THE U. F. A. AND ITS POLITICS

Mr. Kennedy, of Peace River, is a supporter of the U.F.A. in the House of Commons and on Thursday last week made a speech on the budget. In the course of his address he said: "I think it was the present leader of the opposition who said in Toronto two years ago that the Conservative policy was not a policy of high or low tariff, but a tariff to develop Canada. I submit that a tariff, which is used only to protect the market for the home manufacturer, if you have an organization which will prevent advantage being taken of the home consumer, comes nearer to equality so far as the consumer is concerned, and nearer to being fair than a tariff which is just 1 per cent under the Conservative tariff for the last forty years, and under which the beneficiary is allowed to take any advantage he desires. On this basis, I submit we can co-operate with the Conservatives when that policy is applied, as against the policy we have had during the past seven years."

The budget was brought down on the 1st of March and, as the Easter adjournment extended from the 22nd of March to the 4th of April, it may be presumed that when Mr. Kennedy made this statement he did so after mature thought, and perhaps after discussing it with friends in the House of Commons and political advisers in Alberta. Mr. Kennedy belongs to the group which comes within the definition laid down by the President of the U.F.A. Mr. Wood, as given in his annual address this year: "The U.F.A. Federal members, for whom this organization is responsible, are carrying on seemingly to the satisfaction of all concerned." Some attention may therefore, properly be paid to Mr. Wood's policy declarations. In his annual address Mr. Wood dealt with the lack of present day growth in the U.F.A. and said: "In dealing with the present situation in the U.F.A., there is little or nothing to be gained by offering artificial stimulants in the form of impractical appeals. To go out to the Locals with a hackneyed appeal on some thread-bare question that does not offer action with reasonable hope of results will be futile—worse than futile because its tendency will be to deaden the interest that is now dormant. The situation must be met by the farmers themselves."

To those of us in the East who are not directly interested in the local political divisions in the West it must appear, after reading the statement of Mr. Wood and the remarks of Mr. Kennedy in the House, that the Member for Peace River at least is seeking to find new ground to stand on, rather than continue straddling the cross benches in the House of Commons, and that his eyes turn towards the Conservative Party. Some support is given to this belief from the comment of Mr. John Evans, M.P., an absolute free-trader, who sits with the Progressive group in the House. On the opening of Parliament this year a motion concerning the King's health was moved and, after the Prime Minister and Mr. Bennett had spoken for their parties, Mr. Gardner, leader of the U.F.A., said that he desired to take this opportunity of associating "myself and my colleagues" with the remarks of the previous speakers. No sooner had he sat down than Mr. Evans rose and said: "On behalf of the group which I represent I wish also to extend our sympathy to His Majesty the King because of his long illness."

Apparently there is a further split developing in the ranks of the independent western groups and to estimate the direction of the wind it may be well to pay more attention to the comments of the dictator of Alberta, Mr. Wood. Mr. Wood, speaking at the annual convention in Calgary this year said: "While, for a long time, I have believed that industrial reform must precede political reform, there is little if any difference in their relative importance. While we can not legislate right industrial structure into existence, neither can we succeed in building right industrial construction proceeds, it must be supported by sustaining legislation." Mr. Wood was speaking to Western farmers and was urging co-operative thought in all their activities, but in Vancouver on the 1st of April he gave a general interview for the world at large to read and said: "It's up to the farmers to become efficient in marketing. There is little wrong with the money system—little wrong with the banking system—if the farmers develop intelligent and effective marketing of their products. If the farmers do that, they will find there is plenty of money to go round, and the whole nation will enjoy permanent prosperity."

It may be wrong to seek to read into these statements of Mr. Wood an interpretation that he desires a season of political tranquility while the farmers develop their various selling agencies, and it may be wrong to conclude that Mr. Kennedy leans towards the Conservative Party, or that, if he does, that he speaks for any other than himself. Even if such were the case it would be doubtful if the Conservative party would welcome them with open arms for their names and records are not such as will conjure votes for Tory candidates in the industrial centres of the East. It does seem however that the third party is suffering the fate of all movements which prosper in adversity but are ignored in days of prosperity—disintegration from within.

TWO FINE CITIZENS PASS ON

The sudden deaths of Mr. Walsh, of Ormstown, and Mr. McMillan, of Dundee, bring tributes from many who knew them. Mr. Walsh was not only a shrewd businessman but in addition, in his own way, a philosopher. He ably managed his business and shared in the activities of the district and had a wide circle of friends, but perhaps he got the greater pleasure out of contemplating the idiosyncrasies of mankind, not in a cynical way, but as a student of human nature. He read much and had decided opinions on many subjects, but was able to keep abreast of progressive changes and so escaped the dangers of country life—narrowness. Ormstown has lost a citizen who worked for the town's advancement, the District has lost one whom many cherished the hope that Mr. Walsh considered them as friends.

Mr. McMillan was born in Giengarry, but his life was associated with Huntingdon County and particularly the township of Dundee. As a farmer he was a success and, after he became sub-collector of Customs, his genial manner smoothed the way for many who dread the procedure of reporting through the official offices along the border. It is no easy task for a public officer to live up to the regulations of the Customs Department and at the same time keep on good terms with his neighbors. That Mr. McMillan succeeded in doing this is recognized, and he passes on just when he was completing his life work.

A DIVORCE TANGLE

In Montreal last week Judge Lacroix declined to recognize an American divorce as being legal in Canada and thereby has started a good deal of unrest in many homes. The case before him concerned a man who had married in New Brunswick and whose wife later on obtained a divorce in Reno, Nevada. Subsequently the man decided to marry again and with the lady of his choice went through the usual marriage ceremony in Malone and then returned to Montreal to live. The marriage in the States would doubtless be considered as legal, as the divorce was granted in the Republic, but Judge Lacroix holds that the U.S. divorce is not effectual in Canada and that the man therefore is a bigamist.

Apart from the personal troubles of the man in question, public interest in Canada, particularly in Ontario, takes a broader survey. Some weeks ago a bill was introduced in the Senate for the purpose of establishing a divorce court in Ontario, but the bill was rejected by the House of Commons. Senator Willoughby in moving the bill in the Senate declared that in the city of Detroit alone 548 divorces were granted to Canadian couples in the year 1928. If we add the divorces granted in other centres, it may be estimated that over 1,000 families are directly interested as a result of legal actions in 1928 alone. The situation should be cleared up for it is a well known fact that divorces are generally obtained because one or both parties desire to immediately re-marry.

Bald Heads and Grey Hairs to go.

The Mid-West Beauty Trade Association held its annual meeting in Chicago last week and among the speakers was Miss Georgia George of Los Angeles. Miss George declared that bald heads were not necessary and that a little care would prevent them. She claimed that the public was wakening up to the fact that neglect was the cause of all head troubles, and declared that in fifty years we will have to go to a museum to see grey hairs or bald heads. Her cure is to have a shampoo every day.

Poor Doc Cook Won't Vote For Hoover.

One of the first things Mr. Hoover has had to consider since he was elected President of the United States is the case of 'Doc' Cook. It will be recalled that twenty years ago Doctor Cook discovered the North Pole—at least he said he did. About four years ago he got on the front pages of the papers again by selling stock in an oil well, which must be around the North Pole, for an investigation showed that the Doctor had never seen it. As a result he was sentenced to 14 years and 9 months in the penitentiary. He applied to the President for a ticket-of-leave, but Mr. Hoover has turned him down.

Cat Smothers a Baby.

In the home of Charles Mraček, of Alliance, Neb., was a five month old baby. They also owned a large maltese cat. On Thursday last Mrs. Mraček put the baby to sleep and then went to another room to do some work. On returning to see how the baby was, she saw the cat jump out of the crib. The cat had been there too long for the baby was dead.

Life Boat Does Not Always Save.

