Vigilance Society Can Take Warning.—

Last evening George Stewart at Ormstown had his horse stolen from the church sheds. A reward is offered today for information leading to the arrest of the guilty party. If a similar theft took place in Huntingdon how well organized is the Vigilant Society of Huntingdon? It has no new secretary-treasurer since the death of Mr. T. W. Furey, and the President, R. N. Walsh has never called a meeting of the Vigilant Society members to elect a secretary-treasurer and to vacancies on the directorate. The Vigilant Society has quite a considerable fund of money in its treasury awaiting to be used on an unwanted call. The Society should be kept organized; and what is more, members of the Society have expressed this same thought to the President.

Frocks Widely Varied In Easter Ensembles

Cotton and linen are in the front ranks of fabric fashions in new supple weaves which closely resemble wool, while softly pebbled crepes, stripes, checks, floral prints, polka dots and soft, lightweight, pliable wools are offered in colors galore.

In designs the frocks also are widely varied, although most of them are based on a rather straight silhouette having a normal waistline and a hem seven to 10 inches from the ground. Their diversity lies in sleeves which vary from shoulder capes to full length, necklines which may be high, draped or scarfed and belts which may be wide or narrow.

Hats are as varied as the dresses. African fezes of knitted wool, straw or crepe; "high-hat" toques which rise six inches above the forehead, and flower covered turbans are among the models.

Gloves appear in such unusual fabrics as cotton piques, linen and silk crepe to match the frock. Bags retain the envelope design in antelope, kid or ribbed leathers. Shoes appear in the same leathers in beige, grey, navy blue or brown.

Callus May be Plantar Wart

If you have a callus, it could be cut off. Then properly fitting shoes and stockings should be worn to keep it from coming back. On the other hand, you may have what is known as a plantar wart. This type of wart is best treated by means of X-ray. An examination should be made to determine just what condition is present; then the proper treatment for it can be suggested.

The little boy, Francis Brethour, 3 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Brethour, and little Marjorie Anderson, 5 years old, were playing in the Brethour lane Saturday morning. This was during the high water period when the ditches were overflowing and the fields flooded. The children ventured too near to the deep water and the little boy fell in. The little girl shouted to her sister closer to the house who immediately notified her mother. Mrs. Anderson rushed to the scene and jumped into the water where she saw the child come to the surface. She held the child above water until her husband, Robert Anderson, the child's father, Jos. Brethour, and Chas. Cuthbert came to the rescue. The water at the point where Mrs. Anderson jumped in was more than five feet deep. The heroic act is one of worthy recognition.

The little child was rushed to his parents' home and artificial respiration practised. Breathing was soon restored and both the rescuer and rescued are none the worse of their experience.

At the opening of the Tuesday afternoon session of the Quebec Legislature, Mr. Maurice Duplessis, leader of the Opposition said that he had received a letter from Dr. W. Laroche, ex-mayor of Valleyfield, to the effect that the latter city had been refused electricity by the Beauharnois Power Corporation on the pretext that it had none available. Mr. Duplessis remarked that this was the more strange since only a few days ago a bill was passed by the House which would enable the corporation to export electricity to the United States.

Anne street, Pointe Claire, collapsed and died suddenly on Saturday afternoon. Dr. Alexandre Bourgeault was summoned to the scene and pronounced Roy dead, death having been due to heart failure.

He lived with the family of Mrs. Joseph Carriere for the past two years. Police are at the present trying to locate Roy's family, knowing that he had separated from them 16 years ago.

GRAVE CHARGE MADE AT PROBE

Former Accountant of Montreal Dairy Says Producers Were Greatly Underpaid

Ottawa, April 11.—Dairy farmers who ship their milk to a Montreal company have been "gypped" out of money rightfully belonging to them and the company concerned has been guilty of "very serious practice—a criminal practice, in fact," according to James L. Bowman, Conservative, Dauphin, if the evidence given before the agricultural committee of the Commons tonight is correct.

The evidence was so serious, containing the charge that the Montreal Dairy Company paid the farmers who supplied them with milk less than was coming to them, that Mr. Bowman suggested the witness should have the protection of the milk probing committee before he continued his evidence.

The witness in question was Joseph L. Roberge, formerly accountant for the Montreal Dairy Company, who testified that by the use of "fictitious surplus" during the first nine months of 1931 the dairy company paid the farmers from three to 19 cents per hundred pounds less than they were entitled to for their milk, and that in the month of September alone the farmers were "gypped" out of $1,370.

Mr. Bowman, who was examining the witness, did not know how far the committee could protect him against action by the company should his statements prove to be incorrect and suggested that the committee adjourn until it was ascertained whether the committee had the same power as a law court to protect a witness.

Gordon Wilson, Conservative member for Wentworth, whose speech in the House originated the probe into the milk price spread and who previously has suggested "racketeering" by some of the dairy companies, thought members of the Montreal Dairy Company should be subpoenaed by the committee to verify or refute the evidence of Roberge and on motion of T. A. Thompson, Conservative North Lanark, moved that executives of the company be summoned to appear before the committee on Thursday of this week.

The committee has long suspected that the dairy farmers shipping milk to the Montreal market have been deprived of a considerable portion of the money rightfully due them by reason of the practice of the dairy companies in paying for the milk shipped to them on two bases. For a portion of the milk what is known as the "association price" is paid and for the balance a "surplus price" is paid.

Referring to the Montreal Dairy Company, Roberge stated that in the first nine months of 1931 the actual surplus of the company was only 538,089 pounds of milk, whereas the surplus set up in the farmers' accounts and paid for at "surplus" prices, was 1,140,343 pounds, "Surplus" prices are roughly half "association" prices. In the month of February, 1931, the real surplus (that is, the amount not pasteurized but skimmed for sweet cream) was only 12,550 pounds, whereas surplus prices were paid to the farmers on 62,455 pounds. The "association" price that month was $2.40 and the farmers actually received 19 cents per hundred pounds less than that figure, and less than they should have received. Similar conditions prevailed in other months.

Profits Investigated

Ernest Cousins, Limited, Montreal dairy concern, paid five quarterly dividends to holders of its preferred shares amounting to $13,394 from 1925 to date. This was outside a transfer of 2,450 common shares to shareholders of preferred stock as compensation for non-receipt of dividends from 1925 to 1928. Examination before the parliamentary milk probe late this afternoon of Cecil Marrotte, of Marrotte, Henderson and Co., Montreal auditors, disclosed this information.

Questions were put forwards by J. L. Bowman (Cons., Dauphin) as to why the company had only paid five dividends in cash. He wanted to know particularly why with a net profit of $16,000 in 1930 the company had not paid a dividend to shareholders, some of whom were milk producers. Mr. Marrotte as auditor of the company, said the money had not been available.

"This company was valued at $125,000 at the time of incorporation in 1925?" (J. L. Bowman (Cons., Dauphin) questioned. Mr. Marrotte answered in the affirmative.

"The net assets, though," queried Mr. Bowman, "were only $39,000, while $85,000 was taken in as goodwill. In other words, twice as much was taken in for good-will as the real net assets.'

"Yes, that is right," Mr. Marrotte replied.

In 1928, when the dairy company amended its letters of incorporation, 4,537 preferred shares were issued at $25 each to holders of old stock, Mr. Marotte declared. There were also 1,587 preferred shares issued at the same time and at the same price to purchasers other than holders of old stock in the concern, Mr. Cousins received in 1928, 10,000 shares of common stock of no par value for his good-will in the old company, which was being reorganized. Of the 10,000 no par value shares, Mr. Cousins transferred 2,450 to holders of preferred shares in the concern from 1925 to 1928 by way of compensation as they had received no dividends.

Mr. Bowman questioned witness on the reserve of the company for bad and doubtful debts. In 1930, the reserve set aside was $8,105, Mr. Marrotte stated. In 1931, a reserve of $12,098 was made and in 1932 the

Valleyfield Bridge Prospects Improve

Nothing succeeds like success; so the Valleyfield-Coteau bridge enthusiasts from Valleyfield are following up the project in details. On Thursday last Mayor P. Billette and seven other prominent business men of Valleyfield waited upon Mr. R. A. C. Henry of Beauharnois Power Corporation, in regards to the contemplated bridge. Two weeks previous, this delegation visited Ottawa and saw the Hon. Dr. Manion, Minister of Railways and Canals and Hon. Hugh Stewart, Minister of Public Works, about this contemplated bridge.

At Ottawa the delegation was well received, and good advice was given. On Thursday they met Mr. R. A. C. Henry of Beauharnois Power Corporation. Here they found the Beauharnois Power Corporation planning to do everything that is hoped for. The Beauharnois plans to build water control works between Valleyfield and Coteau. A dam is to be built from Salaberry Island, upon which Valleyfield is located, and Thorne Island. The length of this dam is 2000 feet. 1000 feet of this portion of the dam will have sluices so that the water can be easily controlled. This portion of the dam is to be built this year if everything goes well; and, is so anticipated. In 1935 they hope to dam the water between Thorne Island and Maple Island. This dam will be 1000 feet long. About half this dam allows for sluices. The channel between Maple Island and Leonard Island will be left open whilst the water between Leonard Island and the north shore of the St. Lawrence will be built as a solid dam in the summer of 1937.

The dam throughout its entirety and crossing the islands will make a roadway of one and a half miles in length. The dam is to be so constructed to allow for a road surface being laid that will give a 20 or 21 foot roadway.

The only obstacle in the completion of the bridge will be the 1500 foot channel between Maple Island and Leonard Island. The current is quite swift at this point and the water is deep. The Power Company will not be damming this channel, for in the first place they have never sought the right to do so, and secondly, to secure the 50,000 cubic feet of water per second they do not require this work being done. It is quite probable this will be ultimately controlled, for if the Beauharnois Power Corporation reaches the point where it is to take the entire flow of 120,000 cu. ft. per second it will call for this dam. In such a case the river would be bridged. This achievement may mean another ten years or less time may lapse, but we must surely all feel this gigantic development will never stop until it is developed to its utmost. With the Quebec Government passing legislation permitting the exporting of power, surely we have the right to interpret it that this means the Beauharnois Power Corporation was back of the legislation movement, and that they will develop more power, and either use it in Quebec, export it to the U. S. A. or to Ontario as they are presently doing.

Beauharnois Power Corporation has been a boon to our community in the way of employment. It has acquired farms at a price that have made many farmers happy, and now it is to build a dam that will gratify the hearts of many, and incidentally create a business thoroughfare that has not heretofore been enjoyed, and which will be a benefit to Valleyfield and Coteau and the surrounding districts in general.

Pure and Clean Milk Assured

For a good many years Huntingdon has been supplied with milk from the dairies operated by Messrs. W. H. and J. W. Goodfellow. No one has ever questioned the cleanliness of their milk, or that it was ever tampered with in any manner. As the whole milk trade suffered when the Baumert Co. Limited ceased operation in Huntingdon, and besides Montreal was more or less flooded with milk, a number of farmers started delivering milk in Huntingdon. Some of these farmers have proved to be good men, courteous and worthy citizens, but in some cases either the dairy equipment or the stock were not of a sufficiently high standard to meet with the requirements of Huntingdonians.

In one case a man who was shut out from shipping to Baumerts and Montreal started supplying milk in Huntingdon. He is not selling milk today. Another milkman had his herd suffer very considerably in the bovine T. B. test. Huntingdon has at the present time 10 farmers selling milk for consumption in the town. It is questionable if all ten dairies will be able to measure up to the health standards and standards of quality of milk and cream that are now to be demanded by the Milk By-law. The by-law is very complete, and gives the Board of Health officers ample power to assure Huntingdon people of good milk and cream, and in so doing farmers who have T. B. tested cattle for a year or more and who operate clean and sanitary dairies will have a protection of trade. Vested rights should always be considered, and the by-law certainly takes care of farmers who want the Huntingdon milk trade, but first see to it that they had the right commodity to sell and in its proper condition..

The Milk By-law calls for milk coming from T. B. tested herds of cattle, the cattle having enjoyed a clean test for at least 12 months. Where a milk dealer buys milk from another farmer, that farmer's herd is subject to the same conditions as is that of the milk dealer's. When milk is purchased from a farmer by a dealer, he must first notify the Board of Health officer so that an inspection of the dairy might first be made.

Empty bottles must be returned to milk dealers, and before such returning must be carefully washed and kept clean until delivered. The milk dealer must in turn again see that the bottles are again washed clean and sterilized before being refilled with milk or cream.

The milk to be sold in Huntingdon is to test 3.5% b.f. This is a test that means richer milk than perhaps many of us are accustomed to receiving; but is something everyone will enjoy. In connection with cream, if cream of 10% fat is being sold it must be so labelled, but if it is 15%, 20% or more it must be labelled accordingly, so that no one will be buying 10% or 15% cream when he believes he is getting something richer.

The Late Alex. Younie

Alex. Younie of Tullochgorum, passed to his reward on Thursday. Mr. Younie was not a man that would put himself before the public; not a man keenly interested in politics, but he was a man who was intensely interested in the welfare of public matters. He was a man of sterling character, and was always found to be playing his part on the side of decency and sane good thinking people. He was rewarded and honored for his clear sightedness and keen business ability. For instance he was made director of the Ormstown Exhibition and after filling that position successfully for year, failing health demanded his retirement and he was then made Honorary Presnumber of other men presently connected with it, was one who worked for the good of the Exhibition and not for selfish gain. He felt the Exhibition was for the good of the farming interests in this District and worked untiringly and incessantly for its welfare.

In connection with his religious life, Mr. Younie was one to whom no man could cast a slurring reflection. He was as devout in carrying out his religious duties as some are lax. He worked for his church, St. Paul's United of Ormstown, and was one of its most regular attendants and supporters. Mr. Younie was identified with the congregation as an Elder.

