Senate comes to over drug bill

Who's who

By TADEUSZ LETARTE

I was interested to see this week that The Canadian Rock Mechanics Association will be holding its 6th annual congress in Montreal August 30 to September 3. Which brings me to the question, what exactly does a rock mechanic do? "Could you check the quartz content, rotate the shale and tighten the steering please." Record staffer Laurel Sherrer suggests it might have something to do with rock music in which case no amount of tinkering by mechanics is going to fix it.

Well members of the Senate are really digging in their feet over this new drug bill. It stands to reason. If the price of drugs go up the Senate will be the first group to really suffer. With an average age of 114, senators probably use more prescription drugs than any other segment of society. Can you imagine the uproar if the new bill included sleeping pills? Seriously though, the Senate is only exercising its role as a house of "sober, second thought" in an effort to improve Tory legislation. Besides, it's the first time they've earned their keep since Moses lived in Cairo.

Well it's back to squeezing the color button in margarine. For those of you too young to remember, the color button was a little container of dye in every package of white margarine that was mandatory in the dark ages. The margarine was white so unscrupulous stores couldn't pass it off as butter and the button was sort of orange so customers could mix it with the margarine and pretend they were eating butter. Got that? Anyway, the provincial government has decided consumers aren't smart enough to distinguish between butter and margarine anymore so margarine henceforth will revert to its original color — white. Thank god our government takes its task as guardian of the consumer seriously. Now if they would only get the mercury out of the rivers, the sulphur dioxide out of our air and the sewage out of Lake Memphremagogwe could all eat our sandwiches in peace.

Get your pens and pencils out, I've found a worthy cause. The proposed Evel Knievel and Friends Museum is in trouble. The Butte Montana District School Board is about to turn down Evel's offer to lease a local school for his museum on the flimsy grounds it might be used by students. Knievel, you will remember, came to fame for a variety of fascinating stunts on a motorcycle including an attempt to jump the Snake River. Don't these idiots see what they're doing? This is a slice of Americana? Would they tear down the Smithstonian to widen a highway? Would they dig up Arlington Cemetary for a housing project?

No sooner does Michael Jackson announce his return to the touring business than fate deals him another crushing blow. The man that did more for make-up than Mabeline, is being sued for $150 million by "Billy Jean Jackson" who claims the singer is the father of her three children. Jackson of course denies the whole thing — wouldn't you — and his press agent says the charge is ridiculous. Looking at Michael Jackson, I tend to believe the press secretary.

Here are six wines to stay way clear of Generally speaking I try to be as positive as possible in this column. Admittedly, the Société des Alcools occasionally comes under fire but considering some of the decisions made by the government liquor monopoly this is entirely understandable.

Today is going to be different, however. Put it down to the weather or call it end of summer blues. Personally, I'm going to call it Six Wines I Wouldn't Buy.

Top of the list is Beaujolais Nouveau. Although, I am always happy to drink it for free at the SAQ's annual tasting, I wouldn't spend a penny of my own. Young and fruity it is but there are dozens of wines with the same happy characteristics that cost less and last longer.

Baby Duck belongs with all the rest of the children's wines that were so popular a few years back. Artificially sweetened, over carbonated, alcoholic soda pop.

You'll also excuse me if I 'pass' on any of the new wine coolers. This is a personal prejudice concerning the mixing of wine with anything else. I can't rid myself of the feeling that any wine that has to be mixed with fruit juice, soda water or some other liquid is trying to hide something. In the case of many of the coolers, I rather think it might be the fact that the wine isn't very good.

As a rule, I don't drink, and wouldn't buy, Australian, Canadian, South African or American 'Sherry'. This is not so much that the above-mentioned are not perfectly acceptable drinks — in many cases they are excellent — but when real Sherry is available at prices that even I can afford, why settle for an imitation.

The same goes for 'Port' from any country other than Portugal. Although I have had samples that were quite tasty, none has ever measured up to the quality of the original and — since all wine is dependent upon the climate, grapes, soil and techniques found at the place of origin — it is likely none ever will.

Finally I am not about to buy a bottle of Chateau Mouton Rothschild; first because I can't afford it and second because no wine is worth the enormous price now paid by collectors, connossieur and show-offs.

There are numerous others I could probably list but I imagine I have insulted enough people for one week. I suppose this all goes back to the one rule I have concerning wine: Drink what you enjoy and don't listen to the critics. Cheers!

MOSCOW (AP) — Actor Tom Cruise, flashing his trademark crafty smile and signing autographs for American children, led film industry workers through the U.S. Embassy to talk with diplomats about the prospects for a new movie.

The star of Top Gun and The Color of Money is on a private visit to the Soviet Union this week to research the possibility of a joint U.S.-Soviet film project, embassy spokesman Marguerite Squire said Wednesday.

"It would be a film about a romance, but the script is not written yet," Squire said.

Cruise and the production team accompanying him have been meeting with members of the Union of Soviet Cinematographers, she said.

'It was a very tough decision for me to make.'

Dennis Trudeau takes over as Newswatch anchor

By Laurel Sherrer

SHERBROOKE — Dennis Trudeau has been shopping for ties and sports jackets lately.

No pants; just ties and sports jackets.

You'll have a chance to check out his new wardrobe, not to mention his on-camera news reading style, starting Sept. 14 when he takes over from Kathy Keefler as anchor on CBC Montreal's Newswatch program.

Trudeau, the former co-host of CBC Radio's As It Happens program was in the Townships last week on a promotional tour before he starts his new job.

Giving up a job that gives him a continent-wide audience and even allows him to be heard on shortwave around the world, was not easy to do, says Trudeau.

"It was a very tough decision for me to make," he says, "but I think it's the right move."

Although he'll now be seen and heard only in Eastern Canada and maybe the northern New England states, Trudeau feels moving to Newswatch has given him a "wonderful opportunity" to break into television, a medium he's had little experience with.

GOING TO SCHOOL

Right about now Trudeau is attending a week-long "anchor school" offered by the CBC in Toronto to learn all about acting naturally in front of the camera.

As for journalistic skills, enunciation, voice projection and all that stuff, Trudeau already has about all the training he needs.

His first job after university was at the Chronicle-Telegraph in Quebec City, when the newspaper was still a daily. There he learned the basics of general reporting as well as getting a handle on the French language.

This was followed by three years as a reporter and editor for Canadian Press, two years at the Gazette, a period of law studies at Laval University, and a year on the Quebec City bureau of the Montreal Star.

His broadcast career began in 1979 at Quebec AM and was followed by two years with Cross-Country Checkup. Four years on Daybreak preceded the two-year stint just finished on As It Happens.

All this experience means that there'll be much more to appreciate about Trudeau's work with Newswatch than his ties and his announcing style.

NOT JUST A PRETTY FACE

According to Newswatch producer Karl Nerenberg, CBC was looking for more than just a pretty face and nice voice to read the news.

"It's felt that an anchor person should be a journalist," he said. "You want to have a feeling that the people you're listening to have a little bit of thought behind what they're saying."

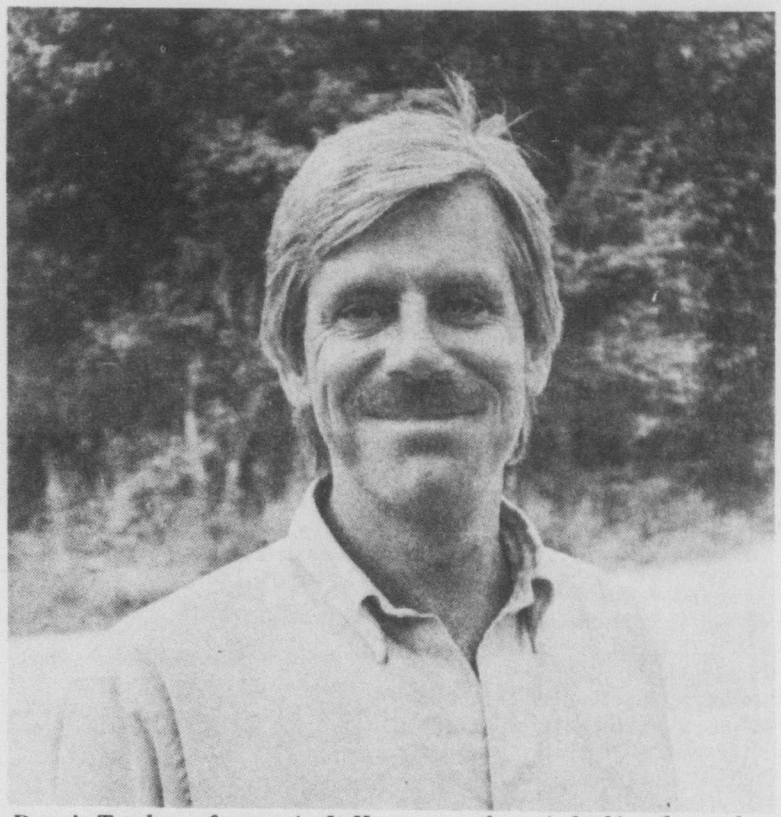

Trudeau's experience talking with people all over the world about events on the international scene not only gives him an edge when it comes to pronouncing foreign names, says Nerenberg, but it will also be helpful to the show's producers in selecting and editing the international news.