The Dutch have always been noted sailors, in fact, Dutch firms now control the deep water towing business of the world, and not so long ago the British Government engaged a Dutch firm to tow the huge naval dry dock for Singapore from Scotland to that far distant port. Probably such fame influenced Captain Johannes Schuttevaer, for a year ago he decided that he would sail from Rotterdam to New York, using an ordinary life saving boat for the purpose. He was then seventy-two years of age and started off with two companions. In the Bay of Biscay storms damaged the boat and they put in to Lisbon. On the 8th of February last they felt that all repairs had been completed on their 20 foot boat and turned westward once more. Last week she was sighted in mid-ocean by the Spanish mail liner Marques de Comillas. Things did not look right so the Captain went to investigate. He found the crew to be half starved and without drinking water. He picked them up but turned the boat drifting.

The Beggars End Strike.

The town of Szeged, Hungary, is noted for its generous treatment of poor people, with the result that the place became overrun by beggars, real and otherwise. The police tried to clean up matters by ordering the fakirs out of the town, then came the question of looking after the genuine poor. It was felt that these people should not be left to chance treatment, so the town and the church arranged that they be lodged in homes and given weekly allowances for food and other supplies. The plan was put into effect in January and everything went well for some weeks, then trouble developed. The beggars complained that they were losing caste and were classed with the poor people kept in the poor houses and demanded that the donations be cancelled and that the old privilege of begging on the streets be restored. The authorities declined, so the beggars refused to take the weekly allowances or stay in the houses provided for them and once more took to the streets. However, instead of the police being friendly, they were otherwise, and with the beginning of April the beggars decided enough was enough and returned to the town and church bounties.

And This is Stamped Town Calgary!

Calgary each year appeals to us to return to the last frontier and see a real old-fashioned stamped. Such things may be fine spectacles, but something that is staged always lacks the touch of originality consistent with the genuine. For instance, George Haag, of Crossfield, Alta., owned a two-year-old Hereford bull which he brought to the exhibition park in Calgary. It was unloaded, but lost its temper and also its sense of direction, so headed for the Arena where some of the fancy-highteppers were being put through their training paces in the presence of about two hundred spectators. The Edmonton Journal then adds: "The bull cleared the three-foot fence inside the arena in great style and then proceeded to chase every horse from the ring. With the ring cleared the bull turned its attention to the spectators, who sought safety in the upper tiers of the building." The Old West indeed is going.

Around The World in 23 Days.

Such a record has recently been hung up, and to do it the travellers rode on one motorcycle although there were eight of them. It is claimed that if a tape measure were stretched around the globe at the Equator it would take 25,000 miles of tape before the two ends met, so at Linas Monthlery, France, it was decided that a motorcycle should make the trip—in theory—lap by lap with eight British drivers working in relays. It was a non-stop trip and was accomplished in 554 hours and eight minutes.

A Man Who Wanted to Die And Did.

Vito Longo was a lonshoreman living in New Orleans. He was fifty-five years of age and had a happy home with a wife and two children to share it with him. But Vito wanted to make sure that all arrangements for the next world would be to his liking, so on Tuesday last week he visited an undertaking establishment on Canal Street and picked out a fine casket for himself. He tried it out and it was all that it looked to be. He thereupon paid the price and told them to hold it until further orders came. Vito went out, then returned and enquired about the measurements of the box. He marked these down, hired a taxi and went to the cemetery where he ascertained that the vaults would accommodate a casket of the size he had purchased. He completed the necessary financial arrangements and returned to the undertakers where he committed suicide.

Check Over Auto For Spring Trouble.

The other day Mike Scaffano, of Burlington, Wis., decided that the spring season had come and that he might get out his automobile. He cranked the engine and started down the main street. Suddenly a large rat started to crawl up his pant leg. He made a grab for it and the rat bit him. Then it bit him again and Mike lost control of his car, which, following that time-proven slogan of "come home to mother," proceeded to ram a telephone post with unfortunate results. Mike was damaged and the car more so. The rat escaped. Investigations were then made and it was found that the rat had made a nest in one of the cushions where six baby rats were very much at home.

Up-to-date Blackmailing Methods.

The gentle art of blackmailing progresses. The old weakness of ordering the victim to leave the thousand dollars at the root of the lone pine tree has been improved upon. For instance, a parcel was recently left at the home of Dr. Alofsin, of New York City. In it were two live carrier pigeons and a note. The note was addressed to the Doctor and told him that if he wanted to live to put ten thousand dollars in a silk bag which was attached to the leg of one of the pigeons. The doctor called in detectives. They put a note in the bag saying that they were afraid to trust so much money to a pigeon. The bird was then released and watched in flight by the use of field glasses. The bird flew off and headed for the New Jersey side of the river and soon disappeared from view. A few days ago the Doctor received a reply through the general post office telling him to come across or he and every one of his family would be killed. The weakness of the scheme is again to deliver the pigeons to the doctor without being caught, for a police guard has been placed around his residence.

A Gloomy Accident to All.

William Laport, of Haverhill, Mass., was out driving on Easter Sunday and, as a result, hit a hearse, and his father was killed. Laport was arrested, but when the first appearance in court took place it was arranged that he be released on five thousand dollars bail in order that he might attend the funeral of his father. Not only was his father killed, but in addition several others were more or less seriously injured.

A New House-ownership Problem.

Chicago has acquired a reputation along certain lines which detracts from its good name, but we never imagined an extreme would be reached when a man would advertise that he had bought a new house and therefore requests "the bombing interests of Chicago" not to bomb it. Such has happened when John Landis, of Boston advertised in a Chicago paper as follows: "I understand that Mr. Fitzmorris' home was bombed once or twice, now I want a nice quiet peaceful home for my wife and child and I thought if this little notice was put in the paper about the sale of the house to me it would prevent recurrence of the bombings. I'm sure the bombing interests of Chicago will be kind enough to take notice of this." Mr. Fitzmorris was the chief of police.

A Silver Heated Apple Tree.

The London, Ontario Advertiser announces that when James Collins was splitting up an old apple tree that had been cut down on the homestead of George Lindsay, near Gospie, he found an American fifty cent piece embedded in the wood. The coin was in excellent condition and bore the date 1856. How it got there will ever remain a mystery, but the question is, will it be considered treasure trove to be governed by the common law rules regarding such?

It Costs Money to Shovel Snow.

The past winter has not been one of heavy snow falls, but it cost the city of Montreal a nice penny just the same, for it was announced on Saturday that the cost last winter was $919,000 or about $130,000 less than in the previous year. Snow is one of the reasons why the Montreal Tramways have a greater overhead expense than have the like services in Toronto where they do not get nearly as much.

Where the Razor Blades Go.

Sometimes we think that the present craze for ocean travelling originated in that feeling which comes but once in a lifetime when you open a port hole as your vessel plows the broad Atlantic and drop some used razor blades overboard. No one is going to be cut by them—they are gone for good. Also we often wonder what the big hotels do with the stacks they must accumulate every day, but we learn from the Ottawa Citizen that in the new wing of the Chateau Laurier provision is made for these razor blades. They are dropped into a slot and are caught in a concealed box. Every once in a while an attendant will make the rounds and empty these boxes and take the blades to the basement where they are placed in an hotel furnace and burned with the rest of the hotel refuse.

White Robin Seen at Windsor.

Robin Red Breast is known to all of us, but there are always some who claim that just as there are "white" black-birds, so also are there white robins. J. H. Belair, of Windsor, Ontario, claims more than that. He says that on Friday he saw a white robin, or rather a bird with white wings and a white tail, and its vividly contrasting breast was red." It may be so, but he did not produce a witness.

Autos vs. Motorcycles as Killers.

The most dangerous place in the world for Canadians is a London street crossing, particularly those where there are no traffic officers. The streets are narrow and the rule of the road that Left is right and Right is wrong, causes us much confusion. Evidently the same state of mind exists among the Britishers themselves for the authorities have just announced that in the year 1928 in Great Britain 6,138 were killed by motor vehicles and 164,838 injured. Private cars and taxicabs were responsible for 1,864 being killed and 54,053 injured, while motorcycles caused the death of 1,593 and the injury of 45,888.

Canadian Wheat Ranks First.

A United States Senate committee is investigating the question of wheat production in the United States and on Friday examined Mr. H. J. Beasley, head of the grain division of the Department of Agriculture. He told them that it was the general opinion of the world grain buyers that Canadian wheat was superior to that of the United States. He further stated that these buyers were willing to back their opinion with their money for they "put the value of Canadian wheat 5 to 10 cents higher than for like grades from the United States."

