Over 100 Race Horses on Grounds, Hoaglan's Hippodrome Co. Pleasing Grandstand Audiences

RACE TRACK IN PERFECT CONDITION

39 Railway Cars Required To Transport The Boyd & Linderman Midway That Is Being Staged In Valleyfield

The Valleyfield Exhibition which is now going on is being carried out on a large scale. This exhibition is reckoned by many as a race horse show and midway but the directors have been successful for the 1925 show to make it of interest to the Dairy Farmer. The livestock exhibit is very large, there being over three hundred and fifty head of cattle; a large exhibit of heavy horses both from the District of Beatharnois and from as far West as Saskatchewan. The Sheep and Swine exhibits are well up to previous years.

The judging of the cattle took place yesterday and in the morning the awards were made on a few of the Ayrshire classes. In the Senior Yearling class Ravensdale Cockade, owned by D. T. Ness of Howick captured the blue ribbon, whilst Burnside Sir Robert, owned by R. R. Ness & Sons, came second. In the Aged Bull class, Burnside Prim Guide of D. T. Ness came first, McDonald Competitor, owned by R. R. Ness came second, and Balsam Lodge Flashlight, belonging to J. P. Cavers, came third. In the senior calf class, R. R. Ness & Sons captured both the first and second prize ribbons. The three chief Ayrshire exhibitors are Messrs. R. R. Ness & Sons, D. T. Ness and J. P. Cavers. The Holsteins had not been judged at the time the Gleaner representative was present, but we learned that Black and Whites were well represented from the herds of Messrs. Donat Raymond of Vaudreuil, P. J. Salley of Lachine, Dickie Bros. of Truro, N.S. and Bouck & Son of St. Etienne.

Jersey cattle do not hold a high position in this dairy district but they are well represented at this District Exhibition with Messrs. J. A. Sample & Son, of Truro, N.S., and H. J. Snaden of Danville, both having large herds. Another unpopular breed in this district is the Canadian Cattle but here again four herds are exhibited and two herds of Shortorns, and one of Aberdeen Angus. With such a large number of herds of cattle one can readily understand why the Valleyfield Exhibition is going to establish a reputation as a livestock show as well as for amusements.

Heavy Horses in Large Numbers

Whilst the exhibit of cattle is very large, the heavy horse classes are keeping pace and much of this credit is due to Mr. C. M. Rear of Kincaid, Sask. and Cordova, Man. who brought a carload of twelve stallions, which are stimulating the competition which otherwise would have been left to Messrs. A. J. Ness, D. A. McCormick, Chas. Turner, P. Brault and Dr. Reid. Messrs. Reid, Ness and McCormick purpose attending a number of the Eastern Circuit Shows this fall.

The Sheep and Swine Exhibit

This department of the livestock exhibit does not show any particular marked changes over previous years. The exhibitors being numerous assures large classes.

The poultry house is well filled with the utility type of birds. The show birds which are rare and of little commercial value have had to give place to the popular breeds which are well represented. Dr. Watson of Howick having around one hundred and fifty birds. Dr. Watson purposes making the fall circuit with his flock of hens. The other two chief exhibitors from this community are Mr. John Graham and Thos. McGill.

In the show building it to be seen an interesting demonstration booth of the Department of Agriculture where the advantages of egg grading and testing are being demonstrated. Needless to say the women are inspecting the booth in greater numbers than the men, for on many farms this profitable branch of farming is left to the women folk.

The vegetable and apple exhibits are displayed in this same building but the season tells the story, the roots are perfect whilst the apples are inferior and few in numbers. The Honey exhibit is very large as is also the entry of preserves and canned goods. The needle and art work as usual occupy the whole of the top floor.

100 Race Horses at Show

The Valleyfield Exhibition has established a reputation as being able to stage a lot of good races and in this the people will not be disappointed, providing the weather man permits the races being run off as scheduled. Over one hundred horses are on the grounds and with the track in perfect condition the directors hope to please the public and have a large attendance this afternoon. Before the grandstand on each afternoon and evening an excellent programme is being given by Hoaglan's Hippodrome Co. of Middle West, Indiana. This Company consisting of 15 people, 15 horses, 3 mules, 3 autos and all other regalia will stage many amusing events such as a bucking mule, push ball on horse back, high school horses, auto stunts, Mule Derby to be driven by Messrs. Boyd and Lynderman on one day and by the Mayor and Chief of Police of Valleyfield to-day; the Roman Standing Race and many other thrilling feature events.

39 Cars of Midway

The Boyd and Lynderman Midway from Virginia is without a doubt the largest that ever struck Valleyfield, there being 39 large railway cars loaded to full capacity. They have seven rides of one kind and another and possibly a dozen shows, and altogether have about fifty concessions. This Midway is to be at Ottawa next week.

SAY BACHELORS DIE SOONER THAN MARRIED MALES

Insurance Experts Are Unable to Determine Reason for Difference

New York, Aug. 1.—Do married men live longer than bachelors or does it only seem longer and if they do live longer is the fact explained by the superior well being of the marriage state?

Upon these questions the great insurance companies of New York have scores of experts working but so far no conclusion has been reached.

Theologians, philosophers, physicians and statisticians have long maintained those who were married lived longer than those who were not and many a serious moral has been pointed thereat, beginning with the biblical authority, "It is not good for man to live alone."

But insurance companies base their expectations of life tables upon cold facts and are not given to philosophizing. Though as a matter of fact they prefer to insure married men which is in itself a definite approval of marriage from the business point of view, they are at the same time anxiously struggling to determine all the facts in the case.

One factor making the collection of adequate data most difficult is the fact the individuals being studied are so prone to change from the single to the married state and vice versa. How rate a man who marries at 30 and is divorced at 32? Should his length of life be averaged with the married men or the bachelors?

Herbert Spencer, the great philosopher, was confident that the apparent longevity of the married was not at all due to their being married. He said the physically and mentally strong were more apt to marry than weaklings and therefore naturally lived longer and that there was no evidence marriage added to the length of their lives.

