Holstein Club Field Day Held McCartney Farm Very Successful Event

Large Number People Braved Rain And Mud To Attend Huntingdon - Ormstown Club Events Saturday

Placings by Goodhue

Raymondale Farm Manager Of Vaudreuil Took Charge Of Various Competitions

Huntingdon-Ormstown Holstein Breeders' Club, despite inclement weather, held a successful field day on Saturday, at the farm of W. J. McCartney, Anderson's Corners. A surprising number of people braved the rain and mud and the juniors especially turned out in large numbers. Clarence Goodhue, Manager of Raymondale Farm, Vaudreuil, made the placings in the judging competition. His judgment in Holstein cattle is accepted by a great many people and this year will include the exhibitors at Springfield, Mass., but he surprised some of our seniors. His invitation to ask questions and provoke discussion on the placings made did not bring the response desired. Possibly those interested did not realize how much Mr. Goodhue enjoys an argument on the comparative qualities of cattle. Prize winners were:

Girls' class—1, Ruth Crutchfield, purse; 2, Phyllis Nussey, chocolates; 3 Laura McCartney, 50 lbs. flour; 4, Janet McDougall, 25 lbs. Chick Feed.

Boys' class—1, Lindsay Cullen, $2.50; 2, William Todd, $1.; 3, Archie McKell, $1.; 4, Preston Nussey, 25 lbs. Chick Feed.

Senior class—1, Mac Henderson, walking stick; 2, H. W. Hanson, 50 lbs. flour; 3, Geo. Pringle, stepladder; 4, Gerald Henderson, Roaster.

Guessing competition—Wm. Todd, 25 lbs. Chick Feed.

The prizes offered were made possible by the generosity of the following who kindly assisted by their contributions: Pringle, Stark & Co., Canadian Bank of Commerce, Ormstown, Grant McLaren, Vincent Bakery, A. Beaulieu, Louis Forget, A. Beaudin & Son, J. R. Campbell, R. E. Walsh and McDonald & Robb. Another field day will be held next week.

Another Promotion For C. W. Baker of Sherwin-Williams

The appointment of Charles W. Baker, well-known Montreal sales executive, as General Sales Manager of the Sherwin - Williams Company of Canada Limited was announced recently by D. A. Whittaker, Vice-President and Managing Director of the company. Mr. Baker's promotion has been rapid. He entered the company in 1917 as a junior in the Sales Department, advancing through various positions to the post of chief clerk. In 1929 he was appointed Advertising Manager, and in 1931 was again promoted to Trade Sales Manager for the Eastern Division. Mr. Baker became assistant to the Vice-President and Managing Director, in 1932. Mr. Baker will have charge of all sales activities and development plans. He is president of the Advertising Club of Montreal. Mr. Baker's rapid success has been followed with keen interest by his many friends from this district who are always glad to learn of his promotions. Mrs. L. A. Waddell, Covey Hill, is a sister.

Since New Treaty Many Horses Sold

The new Canada-United States reciprocal trade pact in force since January of this year has resulted in a boom in the export of Canadian horses, 900 having been shipped out via Lacolle, Cantic and Hemmingford in the past three months.

The duty on horses was reduced from $30. each to $20. when they are valued at under $150. Above that valuation the impost is 20 per cent. Borden's are replacing trucks with horses in cities, and that company is purchasing 4300 horses.

Hemmingford Youth Injured In Car Upset

Well-Presented Pageant Was Feature United Church Easter Service

On Tuesday last Clifford Fewster, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Fewster, received severe cuts about the face when the car in which he was riding overturned into the ditch. He was thrown from the back seat through the windshield. Upon Dr. Gonyea's advice Clifford was taken to the Champlain Valley Hospital, Plattsburg, N. Y., where his injuries were attended to. He is now making favorable progress towards recovery.

The large number of worshippers who attended St. Andrew's United Church, Hemmingford, on Easter Sunday were greatly impressed by the beautiful floral decorations, including cut flowers and potted plants which were loaned for the occasion by the many members and friends of the church, and helped so much to create a spring-like atmosphere for the inspiring services.

At the morning service, as the minister, the Rev. Victor Rose gave the call to worship, a large cross placed at the rear of the chancel was illuminated and remained lighted throughout the worship. Two verses of the triumphal hymn "The strife is o'er, the battle done" sung by Mrs. S. Dunlop as an introit served to set the inspiring note upon which the service was conducted. Other choral contributions added much to the beauty and effectiveness of the worship. Mr. Rose took for his subject the question "Is He risen?" and based his sermon on a triple text: "'He is risen!'—The Announcement at the Empty Tomb. 'Is He risen?'—The Modern Question. 'If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching in vain.' —The Christian answer."

Some time before the hour of Evening Worship all seats were taken and extra chairs had to be placed in the aisles to accommodate the large congregation which had come to participate in the service. In place of the usual sermon the pageant "An Unshadowed Cross" was most effectively given by a group of fifteen characters under the able direction of Mr. Selby Dunlop. During the devotions which preceded the pageant, a resume was given by the minister, emphasizing its worshipful significance.

District Ayrshire Club Boosts Promotion Work Provincial Organization

Resolution Passed At Annual Meeting To Give One Half Parent Association Grant To Provincial Group

The Howick-Huntingdon Ayrshire Club held its annual meeting in the Town Hall, Ormstown, on Thursday afternoon. During the past year the Club expended $222.81. The major expenditures were for three tattoo sets, prize money for the local exhibitions, and the field-day at Mr. McEwen's. The Club has a balance on hand of $114.27. The Ayrshire Club is financed through grants received from the parent Association. In 1935 grants amounted to $155.25.

For 1936 the directorate decided that a budget should be drawn, and in preparing same it was unanimously agreed that the $75 formerly provided for exhibition purposes should be reduced to $15, this amount to apply as usual towards the Donald Budge Memorial calf competition held at Ormstown Exhibition. It was felt that the donating of special prizes for grade Ayrshire classes at Ormstown was not proving as beneficial as might have been expected, therefore it should be discontinued for what is believed will work to better advantage for club members.

During the Ormstown Exhibition week of 1935 a Province of Quebec Ayrshire Cattle Club was organized in Huntingdon. This Club has as its president, G. Toupin; Douglas Ness, Vice-President and Gerard Tremblay, Sec'y.-Treas. In order that this Provincial Club may properly function it must have funds. The various District Ayrshire Clubs have been circularized asking them to consider sanctioning one-half of their grant from the parent association to be devoted to the Provincial Club. The Provincial Club agenda calls for formation of new clubs, re-organizing inactive clubs, advertising throughout the Province for the betterment of Provincial Ayrshire breeders and finally to work in conjunction with other Provincial breeding clubs in general promotion work.

The meeting unanimously passed the resolution sanctioning 50% of the grant money from the Parent Association to be given to the Province of Quebec Ayrshire Club.

A recommendation for a change in the grants pertaining to the Quebec Bull Policy was discussed, and decided that an expression of the meeting be forwarded to the Quebec Department of Agriculture for its further consideration.

J. D. McDougall and Chas. Moe reported upon the founding of a calf club at Ormstown. It is believed that very shortly Ormstown will have two distinct calf clubs, one to be an Ayrshire Club and the other a Holstein Club under the direct organization of Mr. George Collum. With the extra Club so organized it will permit more boys and girls to exhibit calves at the Ormstown exhibition.

Agronomist Pelletier of Huntingdon reported progress in organizing a calf club in the Hemmingford area. He regretted to state that he had met with little success in such an organization scheme in Huntingdon.

The Club year ending was changed from Dec. 31st to March 31st.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, J. M. Wallace; Vice-Pres., John Dickson; Sec'y.-Treas., A. H. Taylor; Directors: Wm. Greenshields, Robert Templeton, Doug. A. Ness, Gilbert McMillan, H. E. Wilson, Ross Pringle, W. Churchill, and the District Agronomists; Auditor, Adam L. Sellar.

At the meeting of the directorate, which followed the general meeting, it was decided that the customary donations to calf clubs be discontinued; but where new clubs were formed the customary $10 be voted for the first year. The Ormstown Club will receive this donation.

For the special "Herd Sire Number" of the Canadian Ayrshire Review to be published in May, the Club decided to carry a double page spread advertising the Ayrshire cattle from "The Scotland of America" district. In connection with this advertisement all members of the Howick-Huntingdon Ayrshire Club are to inform the secretary of the number of Ayrshire cattle they have on their respective farms. All the names of the members, their addresses and number of Ayrshire cattle stocked will appear on this advertisement with the general advertising text matter.

A field-day is to be held on or near August first.

Good Curling Season Ends At Ormstown

Year Officially Closed With Election of New Officers And Banquet

On Tuesday evening, April 7th, the Ormstown Curlers held their annual end of the season supper in the club rooms, when fifty members and friends sat down to enjoy the delicious dishes prepared by their brother curlers. President Jas. D. Bryson ably acted as chairman for the evening and called on many of the men present to express their views of the past season at the curling club, and one and all were of the opinion that it was one of the best years yet, and although the play came to an unexpected end before the game committee was quite ready, as seventeen games remain to be played in club competitions before a winning rink can be declared, the prizes will be held over until another curling season comes around.

Secretary F. S. Rugar gave the financial statement and the election of officers and committees formed. Honorary President, W. G. McGerrigle, President, Dr. W. S. McLaren; Vice-President, Dr. T. J. Quintin; Secretary Treasurer, F. S. Rugar; Match committee: Alfred Soucy, W. R. Graham, D. F. McIntyre, Ivan Barrington, F. S. Rugar; Ice and Rink committee: M. S. Mulvaney, Wm. Finlayson, H. G. McLaren, F. S. Rugar. Reception committee: W. G. McGerrigle, Armand Brunet, J. R. Campbell, J. M. Darby, H. B. Patton; Refreshment committee: Wm. Finlayson, W. R. Graham, H. L. Bradley, Alfred Soucy, Ivan Barrington, Geo. Cartier; Membership: G. P. Osmond, Frank Hope, H. G. McLaren, G. E. Baird, H. H. Chambers, J. M. Darby, F. S. Rugar; Finance committee: Dr. T. J. Quintin, H. G. McLaren, Alfred Soucy, W. R. Graham, Jas. D. Bryson, Dr. W. S. McLaren; Nominating committee: President, Vice-President, Secretary, F. S. Rugar with power to add two to the committee.

Mr. McGerrigle offered a pair of his curling stones for single competition play for next season, to be the possession of the winner so long as he remained a member of this club.

A hearty vote of thanks was given the retiring officers and three cheers were given to the supper committee who so ably provided the good things for the evening's enjoyment.

Half Million Army, Navy Lottery Tickets Taken In Seizure At Chateaugay

Lake Champlain To Saint Francis Lake Seaway Is Endorsed

Representatives of thirteen Northern New York Chambers of Commerce unanimously endorsed the proposed Lake Champlain seaway connecting the St. Lawrence and Hudson Rivers, Saturday. The New York representatives met at Potsdam on Saturday with seaway officials from Vermont and Minnesota to discuss the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway project. The Lake Champlain seaway is a separate project. Representative Bertrand Snell predicted the seaway treaty with Canada would be approved by the United States Senate at the next session of Congress and called New York City opposition to the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence project "penny wise and pound foolish." "If ratification of the treaty is blocked," he said, "the land-locked central states will find an ocean-going outlet to the sea through some other channel." Snell said the St. Lawrence seaway treaty would be presented to the Senate for ratification next January. A visit to the proposed project will be made May 28.

Raymond Ryan, Chateaugay, Will Face Charges Of Possessing, Transporting Concealing Consignment

Truck Taken Monday

Tickets Placed In Stamped Envelopes Ready To Mail To All Parts Country

A truck containing 500,000 Quebec Army and Navy Veteran lottery tickets on the English derby to be run at Epsom Downs May 27 was seized by customs patrol inspectors near Chateaugay, N. Y., at midnight Monday, April 6th. The driver jumped and made his escape. The truck and tickets were taken to the Ogdensburg customs house.

The tickets were packed in 32 cartons and many of the books were in sealed envelopes, each with an uncancelled American 9 cent postage stamp. They were addressed to persons in nearly every state in the Union. The literature stated that the lottery was being conducted for the benefit of the Canadian Army and Navy veterans. The price of the tickets was $1 each but they had no present value, as the persons to whom they were addressed were required to forward the money and when this was done a receipt was issued, validating the tickets.

Arrested in connection with the seizure, Raymond Ryan, 26, of Chateaugay called for an examination Saturday morning through his attorney, H. W. Main, when arraigned at Malone before U. S. Commissioner Ralph R. Levy on charges of possessing, transporting and concealing the consignment.

The examination was set down for April 17th at 10 a.m., and will be held in the room at the post office assigned for the use of the Deputy U. S. Marshall and U. S. Commissioner. Ryan was arraigned by Deputy U. S. Marshall Thomas McKenna. The value of the uncancelled stamps alone was estimated at $800.

Ryan furnished $1,000 bail for his appearance at examination Friday.

Casein Plant To Open Next Week

The manufacture of casein will be started in Huntingdon shortly, though not in a big way. Casein is made from skim milk.

W. D. McCormick has rented his property better known as the old Boyd Garage to Louis Tremblay of Montreal. Only part of the building will at first be used and Mr. Tremblay will employ but a few hands. The Tremblay firm has another small plant at Clarenceville, where a quantity of casein is made. The plant here will likely open next week.

Minister Says Quebec Form Of Farm Is Family System

With Labour Available And Sufficient, Farmers Are Almost Able To Live Unto Themselves

Education Essential

Eight Millions Saved By Dairy Commission Since Its Foundation

Honourable J. Adelard Godbout, Minister of Agriculture came in for some heavy criticism from the Opposition benches as he was speaking in the Legislative Assembly on Agriculture this week. The minister's report on provincial agriculture however was an interesting one and is given here in part as follows:

The Quebec form of farm is a family system, with its own labor available, and almost sufficient unto itself. It was the home that the farmers in Quebec would be able to live unto themselves.

Education was essential and the Minister spoke of what had been done in the matter of creating schools of agriculture and also what had been done for the domestic arts. He explained the work of the Government in the matter of encouraging young farmers, boys and girls, and mentioned that the Journal of Agriculture had reached a circulation of 85,000, and dealt with other phases of the educational programme, which he claimed was consistently and constantly carried out.

In his address the Minister pointed out that from 1930 to 1935 his department had paid out $846,750 for drainage work, covering 73,992 arpents of water courses, or a superficial area of 461,700 acres improved, and some 40,580 poeple had been favorably affected. He dealt at some length with what had been done in the matter of helping the farmer to improve the soil, this being in the nature, largely, of paying freight on lime transported for farm improvement. This accounted for $160,121 of Government money, and a still larger sum, $385,399, went to help the farmers with chemical fertilizers.

The Minister talked of the work which had been accomplished in the matter of animal production, pointing out that livestock means 40 per cent. of the annual farm revenue. The Quebec Government worked in co-operation in this respect with the federal Government. It was the same as regards general improvement of cattle, and encouragement to better pork production. Seventy per cent. of the sows of the province were classified as ahead of those of all other of the provinces.

Sheep production moves apace, said Mr. Godbout, as he pointed out that the young farmers through their or-

Town Quiet Over Easter Holidays

The Easter holidays passed over quietly with the usual large number of visitors. The Easter Monday dance at the Chateau was a successful affair, when music was supplied by the Harrison Jones Orchestra.

Special services were held at the local churches on Easter Sunday. During Holy Week special services were held at St. Joseph's Church, and on Friday afternoon a three-hours' service was observed at St. John's Anglican Church.

The Week at Ottawa

Committees To Study Election Machinery Pensions, Wheat, Farm Implements Radio Commission Problems

By Wilfrid Eggleston

The federal parliament adjourned for the Easter holidays after two months of activity. The accomplishments of the period may be summed up as follows:

The United States trade agreement was discussed and ratified.

A national employment commission was authorized.

An act was passed to enable the federal treasury assist the province of Saskatchewan to finance the seeding operations this spring, to distribute seed and feed to the 'dried-out' areas of the province.

The sum of $6, 859,000 was voted to be paid out to the western farmers who delivered wheat, rye, barley and flax to the pools in 1930-31.

Part of the estimates for the coming year were passed; and certain sums voted for the fiscal year which ended March 31st, 1936.

A committee studied at some length the election and franchise machinery in Canada and other countries.

A committee was set up to study wheat, especially the activities of the Canadian Wheat Board.

A committee commenced an investigation into the rising cost of farm implements.

A committee began a study of certain pensions acts and machinery.

A beginning was made in a thorough study of the Canadian Radio Commission.

A bill to restore patronage to large parts of the public service was killed.

A number of debates were held on such subjects as pensions at sixty, pensions for the blind at forty, the nationalization of the banks, the nationalization of all industry not serving the public.

That about sums up Part One of the 1936 session.

The Easter recess will be quiet. Many of the ministers are away. Hon. Charles Dunning and his staff will be busy putting the finishing touches on the budget, which will come down shortly after the House resumes, probably on April 30th. There are negotiations going on with British Columbia concerning provincial finances.

Independent members have been scandalized at the amount of purely political bickering which occurred during the first part of the session. At least a week of the session to date has been employed in party wrangling of a rather pedestrian order, some on the United States agreement, more on the wheat bill and the employment measures. The blame for it cannot be confined to the government. Indeed, most of it—nearly all of it—started from opposition benches. Then, when the gauntlet had been thrown down, it was feverishly picked up by the more spirited members of the government. Perhaps the political fires will subside during the remainder of the session.

Unemployment and relief continue to dominate the debates at Ottawa, as well they may when the problem is so acute throughout the country. Practically all of the time of the House last week, and part of the time of the Senate, was absorbed in a discussion of the national employment commission. Some light was given by the prime minister as to the plans of the government to grapple with unemployment this year.

The government has a long-range plan and an emergency program.

The first consists of trade and financial policies calculated to assist industry, expand trade and re-employ men in private business.

Meanwhile the policies of the previous government will be maintained. Direct relief will be paid and a program of public works and projects engaged in.

Direct relief is dealt with by monthly payments of lump sums to the nine provinces, out of which they take care of the municipalities. Last December the government increased the grants then being paid by 75 per cent. This brought the cost to 3,066,218.75 per month, or over $36,000,000 per year.

On April 1st this was reduced by 15 per cent. The monthly payment now becomes as follows: P.E.I. $3,160.94; N.S. $59,500; N.B. $37,187.50; Quebec $743,750; Ontario $892,500; Manitoba $200,812.50; Saskatchewan $297,500; Alberta $148,750; British Columbia $223,125.

