CLOTHING! CLOTHING! CLOTHING!

A friend is never known till needed. Sorrow's best antidote is employment. It is better to do well than to say well.

A man's life is an appendix to his waist. Idleness is the splendor of a living man. Truth requires plain words; she rejects all untruths.

Lowliness is the base of every virtue, and he who wears the lowest builds the safest. There are many persons who think Sunday is a good time to stop on the side of the road.

Nothing is more precious than time, and those who mispend it are the greatest of all prodigals. He who cannot forgive others, breaks the bridge over which he himself will one day want to pass.

Though a taste of pleasure may quicken the soul, an unrestrained indulgence leads to inevitable destruction. Benefit your friends, that they may love you still more dearly; benefit your enemies, that they may become your friends.

Hope is the leading and following star of mankind, which is obscured and disappears with the setting of the sun. Small delays may have important consequences, and a favor deferred at the time it is wanted is often confounded.

Memory is the cabinet of imagination, the treasury of reason, the registry of conscience, and the council-chamber of thought. As the best-tempered sword is the most flexible, so the truly generous are the most pliant and courteous to their inferiors.

As in literature, so in all other things, there are few things that are both true and new; so also in life we shall find some men that are good, but very few men that are both true and good.

It is worthy of observation that the Latin word for individual is solus, which signifies alone. Many are the men who possess, but cannot enjoy. And well may he be called a miser, for all men he is the most mean, abject, and comfortless.

PREACHING, There are few things more tantalizing and intolerable than to sit out a week, trading, dull, dreary—as we say in Scotland, drick—sermon, cold, perhaps, to boot, unless even the last cup of tea, where the heat may somewhat compensate for the want of strength.

Prose—let them pardon me for saying it—should be written through newspapers and periodicals, the public are now familiar with writings distinguished alike for their vigor and brilliancy, and that the standard of taste is much higher than it used to be. More is not expected from the pulpit, and no man can fill it who does not believe on his diocesan much time and not a little head study.

Yet many think it an easy thing to preach; that the work of a few hours, on a day or two before the end of the week, is all that the pulpit requires. Not so thought Isaac Barrow. He is told of that philosopher and divine that he once heard another preach one of his own printed discourses. He asked the plagiarist who either did not know that Barrow was the owner of the stolen property, or was his questioner—how long it took him to make that discourse—and on the other saying five hours—"It is very curious," said Isaac, "for I look upon the man who in the evening thought Robert Hall's 'Discourses,' and in the morning declared that a short time before he died that he had tormented himself all his life long in trying to preach well, and had never succeeded."

MISTAKEN VIEWS OF HAPPINESS, A mistake is too often made by those who have experienced any difficulties in life in placing happiness in ease. We see men pursuing with energy their various occupations, according to the mind beyond its capacities, impatient of accumulative wealth that they may have ease.

If you ask the weary laborer the object of his ambition, you will find that he, too, is consulting himself with the hope of obtaining repose. Alas! the man who in the evening of the world has nothing to do. He who has nothing to do is afraid to attempt anything, and if he does, he is apt to do it wrong. He finds the count of his fingers by no means sufficient to count the number of his sins. He is apt to be satisfied with a life of ease, and to be content with a life of ease.

Another mistake is that happiness is found in property. The general idea is that they who possess wealth in abundance live in grandeur, and have every attainable earthly luxury. It is not so. The man who is content with a life of ease, and who is content with a life of ease, is the man who is content with a life of ease.

When we look at those above us, and think how vain they are to tell us our most pressing wants, it is natural to conclude that they must be happy, because they are so rich. If we could only remove them. We do not think that as the horizon enlarges, the soil becomes still more barren. The rich man, it is true, can enjoy more, but he can endure less. There are times, indeed, when he dares to envy the man on whom he once looked with hopeless disgust. Suppose a man may possess the tens of thousands, while all that is compared to the man who is content with a life of ease, is the man who is content with a life of ease.

PROPRIETORS.

It is said that Huxley and How are to be believed, and their places filled with better men.

And the Nova Scotia Proteus, who presented, chameleon-like, one appearance to one person or party, and a completely different one to the next, has earned the reward which was paid him for apostasy?

Though the troops at Sault Ste. Marie are behaving admirably, as indeed every one felt confident they would do, there has been one case of desertion.

The Americans, however, tried to rival us, and to show that if we had a knife among our troops they could also produce an apostate.

On our issue of Friday last we called upon the inhabitants of Montreal to wake up, and insist upon the holding of the public meeting which it was agreed some little time ago to call for the purpose of expressing the opinion of the city with regard to the relations between the Dominion and the Imperial Governments.

Under a yellow square canopy with white ostrich plumes nodding over it, and carried by four porters, a procession of men, women, and children, moved slowly down the street.

It will be remembered that after Sir Francis Hincks' scandalous back-down on the tariff question, Montreal initiated the meetings declaratory of opinion and of policy which were afterwards held throughout the country.

remain. But if Montreal throws the weight of her commercial (we had nearly said manufacturing, but that has not come yet) interest into the scale of progress and freedom, in less than a year Independence will be an accomplished fact.

Quite Capable of That.
Je Chaudron asserts that Spot, the deluge from the rebel at Red River, received $1,500,000 from our Government for helping to concoct the witness Manitobah Bill.

The FETE DIEU.
The Crowd—The Scene—The Procession.
It was a hot day. It would have been a very hot day, but that there was a pleasant air stirring.

And the Nova Scotia Proteus, who presented, chameleon-like, one appearance to one person or party, and a completely different one to the next, has earned the reward which was paid him for apostasy?

Though the troops at Sault Ste. Marie are behaving admirably, as indeed every one felt confident they would do, there has been one case of desertion.

The Americans, however, tried to rival us, and to show that if we had a knife among our troops they could also produce an apostate.

On our issue of Friday last we called upon the inhabitants of Montreal to wake up, and insist upon the holding of the public meeting which it was agreed some little time ago to call for the purpose of expressing the opinion of the city with regard to the relations between the Dominion and the Imperial Governments.

Under a yellow square canopy with white ostrich plumes nodding over it, and carried by four porters, a procession of men, women, and children, moved slowly down the street.

deputed to fight for the possession of the ball, which had got among the crowd at the same upfield. The men were hampered abominably and greeted with most insulting treatment from the rowdies.

For St. Lawrence. Main street is hot and dusty, and though it be never so prettily decorated, evergreens and devices will not suffice the thirty soul of him who carries a heavy flag on a parading day.

LACROSSE.
The Championship of the World.
MONTREAL vs. SHAMROCK.
Unhappy finish to a Splendid Match.

Directly the ball got going the excitement amongst the onlookers was intense. The crowd at every change in the field.

Wood and Brown faced the ball and were quickly at the Montreal goal, where after some slight shuffling, Brady got the ball.
