STRENGTHENING THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S HANDS.

Late advices seem to indicate that the Imperial Government has referred the Letellier case back to Canada for settlement. That the final settlement of the case will be uninfluenced by the consideration given it in England we do not, however, for a moment believe. If we are to believe an apparently good authority as to the opinion of the colonial office, on the question, the feeling is decidedly against the dismissal of Lieutenant-Governor Letellier.

THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA.

The second Zulu campaign has fairly commenced. Sir Garnet Wolseley has arrived in South Africa, and has been hailed as a deliverer. There is an advance along the whole line, and all we can now hope for is a short and decisive war. A small war it cannot be, but judged from numbers and preparations, one of the most serious in which England ever was engaged.

satisfaction with the Lieutenant-Governor and protest against an action, the only good grounds for which would be, that it was taken in their interests. It is not only the privilege but the duty which the Legislature owes to the people, to give expression to the sentiments of the people in the province in this case.

FRANCE'S PROPERTY AND COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL INTERESTS.

When a course of action is determined upon either by an individual or a party, which cannot in itself be justified, by reason or argument, the attempt is always made and sometimes successfully to justify it by precedent. When argument failed the Protectionists, they time and again during the late contest on this question pointed to the case of France, a country in which protection has to some extent, although not nearly so widely as is generally supposed, found favor and been adopted.

LIUENTENANT'S CAREY'S FATE.

The death of the Prince Imperial has not only caused the most sincere sorrow throughout England, but the circumstances attending it have created a feeling of profound indignation. A disaster attending the operations of either arm of the British service, is invariably regarded as the result of a blunder, and a verdict of nobody to blame is a thing unknown.

carry England into war on his own responsibility; nor, perhaps, are we the best judges of the action of Lord Chelmsford in dealing with the king's recent overtures in favor of peace. That commander had on his hands through circumstances a task more delicate than his previous achievements would have pointed him out for.

FACTORY HANDS.

Is the world getting worse than things are not what they used to be? Once the shoemaker after serving a long apprenticeship could make a whole pair of shoes all himself, except such parts of the work as he left to his wife, and when they were finished he could hold them up to the light and say, "These are honest shoes. They were made of good leather that had been in the vat for years— for men in those days did not know about the wretched 'interior' that keeps gnawing at their leather as it lies in the vat. And every year the customer wore those honest shoes the better he liked them.

PREVENTION OF SABBATH DESECRATION.

The people of St. Lambert have aroused themselves to prevent the repetition of the desecration of the Lord's Day in their village by outsiders, as was done two days ago, and surely they have the right to say that their peace and acts of worship shall not be interrupted upon. They purpose appealing to the law of the land, which might, however, avail them little with an unfriendly jury.

MARSHAL MACMAHON AND THE PRINCE IMPERIAL'S FUNERAL.

The refusal by the Government of France of the request of Marshal MacMahon to be allowed to attend the funeral of the late Prince Imperial, at first sight appears very harsh, and looks like an exhibition of petty malice toward the dead Prince. It would be fair, however, to remember that the anxiety of the Bonapartists to attend this funeral could not be looked upon so much as an expression of personal affection as a tribute of respect to a departed but still threatening dynasty.

PROVINCIAL AUTONOMY.

The autonomy of the provinces we Canadians call it; in the United States they used to call it State Rights. This autonomy is valued by the Upper Canadians because it was secured for them by Mr. George Brown, and saved them from French domination. It is valued by the majority of this province because it is their protection against English domination.

time. From the finding of the court-martial the presumption is that Lieutenant Carey did not fulfil his whole duty. It is the boast of British soldiers that they stand by each other to the last, a character which makes them terrible to their enemies. Lieutenant Carey has not acted according to this tradition, and of course he is blamed.

THE QUEBEC GOVERNMENT.

The Quebec Government have, it is said, listened to the representations of the Montreal Licensed Victuallers, and purpose lowering the rates of licenses in Montreal and raising those in Quebec city till the two are equalized. In equalizing the prices in all cities the Government has adopted the only defensible policy, but we pointed out when the matter was first agitated the same result might be arrived at by raising the rate in all cities to that charged in Montreal.

THE RUSSIAN IMPERIAL URSAE.

