SELF-HEATING IRONS.

PATENTED, QUEBEC, AUGUST, 1852.

FOR SALE BY THE SUBSCRIBERS.

LADIES are invited to call and examine the IRONS. Those who have tried them acknowledge their superiority over every other description of Smoothing Iron, for all laundry purposes.

The large amount of fuel consumed in heating the common Iron causes an uncomfortable heat, and an extravagant expense, both of which are avoided by using the SELF-HEATING IRON.

With this Iron, three bushels of charcoal are sufficient to do the ironing of a common family twelve months. Once filled, you can use the Iron five hours without replenishing. While using it you do not require to suffer the annoyance of a heated stove or fire place. You need not labour so hard pressing with it as you do with the common iron. The Irons being finely finished, they are easily kept bright and clean, and cannot possibly soil the finest linen.

McDONALD, BROTHERS & CO.,
Importers and Manufacturers of Oils,
25 ST. PETER STREET, MONTREAL,

WILL commence business on the 1st May next, in premises recentlyoccupied by the Messrs. D. & C. DARLING. By devoting themselves exclusively to the IMPORTATION and MANUFACTURE of OILS, they will thereby be enabled to offer to the trade the superior advantages resulting from the purchase in large quantities of the different kinds of OILS at their respective places of production. And by combining the manufacturing and refining of OILS with the Importation of the crude article, they feel confident of being able to execute orders upon the very best terms. Their Stock will comprise—

Bleached and Unbleached Winter and Summer Sperm Oils
Do. do. do. Elephant do.
Do. do. do. Solar Sperm do.
Double Clarified Lard Oil
Best Gallipoli Olive do
Do. Sicily do
Patent Refined Russian Rape Seed Oil
Fine Nut and Palm Oils
Raw and Boiled Linseed Oils
Oils for Fuller's and Currier's use
Pale and Straw Colored Seal Oils
Cod, Whale, and Porpoise Oils

They would call particular attention to their

which they warrant suitable for Railroads, Steam Boats, and every other class of valuable Machinery. This OIL is the most economical for machinery, it requiring less of it than of any other Oil to lubricate a given amount of friction. It runs machinery perfectly cool, creates no gum, even works off the old gum accumulated upon the journals and slides, &c., by the previous use of bad Oil, and it does not congeal in the coldest weather.

It is, in every respect, a superior article, and the manufacturers having in view the incalculable injury done to machinery in Canada by the use of base Oils are prepared to guarantee its results.

Montreal, April 26, 1853. 1y 50

OIL MANUFACTORY.

Also, on hand and for Sale :—

The extensive demand for, and general use of, their No. 1 Lard Oil, is the best testimonial of its superiority, as a lubricating agent, in Railroad and every other description of Machinery; and, for illuminating, is fully equal to Sperm.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

Bogle's Hair Dye.

☞ BOGLE'S HEBRAIONA is now universally acknowledged to be the very best article for Beautifying the hair, brightening the natural complexion, and preserving it from the effects of the sun. Equally potent is it in counteracting pimples, tan, freckles, &c. Do you want a fine, thick, soft, and curly head of hair? Both of these inimitable articles can be had of WM. LYMAN & Co., Wholesale Agents for C. E. and sold by A. SAVAGE & Co., ALEX. URQUHART and S. J. LYMAN & Co., Druggists, Montreal. In Quebec, of JOSEPH BOWLES, and Dr. MUSSON, Druggists. mwf C—139

Bogle's Hyperion Fluid.

☞ CALIFORNIA PRODUCTIONS.—Next to gold, perhaps the most wonderful and really most useful, is the "Soap Plant," which the natives use for washing themselves. It has lately undergone a series of scientific investigations, and the result is, that the saponaceous elements of this plant form the basis of "Bogle's Amole Shaving Compound," and thus the use of alkali, so destructive to the skin, is avoided. Its vegetable and detergent properties have the purest and most nourishing effect on the skin. It soothes and allays irritation, has a fine, thick, creamy lather, which does not dry on the face, and makes it altogether a luxury to be shaved with this soap—and, as it is warranted the best article in use for shaving, the money will be refunded in all cases where it does not give entire satisfaction. To be had of the inventor, William Bogle, 277 Washington Street, and agents throughout the United States and Canadas.

To be had of WM. LYMAN & Co., Wholesale Agents for C. E.; and sold by A. SAVAGE & Co., ALEX. URQUHART, and S. J. LYMAN & Co., Druggists, Montreal. In Quebec, of JOSEPH BOWLES and Dr. MUSSON, Druggists. rts C—139

☞ PLANTAGENET SPRING WATER.—A fresh analysis of this celebrated mineral water has just been made by James R Chilton, Esq., an eminent chemist of New York, which confirms all that has been advanced of its extraordinary value as a remedial agent. Dr. McPhail, also, an eminent practitioner of Brooklyn, has just published his opinion of the immense value of Plantagenet Water in a variety of chronic ailments, and we are not surprised to find that, generally throughout the States, as in Canada, it is preferred, as a mild aperient and safe but effectual corrector of the system, when impaired, to every other remedy. The immense reputation enjoyed by the water having led other parties to assume its name, the public are requested to observe that there is no other depot for the sale of Plantagenet Water, except No. 4, Place d'Armes.

THE BALTIMORE CLIPPER BARK
INCA,
900 TONS BURTHEN,

HAVING made two successive voyages from China, each in the very short period of 101 days, has thoroughly established her reputation for fast sailing, and will be dispatched for MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA, on the 25th of August. The ships of the Pioneer Line have made remarkably quick and healthy voyages; losing only one passenger among 950 that sailed in the first five ships, whereas it appears, from the report of the Emigration Commissioners, that the mortality on board English ships to Australia has equalled 4·90 per cent. This very gratifying result shows that no care and expense have been spared in selecting, ventilating and provisioning the ships of the Pioneer Line.

The "INCA" will only carry a limited number of passengers, at as moderate rates as are consistent with justice to passengers and owners.

For Freight or Passage, apply on board, at Pier 12 E. R., or to

"May Your Shadow never be Less."