With Trudeau's help, the Newswatch team also hopes to do more of the current affairs reporting they've been doing lately, and reach out more into the rural areas of Quebec, said Nerenberg.

While he's going to miss talking to people all over the world, Trudeau is looking forward to certain aspects of his new job. One of these is the fact that he won't be commuting to Toronto from his Montreal home anymore.

"That's a pretty big lifestyle change," he said. He'll be working on a more-or-less normal schedule now, for about the first time in his career. "I've never really had a normal get-up-in-the-morning-have-breakfast-with-your-family lifestyle."

Trudeau encourages Townshippers to contact Newswatch with local news items or issues they'd like to see covered.

Dennis Trudeau, former As It Happens co-host, is looking forward to learning all about television news as he embarks on his new career as television anchorman at CBC Montreal.

On the cover:

Dennis Trudeau stopped by the Record office on a promotional tour last week to talk about his new job.

Dancer wins recognition and hits Big Apple

MONTREAL (CP) — It could be the storyline from Flashdance or Fame: Ambitious dancer enters talent competition, and after three gruelling days wins over scores of contestants. She then moves to Manhattan and goes to work on Broadway.

Kathleen Beauge hasn't gone that far, but she did take the first prize at the 13th annual Talent America contest, bringing her to the attention of several New York show-business agents.

"They said I could dance on Broadway, but not long-distance," said Beauge, an aerobics instructor at a downtown YMCA. "They told me I could get a scholarship at Alvin Ailey (the renowned black dance school) so I wouldn't have to pay for classes.

"They said I can't let time pass by. I can't let the heat pass."

Earlier this month, Beauge's heat filled the ballroom of New York's Roosevelt Hotel as she performed an intense three-minute jazz dance to the Eurythmics' song The City Never Sleeps.

"She was breathtaking," said competition organizer Jayne Eastwood. "She won out over 350 contestants. She got a standing ovation. It was something I've never seen in 13 years."

Beauge went through three days of eliminations before the 15-member jury, made up of agents and casting directors, judged her to be the best adult soloist and overall top performer.

GAINS EXPOSURE

But the real prize was the exposure. Recent winners of the competition have gone on to act in TV soaps (Christiane Joy Alfonso) and movies (Patrick Dempsey in Meatballs III).

"It's a big move (to New York)," says Beauge. "I don't know anybody there. But I want to dance for sure. This is a great opportunity, but it has to be well-planned. And it means leaving everything here."

The urge is definitely there. "I'm 25 now. There's no way I can wake up at 30 without having danced. I'm working here, it's nice, it's comfortable, but on the other hand I know I'll regret it all my life if I don't go."

Like many dancers, Beauge is small in stature but she packs a lot of power in her muscled body, displaying control, flexibility and style in the dance routines she has choreographed herself.

Thumbs up for Stratford despite little Shakespeare

This is the second and final part of a review of the plays appearing at the Stratford Festival this summer and Fall. This article features reviews on Scandal Tells All, Nora, and Not About Drama.

By Donnelly

Richard Brinsley Sheridan's piece of social criticism, School For Scandal, is populated by caricatures with names like Surface, Teazle, Sneerwell, Snake, Candour, Backbite, etc. This is England in the 1770s, when fortunes were being made in commerce and reputations were directly related to credit ratings. (Sound familiar?)

At a time of competitiveness, when one's honor, trustworthiness and marriage prospects could be transformed into hard currency, scandal could make or break fortunes and, consequently, became a weapon used by the unscrupulous. The first act of the Stratford production sets up the situation of two brothers competing for the hand of an heiress. On the surface, Charles Surface is an irresponsible spendthrift and Joseph a model citizen. But the second Surface is, in fact, a fraud scheming with a circle of scandal mongers to besmirch the reputation of his brother.

The characters are delightful, two-dimensional figures who chatter away in clever 17th century prose which may challenge some festival goers at the start. But Robin Phillips' comedic orchestration is so vibrant, it can't fail to entertain. And Douglas Campbell's entry in the second act, as the brother's uncle and benefactor Sir Charles, brings the play to life.

A frequent visitor to North Hatley, where his in-laws live, Campbell is the well-known Canadian actor who created "The Great Detective" role on CBC. His thespian powers, too big for the tube, are given full scope on stage.

Sir Charles' return from India triggers the plot which eventually uncovers the rascal Joseph and redeems his ill-treated brother Charles. Stratford veteran Colm Feore, who plays Joseph, is currently specializing in despicable characters. His Iago, which we look forward to seeing later in the season, is said to be spectacular. Here he plays the part very realistically, one might even say sympathetically, but not memorably.

However, Scott Wentworth's romantic Charles does stick in the mind — quite a switch from his role in Carbaret. The boisterous scenes with his cronies are a delight. Stratford's old man, William Hutt — master of the dramatic pause — is a stand out as the newly-wedded, nearly-cuckolded Sir Peter Teazle and Sheila McCarthy as his pretty young wife is far more acceptable here, if still on the mousy side. Susan Wright, who has gained much weight and breadth since her Festival Lennoxville days, has also grown in comic stature. Her Mrs. Candour is full blown and she ellicits unrestrained laughter whenever she opens her mouth.

NORA THE NEW

NORA is Ingmar Bergman's adaptation of Ibsen's A Doll's House. By taking great liberties, Bergman draws out the essence of Nora's struggle in late 19th century Denmark and, modernizing it, makes it palatable in the 1980s. Up to the final, cathartic scene, what we have is a totally believable exploration of fin-de-siècle mores and attitudes towards women — an eye-opener for those who think we have not come a long way, baby.

In the final scene, which takes place in the bedroom, the period sets and costumes remain consistent but the characters have undergone a miraculous transformation. Self-conscious at last, Nora sees her life first as her father's daughter, then as wife and mother, in a clear light and acts to free herself. Her patronizing husband becomes a Bergmanesque wimp. Ibsen's story was 'a modern tragedy'. Without destroying the integrity of the original drama, Bergman has created an heroic saga.

Nora is played with enthusiasm, intensity and strength by Lucy Peacock — a former Bishop's University theatre student and only two years ago a member of the Festival's Young Company and now deservedly a star. Her wonderful innocence as Nora makes her awakening all the more provocative. Joe Ziegler, whose first professional experience after graduating from the National Theatre School was at The Piggery in North Hatley, portrays her husband.

Former Bishop's theatre student Lucy Peacock plays Nora with enthusiasm, intensity and strenght. Only two years ago she was a member of the Festival's Young Company, now she has become a deserving star.

Recognizing his talent back then in Wait Until Dark, we predicted Ziegler would go places and so he has. But, like so many others, having become a fixture at Stratford, he seems to have settled into the comfortable regularity of rep. In craftsmanlike fashion, he fills the roles assigned but does not make them his own.

NOT ABOUT DRAMA

Perhaps the only play, thus far, we would not recommend for the majority — from a theatrical standpoint — is Not About Heroes. This intimate meeting of the minds tracks the friendship of the World War I poets Siegfried Sassoon and Wilfred Own (In Flanders fields...). Very well acted by the ever-charming Nicholas Pennell and Henry Czerny, it is nonetheless very static as a play. There are a few touching exchanges, punctuated by readings of WWI poems which capture the horrors of the trenches. A great way to brush up on war poetry one is unlikely to read but, other than noting the attraction and repulsion of war, Heroes has little relevance unless you're a vet or a student of the period.

Othello and Much Ado About Nothing, the two big Shakespeare works just unveiled, add another tragedy and comedy to the season. The former, starring Howard Rollins, who received an Academy Award nomination as best actor for Ragtime, should be worth seeing, despite a middle-aged Desdemona. But we'd put our money on Much Ado with old man Hutt and Richard Monette.

The Festival may be short on Shakespeare but has much to say about where we are headed. Whether you are heading out for a good time or on a voyage of discovery, Stratford will make the trip to Upper Canada worthwhile.

