

INEVITABLE CONFLICT
There is no use blinking the sobering fact that sooner or later our free world must try conclusions with Communism. Whether that will be by open war or whether it will remain a conflict of ideologies short of war we cannot know yet. . . . Conflict of some sort is inevitable and we must either prepare or submit.—Peace River Block (B.C.) News.

HERE'S WHAT THEY'RE SAYING IN HOLLYWOOD THESE DAYS

Hollywood—On the Record: Jack Carson, about weekly TV shows for comics: "I'm sticking to the once-monthly show in the fall. I'm allergic to drafts through holes in the head caused by comedians beating their brains out for new ideas."

Shelley Winters, about believing a song title, "A Good Man Is Hard to Find." She warbles it in "Meet Danny Wilson."
"Honey, good men ARE hard to find—but you can train 'em."
Tim Holt, on giving up westerns for drawing rooms:
"I'm very happy about kissing the horse and riding off into the sunset. The horse never upstages me."

Ruth Roman, on the subject of her mother-in-law, publisher Dorothy Schiff: "She's the handsomest woman I've ever seen. I love her."

Sally Forrest: "I'm thrilled that Ida Lupino has proved that a woman director can stand right up to the men. Being a little bit of thing makes her success all the more wonderful."

Byllis Kirk, the MGM lovely, about her photo on the cover of a national magazine: "It looked like me, including the crooked nose and freckles. Now I can relax and not worry about my best profile."

Director George Cukor, on the fallacy that every actor yearns to play Hamlet: "Actors would rather get a laugh and starve to death—than play a scene dramatically and be well fed."

The box office block-busting of UI movies has rival studio bosses scratching their heads. One of the reasons, beside good commercial films, is that 70 UI players made stage, TV and radio appearances in 125 cities the last 12 months to personally "sell" the pictures to moviegoers.

Marie Wilson, in opera-length black stockings, short skirt and a peek-a-boo neckline, says she's no 100 per cent Irma as the car hop who gets mixed up with Don De Fore and a couple of mad sailors, Groucho Marx and Bill Bendix, in RKO's "They Sell Sailors Elephants."

She cooed: "I'm just a little bit of Irma combined with a less naive character."

The brief costumes of Marie and a half a dozen other gorgeous car hops in the film has Producer Irvin Allen denying a hot fight with the Johnston office censors. "But," he whispered, "we re-did the costumes a couple of times, if that's what you mean."

Some Enchanted Island
Director Stuart Heisler and Linda Darnell will film "Saturday Island" in lush, never-before-photographed locations near Jamaica . . . Hal Roach, Jr., and St. Laure and Oliver Hardy are building on a profit-sharing TV film deal.

They're telling about the lah-dah blonde who was promised a special gift by a producer. The big day came and the producer had a Hillman Minx car delivered to her home. "I thought you said MINKS," blazed the doll, slamming the door in the producer's face. "Don't ever speak to me again."

said nothing could astonish him in this world, looking astonished.

"And you like fishing?"
"O, I love it. I love the country in the summer—the lakes, the rivers. The lovely cool smell of the mountain waters."

He was smiling at her. Not in the kind, reassuring way he sometimes had to cheer a girl who got a little frightened of him, but in the pleased anticipatory way a man smiles at a discovery of something he longs for in a woman.

"What do you do on Sunday?"
"I'm dreaming, Anne thought. I'll wake up any moment now and find I'm dreaming."

"Oh, the kind of thing girls do who work in an office." She added with sudden courage, "Very dull things as a matter of fact to a girl brought up in the country."

"Then you might enjoy a Sunday with me now and then? I know some good fishing grounds well in reach if we start early in the morning. Would you like that?"

"Very much," said Anne, her effort to control her excitement and astonishment resulting in an apparent lack of enthusiasm. But that was all right to John Avery Jr. He was unaccustomed to lack of enthusiasm. It gave him more to do and he liked that. "Which machine have you decided on, Mr. Avery?"

He gave her the first sheet she had typed. "This. The Royal Coachman."

She took it to check the make. Odd. It made her suddenly think of Cinderella.

Local Unit Is Vital Part Of Radar Chain

Ottawa, July 9. — (CP) — Canada is setting up more than 15 reserve R.C.A.F. radar units from coast to coast to train men and women in the complexities of detecting enemy aircraft.

They are called Reserve Aircraft Control and Warning Units and are shaping up as an important part of the expanding effort to build a network of fighter squadrons, radar stations and communications facilities to defend Canada from air attack.

These part-time servicemen already number in the hundreds and in the fall recruiting will be expanded to take in women. From their ranks would come the trained people necessary in considerable numbers if war comes.

In peace, it is hoped many of them will eventually join the swelling ranks of regular force radar personnel as the latter prepare to take over the stations Canada is building for the joint Canadian-American early-warning network.

Reserve units have been established at Halifax, Quebec City, Sherbrooke, St. Anne de Bellevue, Que., Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Victoria. Another is being formed at London and more are planned.

Their job is to train people in all aspects of operation and maintenance of the complex equipment used to handle aircraft control, to detect enemy planes and give warning to friendly planes.

The Montreal unit, under dynamic Group Capt. Ken Patrick, has been in operation for a few years, much longer than most of the others.

This summer there will be radar reservists taking two weeks full-time training at Uplands, Ont., Quebec City, Sherbrooke, Kingston, Ont., and Chatham, N.B.

Death Claims Thirty-Three Over Week-End

By The Canadian Press

Deaths on the highway and in the water took a heavy toll during the week-end as thousands of Canadians sought relief from hot, humid weather in Eastern Canada.

A Canadian Press survey showed 31 of the 33 deaths reported occurred in road or water accidents—11 in traffic and 20 in the water. A slaying and a fatal beating accounted for the other two.

Ontario reported the highest toll with 17 fatalities. Quebec had 14 and New Brunswick two.

Water accidents claimed seven lives in Quebec; five died in automobile mishaps, one was struck by a train, and one man was beaten to death.