GOLDEN WEDDING

Mr. and Mrs. Honore MacSween of St. Anicet celebrated their Golden Wedding anniversary on Saturday, August 16th, Saturday morning marked the 50th year since they had been joined in the bonds of matrimony. The service in the church was officiated by the parish priest, Rev. Father Reid. In the afternoon a large number of relatives and friends including their children, grandchildren and great grandchildren assembled to congratulate them on this anniversary. Mr. and Mrs. MacSween are still hale and hearty and appear much younger than they are. They were the recipients of many beautiful presents. To them we extend our sincere congratulations and hope that they may live to celebrate their Diamond Wedding anniversary of married life.

WAR CANOE CREW STRUCK YACHT DURING RACE

Thousands Witness Regatta On Saturday

IDEAL WEATHER

Men's War Canoe Trophy Won By Grand Trunk

ST. Johns Wins The J. E. C. Bumbay Trophy

Saturday afternoon was a gala one in our town, it being the Annual Regatta of the Chateaugay Boat Club. The weather was ideal and the water as smooth as glass. Soon after one p.m. the visitors began to arrive by autos, boats and trains and by 3 p.m. the R.R. bridge and the river front from R. Jack and Sons on one side, and W. S. Richardson's on the other side down to below the bridge were lined with spectators. The greatest enthusiasm, centered around the Ladies and Men's war canoe races. In the ladies' 1/4 mile straightaway race, St. John's came first, winning the Trophy given by J. E. C. Bumbay, Chateaugay, followed 3 feet behind and Lachine third. In the men's 1/2 mile straightaway, 6 canoes started and presented a fine picture as they paddled away. The Chateaugay crew were leading but as they were going under one of the arches of the bridge, they struck a motor boat, hurting some of the boys. Although badly bruised, no bones were broken and they became unable to finish the race. Grand Trunk came first. The clerks of the course seemed to have difficulty all afternoon, keeping the course clear. If people would be good sportsmen at a time like this, and leave the course free for the races, how pleasant it would be. The trophies were presented in the evening at the boat house, followed by a dance.

At an adjourned congregational meeting held on Aug. 17th, in St. Andrew's Church with Rev. J. U. Tanager, Moderator, in the chair, it was the decision of the members and adherents to invite Rev. W. T. Pritche, B.A., formerly of Copper Cliff, Ont., to become their pastor.

LORD ATHOLSTAN HON. PATRON

Board of Trade Will Clear $2000 From Centenary Celebration

At the meeting of the Board of Trade on Tuesday evening the acting secretary-treasurer submitted his report regarding the finances of the centenary. The report showed the net cash and other assets that would shortly be turned into cash will total approximately $2000. The expenditure amounted to over $3800.

As Lord Atholstan has contributed in many ways towards making the Centenary a success it was thought only just and proper that he made an Hon. Patron of the Board of Trade, which was done with the approval of all.

Upon a further motion it was decided to extend a letter of thanks to the men who are at present non-members of the Board of Trade and who gave assistance during the centenary, and when thanking them for their services to send them a membership card for the balance of the year 1925.

HUNTINGDON TOWN

Mrs. Geo. Monteith sang at both services at St. Andrew's Church last Sunday. In the morning the selection was "Fear Ye not, O Israel," and in the evening "The Holy City." Mrs. Monteith is the possessor of an exceptionally splendid voice and by special request she will sing "The Holy City" again at St. Andrew's on Sunday morning next. At the evening service she will sing other selections. Mrs. Monteith (under the professional name of Madame Louise de Monterey) is the Soprano Teacher of Singing in the Hamburg Conservatory of Music, Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Merrick, Sr., Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Merrick, Jr., and daughter Helen motored from Troy, N.Y. to spend a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Carr.

The Value of Good Roads

In 1919 an investigation was started to ascertain the value of good roads in Canada, and the annual reports show that a steady improvement has been noted.

Table with 5 columns: Average haul, Average load in wagon, Average load in truck, Average cost per ton-mile in wagon, Average cost per ton-mile in truck. Rows include Unimproved Earth, Improved Earth, Poor Gravel, Good Gravel, Waterbound Macadam, Macadam and Inferior, Bituminous Macadam, Cement Concrete, and Average for all types.

In some respects this summary is a little misleading, for all nine provinces are included, and the average cost in provinces such as British Columbia are necessarily higher than in the older settled sections of Ontario or Quebec.

Table with 5 columns: Average haul, Load, Cost per mile. Sub-columns: in miles, Horses, Truck, Horses, Truck. Rows include Unimproved earth, Improved earth, Poor gravel, Good gravel, Bituminous macadam, Waterbound, and Poor.

From this table it is easily seen where the larger direct return is made to the farmer. The good macadam road, which costing more money in taxes to build, brings down the cost of hauling stuff to the market, and as the use of trucks increases among groups of farmers, further reductions should accrue.

It is not possible to ascertain exactly what proportion of the field crops of Canada are moved by road to rail or market; for most of them, oats, barley, mixed grains, potatoes, etc., the largest proportion is consumed upon the farms but in the case of wheat, practically all of which is marketed, the average annual production for the five-year period 1919 to 1923 was 326,258,640 bushels, representing at 60 lbs per bushel, a total annual tonnage of, say, 9,788,000. Multiplying this weight by 8.5 miles as the average length of haul shown in Table 1, we get an average annual ton mileage of 83,196,000.

The argument is sound, but in order that the farmers of Eastern Canada may take the full advantage of the millions that have been spent in making roads the roads must be kept in first-class condition, and the farmers must have loads which will justify the use of trucks to get them to markets.

Is A New Issue Arising?

For the past sixty years the tariff has played a dominant part in Canadian politics but there are signs that another is cropping up in the shape of export taxes. To some extent this was demonstrated in the New Brunswick elections which resulted in the Veniot government being defeated and replaced by Mr. Baxter and his followers.

The Grasp of Power

The other day the newspapers carried two items of news, side by side which supplied an interesting contrast. One told of the collapse of the vast industrial machine of the late Hugo Stinnes—the uncrowned king of Germany.

Stinnes was a remarkable man, but there was no one to take his place once he was trod under foot, and his vast possessions have been scattered back into the hands of many.

