Poetry.

Art Thou Living Yet?

[The following sweet tribute to a mother's memory is full of tender meaning, and is worthy of the poet-singer who wrote it.]

Is there no grand immortal sphere
Beyond the realm of broken ties,
To fill the wants that mock us here,
And drive the tears from weeping eyes—
Where winter melts in endless spring,
And June stands near with deathless flowers,
Where we may hear the dear ones sing
Who loved us in this world of ours?
I ask, and lo! my cheeks are wet
With tears for one I cannot see;
Oh! mother, art thou living yet,
And dost thou still remember me?

I feel thy kisses o'er me thrill,
Thou unseen angel of my life;
I hear thy hymns around me shrill,
An undertone to care and strife.
Thy tender eyes upon me shine,
As from a being glorified,
Till I am thine and thou art mine,
And I forget that thou hast died.
I almost lose each vain regret
In visions of a life to be;
But, mother, art thou living yet,
And dost thou still remember me?

The springtimes bloom, the summers fade,
The waters blow along my way,
But over every light and shade
The memory lives by night and day;
It soothes to sleep my wildest pain,
Like some sweet song that cannot lie,
And, like the murmur of the main,
Grows deeper when the storm is nigh,
I know the brightest stars that set
Return to bless the yearning sea;
But, mother, art thou living yet,
And dost thou still remember me?

I sometimes think thy soul comes back
From o'er the dark and silent stream,
Where last we watched the silent track
To those green hills of which we dream!
Thy loving arms around me twine;
My cheek blooms younger in thy breath,
Till thou art mine and I am thine,
Without a thought of pain or death.
And yet at times my eyes are wet
With tears for her I cannot see—
Oh! mother, art thou living yet,
And dost thou still remember me?

Silent and True.

"While you accept the shelter of that relation's roof, mademoiselle, you are bound to obey."

She looks up at him, stern, inflexible, stubbornly just, with eyes afire!

"You do well," she says, in a passionate undertone. "Oh! you do well to remind me of that. I am her slave—Mon Dieu! I know it well, and should obey every command. Am I also to be yours, monsieur?"

"Reine, you speak like a child. Am I a tyrant because I wish my promised wife to be above and beyond the gossip of a censorious babbling country town?"

"Your promised wife!" she repeats, still with those brightly angry eyes upon him. "I grow tired of hearing that. I can take care of my own honor, monsieur, believe me, although I should be raised to that dignity."

"I never doubted it, but I do doubt your power to silence slanderous tongues, ready to put the most vicious construction on the most virtuous actions. Do you think the writer of that did not know his man? Do you think any other words in human power to write could have struck home as these did? Reine, you are but a child in years—in the ignorance of innocence you think you can brave and defy the world. I tell you, no! it will crush and defame you without pity or mercy. Let me be your shield from it, as you have given me the right to be. Let me go to Mrs. Windsor and appeal to her to withdraw this injunction against your friend. I think I have influence enough for that, and if you must see him, let him come to the house openly and like a man, and in the face of all the world. Say the word and I will speak to her this very evening."

"Not for worlds!" cries Reine passionately, "not for a thousand worlds! What! after all her insults to the memory of my dear dead father, her taunts of our poverty and dependence, which she makes us feel every hour of our lives, I send you to plead with her for Léonce! Oh! I have indeed fallen low when I sit and listen even to such a proposal!"

"I meant it in good faith. Do you then prefer stealing out to meet him after dark in the grounds? Do you intend to persist in doing so?"

"And what if I do?"

"The way is very simple. I resign, at once, and forever, any slight claim I at present possess to influence your actions, and leave you altogether free to meet M. Léonce Durand when, and where, and how you please. Only for your own sake, mademoiselle, let the trysting-hour be broad day, the trysting-place where all the world may see."

She looks up at him, deadly pale, and rises to her feet.

"Monsieur," she says, "I will never forgive you this last insult to the day of my death."

"There are many things you refuse to forgive me, Mademoiselle Reine," he answers; "one added can hardly signify. And I have no intention of offering you insult—nothing is further from my thoughts. If I did not care for you in a way and to an extent that makes me despise myself, do you think I would stand here warning you? Reine," he cries, fiercely, "cannot you see that I love you—love you so well that it maddens me to doubt you?"

"Oh! indeed, do you love me?" she says, with wonderful scorn, still pale to lividness, and with quivering lips. "You guard your secret well. I could never have guessed it. Will you pardon me if, even after your tender declaration, I still doubt the fact?"

He, too, is startingly pale, and there is certainly very little of lover's look or tone about him. And yet in his voice there is passionate pain, passionate longing, passionate regret, and in his very intensity of anger and bitterness, perhaps deepest depths of love.

"Do you recall that night in the garden?" he says; "do you think, have you ever thought I came to you with one idea of Mrs. Windsor or her money in my mind? You know better. But you said to me it was not Reine Landelle I desired, but Mrs. Windsor's heiress. Perhaps I had given you some right to say that—if so, I now withdraw that right. I tell you if Mrs. Windsor cast you off penniless to-morrow, I would still ask you, and you alone, of all women I know, to be my wife. Does this give me no right to speak as I do? To ask you once more to give up Léonce Durand?"

"What does giving up Durand mean, monsieur?"

"It means meeting him no more clandestinely—it means telling me exactly what he is to you."

"I have already told—my aunt's stepson."

"Pshaw! you are usually brave and outspoken enough—don't prevaricate for so poor a creature. For he is unworthy of your regard, Reine; without knowing much of him, I know that. Trust me, dear." He takes her hands and looks earnestly into her eyes; "indeed I love you; I trust you, even while I seem to doubt you. Will you not trust me in turn?"

His sudden tenderness moves her. She trembles, shrinks, falters for the first time.

"I can—I do—I always have," she says brokenly; "it's not that; Oh, Mon Dieu! if it were my affair only! but it is not, and my lips are sealed. You must trust me blindfold or not at all. I will be the last to blame you. It will only be justice if you let me go."

There is a struggle that she can almost see, and though she does not look at him, she hardly breathes while she waits. He drops her hands with a look of keenest disappointment.

"You will not trust me?"

"I cannot."

"Will you tell me this at least—was he ever your lover?"

She hesitates and half averts her face.

"He was but a boy. He was not old enough to be any one's lover——"

"Still he was—you do not deny it."

"It meant nothing—it was years ago—it is all past and done with. It never meant anything. He was only a boy."

She may think so, and does, he can see, but Durand knows better.

"Answer me this at least: what brings him here?"

"I cannot."

"Not even this?"

"Not even this. My promise is given."

"A promise to Durand?"

"Monsieur, I implore you, do not ask me. I cannot tell. I can tell you nothing—now."

"Will the day ever come when you can?"

"Yes," she answers, with a weary sigh, "I think so; I hope so, but I do not know. Oh, monsieur, let us end this—I foresee nothing but trouble will come of it. My conduct looks suspicious. You are honestly trying to trust me, and you cannot. Let us make an end. It is not yet too late. Nothing is done that cannot be undone, and I am weary of doubts and quarrels. I will give you back your ring and your freedom, and then these secrets and hidden troubles of mine need disturb you no more. Monsieur Longworth, it would have been better for all of us if you had never let us come here."

"I begin to think so," he answers bitterly, "since this is to go on indefinitely. I had hoped—but what does it matter now. If you had cared for me——"

He stops with an impatient gesture, and moves away a few steps. Then he comes again and stands before her.

"You told me that night," he says, with an impetuosity that is an unlike his usual manner as this deeply moved, passionate man, is unlike the phlegmatic Longworth Beymouth knows, "that you did not absolutely dislike me. How is it now? Have I compelled your dislike again?"

"No," she slowly answers, "you have not. I ought never to have disliked you, for you were good to us, M. Longworth, and meant well. But, oh! believe me, it would have been better if you had never let us come."

He goes on without heeding her last words:

"You own you do not dislike me. It seems a difficult thing to draw admissions from you, but will you not admit also that it may be possible for you one day to care for me?"

"I think—it may be possible."

"No one else has any claim on you?"

"No one in all the world."

"Then I will wait," he says, earnestly, "and while I wait trust. Only be prudent. I will not hurry your decision; I will give you time. No, do not speak; I have more at stake than you give me credit for, and you are excited and annoyed now. I will wait for your decision, and I believe you will come to me one day soon and of your own choice tell me all. Reine"—once again he takes her hands—"how shall I convince you you have no truer friend than I—no one in all the world you can more implicitly rely on? If I have been imperious, pardon me; if I felt less deeply I might be more collected and courteous; but my whole heart has gone out to you, and I cannot recall it if I would. Think this over, dear, and come to me and tell me your troubles. I can be Durand's friend as well, if he needs one, for your sake."

She withdraws her hand and covers he face, moved to the very heart.

"Oh! you are good, you are kind, you are generous," she says in a stifled voice; "but it is all in vain. I have no right to speak; I am bound by promise, and I cannot betray trust."