The Roman Catholic School Commissioners hold their election on October 1.

Paint Cracks Are Due To Many Factors

When paint cracks, peels or blisters, or when it doesn't hide the surface properly according to the instructions on the container, the painter whether he be professional or amateur is often prone to blame the material. The Canadian Paint Varnish and Lacquer Association points out that there is more often than not there is a more deep-seated reason for the failure and asks that the householder examine all factors involved before blaming the paint.

For example, take the case of blistering of paint, perhaps one of the most familiar types of failure. The term refers to the formation of bubbles, blisters or pimples on the surface of the finished work, and it occurs usually after the film is dry. The fault here is frequently the time of day application by exposure to excessive heat such as direct sun rays. However, it may also be caused by the improper cleaning of the surface which leaves spots of grease or moisture on the wood. It may also occur because the pores of the wood were not properly filled, or as a result of the too frequent application of coats of paint which prevent the finishing material from drying thoroughly.

Blistering may also be caused by finishing over wood that is green or imperfectly dry. When such a paint job gets warm after standing in the sunlight or in a drying room, the moisture comes out and causes blisters. It is also a mistake to apply a heavy coat of shellac over the filler because it may seal in the moisture from the stain or unevaporated thinners in the filler. These expand upon exposure to a slightly higher temperature and cause the shellac coat to blister. Vapor, gas or water is usually present in blisters.

Another common failure in the finishing of such items as pianos and fine furniture is known by the amusing name of "heaving." Building coats, used for building up the surface of the object, are applied before rubbing. These coats are also known as foundation coats, or may be referred to by furniture manufacturers as sanding sealers. Where the building coats are applied too frequently, too heavily, or unevenly, they sometimes prevent proper drying. The film dries at the top, but is more or less soft and mushy underneath. When such a built finish is rubbed, the top coat breaks down, and naturally these spots will be more porous or softer than the surrounding surface. The final or flow coat may sink into these spots, soften up the building coats and cause a slight swelling or raising of the surface in those spots. From its appearance is derived the name "heaving" or "kicking up."

Many similar examples of paint failures could be given for which the paint or protective coating is the first thing to be blamed, where actually it is the least responsible of all the factors involved. It pays rich dividends to prepare the surface thoroughly before putting brush to paint, and to read everything the manufacturer has to say about his product in the instructions before, not after the job is done.

Co-Operation Between Nations Shown By Firefighters At Sutton Gathering

Sutton, July 9. — The annual luncheon and field day of the International Volunteer Firemen's Association, which was held for the first time in Sutton on Sunday, proved to be one of the biggest "do's" Sutton has seen for many a year.

Highlight of the Day was a tremendous parade, three quarters of a mile in length, which passed through the town at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

The parade was headed by a number of the local youngsters on horseback but it included some of the mechanized equipment which has made it possible for International Volunteer firemen to be summoned to any fire in the territory covered by the Association and have pumped 2,200 gallons of water within 20 minutes of being called.

The Association comprises the following fire departments: Enosburg Falls, Vt., Richmond, Vt., Sutton, Que., and East Berkshire, Vt. Among the displays which added color to the long parade the most outstanding were those of Darrah Brothers and the plumbing and heating float made by Wally Holden.

The parade also included a delegation of Vermont State troopers and the showing of some of the fire equipment of Sutton, Richmond and East Berkshire, the last showing a rescue car.

Many of the locals, particularly the youngsters, made up part of the parade, on bicycles or horses. Four brigades of volunteers were present for the events but their number was swelled to many times that total by the hundreds of district residents who joined in this manifestation of international co-operation and good will.

Prior to the parade and the field day, which included water polo, ladder climbing, races and a baseball game, a luncheon was tendered by the mayor of Sutton, J. L. Deslauriers, and the town council, for a number of prominent guests.

Among the distinguished visitors were Lee Emerson, Governor of Vermont; F. X. Ahern, deputy fire commissioner of the province of Quebec; Mr. Thompson, federal fire marshal, from Ottawa; C. J. W. Fox, M.L.A. for Brome; L. H. Gosselin, M.P. for Brome-Missisquoi; Carmi Dussault, president of the Vermont Fire Chiefs' Association; Chester Kirby, deputy fire marshal for Vermont; the state representatives for Enosburg, East Berkshire and Richmond, as well as the town representatives; fire Chief Donald Kelly, of Burlington, Vt., and the chiefs of the association fire brigades.

Many of the above were luncheon speakers and in their brief messages each stressed the international solidarity between Canada and the United States and the fact that volunteer firemen serve without pay, their first aim being to serve their neighbors.

Jack Shepard, chief of the Sutton fire brigade, was the very busy chairman of the 1951 reunion.

GETTING TOUGH WITH RUSSIA

Perhaps the time has come for the Western World to assume that the Russians are going to act like Russians. With this in mind — should a cease-fire be made to stick in Korea — perhaps this is the time for the United Nations to begin talking the toughest kind of talk to Moscow.

There are all sorts of reasons for believing the Russians are scared. What they do now — and they most surely will have some sort of offensive improvised after Korea — will likely be prompted by that fear.

The Russians, with their vast national complex, may panic more easily than we think. Today, the bulk of the Russian people dreads war.

The Politburo dreads a shooting war because it is aware that it is uneasy, internally and otherwise. The U.S.S.R. — and the Czarist governments before it — always feared a ring of hostility. It is a reality today. Korea, opening the eyes of the Western world to Soviet designs, solidified and strengthened the opposition.

Moscow dreaded a remilitarized Germany. But if Western Germany is rearmed, Moscow can blame its adventure in Korea. The Soviet Union now will bring its greatest propaganda barrage to bear against German remilitarization, and in favor of the kind of treaties the Russians want in Germany and Japan. She may even make menacing gestures.

The Western answer can be tough talk which can penetrate the Iron Curtain to the masses of people behind it. They remember that Germany alone almost brought the great Soviet Union to its knees. Let them now ponder the prospect of a United Western Europe backed by American might.