The payment for April this year is almost 50 per cent higher than it was a year ago, and the number listed on relief is about five per cent less. Just the same there have been complaints from some provinces about the cut.

The federal government expects that unemployment will cost about $75,000,000 in the year 1936. That means that about 20 cents out of every dollar collected in taxes will be used for that purpose. Way back in 1930 it seemed a dramatic and colossal gesture when the Bennett government voted $20,000,000 for unemployment relief. Now, in the sixth year of the depression, such a sum would last only about three months.

The $75,000,000 will be divided up between direct relief and other purposes. There will be $30,000,000 to be contributed to the provinces for direct relief, a works program of about $25,000,000 and other sums for farm placement and settlement schemes, for roads into mining areas, for assistance to the railways so that 10,000 men may be taken from the relief camps, and so forth. Syrup Crop About Half Last Year's

The majority of farmers have now removed the buckets from the maple trees and not quite half last year's maple syrup crop was manufactured.

Warm weather started about two weeks ago and spoiled the first sugaring. Colder weather followed with snow flurries and the sap ran but the quality was not very good. Three days last week rain fell and this weather continued over the week-end. What syrup there is has been selling between $1.00 and $1.50.

Man Sent Criminal Assizes As Result Hallowe'en Pranks

Franklin Centre Affair Took Serious Turn As Report Was Made To Provincial Police For Investigation

Enquete On Thursday

Informants Did Not Realize Serious Nature Of Case When Reported To Police

Since Hallowe'en of 1935 a bit of uneasiness has prevailed at Franklin Centre. It seems that for a period of years the boys have congregated on this "night of pranks" and proceeded to some one place or other and had their fun. Sometimes the fun goes so far, that it gets beyond the point of so being described; and perhaps that is the category the 1935 Hallowe'en festivities reached. At any rate it is claimed that between 40 and 50 lads gathered at the farm of Mr. and Mrs. Arch. Gamble. In the course of their sojourn damage was apparently done to strawberry plants, a table was removed from the outside kitchen or shed and was placed in a tree and a wagon was taken to Rockburn. The wagon was brought back to the farm by Mr. Gamble the day following, but was again taken away, presumably by the same group.

From the above, it is quite clear nothing very serious happened; but unfortunately a gun and a rope entered into the night's programme. One or more boys are supposed to have had a rope which could be used to drop around Mr. Gamble, who was at the barn when the Hallowe'en visitors were at the house. A gun was fired once, if not three times. The shooting was in all probability done in the air. Who discharged the gun is not generally known, but apparently it was done by one of the boys.

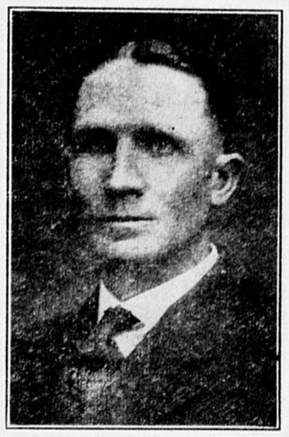
Mr. and Mrs. Gamble asked the Provincial Police to investigate the matter and it was in January when the police started the investigation. Crown is represented by Ludger Codbecq, and the accused, Harold Frier, by Gontran Saintonge.

Up to the present time the costs amount to better than $200, while the damages asked for by the Gambles is $200. Naturally Hallowe'en pranks are often overlooked but the Crown objects to the use of a rope or discharging of a gun.

From what the Gleaner can learn from Mr. Gamble we believe he regrets that he registered the information re the Hallowe'en pranks with the Crown. Little can now be done but to let the case ride its course with the ultimate hope that it will be thrown out and let everyone profit accordingly.

Preliminary enquete was held before Justice Lemay at Valleyfield Thursday, when the accused was committed to the Criminal Assizes unless through his counsel he elects speedy trial in Magistrate's Court.

Ayrshire President



J. M. WALLACE

Former Mayor of Hinchinbrooke Township, elected President of Howick-Huntingdon Ayrshire Breeders' Club at annual meeting held at Ormstown on Thursday.

Athelstan Church Societies Held Interesting Meetings

The annual Mission Band Rally was held on Easter Monday in Mac-Vicar Church, Montreal, and the Athelstan Band was represented by Bruce Elder, Jimmie Elder, Wesley Jamieson and Billy Hutchings, who contributed an item, Flag Exercise, to the programme. Mrs. Leslie Elder, Mrs. L. D. Watson and Mr. Fred Hitchings accompanied the boys.

A meeting of the Young Women's Auxiliary was held on Saturday afternoon at the home of Mrs. French, with a good attendance. The treasurer reported from receipts for first quarter the sum of $25.00 was being set to General Treasurer. As the parcel of supply work was lost in the mail before Christmas, the value of same was refunded by Post Office.

At the Easter Sunday morning service in the Presbyterian Church the following pupils of the S.S. received either certificates or diplomas for memorizing Scripture: Margaret Nimmo, Peter Tully, Jack Tully, Marjorie Ross, John Foers, Eleanor Macfarlane and Anne Tully. Miss Arabella Morrison received a diploma for reciting the entire Shorter Catechism at one sitting, and Donald and Arthur Tully obtained seals to be attached to diplomas previously earned.

A meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society was held in the Presbyterian Church basement on Thursday afternoon. The work on hand was quilting a heavy quilt for missionary supply work. Lunch was served by Mrs. Graham, Mrs. French, Mrs. Geo. Elder and Miss Mary Munro.

The School Fair Committee with Mr. R. J. M. Reid, visited some of the Hinchinbrooke schools on Wednesday last and expect to finish the others this week.

Mr. John Nimmo and little son and Miss Mary Nimmo of Toronto spent the Easter vacation with their brother, Rev. A. Nimmo at The Manse. Mrs. Nimmo, Sr., is also spending a few weeks with her son and family.

Rev. A. Nimmo is attending a meeting of Montreal Presbytery this week.

Mr. David Watson spent Sunday in Montreal and visited his little nephew, Allan Rowat in the M. G. Hospital.

The Misses Christina and Marjorie Ross spent the Easter holidays at the home of their uncle, Mr. Robert Stevens, Dundee.

Man Committed For Trial On Charge Of Trespassing

The arrest of Réné Lapierre was recently made at Dundee for trespassing on the property of W. D. Fraser. A hearing was held before Justice of the Peace H. B. Gardiner on Thursday morning, but Mr. Gardiner committed the accused for trial at Huntingdon. The trial was to have been held Tuesday but owing to unavoidable circumstances it was postponed to Saturday of this week.

The Women's Missionary Society held their April meeting in Zion United Church on Thursday afternoon, 9th inst., with a very good attendance of members. The suggestive programme as outlined in "The Missionary Monthly" was followed, in part, conducted by Mrs. Stewart McNicol, president. Mrs. R. G. Steven was secretary protem, and also read the Temperance News Letter. The Africa programme was conducted by Mrs. Wm. McNicol and Mrs. Stewart McNicol. During the work period quilting was done.

The Easter thankoffering envelopes were opened and appreciation expressed at their returns.

At next meeting, which will be held on May 14th, a bale of summer clothing will be packed for shipment to the Supply Secretary in the City of Montreal.

Congratulations! To Mr. James McArthur who on April 8th, reached the 94th milestone in his life's journey. Mr. McArthur is now residing in Ottawa with his daughter, Mrs. C. A. Haughton, and enjoys comparatively good health for one of his years, a clear mind and retentive memory.

During "The Cotter's Saturday Night" broadcast, Mr. McArthur's name was heard by those listening on April 11th, when the "Book of Golden Memories" was read. That he may enjoy returns of the day, with continued health and vigor is the wish of his Dundee friends.

An invitation was extended the Women's Auxiliary of Dundee, to attend an Easter thankoffering meeting, being held in Valleyfield United Church on Thursday 16th, at 2 p.m., the guest speaker being Miss M. MacGregor of Prince Rupert, B. C.

School work was resumed on Tuesday 14th, Good Friday and Easter Monday having been observed as holidays.

Raise Better Cattle

WE can easily realize the economic importance of our live stock production if we stop to consider that it represents about forty per cent of the total gross revenues of Quebec agriculture.

As in all other fields of production, whether industrial or agricultural, the profits derived from it are determined by the margin which exists between cost of production and selling price. Since the farmer has little control over the selling price of his products save insofa. as quality and method of sale may influence the matter, it becomes clear that his only chance of increasing his profit margin lies in lowering his cost of production.

Lowering production costs—that, today, is the great problem of the farmer. Let us hasten to add that, so far as this is concerned, he is in the same boat with the industrialist, since their factors of success resemble one another in many respects.

Let us consider for a moment the case of the industrialist. The manufacturer of shoes, for example, must realize a profit on each pair of shoes he makes. As is the case with the farmer, his profit will be represented by the difference between the cost of production and the selling price. With keen competition in the shoe field, every manufacturer must be able to meet his competitor in the market; that is, he must at least be able to offer merchandise of equal quality and at equal prices. His cost of production or of manufacturing will decide then, as in the case of the farmer, his margin of profit. And should we ask the shoe manufacturer for the three most important factors in determining his production costs, he would reply: 1, the cost of raw material (leather, etc.); 2, the efficiency of his machinery; 3, the management of his plant.

In the same way, if we examine the principal factors determining the production costs of the farmer engaged in the live stock field, we shall be forced to the conclusion that the cost of raw material (or feed), the efficiency of the animals handled (which replace the shoe-manufacturing machinery), and proper management make up likewise the important factors determining the cost of production, whether it be of milk, of meat, of eggs.

In animal production, as in the manufacturing of shoes, these three factors must be the object of the constant attention of the owner; otherwise, the failure of either becomes imminent. We might add that it is through paying more or less attention to these three factors that some shoe manufacturers are seen to prosper while others become bankrupt. And the same thing is seen in the success of certain farmers and the lack of success of others engaged in the same productions.

But the chief factor with which we are concerned is the control that the farmer has over the selling price of his products—and speaking of products we mean the district's chief industry—dairying. A retest is now being made in this T. B. free area, and, from all reports, it appears that it will be declared an "Accredited Area"—this implies that there were less than one-half of one per cent reactors to the test. The restricted areas or "Accredited Areas" in Canada are not numerous. At the present time there are only 19 counties in the whole Dominion under such classification. Three of the counties are in Prince Edward Island, five in New Brunswick, six in Quebec, and five in Ontario. There are also eight rural municipalities in Manitoba and four in Saskatchewan under such control.

The counties in Quebec are Beauharnois, Vaudreuil, Soulanges, Argenteuil, Lake St. John, and Sherbrooke south of the St. Francis River. Cattle from accredited areas may be exported without a special tuberculin test. It is only natural, too, that cattle from such areas are more sought for and therefore command a better price. Only this past week the Quebec Department of Agriculture through its local representative advertised for one hundred Holstein and Ayrshire grade calves.

The whole trouble here is that not enough of the district farmers go in for breeding purebred cattle. With all the advantages lying at our door for a good cattle export business it is high time we awakened to the full possibilities of a greatly increased revenue.

First and Last Things

BETWEEN the first and last of anything is all the difference in the world, yet in one sense they are very similar. Both stand out from the ordinary chain of events, both possess the power to stir the mind and exalt the heart. Most of us remember, for instance, the day we brought home our first pay envelope—how we stepped along as if we owned the world. Afterwards we never got the same thrill again—except perhaps, in a modified form, when we got our first raise and thought nothing could stay our upward climb.

Of first things, R. L. Stevenson wrote: "First experiences can never be repeated. One's first view of the stars, one's first tropical sunset, one's first glimpse of a coral island—these are memories apart." From little things to the great experiences of life, there is always a special thrill about the "first." The young attorney receiving his first brief, the author's first book, the doctor's first patient and the reporter's first news story—subsequent triumphs have to be overwhelming indeed, to equal the exaltation of the first.

Last things, too, have their thrill though too often the thrill is tinged with sadness. Such as those "farewell' appearances of men and women whose ears have always thrilled to the noise of applauding multitudes. The sportsman making his last appearance in the game which has made his name a household word, the opera singer singing her last role before she makes her final bow and the retiring business man closing the office door behind him for the last time.

There is a world of difference between first and last things, yet each has a thrill of its own. And though we cannot always regulate the circumstances in which we shall do things for the first or last time, we can always strive to create between the two poles of starting and finishing a worth-while record of achievement and service.

Nurse Not Doctor

HOURS have been devoted to speeches in the House of Commons in which cures for the problem of unemployment have been offered. Most of them provide for large governmental expenditures to provide jobs for all.

Governments can provide temporary jobs by spending money. But in doing so they do not create the conditions which provide for dynamic long-term employment.

Governmental job-creating schemes are based upon a simple misapprehension. They assume that the depression is the result of the widespread lack of employment. The fact is that unemployment is the result of depression conditions.

The cure for unemployment is prosperity. Given prosperity there would be no unemployment.

Unemployment is a headache. And like a headache it is a symptom of a condition. Government spending schemes may relieve the headache but they cannot cure the condition.

Development, expansion, more trade. These are the cures for the condition, from which we suffer and which has given us the headache of unemployment. The rôle of government should be that of the nurse and not that of the doctor. It should arouse confidence, keep the sick room clear of the cobwebs and dust of excessive regimentation and punitive regulation; cut down the patient's diet of government funds; and instill in him faith in his ability to recover through his own exertions.

Speaking of Examinations

WITH the approach of Spring, young people all over the country are beginning to worry about examinations. Neither the young people themselves, their parents nor the examiners like them, but they have come to accept them as a necessary evil.

Some hope of a change is in sight, however. An editorial in The Canadian Chartered Accountant for April says: "The whole attitude of educationists towards examinations has undergone considerable change in recent years. This change was touched upon in an address by Dr. G. F. Rogers, chief inspector of the secondary schools in Ontario, given in February at the mid-winter dinner of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario. On that occasion Dr. Rogers spoke of the university matriculation examinations and he stressed the necessity for a change from the usual method of written examinations to one in which this test would be only part of a wider examination in which the candidate's record from the beginning, or for an extensive period would be considered."

In this connection, the editor refers to the report of a committee set up to survey the English system of examinations. This report, recently issued in book form, with the title, "An Examination of Examinations," describes a test made on a written university honours examination in history, the examiners being all scholars and teachers of very high distinction. For convenience the marking was represented by grades numbered up to 24. The paper of one candidate was rated at 16 by one examiner and at 5 by another, and the average difference between the highest and the lowest marking of the eighteen candidates by ten examiners was 11.4.

From these results it seems clear that the system of written examinations is far from being an infallible test of either knowledge or intelligence. In some subjects, such as mathematics, questions can be devised, the answer to which will be right or wrong; but in subjects where judgment is involved, there is a strong element of luck. The student has to hope that his opinion will on the whole coincide with the examiner's.

The Story of Glass

CANADA imports, each year, large quantities of glass, especially in the form of plate glass, common window glass, tableware, bottles of all kinds, incandescent lamp bulbs and general manufactures of glass. During the first nine months of this fiscal year glass imports reached a total value of $4,332,914, coming principally from the United States, the United Kingdom and Belgium. This compares with $4,038,185 imported in the corresponding period of 1934-35 and $3,163,800 imported in the period 1933-34.

The story of glass as revealed by the records, ranging from those primitive beads worn by the ancients to the elaborate uses of glass to-day, is one of interest and romance. The discovery of glass-making is attributed by some to Phoenician sailors who, five thousand years ago when they landed to cook a meal chanced to fuse the sandy soil and some alkali substance, till the two melted into a liquid mass. However, some of the oldest known specimens of glass are of Egyptian manufacture, many of these being imitation stones which, according to Herodotus, were widely used by men and women, and even in the adornment of sacred animals. He relates seeing crocodiles decked out in coloured glass earrings.

Among the Romans the glass-making art does not date earlier than the commencement of the Empire, importations from Sidon and Alexandria having previously supplied the want of native manufacture. Its use, however, was extensive, vases, cups of many colours, bottles of all kinds, bowls, urns for holding the ashes of the dead, hairpins, beads, rings, balls, dice, mirrors, prisms, magnifying glasses and water-clocks, being among the many objects used.

When the art of glass-making declined in Rome with the decay of the Empire, its practice was transferred to Constantinople where it flourished throughout the dark ages. From there the art spread to Venice, which became the great centre of the glass industry of medieval and more recent times. The idea of making glass was supposed to have been given the Venetians by Marco Polo who, when he returned from his eastern journeys in 1295, pointed out to his fellow Venetians what a market there was in the Far East and in Africa for glass beads. By 1318 the pearl-makers of Murano were a recognized branch of the glass industry; by 1764 twenty-two furnaces were working full-blast to supply the demand, and Venetian glass enjoyed for a long time the monopoly of commerce, the mirrors, goblets and cups being exported all over the world.

In order to safeguard its monopoly the Venetian government imposed severe penalties on any glass-worker who left Italy, or who passed his knowledge on to a foreigner. Nevertheless when Colbert, Minister to Louis XIV, determined that mirrors should be manufactured in Paris, he managed to procure twenty Venetian glass-workers. Glass works were set up in Paris for blowing glass and silvering mirrors, and the famous mirror hall in Versailles was a product of their work.

The oldest glass of German manufacture dates from the sixteenth century and consists of goblets and tankards of white, enamelled with coloured coats of arms and other devices. It is probable, also, that during this same century the first glass was made in England.

TOO LATE TO APOLOGIZE

When George J. Seaman, Chicago, was unable to unlock his parked car, he called a garage mechanic, who worked on the door for an hour without results. Seaman, impatient to get home, told the mechanic to break the glass in the door. Then Seaman found he could not unlock the ignition with his key. A closer examination showed him it was not his car at all. Going to the nearest police station he reported what he had done. On his return the damaged car was gone.

REPEATER CAUGHT

Back in 1927, Frank Walker escaped from the county jail in Port Huron, Mich. The following year he was brought back, unrecognized, under an assumed name, and served a three-month sentence for a new offence. Three weeks ago, found guilty a third time as a lawbreaker, he was sentenced to the county jail, again unrecognized. But a few days later the sheriff, tipped off, disclosed the new inmate was none other than Walker, who had broken out of jail nine years ago. By the time he serves out his third sentence and then begins the unexpired term of his first, with time added for jail-breaking, he ought to be convinced the way of the transgressor is hard.