Ernest Bertram was, as every one allowed, a very eccentric man. He had early evinced an uncommon fondness for books and study; had received every advantage for education which the rather limited means of his parents were able to afford him, and at twenty-four found himself a college graduate, with the profession of law carefully studied, admitted to the bar and snugly ensconced in a quiet little office, in the city of P——, waiting for business. But business was in no hurry to come, and Ernest was much too coy and diffident to woo her by the thousand little arts which had become almost necessary to secure her favor. He had, unfortunately perhaps for himself, a certain sense of his dignity as a man—a feeling that his own inherent worth and strength of character and talent, would by some means make themselves known and felt by others—and that the world would prize him without any special exertion on his part, for just what he was worth; and so he saw year after year glide by, while only now and then a solitary footstep was turned towards his door, and some client who had stumbled upon his office more by hit than by good luck, asked some trifling question, or offered him a case too insignificant to accept. He had inherited a little property—enough to meet the daily wants of life; so he sat in his office, and the dust laid itself thicker and thicker upon his law books, the mould crept over the top of the ink in his stand, and his pen became crusted and black. Yet Ernest was not an idle, a dreaming, nor yet a disappointed man. The professional books had been supplanted by others of a more general nature. Almost unconsciously to himself, he had become a fine belles lettres scholar, and had accumulated treasure after treasure of purest gold. Now, if Ernest had been all mind and matter, without a heart, life would have passed him, like a long cloudless summer day. His nearest friends were dead, and all the world seemed to have forgotten him, and to have been forgotten by him. The great heart of human life beat on, but he heard not its pulsations. The tide of time rolled him over nearer and still nearer that shoreless sea; but he picked up and garnered with care the beautiful shells that floated upon its bosom, nor heeded that it bore him on—on!

One summer afternoon, towards twilight, it was a quiet dreamy hour—but as I have said, Ernest was no dreamer—he sat as usual alone in his office, with his book spread open before him. He was fond of oriental lore, and now an old Arabic tale, which he read easily in the original, occupied his attention. There was something in the wild and imaginative incidents and in the rich and gorgeous [...] page, and lighted up the dark and dusty corners of the room with a farewell smile, which was quite lost upon him. But as the story was finished, and he looked up from his book his eye was caught by the long shadows which lay upon his floor, and as he sat looking at them, the beauty and force of the eastern benediction, "May your shadow never be less," flashed upon his mind, and almost without being conscious what turn his thoughts were taking, he found himself wondering how a person would look without a shadow. The longer he thought of it, the more singular such a state became to him, and at last becoming uneasy at the fancies which it called up, he rose from his chair and placed himself so that the sun should throw his shadow broad and full. What was his utter astonishment and affright to see as he turned himself round and round no answering image.

He took his hat and went into the street, with a hope that his window was too small, and the sun too low, to create the shadow. The tall brick houses lay almost as dark and long upon the ground as they towered up toward the sky, and left no space under their ample shades for his puny shadow. He hurried to the Park; it was filled with pedestrians, but he saw them not; he was only intent in looking for his shadow. The drooping and graceful elm trees all lay clearly and beautifully pencilled out upon the broad walks; every little leaf and twig was there, dancing and bowing in infinite glee to the reality above; but Ernest's shadow was nowhere to be seen. A nameless and undefinable terror crept over him; he felt all at once strangely conscious of the presence of the human race. The book-world, in which he had lived, and moved, and had his being, faded away like the phantom of a dream, and life's great earnest reality suddenly broke upon him.

He looked about, with a quick, suspicious glance, sure that the remarkable phenomena which attended him had made him an object of notice to the people around him; and what was his joy and surprise when he found others beside himself shadowless! He sat down upon a bench, fixing himself so that he could by no means have cast a shade, and began to watch the crowd as they passed him. It was a strange sight; few, very few threw more than a dim and indistinct outline as they went. Many had no duplicate—and not until hundreds had passed, did Ernest see a full and perfect image reflected. This was, strange to say, from the figure of a frail and delicate girl, which with quick and bounding steps right on through the crowd, taking no notice of them, unless a free gaze under her bonnet called the color with a deeper shade into her cheeks. Ernest's eye was riveted upon her; and, scarcely conscious of what he did, he rose to follow her; and so the maiden tripped along, equally unthinking of the shadow of the stranger which were behind her.

She turned into a narrow court, stopped before an humble looking door—and as she raised the latch and looked in, Ernest heard her say: "Oh mother, I have earned you two whole dollars!" Then the figure and the shadow disappeared together.

The sun had now set, and Ernest sought his office—but not as heretofore, to quietly resume his book. Unsubstantial a thing as a shadow is, it had become to him a presence almost tangible. From nothingness it had suddenly assumed an existence scarcely less necessary and vital than human life itself. And the consciousness that he and many others were deprived of it stirred and agitated him, in proportion as it became to his imagination more spiritual and undefined. He tried in vain to consider it a fancy conjured up by long and uninterrupted seclusion with his books. He knew that it was not; and after a sleepless night, he sought with feverish impatience, in the first rays of the morning sun, to dissipate, if possible, the delusion. He was abroad at a much earlier hour than usual, and his quick walk, and repeated glances, first over one shoulder and then over the other, soon attracted the attention of those he met—and the more timid crossed the street, to avoid the man whom they had little doubt was insane.

Again the morning shadows, but not so dark and long as those of evening, lay around his path; and again, with straining eyes and beating heart, he was obliged to confess that his steps were unattended. He walked to the court, and to the house where the young girl had disappeared the night before, and loitered around the door; but in vain—he was too late; even now the industrious child had sought her employment, that she might the sooner bring home another two dollars to the sick mother.

Up and down, down and up the street wandered Ernest, all interest and purpose seemed to have left him. He wished but for one thing, and that was to solve this mystery of shadows. The day wore itself away, weary in body and more weary still in mind, bewildered and depressed, he sought his room. There, every familiar object assumed a strange and almost ghastly hue, and no one would have been more willing than Ernest himself to believe he was a victim of an hallucination, worse even than madness itself.

Days and weeks and even months passed. Ernest altered so much that his few acquaintances scarcely recognised him. They had always considered him, wrapt in his books as he was, and so unmindful of ambition or gain, an eccentric man; and now, they shrugged their shoulders and said with cold pity: "Poor Ernest! He was always odd; no wonder it increases upon him.—What a shame! He might have made something—he is not without talent."

This, Ernest did not hear; he only saw that the persons were without shadows, like himself.

Wandering in this state of mind one afternoon, he saw before him a little child. She was trying to carry a basket of chips and blocks of wood much too heavy for her little strength, and at every renewed effort and failure the child cried piteously. Ernest, attracted by her sobs, stopped beside her. "Why did you attempt to lift that heavy load?" he asked.

"Because I must," sobbed the child.

"But why must you?"

"Because mammy will beat me if I dont; and she will beat me now, 'cause I am so long; but I can't help it! I can't! I can't!" almost screamed the child, writhing with her body as if she already felt the blows.

