

MRS. JOHN SCOTT SPEAKS FOR THE "FEMININE"

Mesdames Gardiner, Fraser, Philps, Hunter and Miss M. Will Chosen as Delegates for W. I. Convention

The June meeting of the Women's Institute was held Friday afternoon. It was regrettable that the attendance was not in keeping with the excellent programme provided. Mrs. Scott, the speaker that fills halls in other places and is worthy of any one's time and interest.

Mrs. Gay reported for the Rest Room Committee. Forty-one guests had called since May 1st. $1.50 was received through the donation boxes.

The following ladies were elected as delegates to the Provincial Convention to be held at Macdonald College on June 15th, 16th and 17th: Mrs. Gardiner, Mrs. Fraser, Mrs. Philps, Mrs. W. Hunter and Miss M. Will.

Mrs. Grosse gave a short reading, entitled "What the Institute means to me."

The public are indebted to Mrs. W. L. Car for the following excellent report of Mrs. Scott's address:

Mrs. John Scott, an ex-President of the Montreal Women's Club and now Chairman of the Franchise Committee of the same club chose as a subject, "The Feminine Movement."

It is impossible in any report to convey an adequate impression of the humor and charm of Mrs. Scott's fluent delivery. In referring to the work of the Institutes, Mrs. Scott said that there were three movements that were bound to have a great influence on the present generation—the Women's Institutes, the Boy Scouts and the Girl Guides.

"What does the feminist movement mean? It does not mean that we want to be men. Why should we? We are far more important than they. I will confess that once in a while I would like to be a man for a little while. You know that men have a superiority complex. I sometimes feel that I would like to have the idea that I could do anything just because I was a woman! It means this: A woman's first of all for equality of opportunity; an equality of remuneration and equality of political rights. Then in Quebec we would have to get at the laws affecting women and do a little tinkering."

What is the status of women in this province? Well, pretty low, I think, on the whole, lower than in any country I know of.

Equality of Opportunity. What do you mean? We mean by this that a woman is as good a judge of what she will do with her life as a man. It was the Creator's idea of course, that every woman should have a man. But in England there are two million more women than men. There is no law that compels a man to marry and even widowers are not obliged to take a second chance. So unless our friends who say that women's place is in the home are prepared to bring in a law advocating polygamy I do not see how they can ensure every woman a home. Women should have the chance to decide what they want to do. For instance, women can now be doctors in Quebec. It was here in Huntingdon I heard a letter read in reference to a request from the missionary societies that women should be allowed to study medicine. It seemed that there was no objection on the part of the Governors of McGill, but to bring that about it would be necessary to erect a separate medical college for women, which would cost about a million dollars. I do not know what happened between June and October. That Fall four women applied for admittance to the medical classes and were accepted. I have tried my best to find out what happened but I think it is possible the authorities decided that it was easier to admit these women than to explain why they could not be admitted.

In Quebec a woman could not practice law or become a notary. They could become druggists but the Society admitted to the Society was strictly limited and it was fatal if a woman should head the examination results! The Society I belong to wrote and wrote again asking why more women were not allowed to be druggists and finally got the reply that it was because I realize that many men would go bankrupt if they paid their wives for the work they do.

We will take, however, the teaching profession. I know of two young people—a young woman and a young man who graduated together.

They were both teaching together on the same floor and teaching the same class. The young woman was admitted to be the best teacher. The young man began at a salary to which the young woman could not attain if she taught all her life. That is not fair or right.

Sex should not be the consideration, but the ability to perform the work properly.

Then we desire equality in political rights. I want to say that here in Quebec where we have not got the provincial franchise that is not a question of politics because both parties are absolutely sure that it is simply a question of mentality, this refusal to give us the vote. For a long time we could not get anyone to bring in a

S.P.C.A. TAG DAY NETS $179.15

Mrs. W. K. Philps to be Congratulated Upon Energy Put Forth in Organizing Tag Day

$54. IN DONATIONS Miss Aileen Small Collects $43.66. Nine Huntingdon Girls Act as Taggers

The S.P.C.A. Tag Day at Ormstown Show did not meet with the response that was expected from a community whose self-evident prosperity is due in a great measure to our four-footed friends. One of the most encouraging signs of the times lay in the number of young people, particularly young men who voluntarily came forward with their contributions and expressed their interest in the work of the Society.

The President and Directors of the Association are to be congratulated for thus taking a public stand against cruelty to dumb beasts and the Society wishes to express its gratitude to them. Assistance was also rendered by Mr. Wm. Cullen, who donated the dinner to the collectors, Mr. J. A. Hunter, who gave the collection boxes and the Huntingdon Glenner, who gave the badges.

The collectors were Miss Aileen Small, Miss Gladys McCracken, Miss Rucie O'Hare, Miss Jean Maxwell, Miss Amy Hunter, Miss Florence Reid, Miss Madeline Malloy, Miss Carmen Lefebvre and Miss Ena Moriarty.

Special mention should be made of Miss Aileen Small whose box contained $43.66 of the $125.15 brought in by these young ladies. Other donations were as follows: Hon. James A. Robb, Minister of Finance, $10; Hon. Honor Mercier, Minister of Lands and Forests, $10; Andrew Philps, Esq., M.L.A., $5; J. A. Sullivan, Esq., $5; Mr. Donat Raymond, $5; Mr. T. B. Macaulay, $5; J. F. Boulais, $1; Mr. W. C. Wylie, $2; Dr. J. N. Bales, $2; E. C. Budge, $2; J. S. Stuart, $2; Mr. Frank Napier, $1; Mr. H. B. Arkell, National Live Stock Commissioner, $1; Mr. Percy Greig, $1; Mr. D. J. Greig, $1; Mr. E. S. Mason, Malone, N.Y., $1. Total $179.15.

The S.P.C.A. dog Taku, belonging to Mr. J. R. Innes, the Secretary of the Society, who was in the charge of Mr. Innes' two daughters, attracted much attention. Mr. Wilkinson, one of the Inspectors was also present with his collection of photographs of actual cases which he has prosecuted and which explained the work of the Society more plainly than words. Mrs. W. K. Philps, who organized and supervised the S.P.C.A. tag day is to be congratulated upon the good work which was accomplished even though the contributions did not rise to her expectations. Further donations towards this worthy cause will be gratefully received by Mrs. Philps and acknowledged through the columns of the Glenner.

HINCHINBROOK CHURCH TO HOLD CELEBRATION

Bishop Rouleau of Valleyfield and Father Kearne of New York to be Present at 106th Anniversary

The little parish of St. Patrick's Church, Hinchinbrook, shall witness a grandiose celebration on July 25th. A century of existence shall be commemorated by an open air High Mass celebrated by Bishop R. M. Rouleau, O.P. of Valleyfield. Sermons in French and English shall be delivered by the Bishop of the diocese in French, and by Father James E. Kearney of New York in English.

Following the mass a great banquet shall be tendered to the hundreds of guests journeying to Hinchinbrook for the occasion. In the afternoon, a ceremony in the century old cemetery shall take place after which confirmation shall be conferred upon the children of the parish.

Father Aumais, the pastor of the church, helped by the warden and the parishioners are bent upon making a great religious celebration. Friends of the old parish, and of its little church recently renovated, former members of the congregation and their descendants scattered throughout Canada and the States shall come and admire the efforts of long generations of worshippers who have maintained amidst the storms of a century the lamp of Catholic faith kindled by the Irish settlers of 1820.

The Protestant settlers of Hinchinbrook who have constantly co-operated with their Catholic friends shall attend and help make this celebration a great success.

The numerous friends of the parish are cordially invited to this inspiring ceremony.

On Annual Bazaar falls on the 7th and 8th of July.

NEW ERIN

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Chartrand visited Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Chartrand of St. Antoine.

Miss Grace Ewart of Kilbain spent the week end with her friend, Miss Ruby Ruddock.

Mrs. Wm. Simpson and children of Rockburn spent a few days recently with her mother, Mrs. Helm.

VALLEYFIELD HEARS GRAND MUSICAL

Gault Institute Hall Taxed to the Limit on Friday Night

On Friday evening, June 11th, the Ladies' Aid Society of the non-concurring Presbyterian Church gave a concert that will long be remembered as one of the best of its kind ever heard in the town. The hall of the Gault Institute was crowded with those who had come to enjoy the evening. Long before the opening number, seats were at a premium. It was a gala night, one of those rare occasions when the audience was dined and wined upon the choicest and most select morsels of music, song, expression and dance.

The programme was more like a drawing-room musicale than like an ensemble of numbers rendered in the country. If any person came expecting to hear jazz or popular airs, he must have gone away disappointed; if he came to scoff, he remained to pray. One of the few criticisms that might be levelled, is that the musical menu was a little too rich in fare, too intensely concentrated, almost exclusive to indigestion for the individual whose tastes have been in the main, very plain and simple. However, the programme was a sort of Christmas Day as programmes usually go and an oasis in a desert of banalities. The lighting of the hall was effective, the stage was decorated with ferns, potted plants and cut flowers from the conservatory of Mr. J. Lowe, while the back was hung with draperies that harmonised with the green setting. Truly apples of gold, in pictures of silver. For the first time in many years, the ventilation was satisfactory, the highest degree of order and discipline was maintained. With such a large gathering, there was not the oppression and heat that is the usual feature of these affairs. And too, the audience had no opportunity to grow weary as the program was completed in two hours, notwithstanding the strenuous many encores.