JUDGE LOSES BET

When James Gardini and Felix Mayeski in jail in Spring Valley, Ill., told Judge Tonelli, who had sentenced them, they could have broken out had they wanted to and therefore should be granted their freedom, the judge was skeptical. He told the prisoners to go ahead and break out if they could, offering them their freedom if they could get out within a specified period of time. They were locked in their cell and by the time the judge had reached the front of the building through the jail office, the two prisoners were out. The bars on their cell window were so rusty they were easily twisted off.

CANNIBALS BALANCE DIET

Returning recently from a tour of the Solomon islands, Bishop Thomas Wade reports the practice of cannibalism in those South Sea islands is not due to any innate depravity but because of the islanders' desire for a properly balanced diet. "Deprive a native Solomon islander of protein demanded by nature and he will eat his neighbor," the bishop says. "Give him natural food and he will become ashamed of his former flesh eating." Cannibalism was originally due to lack of meat in the islands. Then it became surrounded by ceremonials. Weaker tribes who had been driven from the lowlands and available animal life by the stronger tribes took to cannibalism for the sake of a balanced diet, including fats and oils. Cannibals are usually weaklings. There will be no cannibalism among the Solomon islands in ten years, when civilization contacts the back country" If it is fats and vitamin A that the unregenerate Solomon islanders need to cure them of cannibalism it would seem the shortest cut would be to feed them cod liver oil.

WASHINGTON HIS JOB

A strange profession is that of Laurence H. Hart, Washington, D.C., who travels all over the country impersonating George Washington. Just now he is in New York state visiting schools dressed in Colonial apparel of Washington's time, including powdered wig, knee breeches and three cornered hat. Hart has filled engagements at 600 different schools and also has embellished many a parade, convention and patriotic rally. In his appearances before an audience, he offers to answer any sensible question put to him, in Washington's own recorded words.

THREE DEATHS IN WEEK

At Marshall, Mo., three brothers, in the best of health previously, died recently within four days of each other. Blood poisoning caused the death suddenly of John Trigg on a Thursday night. His brother, Steven, perfectly well, attended the burial service but developed acute indigestion and died the night of the funeral. The third brother, George, well enough to go to both funerals, returned home ill from the second on the Monday following and died that night. All deaths were from natural causes but how these three deaths would have stirred the superstitious of the community many years ago.

SNAKE IN BABE'S COT

A snake is being worshipped at Sengarang village in Johore, Malaya, because villagers believe it is displaying "maternal affection" for one of their children. It was discovered on the child's cot one morning. Although taken away, it returned three days later. Then the villagers decided the snake must be sacred, so they offered alms to the child's father as a sign that they recognized the honor being paid to him by the snake. At this the police intervened and took the snake to Batu Pahat, a town some miles away. There it was found to be non-poisonous and was set free. Two nights later the snake was back in the baby's cot. It had travelled back—through miles of jungle—to the object of its odd affection.

NEED LAW FOR BABIES

Continued cries of a baby in a St. Louis home caused neighbors to notify police who broke into the house. Locked in a closet, with a St. Bernard puppy, was the one-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Layton Johnston. The child and puppy were freed and the Johnstons were taken into court. As no statute was violated by the parents in locking in their baby, Judge George Vest found them guilty of violating the law against cruelty to animals in locking up the pup. The fine was $25 and costs which the judge remitted when he learned the Johnstons were unemployed and had locked up their baby and dog while out looking for work.

BED FOR GIANT

Thought to be the world's tallest man, John Aasen, 45, is seriously ill in a Los Angeles hospital. He is suffering, doctors say, from a strange disorder of the gland which caused his abnormal growth. He is 8 feet 8 inches tall and weighs normally, 460 pounds. His sickness has reduced him to 300 pounds in the last six weeks. Aasen has frequently appeared in the movies and also has travelled with circuses as a sideshow attraction. Taken to the hospital, a special bed of large size had to be built for him.

PREVIOUS ENGAGEMENT

Citizens called for jury duty must have good reasons before a judge will excuse them. It was so in the case of George Fisher, called as a juryman under Judge James Spier, Mt. Clemens, Mich. The judge finally demanded Fisher be specific in his reasons for requesting an excuse. When Fisher explained in one of the cases on the docket he was the defendant in a chicken stealing case, the judge promptly let him go without further questioning.

DOG PLAYS PIANO

Mr. Ferguson, a Sydney police constable, has a dog which can play the piano and count correctly. At a word from Mr. Ferguson his dog, Bonzer, will spring onto the piano stool, switch on the light, and play a "tune" with both paws. If Mr. Ferguson places ten articles on the floor and takes away, say, four, Bonzer will bark out how many are left.

COMMUNIST HEIRESS

Poland's richest heiress, Miryla Eiger, who is said to have renounced a fortune of $10,000, has been sentenced to 12 years hard labor on charges of alleging Communistic activity. Two of her companions were similarly sentenced. Miss Eiger, who is 30 years old, is the daughter of one of the richest manufacturers in the country. When she was 16 her father wished to settle a dowry on her, but she refused it in order to become a Communist. She visited Russia and after her return to Poland was said to have carried on Communist propaganda among people of her own class.

COW EATS EGGS

An egg-eating cow is the pride of Komgha, a little town in Cape Province, South Africa. All day long it forages around the native huts looking for eggs which the hens usually lay in the open. When it finds a nest, the cow devours the eggs, shell and all. Hens which offer opposition do so at risk of their lives. Recently a hen sat defiant on her eggs, and the cow, becoming angry, ate her—and then finished off the eggs.

ELEVEN GRANDFOLKS

If any child in the country is blessed with more grandparents than Leland Reed, 15-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Estel Reed, at Broadwater, Neb., they would like to hear about it. Leland has six grand and great-grandparents on his mother's side and five on his father's side. If 11 grandparents do not spoil this little shaver he is made of the right stuff.

ANCIENT STEAMERS VANISH

After 94 years of passenger service, from the Rhine at Coblence up and down the famous Moselle, the old river steamers yield to the march of progress and the modern luxurious motor ships. Recently the last three old-timers were brought to Cologne to be wrecked. Two modern ships from now on will take care of the Moselle passenger traffic. In addition, high German railroad officials decreed that the section, Coblence to Trier, be motorized. So 15 new Diesel cars, five of which will be capable of attaining 100 miles an hour, will be installed early in 1935. This improvement is in keeping with the programme of the German railroads to speed up transportation in general in Germany which will be especially appreciated by the tourist who has but a limited time within which to do the picturesque Rhineland.

DUELS WITH AUTOS

Just how it started has not been reported, but when Denver police, called by terrorized neighbors, reached the scene, Ora Nickelson and Theodore Bennett were fighting a duel with their autos. Backing off and ramming into each other again and again, they had battered up their fenders, bumpers, running boards, etc., until both cars were ready for the wreckers. In police court, the two declared they were just fighting out a personal grudge between themselves. But they were using a public street for their battleground and were penalized accordingly.

POISONER RELENTS

Marie Zapanich, 20-year-old wife of a Polish miner, living in St. Amand, France, rushed to the station as the Paris express was entering and flung herself in front of the train. The train passed over her body without touching it, and the only injuries she sustained were caused by her fall. But the woman has given to the police an astounding explanation of her act. For six months, at the instigation of her lover, she had been administering poison to her husband, and finally overcome by shame, she decided to take her own life as the only means of avoiding the death of her husband. Though graduated doses had been administered to the husband over the six months, he had not the slightest suspicion of the source of his illness or the infidelity of his wife. When arrested, the lover denied the charges made against him, but the police have obtained confirmation of the woman's story and are charging him. The husband has forgiven his wife and refused to authorize criminal proceedings against her.

What's in the Wind?

To Market or Not? That is the Question.

Recent discussions regarding the marketing in Huntingdon of fresh farm produce have included the suggestion of an established market for the town. This brings up many important questions. From a short article appearing in the 1932 Volume, "What the Country Women of the World Are Doing," is taken the following description of a market in a country town.

"The Goldsboro home demonstration market, one of the 39 farm women's markets in North Carolina, operating one day each week in the fall, winter and early spring, and two days per week during the warmer weather.

An illustration shows sellers waiting for the gong to sound, which is the signal for an inrush of waiting customers. Tables are arranged in long rows with the women, dressed in white, standing behind their respective sections. A close-up of an individual booth shows a sanitation card issued by the County Board of Health saying the sanitation of the home from which these food products came was approved by the Board, the home and outbuildings were protected by screens, and that members of the family were free from communicable diseases.

This picture shows also the variety of vegetables, fruits, flowers, homemade cakes and bread, meat and other marketable articles a producer displays for her customers.

The Goldsboro market is held in the gymnasium of the community building. Thirty-eight other county seats also furnish places where farm women who wish to sell their products in an orderly manner may be comfortably housed.

Rules regulating the conduct of the market are made by the sellers in council with the home demonstration agent and delegates from the town women's clubs, who are interested buyers. A fair price committee determines the price for each market day. Each woman stands behind her goods and upon her marketing ability depends her sales.

Economic And Social Institution

The market is both an economic and a social institution and brings a farm woman to town with her small surplus each week. Here she receives much needed cash for her products and also she meets women from the town and from other parts of the country in pleasant social intercourse.

In 1929 the 29 home demonstration markets organized in North Carolina did a business of $309,391.

The book mentioned above contains a fund of useful information regarding the activities of country women the world over. It was published by the Liaison Committee of Rural Women's and Homemakers' Organizations of which Lady Aberdeen was then president. A World Convention of such organizations is to be held in Washington this June. Lady Aberdeen has been nominated by organized women of forty different countries as a candidate for the Nobel Peace Prize.

Direct marketing of farm surplus has disadvantages as well as advantages. It is a method that calls for extraordinary effort, but one is rewarded by a higher income which may, in some cases, be 100 per cent higher. A statement many will be inclined to doubt.

In my personal notebook I have recorded conversations with a member of the Women's Institute who has sold produce on the Valleyfield market for years.

In 1934 the first trip was made on Friday, April 13th—Cold and snow on the ground. Sold 36 dozen eggs at 20 cents; 40 lbs. butter at 29 cents. A calf dressed at 86 lbs. brought $7.51 net. A drover had offered only $10.00 for three such calves. All were sold dressed and over $20.00 realized.

May 4th, 1934—Madame X. was a delegate to the W. I. Convention at Hemmingford. She arose at 3 o'clock, as it was also market day. After packing her produce in good order, her husband was on the road to market before 5 a.m. and succeeded in selling everything. Madame finished the chores and was ready to catch the bus for Hemmingford at 9 a.m.

July 18, 1934—At Valleyfield yesterday the market was greatly overstocked with all kinds of produce. A lot of stuff had to be taken home.

Madame X and husband were parked at the curb on the market at 4.07 a.m. Tuesday. Haven't been able to get their accustomed stand for over a month, although they go earlier every time. They have to take a stand further down as others come still earlier. Some even come the night before. (Four a.m. would seem to be the middle of the night to most of us).

Madame now makes and sells 80 pounds of butter a week. Selling at 21 and 22 cents. Sells thick cream at 15 cents a pint. Good demand. Always disposes of all her stuff.

Early Arrivals At Market

Some of the women who are very early arrivals go together to the sitting room in the hotel and gossip for two or three hours to pass the time until the city folks are astir. Sometimes customers stop on the way to work and order stuff to be delivered at their homes later. Others coming from early Mass may make purchases. Such customers are few. "Perhaps I am the highest priced woman on the market, as some say, but I seem to get good customers who come every time and are satisfied. I always try to have good stuff and what they want," says Madame.

A business man, viewing the market on Tuesday, estimated that there would be $5,000 worth for sale and only about $2,000 cash in town to buy it with. String beans were plentiful. Canning factory had contracted for a supply and was not yet opened, so growers had to make disposal some way.

A hard life. Picking the stuff in the garden the night before and trying to get to bed early for an early start. Just lies down on a couch, some times. She likes it. Meets many fine people and makes good friends. Adds variety and stimulus to the otherwise monotonous life of the farm woman. "Doesn't seem to be much money in it but we get all there is in this way."

November 10th, 1934—Veal was 7 to 9 cents a pound. A calf brought $15.00 sold in quarters.

Two women are there every day from near St. Remi, selling potatoes. Since July they have sold 4,000 bags. One from St. Clothilde takes a load to Montreal, leaving Sunday night, sells it and returns home. While her son reloads she had a lunch and is ready to start for Valleyfield's Tuesday market. She sleeps on top of the load, covered with a blanket. The other woman sells a load of potatoes every Monday in Huntingdon and is at Valleyfield on Tuesday morning with another load. They have with them hooked rugs made from cotton and silk and wool which they offer for sale at various prices.

Often Madame has passed a woman driving alone in a buggy piled with produce. Near the old Plank road at Ste. Barbe driving an old blind horse about 2 or 2.30 in the morning. At the curb she sits working at fancy work for the Fair, while waiting for customers.

It takes untold labor, patience, tact and diplomacy to make a success of marketing your own produce. In the words of Madame, "You get lots of snubs, but you have to take people as you find them. Play up to what they say and not get sore."

There is a good deal of difference in the methods of conducting open markets for farm products. In Carolina it seems to be a systematized and controlled undertaking, while that at Valleyfield appears to have most of the same old disagreeable features of unregulated competition that the townspeople complain about at present with regard to hucksters on the street.

Early Sports In Huntingdon Recalled by "Old Timer"

Hockey, rugby, tennis, baseball and badminton are the major sports in Huntingdon today but have not always been," declared John C. Bruce, Huntingdon County registrar, when interviewed on the subject recently.

Seventy-five years ago lacrosse held the spotlight, and drew the big crowds, while baseball was played "now and again." Hockey at that time went under the name of "shinny" and was a far cry from the type of exhibition offered in that sport today. The sticks were cut from the bush and made by hand, and a ball was often used as a puck. The game featured a minimum of rules and a maximum of action, and there was no limit to the number of players on one team. Interest in the sport often reached a fever pitch while the enthusiasm of the spectators of those days would make the most rabid fan of today sound meek in comparison.

Lacrosse, however, was the real crowd pleaser. It found its first devotees among the ranks of the school students, who played it on Prince Arthur square after school hours under the supervision of the Principal J. Douglas Borthwick.

Mr. Bruce was one of the youngest and most ardent supporters of the game at that time, (about 1861) and William Botham, Charles Marshall, Francis Shirriff and Frank Spiers were other stalwarts. There were 14 members on the team.

It was played according to the first set of Lacrosse rules ever written. The author of the book writes in a simple and amusing style, giving a brief history of the game up to that time and dedicates the book to the Old Beaver Lacrosse Club of Montreal. He lists many reasons why one should play Lacrosse and says the spectator, too will find much amusement in it, as the lady who did "Wonder at the players' gait. For crooked legs predominate."

He also says:

"Lacrosse would be a good game for girls, as they want some such active exercise to develop their forms, making them active and strong, 'the future mothers of a manly race.' Exercise would then perform greatly the part of milliners and dressmakers, and artificial and padded forms (!) would be known no more."

The "artificial and padded forms" have seen their day as the writer hinted but the change can hardly be attributed to lacrosse.

Other sports at the Academy included one called "Duck on the rock", in which a stone was placed on a large boulder which stood on the spot now occupied by the cannon across from the school door. The object was to knock the large stone off by throwing smaller ones. Baseball, in all its varied forms was also a favorite. The usual way to get the batter out though, was to "plug" him with the ball as he ran from one base to the other. The catcher and the pitcher were the only members of the opposition who could do the "plugging." Two large circular swings, situated near the church, were very popular with young and old students alike. These were made of six or eight ropes hanging from a revolving wooden hoop, and great speeds were obtainable from them.

During the principalship of J. J. MacLaren, who later became the Honourable Justice MacLaren, a cricket club was formed in the school and for a time was a favorite sport among the students.

On wet days the students stayed inside. The girls played hop-scotch and the boys had knife-throwing competitions in the halls.

Huntingdon also had a softball team then, featuring such old-time stars as Dave Oney, Bill Schyler, Jim Anderson, and Bob and Andrew Fortune.

One other thing of which the town boasted was a band. Mr. Bruce recalls that this organization played a big part in town life and everyone used to come out for their concerts at the park. Many local sons who have since risen to musical fame got their start in the old Huntingdon Band.

About 1890, W. H. Robinson, manager of the Eastern Townships bank started a reading room in the Oddfellows Hall, for the use of the younger people. He would not allow any smoking in the library, however, and the interest of the boys soon waned. Then St. John's Church started a similar club in A. Smaill's house next to Lamb's store. This, too, had a rather brief existence. Later Mr. Bruce and A. Mitchell managed a "recreation hall," for boys with headquarters in the same building. Boxing gloves and other gymnastic equipment were supplied. About 1906 St. John's Church club rented Moir's Hall where basketball and military drill were the main activities. The same club also sponsored a tennis club opposite the rectory that enjoyed a short but flourishing existence.

Mr. Bruce naturally sees a big difference in the way sports are played today compared to his day. Now, the athletes are better trained, and have the advantage of more scientific equipment, but the old-timers had just as much talent and enthusiasm and were "certainly tough."

Letters to The Editor

Valleyfield, Que.,
April 10th, 1936

Editor,
The Huntingdon Gleaner.
Dear Sir:

I see by your columns that the Valleyfield Chamber of Commerce has issued a Declaration against the employment of young ladies where young men could be just as advantageously hired. And many prominent ladies of the district have found fault with the declaration. I can't imagine what is wrong with these criticising individuals. The resolution doesn't say that all the ladies now employed will be fired. That would be foolish. It says that only in instances where a man can be employed to take the place of a lady who has no dependents or who is not dependent on her job for a living, the change will be made. Isn't that fair and reasonable enough? I can't help but feel that in most cases where the type of young lady mentioned above is found working, she is there to escape the drudgery of housework, or secure money chiefly for self-adornment, as the article suggested.

Even if there are many girls who are working hard to succeed at their jobs, most of them will marry when the opportunity arrives. Of what value will their job-training be then? And where will the employer stand who has spent years in developing the young lady to her present standard of efficiency? On the other hand the right type of young man will stay with his job till the end.

Give the young man a chance to work. With very few exceptions the young ladies' place is in the home.

Matrimonial

Brown-Hazlett

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at eleven-thirty o'clock Saturday morning, April 11th, 1936, at the home of the bride's father, 474 Brock Street, Kingston, Ont., when the Rev. H. W. Cliff of Cooke's United Church, united in marriage Golden (Goldie) MacLean Hazlett, youngest daughter of Mr. Thomas H. Hazlett and the late Mrs. Hazlett, and Mr. Walter S. Brown, only son of Mrs. Margaret Brown and the late Mr. Brown of Huntingdon, Que. The ceremony was performed in the living room against a background of ferns, while tulips and daffodils were artistically arranged about the room.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was a dainty figure in her wedding gown of pale blue moire, made with a tight basque waist and puff sleeves, and a long skirt, which formed a slight train. She wore a Juliet cap of pearls and carried an arm bouquet of calla lilies. The bride's only attendant was her little niece, Miss Shirley Hazlett, as flower girl, prettily frocked in white organdie over pink with a blue sash and carrying an old-fashioned nosegay.