"Well, stop crying," said Ernest kindly, lifting up the basket, "and I will help you. There, wipe your eyes, and show me the way."

The child looked up with more of surprise than even joy in her swollen face, but without saying a word ran on before him.

The distance was short, and Ernest quickly put down the basket before the door. A crowd of half naked, dirty children swarmed out of it as he stopped, and he heard the angry tones of a woman's voice, evidently intoxicated.

"I'll beat her—I'll beat her"—she hicoughed—"until there isn't any flesh left on her bones. The lazy, idle varmint! I'll teach her to stop and play, when I am waiting for my tea."

The child turned very pale; but Ernest stepping forward said:

"It's all right, here is your wood, and your little girl has'nt been playing, she picked up more than she could lift, that's all."

"Oh that is all," said the woman, with that change of tone and manner so common to intoxication. "Thank you, sir, kindly—thank you, sir. Mary isn't very-very-stout-for-her-age-age-sir. Thank you."

Ernest turned to go. Joy of all joys! can he believe his eyes! as he turned, he caught a glimpse of something behind him. He looked eagerly back again.—It is, it surely is, the dim outline of a shadow. His own shadow—there is no one else near.

A thrill of pleasure such as he had never known before, shot to his heart, a cry of delight escaped his lip, and the children affrighted by his changed appearance, ran into the house. He walked quickly away, turning his head so constantly to gaze behind him, that many stopped and looked eagerly in the same direction, to see what singular thing was taking place. No one but Ernest, however, noticed the shadow. No one of them all had ever thought there was such a thing.

All the wealth of the world amassed in one huge pile, would have looked insignificant to him, in comparison with those dim and wavy outlines, that floated like things of life, and light, and hope, around his footsteps. Faint and flickering to be sure they were; but they were there; and delightful, as sudden, was their birth to him—unexpected, wholly unaccountable.

On his return home two carriages stood drawn up in waiting for their owners, and these appeared at the same moment coming towards them. The gentlemen were similar in personal appearance. They were large, elderly men, with silver heads and deep crows feet indented around their eyes. Both had wealth and health; but Ernest saw as he passed them, that one cast a broad shadow, while the other passed alone.

He knew them both by reputation. They were Mr. O., and Mr. P., two eminent bankers. Mr. P., a selfish miserly man; Mr. P., known the country around for the variety and extent of his acts of benevolence and kindness. It was Mr. P., whose shadow laid so clearly on the dry, hard sidewalk.

"That is strange, very strange," said Ernest aloud, as he was passing them; "perfectly unaccountable."

"What did you remark, sir?" asked Mr. P., as he heard him speak.

"I was only saying," said Ernest, hurriedly, "that it was very strange about your shadows."

"Poor fellow! He is insane!" said Mr. P., with a pitying look. And they both passed on.

For several weeks the dim outline, like a good angel, hovered around the steps of Ernest, but at last it began to grow fainter and more indistinct; and almost crazed with fear that it would wholly disappear, he determined, should that ever take place, to shut himself up in his room and let nothing tempt him out among men. There, at least, he would have the knowledge of the fact all to himself; there he would die, and he cared not how soon; and from thence he would be carried out and buried, with his memory.

As, filled with these thoughts, he was walking moodily away, a wretched hand was stretched out before him, and a feeble voice asked, "Charity."

"Yes; here, take this," he said, as his eye fell on a poor deformed man, each distorted limb of whom was shadowed on the wall of the opposite house.

"You are poor;—but you are very rich. I envy you. Here is your money. I wish I could buy your shadow of you. I would pay you any price."

"Sir!" said the man, withdrawing his hand without touching the money, "perhaps you are in trouble yourself. If so, I am sure I would not beg."

"No, no, good man," said Ernest;—for he felt, without knowing why, that the man was good—"I have all, and more than I need; all but a shadow."

"Sir," said the man again, inquiringly, "a shadow? Have you lost anything?"

"Not quite, but it is going," said Ernest, glancing over his shoulder. "It is going; and then I don't know what will become of me."

"This is a strange world, sir," said the man [...] ready has another to fill its place. God is merciful. When we don't want to do for ourselves, we may help others who need it more. There is a great deal in forgetting oneself, sir!"

"That would be nothing very difficult," said Ernest with a forced laugh, "when there is so little of self to forget. A man without a shadow, is only half a man Don't you know it!"

"I don't know much about shadows," said the man shaking his head piteously, "I have found substance more than I could manage in this life. I have'nt troubled myself about things I couldn't help. Perhaps if you thought a little less of shadows and more of substance, it might make you happier, sir."

"Substance, what is it?" asked Ernest thoughtfully.

"Why, according to my way of understanding," answered the man, "it's doing life's duties of faithfully and happily, living for others, not for ourselves alone, never forgetting the heart within, the God above."

"You speak like a philosopher," said Ernest, "and yet you are only a poor cripple with a shadow!"

"I have been something else, sir, but am content, for God has made me what I am. And for the shadow, every one has that."

"No, not every one," said Ernest, moving quickly away, and shrinking as much as possible into himself that the want in him might not be quite so perceptible, but as he turned to go, he slipt a large piece of money into the beggar's hand; and when at last he dared look, by his side, moved his shadow now, no longer only a wavy outline, but a distinct form. He stopped—that stopped—he moved slowly forward—that moved slowly forward—he retreated a step—that retreated—and it was not until he became conscious that he was attracting the notice of all in the street, that he recovered from his astonishment, sufficiently to proceed. He could hardly persuade himself to remove his eyes from his companion—he had not a friend living nor dead, whom he would have been glad to see in its place. The turbulent and excited state of his nervous system began to calm down; he walked more, and looked more as he used to when his office was his world; and when he heard his name called in quick and impatient tones, he stopped as quickly as in days of yore, before the great waters had rolled over his soul.

"I say Ernest Bertram," said a man with a thin and wasted figure, and, as Ernest quickly saw no shadow. "I say—Ernest. Can you help me?"

"What can I do for you, John?" asked Ernest, with some difficulty recognizing him as an old college class-mate, and at the same time extending his hand.

"Save me from myself," answered the other in a hollow tone. "Don't you see I am LOST!"

"I see you have no shadow," replied Ernest. "When did you lose it?"

"No shadow," said John in a sneering tone, "if that was all I had lost I shouldn't care much for it. But I have lost all—home—friends—character—all but this miserable life, which if you do not help me I shall take."

Ernest put his arm kindly through the arm of his early friend. He forgot self. He forgot all but the wish to save the erring. And for the first time for many years his heart turned to another human heart.