Rasputin And Roumania.

It will be recalled that the evil genius of the family of the Tsar of Russia was the monk Rasputin, who was murdered by a group of Russian noblemen who were headed by Prince Felix Youssouppoff. The Prince has been out of the limelight for some time but he reappeared on Saturday with the press announcement that he had landed in Bucharest, Roumania, to take charge of the estate of Prince Carol, who at one time was listed as future king of Roumania, but whose son now rules in his place—at least as much as a little boy can.

Prohibition Law Costs 195 Lives.

The United States authorities have just issued a report on the number of lives taken in connection with the enforcement of the prohibition law of the United States. Mr. Lowman, who makes the report, states that since the law came into effect 195 lives have been lost. Of these, 136 were killed by the officers enforcing the law and 59 agents were slain by law-breakers. Mr. Lowman further states that officials have now orders that they must use their weapons in self-defence or to prevent law-breaking. "They are cautioned however, that they must not endanger their own lives or that of a comrade through failure to use their weapons." During the last fifteen months coast guardsmen have killed five persons.

ROCKBURN

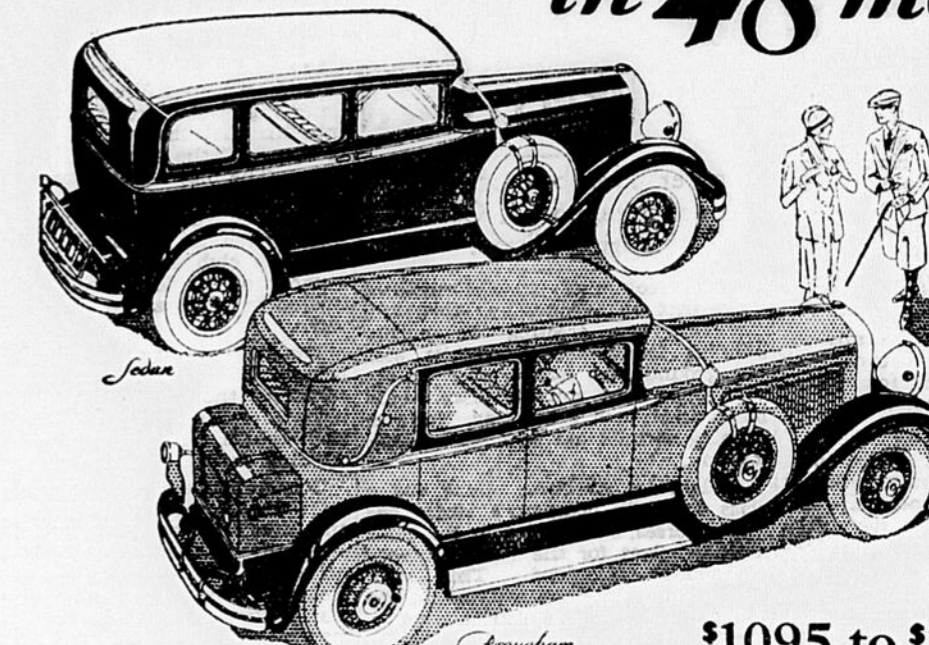

Birthday parties seem to have been very much in order in this section during the past week, several pleasant gatherings of this nature having been held. On the evening of the 4th, instant Mrs. R. J. Blair was agreeably surprised when a large number of friends and neighbours gathered at her home to offer congratulations and good wishes. Another pleasant surprise came to Mrs. Jos. Sloan on Monday evening last when a gathering in her honor was held at the home of Mrs. George A. Goldie, a large number being also present on this occasion, a like event being held at the home of Mrs. S. J. Black the same evening. Miss Alice Gordon, of Howick, visited at the home of Mrs. G. A. Rennie over last week-end. Miss Evelyn Sutton, of Frontier, is the guest of her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Harry McMillan this week. Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson, of Malone, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Rennie. Mrs. W. G. Gibson attended a meeting of the executive of the W. M. S. of the Montreal Presbyterial on Thursday. The regular meeting of the W.M.S. Auxiliary was held at the home of Mrs. Wm. Jamieson on Thursday of last week. In spite of the fact that sugar making was in full swing there was a good attendance and much work accomplished. The President, Mrs. Waller, occupied the chair and conducted devotional and business exercises. Mr. Oliver Heinault met with an accident in the saw mill last week that will lay him off work for some time. He was operating the edging machine when his hand in some manner came in contact with the saw, all four fingers being badly lacerated. Under Dr. E. Moore's care he is making good progress towards recovery.

The Week At Ottawa

Specially Written for The Huntingdon Gleaner

A variety of speeches featured the return of the members to Ottawa after the Easter vacation. The outstanding contribution was probably that of Mr. Bouchard, whose name is, from time to time, linked with the portfolio of Agriculture at Quebec.

Boulanger and Quebec

Mr. Boulanger of Bellechasse does not speak frequently in the House, but when he does, he touches on subjects close to his heart. It is significant that he is in common with other French members from Quebec, are dealing more and more with the economic problems of the habitant and the problems he faces in connection with the increased cost of rearing and establishing his family.

Stock Market Profits.

In his speech Mr. Cahane made an estimate of the business done on the stock markets in recent years and announced his findings: "I have taken 100 stocks on the Toronto and Montreal stock exchanges during the period 1927 and allowing for the retrogressions in prices I find that there was a net appreciation in 1927 of $743,302.691; and last year, the calendar year—dealing with 123 stocks, because some others had come into the market—I find that the net appreciation, after allowing for all retrogressions in prices, amounted to $1,033,908.892.

Labour Efficiency.

Mr. Heaps is a Labour member from Winnipeg and devoted his attention to labour questions. He compared working conditions over a number of years and found that efficiency of workmanship had increased to a greater extent than had wages, while the number of employees had actually decreased from 1917 by over eighty thousand. He declared: "Professor Michell, of McMaster University, Toronto, has made some rather interesting calculations along the same lines, and he arrives at somewhat similar conclusions to those at which I arrived when I made this study a few years ago.

Quebec Marketing.

I have been told by an official of the Quebec Department of Agriculture that three-quarters of the food-stuffs consumed in the large eastern cities come from foreign countries, although these cities, such as Montreal and Quebec, are situated in the middle of the richest farming country. Some say that a seasonal tariff would be a remedy. It is possible, but I rather believe that education and improvement in production and marketing methods would be more effective. In this connection I wish to mention the good service rendered to farmers by the demonstration stations of the Agriculture Department and its deputies, Doctor Grisdale and Doctor Charron, three real friends of the farmers, for their wonderful work in this respect. These stations do not cost much, and the good they do is immense. I have a few in my county, but not enough, and I know whereof I speak; we should have more. They are worth cartloads of books of instructions and theories and millions of lectures. Because of the example and transfer of anything else. In those stations the farmers see the result which can be obtained by the best methods of cultivation. I venture to urge upon the Department of Agriculture the establishment of many more of those stations, in order to render agriculture more successful and more paying. They would teach our farmers to grow what the market demands; they would instruct them in the use of proper fertilizers, and in the classification, grading and preparation of their produce for the market, and so forth.

The U.F.A. and Torvism

The only real flurry of the week arose out of a speech delivered by Mr. Kennedy, U.F.A., for Peace River. He first complained against an editorial in the Montreal Gazette a year ago and said that he had written the editor about it, but had never gotten a reply. He then directed his attention toward the Prime Minister whom he felt had not been fair in quoting his speech—a year ago. He proceeded to particularize: "The Gazette" misrepresented the facts, and the Prime Minister, to make a case against me, last year cut a sentence right in two; and in his remarks, before cutting that sentence in two, he utterly misrepresented my statement. I quote Hansard of March 13, 1928, at page 1299, where the Prime Minister is reported to have said: "He made a statement in his home the other evening to the effect that the most effective way a class group could act might be to see what bargain it could make with a party whose known principles were wholly opposed to its own."

