IS procured from the COAL OIL Manufactured by the Columbian Oil Company.—These facts are admitted by those who have tried it.

Vaneleek Hill, July 20th, 1858.

M. W. R. HIBBARD,

Dear Sir,— Having now fairly tested the Columbian Oil for myself, I can fully endorse your statements concerning it and with you, pronounce the Light which it produces far superior to that obtained from any material I have ever used. The saving of Expense, compared with other Oils is immense, and you may confidently recommend both the OIL and LAMPS, for lighting either Dwellings or Stores, as they speak for themselves.

Yours truly,
Signed, JAMES P. WELLS.

TRUE TIME.
AMERICAN WATCHES.

THESE superior Watches are made by the aid of new and original machinery, expressly designed to secure with a low price, a FINE SUBSTANTIAL and UNIFORMLY RELIABLE timekeeper. The movements are new in construction, have been pronounced by the highest authorities to be faultless in principle and quality, and have been proved by the most exacting tests to be unfailing in action. These watches are made entire from the crude materials, in a single establishment, by connected and uniform processes—the factory being organized upon the same system that has been adopted in the production of the unequalled American firearms,—which enables us to produce a movement at one-half the price of a foreign movement of the same quality. Each watch is carefully tested, and is accompanied with the maker's certificate and warranty for TEN years.

ALL FOREIGN WATCHES ARE MADE BY HAND, the American watches being the only ones made by machinery upon a uniform system throughout. Nearly all hand-made watches are defective, and are continually getting out of order. In many parts of the country it is impossible to find good watch repairers, and watch repairing is always uncertain and expensive. The introduction of American watches disposes of this difficulty, and country merchants, as well as watch dealers, can keep watches as a part of their miscellaneous stock, and thus supply their customers with a NEW STAPLE, which may be used as any other article, without mystery or humbug. Sold by the trade generally.

CONCERNING WORK AND PLAY.

Nobody likes to work. I should never work at all if I could help it. I mean, when I say that nobody likes to work, that nobody does so whose tastes and likings are in a natural and unsophisticated condition. Some men, by long training and by the force of various circumstances, do, I am aware, come to have an actual craving, a morbid appetite for work; but it is a morbid appetite, just as truly as that which impels a lady to eat chalk, or a child to prefer pickles to sugar-plums, or if my reader quarrel with the word morbid, and insist that a liking for brisk, hard work is a healthy taste and not a diseased one, I will give up that phrase, and substitute for it the lest strong one, that a liking for work is an acquired taste, like that which leads you and me, my friend, to like bitter beer. Such a man, for instance, as Lord Campbell, has brought himself to that state that I have no doubt he actually enjoys the thought of enormous quantity of work which he goes through; but when he does so he does a thing as completely out of nature as is done by the Indian fakir, who feels a gloomy satisfaction as he reflects on the success with which he has laboured to weed out all but bitterness from life. I kow quite well that we can bring ourselves to such a state of mind that we shall feel a sad sort of pleasure in thinking how much we are taking out of ourselves, and how much we are denying ourselves. What college man who ever worked himself to death but knows well the curious condition of mind? He begins to toil, induced by the love of knowledge, or by the desire of distinction; but after he has toiled on for some weeks or months, there gradually steal in such a feeling as that which I have been describing. I have felt it myself, and so know all about it. I do not believe that any stndent ever worked harder than I did. And I remember well the gloomy kind of satisfaction I used to feel, as all day and much of the night I bent over my books, in thinking how much I was foregoing. The sky never seemed so blue and inviting as when I looked at it for a moment now and then, and so back to the weary page. And never did green woodland walks picture themselves to my mind so freshly and delightfully as when I thought of them as of something which I was resolutely denying myself. I remember even now, when I went to bed at half-past four in the morning, having risen at half-past six the previous morning, and having done nearly as much for months, how I was positively pleased to see in the glass the ghastly cheeks, and the deep black circles round the eyes. There is, I repeat, a certain pleasure in thinking one is working desperately hard, and taking a great deal out of oneself; but it is a pleasure which is unnatural, which is fictitious, which is morbid. It is not in the healthy, unsophisticated human animal. We know, of course, that Lord Chief Justice Ellenborough said, when he was about seventy, that the greatest pleasure that remained to him in life, was to hear a young barrister named Follett, argue a point of law; but it was a highly artificial state of mind, the result of very long training, which enabled the eminent judge to enjoy the gratification which he described: and to ordinary men a legal argument, however ably conducted, would be sickeningly tiresome. If you want to know the natural feeling of humanity towards work, see what children think of it. Is not the task always a desagreeable necessity, even to the very best boy? How I used to hate mine!

Of course, my friendly reader, if you knew who I am, I should talk of myself less freely; but as you do not know, and could not possibly guess, I may ostensibly do what every man tacitly does, make myself the standard of average human nature, the first meridian from which all distances and deflections are to be measured. Well, my feeling towards my school tasks was nothing short of hatred. And yet I was not a dunce. No, I was a clever boy. I was at the head of all my classes. I never competed at school or college for a prize which I did not get. And I hated work all the while. Therefore I believe that all unsophisticated mortals hate it. I have seen silly parents trying to get their children to say that they like school-time better than play. I have seen, with joy, manly little fellows repudiating the odious and unnatural sentiment; and declaring manfully that they prefered criket to Ovid. And if any boy ever tells you that he would rather learn his lessons than go out to the play-ground, beware of that boy. Either his health is drooping, and his mind becoming prematurely and unnaturally developed, or he is a little humbug. He is an impostor. He is seeking to obtain credit under false pretenees. Depend upon it, unless it really be that he is a poor, little spirited man, deficient in nerve and muscle, and unhealthily precocious in intellect, he has in him the element of a sneak; and he wants nothing but time to ripen him into a pickpocket, a swindler, a horse-dealer, or a Whig statesman.

Every one, then, naturally hates work, and loves the opposite, play. And let it be remarked that not idleness, but play, is the opposite of work. But some people are so happy, as to be able to idealize their work into play; or they have so great a liking for their work that they do not feel their work as effort, and thus the element is eliminated which makes work a pain. How I envy those human beings who have such enjoyment in their work, that it ceases to be work at all. There is my friend Mr. Tinto the painter; he is never so happy as when he is busy at his canvas, drawing forth from it forms of beauty: he is up at his work almost as soon as he has daylight for it; he paints all day, and is sorro when the twilight compels him to stop. He delights in his work, and so his work becomes play. I suppose the kind of work which, in the case of ordinary men, never ceases to be work, never losses the conscious feeling of strain and effort, is that of composition. A great poet, possibly may find much pleasure in writing, and there have been exceptional men who said they never were so happy as when they had the pen in their hand: Buffon, I think, tells us that once he wrote for fourteen hours at a stretch, and all the time was in a state of positive enjoyment; and Lord Macauly, in the preface to his recently published Speeches, assures us that the writing of his History is the occupation and the happiness of his life. Well I am glad to hear it. Ordinary mortals connot sympathize with the feeling. To them composition is simply hard work, and hard work is pain. Of course, even common-place men have occasionally had their moments of inspiration, when thoughts present themselves in felicitous expressions, without much or any conscious effort. But these seasons are short and far between: and although while they last it becomes comparatively pleasant to write, it never becomes so pleasant as it would be to lay down the pen, to lean back in the easy chair. to take up the Times or Fraser, and enjoy the luxury of being carried easily along the track of thought which cost its writer so much labour to pioneer through the traciess jungle of the world of mind. Ah, how easy it is to read what it was so difficult to write! There is all the difference between running down from London to Manchester by the railway after it has been made, and on making the railway from London to Manchester. You, my intelligent reader, who begin to read a chapter of Mr. Froude's History, and get on with it so fluently, are like a snug old gentleman, travelling-capped, railway-rugged, great-coated and plaided, who leans beck in the corner of the softly-cushioned carriage as it flits over Chat-moss; while the writer of the chapter is like George Stephenson, toiling month after month to make the track along which you speed, in the face of difficulties and discouragements which you never think of.

And so I say it may sometimes be somewhat easy and pleasant to write, but never so easy and as it is not to write. The odd thing, too, about the work of the pen is this: that it is often done best by the men who like least and shrink from it most, and that is often the most laborious writing along which the reader's mind glides most easily and pleasurably. It is not so in other matters. As the general rule, no one does well the work which he dislikes. No man will be a good preacher who dislikes preaching. No man will be a good antonomist who hates dessecting. Sir Charles Napier it must be confessed, wat a good soldier, though he hated fighting; and as for writing, some men have been the best writers who hated writing, and who would never penned a line but under the pressure of necessity. There is John Foster; what a great writer he was: and yet his biography tells us, in his own words, too, scores of times, how he shrunk away from the intense mental effort of composition; how he abhorred it and dreaded it, though he did it so admirably well. There is Coleridge: how that a great mind ran to waste, because Coleridhe shrunk from the painful labour of forma composition: and so Christabel must have remained unfinished, save for the eloquent labours of that greatest, wisest most original and least commonplace of men, Dr. Martin Tupper: and so, instead of volumes of hoarded wisdom and which, we have but the fading remembrances of hours of marvellous talk. I do not by any means intend to assert that there are not worse things than work, even than very hard work; but I say that work, as work is a bad thing. It may once have been otherwise, but the curse is in it now. We do it because we must; it is our duty: we live by it; it is the Creator's intention that we should; it makes us enjoy leisure and recreation and rest; it stands between us and the pure misery of idleness; it is dignified and honourable; it is the soil and the atmosphere in which grow cheerfulness, hopefulness, health of body and mind. But still, if we could get all these good ends without it, we should be glad. We do not care for exertion for its own sake. Even Mr. Kingsley does not love the north-east wind for itself, but because of the good things that come with it and from it. Work is not an end in itself. "The end of work," said Aristotle, "is to enjoy leisure;" or, as The Minstrel hath it, "the end and the reward of toil is rest." I do not wish to draw from too sacred a source the confirmation of these summer-day fancies; but I think, as I write, of the discriptions which we find in a certain volume of the happiness of another world. Has uot many an over-wrought and wearied-out worker found comfort in an assurance of which I shall here speak no further, that "There remaineth a rest to the people of God?"