In his private affairs Mr. Younie was recognized as a superior farmer. One who was willing to adopt new methods, and who would specialize in many branches of farming. For many years the Younie farm was looked upon as the haven for beef cattle so rarely found in this dairy district. The importation of "Western beef" in quantities meant it was not the most profitable breed of cattle to raise here, therefore he reared dairy cattle in the more recent years. The Younie apiary is known throughout the Province as one of Canada's best, but no man thought of devoting whole time and effort to honey until his son Roy Younie entered the game back around 1908. Mr. Ray Roy Younie was then a young boy, but the father saw the possibilities in honey and saw fit to encourage the son entering into the apiary business. His fields were always seen to be most productive and his farm well cared for, in other words—he was a model farmer. An agriculturist with a devouted Christian character, blessed with good keen judgment unselfishly given to the welfare of worthy causes within our midst was the late Alex. Younie.

Daily Papers to Pay More Postage

Throughout the world discord amongst the politicians appears, and factions are continually being created. Canada is no exception to the rule. Splits in the Liberal party in Ontario are readily heard of, whilst at the same time many are willing to say Premier Henry of Ontario will have to retire from the premiership, and have the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson pull the Conservative party together.

At Ottawa we find Premier R. B. Bennett bringing down legislation which he believes is the salvation of Canada's finances, yet his staunch supporters of the past are ready to condemn him today for not reducing taxation. The Montreal Gazette has been recognized for years to be a supporter of the Taschereau administration in Quebec, yet a staunch Conservative organ when it comes to Federal politics. Where do we now find this commendable daily paper taking its political stand? It condemns the Bennett Government, and especially so on the budget which did not provide for reducing taxation. The Gazette does not now fancy the Hon. Mackenzie King as a suitable leader for the Liberal party at Ottawa, therefore we must take it that the Gazette is now becoming independent, or in hopes of being the means of bringing to light new leaders.

The daily papers in Canada have all recently received a severe blow, due to the new postage regulation adopted in regards to the mailing of newspapers. The postage rate is based upon the volume of advertising within the paper. It is quite right that the Government should increase the postage rates so that the money received will be sufficient to care for the expense of handling the mail, but the political reaction is not likely to be in favour of the legislators, so it will mean just one more obstacle (the Daily papers) that will have to be overcome. "The Gazette" will have have to pay 100 per cent more postage, whilst the "Montreal Star" and "La Presse" will have an extra bill of something over $42,000 each to pay annually.

The Barons of the Fourth Estate will not take kindly to paying this extra postage account this year a bit more than did the "Milk Barons" take to reducing the price of milk a cent a quart a month ago. The reaction upon the Government may be severe, and in return for the collection of $40,000 to $50,000 from each daily paper into the post office treasury, they may bring about a more pronounced feeling for a change of government and thereby put Canada to the expense of an election a year sooner than is necessary. Whilst no one can ever find a perfect political party or leader, and whose legislation is always right, we believe the Hon. R. B. Bennett is doing his level best, and perhaps no other leader would do a bit better at the present time. Although the Conservatives are now in power, perhaps they wish they were in the Opposition, and doubtless the Liberal party are patting themselves on the back that they are on the outside looking in.

Step Right up and Take Your Place

Spring trade will be the objective of all progressive merchants from now on. It does require a lot of study and attention to know just what to lay out and how best to reach the public. People have no money for what they can do without. People have money for those things that they want. You know that the people are buying today things that they want and paying for them. Look at the money spent the last few weeks upon hockey. Note the Jig-Saw craze, and the money that has been spent upon this past-time. Entertainment has not been curtailed. Thus, there is money in the pockets of the people. It resolves itself into a question how can the people be reached and secure a share of their trade. Clothes, Millinery, Footwear, Dry Goods, Hardware, and Men's Furnishings have been very slow. Spring trade is anticipated and styles are being shown in the larger centres. If the local merchant does permit the outsider to step in and win their customers, then the trade will go from the Chateauguay Valley. If, however, the local merchant will get busy and dig deep after the trade, he will have a greater share. People prefer to give the business locally, but they do not know what the local merchant has to offer because the local merchant has sat back and let the other fellow tell his story and invite the trade.

Men in business locally, here is your chance. Make a real bid for the Spring trade. Do not sit back and play second fiddle. Lead the parade. It has been done by others and you can do it again. Step right up and take your place in the front line. People need clothing and other necessities of all descriptions. They will buy elsewhere unless you reach them. We have the stores and the merchandise here. We have the service and the experience that will fit out the people. All that has to be done is sell them. With a strong united front our district merchants can secure enough business this spring that will make them happy. Every person who buys locally keeps the money circulating locally. Thus, the whole community is made more prosperous because of the effort put forth.

Thrashed by Husband

Because he believed a man was paying attentions to his wife, a Cheshire (England) farmer caught him in a noose and thrashed him, and now has to pay £5 and costs for assault. This little drama of jealousy was staged at the Pickmere farm of Arthur Platt. For helping him in the thrashing, James Wright, a dairy farmer, of Moberley, was also fined £5 and costs, and William Southern, Jr., a farm laborer, was fined 10s. The story was that when Frank Roughsedge, a motor driver, of Wincham, drove his wagon into Platt's farmyard, the farmer seized him. A noose at the end of a rope was put round him, and he was pulled to the ground, where his hands and ankles were tied; then he was dragged to the stable, the rope put through a ring and held by Southern and Wright, and part of his clothing removed. Platt then thrashed him. Roughsedge, in evidence, said he was released after 15 minutes, and when he tried to drive his motor-van away he collapsed. Platt said he gave Roughsedge the choice of publicity in the divorce court or a good beating, and he consented to the thrashing. The farmer added that Roughsedge helped to remove his own clothing, and, after the beating, said: "I deserve it!"

The Prince as Linguist

The Prince of Wales is the best linguist in the Royal Family. His Royal Highness can carry on intimate personal conversations in French, Spanish, German, and Danish, and has a knowledge of other languages, including Welsh. It is said that frequently at York House, when receiving an official visitor from abroad, or some Embassy representative, the Prince will surprise him by speaking in the visitor's language. In fact, His Royal Highness has a place in history as a Royal Linguist, for he was the first English Prince of Wales to address his people in their own historic language. Once, at the International Horse Show, the Prince spoke to half-a-dozen competitors from different countries waiting to go into the arena. Within two or three minutes the Prince had greeted each of them in his own language. Prince George, the youngest of the King's sons, speaks French so well that he served as interpreter in the Navy. He also is a fairly good Spanish scholar. Both the King and Queen speak perfect French. The Queen once earned the rare compliment from Mr. Poincare that she "thought in French"—the ideal of every student.

Human Brain Dated

The age of the human brain is placed by Dr. Frederick Tilney, of Columbia university, at 2,000,000 years. Dr. Tilney's findings, submitted after a five-year research for the Neurological Institute, said that the opposum is 80,000,000 years old, and in that time the brain has developed "practically not at all." A rat's brain is placed at 40,000,000 years and that of a cat at 25,000,000. The human brain, Dr. Tilney reported, is only 25 per cent used, the rest lying dormant awaiting development. "Man has jumped ahead of the other animals by leaps and bounds," the report said, "because of the development of his cortex, particularly in the front part of his brain. This frontal area has enormously developed and has become an added instrumentality which man possesses and the other animals do not. This is the seat of reason, judgment, learning and the higher processes of thought." In this cortex are 14,000,000,000 brain cells.

Steals Bible; Must Read it

The Ten Commandments forbid stealing, but Harry Walker apparently hadn't heard about that until he appeared before Judge Padden at Chicago, for stealing a $7.50 Bible. "It was for my 97-year-old mother, judge," said Walker. "She wrote that her house burned down, and her Bible in it." "Ever read that book?" inquired Judge Padden. "Oh, yes," said Walker, "on my dear old mother's knee." "And your dear old mother never drilled into you the precept of that book, that you should not steal?" "The sweet old thing never thought that necessary in one of my character," answered Walker. "While you work off seven months and a fine of $100 in the Bridewell, you read the Bible—and the Ten Commandments," replied the judge.

More Widows Than Widowers

Ontario has more than twice as many widows as widowers. According to the 1931 census returns there are 118,840 widows as against only 52,225 widowers. Statistics also show that there are only 859,594 unmarried women as compared with 962,790 bachelors. By some strange quip of fate there are 731,191 married men and only 703,232 married women. Divorced men and women are almost equal, there being 1071 men and 1015 women in that post-marital state.

Carries Own Brand

Samuel Tilden Jefferson Metzger of Lansing, Mich., Michigan's commissioner of agriculture, likes a special brand of bran muffins—so he carries them with him. Metzger has startled waitresses in public dining rooms on mornings by ordering eggs and then pulling a package of bran muffins from his pocket. He explains that no restaurant has just the right kind of muffins on its menu.

Oh! I'm Shot

Al Sherman, a deputy-sheriff at Los Angeles, Cal., was waiting in the sheriff's office when a pistol was fired behind him. Then a smart blow on the head gave the officer the logical idea that he was the object of assossination, so he made a grab for his gun. It wasn't there. The pistol had fallen out of his holster and discharged on the floor. The bullet rinped through his trousers and struck a steel locker, dislodging a box. That was what hit him on the head.

Pawn of War 20 Years

Twenty years ago Carl Sandberg left his home in San Francisco to seek adventure on the sea. Landing in Australia, he met a German named William Lange with whom he bunked while the two worked on a timber project. When Lange was killed in an accident, Sandberg wrote his parents in Germany, but the letter was returned. Later Sanberg decided to go to Germany and notify the parents of their son's death. Landing in Germany, government detectives searched him, found Lange's papers on him and, believing he was Lange, ordered him to complete his military service. Sandberg, afraid to admit he was not Lange, complied as the easiest way out of his difficulty. On his first furlough he went to Lange's home. Again mistaken for Lange by the dead man's family, he did not have the heart to tell them their son was dead. As William Lange he went through the war, returned, married and became the father of three children. A few weeks ago he had an opportunity to return to the United States. He was held up by immigration authorities at Gloucester, Mass. Having no proof he is anyone but William Lange, he must return to Germany until he can furnish proof he actually is a United States citizen.

Will Turns Out no Joke

The will of R. F. Leigh, Arkansas farmer, left half his estate to the Red Cross, but as the estate listed consisted only of a pet cat and a pet dog and a mysterious map, Red Cross officials were not much impressed over the legacy. On the map they found inscribed the following directions: "Stand in the front door of my house, look just to the right of the northwest of the corner post of the front porch. Go about 50 yards to a wall of rock. In it you will find two boxes with a few thousand dollars in currency." Another set of directions said: "Go into the rock house in the garden. Over the door is some rock laid on the plate. Take them all down. There you will find some currency, gold and a box with old queer coins in it." The directions were followed out with considerable skepticism. To date $6,000 in cash has been found on the place.

Horses Fool Camera

When moving picture cameramen at Burlington, N.J., planned a demonstration of the superiority of modern fire-fighting equipment over horse-drawn fire engines they arranged to have ice wagon horses pull the old steam fire engine in a test race with a motor fire truck. The race was to be a block long at which time it was thought the motor truck would be safely past the horse-drawn engine. But the horses, carrot-fed and in good condition, would not have it so. They were still ahead at the end of the block, and the race had to be run all over again, extending it to two blocks to give the photographer a chance to show the motor fire truck dashing ahead.

Pin in Stomach Closed

Ten-year-old Marilyn Beigmund of Chicago, apparently was feeling fairly well despite the fact that a physician took her stomach in his hand to close an open safety pin. After making an incision in the child's abdominal wall, Dr. Gustav G. Herpe took hold of Marilyn's stomach, and without the use of instruments manipulated it in such a manner that he was able to close the pin. Later the child regurgitated the closed safety pin and the physician announced she was out of danger.

Just a Lover's Quarrel

Although the newspapers announced that spring was really here, judicial proof wasn't forthcoming until Miss Anna Dolan walked into Judge Frank M. Padden's court at Chicago, and said she didn't wish to prosecute Robert Greiger for shooting her so badly she had to go to a hospital: "You see judge," she said, "we're going to get married." "The newspapers," said the judge, "must be right, case dismissed."

Pays to Read Ads

Because his mother glanced over the classified advertisements in an Oklahoma City paper, Audry A. Black is $1,500 richer. It happened that on this particular day there was an ad. asking all known heirs of a Springfield, Ill., man who died six years ago to report to the administrator of the estate. The Illinois man was a great uncle of Black's whose share in the estate was $1,500 which soon would have reverted to the state had there been no claim made upon it. Black says he is going to read all classified ads. in the paper from now on.

A Freak Pig

An interesting freak was brought to light at the farm of Mr. James McMillian, Palmerston, Ont. On going to the barn to take care of a litter of pigs which had just arrived, Mr. McMillian noticed an odd looking fellow among the group. On a close inspection he found the pig to have a trunk and ears something on the plan of an elephant. It also had one tooth which protruded out of the top of its upper lip similar to that of a wild hog. The freak lived for a few minutes and then expired. Mr. McMillian regretted the loss, stating the pig would have been of great value to any circus, or side show.

Such Waste

This all, of course, happened in Chicago: George Kapoulis, the proprietor of a restaurant, thought he shot and killed one of two men who staged a $50 holdup in his establishment. So did the police, for when they responded to an alarm they found the victim, lying face down and with a large red stain on the back of his coat. So they took him to the hospital, where to the surprise of everyone, including the victim, not a scratch was found on him. The red stain was catsup, acquired from leaning up against the counter.

Plants Possess Many Qualities

In South Africa there has been found a bulb which yields a poison so deadly that the mere smell of it causes death.

There is something hideously fascinating in the study of poisons, of which several hundred different kinds are known to science. Yet of these only about forty have ever figured in murder trials and at least sixty are so rare that they do not figure in commerce.

The late Dr. Grezhoff was one of the few men of science who devoted all their energies to poison research. He wrote that there are whole orders of plants of which we know nothing chemically, and of which not a single specimen has been analysed.

Some of his experiments produced most curious and interesting results. For instance, he found that the leaves of pampas grass are intensely poisonous because they contain hydrocyanic acid, and that a single leaf of the common plant-tree contains enough of this poison to kill a sparrow.