Is it possible for this group to cooperate with the Conservatives? Last year I placed on Hansard figures which showed that there was a difference of only about one per cent in the tariff policies of the two parties, on an average, and that difference is just about the same today. I do not know whether or not the Prime Minister wishes to dispute that statement. Mr. MacKenzie King: Really I do not know what my hon. friend is after. Mr. Bennett: I would say he is after the Prime Minister.

Grit vs. Tory. Towards the end Mr. Kennedy turned directly to the Conservative policy on tariffs and declared: Can we co-operate with the Conservatives? This question of low tariff and free trade is not an idol to worship, any more than is the question of protection. I am not particularly interested in declared or known policies; I want applied policies. Whatever the Conservative policy has been in the past, I am willing to accept the statements which have been made these last two years. If they mean anything at all there is more real equality in the applied policy as defined by the Conservative than there is in the policy of lowering the tariff less than 1 per cent on an average, and letting it go at that.

As I understand the Liberal policy it is about 1 per cent below that of the Conservative, but the manufacturer can take any advantage he likes of the protection given, whether it be 20 per cent, 25 per cent, or 30 per cent. I do not know whether the Conservatives will carry out their declared policy, but they will have to come across with it if I can make them because I believe it will be a good thing to have one party in this house doing nothing else but keeping the one or the other of the two parties to the promises which they may make during election time. If the Conservative party can apply their policy, even though it is 1, 2, 3 or 4 per cent higher than the present tariff, it will be nearer to equality in tariff matters, so far as all the people of this country are concerned, than the policy which has been in effect for the last seven years.

What McMillan Thinks. A somewhat stormy petrel in the Liberal ranks is Mr. McMillan, of Ontario. Mr. McMillan does not believe in tariffs, and speaking on the budget he declared he had some doubts as to the low tariff principles of the Minister of Finance. However, the sub-amendment provided Mr. McMillan with an opportunity to speak about Mr. Kennedy, whom he appears to question also and on Friday evening this came into Hansard: "My whole being has burned to lend some assistance to the onward march of human progress, and while we might deplore the snail-like pace at which our hon. friends are lumbering towards the promised land, yet when I co-operate with anyone, I pray God that it will be with those who manifest some real possession of principle rather than with the paragons of virtue who are continually parading their professions to the housepots and at every convenient opportunity are ready to place those professions on the public bargain counter, or, as in June, 1929, desert themselves, break the solemn bond of co-operation to which they had pledged their honour along with Liberals to put through the program of the government, and then join up with that shadow cabinet in their effort to put over the most indefensible act of power usurpation ever attempted in the house."

Quebec and the Tariff. George Bouchard made his contribution to the debate on Friday and as it is a broad survey of conditions both in the United States, France and Canada it opened up some new fields for discussion. As to changes to which American farmers have profited by it may be very much questioned. In spite of the fact that nearly all the protection possible has been given to the American farmer, his present situation does not give (Continued on page 7.)

Mr. MacKenzie King: It looks as though my hon. friend were setting out to make a martyr of himself. What he has read to the house now simply corroborates what I said at the time I spoke. I took his words as they appeared in Hansard. I repeated them in the house when the hon. member was present and all he says now is that he could not have been expected to have known then what he had previously said.

Mr. Kennedy: The argument advanced by the Prime Minister is a first class illustration of the type of argument he used in this particular case. Two men were arguing about theology; one man told the other that by his history or arguing suicide could be justified by the Bible. To support that argument he quoted two sentences: "Judas hanged himself" and "Go thou and do likewise." I will stand by that sentence on the possibility of co-operation with the Conservatives any way it may be taken, but not when the first part is taken without the second part or the second part without the first.

Mr. MacKenzie King: I am quite prepared to have my hon. friend stand by the whole sentence; that is all. Mr. Kennedy: Why did not the Prime Minister quote it all? Mr. MacKenzie King: I quoted what was essential. Mr. Kennedy: No, the Prime Minister quoted the part which misrepresented me; that is my claim. Just while we are on this question we may as well settle it. I said I would stand by that statement.

VALLEYFIELD

Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Alesph went to Fort Covington to attend the funeral of the late Mr. McMillan.

Mr. and Mrs. Stewart and Miss May Stewart with Miss Sangster and Mr. Simpson of Ormstown were callers to Valleyfield on Thursday last.

Mr. H. Grenier of Montreal, was a caller at the Presbyterian Manse last week.

Mr. Maurice Hagen of Massena, was the guest of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hagen on Sunday last.

Mr. Wm. Kirk was a visitor to Montreal on Thursday.

Mrs. H. Findlay and Miss Nessie Findlay were visitors to Montreal last week.

Last week Valleyfield was visited by three very undesirable visitors. Arriving in the city on Monday morning they made it their business to become acquainted with the various stores and places of business.

They gave themselves out as new residents of the city. Not until Thursday were they even suspected of anything unusual and it was only after one of them had made arrangements with one of our local ministers and with the undertaker to bury his wife who had died suddenly in Montreal and these officials discovering the story was entirely fictitious and that the individuals in question were obtaining money under false pretences, that the police stepped in and showing a great deal of skill promptly had the visitors under lock and key. They were escorted out of town and the air seems the purer.

Under the direction of the Moonlight Orchestra a highly successful dance took place last Friday. The hall was well filled and everybody seemingly enjoyed the good time. This local orchestra has shown great improvement since their inception and now they compare favourably with those that have been better known.

Valleyfield though a small place is very cosmopolitan and this week Australia has added her quota. Mr. J. P. Fisher and Mrs. Fisher are the guests of the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Fisher. They have been four weeks travelling and report very favourably on their trip through Canada.

Miss Vivian Lowe, who has been spending her Easter vacation at her home here returns to Trafalgar School, Montreal.

Deceased was in his 70th year and is survived by one sister, Mrs. Gamble, widow of the late Rev. Geo. Gamble.

Three men were killed by a D. and H. freight train at Beckmantown, two and a half miles north of Plattsburg, yesterday, as their car sped up on the crossing during a rainstorm. The dead are—Willis Lambertson, 40; Orville Lambertson, 18, a distant relative of Willis; and John Pickett, 18, of Moores Forks.

Engineer Frank Clark of Plattsburg and H. Seism of Whitehall, found the bodies of the three men mutilated, and the automobile demolished, after halting the train a short distance from the dirt road crossing where the crash occurred.

They believed the men did not see the approaching train because of the rain. The view of the tracks at the point was said to be clear. The automobile was a small touring car. Which of the men was at the wheel was not determined. The two Lambertsons were returning with Pickett from work on a roof in Beckmantown.—(Montreal Star)

"You certainly did," came the disgruntled reply.

"Ah!" said the fat man with great relief, "I thought this must be the row!"—Royal Magazine.

Horses Fresher at Night

Long hair makes horses sweat excessively when working. It is practically the same as working in an overcoat. Excessive sweating is weakening.

Imagine yourself going to bed in sweat-soaked clothes after a heavy day's work. You would be chilled to the bone. It is the same with an unclipped horse—the sweat-soaked long hair becomes icy cold when the horse is not working and the horse is chilled through and through. A shivering horse gets a little rest.

Feed which should provide power is used up to combat chills and fight off colds, and even when given extra feed the unclipped horse soon becomes run down and easy prey to sickness.

Long, sweat-soaked hair also gathers dust and dirt and makes grooming a nasty job.

Clipped horses sweat less. They soon dry off and are groomed in half the time. They rest better, have more life, and do more work on less feed. They perk right up after being clipped and are less subject to ailments. Sick horses don't die. Clipping horses, especially in the spring, is a big help in keeping them on the job.

Buy and Use Stewart No. 1 Clipping Machine

"The Black Pigeon"

BY ANNE AUSTIN

Copyright 1929

"Not this morning," the doctor repeated the offer dryly. "Now, if I may, I'll phone the morgue to send for the body."

"Where the devil is Covey?" McMan's body to fume, but before the words were well out of his mouth, the outer door opened and the plain-clothesman appeared, followed by two very young men.

"Elevator operators on duty Saturday" until five. Covey introduced them to the chief.

"All right boys. Come on in," McMan invited. "I'm not going to arrest you—yet. Be added with grim humor, as the boys continued to hug the wall. "Guess this room's getting a little crowded. I'll take you boys into the private office and treat you to a sight you'll never forget."

