The devotees of the "Roarin' Game" are getting things in order for the coming season's activities, annual meetings of both men's and women's clubs having been called for this week. The ladies, we take it, will shortly be laying aside the pasteboards for a season to tackle the weighter problems involved in "the stanes," with the co-incident introduction of the mantle of tranquility.

Members of the United Church Choir to the number of 27, enjoyed a bounteous fowl supper in the lecture room of the Church on Monday evening, with an impromptu program. The choir were indebted to Mr. Gordon Paul for supplying the geese (trophies of a couple of shooting matches that he attended) which formed part of the menu.

The wrestling and boxing tournament staged at Shawville Theatre on Friday night last, by Fred Diotte, of Hull, was not very well patronized, due to the fact that other entertainments were staged for the same night. Mr. Diotte announced that he would arrange another tournament for Friday night, Dec. 6. The decisions went as follows:

In boxing, Kid Brown, of Prescott, won over Kid McCoy, of Ottawa, and Lefebvre, of Hull, vs. Capounsky, of Montreal, was declared a draw.

In wrestling, 2 out of 3, Diotte, of Hull, downed Battling Renaud, of Rockland, and Ken Smith, of Maryland, won over Sampson, of Valleyfield.

At St. Paul's Church

A men's meeting of the congregation of St. Paul's Church was held in the Guild room of the Church on Thursday night last, at which about twenty members were present, besides the rector, and Rev. Mr. Macklin, of the Portage du Fort Mission.

Proceedings began with the presentation by Rev. Mr. Temple of a series of lantern slides of St. John's Newfoundland, and other historic points in that ancient colony, depicting rugged coastal scenes, and the activities of fishermen, an occupation which forms one of the chief industries of the island, thus giving an interesting insight into such matters to those not conversant with them.

The next feature of the evening was a round of community songs led by Dr. Powles, with Rev. Mr. Macklin supplying the instrumental parts.

While preparations to serve tea and cake were in progress, Rev. Mr. Macklin addressed the meeting briefly on the importance of hearty co-ordination in church activities, if the mission of the latter were to be successful. Refreshments were then served, after which the balance of the evening was taken up with a discussion of financial problems.

Another such meeting is to be held on Thursday night, Dec. 4th, at which other matters will be taken up and discussed.

Wolves are reported to be increasing in the County of Renfrew.

Miss Embyl Eades, of Ottawa, was a week-end guest at her home in town.

Miss Siona Brandt, of the High School staff, visited friends at Clarence, Ont., for the week end.

Mr. Harry Baldwin and Miss Ruby Davidson, of Winchester, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Wilson, in town, on Saturday and Sunday last.

Mr. Thomas Hobin has removed from the farm on the 8th line to Mr. Thos Sheppard's house on Lang Street.

Mr. Wm J. Black and son, Martin, motored to Sturgeon Falls on Friday last to attend the funeral of the former's sister, Mrs. T. Martin, of Markstay.

Mr. Thomas Dale, who left for the North Ontario district a couple of years ago, and was engaged at carpenter work at several of the mining camps while there, was a visitor in town last week for a few days and then left to visit his brother, Edward, at Haley's Station Thomas was singularly unfortunate while working at Kirkland Lake, having accidentally injured one of his knees so seriously that he was laid off work for many months, and even yet he finds the necessity of using crutches to move around.

Serious Accident

Mr. Samuel U. McDowell, of this village, who had just recovered from the effects of an accident met with a few weeks ago while working at the installation of the new water works plant, was again the victim of a similar misfortune on Thursday last, but of a more serious nature. It seems he, accompanied by a boy, was bringing a load of hay from Mr. Thos. Hobin's to Shawville when the accident occurred on a rather steep hill on the 8th line. The load was composed of some loose hay and several baled bundles on top. The latter were not roped or fastened down, and in descending the hill these bales began moving around and resulted in Mr. McDowell being thrown off in front of the waggon on to the horses' backs, and then on to the hard ground beneath. Just what happened then he was unable to describe, but it is evident that one waggon wheel passed over his arm, and perhaps his face also, as the latter was very badly lacerated, requiring numerous stitches to close the wounds that were inflicted.

Eliminating details of what immediately followed, help arrived after a time and Mr. McDowell was taken to Hobin's house where first aid was afforded the sufferer by Dr. Powles, and later on he was conveyed to his home in town. Dr. Powles found one shoulder dislocated, which he succeeded in reducing without difficulty, and at first thought the arm was fractured also, but on more minute examination concluded that this was not so. Of the facial injuries sustained, the bone of the nose immediately below the eyes was found to be very seriously crushed.

Mr. McDowell has been the victim of numerous accidents during his lifetime, and his latest misfortune in this regard is the most serious of all.

The Ottawa Winter Fair

All farmers, breeders or lovers of fine live stock and beautiful horses should consider attending the Ottawa Winter Fair and Horse Show in the Coliseum at Ottawa next week. This fair is now the second largest live stock exhibition in Canada and every province in the Dominion will have exhibits there this year.

It will be the largest Winter Fair ever held in Eastern Canada. Every department is filled and the Coliseum will be crowded.

The competition this year in the various county competitions will be unusually keen as 20 counties are represented. At the night Horse Show there will be more horses than ever before as well as the musical ride of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the inter-city jumping competition.

At this time of year it should be possible for a great number of farmers to attend the Fair. They will see there the very finest stock produced in Canada. There will be entertainment and education for every member of the family. The railways offer reduced rates and the roads are good.

Following is the order of judging:—Horses, Percherons, Tuesday; heavy draft, agricultural and light, breeding classes, Wednesday; Clydesdales, Thursday. Cattle, Shorthorns and beef, Jerseys, Guernseys, Tuesday; Ayrshires, and grade dairy, Wednesday; Holsteins, Thursday. Sheep and Swine, Tuesday; carcasses, Thursday; inter-county live stock judging, Tuesday and Wednesday; Poultry, Tuesday; Seeds, Monday. Light horses, carriage and saddle, every evening at 7 30.

OTTAWA, ONT.

No School in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "The SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to it.

Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should specifically say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

WIDE WATERS

by CAPTAIN A.E.DINGLE

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Alden Drake, formerly a sailor, grown soft and flabby through a life of idle ease, ships aboard the clipper Orontes as "boy" under the command of Jake Stevens, whose enmity he incurs because of a mutual love for Mary Manning, daughter of the owner, who is a passenger. At Cape Town, Stevens is superseded as captain by Drake, whose lawyers have seen to the purchase of the Orontes during its cruise. In his new role of master, Drake becomes cold and dignified in the presence of Mary. Stevens and Drake constantly are at swords' points. The unrest spreads to the crew. Tony, a vicious seaman, is killed, and Jake Stevens is wounded, in a brawl.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

"Put him in the sail locker for the present. He didn't do this dirty business. I can't believe it."

"He was heard threatening Tony, sir, and Mr. Stevens knocked him—"

"Never mind. Put him in the sail locker until morning. Is Tony dead?"

"Cold, sir. Is—is—Mister Stevens—?"

"Can't say. Get about your business now. Steward! Where in blazes is that steward?"

"He's getting me hot water," Mary called out quietly from the mate's berth. Already she had opened the wounded man's shirt and bared the ugly knife stab. I'll take charge here, Alden. Just let me have Ike awhile."

"That looks nasty," the skipper muttered, scrutinizing the deep wound in Jake's hairy breast. "I can't understand it. Joe Bunting never did that, I'm sure."

In half an hour Mary fixed the last strap of adhesive tape to the pad covering the clean wound. Stevens had not opened his eyes. While she irrigated the wound with biting antiseptic, and bravely stuck stitches through the flesh with a darning needle and silk from her fancy work, he had only shown that he lived by the fitful rise and fall of his breast and a single muffled groan.

"Bring me some brandy, Ike," she said. Ike brought a whole bottle and a corkscrew, as if it were some priceless libation he was bringing to the Goddess of Miracles.

"Thanks. You can go now," she told him tersely; and Ike went out like a sheep.

Mary watched by the bedside of Jake Stevens hour after hour. She forced brandy between his lips at intervals, and was satisfied that he was slowly recovering vitality. Drake looked in, received her report, and left her. He was conscious of a feeling of jealousy; he put it from him as utterly unworthy.

While she waited for the closed eyes to open, Mary curiously examined the furnishings of the little cabin. There was a narrow, shelf-like desk, most of it littered with a Nautical Almanac, an Epitome of Navigation, and a part hundred miles of Java Head. The very first result of Jake's appearance sent a thrill of relief around the ship, even among that part of the crew who a week ago would readily have sworn away Joe Bunting's very life.

"Of course Bunting didn't knife anybody!" Stevens said testily. "I could have told you that long ago. It was that squealin' rat Herbert Oats. Better loose Bunting and clap th' darbies on the right man. Bunting? Hell!"

Stevens had not entirely recovered on that first day on deck. Mary watched him keenly. She still considered him her patient. And when the breeze grew fitful towards mid afternoon again, and the sun poured down its direct rays scaldingly, she persuaded Drake to have an awning spread over part of the poop, even though the spanker had to come in to make room for it. Later she persuaded Drake to go up with her and join Stevens for an hour.

"We'll play at mah jongg," she said.

"Play at it will be about right," he smiled indulgently. "Come, let's open the game!" He upset the box and scattered the pieces over the table. In silence they divided them around. Neither understood the game.

"Seems all about bamboos and the winds in 'em," Jake laughed shortly.