"You can ask those who have bound you to free you. Surely you must see that this is right. You have proved sufficiently how thoroughly you can be silent and true. Prove to your plighted husband in turn that you can confide in and trust him."

Ho stoops and touches her cheek with his; then, before she can speak or look up, is gone. The slight caress awakens within her a curious sort of tenderness; she turns and watches him out of sight—pain, regret, yearning in her eyes, and something stronger and deeper than either beneath. Then she sits down, white and unnerved, and looks blankly before her at the fast-darkening sea, and so when the summer night falls it finds her.

CHAPTER XXI.

"THE RIVALS."

"Frank," says Miss Hariott, "answer me this. Did you or did you not tell me on board the Hesperia, that you were only going to make a flying visit to Baymouth, for the sole purpose of building a yacht, and were then going virtuously and dutifully home to Georgia to see your mother and uncle? Did you, I say, or did you not?"

There is severity in miss Hariott's tone, dignified reproach in Miss Hariott's eye. We say "eye" emphatically, for while she keeps one upon the culprit, the other is fixed with much distaste upon the little mud puddles in the road, through which she is daintily picking her way. The afternoon is delightful, breezy, crisp, clear, but the morning has been rainy, hence the mud.

"Did you or did you not?" categorically repeats the lady, and Mr. Dexter laughs lazily.

"On board the Hesperia was three whole months ago. How is a fellow to carry his mind back over such a period as that? I remember well enough your saying—need I mention that every saying of yours is indelibly imprinted on this heart—that you preferred Baymouth to Venice. If I prefer it to Georgia in August, who is to blame me? Not you, Miss Hariott; so smooth away that frown and smile once more on the most abject of your adorers."

Miss Marie Landelle, sauntering by Frank's side, her pink-lined parasol casting a faint roseate glow over her pearl fair face, laughs faintly. These two are in front; behind come Mr. Longworth and Reine; Miss Hariott in the centre skipps over the puddles unsupported, sufficient unto herself. The whole party are bound for the Baymouth croqet grounds, being members, one and all of the Baymouth Croquet Club.

"This is all very fine," says Miss Hariott, with increased severity; "but as you have survived the Georgian heats for the past seventeen or eighteen years, don't you think the delicacy of your constitution might survive them once more? Last night I received a letter from your respected maternal parent, making four anxious epistles in all, imploring me in pathetic language to inform her truly, and at once, what is it that holds you spell-bound in this dull town. That letter, young sir, I shall answer before I sleep. Frank, I conjure you! What am I to say to your mother?"

A flush rises over Frank's sun-brown cheek—he casts a quick glance at his companion, but that lovely, serene face looks calm and more unconscious than the summer sky, the wonderful yellow-brown eyes gaze straight before into space, and are as nearly expressionless as beautiful eyes can be. The young man sighs impatiently, and switches the heads of wayside daisies and dandelions with a quick, petulant motion. Every day the last state of this young Georgian grows worse than the first, every day he becomes a greater coward, in the very intensity of his passion. Every day he grows more afraid to speak—the present is paradisaical, she never seems to weary of his presence, but also, he can see with bitterness, she never seems to weary of his absence. The same sweet smile welcomes his coming, and speeds his going. If he went forever, some prescience tells him that sweet smile would bid him farewell the same. If he speaks, and the dread fiat is No, he will be exiled from her presence, hope will die within him, the vulture of despair will gnaw at his vitals. And he is afraid to speak. To-day is good, even in its pain—so let to-day linger. But he knows, and she knows—and he knows she knows—what keeps him here: and Miss Hariott knows, and all Baymouth knows, and the whole world is welcome to know, what detains him here, a far too willing captive.

"You do not speak," goes on his stern monitress, after a long pause, devoted to shirking puddles.

"My dearest Miss Hariott, have not your own fair lips taught me many a time and oft, that speech is silver and silence gold."

"Some speech may be silver; yours has the ring of hollow brass. Your silence is golden, I allow, in its rarity; but at present we will have brazen speech. What shall I say to Mrs. Dexter?"

"Oh, anything you please! Tell her not to fidget. The verb to fidget expresses my mother's normal state, though. Tell her I am all right, and being trained by you daily in the way I should go, and that when the yacht is launched my first trip shall be to see her. I'll take you along, if you like, Miss Hesther—I promised that, did I not on the Hesperia? Can mortal man promise more?"

"You will not go until the yacht is launched?"

"Can't I give you my word! Have to be there every day—ought to be there at this moment. No end of a bore building a yacht."

"Very well," says Miss Hariott, resignedly, "I may as well get my spare bedroom ready, for the closing lines of your mother's letter, Frank, are these: 'If that wretched boy does not leave Baymouth this week, I will be there next, to fetch him.'"

Frank laughs.

"By George!" he says, "let her come by all means, Miss Hariott. I shall be uncommonly glad to see the poor little mater, and then I can take her home in the yacht. Miss Landelle, will you not come too? You will enjoy the trip, I am sure."

"Are you?" responds Miss Landelle; "then I am not at all sure. Do you forget, Mr. Frank, that I am always seasick, that I cannot sail down the bay in the calmest weather without being ill? I should like the yacht and the company, but not the mal de mer. I think you must ask Reine, instead."

"Mlle. Reine is asked of course—that goes without saying. But you"—Frank's voice drops almost to a whisper in the intensity of his eagerness—"Miss Landelle, surely you will not refuse me this pleasure. If you knew how I have looked forward to it, how all this summer——"

"We are late," interrupts Miss Landelle, with placid indifference; "see, they are playing. Had we not better walk on a little faster, Mr. Frank?"

The words are cheked on his lips as they have been checked many a time before. Her calm unconsciousness is impenetrable, all his enthusiasm falls before it. He obeys in silence, and they leave the group behind, and hasten forward to the croquet-players.

At the gate a blear-eyed beggar sits crouched in the sun, holding out his hat and whining for alms. They pass him unheeded, only Reine stops abruptly, goes over and addresses him.

"What nonsense!" exclaims Longworth, impatiently; "it is that old drunken scoundrel, Jackson, who got thirty days for vagrancy and drunkenness, and has just served out his term. Now she is giving him money—what folly! I shall stop her—such a norrid old impostor——"

"You will let her alone," says Miss Hariott, softly, and looking with eyes full of tenderness at her little friend. "For alms delivereth from death and the same is that which purgeth away sin and maketh to find mercy and life everlasting."

She goes. Longworth stands still and waits for Reine to come up. The momentary annoyonce has passed from his face, something very different looks out of his eyes as they linger on the pair before him. It is a picture he never forgets—the cringing, red-eyed beggar, in his dirty rags, shrinking like a foul lizard in the sun, and the girl with her soft, tender eyes and pitiful young face looking down upon him. But Mr. Longworth chooses to grumble when she rejoins him.

"Why do you let yourself be imposed upon by these people?" he says; "that is the most rascally old humbug in the town. He drinks, he steals, he beats his wife. He will go straight from here and get drunk on what you gave him. You should exercise discrimination in your charities, my dear child."

"Discrimination is not one of the cardinal virtues. I do not possess it, Mr. Longworth."

"But such a notorious old fraud——"

"He is old, and poor, and half blind," she says, impatiently, for long-suffering is no more one of Rein's virtues than discrimination. "Let me alone, Mr. Longworth, you are not the keeper of my conscience. You never do wrong yourself, I know—how can you be expected to find mercy or pity for poor mortals who do?"

They have reached the gate. Longworth is about to answer, but Mons. Durand comes up at the moment and joins them.

"I have been waiting for you, Petite," he says; "bon jour, Mr. Longworth. Are you the originator of this philanthropic scheme I hear them discussing, or is it Miss Hariott?"

"What philanthropic scheme?" inquires Mr. Longworth, shortly. "I have originated none."

"Then it must be the ever excellent Miss Hariott! A scheme to help the poor people killed in the late mill explosion the other day——"

"As these poor people are dead and buried, Mons. Durand, I should imagine they were past helping by any scheme, however philanthropic," interrupts Longworth, grimly.

"Ah! pardon," Durand laughs, "it is that I express myself so badly. No, no, to help the families, the widow and the orphan. I have left them discussing the project, instead of playing the croquet, and waiting for you to come. Could they decide on any thing in this town without you, monsieur, I ask?"

He asks it with a shrug, and a smile at Reine, and Reine hastily interposes, for she sees an ominious knitting on Longworth's brows.

"I dare say Miss Hariott originated it," she says, "she is one of the chief sufferers by these dreadful things—she bleeds in heart and pocket alike. What is the present proposal, Léonce?"

"Proposal! their name is legion. A fancy fair, says one lady, a charity ball says another, a concert says a third, with M. Durand for prima tenore, and Mlle. Reine for prima donna. I say no, no, no to all—let us have a play."

"I second the motion," says Miss Hariott, when they have approached. "What do you say, Frank?"