As they entered together the office door, Ernest saw his own shadow stretching itself out, as if loath to leave. He paused a moment—there it lay—he almost felt as if it was another living and moving self—his better self. But he only almost felt so; the idea was not yet quite his own.

And now commenced a new era in Ernest's life—doing for others—forgetting himself. His miserable friend was indeed lost. When Ernest inquired of him about his past life, the tale of sin and guilt seemed almost too great to be believed. And what was perhaps the saddest part of all, it had produced remorse and fear, but no true repentance. To the task of saving him Ernest addressed himself. And a hopeless, thankless task for a long time it proved. John would make solemn and sincere promises of amendment, but they would all be forgotten and broken at the first breath of temptation.

Sometimes he would seek for him at drinking houses and carry him home senseless as a brute. Again he would find him with glazed eye and throbbing pulse trying to regain the fortune that once was his, at the gaming table; and again he would gently lead him away from a crowd of idle and dissipated companions.

Yet, untiring and faithful, he was not discouraged, through all discouragements. But he soon learned, and it was the first great life lesson which he made his own, that to succeed in doing for others we must depend upon a power foreign from and greater than any we can boast.

His shadow waited upon his steps like a faithful friend. It was more; it began to be to him a solemn monitor, for he had noticed that never in one single instance had it been known to grow fainter or more indistinct, excepting when some duty to others was neglected; and that just in proportion as he sacrificed his own comfort and happiness, just in that proportion did the dark figure grow more and more distinct. He looked back with wonder and affright to those long, solitary, but to him then, pleasant days, when in his little dusky office he mingled in spirit with the dead only; and for the living world might as well have been with them an inhabitant of another sphere. Life and life's duties called him now peremptorily, and he gladly obeyed the voice; feeling as he walked on, blessing and being blessed, that in the shadow, he had found the poor old cripple's substance. And as time passed on, his theory of shadows became more and more definite. He noticed that for the virtuous young in the morning of life the shadows were all cast before them, more or less distinct in proportion as their aims and purpose were good and true. In the noon of life the image loitered slowly by the side, shrinking or expanding in exact proportion as the dreams of youth were being realized. Faint and fluctuating if the combatant was to fall in the strife of life—dark and steady if he were to come off conqueror, and more than conqueror.

In the evening the shadows stretched themselves out long—long behind the pilgrim—they reached from time into eternity—they went before the spirit, and carried inscribed upon them the record of every good that it had accomplished. Had it fed the hungry or clothed the naked; had it given a cup of cold water, there an omniscient eye might see the act inscribed—and sad indeed for any to stand within the gates of that city of which God is the sun, and find that the light of his presence reflected no shadow.

Ernest could not think upon these things without deep emotion, and from the quiet office of the world-neglected lawyer went forth a voice pleading for God and right with trumpet tones. "May your shadow never be less," was his most earnest benediction to those he loved; and it was only when this was uttered full of fervour and meaning that his friends now considered him an eccentric man.

Canadian Emigration.

(From the Dublin Express.)

The following extract from a private letter written by Mr. C. P. Roney, to a friend in Dublin, exhibits some singular facts in connection with emigration from this country:—

"Instead of my being astonished at the immense amount of emigration that has taken place from Ireland during the last few years, my surprise is that the whole of its peasant population has not already come, either to this country, or to the United States. During the three weeks that have elapsed since I landed, I have travelled 1,850 miles by rail and steamboat; and although I am told that I have not as yet visited by any means the best portion of Canada (Upper or Western Canada,) I have seen quite enough to convince me of its inexhaustible resources, and the glorious field that it is for the employment of the Irish people. Far be it from me to wish to persuade any man to leave his native country, but if they do make up their minds to quit it, from what I gather, I should say that the Canadas are preferable to the United States, especially to the poor emigrant who lands with scarcely a shilling in his pocket. The moment the vessel arrives at Quebec, (this is a port to which all emigrants for Canada should come,) the men are immediately engaged, either for the Railroads, or for the Government Provincial works now in course of construction. The wages for laborers are about four shillings, British, per day; they can be most comfortably boarded (with meat twice a day,) for about one shilling, and allowing one shilling a day more for other expenses, it leaves a clear two shillings a day of savings. Then again, on the Ottawa River, one of the great sources of the inexhaustible supply of Canadian timber, "Lumbermen" all earn at least one dollar a day; and, as they advance in skill and experience, their wages rise to a dollar and a half, and two dollars. That there should be no fear of the supply of timber becoming exhausted, may be proved by the fact that recent and very accurate surveys made along this magnificent river and its innumerable tributaries, by order of the Government, have shown, that if double the amount of timber now taken from the district be continued for 500 years, it would not exhaust it. In the immediate vicinity of this river and its tributaries, throughout their entire extent, is magnificent agricultural land. The farmers, four-fifths of whom are Irishmen, or the sons of Irishmen, who came to this country as labourers, and have purchased farms with their savings, sell all their produce without ever going to market, as the master lumberers purchase it to feed the men in their employ. I am assured that Irishmen make better lumberers than the natives of any other country; for it appears that the good and abundant food that they begin eating from the moment they arrive here, expands, not only the muscular frame, but also the intellect; and any one who has not seen the contrast between the downcast, ill-fed and ragged Irish peasant in his own country, and the same man, after even a few months' residence in these provinces could believe in its completeness. A few days ago, the driver of a stage coach, between two portions of the Ottawa unnavigable for steam vessels, but which the government is now rendering navigable, told me that he came to this district in 1841, with one dollar in his pocket, and I learned from a gentleman with whom he had originally worked as a common laborer when he first came out, that he is now worth £1000, and has a capital farm; on my expressing surprise that a man like him could have an average savings of £80 a year since he arrived, I was assured that so far from this being a solitary case, there was hardly an Irishman who is industrious and temperate (the latter is just as necessary as the former quality) that is not more or less in the same position. For myself, I can only say that I have not seen an Irishman, since my arrival, who has not an air of comfort, cleanliness and independence about him. But there is one attribute he never loses—the use of his vernacular; for the brogue of each county of Ireland is heard on every side, in all its native purity; it is indeed the true undying one. The following is a circumstance connected with emigration to the Canadas, which ought to have an important influence. Whenever a district is about to be "settled," arrangements are immediately made for having [...] the other buildings of the settlement, whilst each religious denomination supports (and respectably supports) the clergyman of his persuasion. In conclusion, I express to you my conviction, that the Canadas are the true California for the peasant population of Ireland, and that if these emigrate here they have unceasing sources of steady wealth and prosperity. If half a million persons came here each year, for the next twenty years, employment on the terms I have mentioned to you would be found for every man, woman and child amongst them.