"Can't make head or stern of this game, Mary," grumbled Drake presently. Even under the awning the heat was oppressive. The three people of necessity sat close together. As they leaned upon the table, reading the rules of the game which was supposed to lighten their leisure hour, the heads of Drake and Stevens were not far distant; both were so near to Mary that the scent of her hair was in their nostrils.

"Perhaps we had better play cards," Mary suggested. She sat upright. Stevens breathed heavily, and there was a glitter in his eyes as he glanced swiftly at Drake.

"Don't let's be quitters," he laughed queerly.

Down on the maindeck the Doctor gave water to the one sheep remaining. He lingered at the pen, furtively scanning the decks. Swiftly dodging back to the galley, he took out something which he rolled up in his filthy apron. Still as furtive as a thief he stole along to the big ventilator which ran down through the midship house into the main hold. When he returned to his galley, to take his afternoon rest, one of the boys quit his work with Chips and climbed nimbly on to the house. Mary caught sight of his tousled head and mischievous face. She welcomed the break in her uneasy situation for uneasy it had grown in a few minutes. There was that infernal civility again creeping into every word uttered between the tow men beside her. She had caught one glimpse of Stevens' face, and it made her shiver for all the heat, so charged with strong passions was it. And Drake was still more disquieting by reason of his greater control over his outward emotions. But ever since that terrific melee in Cape Town, the long cut on his cheek, which Jake Stevens had dealt him, though it had healed, still left a narrow scar from eye to lip corner; and if ever Alden Drake's blood pulsed hot in anger, that ribbon-like scar stood out vividly white. It appeared to throb; to writhe. It was white now. It throbbed. It seemed to writhe. Mary sat back with a sharp scraping of her stool. She could bear the tension no longer. And upon the heavy air, shrill and excited, peale! the boyish yell from the midship house top.

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished with Every Pattern

By Annebelle Worthington

2934

The neckline is unusually soft and pretty, finished with scalloped collar of plain blending crepe, repeated in turn-back scalloped cuffs.

The skirt achieves fulness through all-around circular flared movement.

It retains its slenderness through the deep scalloped hip yoke which places the fulness well below the hips.

Style No. 2934 is designed in sizes 16, 18 years, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust. In the medium size, 3⅝ yards of 40-inch material with ½ yard of 36-inch contrasting is sufficient to copy it exactly.

It is ultra-smart in dark purple silk crepe self-trimmed, and can be worn nicely for afternoons, street or office.

Black crepe satin is effective, made in reverse treatment with collar, cuffs, hip yoke and hip bow cut of the dull side of the fabric.

Madam Curie Visits America

Presented With Another Gram of Valuable Radium

America is again host to the greatest woman scientist the world has ever known. Mme. Marie Curie, co-discoverer of radium, has come to accept a second gift of a gram of the precious substance from her friends and admirers in this country, says Science Service's Daily Science News Bulletin (Washington). We read:

"When the first gram was presented to her in 1921, she turned it over to the Curie Institute of the University of Paris. The second gram will be given to the Warsaw Cancer Hospital, which, since 1921, has rented a gram, Madame Curie herself paying the rental with the income of a money gift she received with the first gram of radium. Warsaw is Madame Curie's native city, although she has worked and lived most of her life in Paris. Madame Curie and her husband, Pierre Curie, discovered this rare and valuable element, but they scorned to made any personal profit from their discovery. They gave it to the public, together with the methods they evolved for producing radium. These same methods are in use to-day in the radium industry. For years these great and generous scientists struggled with a meager income, and without even an adequate laboratory. Pierre Curie, struck by a truck, died in 1906, without ever having a proper laboratory in which to use his great talents. Madame Curie finally acquired the laboratory, planned too late for her husband to enjoy, in the Curie Institute. However, the small supply of radium in her laboratory was needed by the Government during the war, and after the Armistice she found herself without any of the precious substance. Then her admirers and friends in America came to the rescue with the gram of radium and the money, which was meant to make living conditions easier for this great woman who had been in most straitened circumstances. Characteristically, she used it to rent radium for the Warsaw Cancer Hospital."

The gram of radium she is to receive on the trip represents an outlay of over $60,000.

George Had a Number of Brain Waves, But the Last Was the Best

By ALISTAIR CLARE

Twelve months earlier the fact that old Mrs. Millet had engaged a new assistant from London would have been "news" in Tollington. But Tollington had awakened from its sleep; London had crept so near that there were rumors of all manner of big developments.

So the fact that George Bassett, cycling through Tollington on a day's outing between leaving one job and looking for the next, had seen Sally Millet, Mrs. Millet's daughter, struggling with the sunblind outside the shop and stopped to help her, passed unnoticed. So did the alacrity with which he applied for the post of assistant-manager of Mrs. Millet's fast dwindling business when he heard that the good lady was confined to her bed with rheumatics.

"I've had four years' experience in a London shop," he told Mrs. Millet, when he had induced Sally to arrange the interview, "and I'd like a spell of the country. Besides, there's too much work here--if you will pardon me saying so—for a girl to do properly, and I can see opportunities—big opportunities. I've got ideas."

Mrs. Millet couldn't see anything but bankruptcy fast approaching, but she liked the look of this eager young man, and it was true that, with the best will in the world, Sally made an awful mess of shopkeeping. So George started at $10 a week.

It wasn't much of a job for a young man who had a three years' reference from a big London company, but Bassett took occasional sidelong glances at Sally's blue eyes, fringed by long black lashes, and felt quite satisfied with the change.

On the first early-closing day after his arrival Sally went up to London to do some shopping, and he stayed in the shop in order to clean out the chaos of old "dummies" which was old Mrs. Millet's idea of window-dressing.

Next morning Sally stood outside the shop and gasped. The entire window was filled with a pile of tinned fruits, and surmounting the pile was a home-made placard reading: "A Tin of Fruit Free If You Purchase Goods to the Value of 7s. 6d."

"You will ruin us!" she exclaimed.

George Bassett shook his head, noting how attractive she looked when excited.

"It's a paying idea," he remarked complacently, "a business-builder. The folk about here have got into the habit of using this shop as a convenience and going up to the Junction with their big order every Saturday. We have got to tempt them to buy everything from us."

Sally remained unconvinced, yet she caught the thrill of his enthusiasm, so that when Mrs. Millet heard about it Sally took his part and got her mother to agree to the experiment.

That week the takings were doubled, and the following Monday Mrs. Millet's window contained a new offer that set Tollington talking. A large cheese occupied the centre of the window, and everyone spending 3s. was entitled to guess its weight. The customer who got nearest to the correct answer received 10s. worth of goods free.

When in the following weeks Bassett poduced still further ideas, Sally Millet began to feel troubled. The business, under the guidance of the resourceful George, was doing better than it had done for years. He had succeeded so well that the townspeople were making for Mrs. Millet's on Mondays, "to see what new idea that young man is up to."

But, inexperienced as she way, Sally realized that there was something wrong. Live wires like George Bassett are not content to work in country shops for a wage of $10 a week.

She tried to find a solution which would fit into the puzzle. Was George Bassett a criminal using her mother's shop as a hiding-place from the police? That idea she dismissed at once.

Did he want to find out the possibilities of the business before buying them out? If so, he was going a strange way about it—trebling the profits in two months.

The third solution which occurred to her was the most likely—George Bassett must be a business scout—one of those men sent out by big London stores to spy out possible sites for new branches. The shop was the best site in Tollington, and her mother's lease had only four years to run.

Twice, when she had returned to the parlor after saying "Good-night!" she had caught him reading a large book, which he hurriedly slipped behind a cushion as she entered. This strengthened her conviction that this Bassett young man was playing a deep game. The thought infuriated her. It seemed mean, and she hated meanness.

But George had imported some of his business energy to her, and she realized that, whatever happened, they had the shop for four years, and with trade improving at its present rate they would at least have enough to buy a small business somewhere else.

So she pretended not to notice anything, and she agreed as enthusiastically as ever to George Bassett's business-building schemes.

While Mrs .Millet's did a record trade, other developments were taking place. The new housing estate had been begun. Row of shops were springing up, but not as well situated as Millet's, with its corner position at the four cross-roads.

One man whom Sally had noticed in the High Street on two or three occasions, came into the shop when George was out, and, after making a purchase, engaged her in conversation. The talk came round to shops, and he remarked that Mrs. Millet's Stores had a good position.

"I suppose you own this shop?" he asked casually.

"Unfortunately, no," said Sally, adding: "But we've a long lease."

"Good thing you dont own it," said the man, "I hear they are going to widen this street, and that would mean cutting ten feet off your shop. It will be too small then for anything."

Sally had not meant to mention the man to Bassett, but somehow it came out. He nodded.

"The usual story," he said.

The following Wednesday afternoon he closed the shop, changed into his best clothes, mounted his bicycle, and went off.

The next week Tollington woke up to find that Mrs. Millet was advertising. Posters were on every hoarding in the town, announcing a great autumn sale.

"2s. In The £ Discount On Everything. Buy Your Stocks For The Winter Now!"

That brought Mrs. Millet downstairs for the first time for weeks. The old lady was quite fair. George had greatly improved the business with his ideas, but this was going too far. He would ruin them.

Sally thought so, too. George was persuasive. He convinced Mrs. Millet that it all meant trade.

The great sale had only been on for two days when a large motor-car pulled up outside the shop and a red-faced man, oozing wealth, stepped out and burst into the crowded shop.

"Mr. Bassett?" he inquired. Then he looked at George closely. "You're from the Peckham branch—I remember you," he went on; but George corrected him.

"I was at the Peckham Branch," he remarked politely. "I am now assistant-manager here."