Mickey Moran and Otto Pfleger, whom Ruth recognized as the silent, tow-headed boy who ran the car nearest Jack Hayward's office, stumbled nervously across the outer office in wake of the detective. Covey chuckling indicated by pantomime that the boys had no idea what had happened.

Micky did not close the communicating door behind him, and the young lovers dared take their place within it. McMan, seated at Borden's desk, glanced up, but did not object. Possibly, Ruth thought, he wanted to observe their faces as the elevator operators told their stories.

"Which of you runs the elevator just across the hall?" McMan demanded. "You?" "All right," as Mickey Moran stepped toward the desk, his eyes turned backward to that awful, huddled thing on the floor. "Henry B. Borden was murdered Saturday afternoon, and undoubtedly, or rather, in all possibility, his murderer—or murderer—rode up and down in your elevator, my lad. What's your name?"

"Michael Dennis Moran," Micky answered automatically, then "Geest! Murdered! Do I have to stay in here, boss? Homes—ow!"

"What the devil—?" McMan sprang to his feet and eyed the young fellow followed upon an eerie sound.

Ruth enlightened him, her eyes upon the black pigeon which was flying about the airshaft window, as if seeking admission to just a pigeon. McMan sometimes "popped" into the glass, thinking the window is open.

As she spoke, McMan strode to the window and peered out interestedly, just as a pigeon, perched upon the white stone ledge and began to strut up and down pecking at something—

"Lord! And I nearly missed it!" McMan shouted. "Here, Ferber! Look! Have you photographs of this window for fingerprints? Fine! I can open it then. . . . Has Nielson gone? Hey, doctor!"

A minute later Ruth, in a bitterly lucid flash through the darkness of horror and fear, saw the black pigeon. She would never again call him "Satan." His true name was Nemesis.

CHAPTER XIII

Dr. Nielson, with his black bag of instruments, and Ferber, his fingerprint expert, with his camera, were crowding the detective at the window as McMan pushed up the sash. Ruth, still not knowing what had caused the detective's jubilation, excitement, stepped forward slowly, a cold, little hand dragging at Jack Hayward.

"Look, doctor! What would you say that—and that?" McMan pointed from spot to spot on the white stone ledge of the window, which opened upon the airshaft.

Nielson smiled his diffident, wintry smile. "I'd say, unofficially, that it is blood, my dear Sherlock, but only a laboratory test—"

McMan barked out a laugh. "And what would you say made those peculiarly shaped blood spots, Ferber? You don't have to be so confoundedly cautious in your opinions. Look! Look! I'd say they are the footprints of a pigeon, blood in blood." Ferber answered, awe in his voice. "Now—how the deuce, if the window was closed?"

McMan drew in his head and dropped to his knees, going over every inch of the strip of bare floor, which bordered the rug, from the farthest corner of the room to where the stiff, crumpled body of Harry Borden lay. A slight triumphant explanation announced discovery.

"Look, Ferber—Nielson! The same identical tracks—two of 'em, between the body and the window! Three-pronged tracks, as clear as the nose on Doc's face! Funny, I didn't notice them before, but naturally, I was working on the theory that the window was closed when Borden was shot. Let's see the fingerprints you got off this window, Ferber. If I'm half the Sherlock that Nielson is, so fond of calling me, those fingerprints will be as good as a picture of the man or woman who put a bullet through Borden's heart. Right, Ferber?"

"You might be if there were any fingerprints," Ferber grinned. "It happens that the window had been wiped clean. I'm afraid Borden's murderer was a little too clever to leave a calling card, McMan."

McMan scowled. "He—or she—may not have left a calling card, but the pigeon did. Nice, obnoxious bird, that black pigeon!"

It was then that Ruth Lester remembered "Satan." In horror and fear

she christened him Nemesis.

"I'm afraid my stodgy, scientific mind fails to follow your brilliant deductions, McMan. Dr. Nielson gibed mildly. "I'll play Watson to your Sherlock. Just what do these alleged footprints of a pigeon in blood tell you, my dear Holmes?"

McMan flushed with resentment at the doctor's mild railery, but decided to answer.

"I should think it is obvious, doctor, even to a stodgy, scientific mind. This window was open before and after the murder, and possibly while it was being committed. Certainly it was open afterwards, or the pigeon could not have flown into the room and walked about in Borden's blood. Also, Borden's body was alone in the room when the pigeon entered, unless—"

—by George!

"Please don't go mysterious on me, Sherlock," Dr. Nielson begged. "I assure you I'm all agog. Unless—What?"

"Unless," McMan explained impressively, "the room was occupied by someone the pigeon was not afraid of—to whom it was accustomed!"

On the last portentous word, the detective swung about as if he was facing Ruth Lester, who involuntarily cried out, as if he had accused her then and there of the murder.

Jack Hayward flung a protecting arm about the shoulders of the trembling girl. "McMan, I repeat, in the insinuation you have made against Miss Lester! I—"

"Please, Jack!" Ruth begged, in a panic of fear as to what his next words would be. She turned to McMan, then, her pale face lit bravely to meet any verbal blows he might give her. "The pigeons are accustomed to no one but me, Mr. McMan, and I was not in this room when Mr. Borden was shot, or afterwards, until I found him this morning."

"In the next office, perhaps, with the door open?" McMan shot at her. "No!" She was trembling no longer, was almost glad that her suspicions were directed against her, rather than against Jack Hayward. She knew she was innocent.

"Gees!" an awed voice broke the tension.

McMan swerved instantly to the red-haired elevator operator, who was regarding Ruth with a curious mixture of awe, admiration and fear.

"Right, Moran! Snap out of it! You've got to do a lot of plain and fancy remembering, my lad, if you don't want to spend a night in jail to refresh your memory." McMan snapped at the instantly terrified Moran. "I want you to give me the name of every person who used your elevator after one o'clock Saturday."

Mickey Moran rumbled his red hair in despair. "Gees! At's gonna be a big order, boss. Nearly every tenant and steno on this side of the building beat it at one o'clock. Car was jammed, boss, for two or three trips."

"Give me as many names as you can," McMan ordered, seating himself at Borden's desk, to make notes.

"Wait a minute! You're getting samples of blood from those pigeon footprints outside and inside, aren't you, doc? And Ferber, you'd better photograph 'em before the doc scrapes 'em up. Now, Moran—"

The boy drew a deep breath and then rattled of a dozen names, which McMan listed, with the number of the office to which each belonged.

"Now, Moran, when did Miss Lester leave? With the other, at one o'clock?"

The boy shot an apologetic glance at the girl who was waiting, breath drawn in, hands tightly locked over Jack Hayward's rigid arm. "No, she didn't get off till the rush was over. Musta been about a quarter past one. Mr. Hayward was waiting for her at the elevator. He usually goes down in Otto's car, on the other side, but when he's got a date with Miss Lester—"

"All right, Moran," McMan interrupted. "Mr. Hayward was waiting for her and the got in the elevator about 1:15—"

"One-twenty," Ruth corrected. "I had looked at my watch several times, as I knew I was keeping Mr. Hayward waiting. Mr. Borden had to sign some letters before I could leave, and Mr. Adams stayed until after one."

"All right, 1:20," McMan accepted.

"All right, 1:20," McMan accepted.

the correction and made a note of the time. "Anything unusual happen as the couple went down in your elevator, Moran?" Did Miss Lester or Mr. Hayward seem upset or worried, or anything out of the ordinary?"

Mickey considered. Then his face lighted up. "Gees! Guess I did most of the talkin', boss. I just couldn't get over how different Miss Lester looked, and I kept tellin' her so—"

"Different?" McMan pounced. "Was she crying or pale?"

"THE B. — Set March 21 Gal No. 2

"Gees, no! She was lookin' swell! If I hadn't seen her when she went out on an errand in the middle of the mornin', and spoke to me so's I'd recognize her, I'd never a-knowed her, honest! Like I told her, she looked like a movie star, only sweller. And I said to Mr. Hayward I'd hand it to him—he could pick a winner that anybody else woulda passed up."