But it is not only dread of the west's arms which may now keep the Soviet Union in check. Russia itself is a vast complex of fear, the accumulation of decades of rule based on fear.

There is evidence in the Soviet press that the Russian worker is tired. In the ranks of the proletariat, there seems to be a slow, despairing resentment.

From fear, the Soviet Union is throwing everything into the yawning maw of its heavy industry — its war industry. But by succumbing to the great overriding fear the U.S.S.R. is creating new ones daily.

Perhaps in the not too distant future the peak will be reached and the dam will burst. Perhaps the Politburo, more given to blunders than we have been led to suspect, is aware of this danger. Perhaps the time has come to tell Moscow we're sick and tired of their nonsense.

MANY HURDLES TO INCREASED EUROPEAN PRODUCTION

The need for economic recovery was Europe's first great postwar crisis. The United States, newly come to world leadership, met the problem with the Marshall plan, a noble inspired human experiment which worked. But now, Europe revived in economic strength and in spirit, faces another kind of crisis. The menace of aggressive Russia compels all free men to rearm. Coming so close on the heels of Europe's well-remembered distress, the burden of rearmament appears to the Europeans almost intolerable.

Into the new crisis, youthful America has injected another imaginative proposal. Its leaders are saying: "If rearmament imposes too great a strain on present European economies, let's solve the difficulty by enlarging those economies so they can take the blow."

Will America's plan for higher European productivity really work? American businessmen and government officials in most intimate touch with Europe's problems concede a healthy handful of obstacles.

For one thing, customs and traditions will form a barrier. U.S. productivity symbolizes all the efficiency techniques ever devised in their factories. Many of these inevitably smash the crust of custom with ruthless concern. Family habits, labor union practices, many another custom may have to go if the plan is to work uninhibited. European labor is governed by a mass of rules. And secondly, European psychology is naturally unique.

Europeans lead a distinct way of life. They like it. We could err badly if we assume automatically that they will gladly embrace production methods which may drastically alter the patterns they know. How can we be sure "productivity" may not be just an empty phrase to them, or worse, an actual threat to much they hold dear?

In their hearts the Europeans know that today the United States are the strongest free power and hence must lead them. But they have an understandable reluctance to acknowledge this state of affairs, since they see themselves as more experienced. They are perhaps too ready to see "dictation" in efforts to guide and assist. They may view "productivity" as an attempt to impose the American way of life upon them. That the fear is unreasonable does not necessarily minimize it.

Even more practical difficulties loom. Raw materials needed to fuel an expanding, more productive European economy are in seriously short supply. The world deficit comes to 20 per cent in copper, 10 per cent in zinc, 5 to 10 in lead, 10 to 20 in sulphur, 15 in wool. There are many other deficiencies. If you haven't the raw stuff of production, where is the advantage in improved production techniques?

Philip Reed, chairman of General Electric and until mid-June head of the International Chamber of Commerce, envisages still other handicaps. Productivity gains come slowly at first, gathering speed with time. In this delicate first phase, he believes Europe cannot avoid some belt-tightening. It will be hard to prevent popular discouragement in this interval.

The fact is recognized, he says, that people are deeply affected by the trend of their welfare. If it has been upward, even slightly, then a halt or a downturn can have damaging effect.

All these obstacles have a tough core of reality in them. They raise the question whether America's shining proposal may not prove a pipe dream. Cynics treading European halls snort that the plan won't work.

But the most seasoned American analysts of Europe are not so pessimistic. They foresee no miracle. They don't necessarily believe Europe will add that projected $100 billion of new output by 1961. But they are convinced enough of this productivity crusade will rub off on the Europeans to make a real impact, to keep them hopeful, to bolster their defenses and help the free world stand off the endless threat of communism.

AFTER SEVEN YEARS

Calgary, Alberta

Saskatchewan is one of the most undeveloped provinces in Canada. What does it need? Here is one answer: "Development will come through an individual willing to invest his money and expecting to receive a profit from it." The trouble, of course, is that the Saskatchewan Government has created conditions under which individuals are not willing to invest their money in Saskatchewan, at least to an extent comparable with other provinces.

Who, by the way, said that Saskatchewan's development depends on individuals willing to invest their money for a fair rate of return? Why, it was Clarence M. Fines, Saskatchewan's provincial treasurer for the last seven years, to a Regina audience.

CABINET'S POWER GROWS AND PARLIAMENT'S DECLINES

Toronto Telegram

Parliament has adjourned until October 9 when the fourth session will be prorogued and the fifth opened. The members returning to their homes must experience a sense of frustration as they look back on their labors in the five months they have spent at the capital. As usual they have approved a miscellany of several hundred major and minor bills, the most important of these being the new tax laws, the Old Age Assistance Act, a new Post Office Act and amendments to the Criminal Code. The private member, in honesty, cannot claim to have had much influence on the legislation or on the Government's conduct of public business. Government bills have had precedence and the private members have not been encouraged to try to improve them.

The lot of a member in opposition is a happier one than that of supporters of the ministry. He at least can feel free to express his thoughts on legislation, either condemning it or supporting it according to his convictions, whereas the Government supporter in the prevailing parliamentary atmosphere at Ottawa is expected to act like a rubber stamp, remaining silent most of the time, though popping up like a cipher when the years are called on a cabinet minister's bill. But in practice in this Parliament, in which the Government has a top-heavy majority of "yes men," the opposition finds itself beating against a stone wall. Having developed an authoritarian complex the cabinet refuses to bow to the most convincing arguments, as, for instance, the unwisdom of increasing the sales tax to 10 per cent when it was bound to raise prices and increase inflation. Proof that the 25 per cent increase in the sales tax was unnecessary can be seen in the $275,000,000 surplus in the Government's accounts for the first two months of the new fiscal year. A considerable portion of this surplus can be attributed to the higher sales and excise taxes put on by Abbott in April which are increasing the living costs of the people.