"The Devil's Cherry"

Of common British plants about 200 are poisonous. They include such well-known plants as antirrhinum (snapdragon), daffodil, and yew. The worst of the lot is probably the well-named "deadly" night-shade, the fat, black fruit of which is very like a cherry. Indeed, in Buckinghamshire this plant is known among village folk as "The Devil's Cherry."

Next, or perhaps equal in virulence, is the hemlock. All the nightshades are very poisonous. The potato, belonging to the same family, has edible roots but poisonous fruit.

Life and death, too, are strangely blended in the mandioca or cassava plant, from which we get our excellent tapioca. Cattle eat the stalks and leaves, the roots ground to pulp feed millions of Indians, but the juice is so deadly that thirty-five drops will kill a strong man within five minutes. Yet this same juice fermented and bottled, forms a wholesome drink.

Plants That Cause Blindness

The home of cassava is South America. Here, too, grows the terrible manikoa, or "Dead Man's Bush," which is a narcotic far more powerful than either opium or hemp. It is little known to white folk, but much used by the "medicine men" of the Amazon basin.

Australia has a plant called the "Finger Cherry," common in some parts of Queensland, the fruit of which is pretty and not ill-tasting. But it has the shocking effect of causing blindness. There is some mysterious property which completely destroys the optic nerves.

Another blinding plant is the "Asclepias Gigantea" of the Upper Nile. The least drop of its milky juice in contact with the eye causes a terrible inflammation which ends in blindness. The wood of this shrub is very light and is often used by natives to make rafts.

New Zealand's worst plant is the "ongaonga," a kind of nettle which grows to a height of eight or ten feet. The underside of the leaf is set with fine hairs which are as poisonous as the sting of a hornet. A settler's dog chasing a cat through a thicket of this stuff was pricked in the tongue and died the same night.

South Sea Secrets

"Many native tribes posses secrets of poisons of which white men know little or nothing. For instance, the people of the Trobriands, a group of South Sea Islands, obtain from the gall bladder of a fish a secretion so deadly that a banana pierced with a thorn dipped in the poison will kill the man who eats the fruit within a very few hours." The authority for this statement is Miss Beatrice Grimshaw.

Gipsies have knowledge of many strange poisons unknown to science. Some of these are obtained from toadstools of different kinds. Prakti is a particularly deadly gipsy poison which kills in a hideously cruel manner. It causes difficulty in breathing which ends in a slow and terrible suffocation.

This was one of the many little known poisons used by that terrible gang of insurance poisoners which worked in England during the 'nineties of the last century. The head of this gang was a brilliant chemist, who died before sufficient evidence was collected to justify his arrest.

Picturesque Old Stile Lives Only in Memory

Where are the turnstiles of older days? A traveling man who motors over most of the highways and byways of New England says he does not know where there is a single one. Generally they were built into a fenceline to debar vagrant cattle and permit the passage of humans. No two exactly alike, they were picturesque components of stone walls and rail fences. Generally there was a step or two of stone which elevated the stile base a foot or two above the ground.

To be sure, there are plenty of commercialized turnstiles at the entrances of fair grounds and amusement parks to facilitate the collection of tickets and keep out gate-crashers. These, however, have but slight relationship to the rustic stiles of good, immortalized in song and story as trysting places.

A bacteriologist at Pittsburg has analysed a mud pie with which his little boy had been playing. The following is the alarming result of his investigations:—

No. of germs:—Diphtheria, 1,800,000; measles, 2,450,000; smallpox, 900,000; lockjaw, 3,600,000; dysentry, 900,000; pneumonia, 500,000; tuberculosis, 600,000. It is quite evident that it is no world for us.

National Dairy Council Has Constitution Changed for Farmers

Farmer Now Has Better Representation on Board—W. F. Stephen Retires as Secretary—Council Passes Many Resolutions in Interest of Dairy Produce Sales—Lower Production Costs Featured at Meetings

Revision of Constitution allowing an equal representation of producers and operators on the council, the consideration of vital problems of the dairy industry affecting both producers, milk distributers and creamery men and other phases of the industry, resignation of W. F. Stephen as secretary and the appointment of Allan C. Fraser of Calgary, Alta., as successor to Mr. Stephen, were the main questions under discussion at the Annual Meeting of the National Dairy Council of Canada, at the Royal York Hotel, Toronto, on April 5th and 6th.

It was the opinion of those in attendance whether members or not, that it was one of the best meetings ever held, and was ably directed by the president, Mr. W. H. Forster of Hamilton. Members were present from the Maritimes to Alberta and a number of those interested in the problems to be discussed were present and took part in the deliberations. The questions on the agenda were real live ones and discussed most intelligently. The resolutions will reveal the nature of the questions discussed and the action thereon.

The president in his report outlined a progressive program and appealed to the milk producers to eliminate the "boarder" cow and produce milk as economically as possible. He appealed to the operators to study economies in their manufacturing methods and so manufacture and distribute for less money.

The past president, Mr. F. E. M. Robinson of Richmond, Que., gave an address featuring dairy economics. He appealed to all interested in dairying to adopt such a policy and add to it courage, industry and thrift.

The Secretary, W. F. Stephen, reviewed the activities of the Council last year, accomplished through greatly depleted funds. He emphasized the great amount of publicity given the food value of milk and its products, through school teachers, public health nurses, radio talks and through womans organization and other methods.

The following questions were discussed and resolutions passed re same —"Reducing the cost of milk production"—through better cows, herd recording, handling of surplus milk, producer organizations and zoning milk producing areas.

The "Solving of milk distributor problems" embraced a price fixing commission, the handling of milk as a public utility and the detrimental effect of chain store competition, especially when milk or butter is put on sale as "leaders" on the dairy business and the loss is eventually forced on the producer.

On the second day "Cheese Problems" were uppermost. Several addresses referred to a possible incerase in the make of cheese this season, and a larger export to the United Kingdom where cheese receives a premium over other imported cheese.

Dr. J. F. Booth, of the Economic Branch of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, gave the result of a comprehensive survey of cheese factories in Ontario and Quebec last fall. This survey revealed that the cost of making cheese in a small factory was more than in the large factory.

Mr. J. F. Singleton, Dominion Dairy Commissioner, Ottawa, gave a most enlightening address on the butter and cheese situation. There were several encouraging features of this address.

The grading of print butter was recommended, and uniform cream grading regulations advocated between all the provinces.

Improved and heavier milk cans was demanded and the maker of cans was present and exhibited a new type can. This new type can was demonstrated at the request of the Council who called this matter to the manufacturers some week ago, with the result that a new and heavier can, with better tinning, will be put on the market.

The centralizer type of creamery was discussed but as there is little evidence of its operations as yet no action was taken.

In connection with ice cream it was felt that the 6 per cent sales tax was unjust and an endeavour is being made to get some redress from the government.

The resignation of W. F. Stephen as secretary was accepted and a resolution of appreciation of his 6 years of faithful services was passed. Mr. Allan C. Fraser of Calgary, Alta., was appointed as Mr. Stephen's successor. Mr. Fraser as an ex-banker, has had wide experience in work among farmers.

Mr. W. H. Forster of Hamilton, and P. C. Colquhoun of Maple Creek, Sask., will continue to hold the offices of president and vice-president respectively. These men took office January 1st, last.

The following were elected to the executive-producers—A. Hector Cutten, Truro, N. S.; W. L. Carr, Huntingdon, Que.; W. H. Marritt, secretary Ontario Whole Milk Producers' Association, Toronto; P. C. Colquhoun, Maple Creek, Sask.; Norman Clarke, Didsbury, Alta.; Manufacturers—Col. C. B. Price, Montreal, Que.; W. H. Forster, Hamilton, Ont.; J. M. Carruthers, Winnipeg, Man.; Robert Barbour, Yorkton, Sask. and R. U. Hurford, Courtney, B. C.

The following resolutions were passed:

Exports of Cheese and Concentrated milk

Whereas the Dominion Dairy Commissioner has outlined plans of his department for the betterment of the dairy industry through increased exports of cheese, condensed and evaporated milk, therefore be it resolved that the National Dairy Council record its approval and appreciation.

Grading of Print Butter

Whereas butter in prints is sold under brand names and not on grade,

Therefore be it resolved that the Dominion and Provincial Dairy Commissioners be asked to investigate and give consideration to retail butter being sold on grade.

Butter and Cheese Factories

Whereas there is now existing a sufficient number of cheese and butter factories to give a complete service to the producer throughout Canada, and

Whereas the establishing of more factories would result in the duplication of existing facilities thereby increasing the gathering and manufacturing costs of the product and the lowering of returns to the producer.

Be it resolved that the Ministers of Agriculture of the various provinces be urged to issue licenses very sparingly.

Chain Stores

Whereas, the practice of selling milk and cream as "leaders" in retail stores at special prices has resulted in the lowering of these products to uneconomic levels;

And whereas, this practice is bound to result in lower prices to the producer and serious detriment to the whole industry.

Be it resolved, that the National Dairy Council of Canada, place on record its strong disapproval of this practice and urge on all concerned the principle that stores should only handle milk and cream as a convenience to the public and that these products be sold at wagon prices.

Low Level of Prices

Resolved that the National Dairy Council herein assembled in annual meeting, do hereby go on record as recognizing that the present price level of dairy products are such that the primary producer is placed in a position whereby it is impossible to maintain a reasonable standard of living, to maintain his properties without deterioration. That the National Dairy Council shall lend its efforts in every way possible to equalize the value of the farmers' products, with the costs of other factors that enter into their every day life.

Zoning Producer Areas

Whereas in the United States certain of the larger cities have a system by which the areas from which they draw their milk supply are defined by Health Departments, resulting in economic benefit and a better controlled milk supply.

Be it resolved that the National Dairy Council recommend to the Provincial Boards of Health and the Health Departments of the large cities in each province, that the question of zoning the cities' milk supply be given study and consideration.

That in view of the existing provisions in the New Zealand Trade Agreement, we the National Dairy Council thank the government for the efforts taken during the past year to protect the interests of the Canadian butter industry, and would urge that in the consideration of any new trade agreements affecting this industry, adequate provision be made to protect the Canadian butter industry, as this Council is of the opinion that with a reasonable stabilization of our domestic market, the Canadian producers can fully supply the butter required for home consumption.

That whereas considerable loss has been suffered by milk producers because of the financial failure of producers of milk; and

Whereas, a plan of bonding purchasers of milk has been successfully put in force by a Provincial Government in Canada, that this National Dairy Council recommend to all Provincial Governments where such bonding is not in effect, that some plan of bonding purchasers of milk to ensure that producers of milk and cream will be paid for their products, be put into effect.

Whereas there is a generally unsettling and price-depressing result from the purchase of relief milk from dairies which are not legitimately in the retail milk business, and from producers who are not members of the Producer Associations, and

Whereas, this milk is offered and purchased at prices far below the actual cost of production on properly supervised and inspected farms, and

Whereas the dairy farmer is being prejudiced by this unfair competition, be it resolved

That the National Dairy Council give leadership in a movement to overcome this difficulty through a proper presentation of the advantages of distributing this relief milk in such a way as to least disturb the normal channels of trade.

Quebec Road Map For 1933 is Ready

Copies of the new Province of Quebec road map for 1933 were handed to the newspapermen Friday by the Hon. J. E. Perrault, Minister of Roads and Mines.

This map, the Minister informs us, is ready for distribution to motorists of the province, as well as in the divers information bureaus in the United States and sister provinces.

The map differs somewhat from previous issues, first of all in point of general makeup. The format is the same as that of the 1932 map, but the color scheme is changed. The ground of the new map is pale green; the lakes, rivers, and geographic inscriptions are shown in blue; the main highways are indicated by red lines and the secondary highways by dark green lines; the names of localities appear in black. The design of the map is entirely new, and the lettering is larger and consequently more legible than in previous issues.

The ensemble is very attractive, marking a notable improvement on the map of 1932. Besides its other innovations, the 1933 map contains an index of all localities shown.

It will be recalled that last fall the minister made a number of changes in the numbering of highways and that several highways formerly considered as in the second class were added to the main system and given each its number. It is therefore important that the motorist provide himself with a copy of the new map.

Besides the road map proper, the highway map of the province constitutes a veritable encyclopaedia of what the motorists should know in travelling the highways. There is probably not another publication in existence which holds so great a fund of information within so small a space.

Following is a summary of the contents of Mr. Perrault's map:

Complete list of the main highways of the province, with their numbers and distances from end to end; customs regulations; explanation of highway signs; the leading provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act; list of principal information bureaus operated by the Department of Roads; table of distances between the leading towns and cities in the province of Quebec and various other points both within the province and in the United States and sister provinces; list of publications of the Department of Roads; figures on our highways system; fish and game calendar; particulars on hotels of the province, the Laurentides National Park, the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways, steamship lines; maps showing the principal streets in the 21 most populous centres of the province, etc., etc.

Hon. Mr. Perrault informs us that the distribution of the map will begin immediately and that copies will be addressed this week to thousands of automobile clubs, chambers of commerce, tourist associations, newspapers, etc., in the United States which are in correspondence with his department. Five hundred thousand copies will be distributed between now and the month of August.

The highway map is one of our leading tourist publications, and the one which contributes most towards attracting visitors. This map is also recognized as one of the most complete and best conceived maps in America.

THREW AWAY HIS STICK

When Sciatica Yielded to Kruschen

There can be no doubt that this man has finished walking with a stick, for it is now four years since he discarded it.

He writes:—"For 18 months I suffered with chronic sciatica and rheumatism, and was unable to walk without the aid of a stick. But after taking Kruschen Salts for a short time, I was able to throw away the stick. It is now four years since this happened, and I have had no return of the complaint, and have not lost a day from work. I shall never be without Kruschen Salts, as they are worth their weight in gold. You can use this letter as you please, as I can honestly recommend Kruschen Salts to any sufferer."—C. F.