"I see—I see," said the stranger patronizingly. "Well, that makes my job easier. Dukes, the solicitor, at Tidburn Junction, tells me that you have bought this property. Well, I won't beat about the bush. I want it, and I'm prepared to hand you back your deposit and £200 profit. Are you agreeable?"

"Not by any means, Mr. Parker," replied George Bassett calmly. "I am acting for Mrs. Millet. We suspected you might want this shop when your agent called here and told us a cock-and-bull story about street widening. So we made sure by buying it ourselves. It is not for sale. Good-day!"

Mr. Parker looked as though he was about to explode, then he calmed down.

"My man Wade did make some inquiries. I want this shop. Look here, I'll advance my offer to £500. That's more than this tin-pot business will earn in the next your years. Do you accept?"

George Bassett looked grieved but firm.

"You are under a misapprehension. Our profits have increased four hundred per cent. in the last four months, and are still going up. My price for this property is £1,000, and my deposit back; and another £2,000 paid to Mrs. Millet for goodwill, stock, and fixtres."

"You are mad," shouted Mr. Parker—"mad! Why, your whole stock is worth—"

"About £250," said Bassett; "that leaves £1,750 for goodwill. A very cheap business, Mr. Parker. At all events, we do not want to sell, so I do not press you in any way. I will only remark that next week the price will be £3,000. Tollington is growing you know."

Mr. Parker made one last effort.

"I'll admit you are a cute one," he said, with an ingratiating smile. "I'll pay £1,000 for the business, and give you £400 a year to run it for me."

"I am not looking for a post in your firm, Mr. Parker," replied George Bassett. "I have already named my terms."

Mr. Parker hesitated, went red, and marched to the door.

"Bring me my cheque book!" he shouted. He turned to George. "I suppose I've got to pay you."

When the big car had rolled away George turned to find Sally watching him, her eyes filled with tears.

"Do you really mean that mother gets £2,000?"

"Of course," he said; "and cheap, too, for a progressive business like this."

"But why did you refuse a manager's post at £8 a week? With your ideas!"

George took her hand, for the first time, and led her into the parlor behind the shop.

"I want to be quite fair to you, Sally. The brain-wave which made me pay a deposit on these premises is the last brainwave I am likely to get. If I had taken that job as Parker's manager I should not have lasted a week."

"But all your ideas—" she said.

He lifted the cushion beside him and pulled out a book. Without a word he handed it to her. She read the title: "Twenty-five Money-making Ideas For Shopkeepers."

"That advertising scheme we are running now was the last idea in the book. After that I was finished. You see, I've never had an original idea of my own.

"But I have worked at Parker's, and I do know their little ways. So when you told me that story about the stranger chappie and his questions I guessed what the game was, and slipped over to Duke's and paid £100 deposit on this place. Then I knew we were safe."

Sally's eyes were shining as she placed her hands on his shoulders and, very softly, kissed his hand.

"I think you've been absolutely wonderful, George," she said. "The beastly thing is that now we shall be losing you. I knew you were too good for Tollington."

George looked into her eyes.

"Don't you think," he said, "that as we've made our money together we ought to invest it together—in another business that will keep your mother and—us?"

The customer in the shop rang the bell three times before anyone heard her. For once Geoge was attending to something more important than all the big business in the world.

The Modern Girl

She will not wash the dishes, for
It makes her hands so red;
She will not sweep the parlor floor,
It makes her hands so red.

She will not even dust the chairs,
Nor wash the small thing she wears,
Nor help her mother pickling pears;
It makes her hands so red.

Railway Helps in Building Cottages For New Settlers

Canadian National and White Star Line Co-operate with British Government

Montreal, Nov. 8.—Full approval of the Overseas Settlement Board of the British Government, which is supporting it financially, has been given the project of the Canadian National Railways' Department of Colonization and the White Star Line Canadian Service to solve, to some extent, the problem of accommodation for British families working on the farms of employers in Canada. The scheme provides for the erection of suitable farm cottages in prosperous farming districts in Western Canada to house selected British families placed under the auspices of the National System and the White Star. These cottages are being built carefully, located in the three prairie provinces where the resident farmers are predominately Anglo-Saxon.

Each ottage will stand in a fenced plot of ground averaging from one-half to one acre, and will be close to a good road and within easy access of the local market village, and as near as possible to the rural school. The cottages, modest but substantial, will be of two bedrooms, and the other, for larger families, consisting of a living room and three bedrooms. Simple furniture will be provided in each cottage, including a good stove.

A nominal rent of three dollars a month will be charged the tenants. It is understood that families will occupy the cottages only while they are securing preliminary experience in Canadian farming, presumably for a year's time, after which it is anticipated that they will be in a position to make their own arrangements. The Canadian National Railways' farm placement service will assist in procuring employment for the newly arrived families.

Upper: Standard type of four-room farm cottage built by Canadian National Railways and White Star Line for British Farm Families. Lower: One of the Western Farms on which a Canadian National Railways-White Star Line farm worker's cottage is being built.

Canadians Are Canadians Now

"Kittens Born in Oven Are Now Biscuits," Ottawa Makes Ruling Covering Much Debated Question

Instructions issued bp R. H. Coats, Dominion Statistician, just made public, order enumerators to use the word "Canadian" in reference to those of Canadian nationality or birth.

By his instructions, intended for use in the census of 1931, Mr. Coats has settled one of the widest spread controversies ever found in an Anglo-Saxon country.

Is a Canadian, a Canadian, or is he something else?

Mr. Coats' pronouncement is as follows:

"It is proper to use 'Canadian' as descriptive of every person whose home is in the country and who has acquired rights of citizenship in it. A person who was born in the United States, or France, or Germany, or other foreign country, but whose home is in Canada and who is a naturalized citizen, should be entered as 'Canadian,' so also should a person born in the United Kingdom or any of the colonies whose residence in Canada is not merely temporary. An alien person will be classed by nationality or citizenship, according to the country of birth or the country to which he or she professes to owe allegiance.

"A married woman is to be reported as of the same citizenship as her husband.

"A foreign-born child under 21 years of age is to be reported as of the same citizenship as the parents."

The fact that foreign-born persons who have been in Canada less than five years, the length of residence required to obtain naturalization, are reported as "Canadian citizens" is in virtue of the operation of the naturalization act of 1914 which provides that the following persons shall be deemed to be British subjects:

(a) "Any person born within His Majesty's Dominions and allegiance, and

(b) "Any person born out of His Majesty's Dominions, whose father was a British subject at the time of that person's birth and either was born within His Majesty's allegiance or was a person to whom a certificate of naturalization had been granted, and

(c) "Any person born on board a British ship whether in foreign territorial waters or not."

Provided (1) "that the child of a British subject, whether that child was born before or after the passing of this act, shall be deemed to have been born within His Majesty's allegiance if born in a place where by treaty, capitulation, grant, usage, sufferance or other lawful means, His Majesty exerises jurisdiction over British subjects.

(2) "The wife of a British subject shall be deemed to be a British subject.

3) "A woman who having been an alien, has by or in consequence of her marriage become a British subject, shall not, by reason only of the death of her husband or the dissolution of her marriage, cease to be a British subject."

The approximate number of Canadian nationals in 1921, on the assumption that all Canadian-born persons resident in Canada, are Canadian nationals, were 8,412,383, says the report, including 6,832,747 Canadian born, 1,065,454 resident British-born and 514,182 naturalized foreign-born, of whom 237,994 had been born in the United States. Doubtless there were domiciled in Canada at the date of the census certain Canadian-born people who had at some time or other given up their original Canadian citizenship and had not resumed it either because of personal preference or because they had not been resident in this country the necessary period of five years required for repatriation. Again, certain of our British-born people domiciled in Canada, were not Canadian citizens either because they had been naturalized in some foreign country or because they had not been resident in Canada for the one year required to vote at elections or the five-year period required by the Immigration Act.

On the other hand, many Canadian citizens are resident of other countries, the largest number being in the United States, where the census taken on January 1, 1920, showed that out of 1,117,778 white persons of Canadian birth reported as residents of the United States at the date of census 607,303 were naturalized citizens, 72,714 had taken out their first papers and 3445,557 were, from the point of view of the United States, aliens, and therefore, from our point of view, presumably Canadian citizens, while the citizenship of 92,304 was not ascertained. Thus a very considerable number of Canadian citizens were domiciled outside of Canada in 1920 and 1921.

Curtiss Field, L.I.—The Russian all-metal monoplane, "Land of the Soviets," with its crew of four Russian aviators, landed here early in November, successfully completing a 12,500 mile air journey from Moscow, which was as spectacular and colorful as any long-distance flight yet attempted. The last leg of the flight, from Detroit to New York, was completed exactly 12 weeks and two days after the fliers took off from Moscow airport.

Semyon Shestakoff, chief pilot, bringing his big monoplane into the field from the west, swung it twice across the airport in salute before swooping to a graceful landing. Although he had chosen to bring the huge airplane down in the corner of the field furthest from the crowd, its wheels had barely touched ground when several thousand persons who had gathered to welcome the Russians broke through the police lines and ran toward it.

Faced with conditions different from any he had encountered in flying over Siberian wastes and across the bleak lands of Unalaska and Alaska, the pilot instantly grasped the situation and wheeled his airplane away from the running, shouting crowd.

Foiled for a moment, the spectators dropped back, and motorcycle police with horns and sirens shrieking, seized the opportunity to ride through the milling thousands and make a path for the airplane. The chief pilot guided the plane close behind them, while his companions, Philip Bolotoff, Boris Sterlingoff and Dmitri Fufayeff, stood up in the open top of the fuselage and waved toward the crowd.