After the ceremony a buffet luncheon was served, the table being artistically adorned with spring flowers. Later the bride and groom left on a motor trip, the bride travelling in fish tail coat of grey and black check, a black hat and black suede accessories.

Among the guests were the bride's aunt and god-mother, Mrs. Joseph Kennedy, who wore a handsome gown of black satin with a shoulder knot of American Beauty roses and Mrs. Margaret Brown of Huntingdon, Que., mother of the groom, who was smartly gowned in black triple sheer crepe with a corsage of sweet peas and roses.

PRIVATE HERD Record Book

Good cows are a result of good breeding, if the cows come from good ancestry they will be good producers if well cared for. It therefore follows that good breeding is essential on every dairy farm. A proper record of the breeding should be kept of every animal. A milk record of every cow is valuable information for every farmer.

Have this information at your disposal by maintaining a "PRIVATE HERD RECORD BOOK," such as has been approved by the various cattle breed associations in Canada, and published by the Huntingdon Gleaner.

A book sufficiently large to list the pedigree and milk records of 50 animals, for a period of 12 years can be secured for 50 cents.

Hemmingford Youth Injured In Car Upset

"It was not," Mr. Rose remarked, "a performance, but an act of worship in which all present could share." The pageant dramatized the trials and triumph of Christian who, beset by the spirits of Doubt, Fear, Unbelief, Pride, Sorrow, Indifference, and finally Death itself, found the radiance of the Cross obscured, as one by one, these seven characters drew near and flung their dark veils across the sacred symbol of our Faith. At the point, however, where Death completes the darkening of the Cross, Faith enters and is followed by Hope, Joy, Love, Humility, Truth, and finally Life. These in turn remove the veils from the Cross, thus restoring the lost radiance, as Life dismisses Death and with gracious gesture, reveals to Christian "An Unshadowed Cross". As Christian, Mrs. S. Walsh gave a most impressive characterization, and Miss Millicent Orr's interpretation of Life gained added reality by her unaccompanied singing during her entrance. While Christian and Life were the key characters in the pageant, all members of the cast did ample justice to the parts assigned to them.

A most attractive feature of this dramatized sermon was the illuminated Cross made especially for the occasion by Mr. Dunlop and placed in the chancel as the focus about which the action of the pageant moved.

The whole effect of the pageant was greatly heightened by the beautiful musical interpretation given by the choir, which under the capable direction of the organist Miss May Bennett, rendered appropriate hymns as the characters took their places on the dias. Solo parts were sung by Mrs. Dunlop, Mr. Arthur Marlin, and the Rev. Victor Rose, while Mesdames Harold McNaughton, Patterson Simpson, and Herbert McNaughton contributed duets.

The ladies who portrayed the different characters in the pageant were as follows:—Christian, Mrs. S. Walsh; Life, Miss Millicent Orr; Doubt, Mrs. J. Earle McNaughton; Unbelief, Mrs. Allan Radley; Indifference, Miss Mildred Campbell; Pride, Miss Martha Simpson; Sorrow, Miss Phyllis Sample; Fear, Mrs. D. J. Beatty; Death, Miss Dorothy Pelletier; Faith, Miss Ruth Johnson; Hope, Miss Evelyn Williams; Humility, Mrs. Russell Williams; Joy, Mrs. Victor Rose; Truth, Miss Mable Keddy; Love, Miss Doris Braithwaite.

Mr. Kenneth Johnson was in charge of the lantern for the colored lighting effects of the tableaux.

At the close of the pageant, an offering was taken for the work of the Woman's Missionary Society, and the Easter Day services closed with the congregational hymn "Christ the Lord is risen today" and Benediction.

Both the United Church and community are indebted to the director whose enthusiasm and efficiency made this beautiful service possible, and the sincere reception by the unusually large congregation would indicate that a repetition of similar Biblical dramatizations in the future would be well appreciated.

School Notes

If you wondered why all the school students wore such happy smiles this morning I'll tell you. School started again after a four-day Easter holiday. This is not supposed to be funny—it's true. There are just about two more months until June examinations and the summer holidays. Just a mere sixty days—practically nothing. That's the reason for the smiles.

It looks as though the weatherman also came back from his holidays and he has been favouring us with a lot of sunny weather the last few days. That will help along the summer sport programme—tennis, baseball, etc., will soon be "coming out."

Minister Says Quebec Form of Farm Is....

ganization had shipped out 12,610 lambs, of which 91 per cent. were classified as No. 1. He was specially delighted with the success which the young farmers had attained in their exhibits at Toronto last year, and during the last eight years. For the eight years they had once got a third prize, twice they had got a second prize, and five times they had won first prize.

In regard to the dairy industry, which meant 29 per cent. of the agricultural production in 1934, Hon. Mr. Godbout pointed to the tendency towards butter production, believing this to be due to the fact that butter making favors the breeding of small animals of the farm. He noted, too, the trend towards elimination of small dairy factories, and remarked that there are now 42 co-operative establishments of this nature. He expressed pleasure that the annual production per cow in the province was on the increase. The average in 1921 was 135 pounds of butter fat and 3,851 pounds of milk, and in 1931 it was 151 pounds and 4,325 pounds, respectively.

Hon. Mr. Godbout said the Dairy Commission had done much effective work, and he estimated in three years had saved the producers some eight millions of dollars.

The Minister said it was very well to try to defeat the Government, but care should be taken not to discourage them when they were doing so well in so many lines of agriculture. The Quebec farmers were not discouraged, insisted Mr. Godbout, and were cited as examples not only in Canada but also in Europe. The Quebec farmer was willing to look after himself, and not lean on the Government. In fact, said the Minister, the family system of farming in this province was carrying Quebec agriculture by the crisis in good fashion.

Franklin Centre

Special services were conducted in the United Church on Easter Sunday morning by the pastor, Rev. T. F. Duncan. The choir rendered hymns suitable to the occasion. The church was beautifully decorated by the C.G.I.T. group.

Planting Roses

The successful establishment of a rose plant in a new position depends to a large extent on the observance of a few important details of planting. Most rose catalogues carry instructions for the guidance of customers, but this advice is not generally available to those who purchase their plants from the department stores of our larger cities. Observation of some of these plants badly set has prompted this article.

Plants from the above source, or those obtained from a distant nursery, are immensely benefited by being immersed in deep water as soon as received. From 12 to 24 hours is enough. If the ground is then unfit for planting, they should be placed in shallow trenches and completely covered with damp soil, making it firm about the roots and comparatively loose over the branches.

Early planting is desirable and important but should not be attempted until the ground is frost-free to a considerable depth and has lost its stickiness.

During and at all times the roots must be protected from prolonged periods of exposure to sun and air. A large tub of water placed in a central position takes care of the plants in bulk, and a pail is used to carry a few at a time to where they are needed.

The hole for the reception of the roots should be wide enough to allow them to be spread to their greatest extent, and a little deeper than seems necessary. This extra depth enables the planter to place the plant in its proper position by shaking it during the process of filling in the hole, allowing the soil to flow beneath and among the roots until the plant rests at the required level. When the filling in is completed and trodden firmly, the crown, or that point of the plant from which the branches radiate, should be two inches below the surface. The roses are then pruned by removing all weak growth and cutting back the stronger branches to within six inches of the ground. The cut being made one-half inch above a bud pointing outwards or away from the plant centre.

SNOOPER'S COMMENTS

By Staff Reporter

If you'll promise to keep this a secret I'll tell you something very important. This week's "Snooper's Comments" is not being written by the "Snooper" at all, but by his assistant. You see, I'm grabbing the chance of writing this myself, while the "Snooper" is away for a few hours and I'll have it on the press before he gets back, and it will all be a very pleasant surprise for him, I hope.

On his scratch pad I see a note which says, "write about softball." Lemme see, now! There was supposed to be a softball meeting held two weeks ago at the Chateau, wasn't there, but nothing came of it, as hardly anyone attended. Another meeting will be held in the very near future, though, and the directors feel that the time is about ripe now for a good big enthusiastic get-together. And just in case you should think that softball is for men only, let me remind you that the girls had a pretty snappy team last year, and they intend to do things in an even bigger way this year. The girls didn't have every thing organized as well as they might have last summer, but that will be remedied this season.

Two weeks ago there was a movement in the air to establish a Young Men's Canadian Club in Huntingdon. And now the movement seems to have been scattered to the winds. Mr. J. M. Hunter resigned as vice-president and the club seems to be running into difficulty everywhere. This all seems to sound like an obituary notice. Maybe it is.

Another note on the pad says "re Howick dance." Well, from all reports, a very good time was had by all, or should we say a very, very good time was had by all.

The Chateau opened its main dining-room for dancing Monday night and a real crowd was on hand for the event. Harrison Jones supplied the music.

About Figures

Poker players!—Here's a little inside dope on just what odds you're fighting against the next time you sit down for a couple of hands with the boys. Your chances are 7 to 5 against making a pair;; 20 to 1 against making 2 pairs; 46 to 1 against making 3 of a kind; 254 to 1 against making a straight; 508 to 1 against making a flush; 693 to 1 against making a full house; 4,164 to 1 against 4 of a kind; 72,192 to 1 against a straight flush, and (close your eyes) 649,739 to 1 against a royal flush. This has all been worked out by an expert, but don't ask me how. With slight variations, the same formula could probably be used to find out what chance you have of winning the Irish Sweepstakes or the English derby. It would be a comforting thought to know as soon as you bought the ticket that you had, let us say, a 97,463,342 to 1 chance of winning anything.

More About Figures

If you don't know that W. F. F. D. stands for (Western Federation of Fan Dancers), then you wouldn't know that the U. F. B. S. D. A. stands for (United Fan, Bubble and Specialty Dancers of America). You'll just have to take my word for it. Anyway, the two rival organizations are at war. The first one wants to honour Sally Rand, but the second group claim that they should pay the tribute. Said Rosita Carmen, leader of the U. F. B. S. D. A.: "This is not the first time Joyce Williams (head of the W. F. F. D.) has caused trouble. Last year we pledged ourselves to use plumes not more than 25 inches in length, but she held out for 35 inches. If she's ashamed of her figure, she ought to dance in a cape." Tsk - tsk - Rosita!

Certain spots in Malone seem to be very popular with certain people here. To these "certain people," the following is respectfully dedicated:

Mourning After the Night Before.

Monday: Yo ho and a bottle of rum,
Something's pounding on your ear-drum,
And makes it buss
And hum.

Tuesday: Feeling worse,
You call in an extra nurse,
And order
The hearse.

Wednesday: Lots of baking soda,
Helps not one "ioda"
Though double
The "quoda."

Thursday: Ready for wreaths and flowers,
You take nosedrops every two hours,
But hope
Sours.

Friday: Cough and sneeze,
Eggscusing idd, pleaze.

Could you stand a little more Huntingdon humour? B. F. says he went to the show Saturday night and couldn't find a seat any place. Then he spied one way down near the front, beside a young lady, and when he asked her if it was reserved, or anything, she said, "I think it must be. It hasn't said a word since I came in."

And just in case that has you rolling all around in the aisle, here's one that'll pick you up. B. F. says that most ladies drive cars just for the wreckreation they get out of it. Ouch!

Matrimonial

Arnold-Barnes

The marriage of Miss Marjorie McClellan Barnes, elder daughter of Mr. Frederick Barnes, F.C.I.C., of Chateauguay, Que., formerly of Shawinigan Falls, to Mr. Jarvis Hallett Arnold, of Chateauguay Basin, Que., took place quietly at St. George's Church, Chateauguay, Que., at one o'clock Sunday, April 12th. The Rev. W. G. Walsh officiated. Easter flowers decorated the church. The bride was given in marriage by her father and was unattended. She wore a blue taffeta costume with matching accessories. Mr. James Andrews, of Montreal, attended the bridegroom as best man. The couple left later by motor for a wedding trip to New York and Atlantic City. Upon their return they will reside in Chateauguay.

Brown-Cameron

A quiet but pretty wedding took place at 5 p.m. Wednesday afternoon, April 8th, 1936, at the home of the bride's father, New Erin, when Clare, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Cameron, and John, son of Mr. William Brown, and the late Mrs. Brown, were united in marriage by the Rev. J. B. Maclean, D.D., assisted by the Rev. J. H. Miller.

The bride, who was unattended, wore a gown of aqua blue crepe and silver slippers and carried Talisman roses. Her only ornament was a sapphire pendant, gift of the groom.

After the ceremony a sumptuous dinner was served the guests, after which the bride and groom left by train on a short honeymoon. The bride wore a light fawn homespun coat over her wedding dress and dark brown accessories for travelling.

Out-of-town guests included the Misses Wynne Cameron of Bedford, Olive Cameron of Montreal, and the Misses Elizabeth, Helen and Alice Brown of Montreal, and Mr. Gerald Capsey of Mystic, Que.

A reception was held on Monday night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Cameron upon the return of the bride and groom.

Dundee

There is little hope of further sugaring activities this spring; the season has fallen far short of being as good as last spring.

Misses Christena and Marjorie Ross of Powerscourt spent the week-end at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Steven.

Zion United Church services were conducted on Easter Sunday by Rev. John H. McVicar, D.D., his topic for the morning service was "The Firstborn From the Dead" and that of the evening service "Greater Love;" the choir rendered special music.

The Zion United Church congregation and session gratefully acknowledged at their morning service Sunday, 12th April, a recognition from their mother town, Dundee, Scotland, which came about as follows:

Mr. D. M. Kinnear, a native of Dundee, Scotland, now residing in Westmount, Que., sent a copy of The Huntingdon Gleaner last November to his native town, feeling they would be interested in the doings of the people here in Dundee, Que., upon receiving a copy of The Evening Telegraph, of March 7th, 1936, from Dundee, Scotland, Mr. Kinnear noted a very interesting article concerning the descriptive account of the Anniversary and Centenary celebration of Zion United Church which the Editor had noted in The Huntingdon Gleaner sent by him; with most kindly consideration Mr. Kinnear forwarded this paper and also an explanatory letter to the Postmaster, requesting that these be given to the Clerk of Session, Mr. James Arnold, as he had learned of the death of Rev. C. A. Haughton, to whom this communication would have been sent. Mr. Arnold brought this information to the session, who expressed their deep appreciation of this kindly and thoughtful act of Mr. Kinnear, also of the consideration of the Editor of The Evening Telegraph concerning the article appearing in his paper entitled "Early Settlers in Canada, with Dundee connections."

Rev. J. H. McVicar, D.D., conveyed to the congregation the report from the session and received their cooperation in the rendering of thanks.

Referring to the article mentioned in The Evening Telegraph, it is found that they infer that a large percentage of the early settlers in Dundee, Que., hailed from the town bearing that same name in Scotland; there were a number of the earliest settlers who did come from there, but a greater portion of those coming from Scotland were natives of the more northerly parts of that country; nevertheless the city which bears the same name as our own little township has a unique interest for this present generation, who gladly extend a hand across the water to "Bonnie Dundee."

Picturesque "Home" For Wild Life in France

There has been constituted in the south of France a national reserve for wild life which, in some ways, is the most picturesque natural home for bird and beast to be found in Europe. It is situated on the Camargue, the island famous in old French history and legend and well known to visitors to Arles in Provence. Really the delta of the River Rhone, entirely formed by alluvial deposits, it is in great part a savage region of marsh and prairie.

The Societe Nationale d'Acclimatation, which has charge of the reserve, protects acut 50,000 acres as tenant, and it is proposed to increase the area ultimately to 100,000 acres. Even after a relatively short experience, however, it has been observed that the migratory birds of many species which have always used the island as a landing station are increasing in numbers. For many it is the last hopping-off place for Africa. Besides every sort of wild duck in immeasurable numbers—storks, herons and egrets—there are many rare birds which cannot be seen elsewhere in Europe. Perhaps the most astonishing are the pink flamingoes, which are to be found in flocks of 3,000 or 4,000 together.

PREVENT DANGERS OF CONSTIPATION*

"Bulk" in ALL-BRAN Is Gentle in Action

Common constipation is largely due to insufficient "bulk" in meals. You fail to get your internal exercise. Millions of people have found that Kellogg's ALL-BRAN supplies soft "bulk" with satisfactory results.

Tests in nutrition laboratories demonstrate that the "bulk" in ALL-BRAN can be used with the utmost confidence. Naturally, those few individuals with diseased or highly sensitive intestines should not take "bulk" in any form—either in leafy vegetables or in bran.

Unlike cathartics, ALL-BRAN is natural in its action—nor does this food lose its effectiveness with continued use. Within the body, it absorbs moisture and cleanses the intestines, promoting normal and healthful elimination.

Two tablespoonfuls of this delicious cereal, served with milk or cream, are usually sufficient. Enjoy it also in cooked dishes.

Help your family keep well. Serve ALL-BRAN regularly for regularity. Sold by all grocers. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

Obituary

The late Dr. Paul A. McDonald

The death of Dr. Paul A. McDonald, after a short illness, on Wednesady, April first, cast a gloom over that part of Edmonton, formerly known as Strathcona. For more than thirty years Dr. McDonald was the beloved physician of many families there. Son of the Rev. Dr. D. McDonald, he was born at Creemore, Ontario. He received his public and early high school education at Carleton Place, Ontario. In 1891 his father became minister of Zion Church, Dundee, and Paul completed his high school education at Huntingdon Academy. He entered McGill University and graduated with Arts and Medical degrees in 1902. He then took post-graduate work in Edinburgh and Glasgow. While studying in Scotland he was awarded his L.R.C.P.S.

From 1903 till 1905 he practised as ship's surgeon on a little liner that pounded up and down the West African Coast encountering natives, tourists and European managers of African estates. His family having moved to Strathcona, Alberta, the young doctor joined them in 1905 and started up a practise.

A lover of nature he was a member of the Alberta Fish and Game Protective Association. He also was a member of the Alberta Medical Association and the Edmonton Academy of Medicine.

At an emergent meeting held Wednesday night the members of the Academy of Medicine adopted a resolution of sympathy to his two sisters, the Misses Lila and Edna McDonald. "He was a very quiet and unassuming man who won the respect of his patients. He will be greatly missed by the members of the medical profession," said one doctor.