Mr. J. W. Cooper, Mrs. Bach, rendered several piano solos which were appreciated, among them Edward Gersmann's delightful "Shepherd's Dance," Schultz's "Tendre Aveu." As one of his encores, he gave Grieg's "Papillon" with all the lightness and suggestion that is held in his fine composition. Mr. Cooper's sympathetic and unobtrusive accompaniments certainly made easier the task of the soloists, for they were formed a background that only a master could give. Miss Ethel Gray of Montreal was in good voice and sang several songs in French and English. Her selections were in keeping with the season, Woodman's "April Rain" and Batten's "April Morning," being two of the numbers, while an old French Translation "Come, Sweet Morning," completed a trilogy of appealing songs. Her last encore, "The Song of the Lark," was written by Mr. Cooper himself. Mr. George W. Holden's voice grows fuller and richer, his baritone is warm with feeling and laden with promise. He sings as though he enjoys singing and his presence was more than pleasing. His voice is displayed to best advantage in recitative or art of the robust type. When he sang Handel's "Revenge, Revenge, Timothee Cries," he conjured up for the eye to see and the ear to hear all the dread things that bespoke hatred and malice. Not many will forget Vaughan Williams' "The Lark Song" and the song given with unusual fervor and elan. His contribution also included Ireland's "When Lights Go Rolling Round the Skies" and Keel's "Mother Carey."

A trio, Miss Gnaedinger, piano, Miss Edith M. Gray and cello, Mr. L. G. Gnaedinger, gave two selections, "Allegro" by Bohm and "Contrabasso" by Gade. It is to be regretted that this trio made only one appearance.

Miss Phyllis Lyth convulsed the audience with her reading of Hare's "Betty at the Base-ball Game." She sang very much to the admiration of an enraptured audience. Her voice was full and clear, her delivery was perfect. Her reading of "Revenge, Revenge, Timothee Cries," he conjured up for the eye to see and the ear to hear all the dread things that bespoke hatred and malice. Not many will forget Vaughan Williams' "The Lark Song" and the song given with unusual fervor and elan. His contribution also included Ireland's "When Lights Go Rolling Round the Skies" and Keel's "Mother Carey."

A trio, Miss Gnaedinger, piano, Miss Edith M. Gray and cello, Mr. L. G. Gnaedinger, gave two selections, "Allegro" by Bohm and "Contrabasso" by Gade. It is to be regretted that this trio made only one appearance.

VALLEYFIELD

Sunday was a big sporting day in Valleyfield, as the annual motor cycle race were held on the exhibition grounds in the afternoon. Upwards of 4000 are reported as having attended the races. The baseball game between Malone and Valleyfield was also a big feature. The ball game resulted in a shut-out in favor of Malone who won 6 to 0.

Mr. and Mrs. McPhee, with their daughter, Helene, of Cowansville, visited their daughter and sister, Miss Hazel McPhee over Sunday.

Miss Margaret Wilson of Trout River was one of the out-of-town guests at the recent wedding.

Mrs. Ross of Georgetown, Ont., is visiting her daughter Mrs. P. L. Colbert.

Miss Elsie Lyth has returned from Boston to spend her holidays at home. Dr. C. L. Roman left Monday for Victoria, B.C. where he will attend the annual convention of the Canadian Medical Association. Dr. Roman was accompanied by his eldest son, Master Charles.

Moses won another match Saturday when they played St. Paul's. By playing consistent football they were able to hold their own until an opportunity came to out-general and outplay their adversary. It was then that Harry Howarth skillfully ran the ball down the field and a goal was made in the last few moments of play. The score was 3-2. A good crowd saw the game.

Miss Donalds Lachance left last week for a trip to Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago.

Misses Marguerite and Alma Vezina and Messrs. Philippe and Francois Vezina of Montreal have been guests at the home of Dr. A. Besner.

MAN HAS SERIOUS ACCIDENT

Mr. John Gordon Loses Arm and Both Eyes at The Gatineau

Franklin, Que., Mr. John Gordon of Sherbrooke, and formerly of Franklin, had a most serious accident befall him while on dam construction work at the Gatineau. Mr. Gordon, according to reports, was instructing a young man about one of the mechanical appliances, telling him to turn it off when he spoke. When the word was given the reverse act was done and as a result Mr. Gordon was thrown in the air several feet and had his arm severed above the elbow. He was taken to the Ross Memorial Hospital where it was found necessary to remove both eyes, and at time of writing is in a very serious condition. His three sons, Mr. Philip Cassidy and the Misses Gordon of Franklin were all called to Montreal.

ALLAN H. DAWSON OPENS HIS NEW MILL TODAY

Grinder Will Grind 2 to 2 1/2 Tons of Grain Per Hour. Grinder Electrically Driven

Today sees Mr. Allan H. Dawson grind his first feed by the new electric driven Grey Grinder which he has just installed. Mr. Dawson purchased from the Baunert Co. Limited the old butter factory on Lake St. which will be known to many of our old time citizens as the American Presbyterian Church. The building which is 40 x 50 feet has been renovated to suit the requirements of a grist mill. The grinder was purchased from Wm. and J. G. Grey, Toronto, and has a grinding capacity of 2 to 2 1/2 tons per hour.

The motive power is being supplied by the Huntingdon Electric Co. which drives the two, 20-H.P. Parkinson motors. The electrical equipment was installed by the Huntingdon Electric Co.

THE LATE MISS ANNA DICKSON BEING HONORED AT LACHINE

A bronze tablet was unveiled this week at the Lachine High School, to the loving memory of Anne E. Dickson who was for many years a devoted teacher in this school. The memorial was erected by her pupils, fellow teachers and friends.

Miss Dickson, who spent forty successive years in the teaching profession, did not live to profit by the publicity due to her death. It was felt by those associated for many years with Miss Dickson, that no more suitable day could be chosen for the ceremony than the second anniversary of her death. Rev. Johnson Seller former pastor of the Methodist Church, delivered the memorial address.

Miss Dickson taught in the Huntingdon Academy for a number of years.

ACAD. CADETS WIN SILVER CUP FOR SIGNALLING

Lieut.-Col. Keefer Presents Cup at Annual Inspection on Thursday

The Huntingdon Academy Cadets underwent their third annual inspection before Cadet Inspector Lt.-Col. J. K. Keefer on Prince Arthur Square on Thursday last. After passing the inspection the cadets were warmly congratulated by the inspector for the smartness and steadiness they displayed in carrying out the various movements, and were then presented with a beautiful silver cup, which they won by having a high average in Signalling. The premier honors went to Low-Canada College, defeating the Academy by but a few points.

The 1926 Cadet Corps numbers 64 strong and is divided into two platoons.

$4,000 VOTED FOR MEMORIAL

Citizens of Chateaugay Vote Favorably Upon Proposition to Build Memorial to Soldiers

At the special town meeting held in Chateaugay on June 8th the proposition for the town to appropriate the sum of $4,000 with which to erect a soldiers' memorial was carried by a vote of 77 to 31, thus assuring the carrying forward of the project.

It is expected that a committee representing the American Legion Post and the members of the Chateaugay Town Board will confer and decide upon the form which the memorial will take and that definite plans for the erection of the memorial will be decided upon with a reasonable time.

Inspector's Report of Miss Messier's Private School

June 16th, 1926. I have this day examined the pupils of Miss Messier's School on the fundamental subjects of our Educational Programme. Grammar is very good. Dictations, which I corrected, proved excellent; all the problems in Arithmetic have been perfectly; History of Canada and Geography are thoroughly understood. The English pupils write the French language very well. The French pupils possess the English language as well, which is an advantage that all the pupils in my district do not have. Following are the percentages obtained in the different subjects: Grammatical Dictation, 89%; Arithmetic, 100%; Geography 100%; History of Canada, 100%.

1,146,770 PHONES IN DOMINION

64,806 New Telephones Installed in 1926. 13 Phones For Every 100 People

This week the grand total of Bell telephones in operation in Ontario at Quebec reached the six hundred thousand mark.

Simultaneously with this announcement, Manager J. A. Fillion gave one of those interesting figures of telephone development in Canada, just compiled by the Statistical Department of the Company. The total telephones in operation in all Canada as of December 31st, 1925, was 1,148,770, an increase of 64,806, or 5.9% during the year. Canada's development has now reached 13.1 telephones per hundred of population.

Of the Provinces, British Columbia still leads with 18.1 telephones per hundred inhabitants. Ontario is next with 17.4; then follow Saskatchewan with 13.2, Alberta 11.9, Manitoba 11.3, Quebec 9.2, Nova Scotia 7.6, New Brunswick 7.5, Prince Edward Island 4.8 and Yukon 4.8.

Quebec had the greatest gain in 1925, viz., 9,66% Ontario next with 7.4%; and then British Columbia 6.5%.

Of the Canadian telephone systems, the Bell Company is apparently growing most rapidly. For 1925 the Company's increase was 9.8%, and the British Columbia Telephone Company next with 6.9%.

Ten years ago (December 31st, 1915) Canada had 553,092, as compared with the present figure of over 1,148,770—over 100 per cent increase within the decade.

HERE'S WHY 1926 CIRCUS IS BIGGEST

Ringling Bros. Enlarge Greatest Show on Earth to Dedicate Mammoth New York Edifice

A circus so big that it requires two added rings, eight stages, a wider hippodrome track and a 700-foot-long big top to display its marvels is now headed this way. It is the Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Combined Shows, to give performances at Montreal on June 21st and 22nd.