When the airplane and aviators were safely in the hangar, the policemen closed the doors. Shortly after, the fliers appeared on the roof of the hangar and the crowd broke into cheers. The aviators were presented with bouquets and someone started to make a speech which was drowned by cheers from the field. Each flier was obliged to step forward for an individual cheer while the crowd scrambled to catch petals of the flowers which the airmen broke off and tossed among them.

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh arrived at the field amidst the excitement. The Colonel alighted quickly from his airplane and jumped on to an oil truck to avoid the crowd. He was hurried to the hangar, climbed to the roof and greeted the Russian fliers

Looking down at the crowd one of the Russians remarked, "But this is for you, Colonel Lindbergh." The remark was translated to the Colonel, who replied instantly "Oh, no. This is your reception."

Greetings in the Air.

The Land of the Soviets was escorted to the field by two tri-motored Ford airplanes belonging to the Curtis-Wright Flying Service and the Wright Aeronautical Corporation. Five Curtiss fledglings, flying in formation, took off to greet the Russians and circled over the field in manoeuvres.

The Russians left Moscow on Aug. 7, arrived at Khabarovsk, Siberia, on Sept. 3, where the wheels of their airplane were replaced with pontoons. On Sept. 12 they continued their flight, arriving at Petropavlovsk, Kamchatka, on Sept. 18. Then, after a difficult flight over the Bering Sea, they alighted at Attu, most western of the Aleutian Islands, on Sept. 21. On Sept. 24 they reached Dutch Harbor, Unalaska, and three days later made their first stop on the mainland at Seward. Oct. 3 they were forced down by motor trouble at Waterfalls, Alaska. After having a new motor installed they flew to Seattle on Oct. 13, thence down the coast to Oakland, Calif., where they arrived on Oct. 20. Their next stop was Salt Lake City. They reached Chicago on Oct. 24, stayed there four days, and flew to Detroit on Oct. 28.

The "Land of the Soviets" is a low wing monoplane somewhat of the "flying wing" type. It was designed in Russia and built entirely of materials made in Russia, only the motor being of outside make. It was built under the direction of its designer, A. N. Tupoleff, at the Central Aero Hydro-dynamic Institute at Moscow. —Christian Science Monitor.

THE EQUITY

SHAWVILLE, NOV. 28, 1929.

The United States tariff bill has been shelved till the regular session, after weeks of discussion, the special session at which it was being deliberated on having closed on Friday. Reports say that little more than half the schedules have been disposed of, so that considerable time of the next session is likely to be absorbed before the bill becomes law Meanwhile the Canadian Government, in pursuance of its do-nothing policy, will continue to mark time.

Hon J. L. Perrin, Minister of Agriculture in the Quebec Government, was elected in the Montcalm by-election last week by a substantial majority, yet considerably reduced from the previous contest in that county. For the Opposition to win a by-election these days in a constituency previously supporting the Government, would be little short of a miracle ; yet success in reducing majorities by significent numbers affords a ray of hope that a day is coming when greater triumphs are not improbable.

The proposal to construct a highway from Temiscaming down the Quebec side of the Ottawa river to connect with the provincial system in Pontiac is, in the opinion of Mr. W. R. McDonald, the local member, by no means a dream. The Minister of Roads, when speaking at Chapeau a few months ago, declared that he was impressed with the importance and necessity of building such a road.

Now, if the district through which such proposed extension is to traverse offers no serious obstacles to construction, there seems no valid reason why the project should not be proceeded with and that soon. Pontiac has waited long and patiently for a reasonable share of the good things that are lavished upon other portions of the province no more deserving, and this belated recognition of her needs (if it materializes) will be welcomed by many in the upper end of the county, who all their lives have been bravely carrying on under the disabilities and disadvantages of pioneerdom.

The new wealth annually derived from mineral products in Quebec province is now nearly $14 per head of the population, it is pointed out by John A. Dresser, consulting geologist of Montreal. The revenue accruing to the province from this source in the last fiscal year was $562,692, or an increase of $95,647 over the previous year and of $252,325 over the year 1925-26. The mineral production of the province has risen from $5,552,062 in 1908 to $37,325,287 in 1928.

GERMAN WHEAT RUINING THE BRITISH FARMER.

Mail and Empire.

The dumping of German bounty-fed wheat on the British market has become serious for British agriculture, and must to that extent displace imports of Canadian wheat. During the year ended July 31, 1928, the imports of this German wheat were 22,500 quarters, but for the year ended July 31, 1929, they had increased to 590,000 quarters, that is 25 times more than in the previous year. Moreover, the bounty will be increased considerably next February, and France and Austria contemplates following the example of Germany. This bounty system is lessening employment on the land in Great Britain, and British consumers are not benefiting at the expense of the farmer.

CANADIAN HOLDERS OF VICTORIA CROSS.

The Victoria Cross has been awarded to 76 Canadians, so far as can be ascertained, since the institution of the decoration on January 29, 1856. This is recalled by the banquet which was held in London in honor of Britain's Victoria Cross heroes. At this function the Prince of Wales met recipients of the honor, among whom was a strong contingent from Canada.

During the Great War 61 members of the Canadian Corps (including the Canadian Cavalry Brigade) were awarded the decoration. Of that total 26 were born in Canada, one half of whom still survive. Six provinces are represented in the birthplaces of these men, as indicated in the following tabulation :

Ontario, 10 ; Quebec, 6 ; Nova Scotia, 3 ; New Brunswick, 3 ; Manitoba. 3 ; British Columbia, 1.

English-born Canadian soldiers upon whom the Victoria Cross was conferred number 14, Scottish 10 and Irish 5.

Four recipients of the honor were natives of the United States ; there was one Dane and one Russian.

Exclusive of the Royal Air Force, in whose service four Canadians earned the Victoria Cross, another quartette of Canadians are known to have had the decoration bestowed upon them during the Great War—two in the Imperial army and two in the Royal Navy. The total awards to Canadians from 1915 to 1918 thus amounts to 69.

Of the seven that remain, one received the Victoria Cross in the Crimean War (1854) ; one during the Indian Mutiny (1854) ; one during the Andaman Island in the Bay of Bengal (1867); and four in South Africa (1901).

SWEDEN'S BISON HERD.

Has the Largest Stock of European Buffaloes In the World.

Sweden now has the largest stock of bisons, or European buffaloes, in the world, and it is expected that this rare animal will continue to increase in number, although it was previously threatened with extinction. The bisons were originally imported to Sweden and have since been carefully kept and tended in a special preserve at Engelaberg, in the Province of Westmanland.

Similar work is being carried on with the beavers, which, owing to indiscriminate shooting had practically disappeared in Sweden not so long ago. For eight years, attempts have been made to increase the beaver stock, and there are now about twenty prosperous beaver colonies. The number of these animals is constantly growing, thanks to strict protection and care. German hares and pheasants have also been imported and are thriving excellently in Sweden.

Similar protection is being given through rigid game laws and supervision to other big game of Swedish origin, especially to the moose and the bear. The first mentioned is protected from hunters throughout the entire year with the exception of a couple of weeks in the early autumn, and is therefore multiplying rapidly. The bear, "the king of the northern forests," is safe from killers, and reports from the Government domains in the north show that there is a fair number of bears roaming the "Swedish Alps." This animal is quite popular, as it is ordinarily not dangerous but has the reputation for being rather harmless and good-humored, unless it is attacked or wounded.

Many other species of wild animals also enjoy the same protection, such as, for instance, the eagle and the swan. The legal protective measures are heartily indorsed by public opinion, since the average Swede is traditionally fond of animals of all kinds.

New Piano Like Human Voice.

A Science Service bulletin says: A new type of piano, which is called a revolutionary musical development, has just been patented at Washington by Dr. John Hays Hammond, Jr.

The invention increases the sonority of the piano, lengthens the vibrations and sustains the capacity and volume of the tone. Often the pianist has desired to influence the tone of the piano after the keys are struck. With the new instrument it is possible to do this and to produce a vibrato tone which so far could only be produced by the human voice or by string instruments.

The new piano looks very much like the usual piano except that the strings are enclosed in a sound-tight casing having two sets of shutters, one above the strings and the other below the sounding board, which are opened and closed by means of a fourth pedal. The shutters act as reflectors and produce an effect called "acoustic regeneration," sustaining the sound vibrations for a much longer time than is possible in the ordinary piano. Manipulation of the extra pedal remove inflexibility and shortness, the chief drawback of the old piano tone. The tone effects and shading made possible have caused the instrument to be called a "breathing piano."

BATHING IN HOLLAND

Scheveningen beach — the festive seaside resort of The Hague—has no policeman going about measuring the extent of dermal exposure, but in other respects it is one of the most thoroughly regulated beaches in the world.

The difficulty, so far as foreigners are concerned, is no doubt increased by the fact that warnings and prohibitions of all sorts are displayed only in the Dutch language, which is one that few foreigners know.

At all events my first experience was a baffling one. There was no trouble about getting the bath tickets, and the cabin tickets and the various other tickets for towels, bathrobes, wardrobe, etc. But once in the surf with two or three friends and a crowd of strangers it was puzzling to hear the lifeguard, high up in a tower above the waves, blow his fog-horn and toot his shrill whistle. This seemed to happen each time we moved far enough away from our nearest neighbor to avoid kicking him — or her—in the stomach, or being thrown into his—or her—arms by the next breaker.