DEWITTVILLE

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard W. Lucas of Valleyfield and Mr. and Mrs. Keene of London, Ont. are visiting for a while with Mrs. Lucas, Sr.

Mr. and Mrs. Austin Kelly and family of Lost Nation were Sunday visitors with Mrs. L. C. McArthur.

Mr. Gordon Rodger spent the week end the guest of his grandmother Mrs. A. Rodger.

Mr. Wm. Seery of Pierrefield, N.Y. visited for a few days recently at the home of his brother-in-law, Mr. James Castell, Jr.

Mr. and Mrs. G. Lindsay had their baby christened on Sunday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Lindsay's mother, Mrs. Hamilton Ferns, by Rev. Dr. Maclean.

In addition to those whose names were mentioned last week, several others from this locality went on the Harvesters' Excursion last week.

Miss Mary Van Vliet is spending a week with Miss Edith Ritchie at Ste. Anne de Bellevue.

Miss Elizabeth Van Vliet entertained a few friends from Huntingdon on Wednesday evening, the occasion being her seventeenth birthday.

Much sympathy is felt for Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Quimet on account of the death on Tuesday morning of their only child, a baby about a year old.

Mrs. Idage Heimault is quite ill. About a week ago she suffered a slight paralytic stroke, and, although gaining somewhat in strength, she is still confined to bed, and under the care of Dr. McEwen.

Misses Pearl Holiday and Margaret Gordon of Montreal were home for the week end.

RIVERFIELD

Rev. J. Kellock, Wisconsin was a guest at the Manse for a few days during the past week. On Wednesday evening at the mid-week prayer meeting in the church hall, he gave an interesting and inspiring address to a large audience.

The Aubrey Curriers were fortunate in again having a favorable night for their annual social and dance. Although it threatened rain mostly all day, there was a large attendance and O'Neill's Orchestra from Valleyfield furnished the music.

Mrs. E. L. Black is spending the week in Maisonneuve.

Mr. and Mrs. Dan McKell left on Tuesday for an extended trip throughout the west.

The "Y" Society arranged the social Saturday evening concert last week. Mr. Jas. MacFarlane is convenor for this week.

Mrs. Jas. McKell has returned from her trip to the coast.

Mrs. Bagg returned to Montreal on Saturday after spending her holidays with Mrs. Currie.

Master Ashton Kerr, Maisonneuve is visiting at the Manse.

Mr. Brodie Johnston, Maisonneuve is spending a few weeks at "Fairview Farm."

Mr. D. Ballantyne, Montreal was a week end guest at the Manse.

Mr. and Mrs. Morrison, Montreal were guests of Mrs. Helmar for the week end. Dr. Helmar also accompanied them from the city.

DINING CAR DATA IS BROADCASTED

C. N. R. Gives Interesting Figures Regarding Provisioning and Service

That a million and a quarter guests patronize the dining and cafe car services of the Canadian National Railways during the year, and that each day these hungry travellers dispose of a thousand pounds of meat as well as fifteen hundred pounds of fish, were statements made during the course of an address entitled, "Living On The Limited," which had been prepared by Walter C. Pratt, General Manager of the Sleeping and Dining Car Departments of the system, and which was read from CNRM, the Montreal station of the Radio Department of the Canadian National Railways.

The problem of furnishing a series of hotels on wheels was dealt with in Mr. Pratt's paper. "The elaboration of the hotel upon wheels is a vastly different problem from the design of the floating hotel, which is to be found upon the seven seas," he said. "We are limited in the three dimensions—length, width and height. Considerations of weight must not be ignored, while at every turn the primary problem of safety confronts us—because of what avail is ingenuity in the provision of luxury and comfort if it be at the expense of safety?"

There are 200 cars on the system in which meals of various descriptions and in varied styles are served; and over 400 sleeping cars of various types. On the former there is a daily average of 3,200 meals; while nightly thirteen hundred travellers seek repose in the sleeping cars.

It was explained that in addition to the figures for meats and fish, there were also required daily 20,000 chickens and the slaughter of over a thousand hogs for hams and bacon, to say nothing of veritable flocks of sheep and lambs.

Of 900,000 pounds of vegetables absorbed in the preparation of the various dishes, the potato easily ranked first. The next most popular vegetable was the lettuce, while the onion came third. Of the fruits, the apple was far and away the most popular. Canadian orchards being responsible for the whole supply of 92,000 pounds.

Coffee was used much more freely than tea. 48,000 pounds of the former being three times as much as the demand for the material for the cheering cup.

A musical program was given by the CNRM string quartette. Amongst the classical selections were excerpts from Saint-Saens', "Samson et Dalila." Popular numbers included music from "Chu Chin Chow" and "Rose Marie."

FRANKLIN CENTRE

The funeral of the late Fisher Ames was held on Thursday in the Anglican Church, Rev. Mr. Dawson and Rev. Mr. Payne officiating. The text was taken from 1st Corinthians, part of the 13th chapter. The hymns sung were: "Jerusalem, the Golden", "The Lord is my Shepherd", "Peace, Perfect Peace." The church was not of sufficient size to hold the congregation that were present to pay their last respects to one they all loved so well and who met with so tragic a death.

The late Fisher Ames was the youngest son of the late Ernest Ames, and was born in Franklin and lived here nearly all his life. He leaves to mourn his loss, his wife and son 12 years old, Mrs. W. Gibson, a sister and Mrs. (Rev.) Beattie, also a sister; an aunt, Mrs. Conroy and uncle David Ames. Interment was in the Anglican Cemetery.

Another of our oldest and most respected residents passed away Monday morning in the person of Mrs. Mary Jane Rowe, at the advanced age of 84 years, 7 months and 8 days. Mrs. Rowe was born in Franklin and spent all her life here and lived with her son Herbert, since her husband's death about 27 years ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Cicero Denham of Mansfield and little daughter arrived Sunday to spend some time with Mrs. Jas. Denham. THE LATE ROBERT SADLER The whole community was very much shocked by the sudden death of Robert Sadler which occurred at Ormstown on August 8th. The deceased who was in his 65th year had not been in good health for over two years, and nine days previous to his demise was stricken down with neuritis of the heart.

