"Beans" and "Peas"

There is much confusion in the popular names of the various members of the bean or legume family of plants. Botanically, the seeds generally called back-eyed peas, "Dolichos sphaerospermus," are really beans and in southern California, where these seeds are grown on a large scale for market purposes, they are correctly known as black-eyed beans.

On the other hand, the European broad bean, "Fabra faba," is really a pea. The broad bean was the first plant to which the word "bean" was applied, and the seeds, served with bacon, were a favorite dish among the Romans. Oddly enough, the common cowpea, "Vigna sinensis," is more closely related to the beans than it is to the peas, and many people refer to them as the black-eyed bean rather than the cowpea.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Public Show Preference For Trademarked Products

In an interview with Pringle, Stark & Co. and Robert Henderson of Huntingdon, and George Baird of Thos. Baird & Son of Ormstown, who introduced the famous 'blue coal' (the first trademarked anthracite) here last year, they stated that all their customers voiced the superiority of this splendid fuel, and particularly mentioned how pleased they were that it was now possible to purchase a coal that they could absolutely identify at a glance.

It was further stated that 'blue coal' had met with success in every district where it had been introduced—that people seemed to recognize the value of a nationally advertised, trademarked coal—one in which they could have absolute confidence, just the same as they had in other advertised products from tooth paste to automobiles.

Branding and advertising would certainly seem to pay. The producers of 'blue coal'—the D. L. & W. Coal Company, Limited—state that there is now more 'blue coal' sold in Canada than any other anthracite. A statement such as this would seem to speak volumes, not only for the product itself, but for advertising as well.

Pringle, Stark & Co. and Robert Henderson stated that they were receiving large quantities of 'blue coal' to take care of this year's requirements.

FIFTH ANNUAL PRESBYTERIAN CONFERENCE

Leaders in Sunday School and Missionary Activities Met in Huntingdon

ENROLMENT OF 58

Series of Lectures by Eminent Church Educationalists

The fifth annual conference of leaders in Sunday School and Missionary work among young people within the Synod of Montreal and Ottawa of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, was held in St. Andrew's Church, Huntingdon, from July 4th to 11th. At the opening meeting, held at 8 o'clock on Monday evening, a welcome to the Conference was given by the minister of the church. Response was made to this welcome by Dr. A. S. Reid, Clerk of the Synod of Montreal and Ottawa, and Director of the Conference.

By Tuesday morning practically all of the delegates had arrived, and the Conference settled down to work at 8.30 o'clock. After devotional services various courses of study were presented up to a few minutes after the noon hour. The afternoon was given up to recreation. After supper at 6 o'clock at the School Home, a Round Table Discussion was held, led by Mrs. Pae, President of the Montreal Presbyterial, W.M.S. and Dr. A. M. Hill, of Verdun, of problems arising out of work among the boys and girls of the church. At 8 o'clock in the evening, the Conference met in St. Andrew's Church again, where after devotional services a lecture was given by Dr. J. B. Maclean. This was the regular programme, day after day, throughout the week.

The special lecturers were Rev. Dr. Norman A. MacLeod, of Brockville, Ont., who gave a series on "Child Psychology and Principles of Teaching"; Rev. Dr. Davies of Smith's Falls, Ont., whose special subject was "Social Life and Customs of the ancient Hebrews"; Dr. A. M. Hill, of Verdun, Que., on Work among Boys, with a suggested programme for successful work in this department; Miss Laura Pelton of Montreal on Mission Work in Canada. Miss Agnes Dickson, now of Montreal, late of our Mission in China, had been expected to deliver an address on Chinese work in Canada, but in her unavoidable absence, Miss Pelton spoke of this subject also. An address was given by Rev. R. De Pierro on Mission work among the Italians in Canada, with special reference to his own work in Montreal. An address was given by Dr. A. S. Reid on the Organization of the Presbyterian Church. A series of five lectures on the general subject of "Literature and Religion" was given on five successive evenings by Dr. Maclean. Each evening the meeting was held in the church auditorium.

At the opening meeting the choir was present to lead the devotional service, and in view of the first week of July, rendered, as one number, Dr. Douglas' patriotic anthem, "My Canada." On each evening of the conference a member of the choir was present to sing a solo. The weather was most favourable, bringing one disappointment, however. It had been arranged to give the members of the Conference a trip to Port Lewis that they might see the lordly St. Lawrence and enjoy a picnic on its banks but the tempestuous rain of Saturday morning very effectually interfered.