If the eliminating organs become sluggish, they permit harmful uric acid to accumulate and deposit itself in the tissues, muscles and joints in the form of needle-pointed crystals, which, piercing the nerve sheaths, cause excruciating pains of sciatica. The six salts in Kruschen stimulate the eliminating organs to healthy, regular action. Mischievous uric acid is then given no chance to collect.

Services Conducted by Rev. H. P. Maitland.—

Contrary to expectation, services were conducted on Sunday by the Interim Moderator, who intimated the need of a meeting of the two congregations, to formulate a call to our incoming minister, according to the regular procedure of church law. Meeting to be held on Wednesday of this week.

Mr. Maitland was entertained on Sunday by Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Orr.

Mr. L. Fulford of the Presbyterian College, was an over-night guest of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Orr on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Robertson were the guests of Mrs. Wm. Black of Outremont on Friday, afterwards attending the Presbyterian Convocation in the David Morrice Hall.

Miss Reta Robertson was the recipient of a "Sunshine Box," containing many dainty gifts from the "Akita" group of C. G. I. T., also a beautiful bed lamp from the Hannah Sever Mission Band, organizations in which she is an active member. We are glad to report a very favourable progress towards recovery of health, after many weeks of illness.

Mrs. A. Buchanan and little daughter are visiting Mrs. Buchanan, Havelock.

The quick thaw last week, melting the surface ice and snow, caused the creeks and gulleys to overflow. Roads were washed, and outbuildings in the wake of the running water, were soon surrounded. This, followed by a heavy rainfall, caused the water in the river to rise much higher than is usual at this time of the year.

STRONGER, SAFER CONSTRUCTION

GUM CUSHIONS
An Extra Value

ROADCRAFT Tires have Cushions of pure gum rubber moulded in between the plies of cord fabric, making a "bearing" that reduces friction and wear at these points as effectively as ball bearings do in machinery.

ROADCRAFT Tire Treads are carefully designed to give the maximum grip of the road surface, thus giving extra traction and braking power.

GREATER MILEAGE, MORE VALUE

ROADCRAFT TIRES — made by Gutta Percha — will cost you less and carry you farther than any similarly priced tire, with greater safety in every mile.

The famous Gum Cushion reinforcing construction protects the ROADCRAFT TIRE from the bruising road shocks which break down the cord fabric in ordinary tires. No other tire at this price has Gum Cushions. The Resisto Tread, rubber insulated cords, reinforced side walls, extra tread width — all these extra values give you longer tire life and save you money.

Eggs in Variety of Dishes

With the market reports telling us that eggs are cheaper now than they have been in many years, it behooves all of us to make good use of them. Regardless of price, however, eggs deserve special consideration on account of their versatility and food value.

The food value of eggs is remarkably high. Vitamins, mineral content and calories are of noteworthy value. They are a rich source of vitamin A and the D vitamin which is found principally in fish oils is present in the egg yolk in considerable amount.

As a source of minerals eggs hold an important place, too. Although poor in calcium, they are rich in iron and phosphorous, two minerals essential for good nutrition.

When it comes to calories, one medium sized egg, weighing about two and one-half ounces in the shell, supplies 25 calories of protein and 45 of fat, making a total of 70 calories.

Egg Appetizer

Two hard cooked eggs, 1 teaspoon anchovy paste, ¼ teaspoon salt, ⅛ teasooon paprika, 4 small rounds of toast, 4 teaspoons tomato catsup, 4 ripe olives, watercress, pearl onions.

Cut eggs in half crosswise, cutting off the rounded ends so each half will stand up. Remove yolks and mix well with anchovy paste, salt and paprika. Refill whites and put each on a round of toast with minced watercress. Cover eggs with tomato catsup and sprinkle three or four pearl onions over each serving. Garnish with ripe olives and serve.

Baked in Cheese Sauce

2 cups medium thick white sauce, 1 cup grated cheese, 4 eggs, ½ cup tomato catsup.

Add cheese to white sauce while hot and pour into shallow buttered baking dish. Break into this the eggs, taking care not to break the yolks and spacing the eggs carefully. Cover dish and bake in a moderate oven until eggs are firm. Put two tablespoons catsup over each egg and bake, uncovered, until catsup is hot. Serve from baking dish.

Cut hard cooked eggs in halves crosswise. Remove yolks and stand the white cup thus formed in each ramekin. Strain yolks through sieve or ricer. Cream half of the sifted yolks with butter, add onion, parsley, salt and cayenne to taste, shape into balls, the size of the original yolks and fill in the cups. Add the remaining yolk to the white sauce, pour over eggs, sprinkle with cheese and place in oven to brown.

A tasty dish make be made by adding some haddock, leftover salmon or almost any kind of fish, excepting the smoked varieties, to some scrambled eggs. Chopped ham, tongue or mushrooms are also good.

Baby's Wardrobe Demands Much Thought and Care

Psychologists and interior decorators seem to have agreed that when the modern babe opens its eyes, it shall look out upon a snug, comfortable, beautiful world. No sour note of depression is to be allowed to disturb the contented gurgles of the newly-born. And in baby's new fashions the same happy note is sounded to the full, and we find that no long flannels which give no warmth on the shoulders, but weigh down the little legs, no binders and body belts such as we wore, are included in the layette of the pride of the modern home.

Baby's garments provide equally distributed warmth and ensure ample freedom of movement for growing limbs, avoiding tight belts and bands that cause restriction and frequently need renewing.

Vests and Bootees

First comes the long-sleeved vest of wool or silk and wool that is like elastic in the way it gives. The pull-over kind is good, but the wrap-around style is even better since it is doubled snugly across baby's chest and ties with the minimum of effort. There are no bulges or uncomfortable lumps that baby so dislikes in these vests. The vest is pinned to the square in front to avoid any gap and woollen bootees with rounded knees that reach well up on the leg, a little dress and dainty bib in the daytime—or at least when baby is awake—(the dress replaced by a flannelette nightie during sleeping hours) complete the infant's costume. During the cold weather the little one may wear a pretty woollen or flannel jacket but this is not necessary unless the house is inclined to be of a lower temperature than a baby requires.

Crepe Binder

A binder is needed for the first week of life and for this a three-inch crepe or light woollen bandage should be used. The crepe combines elasticity with firmness, so does not get out of place. It will not be missed in any way when no longer needed. Belts, if tight enough to keep in place are restricting and weakening, and if they are loose they ride up and become most uncomfortable, causing colic and restricting breathing.

Further, since coddling is detrimental to baby's health, three even layers of clothing is our aim, and this cannot be the case if body belts are worn.

The following is a suggested layette for the baby of today:

4 vests, 3 dozen squares (diapers), 4 nighties, 4 pairs long bootees, a shawl, 3 dresses, 3 or 3 slips, 4 woollen or flannel jackets, silk crepe or flannellette wrapper, pads for bassinette blankets, quilt, bibs, and safety pins, in various sizes.

Nainsook or broadcloth are good wearing materials for the tiny dresses and silk crepe is always a favorite. Woollen garments should be of a close mesh to prevent diminutive fingers from becoming entangled, and remember the best wool weighs the lightest, so don't be fooled by things that feel heavy. They probably lack the warmth the lighter garment has.

All the shops that cater to needs of infants have lists of layettes at different prices which they will glady send or give the expectant mother for her perusal and consideration and any subsequent advice regarding her baby's wardrobe may be had at any time upon request.

Obituary

Miss M. A. McBride Passes Away

Many people in Montreal and vicinity are feeling a keen sense of loss in the passing away of Miss Margaret McBride who died Saturday. Miss McBride, a native of Dewittville, Que., for some years followed the profession of a trained nurse; then she studied remedial massage in Philadelphia where she graduated with highest honours. She returned to Montreal and was a pioneer in this branch of medical treatment. During the war she did excellent work for returned soldiers, and many a man today owes the use of a disabled limb to her skilful and generous care. She recognized neither creed nor social status in those who appealed to her for help. Her genial and generous disposition endeared her to all who knew her and although she no longer walks in our midst she will be remembered by many to whom she was a true and valued friend. Two sisters, Miss L. M. McBride and Mrs. E. D. Lewis, survive. She was a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Charles McBride. Interment was made in Ormstown, on Tuesday, April 11th.

The late Mrs. Wm. Smith, Sr.

The community was saddened on Thursday to hear of the death of Mrs. William Smith, Sr., who passed away at her home here on Wednesday night, April 5th, at the age of 73 yrs. Although not confined to bed only for a number of days at the last, she had been in poor health since last fall, and on Friday evening, March 31st, was suddenly taken ill. Eliza Kyle was united in marriage to William Smith forty-five years ago, she was a daughter of the late Mr, and Mrs. Thomas Kyle of Robson Street, and made her home there until her marriage. She leaves to mourn her loss, her husband, and six sons, Charles, James, Albert, John, William, Ralph, and two brothers, Thomas Kyle of Robson Street, and James Kyle of Denver, Colorado, and one sister, Mrs. Mary Smith of Roxham, and four grandchildren, Reggie, Margie, Myrtle and Ross.

The funeral service was held on Saturday afternoon at her home, conducted by the Rev. E. E. Dawson of Lacolle. The large congregation testified to the esteem in which the deceased was held.

Interment took place in the Roxham cemetery.

Wesley Family

The Wesleys afforded a pretty example of two qualities linked through several generations—music and religious fervor. Two of the Wesley grandfathers were expelled from their benefices as nonjurors. Charles and the great John showed both qualities in a high degree. Then comes Sebastian, a great composer of church music. His son, who died fairly recently, was a clergyman whose passion was music.

Special Protection For Flock of Rare Geese

Only one known flock of greater snow geese is still left in this country and these birds are being given the most careful protection both by officials of the United States and Canada through the action of the migratory bird treaty. This lone flock spends its winters in North Carolina and Virginia, where local game wardens give it protection.

With the coming of spring weather in April the birds feel the urge to go north and usually fly directly northward until they reach the St. Lawrence river. Here they turn northeast and follow the river to a group of small islands, where every year they stop off for a few days to rest and feed. While taking their "breather" they are under the care of the Quebec mounted police, who send a patrol to the islands.

Hunters in the past have taken an unfair advantage of the birds through resort to camouflage. The stream at this season is usually full of floating ice and the hunters dressed in white and riding in white motorboats, approach close to the flocks before the birds realize that an enemy is at hand. Because of the rarity of the greater snow geese, particular pains are being taken to perpetuate the flock and perhaps bring about an increase which will later permit hunting of the birds.

Other birds found on the islands with the greater snow geese are the Canada goose, brant, black duck, pintails, mallards and teals.

Let The Buyer Beware

"Let the buyer beware" is an old proverb meaning that in affairs of business it is perfectly ethical for the man who makes the sale to be dishonest; it is "up to" the buyer not to let himself be cheated.

This rule will, of course, serve to keep the buyer alert. He will learn to keep his eyes and ears and mind wide open, lest the dealer deceive him. He cannot afford to go to sleep when he does business, or business will "do" him. That is an advantage.

The disadvantages, however, are disastrous. If business is to be transacted according to the maxim, "Let the buyers beware," we cannot trust one another.

"I am afraid he is trying to put one over on me," we would always caution ourselves.

Besides, this attitude of always being on guard against possible fraud involves a waste of time, precious time that ought to be devoted to the perfection of one's own particular task. That is more true today than ever before, because this is the age of intense specialization. To become a master in my profession requires concentration with the result that I know very little of the other man's occupation. Rarely does a good teacher in these days know enough about shoes and clothes so that the tradesmen could not cheat him.

And for that reason we must be honest with one another so that we can trust one another. Dishonesty always was destructive, but especially to the modern system of business. And when we co-operate with one another in honesty of heart, one greater than we always works with us.

HERE'S THE EVIDENCE OF "BLOOD-TESTED" PATIENTS TO PROVE---

That Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Do Quickly and Safely Build Rich Red Blood, Create New Energy and Restore Strength

If you are pale, tired-out, easily irritated—if your blood is thin, appetite poor—don't be discouraged. There's a scientifically proven remedy that will quickly and safely restore your rundown, anaemic condition.

Just recently a reputable physician, at the request of the owners of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, made a scientific test of a group of typical rundown, anaemic people.

Blood from these people were tested for haemoglobin content and for the number of red corpuscles before and after taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. In every case Dr. Williams' Pink Pills increased the haemoglobin satisfactorily. In some cases the results were remarkable, the haemoglobin being increased double the percentage normally to be expected in a month's time. In every case where the blood count was below normal, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills increased the number of red corpuscles.

When it is understood that it is the haemoglobin in the blood that clears the system of poisons and carries life-giving oxygen from the lungs and nutriment from the digestive organs to the innermost cells of every organ and tissue of the body, then you can realize the value to you of the remarkable haemoglobin-building power of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

When it is further understood that the red corpuscles are the workers in the blood stream and the carriers of the haemoglobin, you can still further appreciate the value of a preparation that can increase the number of red blood corpuscles as the "blood tests" proved Dr. Williams' Pink Pills could do.

All patients in the "blood-tested" group had quick and safe improvement in their pep, vigor, color, strength and general health. The physician said the results were remarkable.

Remember, a blood test is infallible. It tells the truth without fear or favor. This group of patients* furnish absolute, positive and convincing proof of the merit of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. What Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do for others they can do for you.

*The names of the patients, records of the tests, physician's name, are on file, and can be produced as evidence of the truth of the above statement.

Wool For Quilts

Warm, light bedding is needed, even if the price of wool is at a zero point. Ten pounds of wool in the rough will yield enough wool for a bat averaging from three to four pounds.

The following methods yield good results:

Prepare a lukewarm suds, using 1½ bars of a pure or alkaline-free soap. Work the wool about in the lukewarm suds with a suction stamper. Turn off the dirty suds and put the wool into another lukewarm suds prepared as the first. Rinse in lukewarm water until water is clear. The amount of soap varies with the condition of the fleece. Wool may be put into light-weight, cloth bags, to aid in the removal of moisture. These may be suspended between the bars of a clothes horse to permit speedy drying. Wool so treated will be white and soft in texture. Carding fluffs the wool. Next it is put into the bat covering.