The funeral service was held on Friday, April third, Rev. Geo. A. Macdonald officiated, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Fraser Smith, an old friend of the family. The pallbearers were six Edmonton doctors, one of whom was Dr. Robt. Shearer, another Huntingdon Academy boy.

Hints

It is a mistake to keep biscuits in the same tin as cakes. If placed together, the former quickly become soft.

If meat is not to be used at once in hot weather, sprinkle a little pepper over it. This not only discourages flies, but helps to conserve the juices.

Mint will keep fresh for a considerable time if it is washed in cold water in which a little bicarbonate of soda has been dissolved.

Suet will not stick to the knife while chopping if a little ground rice has been sprinkled over it.

When frying foodstuffs care should be taken to avoid placing too much into the pan at one time, as this decreases the temperature of the fat.

Add a few drops of lemon juice to rice while it is cooking. This not only whitens the rice, but separates the grains.

Bacon will not shrink while frying if it has been dipped into flour.

To Beautify Filter Plant Property

The Horticultural Committee composed of D. J. O'Connor, D. L. Kelly, R. E. Cogland, A. A. Lunan, and Fred Langevin, met with the Huntingdon Town Council at the Filter Plant on Tuesday afternoon with regards to beautifying that town property.

The Council expressed itself as favorably inclined to support the movement sponsored by the Board of Trade, and will help where possible. The property around the filter plant has long been in need of some improvements. A much better impression of the town will be given tourists if the first property they see is attractive. The grounds there will be graded and shrubbery and flowers planted. Considerable other work is also contemplated by the Board of Trade Committee.

Silk Worms "Smuggled" Into Europe by Monks

The discovery of the thread of the cocoon is credited to a wife of a Chinese emperor as far back as 2600 B.C., but it was not until the Sixth century since the birth of Christ that the manufacture of silk worked westward into Europe. The first of the worms to be brought west were carried by two Persian monks in hollow canes, who brought them to Constantinople.

After eventually reaching France, the silk industry received a considerable acceleration which later drew England into the field, for many silk weavers were forced from France by the edict of Nantes. Seeking a supply of cocoons, the English sought to foster the production of the silk worm in the Colonies. The first were introduced in Virginia, with bounties offered for the production of silk. Virginians found, however, that tobacco was a more profitable crop and the silk worm languished.

Efforts were also made to establish the worm in South Carolina and in Connecticut, while 75 or so years ago an attempt was made in California, but they all came to nothing.

IT WILL PAY YOU

TO WAIT FOR MY CALL BEFORE YOU BUY FLY SPRAY FOR THE COMING SEASON

Watkins Fly Spray goes further, because you use less. Farmers and dairymen prefer Watkins Fly Spray, because it kills flies outright, keeps flies off the stock, leaves stock clean and comfortable, goes further than other sprays and will not taint milk or reduce the flow. Many dairymen report that they have to buy only half as many gallons of Watkins Fly Spray to get the same results. It's money in your pocket when you buy Watkins Fly Spray. Wait For Watkins — It Pays!

A brilliant garden of flowers, even the kind that the neighbors will regard with envy, is not a difficult creation. True there are some of the rarer varieties of roses, lilies, gladioli and similar things that require skill and not a little luck. But for the average man or woman, with only a limited amount of time, space and money, there is really a wide range of variety, color and height. Many of these things are almost as easily grown as weeds. Once planted, and possibly thinned they will flourish despite neglect and insects.

Easily Grown Flowers

Take such things as the cosmos. Seed of this flower can be planted outside almost as soon as the soil is fit to work. It grows quickly, is tall and graceful, and will begin to bloom from early July on. Cosmos come in two or three colors, but are mostly pink or red. In recent years a double type has been added to the selection offered.

Zinnias, giant or dwarf size, are another flower that the busy person can plant with certain satisfaction of a big display of bloom. These except for the tiny affair with close button like flowers, are also large plants. The bigger ones will make a height of 18 inches to two feet or more. Colors cover a wide range from dull red, bronze and yellow to bright red and pinks. Blooms somewhat resemble the rose.

Small Flowers

In the smaller types of easily grown flowers are alyssum, white and dainty and useful for edging. These will grow in partial shade and made excellent edging plants. Portulaca is a spreading plant with bright yellow red and pink wax like flowers. It thrives in bright sunshine and dry soil. Nasturtiums, marigolds, calendulas and petunias will complete a good garden of easily grown annual flowers.

Vegetables for Small Gardens

The householders with only a little land to spare should concentrate on those vegetables which give the biggest returns for the smallest space occupied. Among such kinds are beans, carrots, onions, lettuce, swiss chard, spinach, cucumbers and beets. In the lesser-known vegetables are: leeks, eggs and pepper plants, broad beans and cos lettuce. These can all be grown in almost any part of Canada. Experts advise the inclusion of something new in the vegetable line each year so that variety can be gradually widened.

Where Freshness Counts

Another type of vegetable to be considered by even the city gardener are those things that deteriorate quickly after being taken from the garden. Therefore they are never so fresh when purchased. Some of them take up quite a lot of room but to get the real fresh flavor they must be grown where they can be taken from the garden and put right in the pot or on the table. In this category will be corn, never so sweet and tender as when freshly picked.

Garden peas also fall in this class. They lose flavor in a few hours after picking. In recent years the larger and taller kinds have become popular. The taller of these are best grown on brush, or strings and when handled in this way do not take up a great deal of room. They are usually slightly wrinkled and very sweet. The more expensive of the canned varieties are now usually of these larger peas.

In the kitchen garden it is advisable of course to keep a plentiful supply of salad material like leaf and head lettuce, onions and possibly celery. The latter is set out in the garden as well started plants usually after all danger of frost is over. For fall storage, planting takes place in June or even July.

A Short Cut

For the quickest possible results the gardener is advised to purchase a certain quantity of started plants of both flowers and vegetables. These are usually purchased from the greenhouse, florist or seed house. It is important to get the varieties wanted and on this account it is a splendid idea to consult a good Canadian seed catalogue before placing the order. The gardener can look over the various varieties offered in the catalogue and should make sure that the particular varieties wanted are in the boxes of plants bought.

Among the flowers which can be purchased as started plants are cosmos, zinnias, petunias, marigolds, salpiglossis, nicotine, and a host of others. Cabbages, celery, tomatoes, head lettuce, egg and pepper plants in the vegetable line are all sold as started plants.

For Filling In

It is a good plan, old gardeners state, to use started annual flower plants of the kinds mentioned above for planting among tulips and other spring flowering bulbs which will be past their best in a few more weeks. They need something to hide dying foliage. Then again quick growing annuals will always be useful for filling in any blind spots in the perennial beds where winter has been unusually severe.

It is not too late in most parts of Canada to order and plant perennial flowers and even shrubs and vines. Often towards the end of the season prices are lower and while the selection is not as wide as earlier, there should be a good choice.

Aubrey

The Aubrey-Riverfield W. I. met at the home of Mrs. Robert McClenaghan on Thursday at 2 p.m. with twenty ladies present who responded to the roll call with a "joke." Plans were made for the annual Convention to be held in Riverfield Church Hall on May 1. Current Events were given by the Conveners present, and a very interesting paper on "Is a person known by his clothes, his speech or the company he keeps?" was prepared and read by Mrs. W. Craig and was followed by a short discussion of same. A paper on Home Economics—Family relationship—showing how one may be a good housekeeper, but not a homemaker, was given by Mrs. Sam Reddick and enjoyed by all. A display of beautiful braided rugs made from silk stockings and underwear, also a tufted bedspread were shown by Mrs. Jas. Angell, and a tinted centrepiece by Mrs. E. Ness, these latter two being made from the co-operative feed bags, proving what useful articles can be made from inexpensive materials. A display of articles made from wool is to be featured at our May Convention so we hope for a worthwhile display. An account of the twenty-fifth celebration of Marmora Women's Institute was read by one of the members and the meeting closed with the National Anthem, after which a delicious lunch was served by the hostesses, Mrs. Angell, Miss Morris and Mrs. McClenaghan and a social hour enjoyed.

Mr. and Mrs. Bryce Bruce were supper guests of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold McKell on Wednesday.

Mrs. Geo. Robb, Keith Robb and Ralph Reddick spent Saturday in Montreal.

The funeral of the late Mr. Lawrence Gruer was held in Riverfield Church on Wednesday at 2 p.m., the seating capacity of the church being taxed to its utmost, showing the respect in which the departed was held. Rev. A. B. B. Moore, assisted by the Rev. K. House, had charge of the service, and preached a very effective and helpful sermon. The remains were laid to rest in Riverfield cemetery. The floral tributes were numerous and beautiful. Mr. Gruer leaves to mourn his loss, his wife, four sons, Russell of Montreal United Theological College, Ross, Wilbert and Wallace at home, and three daughters, Marjorie, nurse-in-training at the Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal, Muriel and Gladys at home, also his mother, Mrs. W. Gruer, of Montreal, four brothers, William and Robert of Aubrey, John of Riverfield and Dr. D. Gruer of Sutton, four sisters, Mrs. Jas. McFarlane of Aubrey, Mrs. A. Nussey of Brysonville, the Misses Elsie and Gertrude of Montreal, besides many other relatives to whom the sympathy of the community is extended in their sad bereavement.

Rockburn

The Sunday evening service drew a large attendance, the church hall being filled to its capacity and the Easter Pageant was one that had its appeal for all. The beautiful background on the stage was enhanced by the addition of evergreens and potted plants against which the bright coloured costumes of the performers showed up in fine relief. The many hymns were very sweetly rendered and the spoken parts were very clearly enunciated so all could be heard and enjoyed. Rev. W. Ross conducted the brief opening service, giving to the program a reverent and fitting introduction, which was sustained throughout the evening, and the benediction was pronounced by the Rev. T. Duncan. The collection amounted to $16.80.

Miss Alice Sloan spent the Easter holidays with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. Sloan.

Miss Evelyn Ingham of Lennoxville and Mr. Alex. Woodrow of Montreal were guests over the week-end of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Graham.

Mr. and Mrs. Morris Maither and family are occupying the Anderson house in this place.

Obituary

The late Mrs. Marion Shanty

Funeral Mass was said in Fort Covington's St. Mary's Church Monday morning, April 6th, for Mrs. Marion LaPrade Therrien Shanty, who passed away suddenly Friday evening previous at the home of her son, Mr. Isaac Therrien where she had been living. Burial was made in St. Mary's cemetery.

Death came to Mrs. Shanty about five o'clock Friday, April 3rd, after a coughing spell which had affected her intermittently for the previous twenty-four hours. She had been enjoying her usual good health. For a period of over forty years she had been afflicted with a goitre. The deceased was born 83 years ago below Montreal but spent her youth and most of her lifetime in St. Anicet to where her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Laprade, had moved when she was a little girl. She was twice married. Her first husband, Louis Therrien died about seventeen years ago. He was a native of Fort Covington but they spent their married life in St. Anicet until about 18 years ago when they moved to Dundee to live with their son, Isaac. Her second husband, Louis Shanty to whom she was united at St. Mary's Rectory in Fort Covington ten years ago, passed away six years later.

Surviving are three sons, John Therrien of Cornwall; Isaac Therrien of Fort Covington and Ernest Therrien of Dundee; and one daughter, Mrs. John Annette of Tupper Lake.

The late William Casey

The funeral service for William Casey one of Montreal's leading musicians who died Friday, April 10th, in his 75th year, was held Monday morning in St. Gabriel's Church. His nephew, Rev. E. G. Polan, pastor of St. Aloysius parish, officiated.

Mr. Casey, whose performances of his own musical compositions and of Irish songs had established his reputation as one of the city's most popular artists, was born in Ste. Brigide, Que., on November 5, 1861. Brought to Montreal as a child, he obtained his musical education there, his long career having made his name a popular by-word among music lovers.

Keenly interested in his fellow men, he took an active part in all communal affairs of St. Gabriel parish during the past 45 years and he was also one of the oldest members of the St. Ann's Young Men's Society.

Surviving are five sons, James, William, John, Thomas, and Michael Casey, all of Montreal; a daughter, Mrs. Walter P. O'Connor; and 13 grandchildren. His wife, formerly Johanna McConville, and a daughter, Rev. Sister Mary Anna, of the Sisters of Providence, pre-deceased him several years ago.

Covey Hill

In response to a request for some details concerning Rev. Mr. Maitland's new charge, a member of the W.M.S. has received an interesting letter from the mistress of the manse at Spencerville. Mrs. Maitland says that there was much sickness, but no deaths, in their congregation last winter. They have had an average attendance of 60 in the S.S. and expected more in the summer, and there are 15 in the church choir. The W.M.S. in which everyone works and no one feels she is overworked has surely attained unto the ideal. The Ladies' Aid gave an Irish stew dinner on the evening of March 27th with an Irish programme. On another evening an amateur hour was the attraction with prizes for the best items. Food sales were held monthly and proved a success. Crokinole parties having become popular in this district, one was put on by the young people of the church and a bean supper served. The manse is roomy and pleasant in every way.

"Freddy stays home close to the radio every single night."

ernment believes that by 1937 the cost of relief will have fallen materially. This spring is supposed to be the 'last long pull' before conditions throughout the country begin to be reflected in more employment and better times. Encouraging reports are coming in from British Columbia and the Maritimes. The worst spot of all is Regina, Saskatchewan; and this is partly due to drought aftermath. One province in the East reports 37 per cent fewer persons on relief as at April 1st, compared with a year ago.

Hon. Charles Dunning had no sooner disposed of the Alberta loan situation, for the time being; when Hon. T. D. Pattullo arrived from British Columbia by aeroplane with a set of new problems. The financial position of the Pacific coast province is not dissimilar to that of Alberta. It, too, has a loan maturity coming due soon, and is unable to meet it from its own resources. Possibly by May 15th, when the province owes $5,500,000, the bond market may have improved sufficiently so that British Columbia can sell securities to the public and take care of the matter without coming to Ottawa for help. But the prospects are not good.

The Loan Council

The federal government is still, of course, prepared to back the provinces in a re-funding scheme, either for part or all of the provincial securities. But only on one condition, namely, that a Loan Council have something to say about future borrowings. That was what held up the Aberhart negotiations, the Alberta authorities not being prepared to give up any say regarding future action. And the same difficulty looms in connection with British Columbia. Last December, when the matter was first raised, all provinces seemed to think that a federal guarantee was a promising way out of a very serious difficulty. Get a federal guarantee, refund existing five per cent bonds for three per cent, save several millions in annual interest costs, and balance the budget. But the provinces have had time since to think over the implications of a loan council, and so, for that matter, has the Dominion. Some of the advisers of the government here are beginning to see in an interlocking of Dominion and provincial finances a very serious turn of affairs. One sovereign state, they say, should never become the chief creditor of another sovereign state. It will lead to grave political difficulties. Suppose, in the future, a provincial government with one party in power was anxious to borrow money in order to promote some idea of its own, and a federal government of the opposite political complexion, through the Loan Council, effectively blocked the project. Would that not be a strain on the ties of Confederation? So the experts are beginning to reason.

Improving Radio Service

The committee of the House of Commons dealing with radio made a start in its inquiry into ways and means of improving the present service. The Canadian Radio Commission, as operated during recent years, is quite a different body than was contemplated by the Aird royal commission back in 1929. Partly this has been due to lack of funds. The chain of powerful government stations blanketing Canada has never been erected. There are wide differences of opinion as to whether the government-owned radio service has been a success. Generally speaking, the verdict is that it has been a moderate, but by no means an outstanding success. There appears to be no sentiment of consequence looking back to a privately-owned system, but there are weaknesses in the present set-up which parliament would like to eradicate.

The Canadian Press appeared before the radio committee last week and proposed to extend its present newscast service. Instead of one broadcast at night, it is proposed to have three or four during the day and evening. These are furnished free to the Canadian Radio Commission by the Canadian Press.

The Editors' Den

Bursaries for Efficient Youth

IN THE interests of the youth of this country, whose parents are not over-blessed with material wealth, a noble and beneficial movement is in contemplation by able citizens of the Dominion, who have the welfare of the Dominion at heart.

This newspaper feels it would be neglecting its duty if it did not bring this matter to the notice of the people of Fort Frances and district, as they, equally with other parts, would benefit.

It has been found that fewer than one per cent. of the people of Canada are University graduates, yet from this small percentage comes eighty per cent. of our leaders in all walks of life. Of the niney-nine per cent. who leave school at matriculation, when their specialized education should really begin, are there not many who are more brilliant than those who continue; who have the gifts of leadership but cannot go further simply because of lack of funds.

The student population of our colleges today is largely made up of boys and girls who have been sent there by parents, financially able to provide the necessary fees—and what cost a good deal more, to maintain them while away from home during the years of their courses. Except for a handful of privately endowed scholarship students, who have earned advancement by their brains, the entire student body at all our schools of higher learning are there, not because they are brilliant, not because they have a special quality of brain, not because of any special aptitude whatsoever—but simply because their parents desire to equip them with a college education and can shoulder the expense. To counteract such a situation, Great Britain again takes the lead. The Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, supposed to be the scholastic homes of the rich, contain nearly 40 per cent. assisted students. Government records for 1929 show the British Government assisted, financially, no fewer than 73,000 students; in 1934 it had risen to over 140,000. The state, through the board of education, grants state scholarships and other modes of assistance. Local education authorities grant local or county scholarships and these with other forms of public scholarships give various forms of aid which enable indigent students of promise to proceed to the University. Again, the British Government appropriates annually over $5,000,000 for research, while Canada has actually reduced the comparatively small amount voted for that purpose.