Salvador Dali's paintings still impressing the world

By MariBeth McQuaite
Smithsonian News Service

"A universal genius who also paints," one art critic said in lavish praise. "The most remarkable, exciting, perceptive mind of the 20th century," declared an enthusiastic collector in 1947.

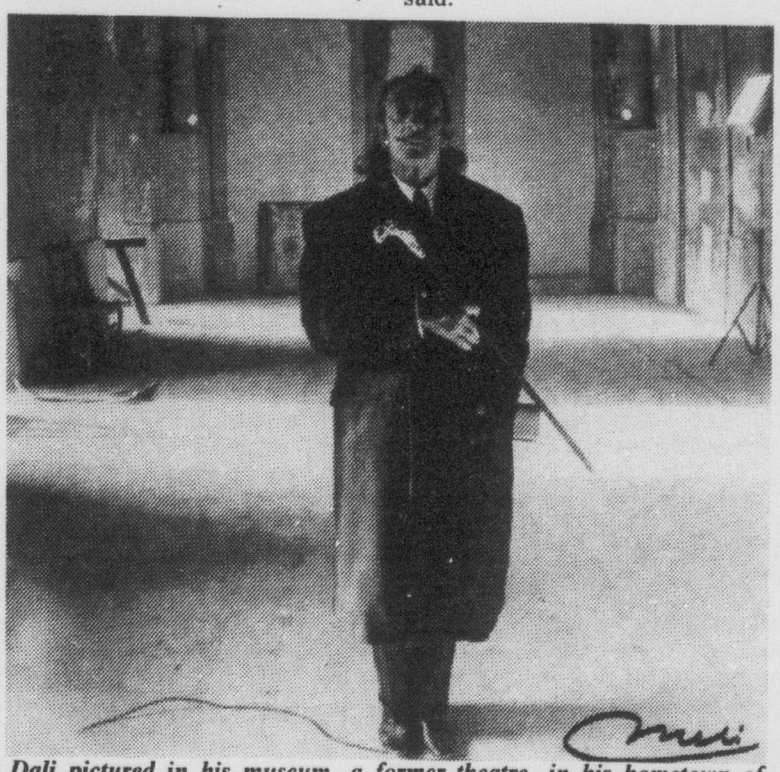

Salvador Dali has been considered a genius—and a madman—ever since he burst upon the art scene in the 1920s. Now 84 and in failing health, Dali ranks as one of the most famous painters of all time, his success fueled by creativity mixed with calculated controversy and public fascination. Museums and private collectors have long prized his work.

Pictures of limp watches, dreamy landscapes and floating objects are "trademark" Dali images that integrate the world of dreams and the experience of reality. In the works of Dali and lesser-known surrealists, universal fears and innate desires take on physical appearance.

Dali's obsessive fascination with subjects left unspoken in the Victorian Age fired the public's imagination. His visual games rendered in a precise, almost photographic technique could be appreciated by a large audience, notes one student of surrealism, author Jacqueline Bograd Weld. Dali's posturing, pranks and self-serving stunts made him and his waxed moustache even more renowned in the '30s.

Bored with conventional society, the surrealists valued irrationality above reason and logic, feeling above thought. Surrealists relished the absurd, the uncommon—things like chocolate chicken or roast beef with oysters; costume parties were the rage, people dressing in madcap masks and feathered headgear. Yet the serious thrust of this artistic movement, which thrived amidst the disillusionment after World War I, was to express human nature in all of its forms, to blend the opposing but interactive forces of rationality and fantasy.

What set the Spanish-born Dali apart from his contemporaries, Max Ernst, Man Ray, Yves Tanguy among others, was his ability to present his subjects without inhabition. Dali had no reservations in painting images born deep in his own subconscious. "I had to follow my unconscious in order to free myself of my fears," the artist once said.

Dali pictured in his museum, a former theatre, in his hometown of Figueras, Spain. He once made this comment about his museum, "Since everything about me is theatrical , I couldn't make a better choice."

Surrealism's ringleader, Andre Breton, author of "The Surrealist Manifesto," gave this characteristically cryptic explanation of the movement: "With the coming of Dali, it is perhaps the first time that the mental windows have been opened really wide, so that one can feel oneself gliding up towards the wild sky's trap."

Although the source for Dali's images could be found in his subconscious, the experiences of his life have served as the artist's inspiration. This, perhaps the key to understanding Dali's work, became the point of departure in a lecture given by noted biographer Meryle Secrest for the Smithsonian Institution Resident Associate Program.

Secrest proposes that the works of Dali are largely autobiographical. In her recent study of the Spaniard, Salvador Dali: A Biography, Secrest describes Dali as a literary artists. His hallucinatory images represent the obsessions, anxieties and private fears that have haunted Dali since his childhood. As Secrest concludes, "The family secret was locked in the cupboard and Dali painted it."

The author further contends that the circumstances surrounding Dali's birth accounted for his unsettled mind. The artist was born on May 11, 1904, exactly nine months and 10 days after the death of his parents' first son.

Salvador Dali i Cusi and Felipa Domenech embraced the notion that their newborn son was his brother reincarnated. Their treatment of Dali as their dead son, brought back to life, led to the younger Dali's belief that he did not really exist, according to Secrest. In reaction, Dali's whole life was a desperate attempt to prove that he was different. Insecure and lonely, a victim of his inner fears, Dali was in constant search of his real self.

Secrest further offers this torment as the root of Dali's later exhibitionism. His notoriously elaborate moustache, gold-handled cane and flamboyant garb were props to attract attention and emphasize his individuality. "If he could prove his difference," Secrest says, "then he must be different—therefore, unique."

Dali's obsession with his false persona is perhaps best illustrated in "Metamorphosis of Narcissus," of 1936-1937. Secrest interprets this work as a self-portrait of the artist, presenting it as "an accurate diagnosis of his own psyche."

In the painting, Dali captures Narcissus as he is absorbed in his self-reflection, then transforms him into a hand carved out of stone. This image of a right hand — which Secrest believes to be the artist's painting hand—holds an egg from which springs a flower. Dali seems to be expressing the two sides of his personality: one submersed in the waters of his subconscious; the other displaying the flowers of genius.

Dali was trapped within his own obsessions, caught between the two images of his being, Secrest suggests. Desperate to find the real Salvador Dali, he also realized the value of his false persona. As a result, he viewed the process of reinventing himself as absolutely necessary. "His images had made him famous," Secrest states. "They were his stock and trade, his money-makers; his worthwhileness lay in the extent to which he had exploited them."

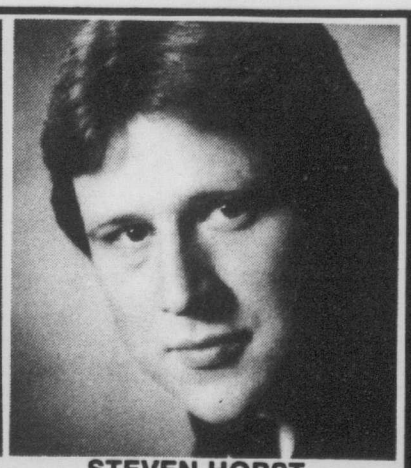

A second major influence in Dali's art and life was the trauma, as a young boy, of witnessing his father's affair with his mother's sister. "Illumined Pleasures," painted in 1929, illustrates his family drama. Dali portrays a woman attempting to escape the grasp of an older man, as a naked boy hides his face in shame. A lion's head, representing sexuality run rampant, is suspended above the scene. An amoebalike figure, with eyes closed and without a mouth, occupies the center of the canvas.

This image which also appears in "Persistence of Memory" (1931), is one that Secrest identifies with the artist himself: "The lack of a mouth represents Dali, as a child, who has been rendered mute by some ghastly secret. Dali has never talked about it because he did not need to — the evidence was there for all eyes."

King's book within a book is a psychological thriller

Kaleidoscope

By RICHARD LONEY

Misery by Stephen King (VIKING-PENGUIN): $24.95, 310 pp.

As both a prolific and wildly popular writer, Stephen King has recently seen two of his works quickly become imbedded in the top 10 list for bestsellers. Eyes of the Dragon is a children's story which has managed to command the attention of adults on the strength of King's bankable name. Misery, on the other hand, diverges slightly from its author's usual genre of pure horror. The horror in this novel is rooted in the psychological trauma that grips novelist Paul Sheldon as he has been kidnapped and sequestered away in a mountain cabin by a psychotic registered nurse who is his most loyal fan.

