared, with 195 illustrations in color and black and white. His rare gift for draughtsmanship has been superbly captured and well represented.

"Drawings" is available in two editions, one for students and another regular edition, both published by McClelland and Stewart.

The book is divided into seven subject portfolios, each preceded by a brief text by Robert Fulford.

Town refers to his drawing, "... at best a dialogue between the brain and the heart. A dialogue that neither should dominate."

The early years of childhood

John De Nora

Many parents wonder what they can do to prepare their children for school. More often than not this question is tied up with some type of academic preparation adults feel they must pass on to their children. But is this the most important thing a parent can do?

In the early years the child is building his self-image and the materials he uses are provided by his relationships to other people. His most important examples are his parents and through them he gets an intimate view of what human beings are supposed to be like. Because every newborn human is characterized by helplessness, sensitivity, and unfulfilled potential, parents have two related problems:

1—What kind of self-image do they want their child to build.
2—What psychic building materials can they by their own personal behaviors, provide for this chosen image.

A child while building his self-image should view himself as a person having worth, abilities, valued by others, making his share of mistakes and one who is neither dumb nor bad. Within his self-image there should be the twin urges to love and to learn. Every young person needs unconditional love and respect and approval of his own nature including of course his sexual nature.

Parents can help their children if they are aware of the following types of parental behavior and avoid falling into them.

- 1—Trying to force the child to learn bodily and emotional controls before he is ready.
- 2—Being too stern and rigid.
- 3—Being too timid and vacillating, the child is unable to discover the universe of order.
- 4—Expecting the child to be courteous and considerate but they themselves do not act in this way.
- 5—Expecting the child to always perform as he sometimes performs.

Probably the most important thing to remember is that if the child learns things in the home which are more conducive to hostility than good will, they will enter into their own relationships with society handicapped at the start because they might carry on this learned behavior. If they do, this handicap becomes quickly visible in the child's school life and it usually has a negative effect on his ability to learn and play with his peer group.

Filming Goes Underground

Hollywood — Scenes for "THE 1138," fantasy about a future subterranean society, were filmed 43 feet below ground in a section of San Francisco's new subway tunnel which will link the city with areas across the bay. Robert Duval and Donald Pleasence star in the Warner Bros. picture.

Hollywood — Suddenly, after years of working in the theatre, James Olson has become a film star, and he's thoroughly enjoying it. The actor, who shot to fame as Joanne Woodward's lover in "Rachel, Rachel," is in demand. After starring in "Moon Zero Two" for Warner Bros. in London he was cast in a second Warner release there, "Crescendo," with Stefanie Powers.

"In my younger years I thought that to be a real actor you had to be in the theatre," said Olson. "Anyone who went into movies had sold out."

"Well, since I've sold out, I've been paid to travel to many new countries. I've had six months in miniskirted London, a taste of Continental life in France and I'm negotiating to do a picture in Rome.

— The only grass the guy had ever seen was the kind that clogged his grandfather's lawnmower on dewy mornings. Here was another kind.

"This," said the bearded one, "ain't hay... you mean to tell me you've never seen marijuana before? Wow, man!" He held the bottle in front of the guy's face and jiggled it. Inside was a greenish-brownish substance with much the same texture as ground tobacco. Several people smiled. His friend, Dixon, laughed.

Dixon had been a college buddy and now taught at California State College in Long Beach. He and his wife had brought the guy here to meet a girl—a former Chicago Old Town hippie-type turned schoolteacher.

The house was a bit startling. A half of a duplex with four large rooms, it was sparsely furnished in wax-coated wine bottles, silly wall posters (Richard Nixon, "Would you buy a used car

"Make sure it's packed tight," he said, pouring a pencil-sized streak of marijuana across the middle of the paper. He folded the paper in half, pinching the grass into the fold with the index fingers and thumbs of both hands. Then he slowly rolled the remaining paper around the core of marijuana, licking it closed and taking care to twist each end tightly in order to keep the substance from falling out.

There are 205 million people in the United States. By the most liberal estimate, 193 million have never been exposed to marijuana.

In Canada, a questionnaire answered by 70 per cent of the student body at Bishop's University here, in April, revealed that nearly 28 per cent had already tried grass or hash.

Here is one man's introduction to pot. It is not to be taken as advocacy. It is only a chronicle of an experience that countless numbers have, in one way or another, shared.

Two cigarettes were rolled and smoked completely — bobbie pins used to hold each in its final stages—but the guy felt nothing. "I get more kicks chewing bubble gum," he said. "The roller coaster at Camden Park was more fun than this. I don't know why I thought... It's the funniest thing, you know... I don't know why..."

conscious and unconscious, and the guy could see them both.

The moment passed and he was coherent again. He discussed the experience, smoked from another cigarette and sat quietly. Another "high" came, this time quieter, softer. Sitting there, he became aware of an extraordinary change in his sense of touch.

He felt. He felt his socks, separating his feet from his shoes; he felt his pants on the back of his legs and the hair on the back of his hands.

He tasted. He tasted the separate qualities of the wine (wine had never tasted so good to him). He tasted an apple, first the smooth, hard, cold surface and then the rough, bittersweet peel and finally the sweet, strong pulp inside.

The guy's imagination ran on five legs. Closing his eyes and listening to the straining psychedelic music, the beat and the background made him think: "I'm a water buffalo, charging through the jungle with green branches and leaves raking against me."

The bearded one stood. The effect was nearly staggering. "Wow, man!" he said. "Oh, wow! People don't realize they can get higher just by standing up."

The next morning, the guy woke in his motel room. There was no pain — just a slightly sore throat from smoking for the first time and a faint smell that is particular to marijuana.

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL SHOW IN THE WORLD!

Amorous patients the least of nurses' problems

SHERBROOKE — (Staff) — The stereotyped cartoon of a night-dressed patient chasing a pretty nurse around the hospital bed is not one of the nursing profession's biggest problems.

But a stereotyped attitude toward patients is, according to Miss Daphne Walker, senior instructor at Douglas Memorial Hospital in Verdun.

Speaking to the No. 3 District of the Association of Nurses in the Province of Quebec at Sherbrooke Hospital yesterday, Miss Walker said: "We should stop using the technique of the stereotype of a nurse who is always sunny, cheerful and friendly."

"If we do this," she said, "we make the patient feel that he must become a stereotype patient and be hypocritically cheerful, even if he feels lousy. We automatically make him become a good patient."

Miss Walker told the nurses they "should try to find out how the patient really feels and try to communicate with him."

One of three speakers at an all-day seminar on human relations, Miss Walker said nurses should interest themselves in patients' problems and try to help.

There is a need for mutual confidence between patient and nurse that should extend throughout the hospital.

She said there was often distrust all along the line in a hospital — from the patient to the nurse; from the nurse to the supervisor; and from the supervisor to the head of the hospital.

Miss Walker said if the feeling of distrust would change, the success of patient treatment would greatly increase.

One of the other speakers, Miss Moira MacDougall, in-service co-ordinator at Douglas Memorial, said one of a nurse's greatest assets was a perception that would enable her to understand a patient's problems, apart from the one that put him into the hospital in the first place.

The third speaker, Miss Norma Jean Miller, head nurse of the out-patient clinic of Allen Memorial Hospital in Montreal, talked about methods of approaching a patient in order to help

She said it would be beneficial for a nurse to get to know the patient's family and friends in order to better understand the patient.

After the introductions, the 50 nurses formed groups to discuss problems they have in dealing with patients.

Miss Audrey Frost, a general duty nurse and president of the education department at Sherbrooke Hospital said they had called in the three experts to help nurses at the hospital keep up with the times.

She said the seminar was really good for everybody and would help to raise the competence of Sherbrooke Hospital nurses.

Don't swim here

NORTH HATLEY — "UNFIT FOR SWIMMING"

This sign might be posted on the shores of Lake Massawippi next summer, warning local residents not to drink or swim in its polluted waters.

At least 2,000 water samples were taken from the lake this past summer by a voluntary group called Massawippi Protection Inc., and results indicated that some areas of the lake are definitely unfit for drinking or swimming.