"I say nothing," says Frank, sulkily. Frank would die at the stake sooner than coincide with any idea of Durand's. Durand laughs in his airy fashion, and lays one white and shapely hand on Dexter's stalwart shoulder.

Desecrating the Sabbath and What Came of it.

It happened right here in Galveston, and on a bright Sunday afternoon. Old Gilhooly, who weighs about 200 pounds in his stocking feet, was the cause of the whole row. It was about 3 o'clock, and he did not know what to do with himself. All at once it occurred to him that there was a live rat in the wire trap in the pantry. Gilhooly is also the proud owner of a very fine terrier called Fanny. The idea struck him that it was a happy thought to turn the rat loose in the yard and give Fanny a chance to distinguish herself. He mentioned the subject to his wife that his mind needed relaxation, and that the rat ought really to be put out of his misery. She reminded him of what day of the week it was, but that had no effect. He said if it was right to get a derrick and lift your neighbor's ass ont of the pit into which he had fallen on the Sabbath day, there could not be much harm in releasing a miserable little rat from the trap into which he had fallen. He thought this was a joke. Better would it have been for Gilhooly to have heeded the pious suggestion of his wife, but some men—and Gilhooly was one of them—think they know everything and a good deal more.

THE COMBAT.

He brought the cage with the rat in it out into the back yard and called Fanny. Now, there is nothing mean about Gilhooly. He happened to look across the street, and there he saw his neighbor, Spilkins, leaning over his gate and looking very lonesome, so he called over to him, "Don't you want some fun? Come over to the matinee My dog is everlastingly going to destroy a rat. It shan't cost you a cent." Spilkins came over, and they all gathered in a circle around that rat-trap. Fanny, in particular, was anxious to be introduced to the doomed rodent, that evidently began to understand that the governor had gone back on him.

Expectation stood on tip-toe. Gilhooly was in his shirt sleeves, and had a pair of loose summer pants on. The rat took a look at the open door, but evidently hesitated about submitting his name to that kind of a convention. He didn't care for the nomination anyhow. Finally Gilhooly pushed the trap with his foot as a hint to the trap that the convention was organized and ready for business. Still the rat hesitated about taking part in the ceremonies, while Gilhooly kept on pushing the trap with his foot. All at once, with a yell that would have done credit to a Comanche, Gilhooly jumped about ten feet. Then, with his legs spread out, and a wild look of mortal terror in his eyes, which stood out like the handle of the front door, he gave a snort like a wild mustang, and inflicted upon his own person several emphatic slaps.

It seems that the rat had run up one of the legs of his pants. Once more he punished himself in the vicinity of the place where he had the rat securely hid. Then he stretched out one leg, like the pictures on the circus posters of the female equestrian, and wriggled all over. Just at this time Fanny smelt a mice and bounced him. She made a good line shot, but Gilhooly and the rat had both moved, so it was not the rat's hide that suffered. Gilhooly made a vicious kick at the faithful animaf that was trying to catch the rat, but the rat, acting on the suggestion of the terrier, also took a nip or so. At any rate, Gilhooly set up such a piercing, plaintive wail, that his friend Spilkins, who had come over to see the show, and who was speechless and convulsed with laughter, held his hands to his ears. It was a scene for a painter. There was Gilhooly galloping around the yard like a quarter horse, patting himself whenever he thought he could reach the rat. Fanny, close behind him, sampling the unfortunate desecrator of the Sabbath from time to time in her vain efforts to bite the rat. Gilhooly tried to pray, "now I lay me down to sleep," but he interrupted himself with the most horrid and violent paofanity and vigorous kicks at the faithful Fanny, who was doing all a poor dog could do to assist him in his search after the exasperated rat, which, as a correct map of the seat of war would show, bit him three times to Fanny's once. But then the rat occupied a better position, looking at it from a strategetic standpoint.

The doleful cries of Mrs. Gilhooly and her children who were horrified spectators of the tragedy from the back of the gallery awakened Spilkins to a sense of his duty to his friend. The form of the struggling rat was visible inside of Gilhooly's raiment. Seizing a base ball club, Spilkins pursued the fugitive, and aimed a fearful blow at the annoying little animal. Unfortunately he missed Gilhooly entirely, but the blow was not lost. Poor Fanny got the full force of it, and went howling over the fence like a hot ball at a base ball match, and thus the unfortunate man was freed from one of his enemies. The blow at the rat Gilhooly was trying to escape from was a little low down. It sounded like hitting a beefsteak with the flat side of an axe. But Spilkins was gradually getting the range.

He called on the afflicted man just to hold still for one moment, and was about to take another whack at the rat, when Gilhooly reached out sideways with his hoof, and striking the philanthropist with the base ball club just above the equator, doubled him up like a jack-knife, and hurled him against the fence with the ferocity of a step-mother's arm. Fortunately Mrs. Gilhooly retained her presence of mind. She bawled out, "Sit down on him, Josiah; sit down on him!" He accepted the gospel tidings. When a two hundred pound man sits down it means something. It sounded like firing a salute. He sat down on himself several times hard enough to shake the filling out of his teeth. Mrs. Gilhooly ran down to assist her fallen husband. Just then the rat ran out of his trowsers leg. With a wild shriek she ran back. It was not her rat. She didn't claim it. Then it was that Gilhooly, with the perspiration rolling off him in drops the size of wallnuts, crawls painfully on all fours into the house.

He is better now. He says there is no truth in the rumor that he got drunk that Sunday afternoon, and spent it in mirth and revelry. He and Spilkins don't speak. He says next time he undertakes to desecrate the Sabbath afternoon he will not select a rat to amuse himself with. He will try a royal Bengal tiger. Mrs. Gilhooly remarks to the bottle of arnica: "I guess he will listen to me next time. Some men think themselves so smart."—Galveston Daily News.

A Case of Lockjaw Cured.

Master Bartman, referred to in the following paragraph, from the Belleville Intelligencer, is a grandson of Mr. Sintzel, Augusta street, Hamilton: 'The following particulars as to the case of Master Eddie Bartman, son of Mr. Willliam Bartman, clothier, will be read with much interest. The boy stepped on a nail, which penetrated his foot, on the 19th of April. Lockjaw set in on April 21st, from which time Dr. Wilson attended him, and under his treatment the patient was kept asleep twenty hours out of the twenty-four. When the effect of the medicine was spent, which lasted from two to three hours, the spasms would recur and form a curve of about six inches in the back, which forced him to rest on his head and heels. On May 15th, the doctor performed an operation with needles from the head along the spine which relieved him of the intense pain, and the jaws, which were entirely set, began to relax, and from that time the spasms were not so severe and grew less so up to the 4th of June, when the doctor said he would recover.'

SHERBROOKE, JULY 2, 1880.

THE THREE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLAR LOAN.

The public are now discussing the revelations connected with the $300,000 loan effected with the Banque du Peuple. The loan itself and interest paid for it are the subject of inquiry before the Committee on Public Accounts. Mr. Chapleau refused an investigation into the terms on which the loan was negotiated, but volunteered a confession or explanation far from satisfactory to the public, and open to grave suspi- as to the accuracy of his statement. Of course, that statement was made in his own justification, but a perusal of the report of a discussion on the fourth page of this issue will show that he failed to convince others that there was paid only—as he alleged—five per cent. interest, whereas Mr. Prentice as the broker of the Government negotiated the loan at six per cent., having borrowed from Mr Senebal $1,500 to make up the six per cent. Mr. Prentice alleges he was promised the negotiation of the four million loan as an indemnification for his loss. Be this as it may, it will strike the public as a rare instance of patriotism that Mr. Senecal, of all men, should come to the relief of Mr. Prentice without some ulterior prospect of being rewarded for his generosity. That would be in accordance with his former history. And it is equally surprising that Mr. Prentice should apply to a person he knew to be intimate with Mr. Chapleau. Most people will think Mr Senecal had a prospective interest in giving Mr. Prentice these $1,500, and that having come to the relief of the Government broker, and sustained the character of the Government by enabling it to borrow nominally at five per cent., diffused abroad the idea that our financial credit had not suffered under Mr. Chapleau's guardianship. For the present we will drop this phase of the transaction and notice another that has an equally potent interest for the general public, and in a special manner for the constituency of this electoral division. During the discussion on the loan from the Banque du Peuple, the Provincial Treasurer denied all knowledge of the transaction. This we believe, for it was to his advantage to proclaim his ignorance of it. He thus exonerated himself from all blame, censure or unfriendly criticism. But while he shuffled off individual responsibility, he could not divest himself of that corporate liability, that copartnership in the errors or crimes of his colleagues which all the members of administration inherit in their collective character. So strongly is this felt and admitted in England that a dissenting member of a Cabinet feels bound to retire as the only way to uphold his honor, and relieve himself from the responsibility of concurring in what he believes is wrong. Now though the Treasurer disclaimed, and we believe truly, all knowledge of this transaction till it was perpetrated, so far as is known he has not since condemned it, though it has come to his knowledge officially and legitimately. However satisfactory his declaration of ignorance as to what is past, that does relieve him from declaring his opinion, now that he is fully informed of the merit of the transaction. While a man is ignorant he is irresponsible if he have no means to remove that ignorance. He can give no opinion on a question he never heard propounded. But when that ignorance is removed a mere neutrality, a cautious silence, a prudent reticence may be a safe policy but not a dignified one.