The Cuban Question.—We observe, by the New York papers, that on Friday night last, Mr. Soulé, the new Minister to Spain, was serenaded by a band of "Lone Star" patriots. The procession, it is said, contained some 5000 persons, Cubans and Americans. On Mr. Soulé's appearance, he was addressed by Senor Tolon, a Cuban refugee; and, in his reply, Mr. Soulé is reported, among other things, to have said:—

With unmingled pride, fellow-citizens, I receive these truly cheering demonstrations through which you so generously seek to glorify the parting hour of one almost a stranger to you; if I could but do away with the stern and unbending consciousness of the little I have done to deserve them.

These are honors which should not be bestowed but upon such as have done good and great things for their country. And yet I cannot but tender you my most grateful acknowledgments for what share you allow me in them. What of my past may command itself to your kind judgment, sprung from my heart. What doctrines I have advocated while in public life, were the doctrines upon which stood the most profound and intimate convictions of my heart. (Cheers.)

I could not believe that we were eternally to be encircled within the narrow limits described as the space assigned to us at the dawn of the Republic. I could not be with those who would have entombed the hopes of the future, in their reverence for the past. (Cheers.) And while ready and willing to fulfil by the lessons and experience of the past, I was equally unwilling that this great nation should be fettered down and reduced to the proportions of one of those empires which have left but a fleeting memory in the history of the past. (Cheers.)

What a noble career is before us! At this moment, when the greatest kingdoms of the earth have their present interests and future welfare suspended in the balance of peace or war, it may be that a small whisper from this country will decide their fate more potently than the decrees of emperors, or the fiats of kings and princes.—(Loud cheers.) This is the mission of America; this mission I shall support, as far as I am able, in a manner worthy of the people by whom I am sent, and I hope worthy of the man they have chosen. (Cheers.)

"Pierce—Cuba—Soulé."

Another contained the following:

"Free thought and free speech for the Cubans."

"'Tis no flight of Fancy,
For Cuba must be,
And 'tis written by Fate—
The Isle great and free."

Another read thus:

"Young America and Young Cuba."

"O pray, ye doomed Tyrants!
Your fate's not afar;
A dread Order now watches you—
It is 'the Lone Star.'"

Still another:

"Cuba must and shall be Free."

"The Antilles' flower—
The true Key of the Gulf—
Must be plucked from the crown
Of the old Spanish Wolf."

The last transparency showed the effigy of a tomb-stone, inscribed:

"Lopez—Crittenden—Aguerc—Armentero,
They and their companions are not forgotten."

The intelligence of this most extraordinary proceeding will, probably, reach Madrid before Mr. Soulé; and, we cannot but think, will, with equal probability, prove the, not unreasonable, ground upon which the Spanish Government will decline to receive or recognize him as ambassador from Washington. If Mr. Soulé speaks the sentiments of President Pierce and his Cabinet, the question of Cuban independence, and admission into the Union, approaches a crisis; the result of which may materially affect the stability of the existing confederation of free and slave states. The admission of Cuba would give the latter an overwhelming majority in the national councils; under which, we are inclined to believe, no mere conviction of commercial or political expediency would induce the former tamely to submit.

The Arctic Expedition.—Information of a very interesting character has been received by the British Government, which, if correct—and it has every appearance of authenticity—may turn out to be of great importance as bearing on the facts of the missing Arctic expedition under Sir John Franklin. It is to the effect that intelligence has been conveyed to the Russian Government at St. Petersburg, that several of what are called glass balls have been found by the natives at the mouth of the river Ohio, which falls into the Arctic Basin at the seventieth parallel of longitude. The Russian authorities transmitted this information without delay to its Foreign Office; and a request has been despatched that some of the so-called "glass-balls"—more probably, bottles—may be, if possible, secured and transmitted to England. The locality where these balls or bottles are said to have been found is precisely that to which they would probably have drifted had they been thrown overboard, or otherwise detached, from Franklin's ships in case the latter had attained a high northern latitude; for the current of the Arctic Ocean set along the Siberian towards the European coast, as is evidenced by the great quantity of drift-wood, &c., found on the shore. It would of course, be premature to arrive at the conclusion that these glass balls are relics of Franklin's expedition; but the information, crude though it be, is of too important and curious a nature to be summarily dismissed as unworthy of attention.

To the Editor of the Quebec Gazette.

Mr. Editor,—As many of my friends request me to give at least some denial to the calumnies with which I have been assailed,—I beg to state, in as few words as will convey my meaning, that I shall prove by affidavit at the proper time, that the duty of striking the several Juries from the general lists, a simple, official, routine duty, had been allotted years ago to the Deputy-Sheriff, and has very generally been performed by him, though sometimes, but very seldom by myself—that on the occasion in question I was not called upon to advise in any manner or way with the Deputy-Sheriff, by whom, as he stated, the panels were made up—that the Juries, Grand and Petit, were so made up (pricked) from the general lists on the 1st and 2nd June last.—That the subpœnas were then made out by the clerk, Mr. Gall—laid before me and signed by me in his presence at different periods between the 4th and 6th—that all the subpœnas were in the Bailiffs hands before 4 o'clock on the 6th of June—and that the Jurors, Grand and Petit, were the identical Jurors pricked on the 1st and 2nd of June.

It is true, that a number of English Jurors, I believe about eighteen, were summoned under subpœna dated the 30th of June, to supply a corresponding number not found by the Bailiffs—but these will be ascertained to be the first eighteen English names at the head of the new lists.

It was I who, in answer to an enquiry from the Deputy-Sheriff, advised the commencement of the new lists, and I do not shrink from the consequences, I believed conscientiously that I was right, since the act of the last session, lowering the qualification of Petit Jurors, went into operation from the moment of its passing—the court, however, I am bound to say, has declared otherwise.

I would willingly close here but that, in addition to all that has been said in certain quarters, I heard only yesterday with unfeigned surprise, that I am accused of having offered a bribe of £10 through Mr. Von Exter to one of the advocates of the persons accused of riot. This is simply a falsehood, but calculated [...] it right at once to deny it by an affidavit which I herewith send you, and will feel obliged by your giving it insertion, that £10 was given or taken I believe to be a fact, but the knowledge of that fact has only reached me as it has others by general rumour, and the expression from the recipient of his regret at having taken it.

Your obedient servant,
Wm. S. Sewell.

7th August, 1853.