The five rings now used have been made necessary to present the added attractions got together in the spring to celebrate the combined shows first appearance in New York's New Madison Square Garden. This edifice is the largest ever built for circus purposes.

To fittingly dedicate it, the Ringling Brothers themselves spent months in Europe mobilizing the biggest circus in history. This same show that for weeks entertained New York's millions is now on tour under canvas.

The tournament is as brilliant as in the past but has been enlarged by the addition of such new attractions as zebras and llamas broken to harness and hitched to gem-studded floats. Wee baby elephants ride at the tops of allegorical cars. The menagerie of more than a thousand animals embraces such features as thirteen elephant youngsters with the smallest stationed side by side with the biggest pachyderms in captivity. Another importation is the largest and handsomest tiger of which there is record.

Performing horse acts are now presented in quintet, a troupe in each of the five rings. Those elephants who are performers appear in similar formation—five herds at one time. The number of men and women acrobats, bareback riders, gymnasts and high-wire performers has been increased to eight hundred. There are three hundred and fifty trained horses, two hundred of which appear in a single display. One hundred double length cars are required to handle this gigantic amusement enterprise.

Mr. Bruce Ness leaves on Saturday for Western Canada with a carload of Burnside Farm Ayshire cattle. No doubt the Burnside herd will again win many honors on the Western Fair Circuit.

Mr. Arthur Blennerhassett of Montreal is spending his holidays with his cousins, Robert and Jack McEwen, Mr. James McEwen and Mr. Angus Muir of Notre Dame de Grace also spent the week end with Mrs. John McEwen.

Mrs. Jas. Templeton returned home Saturday night, after spending the past two weeks in Westmount and Model City.

Reserve the date of June 30th for a Lawn Social.

The Election in Alberta

Little notice is being taken in the newspapers in Eastern Canada of the pending provincial election in Alberta. Some weeks ago the House was dissolved and the election set for the final week in June. For the past five years the Progressives have been in power, the Liberal Government, led by the present Dominion Minister of Interior, Mr. Stewart, having been put out of office on the 18th of July, 1921. We thus have some unusual factors in the election situation in that Province. The first is that a Government is appealing for support after it has held office for the full term of five years. In federal politics that is considered to be a fatal policy, and numerous precedents are quoted in support of it. A second factor is in the leadership of the groups. Mr. Greenfield was made Premier of Alberta in 1921, although he had not been a candidate in the election campaign which had brought a Progressive victory. A few months ago he retired and made way for Mr. Brownlee, a lawyer, and his former attorney-general. Likewise the Liberals have recently changed political heads, and Captain Shaw of Calgary is now carrying on the campaign against the Government. As Captain Shaw was a Progressive member in the last federal House his swing into the Liberal ranks may prove embarrassing to the Farmers, especially as he is recognized as one of the brightest men in Western politics.

The foregoing may be considered as the two leading political factors which enter into the campaign, but a third is well worth considering. It is the transferrable vote. In the last House, out of the sixty members, the Government had 40 members, the Liberals ten, Labour 3, Independents one, the other six seats were vacant. It will thus be seen that there was not a single Conservative in the last House, but in the last Federal election the Conservatives polled a better vote than they did in 1921, and it is reasonable to expect that they will put up candidates in most of the town and city ridings. If they do, the marvels of the second-choice principle may result in a distinct change in the political aspect of the next legislature.

As to the political issues involved, reports from the West are not very explanatory. It is apparent however, that the Opposition are charging the Government with being extravagant, and supine, while the Government claims it is most economical. No party has a radical platform, and bearing that in mind we need not get excited over the election, except to use the results as a political barometer as to things political.

The Show a Success

The gates have been closed at Ormstown Show for another year and the directors are now balancing up the books to ascertain how they came out this year. The weather was not all together favourable, but the attendance was excellent and the Show gave general satisfaction. For this splendid display much credit is due the President, Mr. R. R. Ness, and the various officers and committees. They have tried to broaden out the Show, and give it an appeal which would attract a larger number of visitors and in this they were successful.

The wonderful displays of live stock again prove beyond all question that this District leads Eastern Canada. The farmers have been selling a great many animals during the past year, some fear that they are selling too freely, but the display at Ormstown shows that the best still remain with us. One of the troubles of the Show which cures itself but slowly is the fact that comparatively few new exhibitors are added to the lists. We have our large breeders, who enjoy a national reputation, and who make it a point to exhibit, but it is to be hoped that next year at least fifty more new exhibitors will come to Ormstown to compete for the honours.

The Show of 1926 is done. It is now time to start working for the 1927 Show. The results of this year are only a cumulation of the hard labour and planning of the men who successfully administered the shows in past years. The directors for next year have one more Show to add to the experience and popularity of Ormstown, and they should start now to prepare for it. Ormstown Show will never on a sound financial basis until every farmer with high grade stock feels it his duty to exhibit that stock at Ormstown, and until every resident of the District makes it a point to go at least twice to the Show. The goal may be a long way off, but it can be reached.

The Quebec Fisheries

One of the resources of the Province of Quebec which is developing very slowly is that of commercial fishing. This is somewhat surprising for the Grand Banks of Newfoundland are really part of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and in addition the great river itself is well stocked with fish. Nevertheless, in the last calendar year the total catch for the Province was only a trifle over three million dollars. This was a substantial increase over the catch of 1924, but is still a trifling amount when compared with some of the other provinces of Canada.

Down along the North Shore of the lower St. Lawrence the habitants who spend hard lives along the rocky coast line get their living from the cod fishing, and it is in this species of the finnie brethren that the largest increase in value over the catch of 1924 is to be found. However, as the market price for the fresh fish is estimated at $1.75 a hundredweight, it is self-evident that the fishermen will not grow rich rapidly. One of the obstacles in the way is the lack of markets. At the present moment the bulk of the fish caught are sold to large dealers who live on the Island of Jersey, and these firms can practically control the sale price. Attempts in co-operative selling have, in the past, failed because the fishermen have tried to market the wares in the competitive markets of Europe. It is to be hoped that they will turn their efforts towards the Canadian market, especially that of Montreal and surrounding districts.

Coming into the fresh waters of Quebec, the outcast of the fish family leads, for the records for 1925 go to show that the value of eels caught amounted to $103,893. Most of these are exported to the United States where certain nationalities of Europe look upon the eel as a delicacy.

Parliamentary News

Specially Written for the Huntingdon Gleaner.

During the past ten days the House of Commons has shown remarkable speed in the transaction of business. Of course there have been delays while the members discussed opportunities for making political capital, but on the whole the proceedings have moved along with speed. One of the longest discussions took place over the Hudson Bay Railway, going into the third day before it was disposed of.

The Hudson Bay Route

When the vote of $3,000,000 was before the House the divisions crossed all party lines. The first day it came up Mr. Meighen was in Montreal with fifty odd members away with him for platform decoration at the Forum, and Sir Henry Drayton was in the fort. Sir Henry's intentions were excellent but he was embarrassed by two Conservative members from Manitoba who did not the Hudson Bay route interfered with. On Monday the vote came up again, and Mr. Dunning explained that the vote of this year was to put the line in repair and not to extend it. As to the vote he said:

"It is estimated that 950 tons of 80 pound rails will be required to replace those kinked; the amount involved is $39,900; there will be required 650,000 ties at $1.10, a total of $715,000; and the placing of those ties at 35c each will amount to $227,500. Cutting brush on the right of way, $25,000; widening cuts, 50,000 cubic yards, at 80 cents, $40,000; cleaning, $10,000; widening banks and raising sags, 500,000 cubic yards at 90 cents, $450,000; ballasting at the rate of 50 cubic yards per mile a total of 180,000 cubic yards at $1.10 per yard, a total of $198,000. One bridge is required at Comorant Lake, 1,200 feet long, 42 feet wide, the estimated cost of which is $149,500; repairs to trestles and culverts, estimated cost $50,000; repairs to telegraph line, $10,000. It should be understood that the existing Hudson Bay railway simply consists of a pair of rails with none of the necessary operating equipment such as water stations, engine terminals at divisional points and so on. So we are estimating that twelve water stations will be required at a total cost of $132,000. We will need thirty section men's dwellings costing a total of $37,000, thirty bunk houses costing $33,000, and thirty tool houses costing $9,000. We are only allowing for four stations at present in the 332 miles in addition to the present station at Le Pas, and these stations will cost $26,400. Only twenty miles of wire fencing is estimated, to cost $26,000. The total cost of the project is $1,200,000. The estimated cost of the project is $1,200,000, and with regard to the necessary operating facilities we will require an engine terminal at Le Pas costing $200,000; another at mile 136 costing $250,000; and another at mile 296 costing the same amount. The total cost of the project is $1,200,000, and the balance of the $3,000,000 is allowed for engineering and contingencies.

Sir Henry Drayton: How much farther is it to Nelson?

Mr. Dunning: Nelson is 92 miles from the end of steel at mile 332. The grade is built from the end of steel to Nelson but there is no steel beyond mile 332.

Mr. Hannesson: Has the minister an estimate of how much it will cost to complete that 92 miles?