Mr. Chapleau openly avows that Mr. Robertson knew nothing of this loan till it was consummated. But why did he not know of it; why was he not consulted? why was the thing done in a corner and thus concealed from hime? Why was he and his department ignored in the negotiation as much as if they did not exist? The negotiation of public or provincial loans, by constitutional usage belongs to the Treasurer, and it is a gross violation of this usage to conceal any finanncial transaction from him. If Mr. Chapleau ignore the Treasurer, in some of the most important functions of his office, why not in all? What is the use of a Treasurer if the leader of the Government can assume in his own person the prerogatives of another department—and if one why not all, till at last Mr. Chapleau might dispense with them, and come to rule without any colleagues except the Legislative Council? Sir Alex. A. T. Galt resented the interference with his department of Sir John A. Macdonald, by resignation, and though Sir John has since given him a lucrative office as sort of conscience money or peace offering, he was at that period independent enough to renounce office rather than have his leader interfere in the duties of his department. Will our Treasurer have the same courage and independence, and thus repel an illegal interference with himself and his department, or and by way of doubtful apology merely assert his ignorance?

If the Treasurer can complacently occupy this position and become a sort of recording clerk to the Premier; if he can passively permit an invasion of his department; if he can meekly offer both cheeks to be smitten, he should at least consider that he owes something to his constituents here who regard Mr. Chapleau's usurpation of his departmental rights as their own humiliation, and an insult to their representatiive in the Legislative Assembly. It is true the Treasurer may have no high respect for a portion of his constituents. Those who opposed him at his election have not earned his friendship, and it is likely that many who supported him have no elevated idea of the dignity and independence that belongs to his position as their member. But of those who independently opposed and supported him, he is equally their representative, and as such, they feel the indignity put on him by his leader and are not satisfied with the neutral if not reprehensible attitude he has been obliged to assume and they protests against hisbeing made a subaltern in his own department. He was formerly ousted from the ministry, but the cause and the mode are still a secret. Perhaps he then claimed to be a little indepnedent and attempted to do his duty in his own way. If so he received a severe lesson, the effect of which, may be surmised, to be his present passive and plastic attitude. This position may suit, and probably does, the taste or interest of the Treasurer. But certainly it does not commend itself to the approval of his constituents, and is one with which they are much dissatisfied.

The appointment of a Commission by the Federal Government to report on the Civil Service, with the view of improving its efficiency, looks like a veritable sham. During nearly the two years the Government have been in office, opportunity was not been wanting to effect this improvement; but they purposely neglected it. And not till pressed by greedy followers, who badger the Government for office, did they adopt this expensive scheme for quieting their supporters. The absurdity of appointing this Commission will be evident when the policy of the Government comes under review. That policy has been to dismiss liberals, and if occasions did not arise, the Government was industrious to make them. Gradually the liberals have been weeded out of the Civil Service, and the process still goes on. In the face of such a policy, persistently followed out by the Government, it seems a mockery of the credulity of the public to institute a Commission. The men composing it will report. They must do something to earn their pay. But the report will be thrust into some pigeonhole to be moth-eaten and forgotten. The Commissioners may devise measures and recommend their adoption, but these measures will contravene the policy of the Government, who must continue to gratify their supporters, if their services are to be retained. The report of the commission will and must be neutralized by the practise and policy of the Ministry, who are pushed only by a crowd of followers hungering for office, and whose fidelity now and in the future, is to be secured only by giving them situations; and if no vacancies are open, they must be created by turning liberal occupants adrift. The mad extravagance of wasting the public money on this and kindred Commissions, at a time when the country is staggering under debt, is apparent. If the Government had not adopted the scheme of dismissing liberals to make way for tories, the excuse of a Commission would not have been necessary, and would not have been adopted. But they first undermined the efficiency of the Civil Service by practically refusing to recognize the equitable principle—that on which alone the efficiency of the service rests—that officials should retain their places during good behavior; that their retention of office should in no way be affected by their political principles. This guarantee—a reasonable and equitable one as to the tenure of office—was outraged by the Government the moment they obtained power, and has extended to all the ramifications of the public departments. As to the qualifications of the Commissioners, the public care little about them. The design is evidently to give these men the means of earning a fat salary. If they report honestly, their report will be a censure on the policy of the Government. If dishonestly and to please their employers, which is more likely, the report will be worthless, and the wasted paper will be all the equivalent the people will receive for the thousands paid these gentlemen!

The following is the Liberal policy or programme, as published by the Globe. Of course it is somewhat informal, as it has not the impress of party sanction. But in the main it embodies the policy of the Reformers. There may be a divergence of opinion, as for instance, on the utility of the Senate or of Legislative Councils.

(1). They demand that the present tariff, which robs every consumer, every farmer, every poor man in the land, which enables a few dozen capitalists to pile up wealth at the public expense, shall be replaced by a fiscal policy tested during many years, under which all classes were prosperous, which united the Provinces of the Dominion, and assisted the rapid development of their resources

(2). The demand that the form of Government shall be simplified and rendered less expensive by the abolition of the useless senate. It is true that some few as sert that the constitution ot the Second Chamber should be amended if posible, but all unite in declaring that it should not be maintained in its present form.

(3). They demand that the Legislative Councils in the Provinces shall be swept away, and that the single Chamber system, which has worked so well in Ontario and Manitoba shall be relied on for local legislation.

(4). They demand that the Pacific Railway shall be constructed only so fast as may be done without laying on the people a too heavy burden of new taxation. Those parts of the road necessary to develop the rich lands of the North-West to be pushed on as rapidly as possible, but the other sections to proceed with caution and discretion, as the means of the people will permit.

(5). They demand that a liberal policy for the sale of lands to actual settlers in the North-West shall be substituted for the regulations which drive away emigrants, burden the pioneers with a double load of municipal taxations, lock up the land in the hands of non-resident speculators, and excite the utmost discontent in the very part of the Dominion which should be carefully bound to the remainder. The foolish attempt of Sir John A. Macnonald to introduce the lordly system of land holding to Canada is a remarkable evidence of his contempt for public opinion.

(6). They demand that the Civil Service shall no longer be used as a political machine, that employees shall retain their places during good conduct, and the American spoils system be rejected.

(7). They demand that repudiation shall no longer be favoured by the Government, that the currency shall again be put on a sound specie basis, and that the reserve of coin shall not be reduced so as to imperil the credit of the Dominion.

(8). They demand that public works shall be let by public tender, not by private arrangement between Sir Charles Tupper and his friends. The Carillon and Section B scandals will never be imitated by a Reform Administration.

We do not mention minor measures, nor those concerning important details of which Reformers to some extent differ. But with the above programme in hand the Liberal party of Canada can hardly be said to lack a declared polcy. Certainly no Conservative can be safe in inviting a comparison between the Ministerial policy and that of their opponents.

There was good deal of self laudation by ministers, when announcing their success in negotiating the four million loan in France. Mr. Chapleau was jubilant and Mr. Wurtele was gently cheerful while explaining the transaction. Outside, the Government papers went into ecstacies of delight, as if some heaven born financier had interposed to save the credit of the Province by a successful stroke of finance. Poor Mr. Tilley was completely extinguished by the brilliance of the operation, for, not our Treasurer, but Messrs. Chapleau & Co. performed a feat in borrowing which Sir. S. Tilley cannot accomplish. The loan was effected at 98, and the interest fixed at 5 per cent. Everyone thought the loan was a good one and obtained on terms exceptionally advantageous. But when the public transport began to subside and the praises of Messrs. Chapleau were less vociferous, a hard-headed writer in the Journal of Commerce—it was a pity he had nothing else to do, besides disturbing our complacency—enters into a calculation to show that instead of 98, we get only 95¾ while Mr. Prentice announces that he had secured 99 in England. But this financial dexterity, when submitted to the hard test of facts, sinks into a very ordinary feat. Montreal effected a loan the other day at two per cent above par. Surely the credit of the Province should be as good as that of one of its cities. Yet we had no blustering announcement of the cleverness with which the loan was effected for the city. The more the four million loan is examined, and its conditions critized, the less will be the boast of its negotiators. Either we have financiers in Montreal much superior to Mr. Chapleau, for he appears to be the bona fide Treasurer, or the credit and solvency of that city, exceeds that of the Province.

ANNUAL CONVOCATION—1880

The annual meeting has a lively interest for the people of this neighborhood, many of whose boys are pupils of the college. But this interest is not wholly confined to them. It is largely shared by all who are anxious for the success of this and similar institutions. A convention is somewhat of a literary audit, at which is summed up the progress of the students; the rewards, in the shape of honors obtained are merely indices of improvement, and which though gratifying to the recipients and their friends are the data on which the outside public approach a correct judgement.