This is an illustration of the senseless rigidity in the attitude of the Government. The opposition pleaded with the Finance Minister to withdraw the sales tax increase and doubtless many of the Liberal members privately felt it was unnecessary and inadvisable, but Mr. Abbott having made a mistake refused to correct it. It is this sort of thing which arouses in the private members the feeling of frustration at their inability to influence Government policy.

The influence of Parliament on public legislation and policy is declining while the authority of the executive — the cabinet, and the bureaucracy — is growing. The trend is a dangerous one.

'I'LL GO TO THE FRONT—YOU TAKE THE BACK'

Japanese People Developing Real Liking For Neutrality

Tokyo, July 9 — (P) — Where will Japan stand once she regains her independence.

Many United States observers have made the easy assumption that the Japanese, having benefited by the "soft" occupation and millions of American dollars, are permanently on the side of the West. Others are convinced Japan has no future unless she plays on the western powers' team.

Statements by occupation leaders, from Gen. Douglas MacArthur down, have given the impression that Japan is a democratic nation and a permanent and trustworthy ally of the west.

But not all Japanese agree that this nation must fall into line as an enemy of the communist world. Their reasons are varied, but they add up to a potent body of opinion against taking part in any struggle between east and west.

In the early days of the occupation, when it was United States policy to demilitarize Japan and eliminate any chance of her fighting again, the Japanese were told their only hope for security was to remain neutral.

Then American policy changed. It became important that Japan would not be neutral. It was argued that, in an all-out battle with world communism, the democracies would need Japan's industrial strength and fighting manpower.

Many Japanese, sold by the earlier arguments for neutrality, have not adopted the new policy as readily as some Americans had hoped. The Japanese people, with the memory of bitter defeat and war's devastation still fresh in their minds, have developed a strong attachment for neutrality.

Among those most concerned with the problem of Japan's future are the men who once led her mighty armies. Purg'd from official life, these military leaders nevertheless have maintained close ties with their old friends and subordinates. In recent months, with the relaxation of occupation policy, they have begun to speak more freely.

Some of the ex-militarists accept the view that Japan must tie herself closely to the west to prevent Japan's falling to the communists. They are convinced the U.S. and her allies will win any foreseeable war with the Soviet Union. They want to be on the winning side.

Officer's Argument

One of the leading spokesmen for the latter school of thought is former Col. Manabu Tsuji, one of Japan's most brilliant staff officers during the Pacific war. In speeches and pamphlets, Tsuji outlines his argument this way:

1. War is inevitable between the U.S. and U.S.S.R., probably before 1955.
2. The Far East will be of secondary importance.
3. There is no fundamental conflict between Japan and China, but only between the U.S. and Russia. Therefore Japan should not involve herself.
4. There is little chance that the U.S. can win a Third World War.
5. The Japanese should take a "generous" attitude toward the communists, adopting the good parts of their program without actually becoming a communist nation.

Tsuji says his estimate of the East-West conflict is based on extensive material on Russia's economic and military strength gathered by Japan's army before the end of the Second World War.

One of his conclusions is that, because of the Soviet's planned decentralization of industry "perhaps 50 atom bombs in Russian hands would be more destructive than 500 in American possession."

Tsuji also believes any heavy industrial system built in Japan now would only be destroyed by American forces on their withdrawal to prevent those industries from falling into enemy hands.

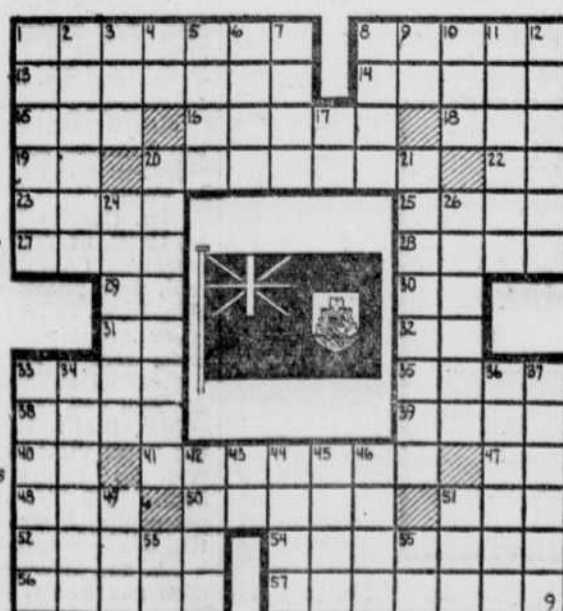

He reaches this conclusion:

"We should never be involved in (war between the U.S. and Russia) at any cost. Fortunately, MacArthur told us to become the Switzerland of the Far East. We should stick to this advice. However hard it may be, it will be much better than being involved in the catastrophe."

The great American game of poker has found many staunch supporters in Britain as the result of police raids on such games in London.

Almost everybody who can shuffle a deck of cards has written angry letters to the Times about this so-called interference in the rights of free peoples and this goes as a warning to glib Americans who think Britons don't know poker. The game received the support in the House of Commons this week of no less a personage than Lord Curzon who asked the Home Secretary why the police discrimination against poker when supporters of other games of chance were unmolested. The Home Secretary explained the law but the laughter which attended his remarks showed that Lord Curzon and his vast army of followers who like an occasional draw will be hard to bluff in the future.

Jacoby On Bridge

YOU CAN PLAY THIS HAND MANY WAYS

Today's hand was very hard to bid properly. Five diamonds would have been a somewhat easier contract to make, but four hearts wasn't bad even though the trump suit was fairly short. It's all right to get to game with only seven trumps in the combined hands provided that you know how to manage the trumps prudently.

When the hand was played, dummy won the first trick with the jack of spades. Declarer next laid down the ace and king of trumps, after which he led the nine of diamonds and let it ride to East's king.

East returned the queen of clubs, forcing out dummy's ace. Declarer then decided that he could afford to lead out another round of trumps as long as the diamonds had turned out so well. This was a fatal mistake.