The Russian Imperial Urae, instituting tyrannical measures for the suppression of Nihilism, has had, so far as can be judged, anything but the effect intended, but the new measures taken by the Czar will not, we think, be without effect. Since the ukaz was issued, Nihilists have used the torch with disastrous results.

The MINEURS states that for the moment the Catholic Conservative party lacks the confidence of the Protestant Conservatives, and seems to feel relieved from an incubus which has oppressed the said Catholic Conservative party in a manner altogether distasteful to it.

ground that any change must be an improvement on no other. In these officers, however, the people of Montreal have some reason to hope for a fair consideration of their interests. The third proposition is that of doing away with the necessity for a petition from twenty-five electors for a licensed grog shop, and substituting in its place a petition by the residents against any establishment proposed in the neighborhood, which may be considered. How would it do just to reverse the old rule, and—according to the present License Commissioners, any twenty-five ratepayers could file any number of liquor-licenses upon a neighborhood—consider the objection of any twenty-five ratepayers, who object to the constant temptation of themselves and their sons, to sufficient reason, or the re-issuing of a license to an old one? Own own proposition would have been that instead of abolishing the petition of twenty-five ratepayers for a license, to continue it, specifying, however, that no one ratepayer could sign two lists, and that the petition would not be of itself sufficient evidence to prove the necessity for a licensed tavern.

THE SUPREME COURT OF CANADA.

At the Election held last week in the County of Yamaska for the Commons, Mr. Vanasse, the Conservative candidate, was elected by a majority of 178. Owing to the circumstances of the election it is difficult to arrive at the true significance of this result. The seat became vacant through the appointment of its late member, Mr. Charles Ignace Gill, to the position of Judge of the Richelieu District.

left to tell the heart-rending accounts of the disaster. Yet, as far as is known, the experience of last year taught the people of Memphis no adequate lesson on the preservation of the city's health. Last year's squares were filled with refuse, and after an examination the people affected to believe that such a proceeding was not injurious to the public welfare or health. With theories as a guide, and yellow fever and other epidemic diseases may be expected just as surely as it is impossible to eradicate small-pox from Montreal while a large number of the people refuse to be vaccinated, and little attention is paid to the thorough repression of the disease.

Family Reading.

AT THE OLD FARM. Yes, 'tis true. The blinds are closed, and the front door streams with craps. Surely through the house last eve stole a vague and awful shape. Dimly seen by only one—viewless, undecorated, to the rest: Only one descried the arrow ere its death-pang pierced his breast.

Why, they say he kissed his wife? She was sitting by the door, With her patient, work-worn hands folded, for the day was o'er. And the twilight wind stirred softly, tapped the lilacs on the pane.

Kindly, honest, Christian folk, both the deacon and his wife: Only somehow they had lost all the romance out of life. And the love which they began with, like a flower or ergot on a weed, Struggled on, half-choked, half-buried, in the strife for worldly needs.

Well, the night came on apace. All the usual chores were done, And they went to bed as usual; rising always with their sun. 'Twas not worth while burning candles; and at midnight, lo! a call Woke the sleepers. One was taken, one left—and that was all.

Lucy told me of the kiss. On her way to meet the choir, She had stopped to see Aunt Ruth, she and Neighbor Brown's Desire. They were not surprised this morning when they heard that he was dead: That he must have had a warning was what our Lucy said.

But I think the real love, the true love, that that never dies. Once two loyal hearts have known it, wakened 'neath those evening skies, And 'twill be a comfort sweet, in her lonely time to be, That before he went, he spoke to the "dear wife" "to-day."

because in all its one hundred and seventy-six verses the Bible is mentioned in every one except two." So Mrs. Barnes put on her glasses and opened her old Bible, and read, "As new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the Word, that ye may grow thereby." "I find here," she said, "that the Bible is to be our food, and that it is intended to make us grow. Now one can't grow without the right kind of food. The verse makes me think of my dear little grandchild. His mother was taken away, and he was left a baby for us to bring up. We had such a hard time to find anything to agree with him. We tried milk and water, and arrow-root, and cracker water, but he didn't thrive,—he was nothing but skin and bone; finally he got sick and we called the doctor, and he said, 'Why this child is starving to death! What has he got for food? Don't give him any more such stuff,' he said. 'Try an other cow, and give him pure milk.' So we got a new milk cow and fed him fresh milk, and I can't begin to tell you what a wonderful change it made in that child in less than three weeks' time; the doctor little fellow coughed, and he was as well and happy as a robin. Maybe that's the reason there are so many weakly Christians. I shouldn't wonder if souls need the right sort of food as well as bodies in order to be healthy. I have some neighbors that my heart just aches for. They read the Bible, and take books, such as 'The Pirate's Bride,' and 'The Fatal Secret,' such food is worse than cracker-water, and arrow-root, for they are starving souls instead of bodies, and the Word can't find any place to take root, much less grow, when the mind is filled up with such trash.