And so, my reader, if it be true that nobody, anywhere, would (in his sober senses) work if he could help it, how especially true is that great principle on this beautiful July day! It is truly a day on which to do nothing. I am here, far in the country, and when I this moment went to the window, and looked out upon a rich summer landscape, everything seemed asleep. The sky is sapphire-blue, without a cloud; the sun is pouring down a flood of splendour upon all things; there is not a breath stirring, hardly the twitter of a bird. All the air is filled with the fragrance of the young clover. The landscape is richly wooded; I never saw the trees more thickly covered with leaves, and now they are perfectly still. I am writing north of the Tweed, and the horrizon is of blue hills, which some southrons would call mountain. The wheat-fields are beginning to have a little of the harvest-tinge, and would, and they contrast beautifully with the deep green of the hedge-rows. The roses are almost over, but I can see plenty of honeysuckle in the hedges still, and a perfect blaze of it has covered one projecting branch of a young oak. I am looking at a little well-shaven green [I shall not call it a lawn, because it is not one]; it has not been mown for nearly a forthnight, and it is perfectly white with daisies. Beyond, at a very short distance, through the branches of many oaks, I can see a gable of the church, and a few large gravestones shining white among the green grass and leaves.

I do not find all these things any great temptation now, for I have got interested in my work, and I like to write of them but I found it uncommonly hard to sit down this morning to my work. Indeed, I found it impossible, and thus it is that of five o'clock, P.M., I have got no further than the present line. I had quite resolved that this morning I would sit doggedly down to my article, in which I have really [thought the reader may find it hard to believe it] got something to say; but when I walked off after breakfast, I felt that all nature was saying that this was not a day for work. Come forth and look at me, seemed the message breathed from her beautiful face. And then I thought of Woodsworth's ballad which sets out so pleasing an excuse for idleness:—

> Books! 'tis a dull and endless strife,
> Come, hear the woodland linnet!
> How sweet his music I on my life
> There's more of wisdom in it.
> And hark! how blithe the throstle sings!
> He, too, is no mean preacher:
> Come forth into the light of things,
> Let Nature be your teacher.
> She has a world of ready wealth,
> Our minds and hearts to bless,—
> Spontaneous wisdom breathed by health,
> Truth breathed by cheerfulness.
> One impulse from a vernal wood,
> May teach you more of man,
> Of moral evil and of good
> Than all the sages can!

Just at my gate, the man who keeps in order the roads of the parish was hard at work. How pleasant, I thought, to work amid, the pure air and the sweet smelling clover! And how pleasant, too, to have work to do of such a nature that when you go to it every morning you can make quite sure that, barring accident, you will accomplish a certain amount before the sun shall set; while as for the man whose work is that of the brain and the pen, he never can be certain in the morning how much his day's labour may amount to. He may sit down at his desk, spread out his paper, have his ink in the right place, and his favourite pen, and yet he may find that he cannot get ou, that thoughts will not come, that his mind is through his subject, or that if he can produce anything at all it is poor miserable stuff whose poorness no one knows better than himself. And so, after hours of effort and discouragement, he may have to lay his work aside, having accomplished nothing, having made no progress at all—wearied, stupified, disheartened, thinking himself a mere blockhead. Thus musing, I approached the roadman. I inquired how his wife and children were I asked how he liked the new cottage he had lately moved into. Well, he said, but it was far from his work; he had walked eight miles and a half that morning to his work; he had to walk the same distacce home home again in the evening after labouring all day; and for this his wages were thirteen shilling a-week, with a deduction for such days as he might be unable to work. He did not mention this by way of complaint; he was comfortably off, he said; he should be thankful he was so much better off than many. He had got a little pony lately very cheap, which would carry himself and his tools to and from his employment, and that he would be very nice. In all likelihood, my friendly reader, the roadman would not have been so communicative to you! but as for me, it is my duty and my happiness to be the sympathizing friend of every man, woman, and child in this parish, and it pleases me much to believe that there is no one throughout its little population who does not think of me, and speak so me as a friend. I talked a little longer to the roadman about parish affairs. We mutually agreed in remarking the incongruous colours of a pair of ponies which passed in a little phaeton, of which one was cream-coloured and the other drapple-grey. The phaeton came from a friend's house a little way off, and I wondered if it were going to the railway to bring some one who [I knew] was expected; for in such simple matters do we simply country folk find something to maintain the interest of life. I need not go on to described what other things I did; how I looked with pleasure at a field of oats and another of potatoes in which I am concerned, and held several short conversations with passers-by; but the result of the whole was a conviction that, after all, it was best to set to work at once, though well remembering how mnch by indoor work in the country on such a day as this one is missing. And the thought of the roadman's seventeen miles of walking, in addition to his day's work, was something of a reproof and a stimulus. And thus, determined at least to make a beginning, did I write this much Concerning Work and play.

I find a great want in all that is writen on the subject of recreation. People tell me that I need recreation, that I cannot do without it, that mind and body alike demand it. I know all that, but they do dot tell me how to recreate myself. They fight shy of all practical details. Now it is just these I want. All working men must have play; but what sost of play can we have? I envy school-boys their facilities for being amused, and of finding recreation which entirely changes the current of their thoughts. A boy flying his knife or whipping his top is pursued by no remembrance of knotty line of Virgil which puzzled him a little while ago in school; but when the grown-up man takes his sober afternoon walk—perhaps the only relaxation which he has during the day—he is thinking still of the book which he is writing and of the cares which he has left at home. Then, all the worse for myself, I can fell no interest in flying a kite, or rigging an sailing a little ship, or making a mill-wheel and setting it going, or in marbles, or ball, or running races, or playing at leap-frog. And even if they did feel interest in athletic sports, the lungs and sinews of most educated men of middle age would forbid their joining in them. I need not therefore suggest the doubt which would probably be cast upon a man's sanity were he found eagerly knuckling down (how stiff it would soon make him), or wildly chasing the flying football, or making a rush at a friend and taking a flying leap over his head. Now what recreation, I want to know, is open to the middle-aged man of literary tastes? Shooting, coursing, fishing, says one; but he does not care for shooting or coursing or fishing. Gardening, says another; but he does not care for gardening. Watching caterpillars, frogs, and other "common objects of the country;" well, but he lives in town, and if he did not feel the least interest in ferns and caterpillars. Music is suggested; well, he has no great ear, and he may dwell where he can have little or none of it. Society! pray what is society? No doubt the conversation of intelligent men and women is a most grateful and stimulating recreation; but is there any recreation in dreary dinner-parties, wdere one listens to the twaddle of silly old gentlemen and emphier young ones, or in the hot-house atmosphere and crush of evening parties? These are not play; they are very work, and a treadmill work producing no beneficial results, but rather provocative of all manner of ill-tempers. Then, no doubt, there is most agrebale recreation for some people in the excitement of a polka or a galop and its attendant light and cheerful talk, not to say flirtation; but then our representative man has got beyond these things; these are for you young people—he is married now and sobered down; he probably was never the man to make himself eminently agreeable in such a scene, and he is less so now than ever. Besides, if play be something from which you are to return with renewed strength and interest to work, I doubt whether the ball-room is the place where it is to be found. Late hours, a feverish atmosphere, excessive exercise, tend to morning slumbers, headaches, crossness, and laziness. To find dancing which answers the end of recreation, we must go to less fashionable places. I like the pictures which Goldsmith gives us of the sunny summer evenings of France, where the whole population of the village danced to his flute in the shade; and even the soured Childe Harold melted somewhat into sympathy with the Spanish peasants as they twirled their castanets in the twilight. Southey's picture is a pretty one, but its description sounds somewhat unreal:

> But peace was on the Cottage and the fold
> From Court intrigue, from bikering faction far:
> Beneath the chestnut tree love's tale was told,
> And to the tinkling of the light guitar,
> Sweet stopped the western sun, sweet rose the evening star!

Nor let it be fancied that such a scene cannot be represented except in countries to which distance and strangeness give their interest. This very season, on a beautiful summer evening, I saw a happy party of eighty country folk dancing upon a greener little bit of turf than Goldsmith ever saw in France. And I wished such things were more common; through the grave Saxon spirit, equal to the enjoyment of such gaiety now and then, might perhaps flag under it did it come too often. But on the occasion to which I refer, there was no lack of innocent cheerfulness; the enjoyment seemed real; and though there were no castanets and no guitars, but a fiddle for music and reels for dances, there were as pretty faces and as graceful figures among the girls, I warrant, as you would find from the Rhine to the Pyrenees.