After winning the third round of trumps with the queen, South went back to the diamonds. East ruffed the last diamond and led declarer's last trump.

At this point South had lost a diamond and a trump, with the spades still to be developed. When declarer went after the spades West would take his king of spades and lead his last club to set the contract.

There were actually five or six perfectly sound ways to play the hand, but drawing a third round of trumps was not part of any of them. South could have given up one spade trick as though West held the ace rather than the king. Or South could have led the queen of spades from dummy to win his ace and ruff a spade with dummy's third trump.

The right lines of play all had one feature in common: South had to draw only two rounds of

The Record Short Story

A GIRL FROM THE COUNTRY

By OLGA A. ROSMANITH

Anne was sadly aware of the reason she was chosen for the errand. It was a simple chore requiring no brains and she was newest addition to John Avery Jr.'s department in Avery, Avery and Thornburn's Wall Street office.

The head stenographer was now taking his rapid and tireless dictation. The second was busy transcribing a bookful of notes on legal sized paper. The filing clerk, Eleanor Brown, was working with a list, getting out the documents and papers Avery Junior wanted to take on his vacation with him.

It was Eleanor who had gone. Anne the job of third stenographer and general office chore girl when Anne's father died and she decided to join Eleanor in New York. "Be careful at your interview," Eleanor warned her. "Don't let him know you're fresh from the country."

Anne considered herself competent. Her father had been the editor of a bright and courageous small town newspaper and had made high demands on her. "Is that so bad?" she asked Eleanor.

"Not theoretically. But our late girl was fired because she was slow in the head and was late a couple of times because she got on the wrong subway. New York dazed her. Junior is a brilliant fast-thinking young lawyer. He said, 'Find me a girl with a New York record.' So you have to get one, honey, if it's only a couple weeks some place. I can't be dishonest when I'm cooking my recommendation for you."

So Anne had served a month in the small ads department on a big daily with offices off Times Square because the night editor had been a cub reporter for her father. It was so easy that it bored her. Nothing would have made her happier than to meet big demands on her time, strength and ability in her new job.

That is almost nothing. For Anne had done about the stupidest thing—in her own opinion—a third stenographer in a law office could do—fallen in love with her boss.

Had she been any other girl she might have fooled herself and hidden it. But small town or large, no place gives a girl such a realistic training in life and people than the office of a newspaper.

Men like John Avery Jr., did not halt in their swift rush through their offices, nor look up from their complicated demands and briefs to note that the third stenographer is a human being, let alone female and attractive. The fact that he was not married—not even engaged so far as the office staff knew—did not indicate in his case a desire to marry, but the opposite.

Anne was thinking of this, even while telling herself she was an idiot unworthy of her mercurial ancestry, while she walked in the sultry air along Wall Street to the typewriter shop.

John Jr. was not lonely. He seemed to love his work with a fierce passion. He was complete. The type who would pursue a girl and marry for one reason only. He would fall in love with her and insist on having her. Anne smiled at this, dimpling her left cheek and causing passers-by to catch their breath at her springlike charm and lush lips.

Absorbed in her thoughts she noticed nothing. John Jr.'s immaculate male suit and tie and instructed the Constitution Drafting Committee that "a state born of national revolution must be authoritarian and hierarchic."

FIVE YEARS AGO

Comrades R. L. Brault and J. N. Wood were named chairmen of the Cowansville Branch 99 Canadian Legion drive to raise $30,000 to build a Legion Hall at Cowansville.

"I don't think Mr. Avery would care that. It looks more like a boudoir than a station wagon." "Try it for yourself," said the salesman. "We have it in sober colors."

Again Anne typed the make in the left hand corner and rolled the paper to the centre. She typed with her eyes dreamily focussed on some invisible distance. "Two turns of white hackle help make a fly bi-visible, just as easily seen by the fisherman as the fish."

On the third machine she typed "trumps make the best wet flies. They look like mayflies and stoneflies that spend a lot of their life under water so the trout are used to them."

Three more exhausted varieties of makes in stock the shop had to offer. Anne picked up the six sheets of sample typing and her crisp white nylon gloves. John Avery Jr. was deep in dictation to his senior stenographer when she got to the office.

She laid the sheets on his desk and stood waiting for him to notice her. He looked up at the end of a sentence. He was not losing the thread of his work, but he was obviously at once aware of what she was there for. "Thanks Miss Matthews. I'll look these over in a few minutes and let you know my decision. Then you can order the machine on the telephone."

He called for her two minutes after the typist left his sanctum. He was watching for her as she came in and Anne, conscious of the slightest change in his tone, the slightest gradation of interest in his look, was aware at once that there was an extraordinary heightening of his interest as he looked at her.

She closed the door after her and went to his desk, pitying now the witnesses in court who sometimes had to stand his cross-examinations with his searching eyes on them. In his hands he held the papers she'd been typing for him.

"What made you write these things about trout flies, Miss Matthews? What do you know about trout fishing?"

"Oh, plenty, I guess. That's how my Dad and I spent our vacations. He was a very busy man. I used to keep his tackle in order and make flies for him."

Anne had the unusual experience of seeing John Avery Jr. who

A very enjoyable picnic took place on June 22, when the High School pupils and the Sunday Schools of St. Peter's Anglican Church and Trinity United Church joined forces and went to "Abe French's" farm in Flanders for the day. It was an ideal day for a picnic. Bathing was enjoyed, then games and races of various sorts, after which a real picnic lunch was served to which the children did justice. Then the prizes for races were given out. The pupils of the High School took this opportunity to present their principal, Mr. Gordon McElroy, with a brief case, to show their appreciation for the fine work he has done among them for the past two years. It is with regret that good-bye was said to Mr. McElroy, but all wish him every success in his new work as French specialist in Lennoxville.