The deceased who was a son of the late John Sadler, River Outarde, and Mary Reid, was born on the parental homestead on the River Outarde. For twenty-five years he had followed the occupation of carpenter and latterly for fifteen years had farmed on the River Outarde. He is survived by his widow (nee Maria Kelly) and son Earl who resides on the farm, also three daughters, Mrs. Wm. Graham, Dewittville; Mrs. Gordon Henderson, Anderson's Corners; Mrs. Wilbert Henderson, Anyox, B.C. and five sisters and one brother. The funeral took place on August 10th, services being conducted by the Rev. W. T. Payne and Rev. Dr. Wilson, interment being made in St. James Anglican Church Cemetery. Many friends and neighbors gathered to pay a last tribute of respect to his memory. The pall bearers were Peter Reid, Robt. Sadler, Samuel Geddes, John Reid, Chas. Collum and Amos Murphy.

Mr. John Sharp is the guest of his brother, Mr. Wm. Sharp. Master James Wilson of Montreal is spending a few days with his uncle Mr. John Rowe.

Mrs. F. Platt of Ormstown is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. H. Rowe. Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Moore of Havelock were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Dickenson last week.

Mrs. Fred Moore and daughter of Huntingdon were the guests of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Blair on Saturday and Sunday.

The Ladies Aid met at the home of Mrs. Fred Stephenson on Thursday evening. Supper was served at 7 p.m. There was quite a large attendance. Proceeds $22.00.

GLENELM

AUTHOR OF "THE BRANDING IRON" and "THE RED LADY"

CHAPTER XIII Sylvester Celebrates

"Hey, you girl there. Hi! Hey!" These exclamations called in a resonant, deep-voiced voice succeeded at last in attracting Sheila's attention. She had lingered at the alley's mouth, shirking her entrance into the saloon, and now she saw, halfway down the short, wide street, a gesticulating figure.

At first, as she obeyed the summons, she thought the summons came from a woman, but on near view it proved itself to be a man, of broad, massive hips and shoulders, dressed in a man's flannel shirt and a pair of large corduroy trousers, his legs tucked into high cowboy boots. She wore no hat, and her hair was cut square across her neck and forehead; hair of a dark, rusty red, it was, and matched eyes of the same color, as before a fire, like dark pines of very bright, ruddy eyes in a square, ruddy face, which, with its short, straight, wide-brided nose, well-shaped lips, square chin, and brilliant teeth, made up a striking and not unattractive countenance.

"I've got a horse here; won't stand," said the woman. "Will you look at his head? Can leaning back here in my wagon, leaning all over my other stuff." The horse came round the corner. He moved resolutely to meet them. He was the boniest, smallest horse Sheila had ever seen—a shadow of a horse, one-eyed, morose, emaciated. The harness hung loose upon his meagerness; the shafts stuck up like the points of a large collar on a small old man.

"He's not running away," explained the owner superbly. "It's just that he can't stop. You'd think, to look at him, that stopping would be his favorite sport. But you'd be mistaken. Go to meet. He's kind of ways crazy to get there—Lord knows where—probably to the end of his life." Sheila held the horse, and rubbed his nose with her small and gentle hand. The creature drooped under the caress and let its lower lip, with a few stiff white hairs, hang and quiver bitterly. It half-closed its one useful eye, a pale eye of intense, colorless disillusionment.

When the wagon stopped, a dog who was trotting under it stopped too and lay down in the dust, panting. Sheila bent her head a little to see the dog. She had a child's intense interest in animals. Through the dimness she made out a big, wolfish creature with a splendid, clean, gray, and scarlet tongue, set in a circular ruff of black. His bushy tail curled up over his back.

"What kind of dog is that?" asked Sheila, thinking the great animal under the wagon better fitted to pull a load than the shadowy little horse in front of it.

"Quarter wolf," answered the woman, in her casual manner of speech, her resonant voice falling pleasantly on the light coolness of the evening air. "Malamute. This fellow was littered on the body of a dead man." Sheila had also the child's interest in tales. "Tell me about it," she begged fervently.

The woman stopped in her business of tying down a canvas cover over her load and gave Sheila an amused and searching look. She held an iron spike between her teeth, but spoke around it skillfully.

"Arctic exploration it was. My brother was one of the party. 'Twas the he brought home Berg. Berg's mother was one of the sledge dogs. Party was shipwrecked, starved, most of the dodgers eaten, one man dead. Berg's mother littered on the body one night. Next morning they were rescued and the new family was saved. Otherwise I guess they'd have had a puppy and Berg and his wife and family wouldn't be earning their living with me."

"How do they earn their living?" asked Sheila, still peering at the hero of the tale.

"They pull my sled about winters, Hidden Creek." "Oh, you live in the Hidden Creek country?"

"Yes. Got a ranch up not far from the source. Ever been over the Hill?" She came toward Sheila, gathered the reins into her strong, broad hands, held them in her teeth, and began to pull on her canvas gloves. She talked with the reins in her teeth as she led with the spike, her enunciation triumphantly forceful and distinct.

"Some day, I'm coming over The Hill," said Sheila, less successful with a contraction in her throat. The woman made a few strides. Now she was looking shrewdly, closely into Sheila's face. "You're a biscuit-shooter at the hotel?"

"No, I work in the saloon." "In the saloon? Oh, sure. Barmaid. I've heard of you." Here she put a square finger-tip under Sheila's chin and looked even closer than before. "Not happy, are you?" she said. She moved away abruptly. "Tired of town life. Been crying. Well, when you want to pull out, come over to my ranch. I need a girl. I'm kind of lonesome winters. It's a pretty place if you aren't looking for street-lamps and talking-machines. You don't hear much more than coyotes and the rives and the pines and, if you're looking for higo lights, you can sure see the stars."

She climbed up to her seat, using hub of her wheel for a foothold, and springing with surprising agility and strength.

Sheila stepped aside and the horse started instantly. She made a few hurried steps to keep up.

"Thank you," she said, looking up into the ruddy eyes that looked down. "I'll remember that. What is your name?"

"Christina Blake, Miss Blake. I'll make The Hill before morning. I'm lucky. Less dust and heat by night and the horse has loafed since morning. I mean that about coming to my place. Any time. Good-bye to you."