The organization consists of concerned Municipal officials, and private citizens in the area. Facilities and personnel of Bishop's University, under the direction of Dr. J.K. Lowther and Professor J. Derek Booth, were engaged and a comprehensive report was compiled.

Three separate tests were taken within six feet of the shoreline, in front of most properties and inlets to the lake.

Final results showed that pollution of these waters varied.

In many areas, a coliform count considered unfit for swimming by the Quebec Department of Health was evident. Other areas, however, showed a satisfactorily low count.

The danger signs, as revealed by the survey, are most apparent in those areas where cottages, generally among the older type, use cesspools for waste disposal rather than septic tanks. Other contributing factors are septic tanks, improperly maintained and serviced, and the effluence from polluted streams.

The association urges all citizens to encourage their municipalities to adopt the by-law, proposed by the Quebec Department of Health, which will prohibit the installation of new sources of pollution and correct existing ones.

The group plans to conduct further tests next year to evaluate the condition of the off-shore, central waters which appear less seriously polluted.

Nor sleet, nor strike

OTTAWA (CP) — Neither rain, nor sleet, nor snow, nor gloom of night—nor a strike—will slow the Christmas mailing rush, union officials said Thursday.

Postal union spokesmen gave the prediction in interviews.

Their 26,000 members who sort and deliver the mail have been without a contract with the government since Oct. 1.

With the militant nature of postal employees in mind—they staged a three-week strike in mid-1968—some officials close to the situation speculated a few weeks ago that a Christmas work stoppage was a distinct possibility.

But union officers, despite more than four months of negotiations, say there has been progress and no breakdown is in sight.

THE SHERBROOKE RECORD

THE SHERBROOKE RECORD, FRI., DEC. 5, 1969

City praises Sherbrooke's finest

SHERBROOKE — City officials and the Sherbrooke Police Dept. honored some of its members yesterday during a brief ceremony at city hall.

To mark 25 years as director of the police force, Director Edouard Moreau was presented with a diamond ring and Spanish chandelier.

The ring came from the members of the Sherbrooke police force, with the city presenting the piece of furniture.

The idea of the tribute came from Ald. Carl Camirand, who held strong feelings about honoring the city's police force.

Mr. Camirand, who is chairman of the protection committee said a similar ceremony had taken place recently for members of the city's Hydro department.

"It is about time we paid public tribute to our law enforcers," Mr. Camirand said.

Twenty-five-year service plaques were presented to 11 members of the police force.

Plaque recipients included Det.-Capt. Roland Gaboriault, detective-lieutenants Raymond Bonneau and Roland Rousseau, Police Capt. Armand Genest, Lt. Roger Dion, Sergeants Jean Marie Donahue, Aime Lafrance, Georges Larivee, Det. Guy Cordeau, and Const. Hubert Fortier.

Four police constables were given bravery awards for the capture of bank robber Richard Blass in Sherbrooke on Jan. 17 of this year, following a bank robbery earlier in the day.

P.C. Jacques Testulat, president of the Sherbrooke Policemen's Association said the Blass capture at the beginning of the year indicated to other cities that the "Sherbrooke cops were able to capture the big criminals."

Mayor Armand Nadeau repeated his conviction that the Sherbrooke police department was something to be proud of.

Still a little shaken by the surprise testimonial in his behalf, Director Moreau told guests that he had done his duty in the best way he could since he started with the police department.

Police Chaplain Drapeau said that good words about the city's police force were being accentuated by visiting tourists during the summer period. In fact, Canon Drapeau added that we should be very proud of our police force.

France-Canada relations take a turn for the better

BRUSSELS (CP) — Canada and France took measures Thursday night to mend their uneasy relations.

In a 40-minute talk after the day's sitting of the North Atlantic Council, External Affairs Minister Sharp and Foreign Minister Maurice Schumann set up the principle of federal ministerial exchange visits and agreed to let one irritating incident pass into history.

"I think both of us would like to see relations normal and to avoid the kind of incidents that have marred our relations in the recent past," Sharp told reporters after the meeting.

It was his second meeting with Schumann since the French minister took office in June. They talked at the United Nations in New York shortly after that.

Sharp said he and Schumann felt "there was room for improvement" in Franco-Canadian relations and that they agreed in principle there should be ministerial exchanges in both directions, involving cabinet ministers interested in matters of concern to both countries.

He had no details to announce at this stage.

The incident they decided to forget was the visit to Quebec two months ago of Jean de Lipkowski, a junior foreign minister in the French government who refused an invitation to visit Ottawa. Prime Minister Trudeau criticized him sharply.

The Canadian minister, after finishing his work at the semi-annual NATO ministerial meeting here today, flies tonight to Geneva for a conference on ways and means of providing relief aid to civilians on both sides of the Nigerian war.

He will meet with officials of Joint Church Aid, the League of Red Cross Societies and the International Committee of the Red Cross.

TODAY'S CHUCKLE — Love at first sight must be great but there is no extra charge for the second look!

FEDERAL PAPER Reject Quebec welfare role takeover bid

OTTAWA — The federal government has flatly rejected Quebec's request for full responsibility for social welfare programs.

In fact, Parliament is making a counter-proposal that would grant the federal government even more constitutional power in the welfare field, including the right to enact legislation toward a guaranteed annual income and insurance payments to sick or disabled workers.

The government position is made clear in a working paper on income security and social payments which were tabled in the Commons yesterday by Prime Minister Trudeau and will be presented to next week's constitutional conference.

Quebec observers view the paper as a stunning blow to repeated attempts by the Quebec Government to obtain exclusive jurisdiction over welfare programs, along with a massive transfer of funds to the province to pay the cost.

The latest Quebec bid was made only last month when the Minister of Health and of Family Welfare, Jean-Paul Cloutier, called on Ottawa to turn over full control of family allowances.

The working paper, published in Mr. Trudeau's name, stresses that the proposals it puts forward are "tentative". But the document makes clear that the federal reply to the Quebec position is an unequivocal "No".

Ottawa's stand appears to set the stage for a stormy confrontation with Quebec at the constitutional conference, when the topic of division of powers in the income security and social welfare field is discussed.

Federal spokesmen admitted privately yesterday that they expect Quebec to react angrily to the document, but they expressed confidence Ottawa's approach would win support in other provinces.

The working paper essentially opts for the status quo in the division of power between Ottawa and the provinces in the income security and social welfare fields.

Only two changes in the present situation are proposed, and both would increase the power of the Federal Parliament.

One of these would give the Federal Parliament equal power with the provinces to legislate public income insurance measures, such as old age and disability insurance.

At present this power resides exclusively with the provinces, and constitutional amendments have been necessary to allow Ottawa to move into specific fields such as unemployment insurance and the survivors and disability benefits of the Canada pension plan.

Benson, premiers talk tax reform

OTTAWA (CP) — Finance Minister Edgar Benson will meet provincial finance ministers and treasurers here for two days next week to discuss tax reform and the economy's outlook for 1970.

The conference, one of an annual series, will be closed. It follows the federal-provincial conference of provincial premiers with Prime Minister Trudeau.

Officials representing provincial treasurers met with their Ottawa counterparts here last week to prepare for the ministerial meeting.

Topics discussed included a general survey of economic prospects for 1970, anticipated federal and provincial tax revenues and expenditure needs for 1970 and 1971, and first impressions of Mr. Benson's proposed tax changes.

The tax and expenditure projections were made by an inter-governmental committee of experts and based on confidential information given them by the provinces. The document that came from the committee was itself marked confidential.

STUDIED COSTS

The officials also studied reports, to be discussed by the ministers on Thursday and Friday next week, on the cost of programs which are shared by the federal and provincial governments.

These reports dealt with ways to control rising costs, the possibility of transferring more of the programs to full provincial control with tax-revenue compensation from Ottawa, and special problems of managing and financing new programs.

The Trudeau government has been anxious to turn over to full provincial control those joint programs that now are operating smoothly.

Discussion at next week's meeting on taxes is expected to be limited. It is thought likely the finance ministers and provincial treasurers will set up a committee of experts to delve more fully into the subject.

Debate on tax changes then would be resumed at a later date, but before the federal government makes its final decisions. Mr. Benson hopes to introduce legislation in the Commons early next fall, embodying those final decisions.