Mr. Dunning: Yes, and perhaps this is the proper place to give that information. It is quite clear, then, that the $3,000,000 now before the House is estimated in accordance with the detail which I have placed on Hansard and will be devoted to conditioning and putting into operating shape the 332 miles of line already has steel. That is this year's work. The information I am now giving in response to the hon. member for Selkirk is with regard to the cost of completing the 92 miles, which is graded, from the present end of steel into Port Nelson. The estimated cost of the project is $1,200,000, and the balance of the $3,000,000 is allowed for engineering and contingencies.

Mr. Stevens: Would the minister also add to the figures he has given, the estimated cost in connection with the channels and various aids to navigation, wharfrage, and such elevator facilities as may be contemplated at Port Nelson?

Mr. Dunning: I do not want to complicate this particular vote, because there will be a discussion of that later, but I think probably it would be as well to have all the information on Hansard. It is estimated that it will cost $6,153,000 to complete the railway. It is estimated that the harbour works at Port Nelson, including elevator accommodation to the extent of 4,000,000 bushels—I would ask my hon. friend to bear in mind that this is not yet decided upon, but the estimate does include provision for it, with accommodation in the harbour for ten ships at the same time, will cost $20,200,000.

The whole range of pros and cons were entered into. Mr. Cahan was very much opposed to it, as indeed he is to almost everything. Dr. Manion made the suggestion that while it was evidently possible to build the line, no one could swear that the straits could be navigated on a regular schedule and suggested that before the Government went ahead and spent more money that a ship of the line be put on the route for a year to sail up and down, and thus prove whether it would be possible to have regular sailings or not. In the end the vote went through and in a flash an item of $14,000,000 for the Welland canal was passed also. All of which goes to show where political capital lies.

The West Indies Agreement
The House of Commons passed the West Indies agreement, and the Senate put it through in short order, so all that remains is the Royal assent to be given. In the House of Commons, the chief opposition to the Agreement came from Mr. Cahan, who earlier in the session had opposed it on the grounds that too large a subsidy would be required, and at the close objected because it appeared that Mr. Robb might try and supply the necessary steamship services without a subsidy. The debate lasted for several hours, chiefly around the steamship tenders. Some months ago the government called for tenders for the services required under the agreement. Tenders were received but they were rejected, and the Minister refused to disclose what the amounts were, arguing that it was not in the public interest to give out maximum figures when he was trying to drive a better bargain. The feature of the proceedings was the non-partisan attitude of Sir Henry Drayton and Hon. H. H. Stevens who were willing to take a middle course and accept the treaty providing the got into an argument over the law of 1921, part of the loving terms being: Mr. Cahan: The hon. member suggests that those sitting on this side of the House have enacted similar legislation in years past. If so, as a new member, I assume no responsibility for it. I am here to act according to my intelligence and judgment, and I do not regard myself as responsible for the wrongs which have been created in the Canadian parliament for the last fifty years by either party.

Mr. Bolvin: My hon. friend need not assume as in the loud tone which he has used that he has no responsibility for the legislation enacted by his hon. friends in the years prior to 1925. Any hon. members who read his speeches during the campaign in his constituency well know that he accepted no responsibility for any acts of the Conservative party prior to then.

Mr. Bourassa: That is why the hon. gentleman was elected.

Mr. Bolvin: For once the hon. member for Labelle and myself entirely agree.

After all was said and done the Bill was passed and has gone to the Senate.

The Smuggling Probe

The closing weeks of the Smuggling investigation have centered their investigation to things around Rock Island, Stanstead, Beebe Plain and Derby Line—in other words "God's Country" in the language of some Townshippers. One gentleman was arrested for refusing to obey the orders of the customs officers. He was consulting with another lawyer he decided that he was wrong and left for Rock Island to give the information desired.

An amusing little thing took place one afternoon. A gentleman from Rock Island was on the stand, and he told his story easily and openly. He was brought up on a motion of no more decent people in Canada than those in the three border villages. Their only "fault" was the habit of smuggling, but he said it was "in the air" there, and they could not be blamed for the habits thus acquired. When he was leaving the stand Hon. Mr. Stevens thanked him for his evidence, and said that it might surprise him to know that he was the first honest, law-abiding citizen from that country that the Committee had had before them.

Mr. Calder interjected the remark that probably Mr. Stevens was not aware that the witness was a lawyer.

"That is most remarkable," said Mr. Stevens—he has no faith in lawyers.

THE BLIND PIG IN QUEBEC

Fifty per cent of the inhabitants of this Province are under Local Option, much of which was obtained by the persistent and faithful labor of parish priests. In the rural districts the people are home-loving and virtuous, and know little of the vices that are tolerated in the cities. President Cordeau, of the Government Liquor Commission, in a recent interview with a representative of "The Toronto Star," said that the beer sold in the 400 taverns and 612 stores was of 9 per cent strength. Said the reporter: "Some people are mystified as to the reason for illegal selling, when such generous provision is made for legal buying."

It's as old as the world," declared Mr. Cordeau, emphatically. "Some people find it more fun buying from a 'blind pig' than from the taverns at 10 o'clock. So after the show they go around to the 'blind pig.' The Quebec Government's liquor representative makes no attempt to deny the existence of the law-breaking bootleggers, whom the Moderationists have all along claimed would be run out of business, if only Ontario would adopt Government Control. And anyone who has been following the Dominion Government's liquor investigation, now under way, must have been amazed and shocked by the bare-faced bootlegging in Quebec.—Adv.

OUR FLAG—THE UNION JACK

Canada's emblem is the Maple Leaf but her flag is that of the British Empire, the Union Jack. Our flag, the Union Jack, is so called because it is formed by the union of three flags, that of Saint George, Saint Andrew, and Saint Patrick, the Patron Saints of England, Scotland and Ireland. Canada as a part of the British Empire can claim this flag as hers, and she has a Coat of Arms on the fly. Certainly no more beautiful banner exists than our own Red, White and Blue. Bright as the rays of morning.

When comes the dawn's first beam.

Within our much loved banner.

The crimson crosses gleam.

Pure as the snowflakes falling.

On earthy morning light.

Beside the crimson crosses.

Appears a cross of white.

Bright as the sky at evening.

When gleam the stars of night.

The blue within our banner.

Enfolds its crosses bright.

Our flag is indeed beautiful, but there is another sense in which we regard it. We talk of dying for the flag. Now much as we love our National Banner, when we speak of it in this way we do not think of the flag alone but of the thing for which it stands, Liberty! Men follow the flag even to the gates of death, fighting for freedom for home and country. In this way the flag is a symbol and its very colors may carry out the idea:

"Red is the blood that rolls, Blue is the sky,

White are the heroes' souls for thee that die."

But we are not always at war.

How then may the flag be an inspiration to us in times of peace.

We may give its colors a different meaning. Red stands for Bravery.

Blue for Truth and White for Purity.

We might ask ourselves the question, "How can I be like the flag?" And the answer is:

"Strong in heart and head,

Like the glowing Red,

Constant firm and true,

As its deep, deep Blue,

Pure in love of right,

As its snowy White."

The Union Jack is the only proper flag to be flown on land in Canada. It has ever been a symbol of freedom and it is little wonder we are proud to fly our colors and say:

"It's only a small bit of bunting,

Yet thousands have died for its honor.

And shed their best blood for the flag."

"You may say it's an old bit of bunting,

You may say it's an old colored rag;

But Freedom has made it majestic,

And time has ennobled the flag."

OLD ENGLISH FOLK DANCES STEADILY GAIN POPULARITY

Society Formed by Cecil Sharp Fosters Traditional Sword, Morris And Country Dances—Interest Spreading Through English-Speaking Word.

LONDON.—The day of the cinema and the radio gives little stimulus to the worker to take up active recreation. It is so easy to slip into a comfortable chair and adjust earphones, or to stroll down to the brightly-lit and inviting entrance of a picture house and see the latest film. And yet recreation, if it is to re-create, must be an active and not a passive affair. There must be doing of some kind, something different from the daily doing, but doing nevertheless.

The forms of active recreation have changed much with the development of industry, and today it is no exaggeration to say that there is only one form in universal use which deserves the name. The universal active recreation is dancing, and it is practiced in town and country alike.

Unfortunately the kind of dancing in which most people indulge is not rich in recreative properties, nor is it, despite that it is the social dance of the day, great social qualities. Yet there are dances available which are truly social in character and which, as a form of recreation, have never been surpassed. The present century has seen in England the birth of a movement which each year becomes more widely known and which extends its influence into the daily lives of an increasing number of people.

The Folk Dance Society. It was on the eve of 1900 that the late Cecil Sharp first encountered a traditional English dance, and the rest of his life is the story of the rebirth of English folk dances. It was hard to find any part of England today where the English dances which he collected are not practiced. They are spreading gradually in the wake of the English tongue to places as far distant from the country of origin as South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, Canada and the United States. But even in England the movement is only in its infancy. The responsibility of furthering it rests with the English Folk Dance Society, which was founded by Cecil Sharp in 1911.

The society is composed of serious enthusiasts who, not content just to dance themselves, must needs have everyone else dancing too. The headquarters of this society is in London, in some part of which, every evening, there are classes of every grade. There are regular dances for members, and when the dances are used for social purposes in parties or halls. Frequent lectures and demonstrations are given, and there are trial classes in which the unlightened may test the claims of their enthusiastic friends. Wherever the society can dance in a hall, it has no hall of its own—there is dancing going on.