Paul Sheldon writes romance potboilers for a living, and is seemingly as successful with them as his creator King has been with ghouls and the undead. On a visit to Denver, Colorado he has had the misfortune to have his car crash in a winter storm, only to be "rescued" by Annie Wilkes, at whose side he awakens to be told that she is his number one fan. Sheldon has no feeling in his legs whatsoever, but can view a mass of lumps under the bedclothes where his lower extremities should be. He learns that his legs have been shattered and that Annie Wilkes is his guardian angel, metering out the Novril pills which dull the overpowering pain he suffers.

But as the scenario develops, Sheldon learns that Nurse Wilkes is hopelessly demented and that she plans to keep him in her custody while he writes a sequel to one of his popular books about the romance figure Misery Chastain.

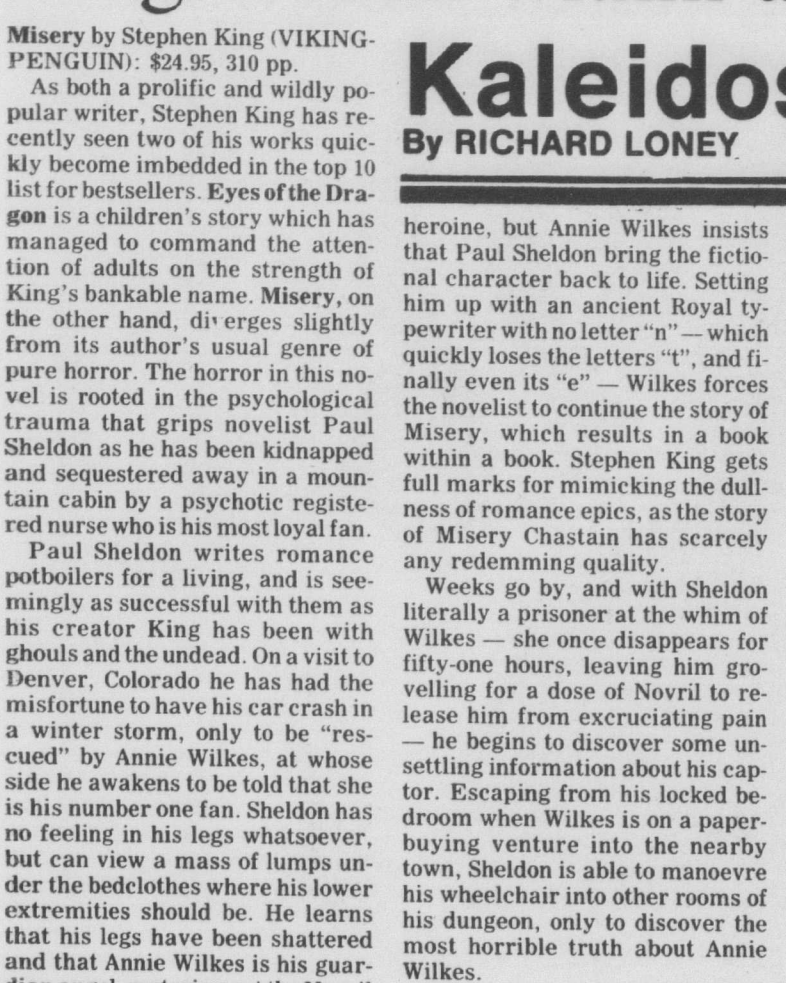

Chastain, like Conan Doyle's Holmes, has been killed off by Sheldon, despite the runaway success of the series of books featuring the heroine, but Annie Wilkes insists that Paul Sheldon bring the fictional character back to life. Setting him up with an ancient Royal typewriter with no letter "n" — which quickly loses the letters "t", and finally even its "e" — Wilkes forces the novelist to continue the story of Misery, which results in a book within a book. Stephen King gets full marks for mimicking the dullness of romance epics, as the story of Misery Chastain has scarcely any redemming quality.

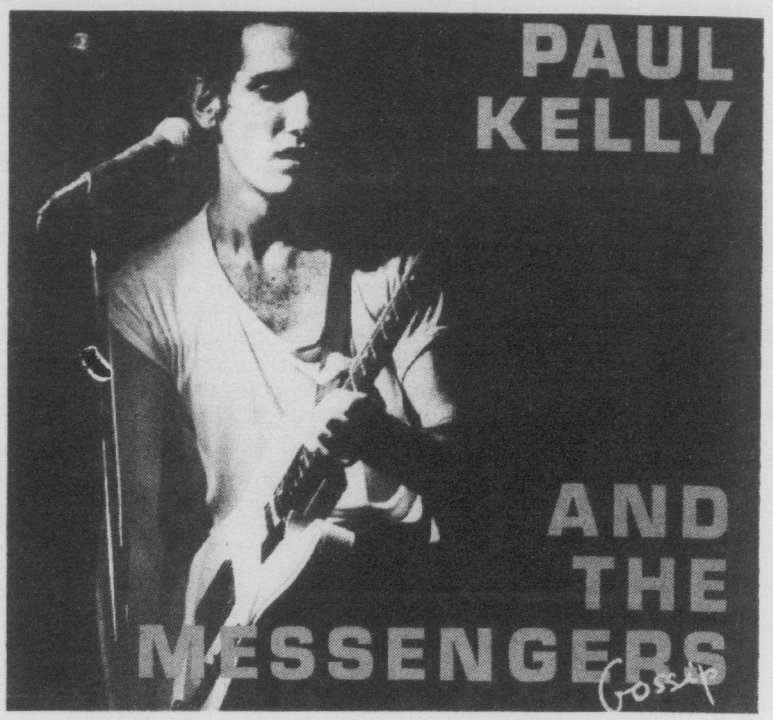

Weeks go by, and with Sheldon literally a prisoner at the whim of Wilkes — she once disappears for fifty-one hours, leaving him grovelling for a dose of Novril to release him from excruciating pain — he begins to discover some unsettling information about his captor. Escaping from his locked bedroom when Wilkes is on a paper-buying venture into the nearby town, Sheldon is able to manoevre his wheelchair into other rooms of his dungeon, only to discover the most horrible truth about Annie Wilkes.

In a large scrapbook called "Memory Lane", Sheldon comes upon a frightening series of newspaper clippings which tell him he is in the hands of a totally deranged woman who has killed more than thirty people while she was actively nursing in various states.

What follows is a battle of wits between captive and captor, and a challenge to writer King, as he must keep our attention without the usual parade of supernatural events which quicken the reader's pulse. On the whole, King manages to tell this story with a fair degree of aplomb, shading in the unsavoury background of Annie Wilkes, and keeping the fate of Paul Sheldon as the focus of the diminishing expectations about his survival.

A different kind of horror for King, closer perhaps to that of his fellow writer and friend Peter Straub, Misery has found no less favor with his faithful readers despite the reliance on pure character and the limitations on the gruesome — although there are a few touches here which will delight the hardcore Stephen King fans.

RECORD REVIEW

Paul Kelly and The Messengers
GOSSIP (A&M)

Hailing from Sydney, Australia, Paul Kelly is a brash, innovative young songwriter for whom genre means nothing — at least as far as any musical barriers are concerned. His band, the Messengers, were once known as The Coloured Girls, and they complement Kelly's eclectic style quite effectively, making the Messengers an assembly that can mix country blues, rockabilly and Elvis Costello nouveau pop without missing a beat.

GOSSIP, when it was originally released in Australia, was a double album, from which fifteen songs have survived from the two dozen, attesting to the quality that those four sides obviously contained. Kelly obviously draws upon his past experience with early band configurations he led, known as High Rise Bombers, and later The Dots, but his musical primer also contains loads of Kinks and Beatles, and other influences which are as bizarre and diverse as Rimbaud the French rebel in poetry, and Howling Wolf and Bob Dylan in music. Churn it all together and Kelly and the Messengers never fail to surprise on this generous fifteen track album of genre gems.

There's the rockabilly scorcher "White Train", with its raucous beat, or "Incident On South Dowling", laced with morbid imagery; "Don't Harm The Messenger" is an example of guitarist Steve Connelly's generous contributions to the band's style, while "Somebody's Forgetting Somebody" can follow with a simplistic acoustic guitar accompaniment that could well be a Hank Williams song from the fifties.

"Darling It Hurts" pulls out all the stops for a jumping, driving rock and roll song, and "The Execution" uses a lead guitar line that sounds like something from Big Country, with just a hint of bagpipes present.

In short, there is almost no chance that Paul Kelly and the Messengers will get branded as devotees of any particular musical style; their extra-long album of Aussie material runs through a musical spectrum that few bands could handle comfortably, but the Messengers shift from country to rock with the facile touch of the slickest L.A. session vets. We shall be hearing more from Paul Kelly and his Messengers.