But, to resume the somewhat ravelled thread of our discussion,—if a man has come to this, that he can feel no interest in such recreations as those which we have mentioned, what is he to do? And let it be remembered that I am putting no fanciful case: be sorry, if you will, for the man who from taste and habit cannot be easily amused; but remember that such is the lot of a very large proportion of the intellectual labourers of the race. And what is such a man to do? After using his eyes and exerting his brain all the forenoon in reading and writing by way of work, must he just use his eyes and exert his brain all the evening by way of play? Has it come to this, that he must find the only recreation that remains for him in the Times, the Quaterly Review and Fraser's Magazine? All these things are indeed excellent in their way. They relax and interest the mind: but then they wear out the eyes, they contract the chest, they render the muscles flabby, they ruin the ganglionic apparatus, they make the mind, but unmake the body. Now, that will not do. Does nothing remain, in the way of play, but the afternoon walk or drive: the vacant period between dinner and tea, when no one works, notwithstanding Johnsan's warning, that he cannot work between dinner and tea, will probably proceed to the concluson that he cannot work between breakfast and dinner; a little quiet gossip with your wife, a little romping with your children, if you have a wife; and then back again to the weary books? Think of the elder Disraeli, who looked at printed pages so long, that bye and bye, wherever he looked, he saw nothing but printed pages, then came blind. Think what poor specimens of the human animal, physically, many of our noblest and ablest men are. Do not men, by their beautiful, touching, and far-reaching thoughts reach the heart and form the mind of thousands, who could not run a hundred yards without panting for breath, who could not jump over a five feet wall though a mad bull were after them, who could not dig in the garden for ten minutes without having their brain throbbing and their entire frame trembling, who could not carry in a sack of coals though they should never see a fire again, who could never find a day's employment as porters, labourers, grooms, or anything but tailors? Educated and cultivated men, I tell you that you make a terrible mistake; and a mistake which, before the end of the twentieth century, will sadly deteriorate the Anglo-Saxon race. You make your recreation purely mental. You give a little play to your minds, after their day's work; but you give no play to your [illegible] therefore you grow weak, unmuscular, nervous, dispeptic, near-sighted, out-of-breath, neuralgic, pressure-on-the-brain, thin-haired men. And in time, not only does all the train of evil that follows your not providing proper recreation for your physical nature, come miserably to affect your spirits; but, besides that, it comes to juandice and pervert and distort all your views of men and things. I have heard of those who, though suffering almost ceaseless pain, could yet think hopefully of the prospects of humanity, and take an unprejudiced view of some political question that appealed strongly to the prejudiced who give kindly sympathy and souhd advice to a poor man who came to seek, advice in some little trouble which is great to him. But I fear that in the majority of instances, the human being whose liver is in a bad way whose digestion is ruined, or even who is suffering from violent tootheache, is prone to snub the servants, the children's ears, to think that Britain is going to destruction, and that world is coming to an end.

It may be said, that the class of intellectual workers haae their yearly holiday. When this article sees the light, it will be the middle of the "Long Vacation." And it is well, indeed, that most men whose work is brain-work have that blessed period of relief, whetein, amid the Swiss snows, or the Highland heather, or out upon the Mediterranean waves, they seek to reinvigorate the jaded body and mind, and to lay in a store of health and strength with which to face the winter work again. But this is not enough. A man might just as well say that he would eat in August or September all the food which is to support him through the year, as think in that time to take the whole year's recreation, the whole year's play, in one bonne bonche. Recreation must be a daily thing. Every day must have its play, as well as its work. There is much sound, practical sense in Sir Thomas More's Utopia and nowhere sounder than where he tells us that in his model country he would have "half the day allotted for work, and half for honest recreation." Every day, bringing, as it does, work to every man who is worth his salt in this world, ought likewise to bring its play: plag which will turn the thoughts into quite new and cbeerful channels; which will recreate the body as well as the mind; and tell me, great Gather of Waters, to whom Rasselas appealed upon a question ot equal difficulty,—or tell me any body else, what that play shall be! Practically, in the case of most intellectual workers, heavy reading and writing stand for work, and light reading and writing stand for play.

(To be concluded next week.)

COMETS AND POLITICS.

Our thoughts being just now engaged, in common with the public at large, by the subject of comets, we have been revolving in our minds what the functions of these bodies may be in the scheme of celestial politics, or what position they hold in the state of parties over our heads. Are they Whigs, for instance, or are they Tories? Reformers, Destructives, or Conservatives? The question is no sooner asked than it must immediately occur to everybody that the comets are now "in place," or office, so that at the first glance we are led to suspect an analogy between them and the present Administration. Let us now see whether many other circumstances do not concur to confirm us in this idea. The definition of comets, as given by Dr. Lardner, applies with curious precision to the men of loose principles and vague professions now in power. How can a Conservative ministry be better described than as "a mass of nebulous matter, to which is sometimes, not always, attached a train more or less extensive, composed of matter having a like appearance," that is to say equally nebulous? The comets are the vapory and vaporing politicians of the spheres. Whether there is any substance at all in these unaccountable personages is a question still in discussion, but "it is ascertained," adds the author we have quoted "that whatever matter there is in them is not luminous." Connected with this is another no less striking resemblance, we allude to the extraordinary profusion with which the comets throw out the obscure and empty stuff they are made of. A comet which appeared in 1848 threw out two millions ot miles of sidereal twaddle in only twenty days, and that which is now so conspicuous has been equally bountiful of its nebulosity in a still shorter period, evidently doing its best to keep pace with its terrestrial parallels, the farmers' friends, who in the same space of time have discharged themselves of quantities no less prodigious of matter with just as little in it. As it is not more difficult to conceive comets making speeches, than morning stars singing hymns, we actually fancy we hear our present comet discoursing nightly, we know not to what celestial listeners, in the style of Mr. Newdegate or the Marquis of Salisbury; and most singular it is that from its position at this moment it seems to be actually bestowing its tediousness on the sign of the Plough,—in fact upon the agricultural interest, which seems everywhere to have the same appetite for the stuff common to comets' tails and Conservati[illegible] [illegible] The analogy, we need hardly observe, answers to what in politics we call principle. Now what do astronomers tell us on this head? Why, that comets, as a general rule, have none! There is sometimes an appearance of principle, or nucleus but it is an optical deception. No sooner do we examine the object closely than the appearance vanishes. There is nothing but haze, or the cometic or hairy appendage from which it derives its name. Of this characteristic and often ominous peculiarity instances are not wanting among our comets below, so complete is the parallel which has formed itself upon our observation. The Ellenborough curls will occur to everybody. There was a comet indeed! What a grand specimen of a hirsute luminary the world beheld in a late Conservative colonel. Then we have Mr. Disraeli's coma, surely as great a prodigy of "horrid hair" as ever terrified a guilty or an innocent nation. No doubt our Chancellor of the Exchequer would greatly prefer a tail, something to add to his importance by following him; but it is not given to all comets to have those dignified appendages, which is probably from the rare occurrence of a nucleus, or something substantial, whether physical or moral, to hang a tail on. In the amazing speed which these public characters acquire as they approach the sun, we have another point of obvious similitude to their brethren of the parliamentary system. All who know anything of constitutional astronomy are aware aphelion corresponds with opposition, and perihelion with place. Hence the violent hurry of your comet to escape from the former dreary regions, and get to the warm and cosy part of his orbit. On the other hand, observe the different pace with which he slinks back to aphelion, or, in political parlance, "goes out," whether by virtue of laws which he cannot resist, or, as sometimes happens, when his place grows too hot to hold him. Again, when a comet is gone (the Ellenborough, for example), is there not a universal feeling of relief? Only people who are equally eccentric ever desire to see it in place again, for the obvious reason that it invariably excites more or less alarm, and a general sense of insecurity. The parallel here is perfect. In fact, the popular feelings towards the two species are precisely the same. They both keep the world staring, gossiping, and asking the very same questions. What will they do? Whither are they driving? What does it portend? Are they of any use? Can they possibly do us any service? Are they not much more likely to do harm than good? Here and there, indeed, a person is to be found who takes their part out of the love of paradox.—They are the feeders of the sun, forsooth, as if it was not the sun or the treasury that fed them; they bring fine seasons in their train, wonderful harvests, plentiful vintages, full granges, and flowing exchequers; but the world will not be imposed on; a comet is a comet, and Conservatism is Conservatism. We fear them less than formerly, but we do not love them more. If they no longer affright or disconcert society as in other days, it is just because they are now pretty well understood; we all know what flimsy and squeezable materials they are made of, and how little they have it in their power to do serious injury to any of the great interests of the system. Solid planets and solid principles can afford to despise them. A comet of the one kind is known to have swept upon one occasion right through the satellites of Jupiter, without putting the very least of them so much as a mile out of its way, just as a comet of the other sort came suddenly rushing in the course of last session into the midst of the affairs of the nation, without succeeding in damaging, or even in sensibly retarding, a singular popular object. On the contrary, the comet was the only party that suffered, forced nolens volens out of its Tory orbit. Never did any poor object, celestial or terrestial, undergo such an amount of disturbance in so short a period, and yet it is prelicted on strong grounds that a much more serious deflection awaits it, if it does not disappear in the meantime, which is thought to be no improbable event. The Chinese astronomers call a comet's tail its "brush," and the likeness to that useful instrument must strike everybody. An interesting question at present is, whether the brush of the comet now blazing is an assurance of a corresponding brush in preparation by Her Majesty's Ministers to sweep away the abuses of the representative system. This is certainly our own opinion, confirmed by the fact that a brush or broom made of the materials of the tail is exactly the one that a Derbyite ministry would naturally select for an operation of the kind. The comet indeed promises the house a sweeping, but it tells us at the same time what it is only too likely to be swept with, if Lord Derby and his housemaids are the sweepers. Could we see the cabinet brush, we should only see a copy of that which is now making a show of sweeping the firmament. Astronomers even suspect the brush to be hollow, and for our part, we believe in the hollowness of the two brushes. The thing is too transparent. We can see through both perfectly well. The subject of orbits would lead us too far, though we could find something to say on the paths of some cometary statesmen. Some have been so zigzag as to be only comparable to the orbit of Enke's, which is ascertained to be a spiral, each successive coil bringing the comet nearer and nearer to the sun, analogous, as we have said, [illegible] gradual approximation to Downing str[illegible] Mr. [illegible]nly individual orbit we sha[illegible] last Disraeli's appearance, whe[illegible] obse[illegible] has clearly [illegible] hyperbolic comets. And this [illegible] account for his failing to return to his constituents, who have been some time anxiously expecting him. Hyperboles on earth correspond to hyperboles in the heavens; and both courses agree in leading the bodies of personages that pursue them to monstrous and extravagant lengths, exceedingly unfavourable to their appearance. Were we to go through the list of comets on astronomical record, we doubt not but that we shall be able to find the exact counterpart of each in the annals of conservntism. The comet A.D. 590 prodnced an epidemic of sneezing; we certainly cannot state with confidence that any tory comet ever had precisely the same effect, but there are instances without number of such comets producing an epidimic of yawning, which is only another variety of nervous or muscular affection. The Comet of Biela, however, is the most remarkable we are acquainted with for the coincidence of its fortunes with those of the conservative party. It appeared in 1845-6, at the period of the great struggle between Free Trade and Protection. We need hardly say that the Comet took the latter side, for that was a matter of course; in fact it symbolised the protectionist interest in its own sphere. And so perfect was the representation, that it actually split in two, just as the Conservatives did after Sir Robert Peel had declared against the corn-laws. The comet flung off was called the Companion, but it ought to have been named from the Peelites, like whom, after making a figure for some time, it gradally faded away, until it may be said to have become politically extinct. We are now watching the present Comet with great interest, not without a lively anticipation that it will follow the course of Bieal's. We may be wrong in considering it as a type of the Derby Administration, but if we are right, there will be another Conservative schism, and both heaven and earth will bear witness to it.