At the Sunday morning service in St. Andrew's Church the preacher was Dr. MacLeod of Brockville, who delivered a most appropriate and memorable sermon. At the evening service, the minister of the church was the preacher who delivered the farewell message to the Conference, urging all to take as the watchword for the year the text of his sermon, John 7:17, "If any man will do, His will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of Myself."

At the morning service on Sunday Dr. A. S. Reid expressed the thanks of the members of the Conference to the officials of the church, to the organist and Choir, to the householders who had opened their hospitable homes to take care of the overflow from the School Home where most of the delegates were lodged, and for all courtesies received from citizens of the town and from others outside. He reported that the Conference in numbers was as large as any held in previous years; that 38 students of the courses had registered, and that in addition to these there were the lecturers and others who had come to take part in the meetings—that as many as 58 had sat down together at meal time in the School Home; that the standard of lectures had been fully up to the high standard set at the very beginning of the conferences; and that the value of it might be judged from the fact that so many who were present at the first conference were still coming year after year. On Saturday evening at the School Home an informal concert was given by certain members of the conference. In conclusion it might be added that a special vote of thanks is owing to Mrs. Gouldthorpe of the School Home, to Mrs. Allan Reid for the aid she brought to so many and to Miss Barbara Dougherty, who directed the programme of recreation.

Guests of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Leblanc on Saturday, were his brother, Mr. and Mrs. Alexandre Leblanc and family, Rev. J. Raoul Guilbard of Ottawa, Rev. J. O. Lambert, and Mr. Charles Girard of Toronto.

ORANGEMEN HOLD PICNIC AT HAVELOCK

Orange Parade With Fife and Drum Band—Fine Social Gathering

To commemorate the Battle of the Boyne, of 1790, the Loyal Orange Lodge of the County of Huntingdon held a 12th of July picnic at the Havelock Show grounds yesterday. It was a gay parade that entered the grounds on Tuesday morning to the strains of the fife and drum band. The gay flags and regalia of the many members of the order present made a great showing. The fraternal brethren present numbered well onto 125.

After considerable visiting amongst friends, throngs of people were seen heading for the dining hall where the ladies of the Church of England served an excellent dinner; and might we also mention that they served supper to all who were able to remain.

After the luncheon hour photographs were taken of the Orangemen of this county, members of the Havelock lodge, of the entire picnic party and last but not least, the fife and drum band of 8 pieces. Stalwart Orangemen of generations ago and who are still interested in the fraternal order were having a grand old time talking over the incidents of bygone picnics and celebrations.

As one thinks of the Orangemen's picnic they are often inclined to think of it as a hilarious gathering where the believers in the Roman Catholic religion are not allowed to rest in peace. The tenor of the entire day was that there is ample work for each fraternal order to devote its time to, without making trouble for one another, or be creating an unpleasant atmosphere in which to live.

Early in the afternoon the County Master of the Loyal Orange Lodge, Mr. A. A. Rowe of Franklin, called the gathering to order to listen to the short address delivered by Brother James Clark, representative of the Grand Lodge of Quebec.

Mr. Clark advised his attentive audience to abide by the responsibilities of their own order and not to interfere with those who might be regarded as their opposition. The speaker drew the attention of the members of the order present, that the British Flag meant the freedom of religion to everyone, and that, that liberty would always be maintained, and it should never be disregarded. After making his address along these lines he urged all the brethren to become habitual readers of the Orange Sentinel, the official organ of the society which he proclaimed made only truthful statements which he thought all upholders of the Protestant faith should be fully acquainted with.

The Rev. Mr. Howard of Hemmingford, was called upon, and in a brief and witty manner gave the audience a healthy laugh.

Mr. Martin B. Fisher, M.L.A., was the final speaker. Mr. Fisher in his tactful and pleasing manner expressed his pleasure at being present at such social gatherings. Mr. Fisher not being a member of the order confined his remarks to reviewing world conditions as they confront Canada today. Mr. Fisher sounded an optimistic note which was greeted with a general degree of satisfaction by the audience who gave him a hearty applause.

Races for both old and young were run off during the afternoon and the following were the results:

Girls, 10 yrs. and under—1, Helen Brooks; 2, Helene Rombreo.

Boys, 10 yrs. and under—1, Russell Brooks; 2, Hugh Norman.

Girls 11 to 14 yrs.—1, Hazel Bruce; 2, Margaret Duncan.

Boys 11 to 14 yrs.—1, Gerald Chaput; 2, Emmet Naffer.

Ladies, open—1, Mrs. E. McNiece; 2, Miss Etheline Moore.

In the evening the Havelock Lodge held a social dance in the Orange Hall and was largely attended. The many people who attended the 12th of July celebration of 1932 at Havelock all voted it a most successful picnic and outing.