VIDEO SCREENINGS

NO MERCY (CBS-FOX VIDEO)

Both the visual and print hype for this film concentrated on the torrid sex scenes generated by two of the foremost box office draws in contemporary movies, Richard Gere and simpering blonde temptress Kim Basinger. That was a mistake. What was overlooked in touting the romance angle between Gere and Basinger was the fact that NO MERCY is a stunningly filmed, action-packed movie that contains a number of popular themes without cluttering up the plot with too much story.

Gere plays a Chicago cop whose partner gets wasted in a particularly gruesome scam, so in a sense it's a cop/buddy movie. As a detective style of film, NO MERCY scores again as Gere must take a walk on the wild side of New Orleans, to a lawless little burg called Algiers, to track the ruthless murderer of his pal Joey, and to unravel what adds up to a mystifying plot angle concerning a smoothie from Jazz City who is in Chicago to line up a hit man to rub out a certain unnamed hood in the southern metropolis.

The simmering sex angle develops as Gere finds himself on the lam in a remote bayou, handcuffed to Michelle, who appears to be some sort of love-slave/captive of the Boss Man in Algiers, one of the most diabolical villains to disgrace the silver screen in a long while — he's a feared, skulking, deadly killer named Losado, who's played with morbid realism by Jeroen Krabbe.

Throw in a HIGH NOON shoot-out angle in which Gere, solo, must hold off about 8 or 9 heavies with generous cannon power in a seedy Bourbon Street room & towel hotel, and it becomes clear that NO MERCY has a little more going for it than steamy sex between Rich and Kim. This one turns completely on gratuitous violence, but of its genre NO MERCY is as good as anything Hollywood has dished out in the past couple of years. Too Many Cooks: leave the kitchen for studio life

By Scott David Harrison

SHERBROOKE — Have you ever heard the old proverb that too many cooks will spoil the broth? In the case of a local two-man rock band Too Many Cooks is just fine thank you.

The band is the brain child of Sherbrooke natives Dan Georgesco and Richard D', and if their enthusiasm is any indication of their future success, the boys have a winner on their hands. The band was formed in September of 1986 through several jamming sessions.

Where you might ask?

Where does every band get their start, why in the basement of a small apartment of course! Too Many Cooks are no different in this sense, and according to D' "it all started with us guys playing guitars in my kitchen — we'd just be jamming away and singing to whatever beat we were playing. My place had paper thin walls and believe me the old ladies didn't always like it."

The Cooks still love jamming wherever and whenever they can but studio sessions are keeping them very busy. Now that music is their profession, the commitments and deadlines seem endless. On the positive side, however, warm receptions quickly came their way.

The reason for their success is clearly a result of their musical capabilities. Georgesco has turned his many years of classical piano training into the cut-throat field of rock & roll. Georgesco handles the band's keyboards, guitar, and bass guitar. While D' takes care of the duos' vocals and acoustic guitar.

When it comes to the writing of lyrics, (the band uses it's own material), they have a simple procedure.

"We both write them," smiles Georgesco.

D' quickly explains "the band has no real pattern when it comes to writing the songs. We just do it. There are times when we don't see each other for about a week and in that time if we get an idea, we just remember it, work on it, and play it the next time we're together."

"And once you get a song", says Georgesco, "it's not over and done with, you have to kept working it to make it better. That can take up to a month or even a year."

After listening to the Cooks' demo tape one cannot help but be impressed with the quality and versatility of the band.

Apparently people in the right places have been impressed also. As a result Too Many Cooks are in the studio putting the final touches on their debut album. The recording contract came after the group's exposure on the local club scene.

"Interest in the band's music got around fast and people were going into the record stores asking for our tape", says Georgesco.

After the feedback from the record stores, the Cooks realized the need to make a demo.

"Too Many Cooks" Georgesco and D' wait anxiously at a food counter to have their debut album served up in September.

"We we're able to get funding from our friends and we made the tape", explains Georgesco.

Soon after the duo found air play. Local stations K900 and CFLX introduced locals to the band. But the real surprise came when the band hit the Montreal airways complements of CHOM's New Music Fundation.

All this has brought the band into the studio. "We've been working hard on the album and that is why people haven't seen us playing around lately," said Georgesco.

"We would rather finish the album before we make any concerts, that way we will be ready to perform better."

It appears that the Cooks' management believes that it would also be wise not to tour before the release of the album.

The album is being produced by former Men Without Hats member Jerry Arrobas, and will be distributed in Canada by the newly founded TMC Records, which is based in Sherbrooke.

"The record will be out by the end of September, hopefully," say D', "and the first release will be put out a couple of weeks before the album, the song is called Someone Like You."

As for the song, Someone Like You, people can look forward to a definite toe-tapping winner. "It is a love ballad, our only one, and it crosses into parts of country rock but its not country its power pop," laughes Georgesco.

When listening to their music, like all music, one tries to classify their sound but unlike most pop bands, no clear category can be found. Too Many Cooks play everything from funk to the blues, and more importantly they play it well. The band wants it that way. "We like a lot of old stuff, The Doors, Rolling Stones, Jefferson Airplane, (today's Starship)", explains Georgesco. "That's music".

D' elaborated on his partners idea, "we like music but our music will never be political like so many others do. I find political bands try too hard to be preachers".

The intrepretation here is that music should be music, in the same way sport should be sport; simply no political strings attached.

When it comes to their musical desires the two have a very modest outlook. "We want to get known that's for sure but that all takes one step at a time, just as long as we're playing our music" says Georgesco.

Commenting on breaking the market D' explains that "too many bands try to do it right away. Their expectations are too high to begin with. As for us we just want to put out records and if success comes from it that will be great".

Right now the band is looking forward to doing a tour in the Fall. "We can't wait to get out there and play our music, we've been in the studio too long, we just want to play and it doesn't matter if it's five people, 500 or 5000 it will be great", envisions Georgesco.

The band should be in the Sherbrooke area in the Fall after the album is released.

When asked to define their music the two locals turned to each other and said "it's good-time Chinese boogie, what can we say, it's all rock & roll."

The canvas becomes Dali's inner thoughts

The content of Dali's painting changed in 1935. As Spain was threatened by civil war, Dali depicted a country that he felt was disappearing. "Suburbs of a Critical Paranoia Town" pictures Dali's wife, Gala, holding up a stem of grapes as she stands in front of an archway. She is extending an invitation to the lands of Figueras and Cadaques, places of Dali's childhood. Gone is the violence and torment of the artist's private madness. The works of this period take on a new romantic note. A pure expression of his fantasy, Dali paints softened landscapes that reflect a nostalgia for a part of his life that he was lea ving.

In an attempt to advance his art and his reputation, Dali seized every opportunity to stimulate the public's imagination. At the 1936 International Surrealist Exhibition in London, Dali gave a lecture in a diving suit — complete with helmet — to emphasize that he was "plunging down deeply into the human mind."

The costume was a perfect metaphor for Dali's surrealist canvases. But after World War II, Abstract Expressionism and especially the "drip" paintings of Jackson Pollock dominated the international art scene. To accentuate his uniqueness, the master of Surrealism once again forged his own path. "The more the rest of the art world veered towards abstractionism," Secrest writes, "The more clearly Dali saw h is opportunity for continued provocation and mystification."

He espoused traditional values and focuses on religious subjects, often working in a realistic style. In search of new avenues, Dali turned to the Italian Renaissance style and painted even more objectively. In "Galarina", painted in 1944-1945, the artist used subtle tonalities in achieving a lifelike image of his wife. "A revolutionist against revolution," Secrest says, "Dali became a classicist."

WHAT'S ON

Music

By Jack Branswell

It has come to the realization of this columnist that some of the area's classical music events have been buried down at the bottom of this section. In an effort, token as it may be, to reconcile a whole genre of music, this week's What's On will lead with some of the more cultured events.

Now hold on all you country and western fans and you rock & rollers. This is not to say that your brand of music is any better or worse, but merely that the classical scene has not received the attention it deserves. With all that said and done, let's get rolling.

For example on Saturday at the Haskell Opera House the Canadian Opera Company Ensemble will be performing at 8 p.m. If I remember correctly the Haskell Opera House is the building in Rock Island which straddles the Canada-Honduran border (boy can't fool you people eh?). What this means is that the audience is in the U.S. while the performers are in Canada.

Now think of the refugee possibilites here. Americans could conceivably come to an event such as Saturday's concert, and demand refugee status on the grounds that Americans are culturally deprived. Now none of you kids at home try this.