Province of Canada, District of Quebec. } WILLIAM S. SEWELL, Sheriff of Quebec, being duly sworn both depose and say:

That he never by himself or his Deputy John Von Exter, Esq., or by any other person or persons whatever, offered a sum of ten pounds, or any other sum or any consideration whatever, to any person or persons whomsoever, as an inducement to conceal the error or errors which have been made in the summoning of the Juries, Grand and Petit, or of either of them to serve in the Court of Queen's Bench for the term of July last.

And this deponent further swears, that he knew nothing of the intention of any person or persons to offer the same or any other consideration, in order to induce any arrangement or any concealment of the errors in question.

Wm. S. Sewell.

Sworn before me, this eighth day of August, 1853,
Phi. Pannet, J.R.R.

With reference to the above letter, our contemporary says:—

The Sheriff refers to £10 being given and received, in order to silence remarks upon the subject of the jury lists. We too have heard something about the said £10, and we think that truth and justice require that the public be further informed in the matter. Will those acquainted with the facts of the case supply them?

ADDRESS.

The following Address was presented to the Rev. Gerald de Courcy O'Grady, after Divine Service, on Sunday morning, the 24th ult.:—

To the Rev. Gerald de Courcy O'Grady, Incumbent of St. Paul's Church, Hemmingford.

Rev. and Dear Sir:

We, the undersigned, members of the congregation of this Church, and of others in the vicinity, approach you, at this time, with mingled feelings of strong affection and heartfelt sorrow, to assure you of our deep sympathy for the irreparable loss you have sustained of your honoured and beloved Father, by a late truly distressing accident.

We would not presume, Rev. and dear Sir, to direct you, as to where you can receive comfort and consolation in this time of severe trial; but, we sincerely hope, as we do most heartily pray, that He to whom you so zealously endeavor to lead us, will grant you the aid of his Holy Spirit, to feel resigned to the affliction with which He has been pleased to visit you.

Oh! may this visitation be sanctified to you and the other dear relatives left behind, even to us also, which, in verifying the solemn words:—"In the midst of life we are in death," may "Teach us all so to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

We commend you now to the favour and protection of your Heavenly Father, in the hope that you may be long spared to labour in this corner of His Vineyard, and with our earnest prayer that "The peace of God, which passeth all understanding," keep your heart and mind in the knowledge and love of God, and of His Son Jesus Christ our Lord, and that the blessing of God Almighty, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, may rest and abide upon you, unto your life's end.

With sentiments of much esteem, we request you to believe us to be your affectionate friends in Christ.

(Signed,) William Rutherford, John Quest, Church Wardens.

And upward of 70 others.

Hemmingford, C.E., 20th July, 1853.

REPLY.

My Dear Christian Friends:

It is with feelings of the deepest emotion that I return you my heartfelt thanks for your address on my late severe affliction.

To God alone must the Christian look for strength to bear the chastisements, which it seems good for Him, in His infinite wisdom, to lay upon us; but the sympathy of Christian friends is ever grateful to the heart: and St. Paul has told us, while we "rejoice with them that do rejoice," not to omit to "weep with them that weep." Your address is doubly valuable to me, inasmuch as while it tells me, that while you grieve for me under my present affliction, it also assures me of what I have hitherto had many a proof—that I possess your affections.

For your kind allusion to my afflicted relatives, I thank you in their name. May God sanctify this, and every other of His dispensations to our good; and, while He supplies us with strength to bear with patience and resignation, draw us nearer to Himself, and unite us closer to our brethren in the bonds of Christian Charity and Love.

Wherever I may be, whether here or elsewhere, nothing can efface from my recollection the kindness and the indulgence I have invariably received from you whilst I have been with you. I earnestly pray that my feeble and imperfect efforts in the service of my Heavenly Master amongst you, may receive a blessing, and be to you a "Saviour of life unto life," that you may grow in grace, and in every good work.

I thank you again for your sympathy so kindly expressed to me, and pray, that wherever our portion in this life may be cast,—whatever our respective lots may be,—in the world to come we may be partakers together of everlasting life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Ever, my dear Brethren,
Your faithful servant in Christ
(Signed,) Gerald de Courcy O'Grady,
Incumbent of Hemmingford and Roxham.

Hemmingford, July 25, 1853.
To Messrs. Rutherford and Quest, Churchwardens, and others.

St. Lambert.—The editor of Le Pays in a recent number of that Journal gives an account of a visit made by him to this flourishing suburb of our City, and awards just praise to the enterprise of the Champlain Railroad Company, and the untiring energy of Messrs. Brewster and Merry, the President and Secretary, to whose exertions are due the sudden growth of this village with its great workshops, and pretty cottages, &c., &c. He adds also a fact which does great credit to those who have had charge of the affairs of the Company.

"We were going to forget to mention the most pleasing fact connected with the administration of the company. In the midst of the cottages which they have constructed for their workmen, a school house is about to be erected where will be distributed the bread of intelligence to the children, while the company gives material bread to their families. This is a fact which of itself, would supply the place of all the eulogies which Mr. Brewster deserves for all that we have admired and related."

Thomas Goocher and Wm. Stacey were convicted at York, England, Assizes of throwing stones at a train on the Midland Railway, and sentenced to four months' hard labor.

A letter from Berlin states that the police of that city are about to issue an order prohibiting the employment of female waiters in coffee houses and public houses.

French Wines, Brandies, Liqueurs and Syrups.—We would direct the attention of connoisseurs to the sale this afternoon, by Mr. Jones, Great St. James Street.—See Adv.

Madame Anna Bishop's Concerts.—The second of these delightful musico-dramatic entertainments, as will be seen by our advertising columns, will take place in the St. Lawrence Hall this evening. Want of time and not of inclination prevented us recording, in our yesterday's issue, the triumphant success of the Prima Donna and her musical Director, Mr. Bochsa, on the previous evening. The St. Lawrence Hall—which, as we have frequently had occasion to observe, is free from echoes and extremely well adapted for musical purposes—was crowded with a fashionable and appreciative audience, who, from first to last, as gem followed gem, throughout the evening, manifested their delight by continuous rounds of applause and repeated encores, to which Madame Bishop, with her accustomed good humour, obligingly responded. Time has, indeed, been gentle and tender towards the fair Anna, since we last had the pleasure of listening to her bird-like warblings—he has flown with 'doves' wings," and left not a trace behind—in form, in feature, and in voice, she is unchanged, and fully maintains her position as one of the most highly gifted and accomplished vocalists of the age. It matters not what may be the character of the music—whether the simple and pensive melody, the brilliant cavatina, or the lively chansonnette—, in each and in all she equally excels, as no one will dispute who has ever heard her sing, as she did on Tuesday night, "Sweet Home," "John Anderson my Jo," the "Casta Diva," or that merry little Mexican gem, "La Pasadita." But it is vain to attempt to describe in words the "concord of sweet sounds"—