JAIL-BREAKER CAUGHT HERE

Man Who Escaped From Malone Jail Was Working on Farm Near Athelstan

Ernest Robideau, 32, who escaped from the Franklin county jail, at Malone, on June 28, is back in his cell.

Robideau was located at Athelstan late Saturday afternoon where a posse surrounded him in a hayfield and snapped the handcuffs on him.

The capture climaxed a ten-day hunt which followed Robideau's escape from the jail after he had been sent up to serve a ten day sentence for failure to pay a board bill. The Thursday after his escape he stayed at the home of Frank Wheeler on the Foote road near Malone, Mr. Wheeler being unaware at the time that he was harboring an escaped criminal. Wheeler left his house Friday morning and on his return found his guest gone with his best coat, a cap and shoes. That morning a man was seen near Constable with a gray coat and cap answering Mr. Wheeler's description of the garment.

Acting on the information that Robideau had been seen walking north on the tracks near Constable, Sheriff Morrison, Lieutenant Charles B. McCann, Sergeant Geo. L. Brefka and Trooper Bentley came to Huntingdon Saturday afternoon, our local Inspector J. T. Baldwin joining the posse. The fugitive was finally located at the Thomas Arnold farm near Athelstan. The three roads bordering the farm were guarded while the posse closed in on Robideau who was at work in a hay field, arrested and made no explanation for Robideau waived extradition when the break except to say that he was sorry.

Robideau assumed the name of Wheeler when he arrived here, using papers in the coat to establish his identity. The gray coat and cap were found in a barn on the farm.

Robideau was taken back to Malone to serve his ten days' term and also faces charges of violation of parole from Dannemora and jail-breaking. The returned prisoner was once sentenced to life as a fourth offender under the Baumes law but was brought back for re-sentencing when it was established that he had only three convictions against him. His sentence was changed to five years and he had served four and a half years of this when he was paroled a short time ago.

When he has completed serving the ten days on the board bill charge, it is expected that he will be taken back to Dannemora where he had two and a half months to serve under his parole. The charge of jail-breaking will be made a misdemeanor from the fact that the charge for which he was sentenced to ten days is a misdemeanor.

YOUTH DROWNED AT CHATEAUG'Y

Fifteen-year-old Montrealer Loses Life in Swim to Recover Ball

Fifteen-year-old Alfred Levine, of 73 St. Cuthbert street, Montreal, lost his life by drowning in the river at Chateauguay Basin early Tuesday afternoon. He was trying to recover a large rubber ball which had been thrown into the water. Dr. L. Savage, of Ste. Philomene, coroner of the Beauharnois district, disposed of the case with a verdict of accidental death.

It was learned at the inquest that the youth was accompanied by Jos. Stone, 17 years of age, and Benjamin Kossky, both residents of Montreal. After lunch the three youths amused themselves on the shore of the Chateauguay River with a large rubber ball.

A wild throw landed the ball in the water, and Levine volunteered to swim out and get it. He plunged into the water and swam approximately 250 feet, when he suddenly shouted for aid. William Mitchell, engineer of Montreal, was fishing from a rowboat near the shore when he heard the shouts for assistance.

Mitchell saw Levine struggling for his life in the water and then disappear below the surface of the river. The Montreal engineer immediately jumped for the oars of his rowboat, which were on the shore and called Constable Robert McLaren, of the Chateauguay Basin police force, who was nearby, to aid him in attempting to rescue the young man.

Despite their endeavors it was only two and a half hours later, and with the aid of grappling irons and hooks that the body of the drowned youth was recovered. Artificial respiration proved futile.

Macdonald College Interested in Teafield

As the Laguerre River Drainage Scheme nears completion it is attracting the attention of officials of Macdonald College who have followed this development from its beginning with marked interest. On several occasions officials from Macdonald College have traversed portions of this vast area. The Laguerre River Drainage Scheme affects 22,000 acres of land which the authorities of Macdonald College proclaim will become the best garden lands of the Province.

They are now ready to analyze samples of the muck and see what fertilizer it might need for growing specific lines of vegetables or cereals. It was particularly noticeable to the visitors on their recent visit how corn was growing on a field that was affected by the canal drainage in its present condition. Corn planted four weeks ago on the muck showed a great deal better growth than a field of corn a few acres away that was planted on clay two or three weeks earlier.