Looking back to see what all the noise was about, we perceived the guard angrily beckoning with his trumpet, exhorting us to keep within bounds — bounds which are marked, apparently, only in his imagination. They are limited to a stretch of some twenty yards shore-wise and ten yards out to sea, and as many as three hundred people are expected to bathe in that restricted area of a beach that is miles long.

On emerging from the cold North Sea water into the frigid north wind, we flopped down on the sand to sun ourselves. But alack! A guard was upon us at once to inquire whether we were "sea-bathers or sun-bathers." We replied that we were both. "Then," he announced, "you must have a sun-bath ticket, which costs one florin. Your ticket is good for sea-bathing only."

So we who had naively supposed that the sun shone for rich and poor alike, grudgingly contributed our florins to the bathing establishment. We couldn't even discover the wherefore of this rule—as the attendant's knowledge of English did not extend to subjects so intricate as that.

Blacks Knight White Woman.

A white woman who for thirty years has been married to the black chief of an African tribe, has been knighted by the Liberian Government for supreme bravery.

She is "Ma" Brown, 55-year-old widow of a Canadian missionary. She went native upon the death of her husband and has four children by her black husband. Around her hut now toddle her grandchildren, many of them blond-haired and almost white in color.

"Ma" was knighted for saving the Liberian army from almost certain extinction in an ambush in the depths of the Liberian forest. When "Ma" learned of the ambush she hurried out to the front and argued the enemy out of their attack. She takes the knighthood philosophically and says she does not intend to become "Lady" Brown but will remain just plain "Ma" Brown.

"Ma" has been a faithful "medicine man" to the tribe, curing ills by her knowledge of the curative powers of plants and drugs rather than by evil mutterings. The story of her experiences among the tribes reads like thrilling fiction and would make a sensational "movie" plot.

OBITUARY.

THE LATE JAMES MCCORD.

The funeral of the late Jas. McCord, who died on October 22nd, after a short illness of three weeks following a paralytic stroke, was held from his late residence at Charteris, on Thursday, the 24th, and was largely attended by many friends and relatives.

The late Mr. McCord was born about 76 years ago on the old homestead of his late father, a little over a mile from the scene of his death, and during his long life enjoyed the best of health practically all the time till the advent of the affliction which brought on his death.

He was a man of excellent character and highly esteemed by all who had the privilege of his acquaintance.

He was the eldest of a family of boys and girls, all but two of whom survive him, one brother having met an accidental death at the early age of twenty-one years, and one sister also having died many years ago. He was predeceased by his late father, Thomas McCord, at McCord, Saskatchewan, only six years ago, at the ripe old age of 97 or 98. The six brothers are: Thomas, of Stalewarth, Mich.; Samuel, of Ottawa, Ont.; Moses, of Quyon, Que.; Richard, of McCord, Sask.; George and John of South Fork, Sask. The sisters are: Mrs. Alfred Murphy, of Charteris, and Mrs. George Dawson, Ottawa.

His wife, Lizzie Smith, to whom he was married upwards of thirty-three years, survives him. An adopted son, "Robbie" of Moose Jaw, who got home in time to see him ere the end came, and who was also present for the funeral, and a daughter, Mrs. Robert Sparling, also remain to mourn his loss.

The funeral service was conducted by Rev. S. T. Burman, of Yarm, assisted by Rev. A. A. Smith, of Shawville, and Rev. J. E. Wilson, of Campbell's Bay, interment being made in Wesley United Church cemetery. —COM.

JOHN P. MILLAR.

Pembroke, Nov. 19. — With tragic suddenness another of Pembroke's prominent business men was called by death this afternoon, in the passing of John P. Millar.

Mr. Millar, who had suffered to some extent from heart trouble for a couple of years, was unwell on Sunday and remained in his home. This morning he came down stairs intending to go to his place of business but changed his mind and remained in the house. About three o'clock experiencing a feeling of weakness, he went upstairs and reaching his room, dropped on the bed and almost at once, before a physician, who had been summoned by Mrs. Millar, reached the house, he expired.

GLOBE-TROTTING.

An American globe-trotter, who has been wandering through Europe and some parts of Africa since 1910, and who is seeing the world on a dollar a day recently arrived in Edinburgh. His name is Frank Brendamour, his hobby and occupation seeing the world, and his chief eccentricity the keeping of a curious statistical record of his wanderings. In his youth he practiced, for a short time, as a doctor, but in 1910 he set out from New York to see the world and achieve liberty. For the first ten years, when he wandered afoot, he allowed himself half a dollar per day for all expenses. From 1920 he doubled that allowance, the reason for the increase being his determination to travel chiefly by vehicle for the next ten years.

His diary would delight the heart of the most ardent statistician. In it he has a record of every meal and the cost of it, where he slept each night, and what was charged for his bed, how he travelled and the money expended, his fare per mile, and many other peculiar calculations. On his self-imposed allowance of a dollar a day he has to be as frugal as an Aberdonian, and he looks with something like horror on British habits. Considering the economic circumstances of the Old Country, we are the most extravagant people in Europe, he told a Scotsman reporter. Our diet he considers very expensive, and the dollar has much less power here than on the Continent.

Something New In Railways.

A new idea in railways, the invention of an Edinburgh man, is about to be tried out. It consists of an open girder-work structure carried on supports at a fair height above the ground. The cigar-shaped trains, driven by airplane propellers, run on an overhead rail track, while above them, on top of the whole, is a road for motor traffic.

It is estimated that the trains will be able to attain a speed of 100 miles an hour, and that the cost of making a double line of this overhead railway will be only about a third of that of building a railway of the ordinary type. If this proves correct, there should be a big future for the new invention in the Dominions and other undeveloped or partially developed countries.

Travellers will join the trains at overhead platforms, which will be reached by means of lifts. An overhead railway system already exists in New York's elevated railway, completed in 1880.

Ireland Follows Ontario's Lead Develops Shannon Power Nationally

Wonderful Hydro-Electric Development on Historic River Said to be Best in World

Dublin.—Few chapters in Irish history make more inspiring reading than that which has brought to a successful conclusion the story of the harnessing of Ireland's greatest river to provide light, heat and power for her people. For courage, resourcefulness and vision, the hydroelectric exploitation of the Shannon will pass down to posterity as the most daring national adventure recorded in the annals of the country.

Embarked upon at a time when the newly formed State was still staggering under the cloud of civil war, when an unbalanced budget and heavy taxation had reduced public confidence to its lowest ebb, this vast and novel scheme—involving an outlay of £5,500,000 of public money—not unnaturally called forth a storm of indignant protest. From the outset its promoters were met with a solid phalanx of stubborn opponents. Political, financial, engineering and commercial interests combined in a determined effort to avert what they strongly asserted must lead to national disaster. Added to this, unforeseen difficulties connected with land and water rights cropped up, followed by labor troubles when constructional operations began, and the persistent opposition of municipal and private owners of profit-making plants, who viewed with apprehension the proposed nationalization of electric current.

GREAT NATIONAL INDUSTRY

Convinced, however, on the one hand of the urgency of freeing Ireland from her dependence on imported coal, and, on the other, of the economic and technical soundness of the Shannon development proposal, the Free State Ministers unswervingly and intrepidly pursued their plans for the utilization of homo resources. It is due to the clear-sightedness, determination and energy of William T. Cosgrave's Government that the Irish Free State is now the proud possessor of a great nationalized key industry.

Proceeding with the utmost caution, the first step was to invite a committee of Swedish and Swiss engineering experts of international reput to examine and report on the Shannon water power scheme, which, inspired by a young Irish engineer, Dr. Thomas M'Laughlin, had been submitted to them by Messrs. Siemens Schuckert of Berlin, by whom Dr. M'Laughlin was then employed. The experts reported so favorably as to dispel all doubts regarding the feasibility of the undertaking, and the contract for the largest constructional works ever carried out on Irish soil were forthwith placed in the hands of MBessrs. Siemens Schuckert.

In September, 1925, the work began and the quiet banks of the Shannon became a hive of industry. Now, in the space of four short years—well within the scheduled time—the engineers' task is finished and electric current generated at the Shannon power station flows through an intricate network of wires stretching over the length and breadth of the Free State.

MAKING A WATERFALL.

The engineers' plan of campaign consisted in harnessing the river at the point of its greatest natural flow, that is to say in the stretch of 12 miles between Lough Derg and Limerick, and in converting the gradual descent of the river into an abrupt waterfall. This necessitated the diversion of the Shannon from its natural bed and the construction of a canal 7½ miles long, 44 feet deep and 102 feet wide, through which the diverted stream flows to plunge 100 feet into the power station built at Ardnacrusha, a few miles north of Limerick City. The water here is guided down through three steel penstocks of almost 20 feet diameter to feed the three gigantic turbines, each of 28,600 horsepower, which drive three equally gigantic 30,000-kilowatt generators.

Messrs. Siemens Schuckert claim that this installation is the most powerful and up-to-date electrical plant in the world. The generated current is distributed from an adajcent transforming station by high tension overhead lines to transforming stations in Cork and Dublin, where it is transmitted over low tension overhead wires to every town in the Free State with a population of over 500.

The present partial development of the Shannon yields an output of 288,000,000 units, sufficient to meet the existing demand, but the scheme is designed to permit of two further stages of development, for which the waters of Loughs Allen and Rea, situated in the upper reaches of the river, have been reserved as storage basins. Preparations are made for the installation of three extra turbines in the power house when the consumption of current necessitates a larger output, and it is anticipated that by the year 1931 the power station will be working to its full capacity.

GERMANS HAVE GONE HOME.