An ant was gazing longingly at the carcass of a dead horse when a rum runner's car passed. A case of liquor bounced off the car and the bottles broke. The ant immediately proceeded to quench his thirst. Then, grabbing the horse by the tail, he shouted lustily: "Come on, big boy, we're going home!"

"I have BABY'S OWN TABLETS in the house continually—I would not be without them. I have given them to each of my four children from earliest infancy. One of the reasons why I value BABY'S OWN TABLETS so highly is because they can be given with perfect safety to even the youngest infant. I have recommended them to dozens of Mothers. For children's ailments I do not think their equal can be found." So writes Mrs. Douglas Blackadar, Hebron, N.S.—and many other Mothers relate similar experiences in treating their children.

BABY'S OWN TABLETS are recommended by grateful Mothers for teething fevers, colds, colic, constipation, disordered digestion and sleeplessness. The Tablets are inexpensive, easy to take and thoroughly reliable. And they are absolutely SAFE for even the youngest or most delicate child. Thursday

The House of Lords tonight unanimously passed a motion previously adopted by the House of Commons to appoint a joint select committee to examine the Government's proposed scheme for a federal constitution for India. The Lords had debated the motion three days.

Lord Irwin, former Viceroy of India, speaking for the motion, said he went to India without predisposition to accept or press claims of that country's inhabitants, but that on his arrival he found conditions which compelled him to change his mind. He now believed, he said, it would be difficult to visualize a better scheme for India's government than that laid down in the administration's proposal.

The House of Commons tonight gave third reading to the Government Russian imports embargo bill by a vote of 291 to 41, and sent it to the House of Lords. The measure is expected to become effective April 18 on expiration of the present Anglo-Russian trade agreement.

Opposition Liberals who abstained from voting on second reading of the bill last night supported it tonight when the Government assured the House it would be effective for a period of only three months. This was regarded as proof its provisions, calling for executive power to impose an embargo on all imports of goods from the Soviet Union, would be applied only as a weapon in the case of six British electrical engineers held by Moscow secret police on charges of espionage and sabotage.

Sir John Simon, Foreign Secretary, who wound up debate for the Government, said it was hoped the wide powers contained in the measure would never be used. This, he added, however, rested with the Soviet authorities.

Friday

An amber flood landed like the Pilgrim Fathers on the rockbound coast of the United States last night and proceeded westward to the sunny slopes of California over 19 states.

But "new beer's morn" dawned chill and rainy on Manhattan Island, formerly sold to the Dutch by the Indians for a consideration and a bottle of whiskey.

The Brewers' Association, headed by Col. Jacob Ruppert, owner of the New York Yankees as well as a famous brewing establishment, decided the inauguration of 3.2 beer with "whoopee" would be bad for the cause of moderation and declared against pushing the laden trucks to retailers until 6 a.m.

New York was all ready for a celebration. Gay balloons depended from streamers in the dine and dance palaces along Broadway. Man's old-time tap rooms had put out nice new red checked tablecloths—Jack's, for instance, on 45th. Yet in these places only the prohibition brew could be quaffed. And it was.

However, there were pushcarts on Times Square peddling "beer."

A funeral procession with "Old Man Prohibition" as the corpse, passed along. Numbers of persons were singing in the rain, their singing possibly induced by the passage of the ban on beer, more probably by the speak-easy variety of about six or eight per cent. always available in Manhattan's 33,000 illicit places of refreshment.

Vital statistics just issued show an increase of 11,825 in the excess of births over deaths in France in 1932 compared with 1931, but this improvement was arrived at because the death rate dropped more than the birth rate.

Deaths in 1932 totalled 660,883 compared with 680,710 in 1931, whereas there were 722,246 births in 1932 compared with 730,240 the previous year.

As do other countries, France also shows a decrease in marriages and an increase in divorces. Marriages with 326,358 in 1931, and divorces 21,848 compared with 21,212.

The Week-End

The state of Western Australia on Saturday elected a Labor Government in place of the union administration led by Premier Sir James Mitchell and decided in a referendum to secede from the Commonwealth.

The election, even with results incomplete, gave the Laborites a clear majority over the Nationalists and Country parties which had formed the Coalition Government.

R. L. Butler, state Liberal leader, was prepared to assume office as South Australia's premier, following defeat of Premier L. L. Hill's Labor administration, in South Australia, in Saturday's general election.

Counting of ballots was still incomplete in some outlying districts, but available results indicated the Liberals would have at least 30 of the 46 seats in the Legislature.

Mr. Butler is a son of former Premier Sir Richard Butler. He is a farmer and has tried ever since he entered politics in 1915 to serve the interests of Agriculturists.

France's proposed substitute for Premier Mussolini's four-power peace plan was ready to-night to be forwarded to London and Rome, and it was expected that a copy would be handed unofficially tomorrow to Norman H. Davis, United States Ambassador-at-large.

The French proposal is a draft agreement setting forth the various points France made in objecting to the Mussolini scheme. The French would have four-power collaboration operate completely within the framework of the League of Nations.

Sweeping forward with the force of a tidal wave, the French-Canadian Charities campaign in Montreal went over the top in the last few hours of the drive tonight and, when all reports had been tabulated, a total of $175,566 was reported which was $5,566 over the objective.

At 6 o'clock, the most optimistic tabulation showed approximately $160,000 but, when word went out that the campaign was "falling down" in the last few hours, there was a widespread response which increased each hour until the final returns were made shortly before 11 o'clock.

The speed plane "Red Bullet," a powerful little ship painted entirely red, broke the world's seaplane record today with Francesco Agello at the controls. For five laps over Lake Garda, at Densenzano, Italy, Agello made an average of 426.5 miles an hour.

The previous record, set by Lieut. George H. Stainforth, of England, in 1931, was 408.8.

Agello reached a maximum speed of 432.83 in his fourth lap, and his minimum was 421.66 in the third lap. Air officers said a new engine would be installed in an attempt to reach a speed of 700 kilometres, or 437.5 miles.

Agello was a member of the Italian Schneider Cup team in 1929. His successful attempt climaxed a series of such efforts at the high speed airport here in which several craft were lost. Last year Lieut. Neri made an unofficial 422 miles an hour and a few weeks later he was killed.

The "Red Bullet" has twin engines in tandem developing a maximum of 2,800 horsepower. The two propellors turned in opposite directions on a sleeved shaft in front. The machine was intended for the last Schneider Cup race, but was not completed in time. Agello, who is 31, was born in Lodi.

Mr. and Mrs. Archie Marshall entertained a number of friends on Thursday evening at a sugar party. Cards and dancing were enjoyed during the evening.

To Thread Wool

When embroidering in yarn it is very exasperating at times to get the yarn through the eye of the needle. Thread the needle first with fine thread doubled. Then catch the yarn through the loop in the doubled end of the thread and pull it through the eye of the needle.

Covey Hill

Overproduction Arrested.—

Along certain lines for a time at least overproduction seems to be lessening. There is a great scarcity of young pigs in the country and the price has climbed as high as $2.50 in some quarters. Buyers are finding some difficulty in filling their orders for syrup. The flow of sap so far has been disappointing, but a more copious run is hoped for during the present week.

Speaker Delayed by Flood.—

The untoward experiences sometimes incident to a trip from Montreal to the Hill during the spring freshet were realized by Mr. Kenneth W. House who had charge of the Presbyterian service last Sunday. After being misdirected many miles out of his way, his car stalled in the flooded waters of the English River north-east of Russeltown. He managed to back out and took the McComb road, from the mud of which his machine had to be extricated by men with poles. These delays left him too late for the morning service at Hemmingford, but at the Hill Church his hearers were favoured by an inspiring discourse on the topic, "Controlled Thought." Mr. House, who was accompanied by Miss McDonald, a young lady from Nova Scotia, returned to town via Hemmingford. He graduated last week and is soon to be ordained.

Mrs. A. J. Hamill spent several days last week with friends in Roxham.

"There is no disease in the world for which alcohol is a cure . . . More to the point is the fact that while it cannot be said to cure any disease, it does undeniably cause thousands of cases of disease, all of them fatal in the long run. Its use is ruinous to kidneys, liver, heart and the smaller blood vessels, and gives rise to that most common fatality, high blood pressure. All this has been proved by innumerable tests. Two men may play tennis or chess equally well. Give one of them a single glass of beer and he will be easily defeated by the one who abstains. Start ten men of comparable vigor up a mountainside, five of whom have taken drinks as a stimulation. These five will fail in the climb. So mild a drink as beer will lessen their physical and mental prowess by ten to fifteen per cent. It has been shown that one spoonful of liquor lessens the ability to form quick judgment and to act on that judgment. Giving a driver alcohol endangers life. Alcohol is a habit-forming drug. Its high potency as a dangerous drug is a million times more hurtful than any conceivable accruing advantage. It has no place in medical practice." —Dr. Howard A. Kelly, Professor Emeritus of Johns Hopkins University.

A great educative campaign against alcoholism has been undertaken by a committee attached to the Mexican Ministry of Industry, Commerce and Labour, in collaboration with the Ministry of Public Instruction. It has introduced in 20,000 federal schools a weekly hour of temperance instruction, every Friday from 11 a.m. to 12; sometimes the children will make drawing illustrating the effects of alcoholism; sometimes the master will show them the danger of alcohol for the citizen, the family and the nation. Temperance recitations will be given, temperance songs will be sung. Little entertainments will be organized and temperance films are used. Temperance teaching has also been introduced in military establishments, and in the schools depending not on the Federal Government but on the Confederate States.

From the point of view of sound public policy, the liquor revenue is a deception and a snare. All taxes must be paid from the assets of the community. The use of liquor diminishes these assets and must steadily impair the basis on which taxation rests. It was the knowledge of this tendency that lay behind the statement of Sir Josiah Stamp before the Royal Licensing Commission of England and Wales. He was asked what would happen to the revenue if the liquor trade in Britain were abolished. (Let it be remembered that the liquor trade in Britain is even yet immense, and its revenue to the Government is said to equal the cost of the army, the navy, public works and education.) His reply was to the effect that if such a change came about overnight, it would be embarrassing, but if it were spread over ten years "we (the economists) would laugh at it."—Temperance Advocate.

"It is a sobering reflection that on alcoholic liquor Great Britain spends in a single fornight as much money as Chrisitan people have contributed to the Bible Society in over a century and a quarter."—The Impossible (B. & F. Bible Society.)

Card Party.—

On Saturday afternoon the lady members of the Rebekah Lodge held a "500" card party and tea. Cards were played at eight tables, Mrs. W. J. Murphy and Mrs. H. McAdam won the prizes for high scores, Mrs. H. St. Denis was awarded the consolation for low score. Following the card games an April Shower Tea was served. The decorations were effectively carried out in Springtime colours and silver raindrops hanging from the ceiling, the table was prettily centred with spring flowers and was presided over by Miss Nettie McCormick, assisted by Mrs. W. Lang, Mrs. D. Leclaire, Mrs. D. Gruer, Miss L. McMillan and Mrs. J. M. Darby.

Monday was clean-up day on Main St. After scraping the mud into piles it was hauled away to cover the unsightly dump on the river bank near the bridge. The fire hose was brought out and thoroughly washed into the sewers the dirt and grime of last winter's snow, giving a spic and span appearance to Main St. Property holders would do well to follow the example of our town officials and clean up their lawns giving the whole town a cleaner and brighter outlook.

The Easter Thankoffering meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of St. Paul's United will be held in McDougall Hall on Wednesday evening, April 19th at 8 o'clock when Miss Hope Jack will speak on missionary work in Mexico where she taught for a number of years. Easter Sunday in St. Paul's United Church promises to be of great interest throughout. At 8 a.m. in McDougall Hall we will begin the day with an Easter service of prayer and praise. At 10.30 a choir of 24 voices will render the sacred cantata, "From Cross to Crown," by Judson, under the leadership of Mr. Percy Osmond with Mrs. P. Osmond at the organ. The choir is well balanced and the beautiful pipe organ will form a fine background in the rendering of this fine selection. At this service also the minister will deliver a brief address on the Risen Christ and a special offering for local funds will be taken by envelope. The S.S. will hold its session at 2.30 in the church in open school with its Easter program and at 7.30 the day will conclude with another Easter service. Leap Year Bride

By Laura Lou Brookman

CHAPTER XLVI

Brenda's expression altered instantly. There was just time for a quick glance into the mirror to reassure herself. Angry color flamed in her cheeks but that was all right. Rather becoming.

"I'll get out as soon as I can," Phillips promised beneath his breath.

They heard the hall door open and close, the murmur of voices and then footsteps. Brenda, radiant and smiling now, hurried to greet the newcomer.

"Mr. Harris!" she said with saccharine inflection. "This is such a pleasure—"

"And for me, too, Miss Vail."

The man on the threshold was young looking. Tall, well set up and rather handsome. His hair and eyes were dark. He wore a dark suit, carried a brief case. As he spoke he stepped forward, surveying the room with a swift glance and his eyes turned to Dan.

Brenda intervened. "Mr. Harris," she said quickly, "this is Mr. Phillips. He's—why, why, Dan—!"

For suddenly Dan Phillips had thrown his head back and burst into a shout of laughter. "Mr. Harris!" he exclaimed. "So this is your Mr. Harris, is it! Oh, this is just too much—!"

The laughing continued, became noisier.

Brenda Vail said hotly, "I don't know what you're laughing at. I don't understand—!"

All at once she saw that something had happened to Mr. Harris. The brisk, business-like manner was gone. Harris was—yes, he looked sheepish. He was actually grinning looking at Dan as though the two knew each other. It was incredible.

"What's—what's this all about?" the woman asked helplessly. "I'd like to know the joke, too." She looked at Harris. "You—you are Mr. Harris, aren't you? That's you name, isn't it? Do you know Mr. Phillips?"