THE PASSPORT NUISANCE.

Troublesome as it is to comply with all the vexations passport regulations of France, the traveller who has done so is nevertheless far from safe, as will be seen from an example within our own knowledge.

At the frontier custom-house on the railway from Cologne to Paris travellers are required to deliver up their passports for examination and registry. This was done by a British subject amongst others on the 27th ult. When the official, after a lapse of a quarter of an hour, reappeared with a bundle of passports, the English traveller patiently waited his turn, but passport after passport was delivered to the owners, but not to him. When the bundle was exhausted, the last passport given up, the English traveller thought it high time to claim his own, especially as the signal was made for the passengers to take their places, the time for starting having arrived. The official coolly replied that he had restored all the passports he had collected. The English traveller said that could not be the case, as his had been taken from him and not restored. The official told him he must be mistaken, as, if he had given his passport, it would have been amongst the number delivered back again, and advised the Englishman to search his pockets. Our friend answered it would be useless to do that, as he could not be mistaken about the fact that he had given the passport when demanded, and that, indeed, he would not have been allowed to pass into the custom-house without delivering it to the officer stationed at the door. The official upon this intimated broadly enough that if the English traveller had not his passport it was because he had come without one. The train was now on the point of starting, and the Englishman begged the official to search his own office, where the passport might be, instead of asking him, the Englishman, to search his pockets, where it could not be. The man complied, but evidently more to clench the case against the traveller than with any idea of finding the passport. He carelessly tossed over some papers on his table, and out of them tumbled the missing passport. Another minute and the train would have gone without the luckless traveller.

Now, if our friend had not insisted on the search of the office what would have happened? He had been told that if he had not a passport he must have come without one and that his story of having delivered up his passport was a false pretence to cover his violation of the law. The probability is, therefore, that the harshest step would have been taken, that he would have been apprehended and marched as a prisoner to the nearest jail. Another and less severe course, but inconvenient enough, would have been sending him back into Belgium, where also he would have been liable to the pains and penalties for being passportless. The least evil that could have happened would have been the loss of his place in the train, and fare; the loss too, of a day, when a day was of much importance to the luckless traveller. And to consummate the complication, the traveller's daughter was in the train, and would have been carried on to Paris without her father, or any knowledge of what had become of him, for he had no opportunity of communicating the difficulty in which he was placed by the carelessness of the official.

This is quite certain, that if the passport had not been found as it was found; it never would have been recovered, for the officer would have taken good care not to put himself in the wrong by restoring what it was easy to destroy

And this may happen to any one, there being no security against the loss of the passport when it is out of his possession. Nay, cases may be imagined in which a malignant, or fraudulent purpose may be answered by the wilful destruction of a passport. And we believe that upon all frontier stations passengers are required to deliver up their passports and also at the outports. At Bolougne it certainly is so, the passport being, as stated in our last number, given up, that a permit of embarkation may be granted in correspondence with it. And very civilly and promptly is the duty performed nt Bolougne, but still, in the interval of time, however short in which the traveller is without his passport, his liberty is depending on the care of the officer who has the custody of the precious document.

To guard against such a mischance as we have narrated, or worse than mischance, the officer who takes the passports ought to give a receit for them or somesport of token serving as an acknowledgment, and entitling the passenger to reclaim a passport.—London Examiner Oct 9

THE HISTORY OF A DISGRACEFUL SESSION—NO. 5 AND CONCLUSION.

PRELUDE TO THE CATASTROPHE.

We have, in preceding numbers of this series, seen the arts by which a ministerial majority was secured at the elections last year, and by which the members fraudulently returned were retained in their seats, so as to prevent as much as possible a diminution of the ministerial force during the session. We have also seen that, in spite of these tricks, so essentially weak was the ministerial policy, on an important occasion—no less than a vote on the question of representation—that they were deserted by almost every man from Upper Canada having any pretence to independence, and that among these deserters was a minister, who was compelled either to eat up his plainest declaration on the hustings, or else, in obedience to the sense of Upper Canada, to do as he did—that is to vote against the principle of the representative statu quo, which was the foundation of his gov- [illegible] and the sole ground upon which it [illegible] We have seen that, so weak [illegible] Government in spirit as well as in public opinion, it could not venture to discard this traitor from its own ranks, though it was perpetually calling for the popular condemnation of men sitting on the other side of the House, because they factiously, as it was called, venture to urge earnestly that which Mr. Postmaster Smith dared not refuse to vote. Such a complication was the fit prelude to the concluding scenes of the session, which we are now about to describe.

THE CRISIS BEGUN.

The first vote of importance on which the ministry sustained a defeat in the whole House occurred on the 22nd of July. The ministerial proposition—by way probably of "encouraging" the trade of the St. Lawrence, while they were "encouraging" the Gaspé Fisheries and all other interests—was to impose a tonnage duty on shipping coming thither from sea On the third reading Mr. Cauchon moved in amendment the following counter resolution declaring it "expedient to refer the said bill forthwith to a committee of the whole, with an instruction to strike out the provision imposing a new tonnage duty on vessels coming by sea to our ports." And the amendment was carried by a majority of 50 to 48. According to the better and purer practices of our constitution a ministry should have not only the verbal assurance of the confidence of the majority; but its active co-operation and support. Ministers existing by the confidence of a Legislature, like other confidential agents cease to be useful, when they are only allowed to retain their places while their advice is rejected. Gentlemen do not usually wait for the flunkey's months warning; but take the first hint and retire; and a high spirited minister would probably have insisted either on a reversal of the hostile vote by his friendly majority, or upon laying down his office. Our ministers, however, coolly put their project in their pocket, called the majority against it an accidental one, though they did not seek to reverse its decision and went on after this disgrace, as they had after the one just noticed, in which one of their own colleagues voted against them on the most important topic discussed during the session.

POSITION OF THE MINISTRY ON THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT QUESTION.

Before the opening of the session it had become known that the Colonial Secretary had, in Her Majesty's name, fixed upon Ottawa as the Seat of Government. It was also felt that this decision must be an unpopular one with a majority of the House, and interpellations were on different occasions, addressed to the ministry with a view to ascertain whether they were prepared to take the responsibility of carrying out that decision. To these the answer was given by the Premier, Mr. Macdonald, that the decision of the Imperial Government in favour of Ottawa was law; that the Government therefore had no choice in the matter; that they would execute the law—in other words would remove the Seat of Government to Ottawa. At last the question was raised in a substantive form by two or three motions declaring in different words the dissatisfaction of the house with her Majesty's decision. The vote was finally taken upon one moved by Mr. Piché—"That it "is the opinion of this House that the City of "Ottawa ought not to be the permanent Seat "of Government of the Province." The majority against ministers was fourteen in a House, including the Speaker, of one hundred and fifteen, and it is probable that the presence of the absentees would not have materially altered the count. During the debate the members of the ministry took the same view, and made the same declarations as on previous occasions. The law had made the Imperial decision conclusive. The Seat of Government must, therefore, be taken to Ottawa; and to do otherwise would be to insult the Queen.