McMan knit his brows in a puzzled frown. "I'm afraid I can't see why anyone would have—passed up" Miss Lester, Moran. What do you mean?"

The elevator boy chuckled. "If you'd a-seen her Friday or any day before that, boss! Hair all slicked back great big yellow spectacles over them swell blue lamps of hers, and old-fashioned clothes, that looked like they come from the Salvation Army. Guess she was disguised so's 'Handsome Harry' wouldn't make no passes at her."

"I see!" McMan commented dryly, his narrowed eyes flicking from Ruth to the angry, tightlipped. "And this amazing transformation had taken place for the first time on Saturday."

"It wasn't no transformation. It's her own hair. Any guy with half an eye could see that! She'd just had it slicked back tight till Saturday," Moran corrected indignantly.

McMan had been answered. In the utter stillness of the room, the tap-tapping of the detective's pencil upon the edge of the dead man's desk sounded as loud as hammer blows. Then suddenly McMan spoke, and his words were directed to Ruth Lester.

"Twice this morning you've used the phrase, 'until the day of his death.' Borden, you said, 'had been a considerable employer—until the day of his death.' But—what about the day of his death, Miss Lester?"

Every vestige of color left Ruth's cheeks and lips, but her blue eyes were steady as she answered. "I meant, of course, until and including the day of his death."

McMan rose slowly from the desk and strolled toward the girl, towering over her as he summed up. "You better let the effect of your beauty on a man like 'Handsome Harry' Borden. You were a sort of disguise to keep him from wanting you. Saturday, happy in your engagement to Mr. Hayward, you left off your disguise of homeliness and let Borden see what he'd been missing. He made love to you, just as Mr. Hayward had feared he would—"

"Mr. Hayward?" Ruth repeated indignantly. "He himself didn't know I was any prettier than I seemed until Friday night after we became engaged! It never occurred to him that Mr. Borden—"

"But he gave you an automatic pistol to protect yourself against a man who was notorious where women were concerned," McMan interrupted sharply. "And Saturday, when Borden saw you as you really are, he stammered and stammered and stammered, weren't you, Miss Lester?"

"Gees!" Again Mickey Moran's awed exclamation shattered a moment of intolerable suspense. "You didn't shoot 'em up when you come back, did you, Miss Lester?" "Gees! A little frail like that, and a big guy like him!" And Mickey's wholly admiring eyes popped from Ruth to Borden's body and back.

"When she came back?" McMan repeated triumphantly. "Suppose you tell me all about Miss Lester's return to the office, Moran."

Ruth's blue eyes were so piteous with fear and frantic appeal that the elevator operator flushed and stammered as he began his story. But Ruth's terror was not for herself.

INDIGESTION

Indigestion is a term that is very frequently used and yet, it has but little meaning in so far as describing what is really the trouble or complaint. It is very much like stating that one has a pain. Just as there are many conditions of the body which cause pain similarly, there are a large group of abnormal conditions which give rise to that condition or symptoms which is called indigestion or dyspepsia.

It may be that after some years of over-eating, irregular eating, failure to eat the right kinds of food, or because of worry or over-work, or on account of some condition such as decayed teeth, the body begins to falter in performing its regular, normal functions. One of the first evidences of this failure is an upset or disturbance of the digestive system. Usually, there is some headache, a feeling of lassitude, constipation, irregular or constant pain in the abdomen and, frequently, pain in the back under the right shoulder.

At this stage one of two things may happen. The first is an attempt at self-treatment, buying and using some remedy which promises relief. This is a serious mistake. The other choice is to consult a physician. It is plain that the only proper way to treat a person complaining of indigestion is to find the cause of the condition and remove it. Treatment of the stomach itself may give relief from the symptoms, but unless the cause of the trouble is removed, the condition will persist and likely become worse.

In all cases, it is much better to prevent than to attempt cure. To prevent indigestion, the right kinds of foods should be eaten slowly in proper amounts, meals should be served on clean plates, in an attractive way, under pleasant conditions. Regular toilet habits should be cultivated. If an abnormal condition is present, such as decayed teeth, it should be attended to. If this is done, it will save pain, worry and expense. The person who neglects to take care of himself may get along for years without trouble, but trouble will come and he will suffer for his negligence.

In England the name Smith is very common? In Germany it is Schmidt; in Dutch, Smid; but in Gaelic it becomes, as all readers of the "Fair Maid of Perth" must remember, Gow. In French and gipsy tongues, the name Smith receives its most splendid transformation, in French it becomes Lefevre and the gipsy name is Pentilengro.

THE WEEK AT OTTAWA

(Continued from page 3.) him such satisfaction. The cry for relief coming from the farming class of the United States and heard over the border does not speak well for the policy advocated by the members of the opposition. This cry shows at least that if high protection has showered prosperity on the United States, the farmers have benefited by it much less than the other classes of the population. They were far from getting their share of the questionable advantages of that policy.

"And if high protection does not properly serve the interests of the agriculturist in the United States, a nearly self-supporting country, how can you logically press it in a country like Canada, which needs outside markets for the greatest bulk of its farm products? In this connection it may be permitted to quote from an article in the Journal of Farm Economics for January, 1928, entitled, 'Which does Agriculture need—Readjustment or Legislation? It is written by Professor G. F. Warren, of Cornell University. He is a recognized authority on economics. But lest it be objected that he is merely a theorist, I may add that he is also a very successful farmer. He writes:

Statistical evidence indicates that we are in the eighth year of the most serious agricultural depression ever known in the United States. The depression involves primarily the producers of staple foods. Increase in Farm Mortgages. Now coming to the situation among the farmers in the United States, I would refer the house to the Congressional Record of the United States for the year 1928, page 7787. Mr. Blease, by unanimous consent of the senate, put on the record certain excerpts from various publications relating to the subject of farm relief and the farm loan system, and in an editorial appearing in the magazine Cooperation, published by the Co-operative League, New York City, on the question of relieving the farmer, the following comment is made: Last year 2,000,000 people left the farms in the United States. More than half the population of this country is now living in cities of more than 2,500 population. Only about one-fourth of the people are on the farms. The mortgages on the farms, unlike the people, are steadily increasing. The farms are slipping out of the hands of the farmers. The farmers are slipping away from the farms.

Senator Caraway, speaking in the United States Senate, is reported in the Congressional Record of 1928, at page 2614, as saying: In 1919 the invested capital in agriculture was more than $79,000,000. In 1926 it had shrunk less than $59,000,000. And Mr. Greenwood, on May 24, 1928, is reported in the Congressional Record, House of Representatives, at pages 9736-37 as follows: During the period of depression 171,000 farms were sold at forced sale. It is estimated that 1,000,000 people have been forced to leave the farms because of these sales and failure. It has always been emphatically declared by some political economists that high protective tariff schedules prosperify. It is time for the farmer to come out of this deceptive delusion. Suffice it to say that I am not a free trader, neither do I believe in using the taxing power of the federal government as a means of robbery of the many for the benefit of the few. High tariff cannot raise the price of commodities of which there is an exportable surplus. The export price controls the domestic price.

Some Low Tariff Views. Mr. M. Nelson, of Missouri, on March 2, 1928, is reported in the house Congressional Record as follows: Hoping to secure first hand information, I have just gone through replies to questions submitted to some 500 Missouri farmers. Let me quote a few typical answers given to the questions: 'Why have so many farmers failed in business since 1920?' 'Some of the answers given are: Depletion; slump in the farm values and prices in everything produced on the farm; low buying power of farmer's dollar; high cost of production; protective tariff; because the tariff cannot be made to do as much for the farmer as for the manufacturer.

And in reply to the question: 'Would legislation by congress help the farmer?' some of the answers given are: 'Repeat or reduce the tariff, thus placing agriculture and all other industries on the same basis. Gradually take away protection from the so-called 'infant industries' which have grown to be powerful and arrogant. The final question was: 'If no legislative action, what then is the greatest need of farmers?' 'To this question 26 per cent answered, organization, while 24 per cent replied, co-operation. Whatever the political expediencies of the United States may be, we find that the leading economists of that country are taking a stand against the principle of high protection, particularly for the farmers. The prevailing, not to say unanimous, opinion is that high protection does not benefit the farmers. In a book written in 1924 by Professors G. F. Warren and F. A. Pearson of Cornell University, entitled The Agricultural Situation, we read at page 293 that the protective tariff in the United States protected only the sheep industry, flax growing and certain varieties of wheat. The protective tariff on other matters is said to have conferred no benefit upon the farmers.