The stranger's face sobered. "Yes, I know him," he answered. "I did not expect to see him here, though. It's—rather a surprise. Changes things somewhat. I—well, with Dan here I suppose I may as well be frank. I'm the Mr. Harris you were expecting, Miss Vail, and then again, I'm not. My name is Harris—that is, it's my middle name. You had a note from me saying I'd call this afternoon to talk to you about picture rights on your stories. The fact is—well, I'm not a representative of United Actors as I told you—"

"You're not with United Actors? Then you're not the man who wrote me!"

"Oh, yes I am. I wrote the letters and sent them to a friend of mine to remail from New York."

"But, Mr. Harris—!" Brenda Vail's face had lost its animation. She was staring at the man uncomprehendingly, almost stupidly. "If you're not the Mr. Harris, who are you?" she demanded.

"Mr name is Pearson. Miss Vail. Max Harris Pearson. I'm on The News."

"You—on The News! You mean here in Wellington? You mean you haven't anything to do with motion pictures? Then United Actors—they don't want my stories?" Suddenly she turned on Pearson with blazing anger. "What did you do it for?" she cried. "How dare you? Oh, but there must be a law against this sort of thing. I'll see that you pay for it! Tried to trip me, didn't you? You thought you'd get money—"

Brenda's afternoon had been too much for her. She snatched up the nearest thing at hand, a pottery vase, and hurled it across the room. The vase hit the wall, shattered into pieces. Brenda's anger was not appeased. She caught up a cushion from the davenport, ripping the silk so that the cotton lining fell to the floor.

"What did you do it for?" she screamed.

The two men exchanged glances. A hysterical woman is not a pleasant sight, Phillips said. "There's no use losing control of yourself, Brenda. People will hear you—"

"What if they do! Do you understand what he's telling me? It means I can't go to Hollywood! The money—I'd counted on 10,000 at least!—it means there won't be any money! What am I to do now? I've never been so humiliated. So—so mistreated! I'll see that you pay for this. I'll see that you suffer—!"

Pearson was actually sorry for her. Rage had made Brenda Vail into a haggard, shew-like old woman. She looked years beyond her age. Her lined, twisted face was pathetic.

"I'm sorry," he said sincerely. "I shouldn't have done it. There were reasons but—well, there's no use going into that. Miss Vail, I deliberately deceived you and I deserve whatever you think of me. But after I've said I'm sorry I'm afraid there is nothing more to be—"

"Oh, you think that, do you?" Brenda snapped. "Well, you'll find there's plenty I can do about it. I'll have you arrested. I'm going to make you pay—"

"I'm afraid you won't be able to do that," the young man said quietly. "You see, Miss Vail, I've been a newspaperman too long to take chances where law is concerned. There was no mention of money in my letters. I didn't sign anyone else's name. When you examine those letters closely you'll find there's nothing whatever in them on which you can base charges."

"You think I'd believe that? You think I'd even listen to you? Well, I'm going to see my lawyer!"

"Then you'll only be obliged to pay fees for nothing. It will be rather foolish."

Perhaps Brenda believed him. Perhaps she saw that suddenly every one of her glamorous dreams had faded. The vision of Brenda Vail, the great scenario writer—her name flashing on the silver screen—her photograph in newspapers—wealth, fame, influential acquaintances—all that had vanished. The woman turned away, covering her face with her hands.

"We'd better go," Phillips said. "Brenda doesn't want us here, Max."

"Yes, go! I never want to see either of you again! Get out of my sight, I tell you—!"

Her angry, high-pitched voice followed them out into the hall. Silently the two men entered the elevator and rode to the ground floor. They stepped out on the street and Phillips was surprised to see how light it was. A little after five o'clock. It seemed hours since he had entered Brenda's apartment but in reality it was less than 45 minutes.

"Car's parked here on the right," Pearson said. They turned a corner, got into the roadster, and Pearson started the engine. They had traveled several blocks before either spoke again. Then Dan said:

"There are several things about all this I don't get."

"There's a lot I don't get, either. Guess all I did was to make a fool of myself."

The lines of Phillips' face had hardened. "You're not the only one!" he said venomously.

"Look here!" It was Pearson speaking. "Don't tell me if you don't want to but there's one thing I'd like to ask. Are you and Brenda Vail—I mean do you—?"

"You heard her say she never wanted to see me again, didn't you?" Well, I can assure it's mutual! What is more, she never will see me. I'll take care of that all right!"

"But what about your play?"

"What about your motion picture company? Brenda was explaining to me just before you came that the play's so bad the agents laughed at it. Unfortunately, it wasn't supposed to be comedy. Oh, I've been getting a line on myself all right—!"

"I'm glad of it," Pearson told him. "I was beginning to think you'd lost your head entirely. That's how I got into this mix-up. Senseless apparently. I suppose that's what usually comes from stepping into other people's affairs. But I couldn't stand by and see a dame like this Vail woman put the skids on you! I figured that if I could get her interested in going to Hollywood—make her think she had a chance at the big dough—she would, well, show up in her true colors. She's vain, of course. Terribly vain. You see I took the trouble to look up Brenda Vail rather thoroughly."

"How'd you do that?"

"Oh, sent a couple wires. You did not happen to know about Brenda's marriage, did you?"

"Married? But she's not—?"

"No, she isn't married now. Husband died two years ago—killed in a taxi smash-up. Seems he was crazy about Brenda and she led him around by the nose. The dope is that this husband could really write and people who knew both of them insist he wrote the magazine stories printed under Brenda's by-lie. At any rate she hasn't had a thing published since his death."

Phillips' lips tightened but he did not speak.

"Listen, Dan," Pearson went on. "I hope you're not sore about what I tried to do. Suppose I should have known the thing was silly but it seemed to work. At least she fell for those letters. I wouldn't have tried such a thing if I hadn't known about the phoney game Brenda pulled."

"I'm not sore," Phillips assured him. "At least, not at you. When I think what a complete idiot I've been—!"

"Forget it. She's not worth worrying about."

"Oh, isn't she? Listen, let me out of this car. I've got to find a telephone!"

"You can't do that, Dan. I won't let you. You can't go back to that vampire, I tell you!"

"She's not a vampire! She's—an angel. She's the sweetest, dearest, most wonderful girl in the world! Stop this car, Max. I tell you I've got to telephone! Good heavens—you don't think I'm talking about Brenda Vail, do you? It's Cherry! I tell you I've got to find Cherry!"

CHAPTER XLVII

Pearson repeated Dan's words. "You've got to find her? Why—isn't Cherry at home?"

"I haven't seen her for a week," Phillips admitted. "Cherry and I had a row. Oh, it was my fault! My fault altogether! I've got to find her and tell her I know that now—"

"But where is she?"

Dan did not answer. They had reached the intersection of two important thoroughfares just as the traffic lights flashed red. There was a drug store on the opposite corner. Dan touched Pearson's arm.

"Let me out here," he said. "I've got to telephone to Cherry."

"But if you don't know where she is how can you do that?"

"I'm going to call her home—I mean her parents' home. That's where she must be. Want to ask if I can come out and talk to her. Don't you understand, Max? I've got to see Cherry! I've got to tell her a lot of things—!"

Pearson stopped the car. "All right," he said, "but make it snappy. I won't be able to park here all day, you know."

Dan disappeared into the drug store. It was several minutes before he emerged and when he did one look at his face was enough to tell that the mission had failed.

Pearson eyed him expectantly. "Well?" he asked.

Dan got into the roadster. "She's not there," he said. "They haven't seen her or heard from her."

"Then where do you think she is?"

"I don't know! I thought all along—Oh, Max! I've got to find her!"

"Isn't it rather late to begin thinking about that? You said Cherry left Saturday, I must say, Dan—"

"Say it! Say anything you want to! I'll admit I deserve all you're thinking about me. Tell me I've been a big fool. I don't care what you say if you'll help me find her. She must be here in Wellington. She wouldn't go away!"

"Why not? How about her parents? Maybe she's with them."

Dan shook his head. "I don't think so," he said. "Cherry's proud. I don't think she'd go to her parents and—well, admit that she'd made a mistake. I thought she'd come back or at least send some word. When she didn't I decided she really meant what she said—about being through with me. I thought she wanted a divorce and I was going to give her a chance to get it. My, but I've been a fool, Max! I've—oh, if I could only find her. Talk to her! Maybe I could make her understand—maybe she'd give me another chance—!"

Pearson interrupted. "Listen," he said. "I think Cherry's gone to her parents. You'd better try to get in touch with them. The truth is she telephoned me last Saturday. Told me things weren't going very well. That's the reason I planned that movie stunt and tried to get Brenda Vail out of town. I didn't want to see you and Cherry break up."

"Her father and mother are in North Carolina. Did she say she was going there?"

"No, she didn't say so. I just figured it out that way."

"What shall I do, Max?"

"Well, if I were you I'd send a wire. Do you know where to find her parents?"

"The're at some hotel. They've been there a month or more. It's—wait a minute—I've got it!"

He named a hotel in the fashionable North Carolina resort.

"Why don't you wire the management of the place? That would be less embarrassing, I imagine, than trying to get in touch with her parents. Ask if Cherry Phillips—no, ask if Mr. and Mrs. Dixon's daughter is with them. That's the best way. Can't tell how she might be registered."

"I'll do it!" Dan said. "Let's go to the office. I'll send the wire from there."

Silently Dan handed the message to Pearson who read it and said, "Not there, huh?"

Pearson and Phillips were in a corner of the room otherwise deserted. The day staff had departed and only half a dozen of the night men were on hand. The click of a typewriter sounded monotonously from across the room.

Pearson rubbed his head. "We'll have to try again. Who are Cherry's friends, Dan? Who could she be with if she hasn't left town?"

"I've told you a dozen times I can't think of anyone! Dixie Shannon didn't even know she was gone. There isn't anybody—"

"But there must be!" Suddenly Pearson's fist hit the desk. "Look here, Dan, this may be serious! Has it occurred to you that Cherry's an heiress? Her father's money—have you thought of that?"

"What do you mean?"

"I mean anything may have happened in a week's time! A beautiful girl—wealthy—has been missing for seven days. Nobody knows what's become of her. Her parents—the servants at her home—not a person she might have been expected to communicate with has heard a word from her. How do you know she has not been kidnapped? Maybe there's been an accident! Why, in a week's time—!"

Pearson was on his feet. His dark face had set into a harsh mask.

"What are you going to do, Max?"

"Call the hospitals! You'd better get on another phone and take part of the list! If we can't find her this way there's nothing left but the police—"

A telegraph messenger entered the swinging gate that shut the city room from the entrance way and came directly toward Pearson. He held out a colored envelope.

"Your name's Pearson, isn't it?" the boy asked.

Max was tearing the envelope open. Dan sprang to his side and together they read the words: "Sixty-five per week agreeable stop can you report here Saturday."

The message was signed with the name of the city editor of an eastern newspaper. Pearson crumpled the sheet into his coat pocket.

The boy asked, "Any answer?"

Pearson hesitated an instant. "Not now," he said and was on his way to the telephone booth.

There were no reports from Wellington hospitals of accident cases or patients who could be identified as Cherry Phillips. Dan and Max tried the hotels but the effort was equally unavailing.

Suddenly Dan sprang up. He caught Pearson's shoulder. "I've just thought of something!" he cried eagerly. "Yes—I'll bet that's where she is, Max! Why didn't I think of it before—?"

"I'll bet she's with Sarah—the woman who used to take care of her when she was a little girl. Sarah O'Fallon, that's her name!"

"Where is this woman? Let's get hold of her."

"I don't know where she is."

"But—!"

Dan's mouth was drawn in a tight, hard line. His face was colorless, his voice sharpened. "I don't know where she is," he said, "but I'll find her. Sarah left when the Dixons closed their house last summer. She is somewhere not far from here. Cherry used to get letters. Letters! That's it—there must be letters—! Come, Max!"

It was a single flight up the street level. Hatless, half-running, the two men reached the street. They sprang into a cab and Dan gave the address of the apartment. It was Dan suddenly who was taking the initiative, who was giving orders and directing the search.

"I don't know what you're going to do!" Max reminded him.

"We're going out to the house to look for Cherry's letters. There must be some from Sarah. They'll give us the address."

"Dan, I think it would be a lot more sensible to go to the chief—"

"Not until I find out whether or not she's with Sarah. Besides, what could the police do? Cherry wouldn't want them interfering. I can't—I won't believe anything's happened to her!"

Max glanced quickly at his companion. Dan might say that he did not believe Cherry could be in danger. He might refuse to face that possibility, fight it off but Max knew it was that possibility that was gripping Dan, that had set his chin in its hard line and turned the gray eyes into blazing pits.

Max said impulsively, "Of course not. We'll find her somehow. Cherry's all right."

He didn't believe it; neither did Dan Phillips but Dan was grateful for the words. He needed hope and encouragement then more than he had ever needed them in his life. Hope that Cherry was "all right" as Max had said. Encouragement that he could find her and make her listen to the things he must tell her. Without this hope and encouragement—but the blackness of such an abyss was unthinkable!

The cab halted. Max called, "Wait for us!" over his shoulder to the driver as he followed Dan up the steps. Now they were inside the building, hurrying up the long staircase.

Dan had whipped his keys from his pocket. He was fumbling in the half-darkness, trying to fit the key into the lock, when something caught his attention. He looked up, almost missed the tiny object half way up the stairs. With an exclamation he sprang forward.

CHAPTER XLVIII

The gray kitten mewed again. It sat on the fifth step down from the top of the flight and as Phillips reached for it the kitten backed away. Its fur mounted perpendicularly and from its mouth there came a sharp, hissing "Phftt!"

It was Cherry's kitten.

"Pinky!" Dan Phillips exclaimed. He picked up the little animal, holding it to the light. It was Pinky—there could be no doubt about it.

Pearson, below, asked impatiently, "What's the idea? What's the cat got to do with—?"