Four hundred Germans and 4,000 Irishmen were engaged on the constructional work. All the Germans have now returned to their own country, and the electrical supply is being administered, maintained, distributed and marketed by an all-Irish staff, with the exception of two Scandinavian engineers, who will serve for a period of two years. The whole undertaking is governed by the Electricity Supply Board, a semi-official, statutory body, composed entirely of Irishmen. Though appointed by the Government, it stands outside the pale of political influence, but must submit a report and balance sheet annually for the scrutiny of the ail. One of its first objectives of the board is to secure that current will reach the consumer at the lowest possible price compatible with the all-in cost of production. Toward this desirable end 64 municipal and private electrical plants have been taken over by the board, and the Shannon supply is therefore owned solely by the State for the benefit of the State.

As each additional consumer reduces the cost to all, every effort is being made to popularize the use of electricity. Householders have been quick to realize its many advantages in cleanliness, efficiency and comfort, and the first great increase in the demand for current is expected to come from the domestic users.

To assist the householders whose financial resource leave no margin for capital outlay, the upply board is wiring houses and supplying appliances on an easy system of hire purchase, thus enabling people of even the most limited means to install electricity for all domestic purposes.

A FIXED ANNUAL CHARGE

Current is sold on the basis of a fixed annual charge, ranging from 6d. to 2s a week, according to the valuation of the premises, plus 1d. to 2d. per unit for all electricity used—a system technically known as the two-part tariff.

The extent to which electricity will be applied to industries is still a matter of conjecture, but in addition to the existing industrial concerns which are more than likely to substitute electricity for steam and oil, there must be taken into consideration the wave of industrial development which is sweeping over the Free State. Attracted no doubt by the certainty of a cheap and plentiful power supply, coupled with the added inducement of protective tariffs, a crop of new factories has suddenly sprung into being. The success of Henry Ford's works in Cork, incidentally, the largest consumers of Shannon current—should, it is felt, have the effect of attracting other great industrialists to operate on an equivalent scale in the Free State.

Though much doubt has been expressed as to the possibilities of having a market for all the current generated—and it must w w w„z1 adeF erated—and it must be remembered that the financial success of the enterprise depends on the utilization of the full output—it is officially stated that the demand has developed so rapidly that the board is satisfied that the scheme will be supporting within three years. While the experts calculated that a sunsumption of 110,000,000 units in 1932 would make it a paying proposition, official facts and figures now indicate that in the year 1932 the consumption will reach 144,000,000 units.

In giving to the country this great key industry, the Government has not only shown its capacity for achieving economic developments of wide national scope, but has inspired confidence among the people of the Free State and enhanced the prestige of their country abroad.—Christian Science Monitor.

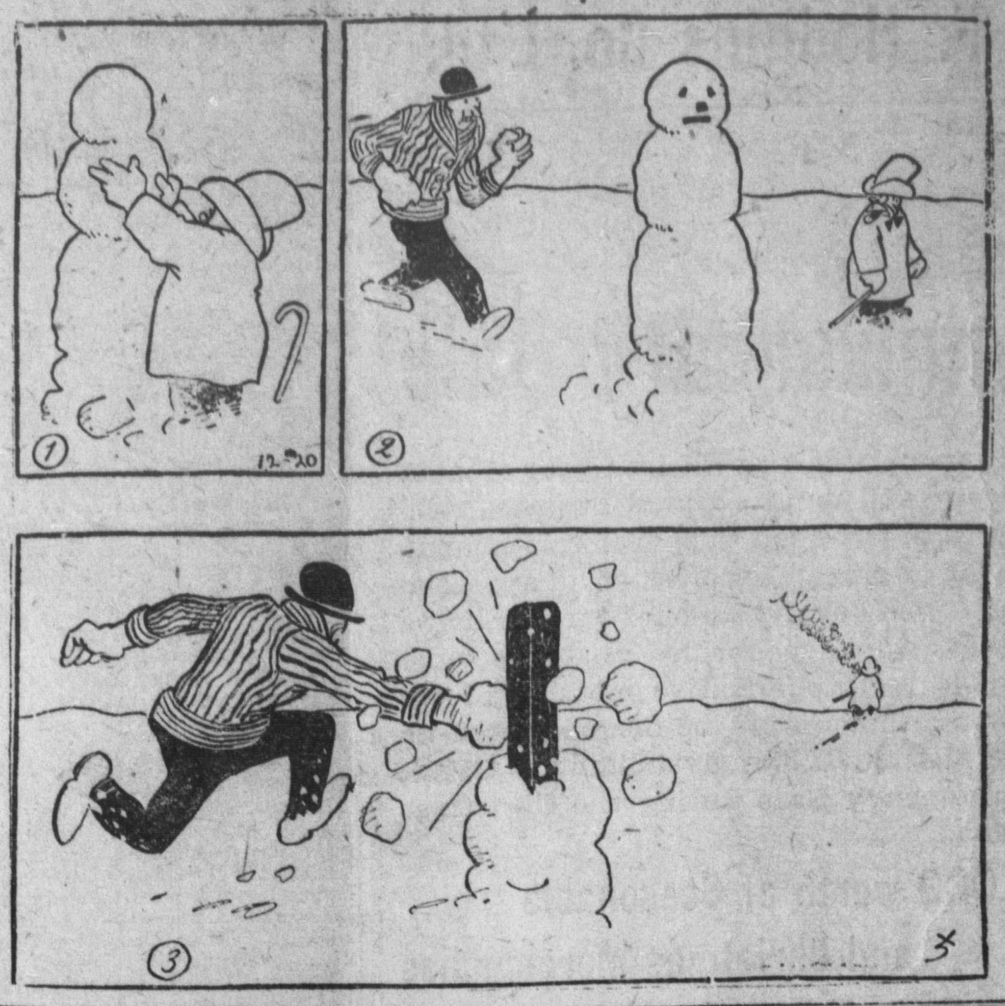
ADAMSON'S ADVENTURES—By O. Jacobsson



Germany Without Steresemann

BY WICKHAM STEED.

Since the spring of 1924 the German ship of State has been steered by a gyroscopic compass. Its name was Gustav Stresemann. No matter how wind and wave might buffet, or tide and current deflect the prow, the vessel was always brought back to its course by the self-contained energy of a revolving human disc. As swiftly as it spun, the gyroscope has now stopped.

The world outside Germany knew Stresemann as the ablest German statesman since Bismarck. He had gained the power, rare among his fellow-countrymen, of seeing Germany from without as well as from within. He divined her place in post-war Europe. He conceived her opportunities—which he rightly thought great—in terms of peace, not in terms of preparation for war. Hence his power to understand foreign colleagues like M. Briand, to grasp the merits and allow for the limitations of Sir Austen Chamberlain, and to make both of them feel that they could count on him. espite his typically bullet-headed, thick-necked appearance and semi-military voice, there seemed nothing aggressively or offensively German in his bearing. Precisely because of his mind's international range, it is doubtful whether the foreign statesmen who worked with him, or the foreign peoples who admired him, realized how precarious was his footing at home, or knew that, in Germany, he never ceased to "live dangerously."

* * * * *

A GALLANT END.

At Geneva, a month ago, death was plainly hovering over him. None of us who heard and watched him then expected to see him at Geneva again. He, too, knew that his time was all but up. I can remember nothing more gallant than his two speeches at the Press luncheon on September 5, and to the Assembly on September 9. Even more gallant was his obscurer heroism at Berlin. No sense of world-wide sympathy and appreciation sustained him there. He fought his last fight to prevent his party from bringing on an acute internal crisis by voting against the Unemployment Insurance Amendment Bill. Withstanding the venom and personal malice in which German politics abound, he saved the situation by persuading his fellow "Populists" to abstain in the impending division. Exhausted by the effort, he succumbed at 5.25 a.m. on the following morning. That day the Bill passed its third reading in the Reichstag.

* * * * *

AN ENDURING WORK.

By their tributes to his work for Germany and for peace, foreign statesmen, foreign journals and heads of States have helped to bring home to the German people a sense of Stresemann's worth. Unwittingly they have thus strengthened the chances that in its main his work will endure. While not without honor in his own country, Stresemann was looked upon by Germans less as a national asset than as a party politician. The German people are very sensitive to foreign opinion. Their sense of their loss will be keener as they learn that, outside Germany, it is felt to be a loss to the world. As Stresemann's stature grows in retrospect, German pride in him will increase. No successor will readily take the responsibility of changing deliberately the course he set. There is no Hohenzollern to proclaim a "new course," as William II., in his vanity, proclaimed it after "dropping the pilot."

* * * * *

A PROVISIONAL SUCCESSOR.

Yet neither is there another Stresemann, another gyroscopic compass at hand. Dr. Curtius has been chosen to "carry on," less by reason of his inherent virtues (which may be rare) than because he belongs to Stresemann's party, and will not at once inflame political jealousies. His appointment is "provisional." A witty French man once said: "Il n'y a que le provisoire qui dure." Certainly Dr. Curtius, who worked with Stresemann at The Hague and knows the "Young Plan" through and through, is preferable as Foreign Secretary either to Mgr. Kaas, the "foreign politician" of the Centre Party, or to the former Chancellor, Dr. Wirth, who, though likewise a Catholic, could not be sure of carrying the Centre with him.

Nevertheless, Stresemann's death may open an era of internal strife in Germany. Had he died six months ago, his disappearonce might have portended disaster for Germany and for Europe. The recent Nationalist outbreak would have been fiercer and more formidable. The Weimar Constitution, the Parliamentary basis of the State, and even the Republic itself might have been imperilled. Today the outlook is less troubled. The "Young Plan" is adopted, the evacuation of the Rhineland has begun, naval disarmament is within sight, with disarmament on land to follow. By coordinating American and British views upon the organization of the world of peace, President Hoover and Mr. MacDonald may be helping, at this very hour, to ensure the ascendancy in Germany of the ideas for which Stresemann stood.