She smiled a smile as casual in its own way as Sheila's own. Berg, under the wagon, trotted silently. He looked neither to right nor left. His wild, deep-set eyes were fastened on the heels of the small horse. He looked as though he were trotting relentlessly toward some wolfish goal of satisfied hunger. A little cloud of dust rose up from the wheels and stood between Sheila and the wagon. She conquered an impulse to run after it, shut her hand tight, and walked in at the back door of the saloon.

A teamster, with a lean, fatherly face, his mouth veiled by a shaggy blond moustache, his eyes as blue as larkspar, smiled at her across the bar. "Hello," said he. "How's your pony?"

Sheila had struck up one of her sudden friendships with this man who visited the saloon at regular intervals. This question warmed her heart. The little pony of Jim's giving was dear. She thought of his soft eyes and snuggling nose almost as often and as fondly as a lover thinks of the face of his lady.

"Lucky the splendid, Mr. Thatcher, she said, leaning her elbows on the bar and cupping her chin in her hands. Her face was bright with its tender, puckish look. "He's too cute. He can take sugar out of my apron pocket. And he'll shake hands. I'll just love you to see him. Will you be here to-morrow afternoon?"

"No, ma'am, I'm pullin' out about sunup. Round the time you tumble in to bed. Got to make The Hill." "How's your baby?"

A shining smile rewarded her interest in the recent invalid. "Fine and dandy. You ought to see her walk!" "But that splendid! And how's the little boy? Is he with you?"

"No, ma'am. I kind of left him to mind the ranch. He's gettin' to be a real rancher, that boy. He was sure sorry not to make Hidden Creek this trip, though. Say, he was not on seeing you. I told him about you."

Sheila's face flamed and her eyes smarted. Gratitude and shame possessed her. This man, then, did not speak of her as "Hudson's Queen"—not if he told his boy about her. She turned away to hide the flame and smart. When she looked back, Sylvester himself stood at Thatcher's elbow. He was rarely seen in the saloon. At sight of him Sheila's heart leaped as though it had been struck.

"Say, Sheila," he murmured, "I'm celebratin' tonight." She tried to dismiss from her mind his new and ugly consciousness. She tried to smile. The result was an expression strange enough.

Sylvester, however, missed it. He was dressed in one of the brown-checked suits, a new one, freshly creased; there was a red wild rosebud in his button-hole. He was sipping from his glass and had put a confidential hand on Thatcher's shoulder. He grinned at Carthy.

"Well, sir," he said, "nobody has inquired as to my celebration. But I'm not proud. I'll tell you. I'm celebratin' to-night the winnin' of a bet." "That's sure a deservin' cause," said Thatcher.

"Yes, sir. Had a bet with Carthy here. Look at him bluish! Carthy sure is a good loser. And he's mostly right in his prog-nos-ti-cations. He sure is. You betta yer. That's why I'm so festive."

"What'd he prognosticate?" asked Thatcher obligingly. He had moved his shoulder away from Hudson's hands. Sylvester wrinkled his upper lip into its smile and looked down into his glass. He turned his emerald eyes to Carthy. "Carthy prophesied that about this time a little—er—dream—of mine would go bust," said Hudson. He lifted up his eyes pensively to Sheila, first his eyes and then his glass. Here's to my dream—you, girl," he said softly.

He drank with his eyes upon her face, drew a deep breath, and looked about the room. Thatcher glanced from him to Sheila. "Good-night to you, ma'am," he said with gentleness. "Next time I'll bring the boy."

"Please, please do." Sheila put her hand in his. He looked down at it as though something had stung him. In fact, her touch was like a flake of snow.

When Thatcher had gone, Sylvester leaned closer to her across the bar. He moved his glass around in his hand and looked up at her humbly. "The tables kind of turned, eh?" he said.

"What do you mean, Mr. Hudson?" "Sheila, by lifting her voice, tried to dissipate the atmosphere of confidence, of secrecy. Carthy had moved away from them, the other occupants of the saloon were very apparently not listening.

"Well, ma'am," Sylvester explained, "six months ago I was kind of layin' claim to gratitude from you, and now it's the other way round."

"Yes," she said. "But I am still grateful." The words came, however, with a certain unwillingness, a certain lack of spontaneity.

"Are you, though?" He put his hand on one side so that Sheila was reminded of Dickie. For the first time a sort of shadowy resemblance between father and son was apparent to her. "Well, dandy. You ought to see her walk!" "But that splendid! And how's the little boy? Is he with you?"

ed of Dickie. For the first time a sort of shadowy resemblance between father and son was apparent to her. "Well, dandy. You ought to see her walk!" "But that splendid! And how's the little boy? Is he with you?"

It was after dawn when Sheila touched Carthy's elbow. The big Irishman looked down at her small, drawn face.

"Mr. Carthy," she said, "would it be all right if I went home now? It's earlier than usual, but I'm so awfully tired!"

There was so urgent an air of secrecy in her manner that Carthy muttered his permission out of the corner of his mouth. Sheila melted from his side.

The alley that had been silvery cool with dusk was now even more silvery cool with morning twilight. Small sun-rise clouds were winging over it like golden doves. Sheila did not look at them. She ran breathless to her door, opened it, and found herself face to face with Dickie.

It was more sallow than usual; its upper lip was drawn away from the teeth and deeply wrinkled; the eyes, half-closed, were very soft; they looked as though there was a veil across their sensitiveness. He caught Dickie's elbow in his hand, twisted him about, thrusting a knee into his back, and with his other long, bony hand he struck him brutally across the face.

"Let me kiss you, Sheila," he pleaded with tremulous lips. "I want just to kiss you once for good-bye. I'll be so far away. You know how I feel, you'd let me." She lifted up her mouth like an obedient child. Then, back of Dickie, she saw Sylvester's face.