And it is not only in London that this happens. There are 43 branches in England and two in America, all well established, with independent activities. Half of these are represented at an all-England festival held two days last winter in London. The many-sidedness and diversity of the displays and the beauty and variety of the dancing were astonishing, even to the promoters of the festival.

English folk dances are of three kinds, sword, Morris and country dances. The sword dances and Morris dances are spectacular, requiring a team of skilled and agile men for their performance. The movements are vigorous and athletic, and the members of the team work as one man, inspired by a common impulse. These two types of dance are worthy of the consideration of any man who delights in actively using his limbs and in responding to the rhythm of a strong tune.

ELECTRIC FARMING BECOMES MORE POPULAR IN BRITAIN

One Enthusiast, R. Borlase Matthews, Uses Power on Farm in 67 Different Ways—500 British Farmers Employ it, And Number Grows.

LONDON.—With the promised development of electric power in Britain, it is not surprising to find R. Borlase Matthews, who is an enthusiast on electro-farming convinced that the future must see electricity applied in manifold ways to the needs of agriculture. Lecturing before the Institution of Electrical Engineers, Mr. Matthews said that, although in other countries nearly a million farmers were employing it, in Great Britain it was still somewhat of a novelty, but over 500 British farmers were using it now, and their numbers were increasing. Over 200 uses for electricity on farms had already been found, and he pointed out his 600 uses for it in 67 different ways. A farm, says Mr. Matthews, should not be looked upon as electrically equipped unless electricity is put to at least a dozen different uses.

In the early stages the housewife is generally an impatient advocate for the use of electricity, for she appreciates light for her house, heat for her cooking and ironing, and power for her laundry work. On some parts of the continent Mr. Matthews said it was rare to find a farm without its electric washer, though these were far cheaper and not so good as those turned out in England.

Half an hour a day could be saved in the winter by the feeding of live stock by the aid of a good light. Poultry-house lighting, too, was now a recognized practice and had been reduced to give from 15 to 43 per cent. increase in egg production during the winter months. The provision of the extra light during the dark days gave the birds ample time to feed, as in the sub-tropical countries whence the domestic fowl originated.

Mr. Matthews said that he had himself obtained new results of commercial importance to the market gardener. Ordinarily, when seedlings were picked out they appeared wilted on the following day and took time to pick up, but when given electric light at noon they appeared fresh and vigorous and had, in fact, developed nearly a week's normal growth overnight. With six hours' light each night daffodils flowered in four days and narcissi in seven days. In other words, the application of electric light had accomplished three to four weeks' growth in four to seven days. The illumination used was 1000-watt gas-filled lamps in large enameled parabolic reflectors placed close above the plants.

The third type, the country dance, is one which men and women dance together, not as isolated couples, careless of others, but as component parts of a larger whole, executing the figures in unison. The movements are easy and natural and the combining of individual couples in this concerted dancing makes it perhaps the best of dances for the people.

Each dance, no matter of what type, has its own individual and traditional tune, and tune and dance have grown up together to live happily ever after. It is often the tunes which capture the ear and give the heart a passing fancy. Beautiful to listen to in themselves, they have already made their mark on much contemporary music. They require good playing, no matter what the instrument, and the dances, if they are to have a fair chance, require good teaching and intelligent treatment.

The English Folk Dance Society owes much of its success to a firm insistence of these requirements, and it exists not only to widen the field for these English dances, but to maintain and raise the quality of the dancing. There have been too many enthusiasts who, in the fervor of the moment, have thrown themselves into a self-imposed mission to convert the masses to the new faith. The result has always been the same—a flash in the pan and silence. These flashes have been going on here and there during the century, but the society's young life, but never once has it departed from the far-sighted and cautious methods first adopted by its founder.

The members of the society have complete faith in their movement, and while they continue to make converts, they are themselves, nothing disturbs their faith. As yet there is no outward and visible sign of this society, other than the dancing which goes on under its guidance. The public have grown accustomed to watch, with unaffected pleasure, the country dancing which takes place in the open air in every part of the country. Every year such an opportunity is given in Hyde Park, where hundreds of folk dancers, from in and about London, come to dance, while thousands watch.

Guards Band to Play. This year on June 19, Hyde Park will have English dancing again, and with an added attraction, for the Coldstream Guards band is to provide the music, and there will be men dancing the Morris and the English sword dances.

The society have one urgent need, and the movement will be handicapped until this need is satisfied. It needs a building of its own, to which English folk can turn for their English dances, and the society is determined to provide this in memory of its founder. Nearly half the necessary funds have been raised.

At the beginning of June, at the New Scala Theater in London, the society holds its Cecil Sharp Festival, to show these beautiful dances at their best and to give an opportunity to some of the more fortunate members of the community to subscribe to an object which will be of lasting benefit.

At present, the only property occupied by the society is the office at 107 Great Russell Street, London, where the administrative work is carried on and where inquiries of every kind are received. One day, doubtless, in the not far distant future, a visitor to England will be directed to the Cecil Sharp Building, the headquarters of the English Folk Dance Society.

Another application which was still in the experimental stage was the artificial lighting and heating of bees in the early spring. The hives were placed inside the house instead of being kept in the open air, the basis of the idea being that strong hives were obtainable when the orchards were in blossom and that thus an additional 17 pounds of honey per hive could be obtained.

Although the capital cost of the plant for electric plowing was high, said Mr. Matthews, practically unlimited power lay behind the plow. Most successful plants were of large size, capable of plowing up to 27 acres per day, whereas a horse could only plow an acre a day. Although plowing was generally looked upon as a seasonal occupation, it had been found that an electric plow could be kept fully occupied for at least 200 days in the year.

The only electrical method of making silage in England was on his own farm, said Mr. Matthews, and by this method certain acids which the farmers objected to were not generated. The improvement he had made was by putting electric tubular heaters into the mass of the silage instead of using merely top and earth plates. By the latter the maximum heating was only reached in 24 hours, whereas with the tubular system the load was kept constant during the whole time.

It was of vital importance, concluded Mr. Matthews, that agriculture should be placed on a sound basis, and the question was well worth the serious investigation of the engineering world.

THE FARMER'S STATIONERY.

Did you ever get a letter from a banker or lawyer written with a pencil or on rough school child's paper? If you did, what do you think of such a letter? Well, farmers are just as much judged by their letters as other business men are.

Name your farm. Have the name printed at the top of your paper and in the corner of your envelope. See your local printer. He will do the job for you at a reasonable cost.

Get a typewriter, if possible. Let one of the older children learn how to use it if you think that you are "too hot in your ways." Typewritten letters on attractive stationery make an impression and command respect and an immediate answer.

The Huntingdon Gleaner Inc.

THE STRONG MAN OF 100 YEARS AGO

From Malone Farmer.

In the early days in this country it was a great boast to be able to say you could down any man that came your way. Years ago the Gleaner published a number of articles about the life of Sir Hiram Maxim who at one time lived in Huntingdon. The Malone Farmer has published a letter from Dr. Harwood of Chalm Falls, telling of one Joe Call, formerly of Malone. The letter being of an entertaining variety we will reprint it here.

I noticed in a recent issue of the Farmer relative to Joseph Call, "the Strong Man," who once lived in Essex county, N. Y. There are still living in Malone and vicinity quite a number of the relatives of Mr. Call, of which your correspondent is one. I will with your permission undertake to write a short and correct sketch of the life of this remarkable man, who not only possessed great physical strength but was a quiet, peaceable man and a good citizen. His relatives that I have referred to above who are now living in the vicinity, are the descendants of Mrs. Betsy Bigelow Seaver, a niece of Mr. Call, and mother of the late Col. Joel Seaver and John Seaver, of Malone; and the descendants of James Bigelow, Esq., of West Bangor, brother to Mrs. Seaver, and nephew of "Joe" Call.

I have many records of the Call's, several others have given considerable time and work to compiling records of various lines of this family; but none have been so painstaking in their research as Prof. Wm. S. Mills, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who, in company with Simon T. Call, of Elmira, Ill., published a "Genealogical History of the Call Family in the United States" in 1908. I will draw from all of these sources in writing a brief sketch of "Joe" Call.

Joseph Call, the eldest son of James Call, by his third wife, Anna Powers, was born in Woodstock, Vt., Mar. 31, 1781. At the time of the marriage of James Call and Anna Powers, the husband was 58 years of age, and the wife 15 years old. How the marriage of persons of so dissimilar age could produce the strongest man of his time is a subject for those who make a study of such problems.

James Call had reared a large family of children by his second wife, Hannah Masters; the eldest of them was Abigail, born in 1758 in New Hampshire, married Joel Bigelow, in 1775. Joel and Abigail were the ancestors of the Seavers and Bigelows already mentioned in this sketch. James Call served in the American army of the Revolution as did six or seven of his sons by his second wife. One of these sons was John M. Call, who served nine years in the American army and was a trusted aide of General Washington. His grandson, Rev. Samuel Call, was for many years one of the ablest ministers in the Methodist Episcopal church in Northern New York. It will be seen that in all of their generations the Calls were of the best type of New Englanders.

Joseph Call is said to have been six feet three inches in height and to have weighed about 275 pounds. Numerous stories are told of his astonishing physical strength, which equaled the combined strength of six ordinary men. But he was a Christian gentleman in the best sense of the word, and never employed his powers in exhibition of the brutal instinct.