On the recent occasion the attendance of friends and others was larger than usual, thus manifesting an increased interest in the success of the institution. On Sunday there was an ordination service in the college chapel, at which the Bishop of Quebec admitted Revs. R. W. Colson, B.A., and F. M. Webster, B.A., to Priests orders, and Messrs C. D. Brown, B.A., and R. W. Brown, B. A., to the dicanate. Thursday, however, was the more important day, when a carefully prepared report of the doings of the college for the past year was presented and received. The public meeting of Convocation was held in the Hall at 2:30 p.m. The Chancellor, R. W. Heneker, Esq., after having declared the Convocation open, addressed those present. He observed that he would refer, as was his custom, to incidents of the past year as worthy to be kept in mind as a part of the University annals. He referred to the return of the Bishop of Quebec, from his foreign travels and his presence at convocation, and assured him of a hearty welcome, but regretted the absence of the Vice-President, the Bishop of Montreal and this the more, as many might infer from it that the diocese of Montreal has no part in the Bishop's College. And yet this college may be said to be extra-diocesan; it belongs to the whole church in the Province of Quebec. He proceeded, "The work of the College during the past year has, I am happy to say, been most satisfactory. You will hear more of this in detail from the report of the examiners; but, in a short compass, the position of the College is so clearly stated in the last report of the principal to the corporation, that I must read one extract from that report:—

'I have to report to the Corporation a year of considerable progress, and one that seems to augur well for the future of the College. Since the last meeting of Corporation, the number of students has increased from nineteen to twenty-seven, and this notwithstanding the fact that the number of outgoing students last June was a large one in proportion to the number remaining. It is also very satisfactory to me to be able to state that this large increase has by no means been obtained by the admission of inferior men. Our new students are, many of them, young men of considerable promise, and have for the most part received good preliminary training. I may mention here that seven of our present students are old Bishop's College school boys.'

This leads me naturally to refer for a few moments to the Principal himself, whom I am happy to see here to-day fulfilling his important duties. Believing, as I do most sincerely, that he has chosen well for his own interests and for his own comfort and peace of mind, he has nevertheless, in deciding to remain at Bishop's College, chosen for the advantage of this College, where his earnest, zealous and conscientious labors are producing their natural fruit. I have another pleasing and interesting matter to mention, that of the establishment during the year of the "Harold Fund" for the endowment of the Divinity chair. Most of you are aware that the foundation of this College was in great part due to a gift made to the late Bishop Mountain, of Quebec, of a large sum of money by an English gentleman, with power to the bishop to use this money according to his own discretion in his diocese. Bishop's College was the result and this noble gift was soon added to by contributions from a variety of sources until we see to-day this institution, not very large certainly, not as yet complete in its powers of usefulness, yet having done good work in the past in the education of many a noble and earnest clergymen, and many a noble minded layman, as well as a large number of men spread throughout the Dominion, who, in their various walks of life, have been creditably known as Bishop's College boys and students.

It has entered into the hearts of some of our warmest friends that in memory of Mr. Harold, and to carry out the original design ot the good Bishop, a fund should be raised, to be called the "Harold Fund," with the special object of rendering the Divinity Chair permanent, free from those contingencies which surround funds miscellaneously raised and applied. The two forerunners, if I may call them so, of this new "Harold Fund" are men well known in the Diocese of Quebec—the Rev. C. P. Reid, the Rector of Sherbrooke, and Mr. Robert Hamilton, of the city of Quebec.

I must now announce to you that Convocation has given me authority to confer degrees honoris causa on the following gentlemen:—The Rev. W. Colston, B. A., and F. M. Webster, to priest's orders; C. D. Brown, B. A., to the diaconate; Rev. C. P. Reid to be D. C. L.; Rev. Dr. Sullivan, D. C. L.; Rev. C. Brancroft, M. A., ad eundem; D. F. Smith (Aberdeen) M. A., ad eyndem; Rev. R. W. Colston, M. A., in course; D. C. Robertson, B.A.; Rev. G. H. Porter, B. A., and R. John Hewton, B. A. The following were then admitted to matriculation:—Allan S. Gibb, W. Brown, Wyatt Johnston and H. J. Petry. There had been a new faculty introduced, and it was determined to give the honors for it together as follows: R. N. Hall, L. L. D., (dean designate); L. E. Morris, L. L. M; E. T. Brooks, Q. C., M. P., M. L.; S. B. Sanborn, L. L. B.;—Hodge, L. L. B.

The following degrees were then conferred:—Rev. C. P. Reid, D. C. L.; Rev. Dr. Sullivan, D. C L., honoris casua; Rev. Charles Bancroft, M. A., (McGill) ad eundem; Mr. D. F. Smith, M. A., (Aberdeen) ad eundem; Rev. R. W. Colston, M. A., in course; D. C. Robertson, B. A.; Rev. G. Porter, B. A.; R. J. Hewton, B. A., in course, presented in order of merit.

The following were then, with the usual formula, admitted as matriculated students of the College:—Allan J. Gibb, W. Bowen, Wyatt Johnston, Henry J. Petry, after which, as is usual at Lennoxville, was sung the National Anthem. The degress of the Law Faculty were then conferred, R. N. Hall, Dean designate of the new faculty, receiving that of L. L. D., L. E. Morris and E. T. Brooks, Q. C., M. P., M. L.; Messrs. S. B. Sanborn, —Hodge, L. L. B. Three cheers, a tiger and a "rocket" were then lustily given for the new faculty. The Principal then read the reports of the several examiners as follows.—

The report of the Reverend Isaac Brock, M. A., examiner of Divinity, congratulated Mr. R. Hewton on the admirable papers he sent in on Scripture History Paley; The papers of D. C. Robertson and R. S. Hewton are also worthy of great praise. In the first year Mr. R. F. Morris stands at the head of his class. The papers of Mr. Lyster and W. Morris in the Greek Testament should also be honorably mentioned.

Rev. Canon Norman reported that the Prince of Wales scholarship be awarded to Mr. Robertson. Mr. R. Hewton and Mr. Porter also receive credit for their papers on Demosthenes. Mr. A. F. Morris has come out first in every paper and Mr. W. Morris second in almost every paper. Honorable mention is also to be made of Messrs. Magill, Thompson, Scott and Woods, some of whose papers were very good.

STEAMBOAT DISASTER.—The steamer Sewanhaka was burned to the water's edge on the 28th ulto., at College Point, Long Island. About 40 persons are supposed lost. The fire was caused by an explosion in the engine room. Many of the crew behaved badly. There were 500 persons on board; the bodies of 30 have been recovered.

A correspondence is in progress between the British and American Governments upon the Fortune Bay question. The publication of the correspondence is delayed, as it is only in progress.

The increase in the revenue of the American Internal Revenue Department for the year ending June 30, was $10,000,000. This increase was derived from whiskey, cigars and cigarettes.

The potato bug has made its appearance around Quebec and is ruining the crop.

General News.

A Relief Fund is about to be opened by the Lord Mayor of London, for the widows, orphans, and others of the crew of the Atalanta, which no doubt will meet a generous response.

The number of vacant houses in Quebec, on the 17th of May last stood at 542. The population also shows an estimated decrease of 1,310 as compared with last year. These facts are elicited from a new city Directory.

The Citizen, Ottawa, understands that the Hon. Mr. Masson has again tendered his resignation as Cabinet minister. His resignation has not yet been accepted, but as Mr. Masson alleges bad health it would be cruel to refuse it.

GREAT MORTALITY.—In New York, 186 deaths were recorded for the 24 hours ending at noon on tne 28th ulto., and 75 between noon and 6 p. m. More than one hundred of these deaths were caused by cholera infantum, and twenty by sunstroke.

Miss Ada Mank, an actress connected with Fanny Davenport's Company has joined the Unitarian Church. The Rev. Mr. Collyer said in his address, "I hope hereafter the barrier between the church and the theatre will be entirely broken down, and that the aetors and actresses may mingle with us.

DISCOURAGING CROP REPORT.—The farmers report from all parts of Lennox and Addington and the adjoining counties that the spring wheat crop is so injured by rust it will scarcely be worth harvesting. The late heavy rains have flooded the low lands, and considerable damage is done to the growing crops.

It is said that the scheme of colonization reccommended by the National Convention, held during the closing days of last week, at the Laval University, contemplates assistance, in money, to settlers to establish themselves on land in this Province, which money should be furnished in part by the Colonization Societies, with the aid of contributions, and in part by the State, with the aid of a tax styled the Colonization Tax.—Telegraph.

☞Choice Havana Cigars (new goods) at H. Fortier's.

☞For Strawberries leave your orders early in the day at E. H. Duff's who is now receiving Col. Rhodes berries daily.