ITALIAN COUNTS AND AMERICAN FORTUNES. Walking out with a friend one day, we were accosted by a very small old woman, comfortably dressed in black, who asked for a few centimes. My companion said: "She was once a countess."

A PRAYER-MEETING TALK. BY MRS. C. M. LIVINGSTON. The room was well filled on the Thursday afternoon appointed for the meeting, which was opened by a few earnest words of prayer; then Mrs. Lewis remarked: "In thinking of this subject, I have been reading the Bible. I am reminded of my dear mother. Many years ago when sewing-machines were not as common as now, my husband sent to New York and purchased one for me. I read the instructions, and followed them as I thought, but I did not succeed, the thread kept up in heaps and it skipped stitches. After repeated failures I sat aside and picked up the old-fashioned needle and foot, and tried to do all the sewing of my large family by hand. At last a lady from a neighboring town came to visit me. It so happened that she owned a machine of the same kind. She sat down before mine, turned the screws, oiled it, put the work in, and sewed a long seam as by magic. The needle went in and out as if it were a machine. I needed to know it. It was a happy day to me when I could sew on it, I assure you, and you all know from experience just what a comfort and help that machine was to me for years afterwards. I am convinced that in like manner I groped and stumbled along a long time in my Christian life because I did not know how to use my Bible. Every day I am not sure, says Miss McIntosh, 'that I quite understand your illustration. The sewing machine was, of course, no use to you until you had learned all its mysteries,—it was the same as locked up to you, you needed a key, but here are our Bibles in plain English. If we read them I cannot see why we will not be benefited.'

LIZZIE BLAKE—A TRUE INCIDENT. BY MARY A. ROE. Lizzie Blake was a remarkably handsome young girl, who was the unrivaled belle of a large New England town. Among her intimate friends was a young physician, his scrupulous and frequent indulgence in the wines offered at social gatherings, and remonstrated with her on the danger of forming such habits, and the evil influence she was exerting upon the young men by whom she was surrounded. But by here are our Bibles in plain English. If we read them I cannot see why we will not be benefited.

LIGHT ON THE DAILY PATH. Think upon me, my God, for good. Thus saith the Lord; I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals, when thou wastest after me in the wilderness.—I will remember my covenant with thee in the days of thy youth, and I will establish unto thee an everlasting covenant. I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you. For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace, and not evil, to give you an expected end.

REVERENCE GOOD BOOKS.—Teachers can in no way do a better thing for their pupils than to inspire in them a love for good books. To read is to learn, and to learn is to grow. A book is not in school, but out of school, should be one of the chief aims of every teacher. When a teacher has created in a youth a love

"What right have you to take her shawl?" said the physician to his saloon-keeper, who was keeping her every day for drink, and has already a long unpaid score, so I thought I'd try that way to drive her off," replied the man sullenly. "I'm hungry and thirsty. This man has had all my money, and now he won't give me one little drink, though I'm perfectly sober. But I can't let her go without a shawl," she said in the same whining voice, as she sunk back into utter forgetfulness of all save her degraded appetite. "Come with me, and I'll take you where you will have good wholesome food," said the physician, striving to make his prey overcoat his disgust for the local scene creature his early friend had now become. "Will you give me a drop of whiskey too?" she asked eagerly. "No, no; they will teach you how to do without it." "It's too late. I tell you I can't do without it. Here, man, you may have my shawl if you'll give me one more good, generous drink."