But Dan was not listening. One quick glance about him and he was running up the stairs. There were three doors opening off the third floor hallway. One led to Dixie Shannon's tiny quarters and another to the Moreau's rooms. Phillips had never stepped behind the third door. It was a vacant apartment—but, no, a tiny crack of light gleamed above the door sill!

A half dozen strides carried Dan to that door. The kitten, having established acquaintanceship, cradled close to his arm. It was purring in a sleepy sing-song.

Dan knocked.

There was no answer but he heard a rustling sound on the opposite side of the door. He knocked a second time.

Then slowly, hesitantly, the door opened. There she stood! Cherry wearing the yellow housedress in which he had seen her so often. The lamp light fell on that yellow dress and made it golden. Cherry's face was pale. She raised wide, dark-fringed eyes to Dan's.

The young man said, "Cherry—!"

As often as she had rehearsed the scene to follow—as often as she had hoped for it—what happened in the next few moments was nothing whatever like Cherry's imaginings. Dan took a step forward. He held out the kitten and Cherry took it in her arms.

"Here," Dan said. "Pinky—I found him on the steps."

The words halted. The young man was looking intently at the girl's face. He did not move—was not even standing inside the room. He did not try to touch Cherry but remained there staring at her.

It was the girl who recovered from her surprise first. She put a hand to her throat, smiled in a way that was not quite convincing, said in a low, throaty voice, "Thank you, Dan. I—I guess you're surprised to see me!"

He nodded. It was not Dan's voice that answered but one that was en-

Short-lived Calendar

The French revolutionary calendar, adopted in 1793 and abolished by Napoleon in 1805, was in use only twelve years and never really took root. It reckoned the year from September 22, the anniversary of the republic's formal establishment in 1792.

There were twelve 30-day months in this calendar. That left five days over, and a sixth every fourth year. The extra days were called the sansculottides, and were dedicated to festivals. The regular ones honored, respectively, the virtues, genius, labor, opinion and rewards, while the leap year day was "the day of the revolution."

Flowers For The Temporary Tenant

Your Rented House May Not Be Just What You Desire, But Its Surroundings Are Yours To Make Beautiful.

Specially written for The Huntingdon Gleaner By MRS. W. J. CLEARY, Huntingdon, Que.

Families who change residences every year or so do not always find exactly what they wish in the way of a dwelling house. Whatever they may do about the interior, the privilege is theirs at slight cost, to make gay and lovely and homelike, the outside of the habitation and its setting.

Flower filled window-boxes, the porches comfortably vine clad, a yard gay with blossoms, all can be accomplished by the amateur in a few quarter hours of well spent effort. We have but to look around us to realize how flowers, even a few, change the appearance of a home. They make it colorful, in this age of color everywhere, inviting, someone-lives-here looking.

If you have never had a flower garden of your very own there is much pleasure in store for you, and few pitfalls, unless you rush ahead and sow and plant without considering the finished picture. First make a diagram or drawing of your lot, marking off the areas covered by house, garage, walks, etc. Around these, in whatever space is available, plan your flower garden. Just a word about breaking up your lawn if you have one between house and street. If your lot is small, do not make it even smaller looking by having flowerbeds here and there. Plant around lawn. Have you an unsightly fence that mars the appearance of the rest of the place? It can easily be transformed into a beauty-spot by covering with a quickly growing vine. Have you children who would delight in a playhouse for hot days? Or would you like an arbor or shaded nook in which to place the couch-hammock, or tea-table? A light framework of laths or bamboo stakes covered with another quickly growing vine will answer either purpose most satisfactorily.

After you have decided on paper, and in your "mind's eye," just how you wish your home to appear, procure some seedsman's catalogues, obtainable for the asking, and make a careful choice. Annuals are what you must select, unless you are sure of remaining in your present location more than one year. Study the lists and choose the seeds and bulbs that best suit you as regards location, color, and time of bloom. This last is important, as you will not want to have your garden exhibit a riot of color one month and a wilderness of dead and gone blossoms the next. By careful selection you can have constant bloom, and a change of color scheme two or three times a season.

For the beginner, bulbs, while slightly more expensive than seeds or plants, are more certain of giving satisfactory results. Then, another consideration in their favor, your first cost is your only cost, because once grown they rapidly increase until in a few years you will have far more than you can possibly use yourself. Most suitable are they to the temporary tenant, in that they are dug up in the fall, stored in cellar away from frost and light, and are ready the following spring to set out when and where wanted. I will suggest a list further on of bulbs as well as other flowering plants that are easily grown and will furnish a variety of bloom throughout the summer and early autumn. Before doing so, however, I want to describe a tiny flower-garden seen last year which was the admiration of everyone. It grew from what might well have been considered an impossible beginning. Former tenants had ruined whatever had once been a lawn. Instead of attempting the expensive and well-nigh impossible task of bringing back the uprooted and trampled grass, the new tenants planted the entire space in flowers. A driveway to garage in rear and a sidewalk, cut off so much of the lot that only the width of the house, a plot about thirty feet square, remained. This was first bordered on the three outer sides with Kochia. Close to the house were tall assorted flowers, Lupins, of a deep rich blue. In front of these was a narrow band of Marigolds. The rest of space was taken up with different sized and shaped beds, brilliant with many tints and species of bloom. Narrow, very narrow, paths between these beds, bordered with white Alyssum, gave a uniform appearance to the whole. The effect was charming.

If it is at all possible, try to have window-boxes. They bring the garden into the house, as it were, especially when windows are open, and, if even of simplest construction and given a rough coat of paint, add so much to the house's appearance. Geraniums and Petunias are easily grown, keep up a constant succession of bloom and can be obtained in myriad tints and varieties. They no doubt rank first in the selection of flowers for window boxes. Among the vines, you can have Morning Glory, beloved of our grandmothers, which grows rapidly, even to the height of twelve and fifteen feet. Sun-lovers, its blossoms are, opening up, bell-shaped and rainbow-hued, to greet the morning sun, turning on their stems to follow his course across the sky, and closing up again as dark approaches and their idol is no longer visible. For both Morning Glories and Petunias, I suggest that you purchase a mixed assortment, unless of course, you want to follow a definite color scheme. Scarlet Runner is also a rapidly growing vine, with flowers of bright scarlet. Canary Bird Vine is another favorite, producing an abundance of fine foliage and small bright yellow blossoms bearing a fancied resemblance to a canary.

Tall plants are sometimes quite as effective as climbers to shut off unsightly views, or to screen off part of the yard for a playground or a kitchen garden. Here there is a choice of Hollyhocks, white and different shades, red, pink, yellow and purple; Lupins, long spikes of pea-shaped flowers some attaining four to five feet in a splendid assortment of colors; Castor Oil Plant, purple or purple and bronze, no blossom, attains six feet high if planted indoors early, and set out in June; Cosmos, four to six feet, are late bloomers, with fern-like foliage and large blossoms poised gracefully on long stems. Comes in white, pink, crimson.

Among the dwarf plants, those suitable for edging are the little blue-blossomed Swan River Daisies, Oxalis with clover-like leaves and golden-yellow flowers; Violas, white, violet, blue, mauve, and yellow, are sometimes known as tufted pansies which they resemble. Once started, there are so many favorites clamoring for recognition that it is hard to know when to stop. Asters, Pansies, Sweet Peas, are too well known to need description. Kochia is a quick growing, beautifully shaped bush, 2½ to 3 feet high, green throughout the summer and turning to fiery crimson in the fall.

Among the Bulbs, Gladiolus is perhaps the easiest to grow, doing well in almost any soil, but doing best in sandy loam, and in sun. Dahlias, whose principal demand is for plenty of moisture, require a well drained, moderately rich soil. Cannas, immense clusters of red, pink, or orange flowers, with beautiful foliage, for early blossom must be started indoors.

Do not neglect your plants once they are under the earth. They need a regular supply of water, some more than others. Food too, is an essential. There are many good brands, some of them put up for special soils or special plants, others are a general food for all plants. In purchasing this, as well as seeds and bulbs, it will pay to do business with a reliable firm whose product you can rely on, and who will at all times be ready with help and advice. They will be glad to tell you what your soil needs, what your plants need. Gardening, like any other undertaking, is worth doing well, if done at all; unlike many other undertakings, you will get much more out of it than you put in, healthful exercise, fresh air, inspiration, beauty.

Have you a small space left for a kitchen garden? Even it is only three or four feet square, it will pay you to dig it up, cultivate it until all sods are levelled and roots of grass removed. You can easily produce here sufficient lettuce, radishes and green onions to keep your family of four or five in fresh greens all summer. You will be surprised at the difference between your home-grown, gather-as-required greens, and what you have been accustomed to buying as "fresh." To borrow the slogan of so many advertisers, "A trial will convince you."

The trick of having a sufficiency lies in regularly planting fresh seed. Radishes should not be in the ground more than two weeks, they are at their best then and if left too long become strong and tough. Lettuce can be either pulled out and new seed planted, or the leaves may be cut off as required, and the roots will send forth new leaves just as tender as the first crop. Onions should be replaced with new seed regularly. For these, the "sets" are the best to use as they become ready in a very short time. Depending on available space, you can plant beans, peas, tomatoes, winter onions, carrots, all sorts of herbs, even sweet corn; all necessary and welcome adjuncts to the menu, and all so cheap when grown at home.

The Beaver

Birthday Celebration.—

On Friday evening, April 7th, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Davidson entertained a number of friends to a delightful birthday party, in honour of their daughter, Isabella. Cards and dancing were enjoyed by all till the early morning hours, all expressing the wish that the opportunity would be given to them to offer their congratulations many times in future years.

Mr. and Mrs. A. F. McLennan and family have moved to the farm of Mr. P. Langevin (formerly owned by the late Francis Napier). We welcome them to our district.

The Smiths were on the balcony, and could hear what a young couple were saying in the garden below.

Mrs. Smith: "I think he wants to propose. We ought not to listen. Whistle to him."

Mr. Smith: "Why should I? Nobody whistled to warn me."

tirely strange and seemed to belong to another person.

"Yes, it is a surprise. Have you been here all the time, Cherry? I didn't know—"

"I didn't want you to. The janitor said it was all right. He let me stay here. I've been down in the apartment, too—but only when I knew you wouldn't be there. No one saw me. I didn't want anyone to know about it. Pinky's been here all the while but tonight he must have slipped out when I wasn't noticing.

Level glances. Level, matter-of-fact voices. And all the while the flaming, stabbing words so close to Dan's lips.

There was the briefest pause and then Phillips made a tremendous effort. He said, "Cherry—you want me to go, don't you?"

"Why, I—"

"If that's what you want I'll do it." Suddenly Dan was voluble. "I'll do anything you say, Cherry. I mean—anything! You can have a divorce if you want it. Everything was my fault—I know that now. There's no reason why you should be tied to a dub like me! I couldn't expect it after the way I've treated you. We'll arrange things in the quietest way—make it as easy for you as possible. Oh, you're a million times too good for me and I know it! I've made every kind of fool of myself a man can. I couldn't expect you to forgive the things I've done! And I want you to be happy, Cherry! I want that more than anything else in the world. I'll—I'll even give you up if that will make you happy!"

He could keep from it no longer. Suddenly Dan's arms went around the girl. He caught her close to him. Dan whispered, "Darling—oh, my dear—my dear, I love you so much!"

It was like a miracle, Cherry's soft cheek, like warm velvet against his own. Cherry unresisting that fervent embrace. Cherry raising eyes that were like starlight. Cherry—his own beloved Cherry close in his arms!

And suddenly the miracle became reality. She drew away. The girl's eyes—they were no longer level and matter-of-fact but radiant, misty and gloriously tender—met Dan's.

She whispered. "Don't leave me again, Dan! I couldn't stand it. I do not want you to go away again—ever!"

"You mean you don't want a divorce? You'll give me another chance? Oh, Cherry, I swear that if you do everything will be different! I'll never be such a fool again. I love you, Cherry. You're the only one in the world I love! Don't you know that?"

There were footsteps on the staircase. Max Pearson's head emerged above the railing as the two in the doorway turned.

"Cherry!" Pearson exclaimed. "I certainly am glad to know you're all all right! Has Dan told you we've been tearing the town apart to find you? Thought you'd been kidnapped or smashed up in an accident—!"

The girl shook her head. "Dan did not tell me," she said. Her eyes were on Dan's. The look that passed between these two was unmistakable.

Pearson coughed. "Oh, I see!" he said. "Other things to talk about. By the way, Dan, do you realize we have a taxi waiting outside?"

"Good heavens! I'd forgotten all about it!" Dan moved but the other put a hand on his arm.

"I'll take care of it," Max told him. "Got to be running along anyhow. I want to get off an answer to that wire."

"You mean about the job? Are you going to take it, Max?"

"Yes, I guess so. I'll be clearing out in a couple of days. See you tomorrow, Dan—"

Cherry stepped forward. She put out her hand. "We'll both see you, Max. You wouldn't leave Wellington without saying goodby to me, would you? I thought we were friends."

Pearson's hand gripped the girl's. "Of course we are," he said. "Always!"

And that handclasp, the look in Cherry Phillips' eyes meant more to Max Pearson than declarations of love from any other woman in the world. Pearson grinned. "Well, I'll be getting along now!"

They went down to the second floor landing together. Cherry's face, smiling down over the bannister, was the last thing Pearson saw before pulling down his hat brim, drawing up his coat collar and stepping out into the night.

Cherry and Dan stood before their own threshold. Dan opened the door, touched the wall switch and they entered the apartment.

"Great guy, Pearson!" he said. "But then I've always told you that."

Cherry would have agreed with him. She was about to say as much when something on the floor caught her eye. A slender, white envelope. It was lying just within the room where the janitor had slipped it underneath the door. Cherry picked it up.

"A letter!" she said. "For you, Dan. Oh, look—!"

Both of them were staring at the inconspicuous lettering in the upper left hand corner of the envelope. The name was that of a famous magazine. Quickly, with a half-suppressed exclamation Dan tore open the envelope, drew out the sheet that was inside.

"Cherry!" he cried. "Why—why, Cherry—!"