These agricultural authorities proclaim the teafield is the ideal place for growing celery, for which there is a tremendous market throughout Ontario and Quebec. At the present time celery is imported from the United States but the tariff makes it unreasonably high priced and quite often it is tough. Celery that can be grown on muck land, such as is to be found in the teafield will grow celery of a very superior quality. The Ontario celery has not the keeping qualities as is to be found in that grown on muck lands such as we have in abundance.

Macdonald College is in hopes of having an experimental field in this area, in order to demonstrate to the farmers the possibilities of this great area of almost waste lands. They hope to get a field this year and prepare it for next year's planting.

It will be worth much to the Parish of St. Anicet and also to St. Barbe to have such an agricultural institution as Macdonald College have demonstration plots so conveniently located. The college would be able to give the farmers the best advice as to how to handle such lands, and how to market and grow the crops most suited. Our farmers are not accustomed to truck farming, but if the farmers find that they can make a great deal better income from that type of work they will not be long in acquainting themselves in it. Dairy farming is not the profitable avenue it was for our farmers a few years ago, so they must look to something better. Perhaps this is the avenue, and in place of having 100 to 150 acres to work, the farms in the teafield will be of the 10 and 15 acre size as they are in Holland and Belgium.

Macdonald College is deeply interested in this area and they hope to be able to recommend it to some of the graduates of Macdonald College who are looking for suitable areas to take up that branch of agriculture.

Our friends in Macdonald College are not only interested in the Laguerre River area, but also visited the highlands of our county, viewing the prospects of furthering the growth of fruit trees, particularly apples. They were escorted on this mission by Mr. R. J. M. Reid of Hemmingford.

That our county will ultimately benefit by the repeated visits of the many members of the staff of Macdonald College, goes without saying. Dr. Barton, Dean of Macdonald College, will be in this community within a few days time, when further fieldwork will be done by the College all for the good of agricultural development within this county. We welcome these agricultural specialists and hope a sufficient number of our farmers will seek their advice from time to time, that they might profit through their fund of knowledge gained through intensive study and experiments tried out in demonstration plots at Macdonald College and throughout the province.

The Imperial Conference

The list of delegates to the Imperial Conference is now complete. It omits the name of President deValera of the Irish Free State, whose government will be represented by three lesser officials. Great Britain's delegation will comprise, the Right Hon. Stanley Baldwin, Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Thomas, Viscount Hailsham, Sir Philip Cunliffe-Lister, Sir John Gilmour, Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries, and Right Hon. Walter Runciman, President of the Board of Trade. Australia sends two delegates, New Zealand, two; South Africa, three; South Rhodesia, two; India, six. The British Government has indicated that its delegates are in favor of a minimum of hospitality in the form of dinners and excursions. They feel that the conference is called to deal in a businesslike manner with problems of trade, transport and economics and that the delegates should attend strictly to the business in hand.

As to the duration of the conference, Premier Bennett thinks a minimum of three weeks will be necessary for the consideration of important questions on the agenda. Elaborate preparations have been made by the various Governments concerned, so that when the meetings begin the delegates will be able to come to grips with the problems to be solved. It is hoped that the task of readjusting Empire tariffs and discussing currency, transport and other matters may be so well in hand that the conference will be able to adjourn by the end of August in order that the delegates may return home and make the necessary arrangements to implement the recommendations of the conference by legislative action. The conference, of course, will have no legislative powers, but can only recommend what should be done by the respective Parliaments of the Empire to accomplish what is necessary to deepen the channels of intra-Empire trade.

While the conclave is primarily a business gathering, there will be a certain number of social functions for the delegates and their wives, but some will be accompanied by wives and daughters.

The event will be covered by newspapermen representing all the great dailies of the Empire, the United States and other countries.

Too Many Members

It is hardly probable that the country's representation in the Federal Parliament will ever exceed 300. The quota of representation is determined by the population of Quebec province divided by 65, and as that province is well maintaining its demographical decline, as compared with the English-speaking provinces, we will have to wait a long time before popular representation in the House of Commons is increased by that method. As against this, in most provinces, with the exception of those of the Maritimes, the number of members in the provincial parliaments has been increased in the wake of each Federal census recording an appreciable increase in population.

"The Quebec Legislature comprises 87 members; that of Ontario 112, and Manitoba's numbers 58. Premier Henry, of Ontario, is reported as entertaining the idea of reducing the number of members in the provincial Parliament to that of Ontario's members in the Federal Parliament, i.e. 82. A campaign of propaganda has already begun, probably at the instigation of the Conservative chieftain. And several associations have pronounced themselves in favor of such a reform, from which is expected, at least, a considerable saving in time and in money. We even see a Liberal newspaper in Toronto, the Toronto Star, declare its adherence to such a project. If ever this proposition becomes law, it will probably be widely imitated. The three western provinces, each with its own capital, its own legislative assembly, and an average of more than 60 members each, would do well to at last reduce their costs of representation and Government, if not to join completely their common interests under one Government.