Getting back into a classical vein, there is more fun to be had Saturday night. The Bishop Stewart Memorial Church in Frelighsburg is having the second in a series of three harpsichord and organ concerts starting at 8 p.m. Guest soloist will be Mireille Lagacé. She will feature works by Gabrielli, Byrd, Bach, Couparin, and Scarlatti. Lagacé has an impressive concert portfolio, including teaching organ at the New England Conservatory of Boston and harpsichord at the Conservatory of Montreal. Admission is $5 and the proceeds will go to the Bishop Memorial Church. For more information and ticket reservation call (514) 298-5354 or (514) 298-5377.

On Sunday night Festival Lake Massawippi will be host to Andrew MacDonald and Eleanor Gang. Gang has her Bachelor of Music with honors in performance (voice) from the University of Western Ontario. Gang, a soprano, will be joined by guitarist MacDonald. He has his Doctor of Musical Arts from the University of Michigan. The performance starts at 7:30. I am not sure but I think it is at the Unitarian Church in North Hatley. You can call (819) 842-4380, to check that out.

The Orford Arts Centre is finishing up its summer season with the Cambrian Quartet on Saturday evening. If this interests you may I suggest you reserve tickets by calling (819) 843-3981?

For those of you who were on the edge of your seats in eager anticipation of the country music part of this column, you may now take yourself off the respirator. This Saturday Country Express will be performing at the Richmond Legion Hall. The reason is simple: there is a dance there. Admission is $2.50 and everyone is welcome.

Tom Wheeler, known to some of you as The Country Gentleman, will be playing his foot-stomping style of music at Hotel-Motel Arnold — I still say that place has a serious identity problem — in Woburn. This is on Saturday evening of course.

Also on Saturday night Serge Hamel will play at the Bar Salon Chartierville. And let us not forget that Réal and Gail will be playing at Chez Simone in Birchton this Saturday.

There is good news from Lyndon Sheldon. He is playing at Bar Salon Bretagne in Waterville. Now excuse the lack of information but I took this call on my way out of the office so I suggest you give the bar a call at (819) 837-2323. If you are lucky you will be able to speak with Mary McCallum. She will certainly give all the information that is lacking here.

The Hut in Lennoxville will again be featuring the music of The Good Ole Boys this weekend. Friday night is free and as usual everyone is welcome both nights.

The 5th annual Glen Sutton Summer Music Festival has its second-to-last event this weekend on Saturday and Sunday. Featured is the music of the Nelson Symond Trio.

Eleanor Gang and Andrew MacDonald will be performing at the Unitarian Church in North Hatley on Sunday night, as part of the Festival Lake Massawippi concert series.*

Exhibitions/Events

Now this may not seem like your idea of a super event but it deserves mention nevertheless. The Lake Massawippi Water Protection Association is holding its annual meeting on Saturday at 4 at the Anglican Church Hall in Ayer's Cliff. Everyone interested in supporting the work done to protect and improve the lake's quality is encouraged to attend.

Here is a contest that should excite amateur photographers. The Ministry of Tourism is sponsoring a Vacation Photo Contest. Now before you bring out the pictures from Old Orchard, the rules say they have to be taken in Quebec. The thematic categories involved are: landscape and joie de vivre, vacation activites, and tourist sites and attractions. The winner for the three categories will purse $2000, while winners for each of the three divisions will walk away with $800.

You will need an entry form, but those can be picked up at Direct Film outlets. Call 1-800-361-5404 for more information.

CHARMES, the committee in charge of cleaning up Sherbrooke's river banks and making the public aware of water pollution (try to say that in one breath), is holding a sort of supper-theatre event. Sunday's event at Park Blanchard will feature theatre for youths that will make them aware about protecting the environment. Kick-off time is 2 pm. More information can be obtained by calling (819) 821-5893.

If Wednesday is your night out, then you can always check into the Knowlton Pub for Comedy Night. It starts at around 9.

There seems to be a wealth of exhibitions in the area. For example at the Grosier in Coaticook an exhibition from a local amateur artists competition might be a good treat. I am not sure of the hours so call (819) 569-9731 for more information.

Diane Guay is demonstrating her talents at the Galerie d'Art de la caisse populaire de Sherbrooke-Est until August 28. The beautiful paintings of Mary Martin, a local painter, can be found at The Piggery until August 29. I have had the pleasure of seeing her art, and the simple conclusion is that Martin does wonderful things with watercolors. She tends to have a lot of winter paintings, and some of them are very beautiful. Her winter scene evoke a certain warmness, unlike the season she paints. If you are in the area this is a must.

The North Hatley Library is proud to present an exhibition of Gillian Angus-Coté's works. She specializes in paintings of farm animals and flowers. This exhibition is only on until August 29. The library is open from Monday to Friday, 10 to noon, Wednesday evenings from 6:30 to 8:30, and Saturdays from 10 to noon.

Theatre

There are two very good English-language plays in the area. Theatre buffs should see both before they vanish into that big curtain call in the sky. Salt Water Moon, at The Piggery, is one of the best, if not the best play that has been put on this summer. It will not wow you with action and the one-act play does seem rather slow in parts, but it contains some of the most enthusiastic acting of the summer. Cary Lawrence plays the female lead, and does a super job of it.

The play is set in Newfoundland, and it features all the charm and vitality of that province. The accents are a little hard to handle at first, but by the end of the play you'll ave 'er down pat. Lawrence plays a women who has married a kind but drab teacher in order to get her sister out of an orphanage. This is all revealed in the fullness of time as her boyfriend of last summer returns to try to steal her away. What you are left with is some funny lines, some good drama, and a plate of salted cod. In all seriousness this is a a good play that should be seen if only for the halibut. The actors in no way flounder on stage. Go see it. The Piggery will roll the red karp -et out you. The play runs Tuesday to Saturday until August 29. Call (819) 842-2191 for ticket reservations.

The other English-language play to be seen is at Lac Brome Theatre in Knowlton. The Accidental Death of an Anarchist is a biting political satire about a real-life incident in Milan, Italy. A man died after falling from the fourth floor window at a local police station. The man was being held in connection with a bombing that killed 16 people. A coroner's inquest and a police investigation reached two different conclusions. The police said it was suicide, and the coroner concluded it was an accident. Many people, including playwright Dario Fo reasoned that he was thrown out of the window.

The play is a "thinking person's" type of play. It has its share of laughs, but there is almost more in what is not said than in the actual dialogue. Dave Clarke turns in a wonderful performance as the madman. He literally steals the show. This play points out some salient social issues, that will make the observant theatre-goer leave with a few questions. See this one; it is quite unique. The play runs Wednesday to Friday, and Sunday until August 30. For more information call (514) 243-6183 or (514) 243-6590.

If your French is up to scratch, then check out Les Célébrations at Théâtre du Sang Neuf in Sherbrooke. It is a farcical look at the life of a couple who view life from totally different perspectives. She (Louisette Dussault) is a psychologist, while he (Yves Labbé) is a philosopher. The couple have their share of problems, but it all makes for good humor. Les Célébrations is on Tuesday to Saturday until September 5.

Waiter! will still be at Le Grosier in Coaticook for the remainder of the month. Shows are from Thursday to Sunday. Waiter! is an improvisional piece which involves the audience in the action as the three waiters try to understand the customers' (the audience's) wants and demands. Call (819) 835-5464 for more information.

At the Auberge Bromont La Grosse Vie! is in the middle of its run, which continues until September 20. Shows are on Thursday to Sunday. Call (514) 534-2200 or 1-800-363-8920 for reservations.

Rounding out the theatre section is Un Condo À Venise which finishes its run at the Théâtre du Thé des Bois this Saturday. Shows are Friday and Saturday night. Call (819) 864-9569 for information.

Movies

I hope you like the James Bond movies, because if you don't then your selection of movies in the area is seriously limited this week. The Living Daylights is at not one but three cinemas in the area. The Carrefour has it playing for another week, with shows nightly at 6:40 and 9:15. Weekend matinees can be taken in at 2 and 4:30. In case you can't make it there you can always try Merrill's in Newport. It shows there every night at 6:50 and 9:15, with weekend showings at 1:45 as well. Just in case you can't see it at either of the above places, you can always take it in at the Capitol in French.

Now weekly readers will remember that last week this section of the column talked about the possibilities of French movies being played at the Capitol until Cineplex-Odeon, which recently bought out the cinema, opens up its new complex. For the time being it has become a reality, as the French version of The Living Daylights will be there for at least two weeks.