Identify 7 bodies from fire

NOTRE-DAME-DU-LAC, Que. (CP) — Relatives have identified seven of the 38 charred bodies taken from the Repos du Vieillard, a home for the aged that burned to the ground Tuesday in this village 120 miles northeast of Quebec City.

Police said Thursday the bodies are so badly burned that only about 15, at the most, can be identified. The others are to be buried in a common grave.

A common funeral service for the pensioners is to be held Saturday with Most Rev. Louis Levesque, Roman Catholic archbishop of Rimouski diocese, officiating.

Twenty-nine of the 67 elderly men and women in the three-storey wooden building escaped the fire, along with the seven staff members.

Police are still trying to establish the cause of the pre-dawn blaze, which levelled the old building in about an hour.

In Quebec City, officers of the Quebec welfare department have begun a detailed investigation of all the homes for the aged operating in the province. Welfare Minister Jean-Paul Cloutier said Thursday.

He told the national assembly that a team of investigators was formed after the Notre-Dame-du-Lac fire.

Mr. Cloutier said the investigation will cover the type of construction of such homes, their firefighting and escape facilities, safety regulations and even the character of the persons in charge.

How're you gonna keep'em in town after this?

By DAVE MARROTT

"Cough, cough — excuse me sir. I'm from the city. ... smog you know. The bumps on my forehead? A mugger. Another hazard of the city."

Well, you might be wondering why I drove up to your farm in a taxi. My car was wrecked in a collision. Traffic problems, you know. The last one got it in a student demonstration."

"Actually that's what I wanted to talk to you about. ..."

Did this conversation really take place? It might well have, because for the first time last summer, residents of our cities were able to escape the rush and relax in the country.

The Brome County Farm Vacations Program presented an ideal opportunity for city-dwellers to spend a vacation on a farm, giving both children and parents a chance to learn about and participate in farm life.

On the other hand, it presented the farmer with a means of supplementing his income, as well as an ideal way to meet new faces and gain ideas.

In a recently-issued report, the program directors said the experiment was highly-successful last summer and plans are underway to expand the operation on a year-round basis.

David Radler, a management consultant from Montreal, and Peter White, managing director of the Brome County Rural Development Association, were responsible for the opening steps of the program.

Following interviews with six farmers, five of whom were completely in favor of the idea, Mr. White approached Frank Main, a student at Bishop's University, to act as program co-ordinator. Mr. Main spoke to other farmers in the area and called a meeting for Tuesday, May 28.

Ten farmers attended the first meeting with David Radler, Peter White, Frank Main, Mike Consiglio, a public relations expert from Montreal, and Ronald Shand, a restaurant operator from Knowlton.

It was decided in June that prices would be $30.00 per week and $8.50 a day for adults. Children would be charged $25.00 per week and $5.00 a day.

The program was described in detail at a July press conference, and public reaction was extremely favorable.

The busiest period was the last two weeks in July and the first week in August. For the last week in July, people were booked on seven farms.

Mr. Main said, "We received many calls from people who wanted French farms so that they could live with French-Canadians and their children would have a chance to learn French."

"Two more French farms were asked to join the program," he said.

Mr. Main said similar programs in other provinces would be contacted and studied, to improve the local project.

As a continuation of the project, accommodations will be provided for skiers during the winter months.

And next summer, many city residents will be able to partake in such rural pastimes as barn dances and sugaring parties.

"A special Brome Fair week may be set up so that people can stay on the farm during the fair and the week prior to it," said Mr. Main.

This summer, after school ends, the program will again get underway on a regular basis.

Mr. David Radler told the Record that the "self-help" program shows what people can do without the aid of government.

"The whole project," he said, "is the start of a series of programs, designed to increase the economic potential of farming and associated activities in Brome County."

We hope to achieve more next year, he added.

"But at least we have provided a base to work on in the future."

Muzzling the watchdog

Fortunately some premature publicity apparently has wrecked the Trudeau Government plan to "move Conservative Alf Hales as chairman of the Public Accounts Committee of the House of Commons, a post that for many obvious reasons has been reserved traditionally for a member of the Official Opposition.

One of the most important reasons for the post going to the Opposition is that the committee is designed as a watchdog over Government spending, even if its function was mainly to find out why public money was wasted rather than to prevent the waste itself. The committee can only examine expenditures already made and report on irregularities and has nothing to say on how future appropriations shall be spent.

According to reports from Ottawa, the cabinet has been rather disconcerted over the information the committee dug out regarding the heavy expenditures on the aircraft carrier Bonaventure which the Government planned to discard.

If the committee system is to be worth the time the parliamentarians spend attending its sessions, there can be no question of preventing the chairman from returning reports that might embarrass the administration.

Even as conditions are at present, the committee system is not working too well.

Members of Parliament are not yet fully convinced they can serve their country well on committees, especially when many committees have to delay their proceedings every day to wait for a quorum and once the discussions start much of the time is frittered away in pointless or unrelated questions.

The cabinet should give the committee system an opportunity to prove its worth by taking their work seriously.

But with the Prime Minister refusing to take Parliament seriously, there is little reason for the taxpayers to hope this condition will develop in the near future.

Too much loose talk

David Reisman, a leading American sociologist, tells of attending a discussion session with a group of university students.

The "adult" moderator began the session with the statement that "All of you have used marijuana, of course."

Reisman stopped the proceedings right there, and after a little coaxing found out that only a very small handful of the students had ever tried marijuana.

Had he not questioned the moderator's sweeping generalization, everyone in the room would have left believing that "all of you have used marijuana, of course," and students who were actually in the majority would have been secretly convinced that they were in the minority and somehow "OUT OF IT" AND "not with it."

In a pamphlet titled "Adolescence for Adults," published by the Blue Cross Association recently, the statement appears in one article that "dating among fifth- and sixth-graders is commonplace" in North America today.

The author does not give the source of this information, so concerned parents are unable to check to see if their non-dating fifth or sixth-grader is abnormal or perhaps, like Reisman's marijuana non-smoker, is really in the majority.

Parents are left with the worry that if their child is not dating at 10 or 11, he or she must be socially retarded and needs to be prodded into interests that will arrive in their own good time.

Sometimes one gets the feeling that the greatest service the experts could perform would be to keep their expert opinions to themselves more often.

GREATER LOVE

How deep I slipped in Death's dark shadow,
To rise again refreshed, renewed;
With knowledge that my God walks beside me,
That He had plunged those depths before.
I want no false grief, nor easy tears;
Remember that I fought you through the years,
That no man comes to full maturity
Until he places love of others

MATTER OF FACT JOSEPH ALSOP

WASHINGTON — Once again the unspeakable has been spoken, the unmentionable has been mentioned, the unsavable has been said. This is a remarkable event; and if one looks ahead, it is probably a major political portent.

To be specific, the Warren Court was under bitter, sustained attack from the right from the time of the school desegregation decision in 1954 until Chief Justice Earl Warren laid down his judicial robes. But now the Warren Court and almost all its works and ways have been sharply, cogently and powerfully attacked from the left.

The attacker is a brilliant contributing editor of The New Republic, Prof. Alexander Bickel of the Yale Law School. Furthermore, the two greatest monuments of the Warren Court, the school decision in Brown vs. Board of Education and the so-called "one-man-one-vote" decision, are the principal targets of Prof. Bickel's criticism.

Prof. Bickel first spoke out when he recently delivered the Oliver Wendell Holmes lectures at the Harvard Law School. Vague reports of this remarkable lecture series thereupon caused a good deal of apprehensive fluttering in the inner dovecotes of American liberalism.

Far more widespread, acrimonious and public debate is bound to be touched off, however, by Prof. Bickel's forthcoming book, "The Supreme Court and The Idea of Progress." This is an expanded version of the Holmes lectures, complete with all the critical apparatus required by a major work of legal theory of the most serious possible character, which this book unquestionably is.

ONE SENTENCE SAYS IT ALL

The thrust of the book is expressed in a single, pungent sentence, as follows: "The Warren Court's noblest enterprise — school desegregation — and its most popular enterprise — reapportionment — not to speak of the school prayer cases and those concerning aid to parochial schools, are heading toward irrelevance, obsolescence and, in large measure, abandonment."