ANECDOTES OF ANIMALS. (From the Leisure Hour.) A CURIOUS FRIENDSHIP. A pigeon whose mate had been shot, and who was consequently a solitary, unattached bird, attached himself strongly to a friend. He accompanied her in her walks abroad and her duties at home. At mealtimes he would assiduously bustle about, and draw her attention to the choice morsels of India corn that delicately reflected her place. He would stand upon her back; in short, this pair of friends were inseparable. The hen became very anxious to sit, and her mistress accommodated her with some eggs and a nest. The indefatigable pigeon remained beside her while she sat, and cooed forth many remarks to beguile the tedious time. At length, when she understood that she could not tell whether the hen understood his conversation! He was even willing to share the fatigues of nursing, a proof of friendship no mother could fail to understand and appreciate. When the hen got off to feed, he would bustle on to the nest, to attend to his young as far as they would go, and at length to supply her place. We grieve to have to record that this joint nursing was not successful. No chickens resulted from that goodly nestful of eggs.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON. VICTORY OVER DEATH. July 27.—1 COR. 5: 15-58. INTRODUCTION. Certain false teachers in Corinth had denied the resurrection of the dead, as will be seen by reference to 1. Who they were is a question of some importance, as it is, that they were converted Sadducees, others suppose that they were Epicureans. Paul in this chapter clearly demonstrates to them the truth of a future resurrection.—The points of the argument are as follows: (1) whether there is any resurrection of the dead (vs. 1-34); (2) what the bodies that are raised up shall be (vs. 35-51); (3) what shall become of those who shall be alive at the last day (vs. 51-54).—For. Having proved the fact of the resurrection (from the historical fact of the resurrection of Christ), the apostle comes to illustrate its nature, or to teach with what kind of bodies we are to rise. It is the doctrine that the great objection against the doctrine, in the minds of his readers, rested on the assumption that our future bodies are to be of the same nature with those which we now have; that is, natural bodies consisting of flesh and blood, and sustained by air, food, and sleep. Paul says this is a foolish notion. Our future bodies will be material, and identical with our present bodies, and yet organized in a very different way. You plant a seed; it does not come up a tree, but a flower. Why, then, may not the future to be the present body what the flower is to the seed? Our future bodies will be as material, and as earthly as our present bodies. There are heavenly souls and stars differ from our future in glory; yet, then, may not our future differ from our present bodies in glory? Such not only may be, but will be, the case. The body deposited in the grave is corruptible, mean, weak, and subject to natural decay, and from the grave it will be incorruptible, glorious, powerful, and spiritual. Adam was created with a natural body, adapted to an earthly state of existence; Christ, as a life-giving spirit, his spiritual body. As Adam was before Christ, so our earthly tabernacles are before our heavenly ones. We shall bear the image of the heavenly.—Hodge.

CHILDREN'S CORNER. JERRY'S HOUSEKEEPING. Mrs. Slocum sat down suddenly, and dropped the work she had been holding to the window for light. "It's no use, she said, with a burst of tears: 'I'm going blind and deaf, and I can't become of you all, I don't know.' Jerry was not. He sprang to his mother's side. "Oh, why don't you go to that place in the city where they have the best doctors, and cure you for nothing, mother dear! It may be something that can be cured right up, if you take it in time."

see is the marvellous superabundance of the creative power of God. He has planned unlimited and unnumbered things (see vs. 39-42). Here is an answer to all objections. "With what body do they come?" Are we to believe that God has exhausted his creative power, that the power of God should be insufficient to find for the glorified spirit a form fit to that of progress,—first the lower and then the higher. "That was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural." At first we lead a mere animal life, the life of instinct; then, as we grow older, passion succeeds; and after the era of passion our spirits ascend, as it comes at all. So will it be hereafter: our present humanity, with all its majesty, is nothing more than human infamy.—Robertson.

SELECTIONS. THE OTHER DAY a painter from Tyrone, who had been painting the stables on the farm of a wealthy gentleman, was sitting at the table of the house, and the gentleman, being on deck, heard the painter, but failed to find out his whereabouts for some time. At length, looking over the stern, he descried the man of paint whose tone was merry and loud. He looked across at the man, who took no notice of his appearance, but continued his work until accosted by his superior as follows: "Do we pay you for whitening?" "No, I give you that into the bargain!"

CHILDREN'S LETTERS. DEAR MR. EDITOR.—I have just received your valuable paper, and we love it very much. In answer to John G. Ross's question we would say "Lowell," and to Nancy B. Mills and Muriel M. Dundas, "Paris."