The vote having, however, been as we have seen thus strongly against them, the high spirited principle, which we have already noticed as the one which honour dictates to Ministers of the Crown pointed out a resignation. If that were not the proper principle—if a ministry can ignore the rejection of their advice on important subjects, and wait till they are subjected almost to the physical ejection of a vote of non-confidence—they were no more obliged to resign upon this than upon the tonnage defeat, except indeed that in this case, it did not require any fresh proceeding like a motion to rescind to ascertain the feeling of the entire House, as there were few seats empty when the vote was taken. The only difference was that the demonstration of practical non-confidence was now cumulative and therefore perhaps stronger. The verbal assurances of confidence they still retained, and this was shown in a very marked manner; for Mr. Brown, claiming the vote as a ministerial defeat, immediately moved an adjournment, and proposed to consider its treatment by the House as an indication of confidence or no confidence. This being accepted by the Premier the numbers were found to be yeas 50, nays 61. The Macdonald-Cartier Cabinet, therefore, still had a majority of eleven to sustain them on the direct question of confidence; and the only reason for resignation arising out of the proceedings just detailed was that they had lost that control of Parliament which was necessary for their useful or honorable continuance in office.

RESIGNATION.

They resigned next day. In doing so they proved that, in their opinion, the Seat of Government question was of such importance that no ministry could give up its views upon it, even though the majority were against them; and at the same time that a ministry ought not to go on unless its policy on a question of this magnitude could command the support of the House.

A ministerial crisis is the occasion when the Sovereign, or, in the Colonies, the representative of the Sovereign, has her or his personal qualities called into play. In other circumstances, according to modern British practice, they act with the advice of ministers, and rarely without that of a full ministry. When a resignation takes place, the new arrangements depend, in the first instance at least, on their decision. The Governor-General, therefore, now came upon the stage. But he could not rightfully act as a partizan, and, therefore, if the resignation of the ministry was not a boná-fide one—an honest intention, for reasons which they thought sufficient, to give up the Government—he ought manifestly to have done nothing in furtherance of what would otherwise have been a mere trick, intended to embarrass their opponents, and so prepare for themselves a renewed and more easy term of office. The Governor's judgment, however, might—considering recent practice—have very reasonably been different from that of his resigned Cabinet as to the propriety of the resigaation. He might think that with a House freshfrom the people, still professing confidence in these gentlemen, they ought not to have retired on a particular vote of however great importance. This is not our judgment; but it was one that he might certainly have formed without any imputation on his good faith or ability. But, if it were so, his business clearly was to refuse to accept a resignation tendered on what he conceived insufficient grounds. He could not, of course, force Mr. Macdonald to retain his place; but he could have obtained from him the reconsideration of the propriety of resignation in the actual circumstances. If, after this reconsideration, Mr. Macdonald had still persisted, it would have been proof that he thought he could not or ought not to attempt to proceed farther with that Parliament. But as Sir Edmund Head, far from refusing to accept the resignation, accepted it at once, we must conclude that he held the circumstances to be such as made a resignation proper. He, therefore, sent for Mr. Brown. The position of affairs was, therefore, this, that Mr. Macdonald, supposing his resignation to be boná-fide, could not and would not attempt to go on; that Sir Edmund Head thought he ought not to attempt to go on; that some other ministers must, therefore, be tried; and if they failed, a new House must be called. For if Mr. Macdonald was to come back, at the first difficulty Mr. Brown had with a House, notoriously opposed to him, it was a farce and and an insult to send for Mr. Brown at all. It was a proof that Mr. Macdonald did not consider that anything had made it necessary for him to resign, since he was willing to resume office was a [illegible] circumstances still existing. It [illegible] tion was a mere party trick, to which the Governor ought not to have lent himself.

NEW MINISTRY APPOINTED.

The Governor-General, however, sent for Mr. Brown to form a ministry, and the latter gentleman accepted the duty, with which he was charged, "as the most prominent member of the of the Opposition." The acceptance was on Saturday, and the Ministry was virtually formed on that day. On Sunday, His Excellency sent the following letter.

HIS EXCELLENCY SIGNIFIES HIS WANT OF CONFIDENCE IN ADVANCE.

MEMORANDUM.

'Dated Government House,
Toronto, Aug. 1, 1858.

'His Excellency the Governor General wishes Mr. Brown to consider this memorandum, and to communicate it to the gentlemen whose names he proposes to submit to His Excellency as members of the new Government. The Governor General gives no pledge or promise, express or implied, with reference to dissolving Parliament. With the advice tendered to His Excellency on this subject, he will make up his mind according to the circumstances then existing and the reasons then laid before him. The Governor General has no objection to prorogue Parliament without the members of the new Administration taking their seats in the present session, but if he does so it ought, His Excellency thinks, to be on an express understanding that Parliament shall meet again as soon as possible, say in November or December. Until the new Ministers meet in Parliament His Excellency has no assurance that they possess the confidence of the majority of the House. The business transacted in the interval ought, in his opinion, to be confined to matters necessary for the ordinary administration of the Government of the Province. If Parliament is prorogued, His Excellency would think it very desirable that the bill for the registration of voters, and that concerning the prevention of fraudulent assignments and gifts by traders should be proceeded with and become law, subject of course to such modifications as the wisdom of either House may suggest. Besides this any item of supply absolutely necessary should be provided for by a vote of credit, and the money for repairs of the Canals, which cannot be postponed, should be voted. His Excellency can hardly prorogue Parliament until these necessary steps are taken. If Parliament merely adjourns until after the re-election of the members of the Government, the case is different, and the responsibility is on the House itself. A prorogation is the act of His Excellency, and in this particular case such an act would be performed without the advice of Miniters who had already received the confidence of Parliament. His Excellency's own opinion would be in favor of prorogation if the conditions above specified can be fulfilled, and Mr. Brown and his colleagues see no objection.

[Signed,]
'EDMUND HEAD.

'Government House,
Toronto, July 31st.'"

And on Monday morning Mr. Brown, on his own personal responsibility, and without consulting his proposed colleagues, replied:—

"CHURCH STREET,
"Monday Morning, 2nd August, 1858.

"Mr. Brown has to acknowledge the receipt of His Excellency the Governor General's note of last night, with accompanying memorandum. Before receiving His Excellency's note, Mr. Brown had successfully fulfilled the duty entrusted to him by the Governor General, and will be prepared at the appointed hour this morning to submit for His Exeellency's approval the names of the gentlemen whom he proposes to be associated with himself in the new Government. Mr. Brown respectfully submits, that until they have assumed the functions of constitutional advisers of the Crown, he and his colleagues will not be in a position to discuss the important measures and questions of public policy referred to in His Excellency's memorandum."

This letter of His Excellency can be regarded only as a notification in advance of the probability that he should dissent from the advice of the persons, whose advice he had asked, and as a special warning given to them not to rely upon the ordinary and common usage in such cases as the basis of their own determinations. No pledge or promise was asked from the Governor General, and, therefore, no warning that he would give none was necessary, unless he felt that the circumstances themselves implied an assent to the sole condition on which it was possible for Mr. Brown and his friends to perform the duties he had invited them to fulfil. Under the known circumstances it was the same thing as saying to them, "though I asked you to become my "Ministers, I never intended that you should "administer the Government. Take notice of "that, and don't subject yourselves to disap"pointment and ridicule." Mr. Brown's reply was the only one he could make. "He could "not advise His Excellency until he was a "Minister, and he was not a Minister till he was "sworn in. After that, of course, His Excellency "must do as he pleased."

THE NEW MINISTRY IN THE HOUSE.

The new Ministry were sworn in on Monday, and having thus vacated their seats, in Parliament the two Houses met in their absence, and without waiting for any opportunity for explanations of the ministerial policy, passed votes of non-confidence—in the Lower House by a majority of forty, out of one hundred and thirty, and in the Upper House by a majority of sixteen to eight.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S REFUSAL TO DISSOLVE.

The Ministry, of course, at once advised a dissolution, and resigned on a refusal. The propriety of their advice was obvious for Mr. Macdonald, the leader of the larger number of the members had declared that he would not go on with the House notwithstanding its protestations of confidence in him, while the other ministry could not proceed, because of a direct vote of non-confidence. Unless then, the Governor-General believed Mr. Macdonald's resignation a mere sham, he had no other course than dissolution, except, indeed, he tried some new minister first; and this was what he did.

MR. GALT SENT FOR AND FAILS.

He had sent for Mr. Brown because, in the words of his own note, that gentleman was "the most prominent member of the Opposition." Finding that the most prominent member of the second largest party could not go on, he, with admirable consistency, next sent for a gentleman, in a diametrically opposite position, and called to his councils a member without one political friend, on whom he could rely. If it were possible to believe that the sending for Mr. Brown, with a foregone conclusion not to dissolve, was serious, it is impossible to think that there was anything serious in sending for Mr. Galt. No one, then, could be surprised at seeing that proceeding turn out a mere step in the game, which was to bring back the old men.

THE MACDONALD-CARTIER MINISTRY ONCE MORE IN OFFICE.

Mr. Galt having declared his inability to obtain suitable associates in the Ministry, the old Cabinet returned; changing its name from Macdonald-Cartier to Cartier-Macdonald; rewarding Mr. Galt's services by making him one of themselves, vice Mr. Cayley; and bringing in Mr. Sherwood to replace Mr. Loranger. It did another very noticeable thing, which wat to declare, notwithstanding what its members had said of the law making it imperative to take the Seat of Government to Ottawa, that the policy of the fresh Government was to submit again to the House the decision of the Queen, and thus setting at naught that decision to do what they had repeatedly asserted would be an insult to Her Majesty.

THE SHUFFLE.