Most other enlightened countries are forging ahead; most notably Japan, Germany, and despised Russia. Russia is centering her whole economic problem on science. She is now spending half a billion dollars a year on science and research, training her own youth for the work. Her scientific laboratories are by far the best equipped in the world. The governments of the dominions of New Zealand, Australia and South Africa have all schemes of state scholarship. It is not what Canada is doing, but what Canada is going to do, to improve the present conditions. Other countries mentioned have not the resources of Canada. Their problems are also ours and we want a small army of trained and gifted Canadians to work on them. Unemployment is a problem, the solution of which is not yet in sight. Present industry will not absorb the idle and the expedients which have been and are being tried in the United States and elsewhere seem to be inadequate. Research and technical training will create new industries in Canada, which will give increased employment. All science is advancing rapidly, new universities are appearing so frequently, that it is a matter of extreme urgency for the national well being that we should mobilise the brains of the country and turn its resources into wealth. It is suggested that 1,000 National scholarships of the annual value of $400 with free tuition be awarded by the Government of Canada. National scholars to be chosen only from those who would otherwise be unable to attend a university by reason of lack of funds, at all events for the present. National scholars to be chosen because of their mental and intellectual gifts, but consideration to be given also to character and temperament. National scholars to be assigned to courses best suited to their special talents and individual bend of mind, on the principles of vocational guidance. All such courses to be designed to fit the student for work in Canada and for the benefit of Canada. A proportion of the scholarships to be for Nation Wide competition, the remainder to be alloted to the provinces according to population, and these assigned to definite districts, so that opportunities to win them will be available to brilliant boys and girls in every part of Canada. Citizens of the Rainy River district, your boys and girls are no doubt able and willing to excel; assist in every way you can; give them their chance. Use what influence you have; give your vote if necessary and help to bring about the successful fruition of such a splendid endeavour.

Order of Chivalry For Good Drivers

EIGHT years ago there was formed in Great Britain an organization known as the Order of the Road with an original member ship of two men which has now grown to 3,000, every one of them with a spotless driving record and every one of them pledged to do his utmost to eliminate road evils.

Each member of this unique Order must possess a clean record as a driver—no convictions, no official record of dangerous or careless driving. He is pledged to uphold gallantry and chivalry on the road. He displays a red and white badge on the radiator of his car and any member who fails to uphold the traditions of the Order forfeits his badge.

The aims and objects of the Order are as follows:

To provide an incentive to good driving.

To gain recognition for the driver of proved merit.

To promote good will between motorists themselves and all other users of the King's Highway.

To assist in the introduction of useful safety devices.

To creat propaganda that will tend to assist in bringing to drivers a correct view of their responsibilities as users of the highways.

To suggest or advance theories which experience has shown will decrease road fatalities and add to the enjoyment of walking, riding, cycling, or driving.

Membership in this Order is not granted merely upon application. Social standing has nothing to do with acceptance, for the driver of a Rolls Royce is just as free to join as the operator of a truck.

But all those desirous of becoming members must be known as good drivers and produce references. They must have been completely free of any trouble for at least three years (ultimate verbal offspring of lazy mind) miles in the three years previous to their admission. They must exhibit their licenses and they must give particulars of their insurance claims. And the successful applicant must give a pledge that he will give consideration to all users of the highway, give clear signals, never act recklessly or carelessly.

Britain has recently made considerable strides in reducing the number of its automobile fatalities by tackling the problem in earnest. The United States and Canada see the total of such accidents rising from year to year. Is there any possibility that formation of branches of the Order of the Road on this side of the Atlantic would be of influence in reducing this toll?

—Brockville Recorder

Builders and Trees

IN THE fruitful process of nature there is one vital element which is easy to destroy, and by so doing bring disharmony into the whole course of the seasons. This is the tree, which is helpless before the greed and thoughtlessness of man. Man cannot change the movement of the earth nor control the rain or the sun, but any child strong enough to wield an axe, a saw or a jackknife, can cut down or kill a tree.

There is lacking precise knowledge of the part the tree plays in climate, water supply and soil supply but there is a distinct connection. Yet anyone with title to land may do as he pleases with the trees thereon.

When lumbermen were slashing away the country's rich heritage of timber the poetic "Woodman, spare that tree!" was pertiment; to-day it is pertinent to implore "Builder, spare that tree."

Builders of homes and highways are reckless with the trees found upon the scene of their operations. Those not cut down or uprooted are so cut and bruised by machinery and materials that death is certain. Living trees enhance the value of any residential property, and yet workers will destroy them because they happen to be "in the way."

Highways cannot turn off their course to save some arboreal patriarch, but highway builders are constantly destroying trees that could be spared and which eventually must be replaced.

What Is The Function Of The Junior Red Cross In The Schools

W. P. PERCIVAL, M.A., Ph.D.
Director of Protestant Education for the Province of Quebec.

The most general type of non-curricular work encouraged in the elementary grades outside of the regular classroom hours is the Junior Red Cross. The Red Cross organization is international. Enrolled in the Junior division are millions of boys and girls of every race, nationality, creed and colour. The objectives of the Junior Red Cross are both practical and desirable. They consist in striving to live hygienically, to learn the fundamentals of citizenship, and to lead lives of service. The motto of the Order is "I serve". Each Canadian member takes the following pledge: "I promise to serve the King and to honour the flag of the British Empire and to work for the Red Cross, the emblem of service for others." Junior Red Cross was organized in the schools during the Great War in order that school children might share in service activities for the soldiers at the front.

When representatives of the Great Powers gathered in Paris to discuss the terms of the Treaty of Versailles, many statistics gathered by several nations were compared. The figures relating to health showed that health conditions among the nations involved were little short of tragic. In Canada, for example, in the third year of the war when conscription came into force, it was found that only one man in three possessed a normal health rating. In England only one man in six possessed normal health. It was, therefore, decided by the leaders of the various governments that something radical must be done to give instruction in health education. The International Red Cross, at the request of their national governments, undertook this programme. In the Treaty appears a paragraph in which the League of Nations encouraged the establishment of Red Cross Organizations having as purposes "the improvement of health, the prevention of disease, and the mitigation of suffering." At a meeting of the International Red Cross attended by representatives from over sixty nations, the means for carrying out this programme were discussed and, as it was felt that one of the best ways for doing so would be by inspiring children to follow rudimentary rules of health, Junior Red Cross activities came into being.

Work Of Red Cross

The Junior Red Cross furnishes a means for bringing home to the young child, in a practical manner, the lessons he reads in his Health books. The daily rules of health are practised and the building up of the necessary habits to ensure good health is encouraged. Team spirit, leadership and example work together to aid children to form habits of cleanliness, correct posture, accident prevention and good citizenship.

Each class in every Protestant school in the Province is urged to form a group, but each is free to organize or not as it wishes. The movement is based upon the principle of self-government for each unit. The teacher is called a Director but is expected only to give benign direction and to leave the operation of the branch in the hands of the pupils. For this purpose, officers, consisting of President, Vice President, Secretary-Treasurer and Circulation Manager (to care for the distribution of the Magazine) are elected from among the children themselves. The whole group is therefore taught how to conduct meetings in approved style and the officers and members of committees, early in life, learn how to bear responsibility.

The spread of Junior Red Cross in the Province of Quebec has been remarkable. This is largely owing to the encouragement given by the Department of Education since 1923. Previous to that time only forty groups were in existence with a membership of 1344. The most recent figures show that 1622 branches have been organized and that the enrolment has increased to 51,992 in the Protestant schools from Gaspé County to Timiskaming. So much has this organization justified its existence that many of the schools report enrolments of one hundred per cent and have done so for several years past.

No fees are exigible in this Province though individuals may subscribe to the monthly magazine. Each member receives a badge which is his emblem of membership and which he values as he understands the meaning of the Red Cross. A certificate is issued to each class. Posters and news-letters keep the principles before the group. In the news-letters the members read the printed reports that they send in of their own work and learn of the activities of other branches in the Province.

The cooperative efforts of the Junior Red Cross groups in the Schools of the Province render enormous benefits to the poor, the sick and the afflicted. Throughout the entire school session many individuals and families receive aid directly from the various branches. Frequently the Juniors give relief to their own members.

Crippled Children's Fund

At Christmas time a great effort is made on behalf of the Crippled Children's Fund. This Fund is made up of the pennies earned or saved by the several branches. In addition, members sell thousands of special calendars at ten cents each. These efforts result in happiness for many children whose future would otherwise have been extremely problematical. The Fund thus created finances the railway transportation, hospitalization, and other expenses that will enable young cripples to secure the medical aid they need. Last Christmas upwards of 29,000 toys and articles were sent to Headquarters for distribution and almost $4400 was received from the sale of the calendars.

All kinds of cases are cared for by the Juniors. A group may work for the Crippled Children's Fund or for an individual patient. Reports concerning such patients are published from time to time in the news-letters. In addition to the cripples, the Juniors have discovered and aided many cases of blind, partially blind, tubercular and other afflicted children and have reported them to Headquarters. Every case so reported is investigated. Hundreds are benefited annually, the treatment sometimes extending over a year but no patient is discharged so long as he can be helped. The Junior Red Cross will advise parents what steps to take and will arrange hospital accommodation for cases which come under the Quebec Public Charities Act.

Several projects undertaken by the Junior Red Cross in cooperation with the Department of Education are worthy of note.

Finding that suitable photographs of King George V, and Queen Mary could not be obtained, it became necessary in 1931 to request their Majesties to do us the honour of sitting for their photographs. This they did expressly for the school children of the Province of Quebec and the schools have been well supplied with their portraits since. When shown them recently, Lord Tweedsmuir stated that these photographs were extremely good likenesses.

In co-operation with the Inspectors of the Department, the Junior Red Cross has undertaken a campaign for the beautifying of the schools. Excellent results have been obtained. Dark colours have almost disappeared from the walls of classrooms and have been replaced by those that lighten the rooms and save the pupils' eyesight. In the lower grades especially, plants, and drapes that beautify but do not darken, ornament the windows. Carefully selected pictures, which help to adorn classrooms and halls, are sold to schools without profit. Many school buildings have been re-painted. The grounds have been levelled, trees and shrubs planted.

In order that patriotism may be further inculcated the Junior Red Cross is supplying to schools, at cost price, Union Jacks neatly mounted on suitable flag staffs for the interior of the school. It is hoped, by this means, that the Union Jack will be displayed constantly in every classroom.

Obituary

The late John Lapage

Mr. John Lapage, 78, succumbed to a heart attack at his farm home at Fort Covington, N. Y., Saturday morning, April 4th. He passed away so quickly death came before aid or medical attention could be given him. He had been eating breakfast and collapsed as he suffered the stroke. He had been in his usual good health but had suffered from asthma for years. Funeral services, largely attended by relatives and friends, were conducted at St. Mary's Church on Tuesday morning, Rev. J. R. Lauzon officiating, and interment was made in St. Mary's cemetery.

Mr. Lapage had been a resident of Fort Covington for approximately sixty years. He was born in Ormstown, on January 19th, 1856, the son of Théophile Lapage but went to the Fort in his early youth. He had always followed the occupation of farming, in youth as a laborer, afterwards as a farm renter and in later years he had acquired the farm where he and his family had since resided, located on the Kelly road, a sideroad off the Bombay highway. Mr. Lapage was a hard worker, thrifty and honest. He was a good farmer and loved fine horses, which he always possessed. He was a former member of the Fort Covington Grange and a past Woodsman.

He is survived by his wife, Alice Charrette, five daughters and three sons.

Culture in The Country

By EDNA COWPER LAURIE
Hemmingford, P.Q.

Have you ever hear it said that culture belongs to the city, that there is no culture in the country? Why is this the general idea? Is it because those in the country are workers with their hands?

There is culture to be found in the country. To achieve food supplies, beauty of home, health and cleanliness that is desired, much is done by the country dwellers themselves. Many of these folks who are accomplishing these menial tasks are people of high ideals and intellect.

How many country students have won highest honours in matriculation examinations? How many professional men have been brought up in the country? How much of what we have of culture has come down to us from poor country folk! We could cite many instances of poor country folk who have enriched our minds with their literature and verse. Some of our best-loved novels delight us with characters, scenes and life outside of cities. How we enjoy these stories! Many, many worthy people live in the country to-day also.

Some may ask why many people left the country to become famous. Perhaps it was because they felt the need of experiment in larger circles and of collecting knowledge and money. They must have had a cultural fertilization of mind before they left the country. In many cases they were full-grown before they did leave.

Naturally, be it city or country, there is always with us the culturally-lacking individual. Sometimes it is the slip-shod fellow who knows better but acts like a boor. He will give the country as an excuse for his appearance, lack of tone and lazy ways. Or it may be one whose egotistical, stubborn mind will carry him far. He may lick his knife, speak anything but the King's English yet bask in office here and there, his voice being heard when wiser ones keep still. He may be one who believes that traditions must be adhered to. Instead of proclaiming the need of a consolidated school with sanitary and heating conveniences, bus service for far-reaching scholars, etc., he sticks to the idea of three or four little school-houses and taxes must keep them all up. His position in the community will not be for long however, as the improvement in culture among the majority is fast changing situations of this kind. H. G. Wells says, "An historian's test of an individual's greatness is, "What did he leave to grow?" Country folk are also considering these factors in electing officials.

The Women's Institutes are a great source of culture for the small town and country woman. They do excellent work in agricultural education and cooperation. They help in many ways to better things. They study first aid, health, medical discoveries and inspire talks on all subjects.

Country dwellers have great chances of refinement through contacts they wish to make. Roads are good, owing to bus lines and cars. Distances are quickly covered. Views of others come easily over the air as there is practically no electrical interference to spoil reception. Entertainments, current events, worthwhile information, music and talks may daily be listened to from afar. Good books and the Bible preside in these country homes. A certain degree of solicitude is necessary to the growth of the mind. The surroundings of the countryside are inducive to thinking. There is no mad race for wealth. One knows that, on a middle class income, one can live well in the country. People of the Old Countries know this and take advantage of it more than we Canadians do. There are many communities where people of middle age and middle class live contentedly outside of the cities which formerly were their homes.

My idea of country ministers' sermons was quickly dispelled after my arrival in the country. Sermons in our village church agreeably surprised and interested me. I found many equal to the finest I had heard in the city. Such refinement and grace of voice and delivery were all one could ask. A recent church event, only a place of culture would undertake and do well, was a beautiful pageant, "The Challenge of the Cross." Willing and able helpers participated and not only the dramatization but the music of the choir was such that any city church goer or lover of the refined would have enjoyed to the utmost and been inspired by. The church was crowded with inhabitants of the countryside. The beautiful soprano solo was such that any city church would have been proud to have rendered by the same voice in their particular choir. The teaching accomplished by the pageant was one of great value for a member of any church in city or country.

Old conceptions are gradually being upset. In some circles one still hears the remark, "Oh, we might as well wear our old clothes as we are only going to the country." Folks in the country are beauty-conscious, they know and admire what is correct in appearance and grooming. When a little city girl saw a tea-waggon being brought in while she and her mother were visiting she said, "Oh, Mummie, whoever thought there would be such things in the country?" Besides such things there are infinitesimally more! Imagine the experience and learning a boy receives in the woods. Think what he learns from the trees, the soil, outdoor creatures and the like! What child of the city has the chance of watching and finding out the answers to his many questions on natural phenomena? For instance, the country child helps in the gathering of the sap for the maple syrup he enjoys. He has found that it takes five visitations of a bee to form a perfect apple. Oh, yes, there is culture in the country.

MYSTERY HOUSE

BY KATHLEEN NORRIS

Chapter 15

"I'm glad you do love me," Page said affectionately. "I feel as though I were your big sister, Lynn."

There was a silence. Presently, Lynn looked at the diamond in his cupped hand.

"If you'll promise to hold it for three days, and if in that time nothing happens to me, I'll give this back to you," he said, after a moment. "They'll have to work fast now—she and Flora, because of Mrs. Roy's dying. You see?"

"I don't see. But if what you think is true," she said slowly, "we are in terrible danger."

"Certainly we are," Lynn answered simply, almost as if surprised at her denseness.

"Mrs. Prendergast and Flora are involved in one—perhaps in two murders," Lynn whispered.

"Trudy and Mrs. Roy."

"Oh, it can't be true!" the girl breathed. "If it is, why don't we just slip away—you and I—get into San Francisco, where there are lights and people and restaurants and noises!"

"How?" the man asked.

"Well—" Fear was playing on her heart like fingers on the taut strings of a violin now. "We could—one of the cars—only I can't drive," she said, swallowing with a dry throat. "Rand!" she exclaimed in sudden relief. "He's not in this, he isn't such a fool as to let himself into a thing like this with two crazy women!"

"No. I think he believes them. I don't think he knows. You saw how bothered he was last night when Flora said that Mrs. Roy was ill. He didn't come here until after I did. I think she's told him that she'll give him money; he'll be rich. And you know Rand wants to be rich."

"I suppose every one does. I came here because she is rich, and because I though she might like me—take me traveling with her, or send me on a trip," Page confessed.

Lynn was listening only absently. "Shall I give you this?" he said, offering the diamond.

"Oh, hadn't you better, and get the thing out of the way once and for all!"

"But you'll promise to hold it for three days?"

"If you say so. But where'll I hide it for three days?"

"Oh, you can find a thousand places. Just walk through one of the rooms, and reach up and put it on a beam."

"Lynn, I wonder you dare carry it about with you!"

"I don't, often. I did today because I knew they'd all be trying to get this business—" again he jerked his head toward the house,—"well out of the way," he finished. "I knew they wouldn't pay any attention to me!"

"The sensible thing for us to do would be to give it to her right now, and then ask to be sent into the city at once, and never come back!" Page persisted.

"And suppose they said that on account of what happened last night, and Flora being upset, we'd have to wait until tomorrow?"

"It wouldn't kill us to wait until tomorrow."

"No; but by tomorrow I'd have disappeared. They'd all wonder, they'd talk of searching—all that! And then in a few days they'd all be going away, you'd have your money, and you'd know you had let them kill me!"

"Tell me what I ought to do," Page said, trembling, holding tight to his hands. "Whatever is best for you and me. I've got to get out of here, Lynn. I'm frightened."

"They wouldn't hurt you. They'll send you over to Belmont today, with the biggest check you ever saw, if you give them that."

She thought of it. Out of this place of a hundred rooms, with its unfinished beams and rough-plastered halls, its shadows and mysteries, away forever from Flora and Mrs. Prendergast and fear! The opening door seemed to let her into the sunlight.

Page looked at her companion. "We go together or we don't go at all," she said. "Tell me what to do?"

"Tell Mrs. Prendergast tonight that you have the diamond hidden," Lynn said promptly, "and will give it to her on Saturday morning. Today's Tuesday. That gives them four days to pack up what they want, and get out. Rand and Flora'll sail for China on Saturday—there are boats every Saturday. If nothing happens before that give her the diamond on Saturday."

"But suppose they, Flora and Mrs. Prendergast, plan to do something right away? It might be too late for you!"

"They won't do anything to me until they've got it."

"I'll think of a place to hide it. I'll tell you where it is," Page decided quickly, excitedly. "But one thing, more, Lynn," she added, as they went down the terrace stairs and walked out on the cliff; "shall I tell Rand? He's our one hope if Flora goes queer, or if—but I can't even believe it yet!—if Mrs. Prendergast is only pretending to be lame."