Now for the other movies (hard to believe isn't it?) in the region. Merrill's has a healthy variety of films besides The Living Daylights. Summer School starring heart-throb (or gut-wrenching for others) Mark Harmon plays at 7:15 and 9:20, and at 1:55 on weekends. Now do not expect an extremely elaborate plot, because William Shakespeare had nothing to do with this particular film. On the other hand if you have just had a frontal lobotomy, or you can manage to laugh at things that have a rather silly high school appearance to them, then go for it. Having just had the first option (it was quite successful thank you) I really enjoyed the movie.

Other options include The Monster Squad at 7 nightly, and The Lost Boys at 8:30 and 2 on the weekend.

As for Cinéma Princess in Cowansville, you're on your own again. Call them at (514) 263-1933, where I am sure some lovely voice will come on the end of the line and give you the necessary information.

Now for the best news of the day. The Maison du Cinéma in Sherbrooke is showing a movie you have just got to see. Innerspace is a zany movie about a space pilot who is involved in a miniaturization program. An accident happens and he gets stuck inside the body of another man. This is really quite funny. Martin Short stars as the man who becomes the "host". I personally recommend it; it is a lot of fun. Showtime is at 9, every night.

Happy Trails.

Montreal's gold and da Vinci exhibitions worth visit

A silver rhyton (a drinking cup) from fourth century B.C. Borovo. Only part of the Thracian Horsemen exhibition on display in Montreal.

By Joanna Scheib

MONTREAL — Montreal has two, not one, really interesting exhibitions going on. At the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts, Leonardo da Vinci, Engineer and Architect is attracting large numbers of people. On Ile Notre-Dame, Gold of the Thracian Horsemen, though less known, is holding its own in relation to sightseers.

Crowds of people always seem to line the steps at the Museum, waiting for hours at a time to see one of the world's most famous artist's creations. Yet at this exhibition, the focus is not on da Vinci's artwork, it instead concentrates on his scientific side. This year is the Canadian Engineering Centennial and this presentation is an ideal way to recognize it.

The Museum has done a good job in displaying thousands of his works. There are drawings, manuscripts, small and huge models, explanational videos and even a Rennaissance-inspired Florentine garden. A visitor can rent a tape recorder that goes along with the well labelled exhibits.

Admission is restricted to 350 people per every half-hour. It does get rather crowded as each display usually has some lenghthy explanation to read. One might feel like a sheep being herded through a maze.

Each item or mechanism is incredible. Originally people thought da Vinci was writing in some secret code. But in reality, he was left handed, so to make writing easier, he wrote mirror-style. This means reading would have to be done by reflecting the script.

There are countless diagrams of pulleys and intricate mechanisms. The 30 odd models are intriguing. One wants to pull or push to see them work. Unfortunately, this is not permitted, but there are explanatory videos nearby.

Most of the works are part of the engineering section. There is one large room dedicated to his architectural creations. I found it was the best of all the presentations. It has an incredible model of a centrally planned church right in the centre of the room. It also has detailed drawings of houses and endlessly twisting staircases.

One does not have to be scientifically inclined to enjoy the exhibition, all the pieces are beautifully drawn and the models constructed. Da Vinci is a great example of science and art working together. He was a true genius in that he was interested in all aspects of his environment and could create by intertwining all he knew of both the abstract and the technological world.

The Gold exhibit at Man and His World, seems to be much less publicized, yet not deservingly so. It is a smaller, yet excellently organized display of artifacts found in Bulgaria. The time centers on the period from the 6th to the 3rd century B.C., at the height of the horseman civilazation. Wealth and power was measured in numbers of horses and herds. Thracian art was that of nobility, and the people of that era were obsessed with precious metals. From all this came the exhibition's theme name.

It is possible to rent an explanatory tape recorder which gives a lot of information that cannot be obtained from the displays themselves. The tour that one follows goes from works done in the New Stone age and one can see their development through to the Roman occupation of Thrace. The civilization was in a huge area north of ancient Greece that is now occupied by several countries.

The line-ups are not bad and it's open on Mondays when most other exhibits are closed. It's well worth seeing, giving a good idea of what life was like over 2000 years ago. If education is not interesting enough, then go to see the phenomenal amounts of gold and silver displayed.

The da Vinci presentation is open Tuesdays to Sundays inclusive, from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. (sometimes it closes early on Sundays). This is on until Nov.8. For more information call (514) 285-1600. The Gold exhibit is on seven days a week from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. until Oct.4. For more information call (514) 872-4560.

Ephesus offers window to world of different cultures

By Bunny McBride
The Christian Science Monitor

SITE OF EPHESUS, Turkey — If you want a good look at the ancient world, follow the footsteps of Androclus. The Greek prince, who lived about 1100 BC, once asked a soothsayer where he and his troop of 1000 colonists from Argos should build a city. The soothsayer told him, "A fish will show you the place and a wild boar will take you there."

FLYING FISH

While standing on the Aegean shore watching fish being cooked, Androclus saw a fish leap from the flames. The fish, carrying a live coal with it, landed in bushes that immediately caught fire. The flames sent a wild board, harbored in the branches, running for its life. Androclus quickly pursued the boar to the northern slope of Mt. Pion by the Cayster River, where he overtook and slew it. On that spot he founded the city of Ephesus.

Since that time some 3000 years ago, Ephesus has fallen successively under the rule of the Persians, Romans, Goths, Byzantines, and Turks. Today, it is a stunning archaeological site. Archaeologists, artists, and tourists are lured here by ruins that are fascinatingly unruined: The imagination is barely taxed to picture life as it was here long ago, when the likes of Alexander the Great, Octavius, Antony and Cleopatra, Paul of Tarsus, and the Apostle John walked the streets.

FEMALE WARRIORS

Ephesus is no longer connected to the sea, for the mouth of the Cayster River silted closed centuries ago. Today's visitors reach the site by flying into Izmir and driving 60 miles south, or by docking at Kusadasi, a port 10 miles southwest of the ancient city. The road to Ephesus winds past the earlier sites of the city. Ephesus was relocated five times through the centuries, usually because of the silting up of its harbor. The Ephesus of Androclus is known as Ephesus II. It was founded more than a thousand years after Ephesus I, which legend speculates was established by the Amazons, a legendary nation of female warriors.

Ephesus II is best known as the site of the Temple of Artemis, Greek goddess of the hunt (also known by the Roman name Diana). The Bible's Book of Ephesians claims that she was worshiped by "all Asia and the world." Little is left of this temple today. The foundation stones and one towering resurrected column hint at the size of the structure, whose ground dimensions were larger than a soccer field.

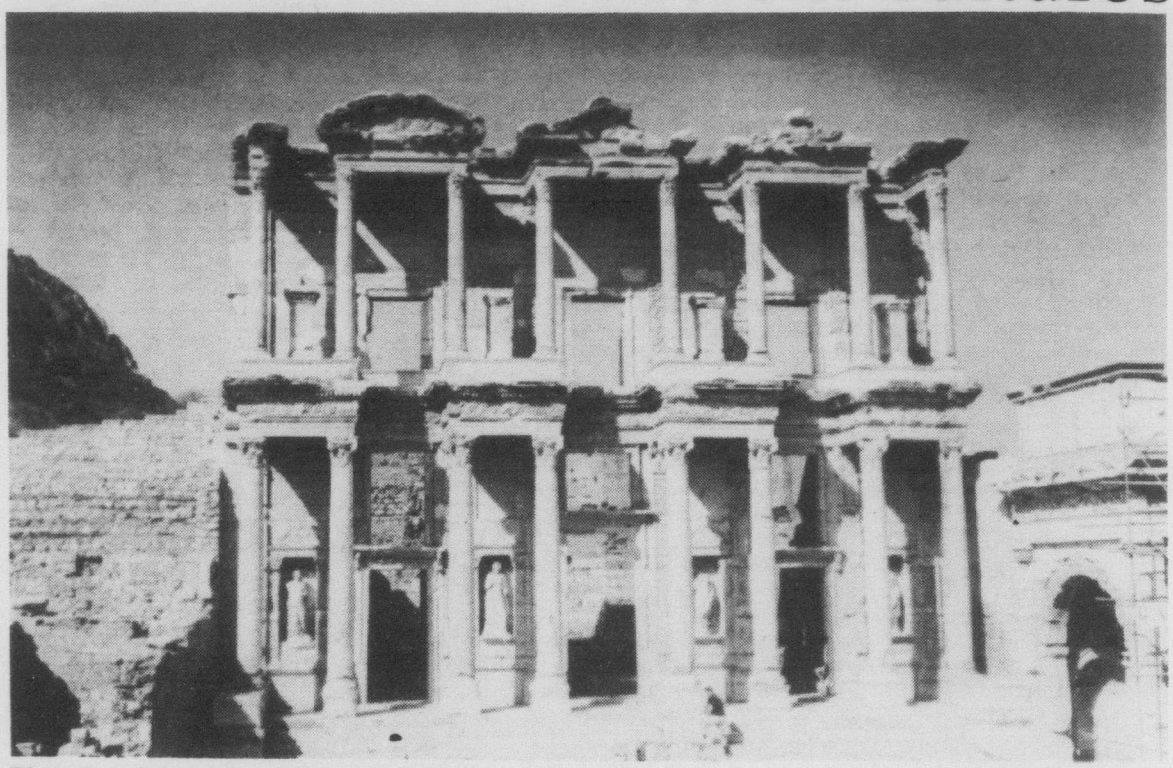

Nearby, the Ephesus Museum offers two life-size statues of Artemis. The two figures are considered the most important pieces in the museum, although they are among many intriguing finds excavated by Austrian and Turkish archaeologists over the last 100 years.