The strawberry social put on by St. Margaret's Guild on the church lawn was a social and financial success. The tables were very pretty with their centres of flowers. The "fish pond" under the change of Mrs. Ivan Cork was the centre of attraction for the children. The white elephant table in care of Mrs. Turpin was loaded

When should a family borrow

A family should borrow only when a loan is the best solution to a money problem. For example, to pay old debts, medical expenses, taxes, fuel, education, car or home repairs. Loans for these reasons are not inflationary, for the money is not used to buy goods in short supply or increase indebtedness.

SOLVING MONEY PROBLEMS

At HFC—Household Finance—we believe a family should borrow only when, by careful planning, the money problem can be resolved, and the loan repaid in an orderly manner. When a family borrows under these circumstances, it is simply "renting" money on terms it can afford. At HFC you may borrow $50, $250, $500 or more on your signature, without bankable security.

Rock Island, July 9. — Miss Alice Goodsell was the guest of honor at a pre-nuptial shower on Wednesday evening, at the summer cottage of Miss Kay Farman, at Seymour Lake, in Vermont. The party was attended by thirty-two of Miss Goodsell's co-workers from the Union Twish Drill office staff and her mother, Mrs. Eulalie Goodsell, and mother-in-law-to-be Mrs. Howard Rollins, of Fitch Bay.

Upon the arrival of the bride-elect she was escorted to a chair very prettily decorated in white and yellow trim and on each side of her chair were two decorated chairs in which were seated Mrs. Goodsell and Mrs. Rollins. The gifts, with their very pretty wrappings, were in a chest

With the assistance of Mrs. Goodsell and Mrs. Rollins the guest of honor opened gifts and the lovely pieces of Duncan glass, silver, linens, etc., were passed around and much admired by the guests who formed a circle around the large room.

In a few well chosen words Miss Goodsell expressed her appreciation for the lovely shower of things for her home. GRANBY

A public indignation meeting was called in the gymnasium of the Granby High School on Wednesday, June 30, which was largely attended by parents and friends of the pupils. Certain conditions were exposed which threatened the future health and happiness of the youth of Granby.

Mr. O. H. Jackman, chairman of the school board, presided, and told the gathering certain facts which he had gone to much trouble to find out. Certain conditions have been observed which certainly interfere with any child's ability to do his best in school, and which could be corrected by the parents involved.

Late hours spent in certain rendezvous throughout the area where children are being served alcoholic beverages without question are one of the first things to combat, and can only be done by close supervision of their leisure hours.

The real purpose of the meeting was to inform the parents of these dangers which their children are exposed to, and which, if not curtailed now before it is too late, will be forever regrettable indeed.

It is rumored that marijuana among teen-agers in this area, cigarettes are being distributed who purchase them eagerly. It is a known fact that this is going on in other places throughout the continent, but the people of Granby have been complacently sitting back and saying, "It cannot happen here."

Constable Patenaude, of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, was present and addressed the meeting. He said the children in Granby needed supervision and if these conditions continued there will soon be criminals on their hands. He said there were drinking establishments that depended on teen-agers for much of their business, and yet this is contrary to the laws of the country. There are others who care nothing for the closing laws, and many who are operating without even a license.

Until something is done about these conditions, children will naturally be under their influence. It was decided to form a Home and School Association in Granby with the following committee in charge: Ven. Archdeacon I. M. Lidstone, Loran Ball, Mrs. (Dr.) B. S. W. Brown, Mrs. Roberts Mitchell, Mrs. W. H. Hurd, Mr. J. Bouskell and Mr. L. G. Roach. KIWANIS CLUB DINNER Ladies' Night and Induction Night were combined at the regular dinner of the Kiwanis Club, on Monday, June 18, at the Windsor Hotel. The guest speaker was Mr. Joan Lovell Baker, vice-president of Henry Birks and Sons in Montreal, and a director of the company.

With Fred A. Wallace officiating, two new members were inducted into the club. They were William T. Ward, superintendent of the Thor Mills Ltd., who was introduced by W. C. Wilkinson, and Dr. Marc Tardiff, introduced by J. G. Fuller. These were welcomed by the president, S. Simms.

The title of Mr. Baker's address was "27,000 Miles in Search of Gems," and he gave an interesting history of some of the famous diamonds of the world. Diamonds were formed by the crystallization of carbon 300,000,000 years ago, through terrific heat and pressure from the violent movements of the earth, into perfect, free, hard carbon. The first diamonds were found in India in the 5th century, B.C., then in 1729 they were found in South Africa, and from here comes 90 per cent of the world's supply of diamonds today. These are owned by De Beers Consolidated, which was formed by Empire builder Cecil Rhodes.

The speaker told of Canadian Dr. John Williamson, who owned a diamond mine in Tanganyika, Africa, that was eight and one-half times bigger than that of the De Beers Company.

Mr. Baker concluded his talk by showing a number of colored slides of his recent tour through South America, South Africa, Egypt, Italy, Switzerland, France, Holland, Germany and the British Isles.

Mr. Baker was introduced by Mr. G. Legendre, and thanked by Mr. W. O. Lewis.

Boosts were presented to Mrs. E. Huet, Miss Ann Roach, Mrs. W. Desnoyers, Mrs. Sidney Wade, Mrs. G. A. Mieszkowski, and Mrs. W. O. Lewis while the winners of the flowers, which decorated the tables, were Mrs. W. C. Wilkinson, Mrs.

et Terrill at the Lee farm for a week.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Hunt, of New Britain, Conn., are spending their holidays at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Farrow and visiting other friends while here.

Mrs. John Sanction and son, Andrew, and her mother, Mrs. Bain, left over the week-end to join Mr. Sanction, in Fredericton, N. B., where they will reside.

Miss Helen Driver Was Feted With A Shower By Friends At Melboro Hall

Melboro, July 9. — The United Church Hall was the scene of a very happy event on Friday evening, June 30, when Mrs. W. McMorine, Mrs. E. Crack, Mrs. S. E. Morrison, Mrs. W. Adamson, Mrs. Otis Fowler and Mrs. M. Watters were hostesses at a delightfully arranged miscellaneous "shower" in honor of Miss Helen Driver, a bride-to-be.