If I had space, I could recount many a story of his great strength that his nephew, my grandfather Bigelow, told me when I was young and staying with him. Grandfather Bigelow was a large, powerful man, and only nine years younger than his (half) uncle Joe. Grandfather said that in his best days, his uncle would seize him with thumb and finger hold of each shoulder and lay him over from side to side under a rising forest, as an ordinary man would a two-year-old child, and he was helpless to resist.

Joe Call was by trade a millwright, and at one time he had four men working for him. After squaring a long timber he asked his men to take it to each end—and place it on the foundation. They asked him what he was thinking of. He then told them to stand, two on each end, and he picked up the timber in the middle, man and all, and carried it to its place. Call said he never knew the difference between one man's strength and another's, with whom he had a friendly wrestling match, except one negro at Albany, who could lift a cannon weighing 1000 pounds. Call got him down, but had to work to do it.

Before Mr. Call married, his sister, aged about 20 years, kept house for him. One day after a rainy forenoon she went out to feed her pig which was in an open, uncovered pen—when looking around there appeared to her a wondrous sight. A man on a small horse with a wrestling uniform—such as her country eyes had never beheld rode up beside the pen and saying "Hello, Joe," dismounted and came all the way from Boston to throw "Joe" Call, asked for him. The girl told him Call was her brother and was ten miles away working on a mill. "But," said she, "if he were here, you couldn't throw him, I could handle you myself." Whereupon Mr. Call, who was using a language to her, when she quickly stepped toward him, and seizing the pony with the rider thereon, by one force and one hind fetlock, she tipped the entire outfit over into the wet, filthy pen. Mr. Wrestler crawled out a sorry looking figure and quickly took himself out of sight.

In his younger days Mr. Call was a member of the Baptist church. Later on the Rev. Hosea Ballou, of Barnard, Vt., reasoned him into Universalism, but in his last sickness he re-embraced

HOWICK

Rev. Dr. Robertson of Toronto, one of the outstanding ministers of the United Church and Secretary of Religious Education, occupied Rev. D. McLeod's pulpit on Sunday in the presence of large congregations. In a most interesting manner he dealt with the subject of the training of the young people of the church, giving his experience in several foreign countries. He stated that large as the spread of the Christian religion was, one half of the population had never heard of the Bible. The most popular S.S. hymn, which he heard sung in several languages was "Jesus loves me, this I know." The great extent of the Sunday School work of the United Church was evidenced, he stated, by the fact that it would take 150 years travelling visiting on each Sunday, to visit all the schools. The three agencies for the religious instruction of children in the order of their appearance were the home, the Sunday School and the Church.

The regular monthly meeting of the Georgetown W. M. S. was held Tuesday afternoon at the residence of Mrs. Betsy Bigelow Seaver, a niece of Mr. Call, and mother of the late Col. Joel Seaver and John Seaver, of Malone; and the descendants of James Bigelow, Esq., of West Bangor, brother to Mrs. Seaver, and nephew of "Joe" Call.

I have many records of the Call's, several others have given considerable time and work to compiling records of various lines of this family; but none have been so painstaking in their research as Prof. Wm. Grandfather said that in his best days, his uncle would seize him with thumb and finger hold of each shoulder and lay him over from side to side under a rising forest, as an ordinary man would a two-year-old child, and he was helpless to resist.

Joe Call was by trade a millwright, and at one time he had four men working for him. After squaring a long timber he asked his men to take it to each end—and place it on the foundation. They asked him what he was thinking of. He then told them to stand, two on each end, and he picked up the timber in the middle, man and all, and carried it to its place. Call said he never knew the difference between one man's strength and another's, with whom he had a friendly wrestling match, except one negro at Albany, who could lift a cannon weighing 1000 pounds. Call got him down, but had to work to do it.

Before Mr. Call married, his sister, aged about 20 years, kept house for him. One day after a rainy forenoon she went out to feed her pig which was in an open, uncovered pen—when looking around there appeared to her a wondrous sight. A man on a small horse with a wrestling uniform—such as her country eyes had never beheld rode up beside the pen and saying "Hello, Joe," dismounted and came all the way from Boston to throw "Joe" Call, asked for him. The girl told him Call was her brother and was ten miles away working on a mill. "But," said she, "if he were here, you couldn't throw him, I could handle you myself." Whereupon Mr. Call, who was using a language to her, when she quickly stepped toward him, and seizing the pony with the rider thereon, by one force and one hind fetlock, she tipped the entire outfit over into the wet, filthy pen. Mr. Wrestler crawled out a sorry looking figure and quickly took himself out of sight.

In his younger days Mr. Call was a member of the Baptist church. Later on the Rev. Hosea Ballou, of Barnard, Vt., reasoned him into Universalism, but in his last sickness he re-embraced the Baptist faith, and had the minister write to his mother accordingly which information gave her great comfort. Joseph Call had a family, and there are doubtless families descended from him in the West.

As to the ancestry of James Call, father of Joseph, my grandfather Bigelow told me he was Scotch-Irish and the family name was originally McCall. But Prof. Wm. S. Mills believes him to have belonged to the English family of Calls that settled in Charlestown, Mass., in 1636.

HUNTINGDON

On Sunday, June 13th, the congregation of St. John's Church, Huntingdon, had the privilege of listening to one of its former rectors, the Rev. C. E. Jenkins, B.A., who preached the sermon at the evening service. The Rev. Mr. Jenkins was rector of this parish some eighteen years ago. Since then he has been in charge of different parishes in Ontario, has given his services as chaplain in France during the World War and is at present in Brantford, Ont., where he has been rector of St. John's Church for several years. The large numbers in which the parishioners and members of other denominations attended, testified to the pleasure which it gave them to once more welcome their former rector. Mr. Jenkins took as the text of his inspiring sermon the words of St. John: "God is Love," and enumerated the ways in which love is manifested, manifested in nature, in personal experience and in revelation. His closing thought—that God's love remained in spite of our unworthiness—was not only a comfort for the present but also a message of comfort for the future.

The first auto accident to occur on the cement road this year happened on Sunday afternoon, when an American car collided with a Canadian car. The former contained several people who were badly shaken up; one man was cut about the head and was taken to the Malone hospital. Both cars hit the ditch. The American car was trucked back to Malone while the Montreal car was towed to the garage of J. & K. Le's garage for repairs. Road-hogging was given as the cause of the accident.

It is always a pleasure to hear of the sons of Huntingdon receiving promotions in the various paths of life. This week it is our pleasure to record what appeared in the Bell Telephone house organ, the "Blue Bell" under the reproduction of the likeness of Mr. Herb. Partridge.

The town boys played a good game of baseball with the Kensington team on Saturday afternoon. Although the former won 11-5 the game was in no way one-sided.

A close call to fire occurred on Saturday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roy McWhinnie. Mrs. McWhinnie went out the back door of the house and upon returning noticed that the garbage barrel was on fire. Mr. McWhinnie was close at hand, and easily extinguished the fire with a pail or so of water. The barrel was near the house and if the fire had not been noticed at such an early stage it would have undoubtedly spread to the house. The cause of the fire remains a mystery unless it was caused by oily rags causing spontaneous combustion.

The following notification is to the owners of rural mail boxes, has just been issued by the Post Office Department and unfortunately to a marked degree many of our rural mail patrons are negligent of their duties. The regulation is: "Each box when issued will have conspicuously stencilled upon it on both sides the name of the patron and the stencil with which it is done will be enclosed in the box. It will be the duty of the patrons to see that their names are hereafter kept legible on their boxes at their own expense." Look up your stencil now and have the work pointed up. It is really a good advertisement for very farmer.

While there is comparatively little building going on in Huntingdon at the present time, Mr. C. H. Lamb has just completed a piece of repair work to his store, which is not only a credit to Mr. Lamb but to the tradesmen who did the work. The old cold storage room has been replaced by a fine, large, sanitary, and well ventilated room. In order to make sure that at all times sufficient ice is on hand a track and hoist, have been installed which will permit much larger pieces of ice being placed in the boxes.

The Rev. C. E. Jenkins, B.A., who preached the sermon at the evening service at St. John's Anglican Church, Brantford, Ont., were the week end guests of Mrs. C. B. Kelly. MRS. JOHN SCOTT SPEAKS FOR THE "FEMININE" bill,—not that it would have passed—but we wanted the matter discussed. We circulated the members of the League and later it was our intention to have it apply to other towns and cities. So Mr. Dillon arranged for a meeting with the Executive of the Montreal City Council. To our amazement the Executive passed our request unanimously. The matter then came before the City Council and the Council promptly turned it down. With all charity it looks as if the Executive would not have favoured it had they not known the Council would oppose it.

This matter was taken to the Legislature and a majority of the Assembly voted in favour of the Bill and a lot of people thought we had got it. However the Legislative Council still had the final say. A small delegation of women went to Quebec to press the matter before the Council. We arrived at 7 a.m. and were told to appear at 9 o'clock. They kept us there all day without an interview and then we were asked to come back in the evening. Finally they took the matter up at a quarter to nine. They turned the women out and locked the doors. It was turned down. And that was after all our trouble and expense. There were about twenty of us went down at an average cost of $30, and we had to pay our own expenses. All was not lost, however, as the experience made friends for us. They were so rude to the women and so unreasonable, a great many men were not in favour of the measure say now that they will support our demand.

What can you do? You can get after your representative and pledge him and make him promise that if this measure comes up or any similar measure, to vote for it.