"Don't tell him yet! She may tell him. Wait and see what happens."

Flora did not come down to luncheon; Page ate with the two men, but she was nervous and had small appetite.

Rand, in Mrs. Prendergast's room just after dinner, told her quietly that the body of Fanny Roy had been taken to Belmont, and met there by Mrs. Roy's daughter, Mrs. Hibbs, and that the funeral would take place from the Hibbs home in San Francisco the next day.

"Does Mrs. Prendergast feel frightfully?" Page asked. For Rand and she had the sitting-room fire to themselves; their old employer had not appeared all day long, but had instead received short calls from Rand, and had been sedulously attended by Flora.

"We think she does. She won't show it," the man responded. And these were the only references to last night's tragedy.

They were talking along very quietly of books, of ships, of China, and Page was becoming drowsy, when Rand said suddenly, "You will go away with me, won't you?"

The girl looked at him curiously, her color rising. His tone told her he was hardly aware that he had spoken aloud.

"I mean—" he said confusedly, "I mean that I am going away—almost immediately. I want you—most terribly—to go too. I want you to wait for me—somewhere, anywhere—and we'll—we'll . . . ." He broke off abruptly, and there was another pause. "I don't know what I'm saying," he muttered then.

Page was still. The flutter that his shaken tone brought to her own heart, silenced her. Presently Rand spoke again, in his usual quiet tones.

"I told you weeks ago that I had no right to say this to you, and I didn't mean to say it," he said. "But is there any chance—I don't meant now—I don't mean in this accursed place! But after weeks, months, when all this is closed up and forgotten, would you—is there any chance that you would wait for me somewhere? We might begin again—there's such a thing as beginning again; we can forget all this as if it had never been?"

"Rand . . . no," the girl said quietly, after a moment. "I'm terribly sorry. I've never cared that way for any man."

"But you might. Any girl might. You'll love some man some time."

"I don't know. Just now it's all mixed up in—in being afraid of this place," Page said. "Since last night I've wanted—horribly—to get away. I've felt scared quite suddenly, of Flora, and of . . ." She finished the sentence with a motion of her head toward the closed door of Mrs. Prendergast's room. She added, "Did you ever think that she was less lame than she pretends to be—that she can walk when she wants to?"

"I've suspected it for a long time," Rand answered unexpectedly.

"Do you think she is Lynn's grandmother?"

"Does he?"

"He does and he doesn't. You know how he is."

"I think," Rand said quietly, after thought, "that the sooner we all get away from here the better. I think I'll talk the old lady into it right away. No use all going crazy here together. But—but I must have you, Page," he ended.

The phrasing of it startled her. Page said, "What of Flora?" even while she was well aware that just now Flora didn't matter.

"I'm not the kind of man you ought to marry. But I'd try to make you happy, my dear," Rand said, his tone so strained, so almost fierce, that the commonplace little words seemed to carry an unwonted and sinister meaning.

Page saw that dark color was flushing his face, and that great veins were standing on his neck. His hands were gripped savagely together.

"Rand, not now," the girl whispered. "I'm really too frightened at everything that's happening. If it weren't for Lynn—" She paused. She hadn't meant to say that, and for a moment could not think of the full significance of what she had admitted.

"Why do you say 'if it weren't for Lynn'?" the man asked in quick interest.

"I like him so much," Page answered simply. "I feel so sorry for him. I don't want to go away until he has given up that diamond, and until he is comfortably fixed somehow. There's nothing really the matter with Lynn. He has a fine mind, and he's a gentleman too; you can see that. It's just that some—some complex or inhibition or whatever it is that the scientists are always talking about, got him when he was weak and convalescent, and he hasn't gotten over it."

"Physically he is magnificent," Rand offered, watching her. "You like him?" he asked.

"You can't help liking him. He's so gentle and so affectionate; and he's clever in his way, too. He can do anything with his hands."

"Don't make me jealous, Page," Rand said, in a low, hard tone, trembling like a man who is putting strong control upon himself. "Tell me that you are only kind to him; that all this laughing and picnicking isn't—isn't anything but that. We all know what you mean to him, poor fellow. But I'll not stand your telling me—"

"Rand, don't be such a fool!"

Rand had slipped from his chair; he was kneeling now beside hers, one arm half about her, his handsome dark face close to her own in the soft lamp and firelight.

The annual meeting of the Hinchinbrook Horticulture Society was held on Monday at the home of Mr. L. D. Watson. The Secretary's report reminded us of the amount of work done, lantern lectures on birds, beautifying home surroundings, garden pests, etc., all of which were most worthwhile. The treasurer's report showed a small balance of hand. The following officers were elected for 1936-37: Pres., Mrs. W. A. Jamieson; Vice-Pres., Mr. T. Foers; Treas., Mrs. A. W. Perkins; Secretary, Mrs. L. D. Watson; Librarian, Mrs. E. E. Wells. No programme committee was appointed, instead, each month two members will be responsible for the programme, thus dividing the work. As we have several country members who seldom get to a meeting, it was suggested we visit some of these members throughout the summer and hold the meetings at their homes. The School Fair Committee is waiting for word from Mr. R. J. M. Reid to begin visiting the schools in the interests of the School Fair.

Rev. A. Nimmo motored to Morewood, Ont., on Thursday where he conducted the funeral service for a former parishioner of that place. Mrs. Nimmo and children and Mr. John Elder accompanied him.

Mr. and Mrs. Weldon Dillabough of Morewood were week-end guests at The Manse.

Mr. Archie Rowat spent the week-end in Montreal, visiting his son Allan, in the Montreal General Hospital, where he has been a patient for the past eight weeks.

ADVENTURES IN CLEANING YOUR HOUSE

HOUSECLEANING is, as an aunt of mine used to say, the 'remindin'est job of all the year.' If one is an orthodox housekeeper, one begins with closets and bureau drawers, unless, of course, one has an attic. If one lives in a real house—real enough to boast a spacious attic, one always begins there and ends there. First cleaning, airing, packing and marking, and then, when all the rooms have been renovated, again packing and marking articles taken from them. There is, of course, no end to the reminding one gets in an attic.

Not long ago a woman of my acquaintance found in her attic a package of glass pendants which had once adorned an elaborate kerosene lamp. She had kept them because of the lovely colors seen when the sun shone through them, and because it seemed as though there ought to be some interesting way of using them.

As she sat on a chest and held one of them up to the light it just touched the plain green ring of the curtain-pull at the window. At once she knew why she had saved them. They were used at the end of cords on curtains in several rooms and in her summer cottage three are fastened to the cords in such a manner that the summer breezes sing a tinkling song on them.

Try Closets

Closets and bureau drawers may also be good reminders. Take, for instance, the children's shelf in the living-room closet. There may be toys on that shelf which no longer entertain the children who have used them for some time. Perhaps their interests have changed to books, or more grown-up games. One may very easily be reminded of some children who will appreciate those toys. If the matter is presented in the right way to the present owners, a happy sense of sharing will be developed and the toys will be transferred, perhaps anonymously, to a home where they will be more frequently taken from their boxes, and will therefore be happier.

The linen closet contains reminders of a different sort. In fact, next to the library which is so tremendous a reminder that we will not mention it, the linen shelves are more replete with reminders than almost any other part of the house.

Those Large Towels

It is a temptation to linger, as I did the other day, over a little finger-tip towel in one corner of which are the daintiest of cross-stitched flowers, and in the folds of which one still finds a card bearing the words, "I bought this for you in Jerusalem."

Then there are the large towels which men like so well. Perhaps they have been folded on one corner of the shelf and we have taken the ones that are handiest when replenishing the daily supply. But cleaning the linen closet will remind us to hang a few of the favorite towels within reach, and then listen for the sigh of satisfaction and the words, "Now I call that a towel."

Between the very small and the very large towels there may be some with frayed hems which will remind us that what seems to be a bargain may not always be real economy.

Faded curtains, or yellowed paint, may remind us of the rejuvenating effect of a pot of paint, a brush, some fresh muslin and a potted plant.

House cleaning may be much more than its name signifies. It may be an introduction to our real home; a sort of home renewal season. And it may serve to remind us of other days and other ways which were not nearly so comfortable and simple at housecleaning time as are our days and our ways.

Knit Your Costumes

NO garment gives greater satisfaction than a knitted suit. For daytime wear, it is comfortable, requires little attention, and always looks smart. The new fashions in knitted garments include a large variety of pretty styles.

Swagger coats of finger-top or three-quarter length are gaining in favor. The swagger may either match the skirt and top, or be a contrast to both. The new swagger coat has a greater fullness in the back, gained by means of inverted centre pleats at the back. This gives to the back a "floating" effect and a slender appearance to the front.

Bolero Style

If you have a youthful figure, you will delight in the 1936 bolero jacket which may match or may be patterned in contrast to a plain skirt.

Interesting details add style to knitted garments. Plain weaves, lacy weaves, all-over patterns or novelty spaced patterns, as well as ribbing, are used for variety.

Wool and soutache embroidery is often used to form neckline, sleeve and jacket borders. Rope necklines and rope girdles are braided of the material of the dress. Buttons and buckles are of crystal, beads or wood, and belts are frequently of patent leather.

Necklines are oftenest V-shaped with novel collars added, or an ascot or triangle tucked into the neck.

GET SCREENS READY

Are your screens in first class shape? Do you have a screen for each window and outside door? Now is the time to look them over, patching holes, replacing worn out screening, and tightening loose frames. Perhaps the screens need paint to prevent rusting. Are the springs for the doors in working order and are the doors provided with catch hooks? Get them ready. You will need them soon.

OAT CAKE

Mix 1 large cup Scottish oatmeal and 1 cup flour with buttermilk, adding a pinch of baking soda and a pinch of salt. Sprinkle the baking board and work the mixture with dry oatmeal, then roll it out to about ¼-inch thickness. Cut into small rounds with a tumbler, roll each round separately as thin as it is possible to lift it, fire on a griddle, and finally toast before the fire on a gridiron. Eat with salted butter.

THIS WEEK'S HINT

Cut cold boiled potatoes in half. Set the halves in a pie tin with quite a bit of butter in it, and a little on top of the potatoes; place in a slow oven long enough to heat through and brown. They are delicious.

"The servant that works for me must be very economical."

"My last mistress discharged me for that."

"What! For being economical?"

"Yes'm. I used to wear her clothes."

"My husband was terribly disappointed in me when I told him about my hectic past."

"Did he think you hadn't lived it down?"

"No, that I hadn't lived up to it."

NEWS from AROUND the WORLD

MORE than four hundred people lost their lives as tornadoes and floods ravaged the southern United States.

Georgia was severely hit as a twister passed through that State, leaving death and destruction in its wake. Mississippi was flooded and other States suffered from wind or water. Damage done was estimated at more than twenty-five million dollars, and thousands of people were left destitute and homeless.

Relief agencies had a terrible time providing for the victims and identifying and burying the dead, while every pile of wreckage revealed another body. Families were left in horrid suspense while the fate of a missing member was yet uncertain.

Following one of the most disastrous springs, this latest catastrophe was a terrible blow. The spring of 1936 will be remembered for many years as one of the most terrifying experiences in the memory of the Republic.

Aviation accidents also took their toll and in one crash eleven people lost their lives. One terrible disaster was averted when an attempt was made to wreck a train in order to murder the driver. It was said that it was desired to collect the engineer's life insurance.

African War

REPORTS from Ethiopia are extremely pessimistic. One correspondent declares that the Italians will be in Addis Ababa within a month and that within a few weeks the war will be ended by complete Italian victory.

The native armies are quite unable to cope with the Italian, while in the Italian Commander in Chief, Italy has one of the finest soldiers of the day. In addition, the possession of aeroplanes, tanks and machine guns give the Europeans an overwhelming advantage over their enemies.

One curious fact, however, is the lack of pleas for peace by Haile Selassie. It would seem that if the Italian conquests are as complete and as extensive as they have been reported to be, then the Negus should be in despair and begging for peace.

Such does not appear to be the case. The Emperor has made known his desire for peace, and has declared his willingness to negotiate within the League of Nations, but his replies have been dignified, and not at all the outcries of a ruler whose country is conquered.

* * * * *

League of Nations

THE League of Nations is busy with its two tasks: the Ethiopian War and the Franco-German dispute.

In the former, Britain is pressing for a speedy peace. Italy has been warned that if she will not agree to peace proposals with the League acting as a sort of referee and mediator, then Britain will demand that the League impose severer sanctions upon Italy.

Hitherto France has been Italy's friend at court—in this case Geneva—and British public opinion has been almost bitter in its comments upon French action in curbing the League's power and scope, but now it seems as if France has decided to follow more closely Britain's lead. Possibly the presence of German soldiers in the Rhineland has had something to do with the change in French policy.

France has shown herself surprisingly more conciliatory in her attitude toward Germany.

When German troops first marched into the Rhineland the French government loudly and fiercely demanded sanctions against Germany and even went so far as to declare that force should be used to eject the Germans. After the League had met in London, however, and the various spokesmen had made their public statements condemning Germany, there was an obvious change in attitude.

Much must have been done behind the scenes, for there became evident a more conciliatory spirit and a greater desire to explore various plans leading to peace, while no more was heard of the demand for military sanctions. Now France has swung even further along the path marked out by Britain, and the French Government has signified its willingness to examine Germane peace offers.

So the European crisis has died down to a dispute of rather minor proportions and the various camps have settled down to examine ways and means of adjustment.

Far East

OF greater possible peril is the situation in the Far East, where Japan and Russia and China and the puppet state of Manchoukuo are embroiled.

Recently there have been clashes between Japanese and Russian forces, some fighting has taken place, and soldiers on both sides have been killed. Stiff notes have been exchanged between the two governments and experienced observers believe that there is a very real danger of war.

Japan has increased her expenditures upon her army and navy and the militaristic party has taken control.

The great difference between the Franco-German dispute and the Russo-Japanese, is that in the former no nation really desired to go to war, and each was rather frightened of what war might entail; in the latter case, however, it seems as if Japan really wants a war, and that such a war is necessary for the development of her policies in China.

Employment Commission

DURING the General Elections in Canada last October the Liberal leader declared that as soon after his return to power as was possible he would set up a Commission to examine the unemployment situation. This Commission now has been appointed and begun its work. Just what it is supposed to do, or what powers it possesses, no one seems to know, for the Act creating the Commission is quite vague.

However, the Commission has been set up.

Parliament has been taking its Easter recess. The sittings have been devoted largely to a debate of the trade treaty with the United States and the agreement to pay western farmers an equalization of sixty cents a bushel for wheat.

A Bill that would have allowed the Government to spend several millions on relief was delayed and failed to pass before the adjournment. There has been a great deal of ancient history exhumed and placed on Hansard by the party leaders, each attempting to accuse the other.

Thomas Colbourne, born during the reign of William IV and who lived under four subsequent British Sovereigns, Victoria, Edward VII, George V and Edward VIII died at Mattawa, Ont. He claimed to be 101 years old and spent the last 35 years of his life in a cabin on top of a mountain.

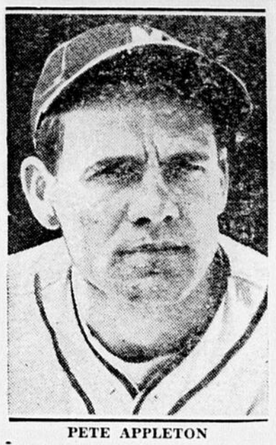
A country physician climaxed 28 years of ministering to the ills of Cohasset, Minn. by cancellation of unpaid accounts totalling $50,000. Explaining his action, Dr. M. M. Hursh said—"I want to give some of these people who have been caught in the depression a 'break'."



PETE APPLETON

Change of Name Brought Good Fortune to Baseball Pitcher Who Made Good

Failure in three attempts in major league he fought his way back for another chance after performing in starry fashion with pennant winning Montreal Royals.

By AL PARSLEY

Those travelling under aliases are generally regarded as suspicious characters and malefactors. But when this man changed his name he changed his luck and went back to the big leagues of baseball.

Piotr Boleslaw Jablonowski became Peter William Appleton, enjoyed his greatest year in baseball with the Montreal International Baseball League in the season of 1935—and hereby hangs a tale.

It starts very properly with Piotr Boleslaw Jablonowski as a high school pitcher in a small town in Connecticut. Here he was a sensation scouted by leading college and semi-pro teams. His first desire was an education, so he accepted an athletic scholarship at Michigan University. Here he rose to great heights of athletic fame as a pitcher and a third baseman when he wasn't doing mound duty. For, always a great hitter, this slim youth with the long jaw-breaking Polish name, was a big threat on the offense just as his superb flinging made him a valuable defence cog in the college nine. So when he wasn't pitching they wanted him in the batting order. Thus he played on the hot corner when he wasn't toeing the rubber. Naturally when his college days were ended—he took an Arts degree at Michigan—Pete as he was known was headed for a career in professional baseball.

Joined the Chain Store Outfit

He was with the huge St. Louis Cardinals organization known as the chain store of baseball on account of the widespread connections Branch Rickey and Sam Breadon, its chief owners, have through the various grades of the minor leagues. With Rochester Red Wings, Cardinals' branch store in the International League, he was again a sensation.

Cleveland Indians scouted him. But somehow he was just a few laps short of major league pitching calibre. A year or so later he was transferred via one of baseball's involved player transactions, to New York Yankees system. Yankees placed him in Newark—and again he was a star but a trial with the famous team owned by Colonel Jacob Ruppert again found him failing to strike the big league stride demanded by those great teams in the days when Babe Ruth was at the height of his fame and glory.

Missed Big League Rating

Just what it was that made this Jablonowski a bit short of big league ranking none seemed to be able to figure out. Another deal was made and he found his way to Baltimore Orioles. The Baltimore ball park is known as the pitchers' grave-yard. It's band box in size and here curve ball flingers are in deep despair. Their benders are busted for home runs which would be easy outfield put-outs in any other ball yard in organized baseball.

It was in the season of 1934 that Jablonowski compiled one of the oddest records known in the diamond sport. With Orioles he lost 11, won two, before being swapped to Rochester where he did exactly the opposite winning 11, losing two, to end up the season with a fifty-fifty percentage.

Translated His Name

During the winter of 1934-35 Jablonowski sat down and thought hard. Sizing things up he decided his long-jaw-breaker name was against him in baseball. It was difficult to pronounce, harder to spell. So he took the notion of translating it into English just as many other citizens of the United States and Canada have done. Piotr became Peter, Boleslaw was William and Jablonowski means Appleton. So he became Peter William Appleton.