A newspaper column is no place to try to recapitulate the kind of careful argument on which Prof. Bickel bases the foregoing conclusion. It is enough to say, rather crudely, that Prof. Bickel finds that the school desegregation decision has not worked very well thus far, in a practical sense. And he further holds, obviously correctly, that Brown vs. Board of Education runs directly counter to the rising demand of black militant leaders for "black community control" of Negro schools.

As to the one-man-one-vote decision, Prof. Bickel's objections are even harder to summarize in a few words. But one of them is certainly his opinion, again obviously correct, that the main beneficiaries of the resulting reapportionment are bound to be the ever-growing white suburbs, while the increasingly black center cities will lose leverage proportionally.

To the sentence already quoted, Prof. Bickel adds the observation that "If this assessment has any validity, it must be read as a lesson." The lesson he seeks to inculcate is that the courts in general, and the Supreme Court in particular, are most imperfect instruments of social and political reform — however desirable such reforms may be. He would therefore have them leave reform, in almost all cases, to the elected members of the state legislatures and the Congress.

ISSUES ARE NOT NEW

This reporter is wholly unqualified to discuss, much less to pass upon, the complex and profound constitutional issues that Prof. Bickel has raised. They were already being raised, before his retirement from the court, by Justice Felix Frankfurter. They are now being raised, in certain specific cases, by Justice Hugo Black. That is all a reporter can properly say about the issues themselves.

The political meaning of Prof. Bickel's book is something else again, however. Against the Warren Court and all its works, the ranks of the American right-wing have always been solidly arrayed, as above-noted. But this book represents the first significant break in the ranks of the American left. There is now division just where the Warren Court always obtained its strongest support.

One must say "the first significant break" because, of course, the black militants' demands for "community control" were also a break of another kind. The arguments for the so-called Demonstration School Projects in New York City, for instance, might have been made to order to support George C. Wallace's approach to the school problem in the South.

But when a man of Prof. Bickel's stature openly breaks the former liberal-intellectual solidarity on this matter, there is no foretelling the final outcome. It is only clear that a new phase has opened.

BERRY'S WORLD

"If the characters in the book are anything like the characters in the cast, 'Myra Breckinridge' ought to be quite a movie!"

"Did you read the latest — oh, skip it . . ."

Letters to the Editor:

Changing roles in province

SIR:

May I, as one who has lived and worked in the Sherbrooke area for a considerable number of years (except from 1915-1919 and 1940-1945) which was spent doing a job for Quebec and Canada in other parts of the World, express a few thoughts on the present situation in Quebec.

It should not be forgotten that some years ago after the argument between England and France the English people granted certain rights and privileges to the French Canadians particularly in regard to language and education. This has always been respected, each party carrying out their own ideas as to education.

Looking back to about 1906 the City Council, based on population, was about 75 percent English. The Provincial Government had a good percentage of English members as well. This situation has quite reversed itself as the French population increased, and rightly so. Now French Canadians control practically all governing bodies in the Province. We have little to say.

At the moment, for reasons best known to themselves, this growth seems to be more or less static and some French Canadians use this as a possible threat to their power. Quebec will always remain predominantly French in my opinion, unless the people themselves see greener pastures outside the Province, as they did some years back in moving to Maine and New Hampshire.

I have worked with French Canadians all my life and employed a great many. As individuals they are good, hard working people but their leaders are not the best. A great many have done very well financially even though handicapped to a considerable extent due to a lack of education under the policy set up by their leaders. They had no opportunity to become engineers and scientists unless they went to an English University, which a few were able to do. They learned English and today hold very responsible positions in industry. For some years the emphasis in higher French education was in turning out lawyers, doctors, notaries, professors and so called intellectuals who had little knowledge of economics or business. They became leaders in the political world, and invested their money principally in real estate and mortgages rather than industry. As a result Quebec's resources were developed and new industry established which had to be financed by English capital and managed by English executives. We have but to look at the expansion and increase in population at Sherbrooke, Drummondville, St. Maurice Valley, Quebec North Shore and many other centers to see what has taken place. This growth was due to the co-operation and efforts of every one.

Many French Canadians saw fit to learn English and in spite of only a Grade 7 or 8 education, sometimes less, rose to executive positions. While higher education is a great help, natural ability and hard work are still the prime factors in achieving success in life. Today with a higher degree of education the French Canadians are taking over responsible jobs. Many English people are acquiring a working knowledge of French and it is to be hoped French Canadians are learning a bit of English. It must be acknowledged that many industries, mining, pulp and paper, automobiles, etc., are controlled by English capital with head offices outside the Province and most of their products exported. Therefore most business must be transacted in English. Further, a University graduate with a working knowledge of English has a much greater potential field for finding employment. Bilingualism should work both ways in many situations.

I note the Association of Catholic Principals in their brief to the Gendron Commission state in their final paragraph "The difficult task of establishing a new and healthier relationship must begin. A working knowledge of each other's native language would greatly assist in this task."

Mr. Filion, General Allard and others have also expressed their opinion along these lines. These people are in a position to realize what is going on and have I believe, the right answer.

Quebec is a comparatively small part of Canada and also a smaller part of North America.

If Quebec is to maintain the progress made over the past 25 years and more jobs created, the confidence of other countries that this Province is a sound place to invest in, must soon be restored. To regain this confidence I would suggest that all political leaders unite and act at once.

(1) The Department of Justice must suppress all radical and subversive elements in the Province. The judges must support the police in handing out more severe penalties for those convicted, particularly second offenders. All property owners must be assured of protection. This certainly has not been the case during the past year.

Criminals must learn that crime does not pay.

(2) The Government must reduce all expenses above revenue received in each department. Much desirable road work could be held over for a few years. No new projects should be taken on. Even the Department of Education and some social benefits postponed until such time as the books balance and more money is available. Borrowing money to pay interest gets us nowhere. It is the Tax Payer who finally must pay the bill, not the Government.

Mr. Filion has put it in a few words "Stop practicing the ruinous policy of distributing wealth before it is produced." K. B. JENCKES, B.Sc. Lennoxville

SKIING

in the Townships

By Charles Catchpough

Things are really happening this year at the North Hatley Ski Area, where a new chalet has been built, several modifications made to the lifelines, and appointment of a new ski school director, in the person of Alain Arsenault. Mr. Arsenault is from Montreal, but has skied in Europe as well as Canada and the U.S.A. and has taught in 3 different countries. Last winter he was at Auberge le P'tit Bonheur in the Laurentians, where he was sports director. He is a senior member with the Canadian Ski Instructors' Alliance, and a coach with the C.A.S.A.

The Quebec Government ministry of tourism has turned out an interesting pamphlet entitled Quebec Parks Motor-Sled Trails. It shows the areas across the province where there are parkland snowmobile trails, and list addresses where more literature can be obtained at each region. The Mt. Orford Provincial Park for instance, has a descriptive map, which is ideal for the motorized sled crowd. These pamphlets can be obtained in most major snowmobile dealers' showrooms.

No more mud at Owl's Head. That's the word from the Quebec Roads department, who are pleased to announce that the roads to this popular new resort have been paved, in fact so has Owl's Head parking area. The improvement should mean a great boost in the traffic to this centre, which is just six miles east of Mansonville, overlooking Lake Memphremagog.

The snow came in drifts at Pinnacle Mountain this year, in fact Gerry Boucher, manager of that area called the Record to say that his hill had from 12 to 14 inches of that white-gold. Needless to say, Pinnacle will be swarming with skiers this weekend.

In review, Fernand Tessier is ski school director at Pinnacle this winter, where there'll be night skiing from 7:30 till 10:30 daily. Another feature at the Freighsburg resort is a new discotheque, in which an orchestra will be featured every Saturday evening.

Pinnacle has a 1,300 ft. elevation, with the slopes stretched over a 265 vertical drop. Poma lifts serve the centre.

The people who like watching skiing, should get a charge out of the carpet-skiing demonstrations that will take place in Woolco's department store this coming week. The Rock Forest store carries a good assortment of low and moderately priced ski equipment, besides a full range in skiwear for men, women and children. The skiing demonstration is no doubt, a means to publicizing these ranges in merchandise.