* * * * *

STRESEMANN'S SECRET.

The day when a country could set its own course solely according to the balance of assions and prejudices, interests and aspirations, within its own borders is gone for ever. Streemann's greatness lay, in part, in his practical understanding of this truth, in his pertinacious determination to find for Germany a large place in a co-operative international community, not a small place to be defended with clenched fists and gnashing teeth. The fuller the measure of unexclusive Anglo-American co-operation for peace, the more comprehensive and patient the wisdom of Anglo-American counsels, the more certainly will Germany perceive in what direction her permanent welfare lies, and the stronger will be her disinclination to depart from Stresemann's course.

More than ever, nations are today each other's keepers. In this sense no nation wields greater influence or bears heavier responsibilities than Great Britain. What befalls, in a Germany bereft of Stresemann, may depend as much upon words said and deeds done in a London at one with Washington as upon the acts and aims of politicians in Berlin.—"Montreal Standard."

Sport and Study

Le Devoir: "That it is important and even necessary that sports and athletic games shall be organized amongst the students of our colleges and universities nobody will venture to deny, but this should always be done in such a manner that the students' sports and pastimes shall be kept in their proper place, that they shall not be considered of more importance than the students' intellectual instruction nor interfere with their studies."

"Yes, sir," said Miss Blogg meekly.

"I fired three stenogs for revising my letters, see?"

"Yes, sir."

"All right—take a letter."

"Punch" to Appear For the Blind

First Issue of Braille Set For January

London.—For what is believed to be the first time since the invention of type for blind readers, issues of a popular magazines are to be published in braille.

The National Institute of the Blind of Great Britain has announced completion of an arrangement with the editors of "Punch" whereby the regular issues of that humorous magazine will be dupliated for blind readers. The first copies are due to appear in January. Given the anticipated reception, issues will appear monthly thereafter.

Owing to the requirements of braille type the copies will be several times larger than those of the ordinary "Punch."

War Saved Prince of Wales From a Loveless Marriage.

London —The Prince of Wales is still heart whole and remains a bachelor because he hasn't time to be the kind of man a wife would want him to be, according to the Prince's official biographer.

In an article entitled "Why the Prince of Wales Has Not Married," published in the magazine Britannia, the biographer, Evelyn Graham, quotes Wales as telling a friend:

"During twelve hours every day I have to be what other people want me to be. The rest of the time I can be myself. If I married, I should have to spend the rest of my time being what my wife wanted me to be."

The biographer emphatically declared the Prince was still heart-whole and denied that he had not married because he was in love with a woman whom he should not marry for reasons of state.

The article points to the possibility that had it not been for the World War the Prince of Wales might have contracted a loveless marriage—a "marriage of convenience."

"But the Armageddon taught him the value of love, love of the mother of the child, love of a man for a friend, love of husband for wife," and therefore he has not married because he has not yet fallen in love, it was explained.

The heir to Britain's throne is no different from the rest of humans, and like them, has had his usual attacks of "calf love" during youth, but unless he really falls in love, the biographer concludes, it is altogether possible that the Prince of Wales will remain a bachelor for the rest of his days.

"A HOUSEHOLD NAME IN 54 COUNTRIES"

Alma Mater

The Cape Argus, Cape Town, South Africa: A hundred years ago Cape Town was already old, but South Africa was only beginning to be. All eyes were turned to the future. We are still looking to the future, but we must never forget that history has been made in this land of ours, and most of our present ideals and aspirations have their roots in the past. This is especially true of education. Educationally, it is true, South Africa has none of the traditions that so powerfuly affect the thought and life of the more ancient seats of learning in the Old Country. But even a century gives time for great traditions to form and proud memories to evolve. No student, whether of yesterday or to-day, can think of the old buildings in the Avenue, the gates, the oak trees, the paddock, the professors of a former day, the companionships and games, the colege songs, days of study and nights of revelry, without being deeply moved.

Stolen Goods

Detroit Free Press: The Cleveland Museum of Art has returned to the Jugoslavian Government a rare panel of ivory, which it had purchased from a dealer without knowing that it had been stolen from the Cathedral of Agram. At least four dealers had bought and sold the panel in good faith. The identity of the thief has not been established, although the fact of the theft was proved to the satisfaction of the Cleveland museum. All that the museum could do was to return this treasure.

Owl Laffs

A farmer was losing his patience and temper trying to drive two mules into a field, and was using strong language when the local parson came by and said:

"Don't speak like that to dumb animals."

Farmer—"You are just the man I want to see."

Parson—"And why?"

Farmer—"Tell me, how did Noah get these into the Ark?"

The banquet was a great success,
And not a dreary time and glum;
This added to the happiness,
Two of the speakers did not come.

"Have they been married long?"

"Just long enough so they have found there are a lot of things that you can't say with flowers."

"Dad," said his son Charles, "do you think they will ever find a substitute for petrol?"

"They have one now, and I wish you'd give it a trial."

"Huh" retorted Charles, "I've never heard of it. What is it, anyway?"

"Shoe leather" retorted his father.

Indigestion

What most people call indigestion is usually excess acid in their stomach. The food has soured. The instant relief is an alkali which neutralizes acids. But don't use crude helps. Use what your doctor would advise.

The best help is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. For the 50 years since its invention it has remained standard with physicians. You will find nothing else so quick in its effect, so harmless, so efficient.

One tasteless spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in acid. The results are immediate, with no bad after effects. Once you learn this fact, you will never deal with excess acid in the crude ways. Go learn—now—why this method is supreme.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. Each bottle contains full directions—any drugstore.

BABY'S OWN TABLETS WIN GREAT PRAISE

Many Mothers Always Keep Them in the House.

Thousands of mothers state that they know of no other medicine for little ones to equal Baby's Own Tablets—that they always keep the Tablets in the home as a preventive of childhood ailments, or if sickness does suddenly grip their little ones they feel safe with such a remedy at hand.

Concerning the use of the Tablets Mrs. Donat Ploudre, Tingwick, Que., writes:—"I have nothing but praise for Baby's Own Tablets. They are the only medicine I have ever given my two little ones and I am glad to state that the Tablets have always kept them in perfect health. I feel so safe with the Tablets that I always keep a box in the house."

Baby's Own Tablets are a mild but thorough laxative. They regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach and thus banish constipation and indigestion; break up colds and simple fever and make the cutting of teeth painless. The Tablets are absolutely safe, being guaranteed free from all injurious drugs. They are sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25c a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Delinquent Youth

Other Ways of Correcting His Faults Than the Prison or Reformatory

It is related that a teacher on being asked how he got along with the bad boys, replied that he got along with them all right, for, he added, "I just expel them." There will probably be a consensus of opinion that in view of his candid admission it was the teacher and not the scholar who should be expelled.

And yet, says J. J. Kelso, there is a moral contained in this incident that is applicable to the work of child-saving. There are many good people, who, unwilling to be patient and faithful with boys who have gone astray, consider their whole duty performed when they succeed in having the lad sent off to a reform school. This readiness to throw off responsibility is greatly to be deprecated and it was on this account that the executive officer of the Children's Aid Society was given extensive rights in the disposal of juvenile offenders.

Wayward boys, if taken at the right time and in the right way, can be converted into first-class men. Boys of sanguine temperament furnish the good boys and the bad boys of the world, not the pious and vicious. They are as the name implies, full of blood, full of life, activity, mischief and fight. Yet, for the same reason, they are full of tenderness, sympathy and loving kindness. What shameful ignorance to be at war with such a boy! Let him know that you are his friend, that you like him, that you wish him well, and you have at once an empire for good, moving itself and others on the way to righteousness.

"I think I'll go call on Smith. I wonder if he's in."

Dept. of Health

The autumn has arrived, and we enter into the season of the common cold; unfortunately this season is long and will be with us until the ice melts and the flowers bloom again in the spring.

The Toll of the Common Cold

The common cold costs the people of Ontario a heavy sum every winter. First, too many winter deaths can be traced to the simple beginning of a common cold; no cold is so simple that it can afford to be neglected, particularly in small children and older people.

The Cost of the Common Cold

The number of persons suffering from colds on any one day during the season of the common cold is enormous. Every second man working in Ontario's industries is sick with a cold some time during the winter. Women workers suffer to the extent of three out of every four. For the balance of the population—children, and those who work at home—we have no statistics, but feel sure their bill for sickness due to colds is just as heavy.

Cause of the Common Cold

A person suffering from a cold can pass it on to others. The infectious material is present in the discharge of the nose and throat; it can be transferred to others by coughing and sneezing. A person suffering from a cold will carry infection on his hands; he should therefore wash his hands before eating, and especially before handling milk or food to be used by others. He will also infect the cups, glases, dishes, etc., from which he drinks and eats; his dishes should be carefully washed.

Children, and adults too, often take cold as a result of over exposure to cold, getting feet wet, chilling after leaving a hot school, house, etc. Dress in the cold or wet weather so as to protect the body from chill and the feet from getting wet.

Those who have "bad throats"—diseased or enlarged tonsils—suffer more frequently from colds than those with healthy throats. Repeated colds lower one's resistance; children and adults who have one cold after another all through the winter are in a weakened condition by the beginning of spring.