The Rev. G. H. Porter, B. A. wil preach in Johnville Sabbath next at 3 p.m., and at Capelton on Wednesday evening, 7th inst., at 8 p.m., instead of on Sunday the 4th.

The social given by the Misses McCurdy, of Haskill Hill, in the Methodist Church at Lennoxville, Wednesday the 23rd ult., was very largely attended. Rev. Messrs Scanlon, D. Winters, Davies, and Rev. Mr. Hansford, the President of the Montreal Conference, were present and delivered brief addresses. Proceeds, $32.

☞Fresh Salmon every Wednesday direct from the fishing grounds, at E. H. Duff's.

☞Choice lot of Briars (new importation) at H. Fortier's.

We are glad to observe the name of the Rev. G. H. Porter among those honored with degrees at the late convocation of Bishop's College, Lennoxville. We are informed that Mr. Porter passed a creditable examination in all the subjects of the third year, and has honorably earned his B.A. To take a degree at an institution of such high repute as Bishop's College is in itself no mean distinction; but in Mr. Porter's case the honor is peculiarly enhanced by the fact that he had to prosecute his studies while burdened with the onerous pulpit and pastoral duties of his important charge, and that those duties were meanwhile so efficiently and acceptably discharged that the Lennoxville Official Board unanimously petitioned conference for his return this year. To preach four times a week, take pastoral charge of some forty families, four Sabbath-schools, and a continued series of public entertainments, and take the usual share of temperance lectures, missionary speeches, &c., besides, is considered a pretty full programme even for a Methodist minister; but when you throw in a college course, and a large amount of work for the press, evidently the intellectual and physical strain must have been exceptionally severe; and it will be a matter of rejoicing to Mr. Porter's many friends to know that his health has not in any wise been impaired.

☞See the Quebec Strawberries from Col. Rhode's Fruit Farm, at E. H. Duff's. We understand he has the sale of them in Sherbrooke and receives them fresh every morning.

☞Rough Diamond Solace Eights, fine bright Virginia Tobacco at H. Fortier's

Dominion Day was loyally celebrated in Sherbrooke. The trains from every direction brought crowds of visitors into the city in the morning to witness the parade of the Fire Brigade, the Military Review and the games on the Parade Ground. The Fire Brigade, headed by the Victoria—53rd Batt.—Band, made a very imposing show in the morning, and were highly praised. The military review and sham battle was a source of great enjoyment to the large crowd of spectators, and the games on the Parade Ground were attended by an immense crowd, and were well contested, particularly the Lacrosse match. We are sorry our boys were again beaten, but we think they do not practice enough together. They are not deficient in muscle and endurance, but they need to play together more. The following is a list of the winners in the games:

100 yards dash—1, J. Burbeck; 2, F. Harvey.

½ mile, boys.—1, W. Bernier; 2, E. Doonan; special, H. Cole.

½ mile.—1, A. Church; 2, J. W. Wallace.

Barrel race.—1, F. Coleman; 2, J. Brochu.

1 mile.—1, F. Harvey; 2, A. Church.

Wheelbarrow race.—1, G. Paul; 2, W. Beakey.

Sack race.—1, W. Finnegan; 2, E. Parsons.

Greased pig.—Gauthier.

Tug of war.—"Thistles" backed down.

☞Another Case of "All a Samee" Cigars received at H. Fortier's.

Brigade Camp.

The brigading of the volunteers of the 6th brigade division at Sherbrooke took place on the 25th ult. The brigade was composed of the following, under command of Lt.-Col. Fletcher, D. A. G., and Lt.-Col. Hon. M. Aylmer, B. M.—5th regiment of cavalry (5 troops) under command of Col. Taylor, Major I. Wood second in command; the Richmond Field Battery (4 guns) Captain, the Hon. Henry Aylmer commanding; the 53rd Battalion Infantry of Sherbrooke, Lt.Col. Ibbotson, Majors Willis and Morehouse; the 54th Batt. Richmond, Lt.-Col. Lord Aylmer and Major Williamson; and the 58th Compton Batt., Lt.-Col. J. Cook, and Lt.-Col. Pope and Major McAulay. The brigade camped on that fine camp ground known as the Terrill Hill which is high and dry and has a never-failing supply of pure spring water. The ground commands a most beautiful view of the city and country. The active drill and duties of the past six days has been a preparation for the grand review and sham battle which took place yesterday, Dominion Day, which was witnessed by large numbers of citizens from town and country. The brigade were under arms shortly after 10 a. m., and at 11 o'clock took up their respective positions on the field, deploying into line, cavalry on the right of the infantry and the artillery on the left. At noon a feu de joie was fired, a round of musketry after each seven guns, and then three cheers for the Queen. The brigade then marched past, and were warmly cheered for their splendid line. After this the artillery opened fire from the heights on an imaginary enemy in the bush and the infantry advanced in line of attack, the whole line being finally brought into action, and after a sharp engagement of half an hour the enemy were routed completely. It being near dinner time the victorious troops did not pursue the enemy, but retired in good order to their camps. The general warmly and justly thanked the men for the fine display made considering the shortness of the time allowed for drill. In the afternoon those remaining on the field indulged in various sports, but the majority were down in the city.

The cavalry, 54th and the 58th struck tents and left for home in the evening. The remainder break camp to-day. The 53rd marched into the city at 11 o'clock this forenoon. Thus ends a very successful drill in camp. Religious services were held in the camp last Sunday by Rev. Mr. Brock in the morning and the Rev. Mr. Tully in the afternoon.

☞Fresh Salmon, Choice Hams, Bacon, Fresh Roast Beef, and all kinds of canned meats, Lobsters, &c. R. L. Harvey & Co. 2w96

Quite a large number attended the strawberry festival given in the City Hall last evening by the ladies of the Methodist Church, and all enjoyed themselves. Being disappointed by not receiving garden strawberries they were fortunate in procuring excellent wild ones, which with the etceteras helped to satisfy the craving for those tempting dishes.

☞Old Virginia Cut Tobacco 50cts per pound at H. Fortier's.

Barnston.

We are sorry to again have to notice the work of the angel of Death, who has again visited us, and taken from among us the beloved wife of L. O. C. Scott, and our aged townsman, Robert McAllister. The latter had been sick quite a long time, but in the case of Mrs. Scott, she was out on Friday and died Saturday morning. She is the mother of the young lady who died so suddenly at Newport, the report of which I sent you three weeks ago. And her sudden death is undoubtedly the effect of the shock she received at that time. She was a lady highly respected by all; a kind and gentle mother, who will be sadly missed by the family, as well as by her large circle of friends and acquaintances.

Everyone here in the village and around are trying to repair up their buildings, and it is distressing to see how Frank & Will, the only carpenters hereabouts, try to spread themselves over the whole ground, doing one day's in a place, and then moving, so as to hold all the jobs. Pity they can't divide up like Barnum's circus, and go in different directions at the same time.

Crops are looking well, especially Canada thistles and potato bugs. Haying will begin about next week here.

Mr. Emery, of your city, has concluded to accept the offer of Barnston Academy, and will begin his duties on Monday, Sept. 6th; and we hope to see a full attendance, believing, as we do, that in Mr. Emery we have a man who can successfully advance the classes of this popular academy.

☞One Box Cigars (100) for $1 75 at H. Fortier's Cigar Store.

East Clifton.

The late showers have caused quite an improvement in the appearance of the crops. Hay bids fair to be an average crop. Wheat has been sown in this part more plentiful than usual and is looking well; other grain also appears now to be more than an average crop. Potatoes are largely planted, and look well; but the poor potato bug is having a hard time. He has no friends here. Some are trying coal tar; if the remedy proves fatal we will make it public as fast as possible.

Farmers are preparing for haying. Help is scarce as yet for haying.

Fat sheep are selling for three cents per pound, live weight. Mr. H. Williams is buying. Would you or some one else let us know through your columns the price of lambs, as the buyers do not seem to know?

The weather is all that could be desired for the growth of crops. Is it not our duty to say thanks to the N.P.?

East Hatley.

The Rev. E. M. Taylor is soon to remove to his new station at Melbourne, and will be succeeded by the Rev. S. Cruickshanks.

Methodist services are held here at 10.30 a.m., followed by Sunday School, which now numbers 62, and is in a flourishing condition. Graded lessons are used. A new library of 100 volumes has been added, and scholars and many parents are nicely interested in the work.

Our little village is looking at its best; its streets are green and cool and shady; and were it not for the deeper shade which is passed over it once in two weeks, leaving redness of eyes, woe and sorrow, we should be a happy community. Still the people want no Scott Act and the rabble call for license.

Mr. Willett has just opened a new harness shop at E. W. Parkin's store, where the public can have their work done—and well done; and we hope they may patronize this branch of business, which is a benefit to the village.

Barford.

The weather is very warm and dry. The thermometer has stood at 100 in the shade several times during the past week.

All kinds of grain are looking well, but the hay crops will not be so good as last year, owing to dry weather. Plenty of potato bugs.