Tonight, Black Peter and his brother will call on the boys and girls in the Netherlands, and on the 25th, that same old gent will pose as Santa Claus and visit the small fry of this continent. According to storekeepers, the annual gift-giver has ski equipment as a top priority range in presents. In fact, stunning statistics from DBS showed an increase of 17 per cent in Canadian skiers last winter, and there are predictions that the rise in participation will be repeated this winter. No doubt the little people make up a big part of this increase, as skiing continues to register as Canada's fastest growing sport.

One of the most encouraging things that can happen to a columnist, is to have readers write in offering ideas, information, praise and even criticism, and I'm really living after the response my first 5 column installments have gained this season. It's interesting to note, that readers want to see their ideas, recommendations and views in print, so I shall resume the section I've labelled "Skiers Say" over the past three years.

In quoting some of you I have been talking with, here are three views, which you may or may not agree with. I'll offer my views on some now and then.

First, a gentleman said to me last Sunday morning, "Don't you think it would be to skiers' advantage to have mandatory ski tests for everyone, and compel skiers to use those slopes which they are capable of handling?" My opinion is no, the whole idea is lousy. It's the challenges that cause skiers to improve.

A lady asked, "When will the people at Mt. Orford begin making artificial snow?" I asked if she would ski 8 months a year if she had a chance, and the answer was negative, so why worry, even as it is, skiers at this centre get in some 4 1/2 to 5 1/2 months of sliding every year.

And, a father told me he wanted his children to ski, but wanted to get the cheapest equipment he could find. All I can think of to answer this man, and other parents who think like him, is, why even encourage your small fry to ski, if you're going to place them behind the eight-ball to begin with.

Wings surge back to earn 4-4 draw with Bruins

Habs finally beat Esposito 1-0

Montreal Canadiens finally gained a measure of revenge on Tony Esposito, the former team-mate who kept them from scoring a single goal in seven periods of National Hockey League action with Chicago Black Hawks.

Jacques Lemaire fired a shot that trickled through the Chicago goalie's and into the net for a 1-0 Montreal victory before 16,666 fans at Chicago Thursday night.

Lemaire's goal came in the second period of the game to turn the tables on the 26-year-old goalie who had shut out the Canadiens in two previous games this season.

In another game Thursday, Detroit Red Wings battled to a 4-4 tie with Boston Bruins.

HAS 4 SHUTOUTS

Esposito, picked up from Montreal by Chicago in last summer's draft, remains the league's leading goalie with four shutouts. Rogatien Vachon made 38 saves in the Montreal nets for his second shutout.

The victory moved Montreal to within two points of New York Rangers, who lead the East Division with 34 points. The loss for the Black Hawks dropped them into fifth spot, one point back of Detroit.

The Black Hawks made Vachon work for his shutout as they took a 16-7 shots-on-goal advantage in the first period. But they dropped their guard in the second session and a clearing pass from Dennis Hull to Jim Pappin was intercepted by Lemaire who took the puck to the blue line and fired a wrist shot.

Beavers cast fortunes against Sorel tonight

SHERBROOKE — The Sherbrooke Beavers host the powerful Sorel Black Hawks tonight at the Sports Palace in a regular Junior "A" league game. Game time is set for 9 p.m.

After floundering on a three-game road trip which netted them three losses, the Beavers will be somewhat anxious to appear back on home ice where they exhibit the exciting brand of hockey they are potentially capable of coming up with away from home.

In their last encounter, the Beavers edged Phil Watson's boys 4-3 and a repeat performance at this point of the schedule is vital, since they are mired in the cellar of the Eastern Division — seven points behind the Trois-Rivières Dukes.

Real Veilleux, the Beavers' general manager, who is embarking on a scouting trip to Ontario and the Rouv-Noranda area, has acknowledged disappointment in at least two players — Gilbert Smith and Bruno Landry when performing on the road and disclosed that both Landry and Smith are on the trading block. Owing to their Junior "A" hockey experience, General Manager Veilleux felt that team leadership is required of them, an essential quality that has been wanting all season long.

Veilleux also announced that Normand Piche, the scrappy forward and the team's leading scorer will be lost to the Beavers for a week due to the injury he sustained when hit by a flying puck close to his left eye in Tuesday's game against Verdun.

Coach Lou Poliquin indicated that Yves Belanger would get the nod as the starter in tonight's match-up.

In league games played last night the St. Jerome Alouettes eked by the Drummondville Rangers 7-6. Sorel coralled Trois-Rivières 8-5. Shawinigan Bruins dumped the Quebec Ramparts 7-2, and Cornwall defeated the Verdun Leafs 5-1.

GOT FOUR-YEAR CONTRACT

Feeney, 48, accepted the job only after assurances from the owners that his powers will not be diminished. He received a four-year contract, at an estimated $75,000 a year, and will move the league office from Cincinnati to San Francisco. Feeney's first official act was the announcement that Cincinnati will be host to the 1970 all-star game on July 14 in its new stadium, due for completion June 30.

San Diego traded pitcher Joe Niekro to Detroit for pitcher Pat Dobson and infielder Dave Campbell in the day's other inter-league transaction.

Seattle sent pitcher George Brunet to Washington for pitcher Dave Baldwin and Chicago Cubs swapped pitcher Rich Nye for St. Louis outfielder Charles (Boots) Day.

But the biggest deal, as far as personalities were concerned, saw the Yanks part with Peppone, the temperamental, long-haired slugger who hit 166 homers in eight turbulent American League seasons. In acquiring Blefary, the Yankees receive a player they've coveted since losing him on waivers to Baltimore six years ago.

FELL INTO DISFAVOR

Peppone hit .242, with a club high 27 homers, last season. But he fell into disfavor after walking out on the club three times in August.

The disappearing acts, which he blamed on personal problems, cost him a fine and brief suspension.

"This should be good for the Yankees, and good for the Astros, too," he said. "I'm not disappointed."

"I'm ecstatic," said Blefary, who won the American League

Rookie of the Year award in 1965 in Baltimore and was a Yankee killer of the first order until the Orioles traded him to Houston for pitcher Mike Cuellar a year ago Thursday.

Blefary, at 26 three years younger than Peppone, batted .253 for Houston last year. He hit 12 homers, but became disenchanted with the cavernous Astrodome.

The Tigers added Niekro, younger brother of Atlanta ace Phil, to a pitching staff shaken up earlier in the week when Jerry Robertson was obtained from Montreal for Joe Spina. Niekro was 8-18 as a San Diego starter. Dobson 5-10 for the Tigers, mostly in relief. Campbell hit .103 in 32 games for Detroit.

JOINS 7TH CLUB

Brunet, a left-hander who was 8-12 with California and Seattle last year, moved on to his seventh major league club.

when an emergency, or misfortune strikes, the entire neighborhood acts as a single unit to relieve those in distress. The French-Canadians celebrate their feast days, and St. Jean Baptiste Day, and the Orangemen of the area, with their friends, and visitors from many distant points, celebrate the Victory at the Borne on July 12th of each year, yet there is never a trace of friction. Is this not as it should be?

Readers, unacquainted with this locality, might well ask if this county is as good as we say it is, and the people so friendly, why was it that many of the descendants of the sturdy pioneers sold the homesteads which had been wrested away from Mother Nature at the expense of so much labor and hardship? The answer, kind friends, is this, lack of industries. Yet a Beneficent Creator provided us with the means to prevent this from happening.

As has been already stated, the River Thames played a very important role in the lives of the first settlers whose keen eyes soon noted the power potential of the water sites at Lysander, the Reed falls, and the Red Falls, so with their limited resources, they developed the power sites at Lysander, and at the Reed Falls on the Palmer. May I now quote directly from the Annals of Megantic, page 101, "Perhaps the most ambitious mill effort of the county was the erection of the Lysander Falls plant. The dam there was an engineering triumph, and, if General Lysander Flagg, Mr. Wolcott, and associates had been supported by the provincial authorities, a little Sherbrooke would have arisen." This was in the 1860's. Then, later, much later, in 1965, the writer was associated with a strong influential group composed of the three resident clergymen in Inverness, the Hon. Mr. Maheux, M.L.A. of Megantic, the Hon. Glen Brown, M.L.A., of Bromfield, the Megantic County Council, the Chamber of Commerce, Thetford Mines, and others, asked that Hydro Quebec develop these above-mentioned power sites, and the answer was a very blunt, "No."