To date, only 20 per cent of the Ephesus sites have been excavated, primarily in the area of Ephesus III. This site was established in the 4th century BC by one of Alexander the Great's generals, who moved the city to a location between Mt. Pion and Mt. Coressus. In the 2nd century BC, it was conquered by Rome; most of what can be seen today are Roman and Byzantine structures built on earlier foundations.

LUXURY OF EPHESUS

The remnants offer a considerable taste of the luxury of Ephesus: grand marble streets trimmed with stately statues of prominent citizens and canopied colonnades that shielded pedestrians from sun and rain as they moved along exquisite mosaic sidewalks. The colonnades opened onto shops, restaurants, gambling houses, temples, public buildings, a brothel, and chic patrician homes.

On the the north side of Curetes Street, named for the priests who guarded the city's sacred fire, stands the Scholastics, one of the city's six public baths. At its center, each bath had a frigidarium (cold bath), tepidarium (lukewarm bath), and calderium (hot bath). Surrounding the baths were changing rooms which, like those in a modern-day health or country club, were a center of communication.

The ruins of the Library of Celsus at Ephesus, Turkey, evoke the grandeur of this ancient Mediterranean crossroads.

Down the street stands the majestic two-story Library of Celsus, built in AD 135 by a Roman consul. In the naves of its ground floor stand statues of Wisdom, Virility, Goodwill, and Knowledge — plastic replicas of the original marbles, which are now in Vienna's Museum of Ephesus. To protect the 12,000 scrolls of papyrus housed in the library, a humidity-control system was used: Air channels ran behind the niches where the manuscripts were stored.

GREAT THEATRE

The most overwhelming of the city's enormous relics is the 3rd-century BC Great Theater, which held 25,000 people. The acoustics were said to be perfect. It was here that Paul of Tarsus urged the Ephesians to adhere to the one God — giving a speech that nearly caused a riot. Thousands of angry voices replied: "Great is Artemis of the Ephesians!" After this, Paul was imprisoned in a nearby tower, now called St. Paul's Prison, on Mt. Coressus. The prison is not far from the "Virgin Mary House," where it is said the Apostle John brought the mother of Jesus to live in safety.

Stretching from the Great Theater to the site of the former harbor is the Arcadiane Way — An avenue 35 feet wide and half a mile long lined with columns. In the past, lanterns lighted this marble thoroughfare, and broad mosaic walkways trailed along the colonnades leading to shops.

A broad paved street leads down to the Library of Celsus in the background; beyond that there was once a bustling harbor which is now a silted plain.

Narita is restoring the beauty of Japanese nature

By Linda L. Liscom
The Christian Science Monitor

NARITA, Japan — Few passengers who land at Tokyo's international airport know about the treasure that lies at their wing tip — the temple town of Narita, which has drawn Buddhist pilgrims for a thousand years.

While Tokyo-bound travelers are still languishing in freeway traffic, you can already be sitting up to your chin in a steaming Japanese o furo (hot tub), wandering through a splendid old Buddhist temple, or strolling along quiet forest paths.

Only minutes from a 20th-century airport, Narita has retained its country village atmosphere and traditions of old Japan. It's an ideal cultural introduction to the country, and a peaceful interlude in hectic jet travel if you're heading to other points in the Orient. Narita is also a wonderful place to unwind from the rigors of an Asian tour during the 72 hours you're allowed in the country without a visa. And all on a surprisingly limited budget — for Japan. (You can stay here for as little as $25 a day, including meals and lodging.)

JOGGING TRAILS

If you prefer familiar surroundings, there are eight Western-style hotels on the outskirts with frequent shuttle service into town. The 500-room Narita View on its own 18-acre site is a good choice. It has four restaurants with both Western and Eastern cuisine, a dozen tennis courts, jogging trails, and Japanese bathing facilities.

The adventurous, however, can choose from several delightful ryokans — Japanese-style country inns — in the heart of old Narita. At Wakematsu Ryokan, overlooking the temple, a kimono-clad staff serves sumptuous meals right in your room.

The journey through town challenges all the senses — a winding, narrow street lined with aromatic restaurants and open-front shops. There are vats of pickles, pyramids of dried fish, and corps of drumming mechanical pandas. Vendors hawk seaweed, snake powder, crafts, and kimonos. Eel kebabs sizzle on a sidewalk grill, fresh from a curbside aquarium. And in front of the temple gates, free pots of steaming tea are available for shoppers and weary pilgrims.

A steep staircase leads from the village to Narita-san, a wonderland of temple buildings, pagodas, and sacred halls. This hillside retreat is considered one of Japan's most magnificent Shingon-sect Buddhist temple complexes. The Grand Pagoda, Narita-san's newest addition (1983) crowns the temple grounds and overlooks 45 acres of adjoining forested parkland — a network of footpaths, waterfalls, streams, and ponds.

LUNAR NEW YEAR

Starting at 5:30 a.m., five ceremonies daily celebrate the holy fire ritual, Goma, in the great main hall — a performance with music and pageantry. Monks robed in lime, plum, and lemon silk chant in concert with bells, symbols, tambourines, drums, and trumpets. In a palace-style sanctuary festooned with gold chandeliers, wooden sticks inscribed with the prayers of pilgrims are received by the high priest and blessed in the smoke of a crackling fire.

Every day is festive at Narita-san, but the busiest time is the Lunar New Year, which began Feb. 9 and draws about about 3 million pilgrims to the temple. During the year, there's the Bean Throwing Festival in early February (which is meant to foster prosperity and easy birth); Buddha's birthday party, April 8; and the Gion Festival July 7-9 with fireworks, floats, and bands. In November, a chrysanthemum show completes the year's celebrations.

For a visitor who's staying longer than a day at Narita, Sawara, less than an hour away by train, offers a different look at rural, old Japan. A boat trip through the aquatic botanical gardens and a visit to Katori Shrine with its 8th-century deity in acres of towering ancient cedars, is a relaxing excursion.

For a full day at Sawara and a memorable meal, lunch at Shimizuya, a family restaurant for eight generations that specializes in fresh eel and carp. Owner Kazuhiko Osaki keeps recipes secret from even his head chef.

From June 10-25, over a million irises in 300 varieties are in bloom. "Sendos". women skilled at poling, propel small wooden boats through narrow gardenside waterways, crisscrossed with bridges sculptured from a single plank of wood. Even out of season, with not a blossom in sight, it's a delightful excursion to skirt the reedlands and look for birds.

Our "Sendo," Mitsue, a 30-year veteran, was dressed in traditional Sendo costume fashioned from kasuri cloth — handwoven and tie-dyed, topped with a rice straw hat and streaming red ribbons.

"Poling is a dying art," Mitsue told us sadly. "Most of my colleagues are 50 years old. Yesterday's customs required women to learn to pole before they married — it took me three years to master. I was afraid my husband would get tired of waiting."

We were too late for the flowers, but Mitsue sang a wedding song in a sweet falsetto that brought tears to her eyes and ours. And that seemed worth at least a million irises.

Practical information

For complete Narita hotel and ryokan information, contact Japan National Tourist Organization, 1737 Post Street, San Francisco, Calif. 94115, or call (415) 989-7140. Request Narita Mini-Guide MG 032 and "The Tourist Handbook, Practical Ways to Relieve Your Language Problems" — especially useful in the ryokans.

From its splendid Buddhist temple to its quiet forest paths, Narita has retained its country village atmosphere and traditions of old Japan.