There were upwards of 70 ladies present. The hall was very prettily decorated with pink and white streamers and white bells with streamers leading to the four corners of the table on which the gifts were placed.

Miss Carrie Ward received the guests at the door. Upon arrival of the guest of honor she was escorted to a decorated chair by Mrs. W. McMorine, while Mrs. John Wilkins played the "Wedding March" on the piano.

Mrs. McMorine presented the gifts together with the best wishes of the assembled guests to the bride-elect.

Miss Driver was then given a shower, of confetti from a balloon hung over her head and which had been punctured by Miss Wilma Crack.

Mrs. Osborne Wilkins, Mrs. L. Driver, mother of the guest of honor, and Mrs. Raymond Johnston assisted in unwrapping the many attractively wrapped parcels, which were passed among the guests to be viewed and admired.

After the gifts had been opened and passed around the guest of honor very graciously thanked one and all for their gifts and good wishes and those who had sponsored the happy occasion in her honor.

Delicious refreshments were served. The hostesses assisted by some of the young ladies present. The men folks joined the party for refreshments.

Vacation Reading

If you have been a camper this summer, you know what a thrill it is to walk with a counselor who knows nature lore, who can show you a dried snakeskin hanging from a hole in an apple tree and tell you the warning is a special nest decoration of the crested flycatcher. A knot on another tree limb, easily passed unnoticed by your untrained eye, turns out to be a tiny hummingbird's nest.

To know where to look and to know what it is when you find it is to enjoy the summer season to the full.

Here is where books will aid you. You don't need to read just any book that comes along. Read the books that fit into your special schedule.

Suppose you are planning to visit a beach resort. Several entertaining books have been written on shells. If sports are your strong point, there are books on swimming, boating and fishing. Name your interest. The Public Library is sure to have it.

Those who stay home can look up interesting facts about their individual state. Ten chances to one, they will find dozens of facts they never knew about, right in their own home territory. And they will find just as many places that they will want to see after they have read the historical background concerning such sites.

Those who travel have their pick of hundreds of district travel books. Boy Scouts, who attended the National Jamboree at Valley Forge last summer, read volumes on early American history and these Scouts knew, long before they left home, what they wanted to see and why. To enjoy new places, it is important to know what these places mean.

Vacation reading will provide you with useful knowledge.

Jim Ferrier Cops Open And Seagram Gold Cup

Stages Last Round Rally To Post 67 And Finish With 273, Fifteen Under; Stan Leonard Top Canadian

Toronto, July 9.—(P)—Jim Ferrier, who studied his golfing figures with the seriousness of a chartered accountant, won the Canadian Open Golf Championship Saturday with a medal score of 273.

He was 15 strokes under par for the 72-hole distance and two better than his nearest rivals.

It was the second successive victory in the $15,000 Canadian Open for the Big Australian, who plays on the pro circuit out of his home city of San Francisco.

Ferrier's steadiness won him top prize money of $2,250, the Seagram Gold Cup and the roaring acclaim of 10,000 galleries who galloped about the Mississauga Club course.

The bitter-home stretch battle behind Ferrier, first of the possible winners to finish, was a golfing show all its own.

Ed (Porky) Oliver, rotund golfer from Seattle who clowned his way through a sensational last-round bid, had to settle for a second-place tie with 275.

With him was Fred Hawks of El Paso, Texas, a photographic youngster who sank a 35-foot putt at the last hole to catch up with Oliver. Hawkins and Oliver each collected $1,900.

In fourth place came Jimmy Demaret, the fashion-plate Texan playing out of Ojai, Calif., with 278. Jack Burke, Jr., of Houston, Texas, who started the last round with a two-stroke lead and blew it, finished fifth with 280.

Stan Leonard of Vancouver's Marine Drive Club was again low Canadian scorer with 282. He finished in a three-way tie for sixth place with Ed Furgol of Royal Oak, Mich., and Doug Ford of Harrison, N.Y.

Leonard, who got up to a fourth-place tie last year at Royal Montreal, won the Rivermead Cup as low Canadian pro and an extra $200, giving him a total of $950.

Henry Martell of Edmonton Highlands Club was second low Canadian, finishing further down the list with 287.

Art Severson of Mount Clemens, Mich., was the gold medal winner as low amateur with 283, five strokes better than Nick Weslock of Windsor, Ont., Essex, who took the honor last year.

Ferrier's task was a tough one when he set out on his last round, two strokes off the fine play of little Jack Burke.

Ferrier set the pace in the first round with a remarkable seven-under-par 65. His putting touch went haywire in the second round and he took a par 72, but in the third round he snapped back with a 69 and finished yesterday's 18 holes in 67, running down a seven-footer for a birdie on the last hole.

Tied after three rounds at 206 with Hawkins and two strokes away from the razzle-dazzle play of Burke that included a pair of 66s, Ferrier played his final round with grim determination.

Once in a while he smiled at Stan Leonard, playing in the same threesome. But most of the time he played with a studied thoughtfulness, twice exchanging a few whispered words with his wife, who followed him around the course.

The win put him out in front as leading money-winner among the pros who make the golfing circuit. Promising to be back for the

Boston Red Sox Dump Yankees 6-2 But Chicago White Sox Retain Lead; Dodgers Edge Phillies 6-4

Can Boston Red Sox do it this time?

That's the question fans are asking today as the thrilling American League pennant race takes time out for the All-Star game.

The Red Sox fanned a new pennant dreams of their legions yesterday by beating New York Yankees 6-2. The victory was Boston's eighth straight at home over the Yankees and the 13th in the last 17 starts.

By winning, the Red Sox took over second place from the fading Yankees and remained one game behind the front-running Chicago White Sox who posted a tough 5-4 decision over the last-place St. Louis Browns.