Mr. George Thomas and wife, two old and respected citizens of this town are dead. They have been sick a long time and have been great sufferers.

Mr. Moses Hern is building a house on the site where his house was burnt last spring.

Way's Mills.

We have had another very sudden death in this place. Mrs. L. O. C. Scott who has been in poor health was taken worse while out strawberrying on Friday afternoon, 26th inst. A physician was sent for, who pronounced it sunstroke. Mrs Scott died the next morning at eight o'clock. This is another severe affliction to the family, as they had just buried a promising daughter of seventeen, who died four weeks before her mother. At the funeral service a large circle of mourners and sympathizing friends showed the esteem in which she was held.

Crops in this vicinity are looking very well. We doubt whether old fields of grass will be as good ss anticipated.

Georgeville.

The fine summer residence of Thomas W. Ritchie, Esq., at Bolton Cliffs, Memphremagog Lake, with contents and the outbuildings, were totally consumed by fire, Saturday night the 26th June. It had been unoccupied since the last season, till the day of the fire, when a servant maid was engaged to go over and open up and prepare the house for the reception of the Ritchie family, who were to arrive by the "Minnie" from Magog in the evening. The "Minnie," with the family aboard, rounded Gibraltar Point just in time to see the roofs of the building falling in. The house was richly furnished, and all went, save a few things that the first comers from Georgeville (who had heard the maid scream fire, and saw the flames) had time to save. Mr. Ritchie had an insurance in a Montreal company, which partially covered his loss.

Crops up here are looking splendid. The most fault-finding farmer finds nothing to grumble about, either as to crops or the weather. In this respect we seem especially favored this year by Providence. Traders, indeed, complain of dull times, but they should reflect that their business is overstocked, as are some of the professions, and fortunes are not to be made quickly in the country nowadays.

The Montreal visitors are on the wing now for the cool places and rural homes about the lake. The lake! How people fly tor the water when heat stifles them. Our village is dressing up very much, in the way of cleanliness, neatness and comfortable appearance. When fully developed, as Nature has designed us, we shall be—well, nous verrons!

A good many of our people are complaining this year, and the sick list is much larger than usual. Old people, and those not very old, are the chief ones of the afflicted.

Our Episcopal Church was consecrated by the Lord Bishop of Quebec last week. The ceremony was very interesting. Rev. Mr. Hepburn is preparing a class for confirmation in August next.

Our ladies are to have a bazaar about these days, when, Mr. Editor, it would be a nice thing for you and all of your city friends, to "put money in your purse" and come up for a good time at the bazaar! Don't forget it, now!!!

NOT THE SLIGHTEST AFFINITY exists between the numberless cough mixtures with which the market is flooded and that successful preparation—Northrop & Lyman's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda. It stands alone, distinct, is like itself, and nothing else. It embodies the best results of advanced pharmaceutical science. It accomplishes positive, decisive results, effectually relieving coughs (when the lungs are not tuberculous or hopelessly affected), colds, laryngitis, and diseases of a scrofulous origin. While it does not cure Consumption, it is the most reliable means of defence against that dreaded scourge. The invigorating properties of the hypophosphites reimburse the system debilitated by the constant tear and wear of a cough, while the paroxysms rapidly diminish in violence, in consequence of the soothing emollient action of the cod liver oil upon the inflamed lung membrane. The phosphorus, lime and soda, in combination with it, are all natural components in the construction of the bodily edifice, which, in a state of decay, lacks a sufficiency of those elements. These the hypophosphites supply, increasing the nutritive properties of the blood, and building up and rehabilitating the tottering human structure with a degree of promtitude as astonishing as it is gratifying to the invalid. A perceptible gain in flesh as well as in strength is one of the consequences of using this standard preparation which both time and experience have demonstrated to be fully worthy of the confidence reposed in it. Prepared by NORTHROP & LYMAN, Toronto, and sold by all druggists. 95

To the People of Sherbrooke,

HAVING taken shop-room in the old Banner Sewing Machine Factory, on Water-street, we are now ready to PIPE buildings for GAS and WATER, being desirous of getting this part of the work done as speedily as possible. We trust intended consumers will send word at once to above address, when it will be convenient to have the Pipe put in.

Finding that there are some skeptics who think the GAS and WATER are not going to be introduced, we will say that no bill for piping will be presented till the mains are laid in the street.

OUR ENTIRE WORK WILL BE FINISHED THIS FALL.

We will furnish the materials and labor at cost, adding no profit whatever, and the piping will be carefully done and without injury to property.

Raising a Provincial Loan.

MR. CHAPLEAU CORNERED.

Prentice-Chapleau affair came up in a very interesting form on Tuesday the 22nd ult in the Public Accounts' Committee.

Mr. Irvine alluded before the Committee to the statement he had made in the House respecting the answer given him by the Treasurer as to his question concerning the rate of interest of La Banque du Peuple loan. He had stated, and he was prepared to prove, that the rate was not five but six.

After Considerable sparring between Messrs. Chapleau and Irvine as to what the latter did not or did not say in his charge. Mr. Chapleau put the following question to Mr. Irvine in writing :—"Does the Hon. member for Megantic mean to say that the Government paid directly or indirectly more than five per cent., as stated in the House by the Treasurer, or that the Government, or any member of it, knew that any sum of money was paid in its behalf by any other party to effect this loan?"

Mr. Irvine meant to say, as had frequently said before, that five per cent, had been paid by the Government; that one per cent. had been furnished by Louis Adelard Senecal, now Manager of the Q., M. O. & O. R. R., whether in making the payment paid indirectly on behalf of the government or not, he was unable to say; but he believed that to be a proper subject for investigation under the circumstances He had no information respecting the knowledge the Government had, or any member of the Government, with reference to the rate of interest paid at the time the loan was negotiated; but he believed and offered to prove that, all the time the Treasurer answered his questions in the House, the premier was cognizant of all the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Chapleau said that, in order to save the time of the Committee and avoid an investigation, he desired to make a declaration. The Government borrowed $300,000 from the Banque du Peuple at five per cent. It would not have done so at more, and the First Minister, as well as his colleagues, did not know then, in any manner whatsoever, that anybody, either directly or indirectly, paid for the Government, with its knowledge, any part of the interest above 5 per cent., which it paid. L. A. Senecal, whose name was mentioned in the affair, was not, at the time of this loan, the employé of the Government. This loan was made towards the end of December or commencement of January, and Mr. Senecal was appointed only on the 1st of March. He desired to add that, "some time after the loan was effected, Mr. Prentice, with whom I was then on intimate terms, told me, in soliciting the negotiating of the loan of $4,000,000 which the Government desired to make, that he succeeded in procuring a loan from La Banque du Peuple at 5 per cent., but at a personal pecuniary sacrifice on his part. I blamed him for doing so, and told him that the Government should never be under obligation to anybody. He replied that a broker who bought for a client, and who found himself short, paid the difference, and that his client should not lose. He learned afterwards that Mr. Prentice had obtained the money he was obliged to disburse from Mr. L. A. Senecal. If I have not mentioned these facts to my colleague the Treasurer, it is—I avow it in all frankness—because I believed it did not interest the Government. This reason appeared to me to be sufficient, because I considered the communication to be private and confidential.

Mr. Irvine said that the Premier's declaration admitted the truth of the complaint he had made. He had acknowledged that the answer of the Treasnrer to his question had not been strictly accurate, but that it was not in the interest of the Province that the answer should have been more complete, and that, had it been so, it would have been a breach of confidence on the part of the Government towards its broker. He asked how it could have been construed as a breach of confidence in the Government's broker, when the Premier had been then in receipt for a month of an official letter from Mr. Prentice, threatening to publish the whole correspondence?

Mr. Chapleau said it was not an official letter.

Mr. Irvine said it was only a private letter, because the Premier had not wished to make it public. He contended that the question of the additional one per cent. paid for La Banque du Peuple loan was a subject for investigation, and claimed that no man was likely to pay out $1,500 without any consideration therefor, and that Mr. Senecal was one of the last men in the world to do so. It was true that Mr. Senecal was not an employé of the Government when he advanced the sum in question; but it was notorious at the time that he was about to be appointed, and he had been paid but a short time before, by the the Government, the sum of $20,000, which belonged to the Bank of Montreal. If no investigation was held into the matter, he pretended that public opinion would be outraged, and he did not even believe that the friends of the Government would bear them out in their course. Mr. Prentice paid $1,500, because he expected to re-imburse himself by his commission on the $4,000,000 loan; the one per cent. was furnished by Mr. Senecal, and if this were not to be investigated, it must be because there was something to fear in it.

Mr. Chapleau said the Committee might hold the investigation if they thought proper, but it would be to allow Mr. Prentice to make pompons declarations, and thus to prevent himself from passing for a scoundrel and liar with his London and Paris correspondents, to whom he had telegraphed that he alone was authorized to negotiate a loan, and that Mr. Wurtele was an impostor.