Then she felt the terrible beating of his heart. He felt that he was shaking. "Sheila, I love you." She had seen her face against the curtain, had turned from him. She felt nothing but weariness and shame. She was like a leaden weight tied coldly to his throbbing youth. Her hand under his was hot and lifeless like a scorched rose. "I want you to come away with me from Millings. You can't keep on working in that saloon. You can't bear to have folks saying and thinking the fool things they do. And I can't bear it even if you can. I'd go loco, and kill, Sheila, I've been thinking all night, just sitting on the edge of my bed thinking. Sheila, if you will marry me, I will promise you to take care of you. I won't let you suffer any. I will die," he voiced rocked on the word, spoken with an awful sincerity of young love—"before I let you suffer any. If you could love me a little bit!"—he stopped as though that leaping heart had sprung up into his throat—"only a little bit, Sheila," he whispered, "maybe?"

"I can't," she said. "I can't love you that way even a little bit. I can't marry you, Dickie. I wish I could. I am so tired." She drew her hand away, or rather it fell from the slackening grasp of his, and hung at her side. She looked up from the curtain to his face. It was still alight and tender and pale. "You're real sure, Sheila, that you never could—that you'd rather go on with this—?"

She pressed all the curves and the color out of her lips, still looking at him, and nodded her head. "I can't stay in Millings," Dickie said, "and work in Poppy's hotel and watch this, Sheila—unless, some way, I can help you."

"Then you'd better go," she said lifelessly, "because I can't see what else there is or me to do. Oh, I shan't go on with it for very long, of course." He came an eager half-step nearer. "Then, anyway, you'll let me go away and work, and when I've kind of got a start, you'll let me come back and—see if—if you feel any sort of—different from what you do now? It wouldn't be so awful long. I'd work like—like Hang!" His thin hand shot into a fist.

Sheila's lassitude was startled by his word into a faint, unwilling smile. "Don't laugh at me!" he cried out. "Oh, Dickie, my dear, I'm not laughing. I'm so tired I can hardly stand. And truly I must go now. I'm horrid to you. I always am. And yet I do like you so much. And you are such a dear. And I feel there's something great about you. I should be glad for you to leave Millings. I feel years old to-day. I think I've grown up too old all at once and missed lovely things that I ought to have had. Dickie—she gave a dry sort of sob—"you are one of the lovely things."

His arms drew gently around her. "Let me kiss you, Sheila," he pleaded with tremulous lips. "I want just to kiss you once for good-bye. I'll be so far away. You know how I feel, you'd let me." She lifted up her mouth like an obedient child. Then, back of Dickie, she saw Sylvester's face.

Then it was over. Dickie was flung out; the door was locked against him and Sylvester came back across the floor. His collar stood up in a half-moon back of his ears, his hair fell across his forehead, his face was flushed, his lip bled. He had either bitten it himself or Dickie had struck it. But he seemed quite calm, only a little breathless. He was neither snarling nor smiling now. He took Sheila very gently by the wrists, drawing her hands down from her face, and he put her arms at their full length behind her, holding them there.

"You meet Dickie here when you're through work, dream-girl," he said gently. "You kiss Dickie when you leave my Aura, you little beacon light. I've kept my hands off you and my mind off you, because I thought you were too fine and good for anything but my ideal. And all this while you've been sneaking up here to Dickie and Jim and Lord knows who else besides. Now, I am again" to kiss you and then you get out of Millings. Do you hear? After I've kissed you, you ain't good enough for my purpose—not for mine."

Gathering both her hands in one of his, he put the hard, long fingers of his free hand back of her head, holding it from wincing or turning and his mouth dropped upon hers and seemed to smother out her life. She tasted whiskey and the blood from his cut lips.

"You won't tell me, anyway, that lie again," he panted, keeping his face close, staring into her wide eyes of a horrified childishness—"that you've never been kissed."

Again his lips fastened on her mouth. He let her go, strode to the door, unlocked it, and went out.

She had fallen to the floor, her head against the chair. She beat the chair with her hands, calling softly for her father and for her God. She reproached them both. "You told me it was a good old world," she sobbed. "You told me it was a good old world."

CHAPTER XV A hot, dry day followed on the cool dawn. In his room Sheila lay across his bed. The sun blazed in at his single long window; the big flies that had risen from the dirty water buzzed and bumped against the upper pane and made endless, mazy circles above and below one another in the stifling, odorous atmosphere. Dickie lay there like an image of Icarus, an eternal symbol of defeated youth; one could almost see about his slenderness the trailing, shattered wings. He had wept out the first shock of his anger and his shame; now he lay in a despairing stupor. His bruised face burned and ached; his chest felt tight with the aching and burning of his heart. Any suspicion of his father's interpretation of his presence in Sheila's room was mercifully spared him, but the knowledge that he had been brutally jerked back from her pure and patient lips, had been ignominiously punished before her eyes and turned out like a whipped boy—

REVIVING THE DROWNED
Reprint from the Bulletin Sanitaire of April 1924

Swimming is one of the most healthful of all sports but certain necessary rules should be observed: Don't swim right after eating. Wait about two hours.

Don't swim while overheated. Wait until you have cooled off. Failure to observe these rules frequently causes cramps.

Don't swim until you are completely exhausted. Stop before you get "that tired feeling." Fish can swim all day without getting tired, but a human being can not.

If you are going to dive into the water, make certain that it is deep enough. Many a perfectly good head has been completely ruined by suddenly crashing upon the hard concrete or rocky bottom of a swimming pool.

Should you be caught in a swift current or undertow, don't throw your arms and legs wildly. Let the force of the current bring you to the surface. Keep your head. You will need it.

Always have your arms in position ready for taking a stroke. You might step into a hole and need a quick stroke to get you out.

Don't go into a swimming pool if you are not well. Communicable diseases, such as typhoid fever, common colds, pink-eye, skin, eye, ear, nose and throat infections are frequently spread through swimming-pools by persons who are suffering from such diseases.

In public baths, insist upon using a clean, sterilized swimming suit and towel.

Learn how to employ the various methods of bringing drowned persons back to life.

Schaefer's method, which is much recommended by the American Red Cross Society, is fully explained in the following:

As soon as a drowned person is taken from the water, he should be laid face downwards, head lower than the limbs, the arms fully extended parallel to the head which should face on one side. Never lay him down on his back, the head higher than the body.