The first act of the new Ministry was worthy of all their antecedents. It was a shameful evasion of the law, which obliged them to reappear before their constituents, in virtue of another law framed for an entirely different purpose—it was a wanton profanation of the last sanction of religion—a quibbl ing with oaths, if not absolute perjury. In short, they swore themselves all into office, and had themselves solemnly gazetted to particular functions one evening; and the next morning they gazetted themselves to a new set of offices, having never fulfilled one of the duties which they had called God to witness they would discharge. While they were doing this, the Governor-General, who had lately been so anxious to warn other men on events not yet in question, and to give advice, instead of waiting to decide on advice tendered to him, stood by, and had not a word of warning to offer as to the effect on society of a flagrant and public disregard of the obligations of an oath by those in high places, nor one word of advice to give on the propriety of not breaking down ancient and substantive constitutional safeguards by pettifogging legal quibbling. In short, no one can see the conditions which he proposed to the Brown Cabinet [illegible] proved the "shuffle," which has obtained so universal a condemnation, that not even one hired party hack can be found to defend it.

THE SEQUEL.

The end of the session saw the old men back again in Parliament, with their opponents turned out and all requiring re-election. One of the latter lost his election in his old constituencies notoriously upon the local ground of non-residence but he has since attained a seat elsewhere. So that the constituencies have shewn no disposition to repeat the condemnation of Parliament. On the other hand, Mr. Kierskowski's election to the Legislaiive Council for the District of Montarville by a large majority in the the county of Verchéres; and the majority obtained in Kingston by the most decided opposition candidate, against the ministerial one, show what would probably have been the fate of the twin Premiers had they ventured upon the ordeal to which they subjected their opponents. In both these constituencies represented by the two Attornies General, there have been large anti-ministerial majorities in elections occurring since the crisis, and we are justified in saying that the existence of its present ministry, and even the seats of the principal members depended entirely upon their resort to a gross act of immorality, in defiance alike of therespect due to religion and to that principle of government by the people which is the foundation of our constitutional system.

MR. MCGEE AND HIS ASSAILANTS.—We like the tone of the following article in the last Toronto Freeman, and have pleasure in inviting the attention of our readers to the fair and candid spirit, in which its writer comments upon the mere partisan meanness and malice of Mr. Ex-Rebel Mackenzie's ambushed batteries. Mr. McGee is, no doubt, comparatively speaking, a stranger in Canada, excepting to those of Irish birth or descent. He has, in a great measure, his character as a Canadian politician and statesman yet to make, but he may rest assured that as the Freeman says, if he honorably and laboriously persever in the course he has commenced, the people and press of Canada will eventually do him ample justice. Our Toronto contemporary says:—

The Toronto Leader, since the close of the last Session of Parliament, has published on an average, three leading articles per week,—and most of them long ones—in endeavouring to combat the deserved popularity of the Irish member for Montreal. It is said, and we believe there is truth in the assertion [if not, we shall be happy to have an explicit denial of it,] that Mr. Wm. Lyon Mackenzie's pigeon holes have been put at the service of the Ministerial organist, in this laboured attempt to write down a new reputation in Canadian politics. If the report should prove true, it would not be the least curious passage in the history of the Sixth Parliament of the United Province, that the Canadian rebel of 1837 offered, underhandedly, his aid and assistance to the rump of the Orange and Tory factions in Upper Canada, to injure or impede the progress of the Irish rebel of 1848, who had once embarked in a similar enterprise to his own at a much earlier age, and with a far ampler apology for his youthful indiscretion.

It was the lot of Mr. D'Arcy McGee, to have become connected with the press at a very early age, 17 or 18 we believe. That connection continued for at least fourteen or fifteen years, during the greater part of which period he was publisher and proprietor, as well as editor. With this position he united in the United States, that of a lecturer, during the lecture season. We have reason to know that on all his papers, there was more than one writer, and that some of the things now quoted against him were neither written or seen by him, unless in print. This we say, not as exonerating him from any responsibility which is justly his own; nor as defending or sympathizing with any of the controversies, into which during fifteen years, he had at any time entered. With those we have nothing to do, and Mr. McGee, if he deem fit, is quite able to defend himseif; but we mention the facts, of which some years ago we had personal knowledge, as exhibiting the general folly and frivolity of such a mode of attack as is now being made by the Leader, with Mr. Mackenzie's ammunition, upon our iriend, Mr. McGee.

For, suppose Mr. McGee had a controversy with His Grace Archbishop Hughes of New York, immediately after the Young Ireland escapade, as to the matter, what has that to do with the Ministerial crisis in "this Canada" three months ago? Suppose at one or two-and-twenty Mr. McGee was a rebel in Ireland, does that make Sir Edmund Head's conduct constitutional in this colony, in these days? Mr. McGee, after sowing his political "wild oats,"—as most clever young men must do whether under monarchy or a republic, or under both,—came into Canada, at a mature age, with judgement steadied and enriched by years and experience; he came here to make his home,—and his fellow-citizens of Montreal soon sent him to Parliament as one of their representatives. What was his conduct in the House? Was it below or above the level of the Ministerialists whom he opposed, and whom the Leader serves? Did he raise or lower the tone of any debate he joined in? Did he ever forget what was due to the Assembly, to his electors, or to himself? And, lastly, was there one single man parted from with more general regret, at the close of the Session, by those who acted with him throughout, than T. D. McGee? We say fearlessly, as spectators of those closing scenes, that there has not been such a conquest of prejudice effected in this or any other country, of late days, as by that gentleman, in Toronto, and in the Provincial Parliament during the late Session.

It is all in vain for the Ministry and Mr. Mackenzie (if it be Mr. Mackenzie) to ply scissors and paste-pot, press and printers' ink, to damage a man who has done so much for the completion of the noblest work which can be attempted in Canada,—the re-organization of the Reform party. Mr. McGee has but to go on laboriously and honorably as he has begun, and the people and press of Canada, who are neither in the pay or in the debt of the Cartier-Macdonald shuffle, will do him ample justice bye and bye. Our life for it they will.

AN HOUR AMONG LAW BOOKS.—We have just returned from a visit to the extensive and valuable Law Library, to be sold, this week, by Messrs. Graham & Shaw. The first idea that occurred to us in looking over these ponderous volumes, and the thousand little paper marks, stuck here and there through the leaves, was the immense amount of labour and study entailed on the legal profession, and how lightly we sometimes think of the opinion which has cost the judge or the lawyer many a sleepless hour in searching for authorities and precedents.

The French books are all arranged by themselves, and will be sold first. Among them are many valuable works, some of which are now out of print, and in France would command a high price. Among the more modern are "Myron's Causes Célébres," 12 vols.; "Dalloz Dictionnaire;" "Dranton's Droit Français," 22 vols.; "Toullier's Droit Civil Français," 15 vols.; and "Duvergier's Continuation de Toullier," 6 vols.; also Troplong's Works, in 22 vols—names which stand as high in the history of French jurisprudence as those of Coke, Selden, Blackstone, Story and Chitty do in English.

Among the very valuable books on English law, there was one that particularly interested us. It was "Hargrave's State Trials, a complete Collection of State Trials and Proceedings for High Treason, commencing with the 11th year of the reign of Richard II., and ending with the 16th year of the reign of George III.," 11 vols. folio; London, 1776. How much of England's history is contained in these volumes; how deeply have they been studied by the historians Robertson, Hume Macaulay, Lingard, Carlyle, and others. These are the trials of those splendid criminals whose names will go down to the latest period of history, and posterity, even yet, have not agreed upon a verdict whether guilty or not.

There is the lovely and once fascinating Anne Boleyn, who, probably, coveted the husband of another, now degraded to the dust. Here is recorded the mock trial of the gifted and unfortunate Mary of Scotland; the learned and pious Lady Jane Grey; the noble and gallant Essex, in which the man he once befriended and raised from poverty used all the energies of his giant intellect against his former friend and patron. No doubt it was this ingratitude of the great philosopher, more than his corruption, that gave rise to the bitter line of Pope,

"The wisest, greatest, meanest of mankind."

A few years after, and the great man himself is put on his trial, and how little do we know of his feelings when his lofty soul is humbled by the confession, "That, upon advised consideration of the charges laid against him, and descending into his conscience, he plainly and ingenuously confesses that he is guilty of corruption, renounces all defence, and places himself upon the grace and mercy of his judges." Here, too, is the trial and defence of the amiable and learned Sir Walter Raleigh. And here is recorded, with all the minutiæ of detail, the trials of King Charles, the first, James Stewart, and John Hampden. Here, too, are recorded the trials for high treason of Archbishop Laud, Viscount Strafford, Lord William Russell, and, last of all, of John Wilkes.

Such a book, and such scenes, will never be recorded again. The circumstances which have rendered these names so illustrious will probably never occur in any country of the world again. In England it is impossible. The book is very valuable. Some years ago, an edition of it, with the continuations, was published at £68 Stg.

Catalogues have been extensively circulated; and we understand the auctioneers have several orders to purchase from eminent men in the United States and various parts of Canada.—Communicated.