The audience were much impressed with Mrs. Scott's talk and after discussion it was moved by Miss A. Rose, and seconded by Mrs. W. L. Carr that a resolution from Huntingdon Branch favoring the granting of Provincial franchise to women be introduced at the Convention of Women's Institutes to be held at Macdonald College on June 15th, 16th and 17th. Mrs. W. K. Phillips, who had been nominated as a delegate earlier in the meeting, consented to sponsor the resolution at the convention.

A sincere and hearty vote of thanks to Mrs. Scott for her delightful and instructive address was moved by Mrs. C. B. Kelly and seconded by Mrs. S. Davis.

ROBSON

Messrs. Henry Stewart and Willis Clarke spent Friday in Montreal.

Mrs. M. J. Hamill is very ill at time of writing.

Miss Alma Bustard was the week end guest of her friend, Miss Lily Clark.

Dr. Smith of Montreal occupied the pulpit Sunday. Rev. Mr. Thomas is expected shortly. The induction is to take place in St. Andrew's United Church, Hemmingford, Friday evening July 2nd.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Beattie were Sunday guests at the home of Walter Barr.

Word has been received by relatives stating that Mrs. John Ryan of Kansas City, formerly Miss Julia Dwyer of Coburn, has passed away. She leaves to mourn her loss two daughters, of Kansas City and three sisters of Coburn. Two years ago Mrs. Ryan visited her sisters.

Little Helena and Beattie Barr are suffering from whooping cough.

I suppose you know a married woman in Quebec does not own her body, her money or her children. I was told of a woman who broke her leg at two o'clock in the afternoon. No surgeon could perform an operation without her husband's consent and he could not be located until after 9 o'clock. There have been cases where the husband could not be reached in time and the woman died when an operation might have saved her. Is it not ridiculous to think that women who are the mothers of the race have not enough say about their own bodies to say, "Yes, I wish to be operated upon?"

Then if no marriage contract exists, the husband has complete administration of his wife's property and can even collect her wages.

The women of Quebec have at last found a champion for their cause in the person of Mr. Jas. Dillon, a young lawyer in Quebec. We were somewhat fearful lest his friendly attitude would hinder his political career. We are very pleased to note, however, that he

WOMEN ACTIVE IN MANY TRADES

Great Britain Has Nearly 5,000,000 Employed in Industry.

LONDON.—Within a few short months of the armistice, the women called up to fill the places of men during the war, had gone back by the thousand to their ordinary trades, such as the cotton, wool, and hosiery industries, or had returned to take up the care of their homes. The impression left of the capacity of women to fill responsible positions requiring technical skill and knowledge, had, however, made a definite mark, and had not been for the trade depression following the war, the history of women in industry today might be a very different story.

The worsted and the wool trades in Great Britain employ about one-third the number of women absorbed by the cotton trade. Hosiery hands number normally about 60,000 and the rapidly growing artificial silk industry is attracting many women.

The metal trades have drawn more workers into their ranks of late years, the great increase in the bicycle and motor trades, the stamping and pressing processes of much of the metal work formerly cast, having made all the difference. To the possibility of women being employed in various branches of metal manufactures.

The electric light industry, in which women undertake the mounting of the filament and the air exhaustion in the bulbs, is work suitable to women and fairly well paid, even if chances of outstanding promotion are few. In one London factory alone 3000 girls are employed. In the pottery district of Staffordshire many thousands of women are employed and a number are to be found in glass works.

In the more highly skilled trades, 100,000 women were in printing and bookbinding trades in 1921. All kinds of the stamping and printing is done in many factories by girls. In the principal boot and shoe making centers, women are largely employed. The work of fitting and sewing uppers is highly skilled work. Light shoes and slippers are made by women labor to a large extent, and all the finishing, the trimming and packing is done by women and girls, but though good wages are paid for private hand-sewn work, wages for women in boot factories are never very high.

A STICKER FOR THE RULES

A man rushed into the office of the manager of the Montreal Zoo. "You keep all kinds of livestock here, don't you?" he panted.

"Yes, we have specimens of nearly everything," he was told.

"All right. Wrap me up twenty-seven thousand cockroaches, about a quarter of a million moths, a pound of crimson ramblers, a handful of mosquitoes and a bushel of flies."

"Good Heavens!" yelled the zoologist, "what do you want of a menagerie like that?"

"I am going to move," replied the nut.

"Yes, yes; go on."

"Well, I can't move until I get those things, because my lease states I must leave the apartment in exactly the same condition as I found it."

"HEARTS AFIRE"

BY MAY CHRISTIE.

The Brilliant Novelist of Modern Society.

"I brought you a cup of tea, sir," mumbled old Nannie at the door of the laboratory, tray in hand.

Peter looked up from his papers, absently. "Oh, yes. Very good of you, I'm sure." He rose at once and took the tray from her, as though she'd been a duchess.

Old Nannie, in her queer way, adored him. "I'll lay your supper out, before I go sir. In the sitting-room."

"Thank you, I shan't want anything till after half past eight."

The old woman stood, hesitating, a hand on the door-knob. Should she or should she not, tell him of that "hussy's" advent? He had taken Virginia's dollar it is true, but, according to her code of ethics, that involved no special loyalty to the designing creature. Her master went on scribbling, untouched tea beside him. Yes, he'd be heaps better with a wife to look after him, thought the old woman, but never one like that Miss Virginia Dale, or whatever high-flown name she called herself. She was no good, not she. Hadn't the third housemaid at the Towers, who was Nannie's granddaughter, and even though a grandchild, like all young gals were nowadays, had good commonsense, hadn't Minnie told her grandma that Miss Dale was no real lady, despite her airs? And it was plain to see, the way she chased young Mr. Armstrong, and he so unsuspicious.

He looked up now, smiling abstractedly at her. "Well, what is it, Nannie? Anything you want to say?"

"Nothing sir, except that this morning a lady called to see you. I told her as I didn't know rightly when you'd be back."

"Who was she?" For a foolish moment he hoped it might be Prudence.

"The lady from the Towers, sir. The one with the grand clothes and perfume."

Disapproval was in every line of Nannie's old nut-cracker face. Peter could scarcely keep a smile back.

"That's all right, Nannie. You needn't wait." He nodded her away. "And don't admit any callers, please."

The visitor had been Virginia Dale, without a doubt. Odd how the girl sought out his company! Then he forgot the incident in complete immersion in his task. It was after eight o'clock when he had finished, and he just caught the last mail at the local postoffice, dropping his bulky envelope in the postman's sack. He took a long walk after that, and it was almost half past nine before he returned to his abode. A light was burning in the sitting-room. Now that was odd, as old Nannie never stayed later than eight o'clock! Peter let himself in by the latch-key, and to his amazement—heard a woman's voice gaily greet him with:

"Welcome, Peter!"

"Unconventional!"

"To what," said Peter, Armstrong, coolly, one hand on the door-knob of the little sitting-room of Pear Tree Cottage, and a flash of steel in his usually calm eyes. "To what am I indebted for the unexpected pleasure of this visit?"

The fact that Virginia Dale—her beauty enhanced by candlelight—was at her loveliest at that moment, and that most men would have found her irresistible weighed with him not one jot. He despised her for the huntress that she was, and some of the scorn showed clearly on his clean-cut, manly face.

Virginia, who had risen to her feet at the head of the little table, herself had arranged so artistically for their supper, that she contrived to keep the coy smile on her lips, although uncomfortable qualms assailed her heart.

"I came to keep you company, you hermit!" She tilted up her head provocatively. "And I'm beginning to think you're not exactly pleased to see me." The titter that followed this challenging remark as good as stated that it was madness to doubt for a moment, the fact that all men must be pleased to see her!

But Peter's stern face did not relax a jot. "Might I inquire how you got in?"

"Through the back door."

"A-ah!" He drew the monocle, visible out, significantly, and his unexpected visitor flushed at his intonation.

"You aren't very cordial, I must say." She tossed her head. "And I brought you such a lovely supper. Caviare—I've made the toast, and pate-de-foie gras sandwiches, and cold salmon I coaxed from the cook, and a bottle of claret."

Peter's lip curled. "If on charitable mission, why not take the food to a more deserving cause? As for myself, it's wasted on me. I like plain fare and Nannie has already prepared my supper."

Virginia very nearly lost her temper. But, struggling for dignity, she contrived to say: "I'm sorry if I've intruded where I'm so obviously not wanted, and that my little 'surprise party' has failed. I'll go at once." Then, with a sudden brain-wave, and realizing that coyness as a weapon with this man had forever failed, she added: "I only came because I wanted your advice on an important matter. I'd never have come for myself. It's for someone else, who's in great trouble. You know the Page girl who lives at Green Gables?"

Ah! that shot went home. A quick concern, a vivid interest, replaced the cool scorn in his eyes.

"Nothing happened to her?" For the life of him, he couldn't keep the eagerness out of his voice.

"You say she is in trouble?"

"Yes. Will your majesty condescend to sit down at the table, for I'm hungry. I'll tell you all about it then."

Peter seated himself reluctantly. The whole proceedings were highly unconventional, but he must get at the bottom of her cryptic utterances about the one girl in the world who mattered. "You can give me a cup of coffee, please. I don't want anything else."