And then Baltimore, the club to which he still belonged sold him to Montreal Royals. Managers around the circuit of the International snickered just a little bit at Frank Shaughnessy of the Royals on the deal he had made. But Shag, let them laugh. He thought he knew a way to handle this tall pitcher who everybody claimed had a world of stuff if any manager knew the secret of getting it out of him.

Shag Knew the Way

Shag thought he knew the way. He preached to Appleton the doctrine that he was a great pitcher. And he kept telling him the same story every day.

Steadily the total of wins began to mount. By midseason this new pitcher, or rather, this well-known hurler with the new name became the talk of professional baseball. By August 1st it was seen that he was headed for the leading winning honours. He won 23 games and pitched 21 complete games. He won two more in the play-offs going through the complete schedule of league games and play-offs, for a grand total of 25 victories.

Royals won the pennant and Appleton with 23 games was a big figure in that triumph even though the Montreal team failed in the double task of winning both pennant and Governors' Cup.

When the major leagues sat down to make their draft Appleton's name was one of the first called. He went up to the Washington Club, getting a new trial in big league baseball under his new name.

In changing his name he changed his luck.

A Tale of The Hunt

We can all spot the absurdity in our illustration. According to the story of the hunters when they returned they had an eventful day. But their story cannot be all true for we spotted seven absurdities in their tale. Can you see them too.

"It was early in the morning when we first hit the trail of the fox. We followed it across the river where the beaters led us to the foxes' nest. It was empty. Hearing a distant roar, we made our way through the dense bush the dogs following behind. Soon we came upon a giant tree and there was the fox high up in the branches."

Sister Susie Says

Did you get a new hand bag for Easter or to go with your spring outfit? If you did you will welcome a tip on how to keep it new looking. Remove all the contents every night before you go to bed. Cut a piece of cardboard, as stiff a piece as you can find and pop it in before putting it away. It is just like putting trees into your shoes. It will help keep the bag in shape and an occasional brushing will keep the lining lustrous.

Did You Know

That when you washed a pair of fabric gloves, if you dip them into very thin starch and iron them damp they will keep their crisp new appearance for a long time and will not get dirty again so quickly.

That if you want a heavy weight to act as a press, a bucket of water will usually fill the bill most admirably. Water is very heavy and it is usually at hand when heavy books and irons are not.

There are many occasions I know upon which this tip will come in handy. You may have a picture to mount or you may want to put a new cover on a book. The way to do is to place a drawing board or ironing board for that matter on top of the article to be pressed and merely place the pale of water on top of it.

That if you spill some ink on a carpet it can be removed in the following way. First blot it well with blotting paper, then sprinkle liberally with salt. Brush with a clean brush after a few momemtns, then rub hard with pieces of cotton wool soaked in milk, discarding each piece as it gets instained. Finally wash with soap and warm water and all traces of ink will have gone.

The Keeping of Gold Fish

Here is a hint on how to keep goldfish. Once a week pour the fish into salt water, one teaspoonful of salt to every quart of water is the right proportion. Leave them here for about fifteen minutes. The salt water helps clean the gills of the gold fish and gives them a free passage of air.

You know, of course how cruel it is to keep fish in a round bowl. They should always have a square tank with plenty of green weeds to keep out excessive light.

The Cruise of the Sylph

by Bruce Grey Copping

At the grave risk of imparting a permanent twist to his spine, Jimmy squirmed until his mouth was out of water. He spluttered vehemently, if not articulately, for a moment, and then managed to gasp, "No, no! 'M down far 'nuff! 'M down"—But Bill cut him short by pushing his head under water again.

The weeds were off at last. Jimmy hoisted aboard, and they paddled to clear water. The engine spluttered, and the Sylph was once more blundering on her way.

Blundering—blundering—they went on, over shoals and through weeds, ever searching in vain with tired eyes for the lights of Watersburg and seeing nothing. So the hours passed.

The Sylph swung idly in the current, moored to a half-sunken log. In the darkness they had run on it, and now their propeller, stripped from its shaft, lay ten feet below in the mud of the river bottom.

The three sailors sat humped in absolute dejection on the damp seats, waiting for the fog to clear and give them sight of their surroundings. Occasionally Jimmy leaned over, dipped a pailful of greasy water from the bilge, and poured it into the river.

"It's kind of wet," said Weinie in a brave attempt at levity.

Bill glowered at him. "You're not funny!" he said.

Weinie looked at him where he sat with an inverted pail over his head to keep the rain off. "You are!" he said.

Bill looked at him suspiciously but said nothing, and they remained silent, each busy with his thoughts.

The Sylph pulled gently at her painter as the current flowed by with queer little sucking noises. The rain hissed faintly as it struck the water, splash as Jimmy emptied his pail. Suddenly Bill sat erect. "Listen!"

There was a breathless hush. Yes, there it was again. A faint rustling of leaves ashore. It grew louder. Bill held up a moistened finger. Wind!

Three pairs of eyes strove eagerly to pierce the thinning fog.

"Hurray, I see a light!" shouted Weinie. "No, no! The other way! Can't you see it?" Joyfully he seized a seat back and began to paddle vigorously.

The others stared in the direction he had indicated. "Yes, it's a light!" exclaimed Bill. "Weinie, untie the painter, and we'll go faster!"

Weinie complied. The light was showing brightly now, and even the skipper paddled furiously.

"I see a dock! Gee, fellows! It's Watersburg!"

A hundred yards, seventy-five, fifty—the Sylph seemed to leap ahead beneath their efforts.

Suddenly Weinie had a vague feeling of familiarity. A horrible suspicion crossed his mind. He peered for a moment, and then collapsed with a moan.

Weinie raised himself and with shaking finger pointed. They looked. There beneath the light in staring black letters was—Lakefield.

"Home!" muttered Bill and flung his paddle at the mocking sign.

HOBBIES

Easter Stamps

Various countries have chosen scenes from the New Testament to illustrate Easter ideas on their stamps. (Italy has issued a number of such stamps of which the first was the Propagation of the Faith Issue, 1923, on which is shown Christ giving His eleven faithful apostles their last lesson.

Three years later Italy issued another set of stamps to commemorate the life and death of St. Francis of Assisi. On the 20 centisimi stamp is delineated the vision of this saint, showing the three crosses on Calvary, on which were crucified Christ and the two thieves.

In 1933, a special set of five stamps was issued at the instigation of the Order of the Holy Sepulchre of Jerusalem. One of these shows an angel at the entrance to the tomb of Christ announcing on the first Easter Sunday, that He had risen and was no longer in the sepulchre.

The Saar, the district that returned to the rule of Germany last year, issued a beautiful stamp in 1925, on which was depicted "The Madonna" by the famed artist Blieskastel. The stamp's vignette shows Christ in the arms of His mother after He was taken down from the cross.

Still another stamp that pertains to Good Friday is the 40 pfennig issue of Germany released in 1933. This adhesive, which is the last in a series of Wagner commemoratives, honors the musician's opera, "Parsifal," which has become a traditional opera presented, generally, only on Good Friday.

The central vignette depicts Parsifal, the youthful hero of the opera, offering the Holy Grail to his knights at Monsalvat after he has been elected to the station of leader of this brotherhood. A luminous cross forms the background.

"Right after my boy friend gets a job, he sinks to the depths."

"Poor fellow, can't you do something for him?"

"No, that's his job. He's a deep-sea diver."

Charlie Chipmunk's ADVENTURES

Mrs. Wolf Goes Riding in the Sky

SALLY Squirrel was very cross; she wanted to play with Bella Bunny, and she had to go and gather nuts for her mother was going to make a nut-dumpling for the dinner.

The naughty little squirrel had been told to hurry, but her crossness was so bad, her legs hardly moved, and she let her mother's best basket trail along the ground.

"Sally!" cried Mrs. Squirrel popping her head out of the window. "Hurry up! What's the matter with you? Do you want me to come down and give you a good hard spanking?"

Sally pretended she didn't hear and kept her eyes on the ground, so that she bumped into Charlie Chipmunk who was pretending he was an engine, and running very fast.

"Where are you going, Sally?" he asked. "And why have you got your sulky face on?"

"I have to go to the dirty old woods to gather nasty ugly nuts," said Sally crossly. "And I want to play dolls' houses with Bella and it's not fair!"

"I'll come with you," said Charlie, and Sally's smiles came back and her legs began to skip as she took Charley's hand, and they were running happily along when they met Miss Buffles pushing her doll's pram with one hand and holding up a large pink parasol with the other, just like a real lady.

"Where are you going?" she asked. "Can I come too? I'm tired of being a Ma-ma and I've no one to play with."

"Yes," said Sally, for everyone loved the dear little girl who had come to stay in the Magic Forest. "You carry this nicey picey basket Miss Buffles and I'll wheel the pram, and Charlie can have the parasol."

"Don't want it," said Charlie turning up his little pink nose. "I'll throw it over the fence into Willie Wolf's garden and Miss Buffles can get it on the way back, see?"

"Don't broke it Charlie, please," squealed Miss Buffles. "It's Mrs. Piggy's best one what she lended to me for not crying when I falleded downstairs bumpetty bump!"

Charlie laughed as he tossed the parasol into the front garden, and hopping and skipping, the three little friends were halfway to the woods, when who should come prancing along but Mr. Clopetty, the horse and Willie Wolf. "Get up on my back," cried kind Mr. Clopetty. "Willie can carry the pram, and the little ones will get a fine ride."

He sat down, and Miss Buffles, and Sally and Charlie climbed on his broad back and away they went, clopetty! clop! while Willie ran in front with the pram in his soft kind mouth, for the Dizzy Dentist had pulled out his sharp big teeth, and the children all loved him now and weren't the least bit afraid of him. Laughing and holding on to each other, Miss Buffles, and Sally and Charlie enjoyed the ride ever so much and were quite sorry when they came to the Bluebell woods.

Willie helped his little friends down, and Mr. Clopetty went off to crop the sweet grass, but keeping his eyes on the pram and the doll that sat up against a little apple tree, just like a real baby.

What fun the children had, running about in the sunshine and gathering the nuts that lay on the ground, and getting a ride on Willie's back whenever they felt tired. At last the basket was full, and the three littlest ones climbed up on Mr. Clopetty's back again and soon he was galloping home with Willie running on in front, carrying the pram and feeling very proud.

"We must stop at Willie's to get Mrs. Piggy's parrysole! cried Miss Buffles. "You get it for me, Willie dear!"

"Woof!" said Willie with a sweet smile that reached to his ears. "I'll soon do that, Petsy Wetsy!"

Mr. Clopetty stopped at the Wolves' house and Willie jumped over the fence just to show off and Miss Buffles cried "Hurry up!" for it was near rice pudding time and she had promised Mrs. Piggy she would be back soon. Willie's face appeared over the fence and the children stared at him for his smiles were away and he looked as if he were going to cry.

"It's not here!" he shouted. "I get blamed for everything and the Piggies are sure to think I've tooken their best parrysole—oh, dear me!" Mr. Clopetty tossed his lovely white flowing mane and reared up on all his four legs, and the children slid off his back and were just going to cry to keep Willie company when the clever horse pointed a hoof at the blue sky.

"Look!" he cried and they all looked up above their heads and there was the pink parasol sailing away up in the clouds with poor Mrs. Wolf hanging onto the handle.

Willie's eyes nearly popped out of his head when he saw his mother flying like a bird in the air and he stood up on his hind legs, his tongue hanging out, and waved his big furry paws.

"Come on down Ma-ma!" he roared. "Its my turn now, boo-hoo!" He would have said more, but he fell down backwards in his excitement and when he got up again Mr. Clopetty and the others were running down the street to tell Mr. Giraffe the policeman what had happened.

Georgey Giraffe was eating his dinner when Mr. Clopetty knocked at the door, and he came out on the verandah with his mouth full of currant dumpling.

"A parasol flying away with Mrs. Wolf!" he said with a sweet smile, putting on his helmet, and his big black belt. "Dear me, what terribleness!" Stretching out his long neck he gazed up at Mrs. Wolf sailing almost like a kite, high above the trees and houses.

Everybody was out in the streets gazing up at the strange sight and how angry the Piggies were when they saw how their very best parasol was behaving.

"The first thing to be done," said Mr. Giraffe in a loud stern voice that made everybody quiver and quake, "Is to get that parrysole down at once or we may never see our good Mrs. Wolf again!"

Willie started to bawl and his father shook his fist at Mr. and Mrs. Piggy, and all the little piggies. "You and your silly old parrysole!" he roared and growled. "Look what its done—carrying off my dear wife like this and now there's nobody to cook dinner and make beds and wash dishes. If I don't get Mrs. Wolf back in twenty minutes, I'll eat up every piggie in the forest." The Piggies all squealed and ran away to hide and then a queer laugh was heard and a great swoop of wings, as Mr. Elmer Eagle alighted on the sidewalk.

Most of the children shrank back—nobody liked Elmer very much for they were afraid of his long curved beak and sharp claws. A proud haughty bird, he lived in a castle high up on a mountain, with his little boys and girls and his big cross wife, and he was always in a very bad temper and a great hurry to be somewhere else.

"What's all the noise about?" he asked crossly. "What are you all staring at?"

Willie Wolf pointed to the sky.

"My Ma-ma's up there!" he sobbed. "The Piggies bad parrysole has tooken her away. Boo-hoo!"

Elmer looked up and cackled a little and rustled his long shining dark wings. "What impertinent nonsense," he said angrily. "A parasol and a Wolf trying to fly! What next I'd like to know? I'll show them!" Spreading his wings, he flew up and up till he looked just like a little black fly in the sky.

Then he swooped down on the parasol and seized the top of it in his strong beak and down came Mrs. Wolf, slowly and gently to the ground laughing and crying both together for her dress was blown right over her head and one of her shoes had fallen off but, oh, how thankful she was to the clever kind eagle.

All the children clapped their hands, and Willie hugged his dear Mother and Mr. Wolf kissed everybody, even the Piggies, and as for Mr. Elmer Eagle, he flew home to his nest, laughing and cackling all the way, and the parasol was so ashamed of its boldness that it walked away by itself and was never seen again.

POULTRY NOTES

Selecting Eggs For Hatching

Eggs for hatching should be as even in size and regular in shape as possible. There are many reasons for this. Heredity is passed on through the egg as much as through the hen or the rooster since it is the medium between parent and offspring. Eggs that are double yolked are too large. Other eggs of irregular shapes are undesirable especially as the selling price is seriously affected. They are also undesirable from the packing standpoint, where uniformity is necessary. A small hen that lays small eggs is more than likely to reproduce small sized progeny, which today is not desired either from the egg or meat buyer's viewpoint.

Eggs with soft shells, like misshapen eggs do not hatch well. The former are easily broken by handling or when being turned in the incubator. If broken they often soil good eggs beside them. Eggs with even very slight cracks do not hatch well. Eggs containing blood spots never hatch well. Dirty eggs are liable to transmit some disease germ to the chick even if it should hatch, which it often does not.

Thin-shelled eggs evaporate too quickly in the incubator, as do eggs with a porous patch or rough band, and the developing chick is dried up in the egg.

The ideal hatching egg is at least two ounces in weight, well shelled and free from any roughness, ridges and porous patches in the shell. The shape should be almost oval, with a large and small end. Slight variations hatch well but extremes should be avoided. If the eggs are normal and have been laid by hens which usually lay large eggs there is no reason why they should not hatch as well as standard-size eggs. They will produce large chicks, which in their turn are more likely to produce large eggs.

Some large eggs, of course, do not hatch well; neither do all standard or small eggs. The large eggs are more noticeable when they do not hatch and this has probably given rise to the idea that large eggs are bad hatchers. It is advisable to candle hatching eggs whenever possible to remove the faulty eggs.

Hatching eggs should be stored in a cool, draught-proof cupboard or box. If exposed to too much draught they will be dried down and spoilt. Excessive moisture tends to develop mould spots.

Frost will spoil the eggs and may crack the shells. A warm temperature is very harmful. Never store eggs in the incubator room unless they are to be set right away. The germ starts to incubate at 68 degrees and is weakened if its development is not continued. A room with a temperature which does not fall below 40 degrees or rise above 60 degrees is the most satisfactory.

Eggs need not be turned or moved if they are less than a week old. Eggs which have to be kept for more than a week should be turned once a day.

Tatehurst

The epidemic of German measles has evidently cleared up among the children, but is quite prevalent among grown ups in this district at present.

Misses Marjorie, Ruth and Dorothy Hooker spent the Easter vacation with their grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Orr, Riverfield.

Mr. James Beattie, who has been ill for a number of weeks, was pleasantly surprised at Easter time when he received a shower of Easter cards from his friends. We are pleased to learn his condition is slightly improved.

Miss Ruby Tate of Huntingdon, Miss Viola Gruer of Roxham and Miss Kathleen MacDougall of Havelock spent the Easter holiday at their respective homes.

Mr. and Mrs. Hobbs of Montreal spent the week-end at their home here. Mrs. Hobbs remained for the summer months.

Mr. and Mrs. Arnold McKell and family of Riverfield visited on Friday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Gruer.

Miss Ruby MacDougall of Thurso spent Easter with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert MacDougall.

Mr. Leslie McCaig of Bishop's College spent the Easter holiday with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Neil McCaig.

Miss Muriel McRae of Edmonton, Alta., visited on Monday with Mr. and Mrs. George Hooker.

Miss Wynne Cameron of Bedford spent a few days last week with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Cameron.

Mr. Walter Scott made a business trip to Montreal on Saturday.

Mrs. George Hooker spent the past week with her daughter, Mrs. K. Pearce, Dewittville.

Mr. Harold Williams of Montreal, Mr. Victor Lang of St. John's and Mrs. W. Lang were Easter callers at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Kilgour.

Misses Ethel Reid and Peggy Shaw of Montreal are visiting with Mr. and Mrs. Earle Hooker.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Jarvais and son Jackie, Miss Dolly Fuller of N. D. G. visited on Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Edward Upton.

Mrs. James Sproule, Austin and Edith visited on Friday with Mr. and Mrs. Henry Blair.

A number of people from Tatehurst attended the Easter Pageant held at Rockburn on Sunday evening, which was very much enjoyed.

"I told the producer he was a man after my own heart."

"And was he pleased?"

"No, but he promised to stop chasing her in the future."

"The actors I invited to my home for the week-end were very well behaved."

"They behaved as if they were in their own home?"

"I'll say! They're still there."

Diner—I'll write you a check for the $100.

Manager—No, thanks.

Diner—Why not? I have money to burn.

Manager—I hate the smell of burning rubber.