Mr. Irvine said that Mr. Prentice had written to Mr. Chapleau offering to give the Government $300,000 at 5 per cent. on condition of having the negotiation of the four million loan. This offer was not accepted in writing; but as the temporary loan was accepted, Mr. Prentice naturally considered himself authorized to negotiate four millions for the Government, and he did so. Having heard that Mr. Wertele had gone to France he came to Quebec and saw the Premier at his office, being told by him that Mr. Wurtele was not authorized to negotiate the loan; though afterwards he found out to the contrary. No doubt Mr. Prentice was rash in going to work without without an authorization in writing, but then he thought the Premier's word was as good as his bond, and upon his word to him he negotiated the loan. Mr. Decelles, and a gentleman in whom he (Mr. Irvine) had implicit confidence, came to Mr. Prentice and said: "You'll lose $1,500 by La Banque du People loan, but never mind, Senecal will furnish it. He (Mr. Irvine) said that those who best knew Mr. Senecal would agree that he was not the readiest in the world to get rid of money and that this advance of this should be investigated. If it was not tye impression would certainly be that it was because it was not deemed advisable in the interest of the Government. He asked the Premier if it were true that Mr. Prentice had written, offering to give the temporary loan on condition of negotiating the four million dollars?

Mr. Chapleau said that Mr. Prentice had written him so many offers that it was hard to say what he had not offered. He had offered to obtain for the Government a charter for the railway from Toronto to Ottawa, and, at the same time, had sold himself for thousands to other parties. When he called on him in his affice in Quebec to inquire about Mr. Wurtele, who had merely been authorized to make inquiries concerning the loan, it was about the 1st of May, and the loan had been already negotiated. He wanted then to make the Government an offer, and, on hearing that the amount had already been secured, he said, "I'm a ruined man." On another occasion, when he (Mr. Chapleau) had returned from New York, Mr. Prentice met him and said, "Have you negotiated your loan?" He (Mr. Chapleau) had told him he had not, but that he had an offer, and on asking the price, and learning it was 95 or 96, he said that it was all that could be expected. He (Mr. Chapleau) told him then that no one would get the bonds less than 98, or 2 less than par, for costs of commission, &c.

Mr. Robertson said he heard nothing about anything more than 5 per cent. being paid until it was mentioned in the House. There was no trouble about getting the money at 5, and he had in a very few minutes arranged a loan last winter for $250,000 at that rate with the Eastern Townships Bank.

Mr. Joly was surprised at any hesitation about holding the inquiry. He had heard the Premier say a dozen of times that he was not afraid of inquiry. He, therefore moved that the Committee inquire into the circumstances attending the rate of interest paid on La Banque du Peuple loan.

Mr. Chapleau had no objection if the Committee did not consider the inquiry a great waste of time.

Some members objected to the motion, and after a little further parley the Committee adjourned until next day at 11 o'clock.

FARM, GARDEN & KITCHEN

What is the Cause of Grape Rot?

Eds. Country Gentleman,—On page 32, M. B. Bateham assures his readers that it has been shown that the grape rot is "not the result of disease or debility of the vines, caused by unsuitable soil or deficient nutrition, owing to phylloxera at the root or the like, ...nor is it attributed to bad methods of culture or training of the vines." This seems to be laid down as a substantial fact, and I am right glad so good authority has settled so important a question. After stating what is not the cause, on the next page he tells us that the cause is rapid growth of vines, and warm, wet weather. Nor we do not ask Mr. Bateham what makes the warm, wet weather, but to get at bottom facts, will he please inform us what most conduces to the rapid growth of vines? Can Mr. Bateham or any one else devise a better plan to produce the rapid growth of vines than the renewal system, especially when they first start out in the spring, and continue to do so until the rot strikes them?

If we cut off any tree, shrub or vine at or near the ground, as long as there is life left in the root it will throw up porous, tender shoots, precisely the soft, spongy wood to be affected in warm, wet weather with mildew or rot; and as long as we continue the renewal system, we shall have rapid growth of vines, especially when least needed, and most liable to unfavorable weather. A rapid growth of vine at the time when most liable to warm, wet weather—in June and July—is not the worst fearure of the renewal system. Grape roots will not flourish under the cutting-back system as they would under great extension of vine. As to this, any one can satisfy himself by trying two vines with the difference in treatment. Now, by trimming, we control to a greater or less extent the rapid growth of vines; but the warm, wet weather at present seems beyond our control. I can barely suggest that if we check somewhat the rapid growth, the unfavorable weather would have less influence.—Country Gentleman.

The Cost of Sugar Beets.

The unpromising result of the business of the Maine beet sugar factory is greatly to be regretted. The company, however, makes a far better showing than the farmers, having paid out for beets, freight included, one-half of the receipts from sales. In a manufacturing business, the raw material costs half the value of the finished product. But notwithstanding it is broadly hinted that at five dollars a ton no more beets can be grown, I think this is a great mistake of the Maine farmers. When their fathers and grandfathers were clearing up their farms from the original forest, no thought was given of the cost of the heavy labor of removing the timber and clearing and fencing the land; so now it would be a wise thing to do—in my opinion, which of course is of force only as far as it may go—for those farmers interested to foster this enterprise, to feed this weakening that they may gather the profit hereafter. They do this sort of thing every day of their lives. They sow seed and fertilize land, rear calves and colts, and wait for the profitable result. I am sure beets can be grown for five dollars a ton; fifteen tons per acre is a very profitable crop, and that is equal to $75 per acre. Now what is the cost of an acre of beets? Let us make an account, liberally put for the field and see the result:

Rent of land per acre	$ 5.00
Manure, 20 tons at 50c	10.00
Plowing and fitting the ground	3.00
Planting	2.00
Seed, 12 lbs. at 25c	3.00
Fertilizer, 500 lbs	10,00
Cultivating and hoeing	5.00
Harvesting per acre	5.00
	$43.00

Against this should be offset one-third of the value of the manure and cultivating which go to the benefit of the next crop; this is equal to $8.33 per acre, leaving about $35 per acre, or the value of seven tons of beets. If the crop is ten tons the profit is $15 per acre in addition to rent of land and payment for all the labor given. The great bugbear is the cultivation. Weeds play the mischief with the crop and give the greatest trouble. Hand labor is costly, but it may be made unnecessary by good management. Hand cultivators of several kinds, chiefly the Planet cultivator, are made with a pair of wheels and hoes which work both sides of a row at the same time. With this implement the weeds may be removed within one inch of the line of beets, leaving the middles to be cleaned by horse machines. But three men or boys can be procured at the rate of one horse and man, and these hand cultivators working in an 18-inch space will clean the ground more quickly and cheaply than by horse power.

LACHUTE.—MURDEROUS BAILIFFS.—Tuesday morning at daylight, the bailiff, Mr. Lumphrey, from St. Jerome, accompanied by two men named McKeown and his partner proceeded to the house of Thomas Burns at St. Columbia, fifteen miles from Lachute, to arrest his wife, who had struck a boy named McKeown on Friday last. The bailiff not finding Mrs. Thomas Burns in the house, proceeded to arrest her husband Thomas Burns. The bailiff having no warrant for Burns's arrest, Burns declined to go with the bailiff and went into his house, when force was used to arrest Burns and a row ensued. The bailiff fired five shots at Burns and the partner three shots, one shot taking effect in Burns's left arm above the elbow. Burns had a pitchfork in his hand, with which he beat Lumphrey, the bailiff, and stabbed him twice. Lumphrey is not expected to recover. Lumphrey's companions fled when they saw how the wounded man could use his right arm. Warrants have been issued for the arrest of the bailiff's companions.

WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY

ONE OF THE OLDEST AND MOST RELIABLE REMEDIES IN THE WORLD FOR THE CURE OF Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Croup, Whooping Cough, Asthma, and every affection of the Throat, Lungs, and Chest, including CONSUMPTION.
A WELL-KNOWN PHYSICIAN WRITES: "It does not dry up a cough, and leave the cause behind, as is the case with most preparations, but loosens it, cleanses the lungs and allays irritation, thus removing the cause of complaint."
DO NOT BE DECEIVED by articles bearing a similar name. Be sure you get DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY, with the signature of "I. BUTTS" on the wrapper. 50 Cents and $1.00 a Bottle. Prepared by SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, Boston, Mass. Sold by druggists and dealers generally.

PERUVIAN SYRUP

A Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron,
Is as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. When the blood does not contain the usual quantity of Iron, the deficiency can be supplied by the use of the PERUVIAN SYRUP. It cures a "thousand ills" simply by TONING UP, INVIGORATING, and VITALIZING the system. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon. This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing
Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Boils, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Nervous Affections, Female Complaints,
And all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility, or a low state of the system.
CAUTION.—Be sure you get the "PERUVIAN SYRUP." Sold by druggists generally. Pamphlets sent free to any address by SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, Proprietors, 86 Harrison Avenue, Boston, Mass.