WAS THIS PROGRESS?

Now, prior to 1918, when the Shawinigan Water and Power Company acquired these properties from private interests, there was a small village at Lysander. Two mills, (operated by only a fraction of the power available), a general store, a church, a blacksmith shop, a butter factory, and the dwellings needed to house the employees of the two mills. There was also a flour and feed mill operating twenty-four hours a day at times at the Reed Falls. Immediately after the transfer of the properties to the new owners, the machinery of the mills mentioned was sold, and the mills demolished. Was this progress, as our first settlers understood the word?

But the worst is yet to come. After the refusal by the Minister of Natural Resources of that time, (1965), to grant our wishes, we asked for a quotation on these power sites which Hydro Quebec stated were of no economic value; and were flabbergasted to receive a reply stating that Hydro Quebec would neither sell, nor lease, the properties in question. Then, to cap it all, the same Crown agency demanded—and secured—a drop in the Municipal taxes on their holdings here.

We cannot but admire—even to the point of envy—such places as Sherbrooke, Magog, and others where men of vision developed the water powers of their individual districts—and held them.

It was suggested at the time I was invited to write this article, that mention should be made of some person who had made an outstanding contribution to the general welfare of this district, and, in my opinion, there is no one more prominent to qualify for this honor, than the late Rev. H. A. Dickson, of Rectory Hill.

In spite of the fact that Mr. Dickson attended to the spiritual needs of three congregations, one at St. Luke's, Adderley, another at the Church of the Ascension at Campbell's Corners, and St. Stephen's at Rectory Hill, at which place the Rectory of that time was located. Now Rectory Hill and Adderley, are about twelve miles apart, which he had to negotiate in those days by buggy, or sleigh, powered by a horse, noted more for his faithfulness than for his speed.

A BUSY CLERGYMAN

Mr. Dickson, however, found time to engage in other activities in addition to his labours as a country clergyman. He was instrumental in the organization of Megantic Horticultural Society, he was Editor of the Megantic Edition of the Montreal Gazette. He was chaplain of the 55th Battalion, Megantic Light Infantry, the Regimental colors of which repose in St. Stephen's. It was also he who was the organizer and driving force, which brought the Megantic People's Telephone Company into being, providing the great majority of the citizens of the County with an efficient service for $10.00 so the annual rental per telephone installed.

Had he lived, there is no doubt that a railroad would have connected Thetford Mines and Lyster, at which point it would have made connection with the Lotbiniere and Megantic Railroad which operated in those days between Lyster and Deschailons on the St. Lawrence. This was his pet scheme and he had made many satisfactory contacts with influential people in this connection, when to the loss of the whole countryside this wonderful man passed on to his reward, when only forty-eight years of age, but he left an impress on this county which was never equalled by anyone.

The practice does show

When you see Jay Humphry flash across the ice, you get the impression the intricate footwork and airbound whirles are really rather easy to do.

And for the 21-year-old North Vancouver, B.C., native they are.

But there's a lot more to it than that.

What doesn't show is the seven-hours-a-day practice for two years which was made possible by a five-hour-a-day job in a Toronto department store.

Not to mention the couple of additional hours a day Jay devoted to correspondence courses which enabled him to graduate from high school...with honors!

There won't be quite so much practice now that Jay is skating with Ice Follies. The show will be in Sherbrooke at the Sports Palace for a 6-day run, starting Jan. 6.

Jay, who is one of the features of the show will bring in to Sherbrooke an attache case that weighs in at 20 pounds.

"I spend three hours a day with my books," he said rather matter-of-factly.

He divides the rest of his time between practice sessions "just to make sure I always do my best," and — at long last — a little social life.

"Social life when you're training is almost zero," lamented Jay. "Maybe that's why serious skaters all seem to be very mature at a very young age."

But, then, Jay started skating at a very young age.

"I was six," he recalled. "My mother saw former Olympic champion Dick Button skate once and she thought it would be nice if I did something like that."

Jay wasn't too sure about his prowess at ice skating until he was eight.

By 1965, he began bringing home the medals. He won the Canadian Mens Singles title in 1968 and 1969; took second in the 1969 North American Mens Singles competition, and placed sixth in the Worlds Championships.

But competition wasn't choice. "I always wanted to go with a show," explained Jay. "I love to travel and when Shipsdays and Johnson asked me to sign with them — I did."

Which made everybody happy, including audiences which have a great time trying to keep up with the talented young Canadian as he skates through a musical sandwich featuring "Bizet" and the theme music from the movie "Rosemary's Baby" and television's "The Saint."

Tickets at a $1. reduction for groups are available from the Sports Palace.

NORTH VANCOUVER'S JAY HUMPHRY

Image's trainers pay $300 fines

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — The two men who handled 1968 Kentucky Derby winner Dancer's Image have paid $300 fines each in connection with charges arising from an investigation of the race.

Trainers Lou Cavalieri of Toronto and Robert Barnard, accused of conduct detrimental to the best interest of racing, pleaded that they neither affirmed nor denied the charge.

It was filed by the Kentucky State Racing Commission which launched its probe after an illegal medication turned up in the winner's system after the race.

Counsel for the trainers said: "We believe the best interest of racing will be served by such a plea, being made without any admission of guilt."

The two previously denied any wrongdoing in the case which involved "salting" Dancer's Image feed with aspirin two days after the Derby.

Investigators termed the incident an attempt to hinder their efforts to find those responsible for slipping the medication to the colt before he ran in the Derby.

The commission declared Dancer's Image the winner but awarded first prize of $122,600 to the second place horse, Calumet Farm's Forward Pass.

The commission's decision is under appeal in Franklin Circuit Court, with owner Peter Fuller contending the colt should have the money as well as the title.

Rockin' Robert showing little sign of mellowing—but now he smiles

SHERBROOKE — Robert Charlebois, the self-styled clown prince of North American pop music, enthralled a University of Sherbrooke audience last night with a musical tour de force which has become his trademark.

The controversial singer, composer and superstar showman socked it to 'em at the Grande Salle as he does everywhere he goes, but local rock aficionados generally agreed that Charlebois had changed since he last appeared in the area.

It would be wrong to say that the enfant terrible of the pop world has mellowed. Last night though he actually came on stage with a smile on his pug-nosed face, and was not only tolerant with his audience, but to the surprise of many, quite warm.

He has, however, retained a bit of the old Charlebois. Accompanied by the "Rock Libre du Quebec", an excellent group in themselves, he divided his concert into two parts.

The first consisted mostly of his old compositions. The second was dedicated to the "Nouveau Charlebois", and consisted of his most recent productions, including his latest chart breaker "Tout Ecartille".

After the show, Charlebois was bombed with such applause that he was moved to perform three encores. He virtually brought down the house when he went into his celebrated Lindberg, the song that shot him to international stardom.

He stretched it out for ten supercharged minutes then suddenly it was all over. The crowd beseeched him to return, but instead the house lights went up and the magic spell was broken.

The Grande Salle seemed only half full when the concert started, but the minute the lights dimmed and the music began, hordes of backbenchers charged down the aisles and jammed themselves in the space between the stage and the first row of seats.

Charlebois made his entrance after the Rock Libre had warmed up the audience for about five minutes. His outfit, by his own outrageous standards, was conservative.

His light blue bell bottom jeans, tan vest and riding boots, and hunting skirt were in modest contrast to other performances where he had appeared on stage sporting a full-length Indian headdress, his Canadiens hockey sweater, his kangaroo working boots, or his gleaming gold lamé jump suit.

QUEBEC IN FOCUS

School buses lose contracts

QUEBEC (CP) — Twenty-two school bus operators in the province have lost their contracts in the last three weeks for not meeting transport department standards, it was announced Thursday.

Transport Minister Fernand Lizotte said in a statement that department inspectors checked 1,620 school buses in that period and found 785 of them had mechanical defects, mostly minor.

Nine of the vehicles were in such bad shape that they had to be scrapped. Owners of the others were ordered to make repairs before getting the buses back on the road.