Treatment of Colds

The best thing to do for a cold is to go to bed; go early enough and stay long enough. It is much simpler to prevent pneumonia than to cure it, and most cases of pneumonia have as a beginning the neglected common cold.

"Jim and His Job"

J. L. Garvin in the London Observer (Ind.): There is a general impression, even in his own party, that Mr. J. H. Thomas is "up against it" . . . Like a born comedian exaggerating a pessimistic role, the devoted victim enjoys himself in this big political drama, now in its first act, which has been popularly called "Jim and his Job." His opening methods are quite colculated. As regards his gorgeous official title, he mimics Poor Jo, and protests that "my name is agin me." Labor at large is apt to imagine the Lord Privy Seal as a personage who dines in gold lace at the expense of the unemployed. When he minimizes his promises and confesses his difficulties, he means to enhance any effects he may achieve. He encourages the Oppositions at this stage to make a low estimate of his chances.

Big British Prison to Be Sold at Auction

London—Sir Kynaston Studd, Lord Mayor, presiding at the annual meeting of the London Court Mission, at the Mansion House, declared prison "a terrible punishment." He praised the work of the police court missionaries in saving men and women from prison. "If we can effect the reform of the wrongdoer by other means," said the Lord Mayor, "the gain is great. This is the police court mission's work, and it does it very effectively."

Last year, he said, the magistrates requested the missionaries to assist in no fewer than 17,000 cases in the London courts. If that policy was general, it must make clear the extent of the effect, namely, that since 1914 no fewer than 24 prisons in England had been closed.

In this connetion it is announced that the empty county prison of Knutsford in Cheshire will be sold at auction early in December some of the buildings, which will be offered in 27 lots, being over 200 years old.

A Government's Duty

Ceylon Times: So long as people have few outside social interests and recreations, the liability to bicker and quarrel will be great, and in Ceylon all too often quarrelling is synonymous with the use of the knife. If the assoiation just formed, while promoting the crusade against crime, will not neglect to encourage all sorts of recreational activities, ten-fold better results will be produced. Most Governments nowadays recognize their obligations in this respect and strive to promote intelectual and recreational pursuits. We have now left behind the narrow conception of the State's function as confined to securing order and liberty for persons and property, and every Government has a social program to promote moral and bodily health.

How one woman lost fat and gained health

Many people who are fully aware of the health-giving properties of Kruschen Salts have not yet heard of the wonderful effects these Salts have in reducing unhealthy, excess fat. By their gentle action on the liver, kidneys and bowels they urge these organs to throw off the poisonous waste matters, which, if allowed to accumulate, form fatty deposits in the body. Read how this woman lost fat and gained health:—"I have taken Kruschen Salts every day for nearly a year, and I have not felt so well for many years. My weight has dropped from 163 lbs. to 140 lbs. All my acquaintances say how much younger and better I look. I feel bright and well, whereas before I was always nervous and tired." Mrs. B.

Try taking Kruschen Salts every morning in a glass of hot water before breakfast. Little by little the unhealthy accumulations of fat will slowly but surely disappear. A new feeling of health and vitality will follow—the years will fall away as your form takes on the slender lines of youth.

FOR the ninth successive year profits for participating policyholders of this Association have been substantially increased.

And remember—100% of all profits earned by the participating branch are allotted to participating policyholders.

What does that mean? It means that the Confederation Life Association is well managed, that it is careful in the selecting of risks and that it is particularly prudent in the investment of policyholders' funds.

These are reasons why Confederation Life Association is so satisfactory a company to insure with.

DEATHS

MICHAEL BOWIE

An old, well-known and highly respected citizen of the county in the person of Michael Bowie, passed away on Friday morning last at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Kennedy, Campbell's Bay, at the ripe old age of 87 years, clear of mind and possessed of all his faculties up to almost the end, which came following at attack of pneumonia. Mr. Bowie was a resident of Calumet Island in early life and then removed to Bryson where he pursued the carpenter trade for several years.

He sat at the first Council board in Bryson after the village became incorporated and gave of his time and energy in advocating and furthering schemes for the advancement of the infant corporation. Returning again to Calumet Island he engaged in farming and remained in that occupation for many years.

Of a kindly, jovial disposition, Mr. Bowie could have had few enemies and his friends in all walks of life, irrespective of creed or nationality, were numerous.

His wife having predeceased him some time ago, he is survived by three sons, (one of whom is Mr. Fred Bowie, registrar of the county) and two daughters; also by one elder brother, William Bowie, of Calumet Island.

The funeral, very largely attended, was held on Sunday afternoon to Ste Ann's R. C. Church, Calumet Island.

JOHN A. MOORHEAD

Many old friends and acquaintances in addition to a large number of the residents of Campbell's Bay, assembled at the late home of John A. Moorhead, to follow his remains to their last resting place, and to offer their sympathies to the bereaved sister and daughter (Mrs. Henderson) who, leaving her invalid mother in Montreal, accompanied her father's body to Campbell's Bay, to the end that it should rest beside those of his numerous kin who have gone before.

The late Mr. Moorhead passed away at the home of his daughter in Montreal on Thursday. He had been an invalid for several years, due to a succession of paralytic strokes with other complications, and the last few weeks of his life, up to nearly the close his sufferings were intense. Happily the hours preceding his departure were tranquil and his end came peacefully.

The funeral service was held in the United Church, of which deceased was a member, Rev. Mr. Warren officiating.

The late John Moorhead, who had reached the age of 72 years, was the youngest son of the late David and Mrs. Moorhead (pioneers of Litchfield) one of a large family, all of whom except one sister, Alice (Mrs. McTiernan) have "crossed the divide."

He was a man who had a varied career from early life, being first engaged in teaching for a short time in North Carolina, U. S. A. Returning home his next activities were in the capacity of clerk in several mercantile houses, meanwhile taking a business course in Mosgrave's College, Ottawa, where book-keeping and penmanship were the main studies back in the eighties. In later life and for several years he held the position of timber scaler in Gillies Bros.' camps, following which he filled the office of a district fire ranger till his health gave out. He was a great lover of the "out-of-doors," an enthusiastic hunter and fisherman, and in early life a great base ball enthusiast and one of the best players of his time. Possessed of a keen sense of humor and an adept at impersonation any social gathering was enlivened and enriched by John's presence.

Surviving to mourn his departure are his wife, (formerly Jessie A. Macfarlane, daughter of the late John and Mrs. Macfarlane) daughter and sister above mentioned. Three sons preceded him to the grave.

MRS. A. G. LEMOINE

After a long and severe illness there passed away on Wednesday, 13th, at her late residence, 293 Clifton avenue, Montreal, Martha Ann Caldwell, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Caldwell, of the township of Clarendon, Pontiac Co., Que., and beloved wife of A. G. Lemoine, manager in Montreal of the Vogel Sprinkling Company of New York.

The funeral which was held in Montreal on Friday, was attended by her many relatives and friends. The cortege was from her late residence, to Trinity Memorial Church, where an impressive service was conducted by Rev. Canon Almond, assisted by the Rev. Kenneth E. Taylor. Interment was in Mount Royal cemetery.

Mrs. Lemoine was of a cheerful, amiable and pleasing disposition and evidence of her high esteem amidst a wide circle of friends was the large number of beautiful floral offerings received by the bereaved family.

The chief mourners were her husband and four brothers, J. Y. Caldwell, Geo. B. Caldwell, Wm. F. Caldwell, Samuel B. Caldwell, all of Ottawa, and one sister, Mrs. Thomas E. Anderson, of Montreal.

Rev. William Craig, a retired Methodist Minister, a native of Fitzroy township, who in the course of his long ministry labored on the Shawville circuit for a term in years gone by, died at his home in Ottawa on Nov. 20th, in his 84th year. His remains were conveyed to Kingston for interment on Friday.

The funeral of the late Mr. John Dagg, of Yarm section, whose death was recorded in last week's issue, took place on Wednesday, to St. Brigid's R. C. Church and cemetery, North Onslow and was largely attended. The deceased is survived by two brothers — Wm. D. and Thomas E. Dagg, of North Onslow.

A copy of the Porcupine Advance of Nov. 21st, has been received, containing an extended notice of the death of Mrs. (Dr) Weston, at Schumacher, on Nov. 15th.

The late Mrs. Weston, before her marriage, was Miss McCleary, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert McCleary, of Schumacher, and was born at Quyon. Her death occurred at the early age of 26 years, after a few weeks' illness. She was held in the highest esteem in the community, and deep regret is felt at her departure. The funeral was one of the largest ever held in Schumacher, quite a number coming from long distances to pay their last tribute of respect to the remains of the departed.

THE EQUITY regrets that at this time it cannot afford space for the reproduction of the notice appearing in the Advance.

James Hill and Donald Laing, of Gananoque, were acquitted at the assize court at Brockville last week, on the charge of manslaughter, resulting from the death of Denis Donovan, of Escott, found dead on the highway some weeks ago.

Leather Lasts Long.

The durability of leather is proved by the discovery, in the course of excavating for the foundations of the new Bank of England, of soles of Roman shoes, one of which bears clearly the impress of the official Roman eagle. The soles evidently were those of the sandals worn by women and children. Bronze rivets were used to hold together two or three thicknesses of leather and no doubt accounted in part for the life obtained from the footwear, which must have been much greater in weight than present-day shoes. The old leather was in about the same state of preservation as might be expected of a modern shoe that had been on a rubbish heap for a couple of months. Although nowadays leather is produced with more speed and less mechanical crudity, the processes of preserving, toughening, and softening it are not materially different from those practiced by the Romans in England about 2,000 years ago.