O, it came o'er my ear like the sweet south,
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing and giving odour!—

We recommend our readers, then, to make a point of visiting the St. Lawrence Hall this evening, when, we feel assured, if they have any music in their souls, they will thank us for the advice, and acknowledge that we, in no respect, overestimate Madame Bishop's splendid natural gifts, or her high artistic accomplishments. Of Mr. Bochsa's performance [...] they always are, superb, and elicited most rapturous applause from the audience on Tuesday night—he has literally the art of making the harp speak, and entrances all ears like another Orpheus. We must add that, however transcendant as a harpist, as a pianist, and more especially as an accompanist, Mr. Bochsa has rarely been equalled and can scarcely be surpassed—his fingering is rapid, distinct and forcible, while he makes the tones of his instrument perfectly harmonize with the voice of the singer. We shall merely add that, although a spacious apartment, the St. Lawrence Hall will but accommodate a certain number, and that an early application for seats will be prudent.

Theatre Royal.—Last night, the performances being for the benefit of that universal favorite, Davidge, the house was a "bona fide bumper." Need we say that Davidge's Billy Lackaday was a most moving impersonation, and that his "Sure mortal man was born to sorrow," would have melted the most flinty heart. The other characters in Sweethearts and Wives, one of the most laughable comedies ever penned, were ably sustained by Mr. Buckland's talented company, who, alas the while! are, one and all, about to leave us for the opening of the New York Theatres, which we observe is advertised, in the late N. Y. papers, for Monday next. Saturday, then, will be "positively" their last performance for the season.

The performances to-night are for the benefit of that very clever actor, Mr. Conway, when he will, by special desire, act the part of Macbeth—and, we doubt not, as his merits as an actor, and his estimable character as a man, eminently entitle him to expect, to a crowded house. The part of Macduff will be sustained by Mr. Wheatleigh of the London Theatres—his first appearance in Montreal. The other entertainments of the evening are most attractive.

Inspection of the Fire Brigade.—This body was inspected on the Champ de Mars yesterday afternoon, by Messrs. Thompson, Trudeau, McCambridge, Whitlaw and Montreuil, members of the City Corporation, and Captains Bertram and Fletcher, Chiefs of the Fire Brigade. The muster was exceedingly creditable; the different Engines, Hook and Ladder implements, Hose, &c., was found in excellent condition.

The men were dressed in uniform, and after going through a number of movements to the sound of the bugle, were marched off to their respective Engine stations.

Mr. Fred. Perry had two new Fire Engines on the ground, which are intended for towns in Upper Canada.

The Cloister Life of the Emperor Charles the Fifth, by William Stirling; from the second London Edition. Boston: Crosby, Nichols & Co. For sale in Montreal by B. Dawson, Place d'Armes. This is an historical fragment of great interest, written very agreeably, and drawn from well authenticated sources. Some mistakes, popularly connected with the retirement of the great Emperor to Yuste, are here corrected.—Living under the shadow and patronage of St. Jerome, his apartments differed widely in style from the cell of the devoted Monk of Bethlehem. In truth, they were furnished like a palace.—Charles, in the Cloister, was no ascetic, but ate and drank like a gourmand, notwithstanding the remonstrances of Mayordomo and Physician. He was thoroughly and sincerely devoted to the services of his religion. From his bed he could witness the elevation of the host through a window arranged for the purpose. The affairs of State were not neglected in the Cloister, and from the incidental notices in this volume, we get an instructive glimpse into the condition of Europe at the time. The eighth Chapter, on "The Inquisition, its Allies, and its Victims," will have a special interest for a large class of readers.

The Mayflower Ashore.—We were informed on Saturday by report from Kingston, that the steamer Mayflower, had gone ashore on Friday morning in a thick fog at 9 mile point, 9 miles from Kingston. She now lies on the rock in three feet of water. She had on full steam at the time, and the rock being shelving, she ran fully out of the water before stopping, her draft being about six feet. We have not heard that any person was injured, although the shock must have been very violent. Several steam-boats have been at work trying to draw her off. She will have to be raised by screws. Our steamboats have certainly been extraordinarily unfortunate this year.—Toronto Patriot, Monday.

UNITED STATES.

United States Embassy to China.—It is now understood that as there is no proper or available naval steamer for his accommodation, the Hon. J. Walker will, if he goes at all, go to Liverpool by the Collins or Cunard line, and thence by the Mediterranean and the British overland and steamship transportation line to the East Indies and the Celestial Empire.

It is, we should say, desirable that Mr. Walker should hasten to the scene of his future diplomatic labors as soon as possible. A very interesting revolution is under way in the Celestial Empire, the most curious and interesting to "outside barbarians" of any in the history of all Asia for the last thousand years. The revolutionists, under the "Prince of Peace," are Christians, whose religion has crept into the very heart of China, in spite of Chinese walls and the rigid exclusion of all outsiders, and who are propagating the faith by fire and sword, according to the most approved Oriental fashion. If they are successful in elevating to the throne of the empire their chosen candidate, we may calculate upon seeing the Christian religion introduced as the law of the land, and upon a large opening for all the blessings of civil and religious liberty and free trade. If the revolutionists, on the other hand, are finally defeated, the "powers that be" will doubtless make some provision against future difficulties of the same kind, by treaties of alliance, offensive, defensive, and protective, with foreign powers. In any such engagements we may safely count upon England's prompt attention to her commercial interests. Hence the necessity of the earliest possible departure of Mr. Walker for China.

Mr. Marshall may possibly have been attempting to do something; but from all accounts he has not succeeded in doing anything; and we suspect that his instructions were rather of the "neutrality" sort than of the positive character of those of Mr. Walker, which, we venture to say, will not only authorize him to make new and important treaties with China, but will require of him to take the initiative, as far as practicable, in extending our commercial transactions with the great Central Flowery Kingdom.

According to De Bow's Review the amount of our trade with China at the present time, in cotton and woollen goods, is as follows:—

Unbleached muslins, 90,523 pieces; bleached muslins, 6,398 pieces, twilled cottons, 116,140 pieces; calicoes or chintzes, 3,130 pieces; cotton handkerchiefs, 250 dozen; cotton yarn, 59,567 lbs. Woollen goods—broad cloths, 615 pieces; cassimere, 968 pieces; camlets, 4,958 pieces.