Village cafes may get liquor

QUEBEC (CP) — Restaurants licensed to sell liquor can be opened in Quebec villages if a liquor law amendment given first reading in the national assembly Thursday is adopted.

The bill would make it legal to open such establishments in communities of at least 2,000 people. The present population limit is 5,000.

Gagnon offers no defence

MONTREAL (CP) — Charles Gagnon decided Thursday against entering defence evidence in his second non-capital murder trial arising from the 1966 bombing death of Therese Morin at a shoe factory.

The former member of the terrorist Front de Liberation Quebecois, who is conducting his own defence with the help of two lawyers, said he would leave his fate to the jury.

Gagnon's decision came after the Crown declared its case closed and Mr. Justice Jacques Boucher of Court of Queen's Bench rejected two motions made by the 31-year-old accused.

Mini-blaze at legislature

QUEBEC (CP) — Firemen quickly contained a fire Thursday night at the construction site of a building adjacent to the Quebec legislature.

The building, known as Complex G, is to become part of the legislature.

The fire started about 9:30 p.m. EST among construction materials and damage was not believed to be serious. There was no damage to the legislature itself, situated in front of the new structure.

Commission to study English

QUEBEC (CP) — Quebec's royal commission on the status of the French language has enlarged its mandate to examine the teaching of English as a second language.

The reason, chairman Jean-Denis Gendron said Thursday, is that "if Quebec's English-speaking people become bilingual it will put the French-Canadians at a disadvantage."

"We want to make sure that English is properly taught, so that French-speaking Quebecers will have just as good a chance to become bilingual."

May ban U.S. microwave TV

OTTAWA (CP) — State Secretary Gerard Pelletier told the Commons Thursday he may make a statement on a decision by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission to prohibit the use of microwave for importing United States TV programs.

The CRTC, successor regulatory agency to the Board of Broadcast Governors, announced Wednesday that microwave relays will not be permitted to carry U.S. signals over great distances in Canada.

Mr. Pelletier said the commission was set up by Parliament to maintain high levels of service in Canadian broadcasting.

"But it enjoys a measure of autonomy to maintain these high standards."

J. Patrick Nowlan (PC—Annapolis Valley) asked whether Mr. Pelletier would instruct the CRTC to take action against cable TV operators in areas near the U.S. border who can pick up American programs without microwave.

Mr. Pelletier said he needed some time to study the announcement.

The use of microwave would have made possible the distribution of U.S. programming to virtually all areas of Canada.

Mr. Nolan said outside the House that the commission's de-

Constable Richard Waite (left), one of the four arresting officers in the Richard Blass bank robbery in Sherbrooke last February, was presented with a plaque for bravery at city hall yesterday by Sherbrooke Policemen's Association President Jacques Testat.

Woman heads churches

DETROIT (AP) — Syntha Wedel, an Episcopalian (Anglican) and noted ecumenical leader, won overwhelmingly over a Negro clergyman Thursday to become the first woman president of National Council of Churches.

Her victory came at the council's triennial assembly against a Detroit minister, Rev. Dr. Albert Cleage.

She won 387 to 93 over Dr. Cleage, pastor of the Church of the Black Madonna.

Mrs. Wedel becomes the top officer of the most widely representative United States religious organization. It includes most major Protestant and Orthodox

Admits shooting wounded woman

Denies massacre order

WASHINGTON (AP) — Capt. Ernest Medina firmly denied Thursday he ordered a massacre of a South Vietnamese village but admitted that he shot a Viet Cong woman who had been wounded.

"I did not see any slaughter at My Lai 4 that day," the former commander of the company involved in the alleged mass killings told reporters.

"None was reported to me. I did not order any massacre at My Lai 4."

The captain made his statement at a brief news conference in the Pentagon where he had earlier appeared before army investigators looking into the possibility of a cover-up of the alleged massacre.

Seated with him was his legal counsel, criminal lawyer F. C. Oailey.

There are no official charges against Medina.

Medina specifically denied a published statement by a former member of his company who accused the captain of shooting a four-year-old boy in the face.

"No, sir, I did not shoot a child," Medina said.

Medina, asserting that the news media had been "very biased and unfair" toward him, said he did not see any civilians shot at My Lai although he reported 20 to 28 civilians had been killed in preparatory artillery fire as U.S. troops moved into the village.

EXPECTED NO WOMEN

Medina said intelligence officers had told him that there would be no women, children or innocent people in My Lai when the My Lai operation began on March 16, 1968.

He said bodies found after the operation included some women and children.

Medina said he entered the village about three hours after the operation called Task Force Barker began.

"Yes, I shot a woman," Medina said in response to a question, explaining that a helicopter pilot had reported seeing a Viet Cong with a weapon.

The helicopter put down a smoke signal and Medina said he approached the figure.

"I saw it was a woman who was wounded," he said.

"As I turned around I caught in my eye a movement."

"I thought, 'Boy, you've had it. You're dead.'"

"...I instinctively from my military training turned around and fired two shots and I assumed that I did kill her," Medina said.

THOUGHT SHE WAS ARMED

Medina said he thought the woman had a gun or a grenade.

One of Medina's platoon leaders, Lieut. William L. Calley Jr., has been charged with murdering 109 My Lai villagers.

Bailey said the judge who will preside over the scheduled Calley court-martial had "clarified" a ban against potential witnesses making public statements about the case.

Bailey said this clarification allowed Medina to speak out for himself since he had nothing to say which would prejudice Calley.

Asked why the men of his company would be making accusations against him, Medina said there were certain individuals he had had disciplinary problems with, but he did not name them.

The Pentagon hearing is separate from a current over-all criminal investigation of the massacre itself.

Sunday Sermon Subject for December 7, 1969

"God the Only Cause and Creator" will be the subject of the Lesson-Sermon to be read this Sunday in all Christian Science churches. The public is welcome. Scripture selections will include this verse from Psalms: "O come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our maker." The following correlative passage from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, is also part of the sermon: "The real man is spiritual and immortal, but the mortal and imperfect so-called 'children of men' are counterfeiters from the beginning, to be laid aside for the pure reality."

92nd birthday celebrated

Mrs. Sarah Barton, who celebrated her ninety-second birthday on November 26th, was the guest of honor at a birthday party at the home of her eldest daughter, Mrs. Wilfred Beaucage, on the St.

Elie Road, where she is now residing.

She received a number of cards, gifts and well wishes from relatives and friends.

Cards were played during the evening, and although

Mrs. Barton has difficulty seeing and hearing, she enjoyed their company. Her many friends will be glad to know she is otherwise in good health. Mrs. Barton assisted in serving light refreshments.

KELLY SUE, 3½, and BRENT STEWART, 1, are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Gallup, Kingsbury and grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Eldon Gallup, St. Laurent, and Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Davis, Kingston, Ont. They are the great grandchildren of Mrs. Della Gallup and Mrs. Mabel Blake of Danville and Mrs. Maude Eldridge, Knowlton.

MAPLE COPSE CHAPTER IODE

Members of Maple Copse Chapter IODE, Lennoxville, enjoyed coloured slides taken by Mr. Wentworth Richardson on a summer tour with Mrs. Richardson. They travelled the Alaska Highway to Skagway, exploring many places in the Rockies, crossed to Vancouver Island and visited the prairies. Their photographs of many beautiful and interesting views were shared with an appreciative audience. The Regent, Mrs. Pearl Staples, expressed the thanks of the members and presented a small gift to Mr. Richardson.

At the business meeting prior to the films, Mrs. Staples welcomed Mrs. Donald Macrea, a member of the Provincial Executive and former Provincial President.

Mrs. Darcy Bennett, treasurer, reported on the recent successful rummage sale with proceeds of over $90.

Contributions were voted towards the Maplemount children's home and $54 to the school lunch fund. A wreath was purchased for Remembrance Sunday. The members attended the service in a body. The 1st vice-regent, Mrs. Willard Johnston, placed the wreath on the soldiers' monument.

Mrs. Dorothy Barnett, a former member of the Tommy Atkins Chapter, Kitchener, was welcomed by the Regent and signed the register as a new member.