He held a slip of pink paper bearing the words, "Pay to the order of Daniel Phillips, $300.00."

"There's some mistake," Dan was muttering. "It isn't for me, Cherry. It can't be!"

"Let's read the letter, dear."

It was a brief note. The editor was pleased to inform Daniel Phillips that his manuscript, "Night Life," had won first prize in the magazine's amateur writers' contest. The story would be published in an early issue. The letter ended with the hope that the editor might see more of Dan's work. There were the phrases, "promising," "original flavor" and "vitality."

The young man raised puzzled eyes. "But I didn't enter this contest! I didn't—"

All at once he understood.

"You sent it!" he cried. "Cherry, you did this, didn't you?"

"You don't mind, do you, Dan? You see, I knew—I knew—it was a fine story. That time you asked for it—I didn't tell you the truth. I said the manuscript was lost because I didn't want to tell you I'd sent it away. Oh, I was sure it would win all the time but I wanted to know before I told you! I'm so happy, Dan. I've always known you were going to be a great writer!"

"But I'm not—I'm just a dub. Oh, but, Cherry, I'll work as I never worked before! Look—the letter says they'd like to 'see more of my work.' They'll see plenty of it! It's—why, Cherry, this is the great chance of my life—I mean the real one!"

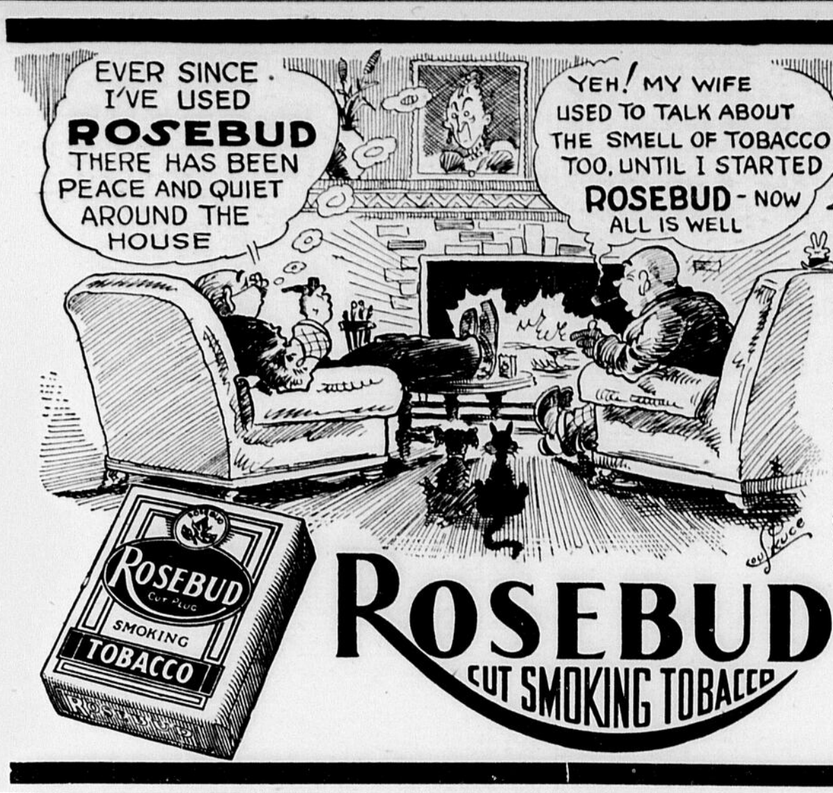

He had used those words before. He thought of Brenda. "Cherry," Dan slowly, "chances to write stories don't mean so much. All I want is the chance to show how much I love you. How different everything is going to be for us from now on!"

The girl smiled. "We'll take that chance together, Dan. It's—the happy ending of the story."

"And the beginning of a new one!"

Then Cherry said the word that is the happiest of all endings and of all beginnings. Cherry said "Yes."

"I wish we had tried this before"

One of Jim Blake's legal clients lived in a remote northern town, and he was a constant worry.

"He changes his instructions so often," Jim explained to a friend, "and his letters aren't clear."

"Why not handle him by telephone?" the friend suggested.

"Telephone! Away up there? We couldn't hear properly."

"Say," the friend replied, "you're behind the times. You can telephone anywhere now, just like a local call."

So Jim Blake tried Long Distance. To his delight, there was no shouting, no confusion. The conversation was as clear and easy as though he and the client were in the same room. "It's really wonderful," Jim said, "and so inexpensive." *

Press Advertising Must be Maintained Says Bovril Chairman

Doubts the Value of Radio Advertising

Addressing the Annual Meeting of Bovril Limited in London recently, Lord Duke, Chairman of the Board, drew particular attention to the fact that, while due economy had been practised in every other department, they had not diminished their advertising. "We consider it of the utmost importance," he said, "to keep our advertising bright and persistent. At a time when purchasing power in many countries is much reduced, a policy of keeping the virtues of our product well in the public eye meets strongly with your Board's approval."

Bovril is sold and advertised all over the world. Those in charge of its sales policies therefore have exceptional opportunities for gauging the benefits to be derived from consistent advertising. Lord Luke and his associates are emphatically not of that school who look upon advertising as a regrettable but necessary expense, and who argue that when sales fall off advertising expenditure should be cut proportionately. On the contrary they maintain that is the very time when one should maintain and if possible increase one's own advertising. In other words they believe in capitalizing on a competitor's weakness, and making a bold bid for that portion of his business that has been made vulnerable through his failure to defend it.

Lord Luke's comments on radio as an advertising medium are interesting in view of the policies that our own Canadian Radio Commission are now trying to make effective. "We have not utilized this service," says Lord Luke, "and it would take a great deal of persuasion to induce us to do so . The reader of a newspaper does not need to read the advertisements it carries unless he likes. He can keep himself occupied with whichever section of its news columns appeals to him. But the broadcast listener has no such choice. He must listen to whatever is thrown at him through the ether or switch off his set. If there is one thing that long experience in advertising has taught us, it is that one must be tactful in making one's approach. One buyer, or one potential buyer, annoyed might well count for more on the debit side than several of the merely interested type on the assets side."

Toad in Medicines

The Chinese have used the toad for medicinal purposes for centuries but they use him empirically without exact knowledge. Drug stores in China sell a hard toad cake which, when ground, is used externally as a local anesthetic. The measure is not without sense, as the substance does deaden the sensory nerves. The formula for the toad cake is a secret which all the king's horses and all the king's men could not drag from its makers.

amount of $18,000 was set aside.

"The sum of $18,000," commented Mr. Bowman, "seems to be a very large amount to set aside for bad debts."

"It does seem large but the circumstances are unusual," Mr. Marrotte answered. He felt this reserve for bad debts was justified. The credit for several large customers of the Cousins company had to be extended by the concern.

To. Dr. F. H. Pickel (Cons., Brome-Missisquoi), Mr. Marotte gave details of depreciation charges for machinery and equipment. In 1929, the company charged out of its receipts 10 per cent of the original value of the machinery for depreciation; and in 1930, 1931 and 1932, charged 15 per cent. These were the depreciation rates allowed by the income department, witness said.

Mr. Bowman questioned Ernest Cousins, president of the company, on his holdings.

"How many preferred shares have you out of the total of 6,124 preferred shares outstanding?" asked Mr. Bowman.

"One thousand seven hundred and nine shares," answered Mr. Cousins.

"How many common shares do you hold out of the 10,000 common shares?" pressed Mr. Bowman.

"Six thousand nine hundred and ninety-two shares," answered Mr. Cousins. In other words, commented Mr. Bowman, the witness held a little more than one-quarter of the outstanding preferred shares and almost three-quarters of the common shares.

Questioned further Mr. Cousins said that since 1925 the company had paid five quarterly dividends in cash totalling $13,394.45. This was outside the stock dividend paid thorugh the issuing to holders of preferred stock of 2,450 common shares in 1928.

"You told the committee you were gradually picking up shares?" questioned Mr. Bowman.

"If I am offered a bargain I take it," was Mr. Cousins' reply.

"And you are more likely to get a bargain if the shareholders are not receiving dividends," pressed Mr. Bowman.

"I presume that is so," replied Mr. Cousins.

"So that if you or anyone wish to pick up these preferred shares it would be to the purchaser's advantage that no cash dividends be paid," Mr. Bowman said.

"If you look at it in that light," replied Mr. Cousins.

Mr. Marotte was further examined by Mr. Bowman. The net profit of the company in 1930 was $20,318.62, less $2,272.25 income tax, or approximately $18,000 net. Mr. Marrotte stated. In 1929, the net profit was $14,974.89 and in 1931 the net profit was roughly $16,000.

The company paid three quarterly dividends in 1931 and two in 1932 to 75 shareholders. Why was a dividend not paid in 1930 when there was a net profit of $18,000? Mr. Bowman questioned.

Cash Not Available

Witness replied that the cash was not available. For one thing the company had had to give credit to several of its large customers.

"Apparently the net profit makes no difference as to whether or not a dividend is paid," said Mr. Bowman. There were two matters to take into consideration in paying dividends, answered Mr. Marrotte. First, there must be the profit and secondly the money must be available in the hands of the company.

"I asked this question," Mr. Bowman remarked, "because different members of this committee have been getting letters from shareholders, who are milk producers, saying that they had been induced to purchase stock on the representations they would get seven per cent for their money on preferred shares and a guaranteed market with the company for their milk." A number of these producers had had to borrow the money to buy their stock, stated Mr. Bowman; and while they were not receiving regular dividends they had to pay interest on the money they borrowed.

Mr. Marrotte said that while there was net profit of $18,000 approximately in 1930 the company had carried over a deficit from previous years.

Mr. Bowman continued his examination of the company's auditor. In 1925, when the good-will of the business had been valued at $87,500, the company lost $25,000. In 1926, the loss was $40,000. In 1927, there was a profit of $13,487 without writing off depreciation.

"Would you care to give your opinion as to the present value of the company," asked Mr. Bowman. "Mr. Cousins said the other day it was worth $500,000." Mr. Marrotte said he would prefer not to do so.

George Spotton (Cons., North Huron) suggested that the concern was "financially embarrassed" in 1925 just prior to being formed into an incorporated company. Perhaps, remarked Mr. Spotton, the net assets then were worth only $10,000 in place of $39,000. At any rate, he said, the concern had liabilities of $70,000. What were the salaries paid last year to members of the Cousins' family? he asked. Mr. Cousins said he had received $10,000 and each of his two sons $5,000. He had accepted voluntarily a decrease of 25 per cent. this year.

Were any charges made against the company for maintenance of motor cars owned by the three Cousins? questioned Mr. Spotton. Mr. Marrotte said he would be glad to get this information. Refinancing a financially embarrassed company which had been in the family was not new, stated Mr. Spotton. "The family keeps the controlling interest," he declared, "and the other poor devils put their money in and there are no dividends."

Did Mr. Ernest Cousins give his full time to Ernest Cousins Limited? queried Mr. Spotton. It was reported Mr. Cousins was head of an amusement corporation.

"The only answer I can give is that I am giving my full time to Ernest Cousins Limited," Mr. Cousins asserted. "Its value is what Ernest Cousins makes it; and if I dropped dead tomorrow the business might go to the ground."

"You have not been paying many dividends," interjected Chairman Senn.

Mr. Cousins said he admitted that; but the unfortunate part was that when the company in 1925 started business it had expected to dispose of all its shares then. The company had had to pay capital charges out of profits.

To Chairman Senn, Mr. Marrotte said there were no profits of the company hidden in its charge accounts.

Further examination showed that last year the company had spent $50,000 on new machinery while there was $15,000 for machinery depreciation in addition.

"It hardly seems fair to me to put $50,000 into new machinery and not pay dividends," remarked Mr. Bowman.

Mr. Cousins said that the new machinery was necessary to carry on the business. Machinery depreciated quickly in the dairy business.

"What do you value your stock at today?" Dr. Pickel asked. Mr. Cousins said he was not prepared to say what value he would place. If Mr. Cousins wanted to buy any, Dr. Pickel stated, he could give Mr. Cousins a list of 10 or 12 persons who would sell.—Gazette.

Low Voltage May Kill

It has now been quite definitely established that death may result even from 110 volts, provided it is passed through the body at certain points and under certain circumstances. If the body is in contact with a moist surface and if the current passes through portions of the body where there are vital tissues, death is more likely to result than when it passes into the body under other circumstances.

In a recent consideration of the subject, two investigators emphasized the fact that the location of the contacts determines to a large extent the pathway of the current through the body. For example, if the contacts are made with one arm or leg on the same side, it seems hardly possible that a great amount of current will pass through the head. The brain is easily injured by electricity, and in legal executions it is customary to put one electrode on the skull so that the electricity will pass through the brain. In an analysis of 479 cases, an industrial surgeon found that the current in the vast majority passed through the body by the hands or arms and then was grounded. Occasionally current enters into the legs of men working on telegraph wires.

In an endeavor to determine absolutely the facts in these cases, the investigators mentioned undertook to study the effect of electric shock on rats, and applied the electrode at various parts of the body. It was found that no rat subjected to a continuous circuit survived permanently. Their death was due largely to the burning and destruction in the place where the current entered.

Death from electric shock is largely due to failure of the breathing apparatus. Such deaths were not so frequent when the current passed through the hind legs and did not pass through the brain, and still many died from failure of the breathing apparatus. When the current does not pass directly through the chest or the upper portion of the spinal cord, the respiratory apparatus is, in men, not so likely to be affected.

"Oxford Movements"

The Oxford movement in the Church of England originated at Oxford university in 1833 in an endeavor to "bring the Anglican church back to the principles of the early Christianity of the Fathers." Its foundational principles were laid down in a series of 90 pamphlets known as "Tracts for the Times," and to which Newman, Pusey, Foude and others contributed. One of them, written by Newman, declared the articles of the church might be so interpreted as to be consistent with the doctrines of the Council of Trent. This was condemned by the Anglican bishops in 1841 and Newman, with other leading tractarians, thereupon joined the Catholic church.