1. The victim being placed as already said, the rescuer stands astride him facing towards his head, one foot on each side of his hips. With both hands, he seizes him at the waist and lifts him three or four times until all the water has been thrown out. This should not last more than one minute.

2. With a finger wrapped in a handkerchief or a piece of cloth, he wipes out all the slime and mucus from the mouth.

3. The tongue of the patient is pulled forward with the fingers or better still with a forceps which is fixed so as to prevent the tongue from falling back in the throat and blocking the air passages.

4. The body being replaced, the rescuer kneels down astride the patient's hips. He then places his hands over the small of the back, both thumbs nearly touching, fingers pointing downwards over the lower ribs, arms fully extended. By bringing his body forward without bending his arms, he brings the full weight of his body to press on the base of the lungs. This movement must not be violent and must not last more than four seconds; it expels the air from the lungs.

5. The rescuer immediately resumes his former position in order to relieve the pressure, which allows the lungs to refill with air, but his hands must remain in place.

6. After two seconds the above movement is resumed and must be repeated about eighteen times a minute.

7. The operation is repeated indefinitely as long as the victim is not completely brought back to life; in no case, should it be stopped until it has lasted at least an hour. If the rescuer feels tired, he may ask some one to take his place, but if he is alone, he must go on, notwithstanding his fatigue.

THE GASOLINE TAX

As Quebec is now in its second year with a gasoline tax it is of interest to watch the experience of States across the border. In a recent article in Review of Reviews by Henry R. Trumbower, Economist, U.S. Bureau of Public Roads, he explains the present day legislation.

In addition to motor-vehicle license fees, the motorists of the United States paid $79,734,490 in gasoline taxes in 1924. The gasoline tax is a comparatively new method of obtaining funds from the users of highways, for purposes of improvement and maintenance.

Oregon was the first State to put such a tax into effect, February 25, 1919. Three other States—North Dakota, New Mexico, and Colorado—followed suit that same year, during which the total collections amounted to $633,987. If place of origin be considered, the gasoline tax may rightly be called a "western tax." A one-cent rate was adopted in Oregon and Colorado; New Mexico started with two cents; and North Dakota fixed the rate at one-quarter cent per gallon.

At the close of last year thirty-six States, including the District of Columbia, were charging a gasoline tax which ranged all the way from one cent to four cents per gallon. Now all but four States—Illinois, Massachusetts, New Jersey, and New York—have a gasoline-tax law. The following table shows the development of the tax and the increase in the receipts:

Year	No. of States	Gross Receipts
1919	4	$ 663,987
1920	5	1,475,136
1921	13	5,362,254
1922	18	11,923,442
1923	35	36,813,339
1924	35	79,734,490

In 1924 there were eight States which had in effect a tax of 1 cent per gallon; 15 States had in effect a tax of 2 cents per gallon; 2 States charged 2½ cents per gallon; 9 States charged 3 cents per gallon; and one State had a tax of 4 cents per gallon.

During the early part of this year the legislatures of most of the States were in session, which resulted in more States adopting a gasoline tax and in raising the tax rates in a number of States which had already made use of this kind of a tax for raising revenues for highway purposes. The States which have passed gasoline-tax laws are shown below, classified according to rates:

- 1 cent tax: Connecticut, North Dakota, Rhode Island, Texas.
- 2 cent tax: Alabama, California, Colorado, Delaware, Dist. of Columbia, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Vermont, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin.
- 2½ cent tax: Wyoming.
- 3 cent tax: Arizona, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Kentucky, Maine, Mississippi, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Tennessee, Virginia.
- 3½ cent tax: Utah.
- 4 cent tax: Arkansas, Nevada, North Carolina.
- 5 cent tax: South Carolina.

These indicated rates are effective at the present time except for Nevada, where the increase from 2 cents to 4 cents becomes effective July 1, and in Maine the increase from 1 cent to 3 cents becomes effective July 11. The legislature of California passed a 3 cent tax law which the Governor vetoed. A 2 cent tax law is pending in the Illinois legislature. In 1923 Massachusetts passed a 2 cent tax law, which was held up by referendum proceedings and in the 1924 fall election was rejected by the voters. At the same time when the voters of Massachusetts were voting down a gas-tax bill, the Missouri voters at a State wide election initiated a 2 cent tax which became effective at the beginning of 1925.

The average payments per motor-vehicle for 1924 on account of the license fees and gasoline taxes are shown in the following tabulation:

State	License	Gasoline
Oregon	$24.00	$14.01
Arkansas	16.50	19.48
Georgia	12.19	21.81
Florida	12.40	18.75
North Carolina	15.20	15.00
New Hampshire	21.40	8.28
Connecticut	23.40	4.50

Alabama	12.50	11.06

Louisiana	15.70	7.51
South Dakota	14.60	8.46
West Virginia	15.10	6.46
Tennessee	12.70	8.86
Kentucky	14.10	7.23
South Carolina	7.10	13.53
Maryland	11.70	8.00
Maine	15.20	4.11
Nevada	10.00	8.98
Arizona	5.90	12.63
New Jersey	18.40
Oklahoma	10.10	8.07
Texas	12.90	4.86
Montana	9.80	7.78
Rhode Island	17.10
Utah	7.10	10.00
New York	17.00
Minnesota	17.00
Wyoming	10.30	4.59
New Mexico	10.10	4.68
Iowa	14.50
California	5.30	9.80
Michigan	5.30	9.80
Massachusetts	14.20
Colorado	5.90	8.10
Indiana	6.30	7.56
Wisconsin	12.90
Nebraska	11.70
North Dakota	7.00	3.77
Kansas	10.30
Illinois	10.30
Ohio	9.40
Dist. of Columbia	4.30	4.37
Missouri	8.40

In four of the States—Mississippi, Louisiana, Kentucky and Oklahoma—the rates were changed during the year. The average gasoline-tax payments were larger in eleven of the States than the average license fees in those same respective States. The average license fees for all the States were $12.80 per vehicle; the average gasoline-tax receipts were $8.98 per vehicle for those States which collected a gasoline tax. The gasoline consumption averaged 440 gallons per vehicle in those States which reported no change in the tax rate during the year.