Mrs. George Sutherland, services secretary, reported a busy month. A carton of knitted articles and one of gifts (153) from members for forgotten mental patients and Christmas presents for children in the Arctic went to Provincial headquarters.

A fifty-pound box of good used clothing has gone to Caughnawaga for the Ketterie Memorial Hospital, and a parcel of paper-backs for Canadian service men in Germany.

In connection with this report, Mrs. Staples mentioned the work done on used clothing before it leaves Mrs. Sutherland's hands, everything being examined, mended, cleaned or washed and ironed so that it is in first class condition.

The secretary was asked to write a letter of thanks to Mr. Vineberg, proprietor of Au Bon Marche, for generous help with chapter purchases, and to St. George's church for the use of the hall for rummage sales.

Since the Chapter does not meet in December, the Regent wished the members health and happiness in the holiday season. The meeting closed with the National Anthem with Mrs. Leandre Parent on the piano. After the showing of the slides, tea was served by Mrs. Austin Scott and Mrs. G.W. Knight.

Mortgage Money

If you have invested money in a home it is probably the best collateral you have. For example, by using this equity at Seaboard Finance most homeowners can obtain a lower interest rate than is possible on a personal loan. And at Seaboard you can borrow up to 80% of the value of your property, or in some cases even more. See us for cash today.

COUNTRY PICKERS' PICK LINE ... 5:00 PM & 7:15 PM

BOB BELL ON COUNTRY MUSIC

Greetings once again, Christmas isn't far off now, and as usual, we're getting the Christmas music in each day, and the country stars are no exception. Leave it not to me to be critical, but some of it is good, some of it downright terrible. Lorene Mann has a ditty out called "Indian Santa Claus," and quite frankly, I don't think the Indians will appreciate it very much at all. The story is OK, but Miss Mann needs a lot more polish and musical training if she really expects to make it big in country music. Charlie Pride's got a dandy, "They Stood in Silent Prayer."

Next Friday sees the kid here off to Nashville, and I have my tickets and all ready to hit the trail. In all, I hope to have time to see the Opry four times, see about a jillion people, interview at least that many more, and get back safely in time for Christmas. Anyhow, it's certainly going to be exciting. Wish you could all come along, but it seems everybody's broke. Gotta scoot ... things to do ... so keep smiling, and keep it country.

Music on Records

By Elisabeth Gustafson

BEETHOVEN: The Nine Symphonies. The Berlin Philharmonic under the direction of von Karajan. Deutsche Grammophon 643 600-7.

The year 1970 in music will be a year of overwhelming tribute to one of the greatest geniuses of western civilization. I refer, of course, to Ludwig van Beethoven who was born two hundred years ago. Bonn, his birthplace in West Germany, plans continual celebrations; Vienna, the city where he lived and died, plans endless pilgrimages and festivities; the whole western world does. And so it should. Who but Michelangelo and one or two others are of equal stature? Who has better asserted man's nobility and aspiration despite his messes and follies? Who has given more profound harmony to the dissonance of history? One waxes rhetorical. And one should.

The first overwhelming tribute has just come into my hands: the first volume in a series of records which will present almost the entire work of Beethoven. Deutsche Grammophon is undertaking what must be the most comprehensive recording project ever undertaken. We are told that not a single work of any importance will be omitted; that a number of compositions are included which have never before been available on gramophone records. The project is called the Deutsche Grammophon Beethoven Edition 1970. It will engage some of the foremost artists at present before the public; and will include lavish, illustrated brochures and a biography undertaken by Beethoven authorities; all in close association with the Beethoven Archive in Bonn. What more could one wish? The only thing to wish for is the $307 for the entire issue of 75 records. But don't be put off. You don't have to buy all of the 12 boxed recordings; they are available separately.

Number One is the album of the Nine Symphonies played by the Berlin Philharmonic under the direction of its leader, Herbert von Karajan.

How to review 9 symphonies in one gulp? Well, all one can do is point out that the music is in the hands of a master conductor, and that there is nothing that the forces at his command cannot do impressively. One can maintain other preferences: Toscanini for the lot, Beecham for the "Pastoral", Furtwangler for the Seventh, perhaps; X for this one and Y for that one. Comparisons set up those touchstones without which Art is a weather-vane meandering to every breeze of personality. We certainly need to box our artistic compass (to change the metaphor). And if we are to maintain vital standards, the present Beethoven yardstick cannot be overlooked.

I am still going through the eight records and sixteen sides of this Karajan offering. And the interpretations are magnificent: everyone engaged in this task is dedicated—including the Deutsche Grammophon engineers who provide superb sound and surfaces.

YOUR DENTAL HEALTH

The Ravages of Erosion, Abrasion Can Be Halted

By WILLIAM LAWRENCE, D.D.S.

DEAR DR. LAWRENCE: Recently you wrote about lemon juice and tooth erosion. Will you please advise what can be done when one has erosion to keep it from getting worse?—Mrs. BJH, LaCrosse, Wis.

ANSWER: Erosion is a wearing away of the enamel and dentin near the gums, and presents a modified saucer-like appearance.

However, most dentists refer to this wearing away as abrasion rather than erosion. It is generally believed that mechanical wearing away of tooth structure (abrasion) is more often the cause than chemical wearing away (erosion). Poor tooth-brushing habits are a frequent cause of abrasion.

What to do about erosion-abrasion?

If they're not deep and don't threaten to expose the nerve or do not irritate the gums, they can be treated with fluoride compounds. This desensitizes them and can stop or slow up the E-A syndrome.

If the depressions are deep, or if they offend cosmetically, they can be filled with any of the various tooth filling materials which best fit the situation.

DEAR DR. LAWRENCE: My granddaughter had an accident when she was 18 months old. She hung onto the back bumper of a car and knocked two upper front teeth completely out.

She's 6 now and her permanent teeth haven't come in yet. Do you think she'll ever get her second teeth? And what shall we do about it?—Worried Grandma, Mt. Clemens, Mich.

DEAR WORRIED GRANDMA: You so remind me of my mother who worried like mad because my daughter's front teeth didn't come in when they were supposed to. My daughter didn't get her first baby tooth until she was 13 months old.

Of course there's a small chance that the permanent tooth buds were injured in the accident. And if they were there is further chance that eruption will be delayed or worse. But without any symptoms at the time of accident, it's doubtful if the permanent tooth buds were involved.

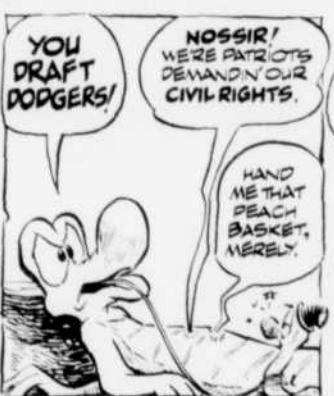

A quick look by your dentist should be enough to establish the position of the teeth in the gums. And if he's suspicious that something is wrong, an X ray of the area could help clarify the situation.

X rays should be taken only if absolutely necessary. Children should not be exposed to X ray unless it's important for diagnostic purposes. And if X ray is necessary, the child should be draped with a leaded apron to protect against possible "spray" radiation.

Bridge wouldn't be much fun if the players restricted themselves to the 15 essential words. (Spades, hearts, diamonds, clubs and no-trump; the numbers one to seven, pass, double and redouble.)

On the other hand too much conversation is far worse than no conversation at all. Thus when South looked at dummy he might well have contented himself with something like, "Thank you, partner," instead of, "We've really underbid this one."

A little constructive thought would have been better than any conversation because South proceeded to work out a way to go down at four spades.

He ruffed the club lead in dummy and promptly cashed his ace and king of trumps. East showed out on the second trump and now South proceeded to do some concentrated thinking but it was too late.

He saved something from the wreck by ruffing a second club; returning to his hand with the jack of diamonds; cashing his ace of trumps and leading a second diamond. He didn't save much because East played the nine of diamonds when the low one was led from dummy. West recognized that as a signal to show an even number of diamonds and proceeded to ruff the second diamond so South wound up down two.

You can see what South should have done. All he had to do to insure his contract against that 4-1 break in trumps was to lead a low trump at trick three. He would be giving up the extra overtrick but trumps do break 4-1 on occasion, and what is an overtrick compared to game and rubber?