Butter Tariff Unhelpful. 'One may read in the Journal of Farm Economics, of January, 1925, the views of Professor Hibbard, of the Agricultural college of Wisconsin. At pages 143-44 this authority writes: 'What the situation will be a generation hence we do not know, but at present a tariff on butter and cheese is about as effective as Wontner Van Twiller's campaigns against the Swedes by proclamation. The conclusions, mainly adverse, do not mean that the tariff on dairy products should be repealed. They merely mean that not so much is to be hoped from the tariff on dairy products in the way of relief.

Danger of Substitutes. 'Now I wish to quote from the Gazette, a "low tariff newspaper" published in Montreal, certain views with regard to dairy products. Under date Washington, December 29, 1925, there appears an article under the heading, Cattle Tariff is Declared Futile, and a statement is made by: Dr. Lynn R. Edminster, of the Institute of Economics, Washington, speaking here today at a conference on the tariff question called by the People's Reconstruction League. The article in question reports this gentleman as follows: 'Dr. Edminster, in the present duties, if continued, will gradually tend to raise domestic prices, resulting in substitution of other foods for beef, and cutting of profits to producers. He contended that efforts to stimulate the cattle industry through tariff will impose upon industry, as it now does, a burden which comes from support of general policy of protection in which the cattle man concedes much and gets little in return.

Export Surplus Question. 'When we come to consider the condition of agriculture in the United States and measures taken for its improvement, we might refer to a report of the Business Men's Commission on Agriculture, published jointly by the National Industrial Conference Board and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, Washington, 1927. At page 169, on the question of tariff readjustment, the following appears: 'The principal effect of the protective tariff upon the American farmer is to restrict the market for those products of which he produces a surplus above domestic needs. The tariff in agriculture, as in other fields, is a double-edged and dangerous weapon.

French Opinions. 'Let us turn for a moment to France, another self-reliant country. It is estimated that 1,000,000 people have been forced to leave the farms because of these sales and failure. It has always been emphatically declared by some political economists that high protective tariff schedules prosperify. It is time for the farmer to come out of this deceptive delusion. Suffice it to say that I am not a free trader, neither do I believe in using the taxing power of the federal government as a means of robbery of the many for the benefit of the few. High tariff cannot raise the price of commodities of which there is an exportable surplus. The export price controls the domestic price.

Canada's Problem. 'If a policy of high protection is declared by the best authorities and by the farmers themselves to be unsuitable for self-contained countries such as the United States and France how much more so is that the case with regard to Canada, which depends so greatly on export markets? Protection for Canadian farm products can be effective only where no

(Intended for last week.) The A. Y. P. A. of St. Mark's Church joined with the congregation at a Lenten service on Wednesday evening during Holy Week. Nearly one hundred people were in attendance. The clergyman narrated the chief events of our Saviour during the week of the Crucifixion. These were illustrated by exceptionally good lantern slides. When the picture of the Crucifixion was thrown on the screen the congregation sang "There is a Green Hill Far Away" in a manner which made one feel that "it was for us He hung and suffered there."

The service on Good Friday was also attended. The choir was present in full strength and sang very effectively some of the hymns of the Passion. The solemn lyrics of the Anglican ritual brought forth a hearty response from the large congregation. The sermon on "The Appeal of the Cross" helped to make this service very real, and one realized that the chief concern of religion is to draw near to God.

On Easter Day, there were celebrations of Holy Communion at seven o'clock, at eight o'clock, and at eleven o'clock in the morning. The number of communicants was larger than it has been for several years. The majority of the communicants attended the early services. The eleven o'clock service was attended by 143 people. The victorious Easter hymns were sung most beautifully by the choir, which also rendered an anthem "Why Seek ye the Living Among the Dead?" The solo parts were sung with great effectiveness by the choir-master, Mr. Harry Whitehead and Mrs. Fred Thompson, as was also the duet by the Misses Cecilia and Henrietta Wilkinson. The sermon gave us the note of triumph in keeping with Easter. St. Mark's was beautifully bedecked in flowers. Easter lilies predominating. This grand service will live long in the memories of those who attended.

That the evening services at St. Mark's continue to attract an increasingly large attendance especially of men was demonstrated on Easter night. A full choir was present again to lead the singing. The preacher dealt with Thomas the Doubter. His message was to the honest doubter of today. He drew a lesson very clearly of help for such a person. "The waves of unbelief mount and crest, And jar the century with strong unrest; They carry back the sands of many a creed, But only leave the rock more manifest."

Like Thomas, who remained with the company of believers during his period of doubt, the honest doubter of today will be rewarded by a re-establishment of faith in the risen Christ, and say, "My Lord and my God."

VALLEYFIELD. At the Bishop's Chapel, on Monday morning, Monsignor J. Dorais officiating, the marriage was solemnized of Miss Bertha Davis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. Dubois, of Robert Templeton at Willotown. A number of animals were purchased at each of these places and are described elsewhere.

Some 50 to 60 head of studs were visited by R. R. and Mitchell Ness during their several weeks stay in Scotland and as well the Glasgow Stallion Show. One of the most wonderful sights he said: "I have never seen so many studs of stallions paraded and sold, and even if we had no other purpose in view than to see this show the trip would have been well worth the time it took and the money we spent for our passage."

Visiting the Herds. The herds visited included those of Hon. Godfrey Corbett at Rowallan, Thomas Scott at Netherhall, Alexander Cochran at Nether Craig, A. & A. Kirkpatrick at Robert Templeton at Willotown. A number of animals were purchased at each of these places and are described elsewhere.

Clydesdale studs visited included Templeton's of Sandy Knowe, Kilpatrick's of Craigie Mains, Jordielands and David Adams. At the latter place they saw that grand old horse Dunure Footprint, now in his twenty-first year and still fresh and active, and Satisfaction, first prize three year old and champion of the Highland last year.

At Sandy Knowe was seen Benefactor, leading sire of Scotland last year and who is hailed as the best who is putting draft horse bodies on

DISTRICT NEWS ABOUT OUR FARMS

R. R. NESS MAKES 37TH TRIP TO SCOTLAND. When R. R. Ness, of R. R. Ness & Sons, Howick, Que., landed in Saint John, N.B., he had completed his thirty-seventh round trip across the Atlantic and Andrew "Mitchell" Ness who went with him and who is his youngest son and junior partner, had completed his first round trip.

When R. R. Ness made his first trip some forty-one years ago a shipment of horses figured as the reason for his trip. It would therefore look as though history was, in a way, repeating itself because the trip which has just been completed had also some what to do with horses.

R. R. made his first trip in company with his father, the late Robert Ness, and that with him a boat load of horses from Canada for the Trampways of the old country.

Mitchell helped his father to select and bring back not only a consignment of Ayrshires but as well a consignment of the same quality and mares, some of them from the Woodsie stud which their firm has recently taken over, others to fill orders and for sale.

Hobland Ness' Headquarters. We are not sure if Hobland has always been a well known name in the R. R. Ness since his first started importing Ayrshires on his own some 23 years ago, but we do know that it has been such for a considerable number of years, and so it is necessary to say that Hobland was his headquarters this year.

Hobland is of course the home of the Tom Barr, whom many Canadians have met and liked on the several occasions when he has been in Canada and who is famed the world over as one of the outstanding breeders of Ayrshires.

And judging by what we have repeatedly heard of Hobland and by what Mr. Ness told us when we met him on his return from Scotland, Hobland is a rare place to visit. "Tom Barr's Hobland herd" said Mr. Ness, "is an institution in itself and here you will see some 250 head of real cattle, bred mostly by himself. Cattle of the same uniform type and quality all the way through."