CONSECRATION.—The new German church situated at the corner of St. Dominick and St. Catherine Streets, was opened for public worship on Sunday. The services in the forenoon were conducted in the German language. In the afternoon Dr. Wilkes preached from the 84th Psalm, first and tenth verses. "How amiable are Thy tabernacles O Lord of Hosts." "For a day in Thy Courts is better than a thousand." The rev. gentleman proceeded to dilate upon the social, domestic, and spiritual advantages of the Sanctuary. Unless places of Christian worship were encouraged to spring into existence—unless the Christian religion was fostered by these means, society would begin rapidly to degenerate, and all that it cherished would be swept away. Acts of Parliament, supposed to be framed for the advantage of the country, would be so much waste paper, if the moral support of the community were wanting; this moral support sprang from the doctrines and principles of the Sanctuary. Without the influence of the Sanctuary, the jury law, recognized as the palladium of our liberties, would never be conscientiously carried into force; the great moral principles which enabled a jury to decide between right and wrong, were kept alive by the influence of the Sanctuary. The sacred observance of the Sabbath was owing to the existence of the Sanctuary. The domestic welfare of a community—conjugal affection—filial obligations—parental control—in short, everything that contributed to the temporal or eternal happiness of man, could be traced to the workings, the precepts and the purity of the Sanctuary. The reverend gentleman concluded his discourse in the following words:—In this Sanctuary may God's name be honored; here may His worship be ever observed with profound reverence and delight. Here may souls be born into His kingdom, and built up in the most holy faith. Here may families be gathered together for worship, and here may they and their children's children serve the Lord.—After the sermon was finished, a collection was taken up in aid of the funds of the building. We have already described the appearance of the church; now it will suffice to say that it is a substantial edifice, built of stone, and capable of accommodating a considerable number of worshippers. Outside and inside the church is primitive and plain; the only attempt at ornamentation being the cornices, which have a pleasing effect. The walls remain without wainscoating; and no galleries have been erected. Opposite the pulpit, however, and right above the door-way, is a little gallery constructed for the choir. The situation seems to be well chosen, for the congregation below can hear, in all their plaintiveness and sweetness, the psalm melodies of the Vaterland.

ARMY.—We observe by the London Gazette, of the 15th ultimo, that J. Denham Molson, Esq., of the 99th Regiment [son of the Hon. Jno. Molson], has been promoted to a captaincy in that Regiment. The gallant Captain is now now on his way to India with his regiment.

SUICIDE.—On Friday last, a farmer named Magennis committed suicide by swallowing poison at Laprairie. He was a man in comfortable circumstances, and no motive for the act could be ascertained. An inquest was held the same day, and a verdict rendered in accordance with the facts.

LORD NELSON'S MONUMENT.

SIR,—We, Quebecers, have become accustomed to being touched up for apath slow coachism, &c., that we now hardly fee confident enough to deny the soft impeachm t, and frequently quote your progressive cit as an example to ourselves. Happening a ew days ago, however, to pass the head of Ja ues Cartier Place I noticed that Lord Nels Monument was in a state of dilapidation t would have made a Quebecer blush if it ha stood in our slow-going city. You will use me, therefore, if I make three suggestion for your consideration. Either repair th immortal sailors' monument yourselves; or, t it down and ship it to us, and we will give i place of honour beside Wolfe's and Montcal or, thirdly, take Nelson down as out of d , put up Jacques Cartier in his place, and y will find plenty of funds for renewing the m ment.

THE CONCERT THIS EVENING would remind our musical readers— especially those among them, who, havi ections to theatrical performances, ma yet have heard Mr. Cooper's admirable any, of the Concert, this evening, in the hic's Hall. A glance at the programme o usic to be performed on the occasion—th s of Haydn's sublime "Creation," with a selection of vocal and instrumental r as could scarcely be improved,— b h highly gifted and accomplished artists surely secure a large and appreciative nce. We may add that the promised solos r. Cooper himself, is, to our mind, by no r the least attractive of the evening's ente ent. We anticipate a rare musical feast.

FURTHER BY THE INDIAN.

Defensive works, of a very formidable nature, had been completed at Fort Matilda, on the Clyde.

A letter from Valentia says the shore end of the Cable was about to be landed, and that all the staff at Valentia had got notice to leave the Company on the 30th November, unless something favorable turns up.

Parliament had been further prorogued till the 18th November.

The French officer who threatened to shoot the Newcastle editor, for libelling his father, was fined £5.

The London money market continued very easy; 2½ minimum rate of discount.

The Atlantic Telegraph shares quoted at £300@£330.

The Daily News city article says funds opened flatly on Tuesday, and during the greater part of the day a reduction of ⅛ was quoted. At the close there was more firmness, at fully Monday's rates.

£98,000 in gold had been sent to the Bank during the day.

Gold remittances were being made to the Continent, owing to the less satisfactory state of exchange.

The discount market remained easy.

The Times' city article says that on exchange money was 1@1½ per cent., and in open market the geneaal minimum was 2 per cent.

RUSSIA.

The disturbances in the Eastern Provinces were said to be more serious than represented, and in the Southern Provinces the insurrection of the peasants assumed a serious character.

The Times complains that the part played by Mr. Reed, American commissioner to China, was unworthy of his country. When the English and French were demanding natural rights for all mankind, Reed begged a treaty for himself and his nation. That treaty contains no provision for free transit through the country; no new ports; nor any provision for an amended tariff.

FRANCE.

A difficulty has arisen between France and Brazil in regard to the property of the French subjects there. The French Consul at Pernambuco, struck his flag and appealed to his Government.

The French Ambassador at Rome had, by the direction of the Emperor, made strong representation to the Pope against the recent abduction by Catholics of the Jewish Child Mortara.

The Paris flour market is firmer.

The Royal decree enacts that all steamers plying regularly between Cuban ports, and ports of the United States or North America, are to enjoy the same privileges as English Mail steamers, with liberty to carry six tons of merchandize without paying Light-House Dues for them.

PORTUGAL.

Two French men-of-war remained at Lisbon.

Two British vessels also arrived in Tagus.

HANOVER.

In consequence of urgent representations of the British Government, with reference to the abolition of Stadt Dues, Hanover decided to send an agent to London with full powers to negociate the affair.

PRUSSIA.

It is said that the Prince Regent has decided on proclaiming political amnesty to all persons compromised since the events of forty-eight.

AUSTRIA.

Reports are current that Count Buol had resigned the ministry of foreign affairs, and would be succeeded by Baron Bach, present minister of the interior.

RUSSIA.

The gigantic frauds against the Russian Government monopolized public attention. The Government had paid 12,000,000 roubles of an overcharge for constructing the St. Petersburg and Moscow Railroad, the contractors having charged for a much longer line than was really laid down. The rolling stock was furnished by an American Company, according to distance, and includes a fearful overcharge on this head also. Many influential persons are compromised. It is expected the matter will be hushed up.

Tremenduous fires are reported to have occurred at Orel. Five hundred houses were destroyed.

A Moscow telegram, from Algiers, (?) says—That the reported assassination of two European Vice-Consuls is believed to be pure fiction. On the other hand, the Paris journals say that the massacre is confirmed, one being certainly a French Vice-Consul, and that it is doubtful whether the other is English or Spanish.

An insurrection is reported to have occurred at Levay, a Bosnian Town of importance on the Servian frontier.

BOGLE'S AMERICAN ELECTRIC HAIR DYE

Is as superior to all others as the meridian sun to a candle. All imitate BOGLE, even to his style of advertising, which for years has been headed

BEST HAIR DYE IN THE WORLD

Now others, without brains, steal and copy this. Their dyes are as miserable as their invention is contemptible. Avoid them all, and, to their dismay, pronounced the ONLY Hair Dye to be used with safety. No green tints, no smell, no skin staining, no humbug, but reliable, safe and sure. For sale and applied at BOGLE'S BAZAAR, 202 Washington street, and sold by Druggists everywhere.

THE Great Beautifier
so long unsuccessfully sought,
FOUND AT LAST.

FOR IT RESTORES PERMANENTLY GRAY HAIR to its original color; covers luxuriantly the bald head; removes all dandruff, itching and all scrofula, scald head and all eruptions; makes the hair soft, healthy, and glossy; and will preserve it to any imaginable age, removes, as if by magic, all blotches, &c., from the face, and cures all neuralgia and nervous head ache. See circular and the following.

Dover, N. H., Feb. 2d, 1857.

PROF. O. J. WOOD & CO.—Gents: Within a few days we have received so many orders and calls for Prof. O. J. Wood's Hair Restorative, that to day were compelled to send to Boston for a quantity, [the six dozen you forwarded all being sold,] while we might order a quantity from you. Every bottle we have sold seems to have produced three or four new customers, and the approbation, and patronage it receives from the most substantial and worthy citizens of our vicinity, fully convince us that it is A MOST VALUABLE PREPARATION.

Send us as soon as may be one gross of $1 size; and one dozen $2 size; and believe us yours very respectfully,

[Signed] DANIEL LATHORP & CO.

Hickory Grove, St. Charles Co., Mo., Nov. 19, 1856.

PROF. O. J. WOOD—Dear Sir: Some time last summer we were induced to use some of your Hair Restorative, and its effects were so wonderful, we feel it our duty to you and the the afflicted, to report it.

Our little son's head for some time had been perfectly covered with sores, and some called it scald head. The hair almost entirely came off in consequence, when a friend, seeing his sufferings, advised us to use your Restorative; we did so with little hope of success, but, to our surprise, and that of all our friends, a very few applications removed the disease entirely, and a new and luxuriant crop of hair soon started out, and we can now say that our boy has as healthy a scalp, and as luxuriant a crop of hair as any other child. We can, therefore, and do hereby recommend your Restorative, as a perfect remedy for all diseases of the scalp and hair.

We are, yours respectfully,
GEORGE W. HIGGINBOTHAM,
SARAH A. HIGGINBOTHAM.

Gardiner, Maine, June 22, 1855.

PROF. O. J. WOOD—Dear Sir: I have used two bottles of Professor Wood's Hair Restorative, and can truly say it is the greatest discovery of the age for restoring and changing the Hair. Before using it I was a man of of seventy. My hair has now attained its original color. You can recommend it to the world without the least fear, as my case was one of the worst kind.