A Comparison with Former Toll Rates

The gasoline tax has often been compared with the charges formerly exacted on toll roads and has been called a toll, in that it tends to vary with the use of the road. It is, therefore, interesting to reduce these gasoline tax rates to a vehicle mile basis. If we assume 6,000 miles as the average annual motor-vehicle mileage and 440 gallons as the average gasoline consumption per vehicle, the following toll rates per mile result:

Gasoline Tax Rate	Toll Rate per Mile
1 cent	0.073 cents
2 "	.147 cents
3 "	.220 cents
4 "	.294 cents
5 "	.367 cents

A 3 cent gasoline tax will, according to these assumptions, mean a toll-rate of less than a quarter-cent per mile, or a 5-cent tax will result in a toll rate of slightly over a third of a cent per vehicle mile. It is interesting to compare these gasoline tax rates reduced to a toll basis with some of the toll charges which motorists formerly had to pay on toll roads and turnpikes. On six different turnpikes in Virginia and Maryland only a few years ago tolls amounting to $5.05 were charged for a total distance of 187.5 miles, equivalent to 2.7 cents per mile. If a State attempted to charge this same rate for the use of the public highways by automobiles, it would have to establish a gasoline tax of 36 cents per gallon, assuming the same mileage and gasoline consumption as in the foregoing analysis.

Collection Cost, and Exemptions

The cost of collecting the gasoline tax is very small in most of the States. Ordinarily the law provides that the tax is collected from the large oil companies which supply the distributors and retailers on a wholesale basis. Collections are usually made monthly, at which time complete reports of sales are filed with the State officer or office whose duty it is to make the collection. Indiana, for the 12 months' period ended May 30, 1924, collected $4,574,544.18 in gasoline taxes at a total cost of $8,460.96. This was slightly more than one-tenth of one per cent.

Some of the laws contain elaborate provisions exempting from taxation motor fuels which are used in farm tractors, motor-boats, and airplanes, the purpose being to tax only the fuel used by vehicles operated over the public highways. Such an application and administration of the law is in accordance with the toll-road principle.

In certain States, on the other hand, all the gasoline sold within the State is subject to the tax, irrespective of the use to which it is put. Under such conditions the clothes-cleaning establishment, that use a certain amount of gasoline, as well as the motor-boat operator and the aviator, all make their contribution to the maintenance of highways in proportion to the amount of gasoline they consume.

ALBERTA COAL FOR TORONTO

First Carloads of Trial Shipment From Drumheller Are in City

With the arrival in Toronto of the first shipment of Ontario's 25,000 ton coal order with the Alberta authorities, the Ontario Government feels assured that the whole of the fuel order will come through as ordered. Over 150 cars of the Alberta product are on the way east, according to advices which have reached the Ontario authorities, of which the first arrival formed a part. It is for Toronto distribution.

Owing to the disputes which developed in the Drumheller coal region the Ontario Government was doubtful for a while whether any of the test shipment—which is being made to determine the exact cost of freighting—would be sent eastward.

No Further Difficulties Expected
Despite desperate efforts on the part of the Alberta and mine authorities, there was difficulty in getting the men and the mine principals together to fill the Ontario order.

Just at the time, however, that the Ontario Government sent to Alberta a wire either to send immediately the 25,000 tons or cancel the Ontario order the Government of that Province was successful in getting away a portion of it, and with the information to hand at Queen's Park that at least one mine is providing for the Ontario shipment, no further difficulties are anticipated.

Minister Sure of His Order

According to Hon. Charles McCrea, Ontario Minister of Mines, who has been handling the matter for this Province, first bills of lading were received last week.

"Although all the trouble is by no means settled in the West," he said, "I expect now to get the full amount of our order."

AN AIR LIGHTHOUSE OF A BILLION CANDLE-POWER
Transportation by air-plane is so much a matter of course in Europe that lighthouses designed solely to guide the aviator are becoming almost as familiar as their maritime prototypes. There are, for example, seven such beacons along the London-Paris aerial highway, two of these being in England, the others so distributed in France that under normal conditions one at least is always visible to the air-pilot. The air route from Paris by way of Brussels, Amsterdam and Hamburg to Copenhagen is adequately, if somewhat less liberally beacons, as are the lines connecting Paris and Strasbourg, Bordeaux and Nice, and many others. The lights regularly employed, we are told by Charles d'Avron, in Excelsior (Paris), are either of revolving or of periodic ("eclipse") types, operated either by electricity or by acetylene gas, and having a range of from fifty to one hundred kilometers according to varying atmospheric conditions. But the best of them is feeble indeed in comparison with the gigantic beacon—declared to be the largest in the world—recently established near Dijon, in the heart of France, on an elevation known as Mont Afrique. Says M. d'Avron:
"This lighthouse is the first of a projected series designed when completed to furnish important landmarks to any aviator flying at night throughout a very wide extent of territory. It has been placed on a natural elevation, not on an aerodrome. Its beams will be visible to the aviator on clear nights to a distance of 240 miles, and under average conditions to at least half that distance. It has the power of a billion candles; whereas maritime lighthouses are usually content with lamps of thirty-million candle-power."
Some details of construction and operation of the new lighthouse are given in Le Quotidien (Paris) by J. Bichet, who states that the project dates from 1918, when a beacon to guide squadrons of military aviators making nocturnal bombardment tours was contemplated. After peace came, the work was interrupted for a time, until the growing needs of commercial aviation led to its renewal. The entire installation, costing more than a million and a half francs, was completed a good many months since, but awaited electrification. Stating that the lighthouse stands at an elevation of 625 meters, M. Bichet continues:
"The visibility of a beacon-light is not limited solely by the curvature of the earth, for, owing to atmospheric refraction, the beam of light itself curves toward the earth. Moreover, the aviator's elevated position is an obvious aid, and in addition the engineers have aimed to direct the beams to the best possible advantage by a system of adjustable lenses.
"The lighthouse itself is 14 meters high, in three stories, of which the upper two are occupied by eight optical apparatuses, each composed of an arc-lamp and an arrangement of thirteen lenses more than two meters in diameter. The eight lamps operate in groups of four. The entire projection apparatus is pivoted in mobile equilibrium, to be turned at a fixed rate by electric power."