Virginia saw his perturbation, and she remembered Mrs. Vansittart's words of warning. She must tread warily here. "Of course you understand that I don't in the least believe her guilty," she began, assuming a timid, depreciatory manner quite foreign to her usual self-assurance. "But the whole affair was most unfortunate. And then, on the top of it, her running away from home—"

"Great heavens! What do you mean?" Peter half rose to his feet. "Speak out, can't you?"

So Virginia, immensely chagrined over this proof of his deep interest in the "Page girl," told her interest—and told it cleverly. She was "frightfully sorry," for the girl. They were all "down" on her, and of course circumstances did look rather odd—but she—

Virginia—had stood by Prudence Page and always would, etc., etc.

"And between you all, you've driven the child—that innocent child—out of her home?" half shouted Peter, not caring in the slightest what Virginia thought of him.

"Not I, Peter, dear." Virginia took advantage of his agitation to lean over and clasp his hand in her own perfumed, highly-mannered fingers.

With a wary eye on the fleeting moments, she kept him on the subject of Prudence's downfall.

"She'll be home tomorrow, sure as sure!" She tried to reassure her visitor.

It was nearly half past ten o'clock when Peter seeing the time—said hurriedly: "Say, you'll have to go, or all the tongues in the neighbourhood will be wagging! I appreciate your coming, now that I know your motive—" he got that out somehow, and he meant it too.

"I'm going to do what I can to help the Pages find their daughter, and clear her—though of course it is absurd to think—to suspect—"

Just then, there was a flash of lightning, and a terrific peal of thunder shook the frail old cottage. Virginia, who hated storms and whom thunder and lightning literally prostrated, screamed and hid her face. "Oh! Oh! We'll be killed! We'll be killed!"

"It's all right," Peter rasped, his shaking guest. He was worried that he couldn't get her away at once for fear of Mrs. Grundy—but he couldn't turn her out into the storm, especially as the rain was coming down in bucket-full. "It will pass soon."

It didn't pass, however. It grew worse. It seemed as though the very heavens had opened.

Virginia's fears were not assumed. She clung to Peter as if he were her one hope of safety, begging him not to leave her for an instant, forcing him to promise she could stay until the storm had ended. After nearly an hour had passed, and the thunder and lightning and rain showed no signs of abating, he offered to run to another house and call up Mrs. Vansittart, reassuring her of Virginia's safety.

At that, even in the midst of her terror, a sly, calculating look showed for a moment in Virginia's eyes, had Peter only seen it. "I'm often as late as this. Don't leave me. I couldn't bear to be here, all by myself. . . . I couldn't. She clung to him, and he could see her bosom rise and fall in uncontrollable agitation.

"Conventions must be ignored, then," he tried to reassure her, but he felt uncomfortable, and cursed this inconvenient storm that detained her in his cottage to this hour. Time passed. The storm did not abate, but only seemed to grow the fiercer. A tree was struck by lightning in a neighbouring field, and once Peter thought the cottage itself had been hit, it rocked so drunkenly. To make matters worse, too, Virginia herself collapsed, and lay moaning on the sofa, clinging for dear life to his arm. It was after 3 a.m. before a lull came, and he contrived to get her started back to Winston Towers.

What the headlines told Peter. At ten o'clock in the morning, Peter Armstrong sat in the corner of a rail-road coach that was bowling him swiftly up to town, his thoughts gravitating between Prudence Page, and the highly awkward situation last night's storm had got him into. He was no special stickler as to etiquette, but he hated to think he might have been the unwilling means of gossip centring unpleasantly around Virginia Dale. He had hitherto misjudged Virginia. She wasn't the artificial creature he had thought her, quite devoid of heart or womanly impulse. Why! before the storm prostrated her, she had shown herself to be a girl full of sympathy for the other girl, kind and considerate, and anxious to vindicate the other's honor. It was the very irony of fate that, having come to his cottage on such a praise-worthy mission, and being unavoidably storm-bound, Virginia's own reputation might now be at stake! What could he do about it? And where was Prudence Page?

As Virginia, with obvious commonsense, had pointed out to him, it had been stupid of the child to run away, thus giving a semblance of truth to the hateful tale in circulation! Her action had affected others, too. Virginia had told him that never in all her life had she seen a man so stricken as Prudence's father, and as Mrs. Page, the poor soul was utterly prostrated, she believed. It was Prudence's flight that had brought Virginia on the errand which led her to be storm-bound, and, as ill luck would have it, hadn't they encountered Talkative Tom, the village gossip, on their way up to Winston Towers after dawn, and the tale of Virginia's nocturnal sojourn at Pear Tree cottage would be common property by now.

A wave of resentment entered Peter's thoughts of Prudence, who indirectly had brought about this "impassé." But, just the same, he yearned to find her.

The train darted through the sunlit landscape which bore everywhere traces of last night's storm. Many trees had been blown down, and a lot of damage had been done.

Peter arrived in town at last, and had his lunch. As he emerged from the restaurant en route to buy his chemicals, he made a purchase of an early edition of the evening paper. Running like a refrain through his mind was the urge to find Prudence, and though there wasn't the faintest chance her doings would be chronicled in the daily press, a vague hope stirred him that there might be news of her. A heading on the front page caught his eye immediately. "Terrible Fire in City Buildings." Well that was to be expected, wasn't it? One didn't have a storm like that for nothing. Then the sub-heading: "Young Girl Caught in Blaze."

Stupid how his heart thumped at the recollection of another "young girl," though of course it wasn't.

Heavens! It was! Same name! There must be some mistake. . . . a mistaken identity. . . . No! No! The description tallied!

Clutching the paper, physically unable to read another word of it, Peter staggered against the wall of a building.

"What's up, Guvnor?" asked the newsboy sympathetically.

Peter did not answer.

"Something in the paper, eh?" the boy advanced, and took the sheet from the shaking fingers.

Peter pointed at the headlines dumbly.

"Oh, that!" The newsboy, hardened to calamities, shrugged his thin shoulders. "Nasty, wot? But nobody seriously hurt, so way wot?"

Peter came to. "Did you say nobody was hurt? Here, quick, give me the paper." He grabbed it from the boy.

"Nobody badly hurt, sir. Honest. I'm telling you the truth. Young gal brought down from the eighth floor—no fire escape and alone in the building she was."

Peter's eye raced down the sheet. Beyond the bald statement that Prudence Page was in a New York hospital, there was nothing that might give a clue to her condition.

The description of her rescue had been lurid, and the reporters had given all the space to that, and to the fire itself, the damage being estimated at $500,000.

"What hospital?" cried Peter. "Where is she?"

"We'll give you the address if I tell you, Guvnor," blurted back theurchin. "A pal o' mine who was there when the ambulance came, told me this morning."

Peter pushed a bill into his hand. "Quick! The address!"

The boy's fingers curled round the money. "She's in a ward at the Flower Hospital. The bus will take you down in fifteen minutes."

But Peter had already hailed a taxi, and was off.

Her Steady

When Prudence, joggling in the ambulance to the Flower Hospital, caught sight of her own reflection in a looking-glass that hung on the wall, she gave a cry of terror.

"That isn't me! That isn't me!" A coal black face—the eyes showing with a strange white gleam in the surrounding darkness—gazed menacingly at her. And—merciful heavens! the creature in the mirror had no hair! She sank back on the pillow, trembling while the nurse bent over her and tried to soothe her.

"Don't be alarmed, dear. People always look like that when they've been in a fire. The smoke and dirt you know. We'll wash it off when ever we get to the hospital, and you'll be your old self again."

"But my hair—Prudence put a hand up to what had been her crowning glory. It was gone!

The Sealed Chassis "Shower Bath" furnishes striking proof of McLaughlin-Buick dependability.

It may be difficult to believe that any motor car chassis could run under its own power with water hitting it in a drenching shower.

But the McLaughlin-Buick chassis did it. Water cannot get in, dirt cannot reach McLaughlin-Buick operating parts. Even the electrical wiring is sealed inside waterproof, fireproof, flexible tubing.

McLaughlin-Buick is ready for any road and any weather, thoroughly prepared to give McLaughlin-Buick owners thousands and thousands of care-free, trouble-proof miles.

The new low GMAC financing rates are available to purchasers of McLaughlin-Buick on time.

In no time," said the kindly nurse. "The flames must have got it." Prudence's lips trembled at the recollection of her terrible escape—the dizzy descent on the 85 foot ladder. "Was the fireman hurt?" she whispered. "I don't—mind about my hair if he's safe!" "He's all right. Lie still and rest."

Afterwards, in the hospital, another nurse looked after her.

Prudence didn't want her people to be told about the fire. The excitement of the news might kill her mother.

The nurse looked at her in amazement. "As like as not, it'll be in all the papers, dear. We'd better telegraph."

Prudence gave in. She was too weak to argue, and a tremendous longing overcame her to see her mother's beloved face, to hear her reassuring voice close to her. She had acted wrongly in running off. A coward's part! The fire had been her punishment. But oh! that terrible accusation at Winston Towers! She couldn't return to her home until she was cleared in the eyes of everyone! Everyone! That included Peter Armstrong! Strange how she no longer cared what Earl Traymore thought of her! But oh! she longed for Peter's good opinion. She couldn't bear to go down in his estimation.

It was nearly ten o'clock before the wire was sent off to her people, and at that time Peter Armstrong all unknowing was on his way to New York City.

"Keep her quiet all morning," was the doctor's orders when he made his rounds.

Prudence was in a semi-private ward its only occupant. The other bed was vacant.