The Yankees are two games behind and their third-place position is endangered by the onrushing Cleveland Indians who took a doubleheader from Detroit 5-3 and 10-2. The Indians are only four games out of first place.

While the American League race tightened up, Brooklyn Dodgers pulled 8½ games away from the runner-up New York Giants in the National.

The Dodgers downed Philadelphia Phillies 6-4 in 10 innings while the Giants dropped a 6-5 10-inning decision to Boston Braves. St. Louis Cardinals split a pair with Pittsburgh Pirates, losing the opener 6-2 but winning the nightcap 9-8. A doubleheader between Chicago and Cincinnati was rained out. In remaining American-League action, Washington Senators humbled Philadelphia Phillies twice, 3-1 and 8-2.

A crowd of 29,843 fans roared approval as the Red Sox came from behind to trip the Yankees for the third time in as many days in Boston.

New York nicked Ray Scarborough, who turned in his second complete game of the season, for a 3-0 lead in four innings. But two-run homers by Lou Boudreau and Clyde Vollmer in the fifth and sixth innings off Vic Raschi turned the tide.

Chicago also overcame a deficit to beat the Browns. The Sox trailed 4-3 entering the seventh when they tied the score. They won in the eighth on two singles and Bob Dillinger's run-scoring fly.

Sugar Ray Ready To Defend His Title

London, July 9.—(P)—Sugar Ray Robinson, the boxing scourge of two continents, has tapered off his five-day training for the first defence of his five-months-old world middleweight title.

He meets home-loving Randolph Turpin of Britain over 15 rounds or less at the 18,000-seat Earl's Court Arena Tuesday night. The place has been sold out since the day after the fight was announced.

Turpin's record of 43 victories in 46 pro fights—all in Britain—have boosted the 23-year-old clouter's stock to the point where he is rated by the National Boxing Association as the No. 1 middleweight after Robinson.

Turpin is the second negro to hold a British boxing title—the first was his oldest brother and present trainer, Dick.

Britain's legal bookmakers, who have made Sugar an odds-on favorite, are laying 6-4 against the fight ending in the first five rounds. You can get 7 to 1 against Robinson needing the full 15 rounds and 66 to 1 against the possibility of a draw.

Robinson has been in Britain since last Wednesday after a second whirlwind tour of continental rings in which he stopped four opponents and got involved in a hectic decision in Berlin. He knocked out Gerhard Hecht of Germany twice in two rounds, was disqualified for kidney punching and then saw the fight classed as "no decision" after a meeting of Berlin Boxing Authorities.

He expects to be around 155 or 156 for the weigh-in Tuesday. Turpin will weigh about 159.

The field is six more than that which competed last year at the Summerlea Club in Montreal.

The winner over the par-70 layout of the Hamilton Golf Club at Ancaster will pick up $1,000 as first prize money and an additional $1,000 a expenses for the $73,000 Tam O'Shanter Tournament at Chicago next month.

The C.P.G.A. title play, normally with a top cash award of $350, has drawn professionals from all across the country. Most of them competed in the Canadian Open last week at the Toronto Mississauga course.

Stan Leonard of Vancouver, defending his C.P.G.A. championship, is ranked favorite to retain the title. Leonard finished the Canadian Open Saturday in a three-way tie for sixth place, best performance by a Canadian.

This year the prize money was increased by $1,000 tossed into the kitty by E. B. Eastbourn, Hamilton Gold Club president.

On top of that, George May, promoter of the Tam O'Shanter tournament, has contributed another $1,000. This is to look after the expenses of the C.P.G.A. champion in the richest tournament that professionals shoot for.

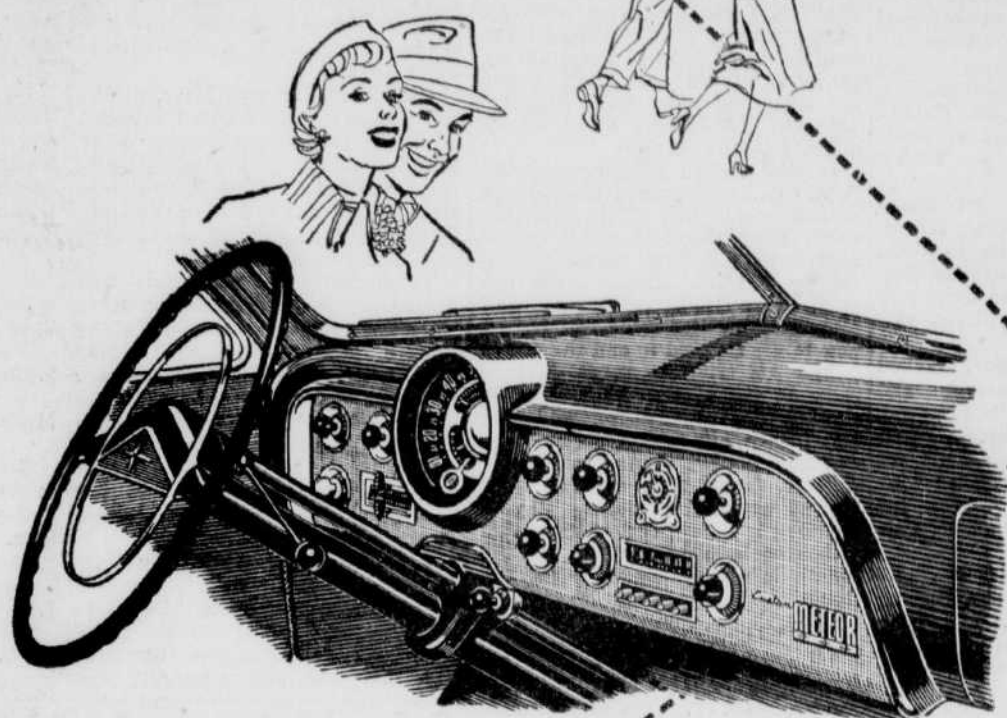

Second prize in the C.P.G.A. contest this time will be around $500.