On sale day at Hobland (referring to the annual bull sale) was one of the high spots of our trip this year, as it has on numerous occasions in the past. On sale day you get a better treat than you would at any show. Every animal in the byres, irrespective of whether it is in the sale or not, is trimmed and groomed as for parade.

Incidentally Mr. Ness got a number of the top bulls at this year's Hobland sale. Wherein lies the greatness of these Scottish breeders, such as Hobland? We asked, and Mr. Ness replied, "They are really breeders, cattlemen, born and bred, and they are very particular about buying their herd sires. Individuality is not all with them, they want to know what is at the back of them and, that for two and three generations. These men are very scientific and do not pay much attention to records made on three-milkings-a-day but lay stress on records made on two milkings-a-day or in other words those under natural conditions."

"At Hobland they have usually, and as at present, four herd sires. Incidentally for the past twenty years the majority of herd bulls used have been bred on their farm."

Whilst the subject of records Mr. Ness informed us that the Scottish breeders do not feed for test, that is they do not give the cows on test any special ration nor does any one feed and test records. Practically no summer feeding is carried on the luxuriant grass of the lowland Scottish farm making that unnecessary and the cows are therefore always in good condition. The bulk of the cattle in the South of Scotland are wintered indoors, excepting, of course, that most of them are frequently turned out in the yards and on the hills. The rams are still the main feed and, as at present, the roughage is all grown on the farm. This therefore means that good field husbandry as well as good animal husbandry is also practised on these Scottish farms for instance, at Hobland Farms is only 240 acres in extent and yet they have 250 head of cattle, a flock of breeding Leicester ewes and a flock of black face ewes and do not have to buy any roughage. The sheep and lambs are fed by Allan, son of Tom Barr, and they always keep around 80 breeding Leicesters ewes and buy in each year a flock of around 100 Blackface ewes.

Reverting to feeding methods, Mr. Ness told us that whilst the feed held sway as the chief feed, silage is also coming into favour. Several of the farmers have now installed silos and fill them with oats and "big horse" hay, which is common as to property of Hugh Allan Gavin, farmer, of the Township of Elgin, said district, presently of parts unknown, duly authorized, plaintiff, vs. Hugh Allan Gavin, Farmer, of the Township of Elgin, District of Beauharnois and presently of parts unknown, defendant. An action in separation as to property and from bed and board has been instituted in this case on March 30th, 1929. Eric C. Martin, Attorney for Plaintiff.

VALLEYFIELD. At the Bishop's Chapel, on Monday morning, Monsignor J. Dorais officiating, the marriage was solemnized of Miss Bertha Davis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. Dubois, of Robert Templeton at Willotown. A number of animals were purchased at each of these places and are described elsewhere.

Clydesdale studs visited included Templeton's of Sandy Knowe, Kilpatrick's of Craigie Mains, Jordielands and David Adams. At the latter place they saw that grand old horse Dunure Footprint, now in his twenty-first year and still fresh and active, and Satisfaction, first prize three year old and champion of the Highland last year.

At Sandy Knowe was seen Benefactor, leading sire of Scotland last year and who is hailed as the best who is putting draft horse bodies on his progeny and at the same time feed and legs of the best. He is said to inherit these qualities from his father, one of his immediate ancestors. At Sandy Knowe some 50 horses are kept and as well around 200 purebred Leicesters and Oxfords and some 3 to 400 cross-bred sheep.

Jordielands, run by Campbell, Montgomery, a nephew of Andrew and William Montgomery of Netherhall and Banks fame, and George Marshall, formerly head salesman for Netherhall and Banks and undoubted one of the leading Clydesdale men in Scotland. Here was purchased Rockhill Ambassador, rising 4 years old and which we saw at Howick and have no hesitation in saying was entitled to rank as one of the best horses ever imported from Scotland. He is just as Archibald McNeillage describes him in the Scottish Farmer: "A horse up to a big size and weight, with good feet and legs, strong and active, well balanced, quarters and thick through the middle."

In Scotland he won several firsts as two year old and was fourth in the three year old class at the Highland. At the latter show his class contenders were such noted animals as Satisfaction who stood first and was later champion, Craigie Win-a-Lot who stood second and was champion of the 1928 stallion show and Craigie Ambition, who stood third and was first and champion at the 1929 stallion show. His sire was the Dunlop, a noted sire and show winner who was by the great Auchincloss and who also purchased the coming three year old stallion, Hallmark, of whom Archibald McNeillage said: "He is a beautifully balanced colt with excellent feet and legs and nice head and neck, a well bred and active."

Hallmark was first last year at Kirkcubright and also won the Streatfield Cup as the best horse of any age and is by the celebrated 4,400 guinea Benefactor and therefore a grandson of Fyvie Senator. His dam Irene is by the 400 guinea Dunure Independence.

The Ness Importation. Five mares were also included in the shipment made by Mr. Ness. One of them was a rising four year old by Buchvie Choice is from a dam by Auchincloss. Another is by Royal Tide and from a daughter of Dunure Luxury, whilst two of the others are by Ardrie from an Arden dam and the other from a daughter of Dunure Footprint.

The horses, as already indicated are now at Woodsie Farm, Howick, Que., whilst the cattle are in quarantine at Saint John, N.B., and are expected to reach Burnside about April 23rd.

HOWICK-HUNTINGDON AYRSHIRE CLUB NOTES. (By John K. Dickson, Secy.) The large number of sales reported by our Ayrshire breeders during the last few weeks would indicate that business is quickly picking up with the opening of spring.

In our club ad of the March issue of "The Review" we stated that "in two days' time you can fill an order for Ayrshires in this district," no matter what number or type you want. This was clearly demonstrated last week when Mr. Wm. Gibson, of Alta Crest Farms, N.Y., was out on Thursday morning to select a shipment of cows and on Saturday morning left Ormstown with a very select bunch of sixteen head.

At the same time Mr. Archie A. Tweedie of Watton, N.Y., was doing the same thing. He arrived in Huntingdon on Thursday morning without any advance notice and on Saturday morning left with a shipment of seven registered cows and a bull. Mr. Tweedie, who is a new man in the Ayrshire ranks was attracted to this district by seeing the cows purchased by Mr. C. C. Gould, of Hobart, N.Y., who selected about forty-five head from this district. All the promptness with which it was possible to make these shipments shows up very strongly the advantage of having a large number of accredited herds in one section.

While in this section Mr. Tweedie was under the care of Mr. Gilbert McMillan who makes the following remarks about his selections: "We have just shipped one of the best calves of commercial quality that we have seen together in a long time and consists of the following:—"

"From Kerr Neely, five fine deep-bodied cows, due to freshen: H. M. Henderson, two due to freshen: A. H. Taylor, one fall-freshening cow; Thomas Arnold four cows, two fresh and two fall calves; from Wm. Arnold, three cows, one heifer and his herd sire, "Beaver Meadow Surety," whose dam has the fine record of 12,247 lbs. milk and 520 lbs. fat; a fine cow from Rennie Bros. completed the shipment."

Mr. Gibson, who was escorted on his visit by Mr. Ralph McQuat purchased as follows: From Gilbert McMillan and Archie Bruce, Huntingdon, one cow each; from Ralph McQuat, Ormstown, two cows; Stanley

MISS CHERRY BLOSSOM. A Japanese Musical Comedy will be presented by the students of Fort Covington High School, in FIREMEN'S HALL FORT COVINGTON Friday, April 19th. Miss Cherry Blossom, an American girl, born in Japan, is brought up by Ko Kemo, a Japanese inn-keeper, as his own daughter. Her parents, having died of fever, during an epidemic, she is in charge of Worthington, her father's secretary, who, being called back to New York, left her with Ko Kemo and used her property to further his own ends. Eighteen years later, he returns to Japan, on his way to enter a party of American friends, and finds Cherry is alive. Jack, a wealthy young man, one of the party, falls in love with Cherry, but Ko Kemo wants her to marry Togo—a rich politician. The action of the play centers around Jack's effort to outwit Togo, and Ko Kemo. Cherry eventually learns her true identity and comes into her own property. The dialogue is snappy and the music unusually attractive. Don't fail to see it or don't miss it. Dance following the play—10 p.m. to 3 a.m.