Yours Respectfully,
DANIEL N. MURPHY.

O J. WOOD & CO., Proprietors, 312 Broadway, N. Y., (in the great N.Y. Wire Railing Establishment) and 114 Market street, St. Louis, Mo.

We believe it the best and surest remedy in the world, in all cases of Dysentery and Diarrhœa in children, whether it arises from teething or from any other cause.

Millions of bottles are sold every year in the United States. It is an old and well-tried remedy.

THE LIVER
INVIGORATOR!
PREPARED BY DR. SANFORD,
Compounded entirely from GUMS,

IS ONE OF THE BEST PURGATIVE AND LIVER MEDICINES now before the public, that acts as a CATHARTIC, easier, milder and more effectual than any other medicine known. It is not only a CATHARTIC, but a LIVER remedy, acting first on the LIVER to eject its morbid matter, then on the stomach and bowels to carry off that matter, thus accomplishing two purposes effectually, without any of the painful feelings experienced in the operations of most Cathartics. It strengthens the system at the same time that it purges it; and when taken daily in moderate doses, will strengthen a d build it up with unusual rapidity.

SANFORD'S LIVER INVIGORATOR.

The Liver is one of the principal regulators of the human body; and when it performs its functions well the powers of the system are fully developed. The STOMACH is almost entirely dependent on the healthy action of the LIVER for the proper performance of its functions; when the stomach is at fault, the bowels are at fault, and the whole system suffers in consequence of one organ—the Liver—having ceased to do its duty. For the diseases of that organ, one of the proprietors has made it his study, in a practice of more than twenty years, to find some remedy wherewith to counteract the many derangements to which it is liable.

To prove that this remedy is at last found, any person troubled with Liver Complaint, in any of its forms, has but to try a bottle, and conviction is certain.

These Gums remove all morbid or bad matter from the system, supplying in their place a healthy flow of bile, invigorating the stomach, causing food to digest well, purifying the blood, giving tone and health to the whole machinery, removing the cause of the disease—effecting a radical cure.

Bilious attacks are cured, and, what is better, prevented, by the occasional use of the Liver Invigorator.

One dose after eating is sufficient to relieve the stomach and prevent the food from rising and souring.

Only one dose taken before retiring, prevents Nightmare.

Only one dose taken at night, loosens the bowels gently, and cures Costiveness.

One dose taken after each meal will cure Dyspepsia.

☞ One dose of two teaspoonfuls will always relieve Sick Headache.

One bottle taken for female obstruction, removes the cause of the disease and makes a perfect cure.

Only one dose immediately relieves Cholic, while

One dose often repeated is a sure cure for Cholera Morbus, and a preventive of Cholera.

☞ Only one bottle is needed to throw out of the system the effects of medicine after a long sickness.

☞ One bottle taken for Jaundice removes all sallowness or unnatural color from the skin.

One dose taken a short time before eating gives vigor to the appetite, and makes food digest well.

One dose often repeated cures Chronic Diarrhœa in its worst forms, while Summer and Bowel complaints yield almost to the first dose.

One or two doses cures attacks caused by Worms in Children; there is no surer, safer, or speedier remedy in the world, as it NEVER FAILS.

☞ A few bottles cures Dropsy, by exciting the absorbents.

We take pleasure in recommending this medicine as a preventive for Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, and all Fevers of a Bilious Type. It operates with certainty, and thousands are willing to testify to its wonderful virtues.

All who use it are giving their unanimous testimony in its favor.

☞ Mix Water in the Mouth with the Invigorator, and swallow both together.

THE LIVER INVIGORATOR

IS A SCIENTIFIC MEDICAL DISCOVERY, and is daily working cures, almost too great to believe. It cures as if by magic. EVEN THE FIRST DOSE GIVING BENEFIT, and seldom more than one bottle is required to cure any kind of Liver Complaint, from the worst JAUNDICE or DYSPEPSIA to a common HEADACHE, all of which are the result of a Diseased Liver.

PRICE ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.

THE OLD VERMONT COUGH REMEDY FOREVE!!

N. H. Downs's Vegetable Balsamic Elixir.

WE WOULD SAY TO THE PEOPLE THAT THIS Medicine has been sold throughout New England for upwards of thirty years, and has always been warranted to give entire satisfaction, and we have yet to learn of the first case where the people were dissatisfied, or where they wanted their money back. We still warrent it, and if any person, after using it, wants his money returned, he has only to notify the agents or proprietors and it will be refunded at once. What more can we say? Do you want a large almanac filled with certificates that nobody believes? If you want anything more than this, ask some of your neighbours that have used the article, and if they tell you that it is the best medicine for COUGHS COLDS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, and all diseases of the THROAT, CHEST and LUNGS, and all diseases tending to CONSUMPTION, buy it; and if you like it, please in turn tell your acquaintances to use it; and remember this fact, tha when you find a medicine that does all that the proprietors say it will, then always use it when necessary, and never change it for a new article that may be worthless.

If you wish to try N. H. DOWNS'S ELIXIR, and it is not kept in your town, ask your merchant or druggist to order a small supply of my Agents, J. M. HENRY & SONS, WTERBURY, VT., or of M. S. BURR & CO., No. 1 Cornhill, Boston, Mass., or of C. W. ATWELL, Portland, Maine, or of LYMANS, SAVAGE & CO., Montreal, Canada or of BARNES & PARK, 13 Park Row, New York City, or of most any Wholesale Druggist in New England, New York or Canada. They will furnish circulars if you orde them.

The Price of this article is 50 cents and $1 per bottle, and for Trial Bottles 25 cents.

The trial bottle we have not put up until within a few months. We do it now that all may give it a trial at the least possible expense.

There is a little counterfeit Elixir in the market, made by Jasper Curtis, of St. Albans, Vt., but it is not signed with pen N. H. Downs, but is signed, with red ink, J. Curtis. This is a base counterfeit, and can easily be detected as above, and from the fact that it sells and is marked 37½ and 75 cents per bottle. Of course said Curtis dare not sign it with pen N. H. Downs, as that would be forgery.

BEWARE OF JASPER CURTIS'S COUNTERFEIT.

Remember the genuine is warrented, and is signed with pen, with my name.

N. H. DOWNS.

AS this Company was ESPECIALLY established for the transaction of Life Assurance Business in British North America and the other Colonies, and their attention being wholly devoted to that class of business, they are enabled to hold out great advantages to assurers. They would direct particular attention to the large bonus declared in 1854; as an example, a policy taken out in 1847, for £1,000, was increased to £1,160, and if the next Division in 1859 is on a like scale, the same policy will be of the value of £1,260, although the party only pays the original premium.

The income now exceeds £90,000 Sterling, and the Accumulated Fund to £258,000.

The Colonial has already paid to the heirs of parties deceased, assured in Canada the sum of £30,000 Currency.

Funds invested partly in England and the Colonies.

This Company also grant Assurances on the following plan:—Half of the annual premium need only be paid for the first seven years, with interest, the remaining half being charged as a debt on the policy, [without security] to be deducted at settlement of the claim, or sooner if convenient.

Prospectuses and every information as to completing Assurances will be given at the Company's Office, or at any of the Agencies.

LIFE ASSOCIATION OF SCOTLAND
NINETEENTH REPORT.

THE 19th ANNUAL MEETING of the ASSOCIATION was held within the HEAD OFFICE, Edinburgh, on the 3d August current, in terms of the Charter and Act of Parliament—SIR JAMES FORREST, BART., of COMISTON, in the Chair.

There were submitted to the Meeting the ANNUAL REPORT by the DIRECTORS on the Progress of the Business; the REPORT of the AUDITOR, MR. W. WOOD, Accountant; and the BALANCE SHEET of the ACCOUNTS, certified in terms of the Act of Parliament; with other statements of the Affairs, as at 5th April last, the date of balance.

Notwithstanding the general depression of commercial affairs, the Progress of the Association during the past year has been greater than in any former year, with only one exception.

The APPLICATIONS for NEW LIFE ASSURANCES during the year were.........1247 for £666,483 stg.
Of which the Directors accepted..........1006 for £550,244 stg.
The ANNUAL PREMIUMS being.................£18,811 stg.

ANNUITIES on 24 lives were purchased for................£875 19s. stg.
per annum, at the price of...£9487 7s. stg.

The POLICIES that became claims on the Association by deaths during the year amounted to 85 for £43,065 stg.

The TOTAL ASSURANCES since the commencement of the business amounted to nearly FIVE MILLION POUNDS Sterling.

The ANNUAL INCOME is now ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-EIGHT THOUSAND POUNDS Sterling.

The POLICY HOLDERS entitled to participate in the Profits, who completed their fifth year before the date of balance, will be entitled to a REDUCTION of 35 PER CENT. (7s per £1) from their next Annual Premiums.

From the increasing wealth and importance of British North America, as well as the example of other Assurance Offices, the Directors aave for some time entertained the idea of hstablishing Branches there. They have been enabled since last meeting to accomplish this. A deputation from the Directors visited the chief towns, and secured the co-operation of influential gentlemen in each Province. Although the branches have been in operation only for a few months, the transactions have already been considerable, as well as of a most satisfactory description. Special thanks are due to the gentlemen acting as Directors, Medical Officers, and Agents there, who have already interested themselves much in the Association's affairs, and through whose exertions there is every prospect of permanent success.

The REPORT by the Board of Directors was unanimously approved. The Vacancies in the Board were then filled up; and after special votes of thanks to the Directors at the Head Office and Branches, and the Agents, Medical Officers, Managers, &c., the meeting separated.