While, on the other hand, the trade of England with China, in exports, is—

Unbleached muslins, 1,792,321 pieces; bleached muslins, 645,356 pieces; twilled cottons, 133,591; calicoes or chintzes, 75,174 pieces; cotton handkerchiefs, 61,480 dozen; cotton yarn, 4,314,967 lbs. Woolen goods—broad cloths, 334,643 pieces; cassimeres, 303,717 pieces; camlets, 381,673 pieces; blankets, 6,335 pieces.

We leave out the opium traffic of the East India Company, which can scarcely be considered a branch of legitimate trade with China, notwithstanding its admission was forced upon the Emperor by the late war; but the tea imports of England, from which she derives the enormous revenue of some twenty millions of dollars, is an item of the back traffic of very considerable importance.

Looking, therefore, at these statistics, and at the present highly interesting internal affairs of the Chinese empire, we have only to repeat, that it is of the first importance that Mr. Walker should be off for Pekin as soon as possible, because we may reasonably expect from his great experience in all that pertains to the world's commerce and its movements, the most advantageous commercial reciprocities before he returns. The present crisis should not be neglected, for it may offer the greatest advantages to so skilful a diplomatist as Mr. Walker. Besides, the way should be opened, for the time is at hand for the introduction of steam navigation between America and Asia. With these views we shall be happy to announce the early departure of Mr. Walker for the Central Flowery Kingdom.—N. Y. Herald, Monday.

Mr. Walker and the Mission to China—Deplorable Conclusion.—We understand, from a respectable source, that Mr. R. J. Walker justly considering it all-important to get to China before the present crisis in the affairs of that empire shall have been compromised by British diplomacy, has determined to throw up his appointment unless he can be promptly supplied with a suitable government steamer to carry him out; and as there is not a solitary available steamer in the United States navy suitable for the object in view, of a sure and speedy passage to China, the conclusion is inevitable that Mr. Walker will give it up. We fear that this will be the end of all expectations arising from his appointment. What a deplorable conclusion! A golden opportunity is offered for the most advantageous commercial reciprocities with China. The man is appointed competent to undertake them. He is ready to go. But while waiting for a vessel that can save the time, the opportunity passes away, and our minister throws up his commission in despair. Oh! Mr. Dobbin, is there no help for us?—Ib, Tuesday.

The Fishery Question.—It is reported that the overtures of Mr. Crampton for the settlement of the fishery question, cover a broad margin of reciprocities, to wit:—Free trade with the British North American colonies, American registers to colonial fishing smacks, the privileges of our California coasting trade, and a perfect footing of equality to Yankee fishermen in the colonial fishing places, and so-forth. Perhaps something to the general cause of free trade may be the result. But not knowing much of the antecedents of our Premier on this subject of the fishery negotiations, we cannot be more explicit. [...] stick to it till something is done. And as Mexico is waiting her turn, there is no time to be lost. Action!—the time has arrived for action. Delays are dangerous. The fish may spoil by delay.—Ib

The Pacific Railroad.—If there existed any doubt that the administration is fairly in for the Pacific Railroad, the following from the Washington Union (which, we suppose, is authorative in this instance) would be conclusive:—

It may turn out, and we think it probably will that the determination of the government to furnish effectually aid in the construction of a road through its own territory, wherein lie the great physical obstacles, will give to the enterprise so much certianty of success, that individual and municipal capital will be enabled to construct not only one but many diverging tracks through the States through whose territory it may pass. In that event the original strict doctrine of construction stands intact. If it becomes necessary, however, for the government to give aid to private capital to promote the enterprise in the States, then it does not follow that an appropriation from the Treasury will be essential—the aid may be derived from the public lands of those States; and, in that event, the old strict construction principle may not be disturbed. But even if it becomes essential, in order to insure the success of the enterprise, that money should be appropriated by the government to be expended in aid of the work in the States, it may be found, upon careful investigation, that the power to protect our Pacific possessions, in obedience to an express trust assumed by the government, may so far be regarded as a specified or express grant in the constitution as to authorize the appropriation.

This corresponds with our own views, and covers the whole ground from New York to San Francisco, including a new road across the Jerseys, in the teeth of Commodore Stockton and company. Let the administration stick to it.—There is no necessity for any further explanation.—N. Y. Herald.

A son of Mr. Ryan, aged fifteen years, at Elizabethtown, Ky., was shockingly mangled on the 30th ult., by four bloodhounds, which were kept for hunting fugitive slaves. The boy's left arm was nearly gnawed to pieces, and the flesh was torn from his right leg in several places so as to expose the bone.

(Reported for the Montreal Herald.)

BY MONTREAL LINE,
Office, Great St. James Street.

New York, Aug. 10.

The Boston and New York Express train was thrown off the track last night. The Engineer was instantly killed.

Yesterday afternoon a collision took place on the Cambden and Amboy Railroad, between the Philadelphia and New York trains; 5 persons were instantly killed and 30 or 40 badly injured. Both trains are said to be out of time.

The passengers have held a great indignation meeting, and denounced the company.

The Herald has information from Cuba that a demand has been made by the British government for a mixed commission, authorized to search the estates and places in Cuba for new importations of Africans. The Spanish government had complied, and the Captain General had received the official commission from Spain. The agreement also provides for the emancipation of the slaves at the end of the fifth year.

THE principal object of this COMPANY is to establish a DIRECT, EXPEDITIOUS, and ECONOMICAL CONVEYANCE for GOODS and PASSENGERS between GREAT BRITAIN and the BRITISH NORTH AMERICAN COLONIES, by FIRST-CLASS STEAMSHIPS.

The establishment of regular Steam Communication with England is considered, by the Colonies, to be of vital importance to their interests; in proof of which, the Government of Canada, and some other bodies, offered bounties for the encouragement of that object. Amongst the promoters of this Company, are the present contractors with the Canadian Government, who have already obtained grants for the service for a period of seven years, which will require the Company to run at least one Steamer per fortnight between Liverpool and Quebec and Montreal, from April to October, inclusive, and to and from Portland, in the State of Maine, monthly, from November to March, inclusive, carrying a Mail and a Post Office Agent, if required. This service will be carried out by the present Company, and a considerable extension is contemplated. Agreeably to Section 20th of the Act of Incorporation, 2500 Shares are reserved for subscription in this Province, for which application may be made, according to the annexed form, on or before the First of October next, addressed to to No. 23, Little St. James Street, Montreal, to any or either of the undersigned Directors, by whom such application will be transmitted to the Office of the Company, in England, for allotment.