"As for the three Maritime provinces, the populations of which are increasing by but feeble proportions, they would have nothing to lose and much to gain by forming an inter-provincial union, with one capital, one legislature, and a representation not exceeding in number that which speaks for the Maritime provinces in Ottawa.

Ship's Fireman is Champion Sleeper

Admitting to the police that he walked in his sleep and fell off the S.S. John A. Halloway, which was going down the Lachine canal on its way to Port Dalhousie, and that the crew of the boat failed to notice him fall into the waters of the canal, Armand Petit, 38 years of age, of Three Rivers, a fireman aboard the boat, left Montreal on his way to Port Colborne, Ont., to catch up with the ship. Petit was found by the Lachine police on the wharf opposite the Lachine church. The police supplied him with clothing. Petit told the police a very unusual story of his experience. He said that he was asleep below, when he apparently got up and walked in his sleep to the upper deck of the boat. There he climbed over the railing and was only awakened as he was falling into the canal. He had shouted several times, but the crew on board failed to hear him and the ship continued. He succeeded in swimming to and climbing upon the wharf opposite the church and there fell asleep. He said that all this must have happened around 11 o'clock at night. The next morning at nine o'clock Petit was found asleep by Captain Mackenzie, of the Lachine police. He was dressed only in his underwear and was taken to the police station. Here he related the story how he had fallen off the ship, and found himself in the water. The police supplied him with clothing and he went to Montreal where he procured some money and left to meet the boat. Petit is said to have told the police that he was subject to walking in his sleep.

Dog's Trick Saved House

Some time ago Tigo was just a common little dog of doubtful ancestry but full of amusing tricks. Now he is a hero in the home of his owner, Mrs. Dan McLean, at Londonderry, N.S., and all because he had been taught to chase and retrieve sticks that were thrown for him. The other day Mrs. McLean was chatting comfortably with a neighbor in her kitchen. Tigo was outdoor. He saw a stick flying merrily through the air and went after it. The "stick" was a shingle and one end was ablaze. Tigo grasped the unburned end and brought the brand to the feet of his amazed mistress. It was then discovered that the roof of the house was burning briskly, but, thanks to the warning, the fire was soon extinguished with little damage.

One Way to Economize

In these times of depression, two one-legged men in Virginia, who wear the same size shoe, have entered into a compact whereby they will purchase footwear jointly, and thereby avoid wasting half of every pair of shoes they buy. One of them is Deputy Sheriff Perry W. Hatcher, who lost his leg some years ago in a railroad accident, and the other is D. D. Miller, who moved to town from Orange not long ago, and is minus his right leg. Happening to fall into conversation recently concerning the loss of their respective legs, they found they both wore size eight shoes on their respective feet. Miller thereupon presented Hatcher with two brand new number 8's for the right foot, neither of which was any use to him. Hatcher will buy the next pair and give the left shoe to Miller.

A Family Reunited

For more than 30 years Mrs. Barbara McGinnis, age 102, Kentville, N.S., King's county's oldest citizen, and her "kid" brother, Edward Viner, had not seen each other. Then for the first time since 1899 when Edward, then a mere youth of 49, betook himself and family to the United States, they were again reunited. "A gentleman to see you, Mrs. McGinnis," announced Mrs. Laing, at whose private hospital she is residing. And in walked Edward Viner. "Hello, Barbara. You look great. "How's everything?" was his greeting. Then followed a real reunion in which the two were joined by another sister, Mrs. Rufus Barnaby, and Mr. Viner's son, Edgar, of Worcester, Mass.

Penitentiary Warden Loses Pants

Warden Henry Hill wouldn't have felt so put out about the robbery in the Illinois state penitentiary at Joliet if the thief hadn't carried away a pair of his best pants. To make matters worse the prowler got into the safe in the warden's office and stole his star—a gift to him from the inmates in wishing him good luck with his newly acquired position as head of the federal prison at Lewisburg, Pa.

117-Pound Sturgeon

A six foot lake sturgeon, weighing 117 pounds, was hauled from Lake Erie by Angus Gerardin, of Cedar Island, near Windsor, Ont. It was caught in his pound net. He places a value of about $50 on the fish, at wholesale prices, and estimates that caviar will be worth $10 to $15 in addition. He is keeping the fish alive in a pond, pending sale. Gerardin has netted 14 sturgeons this week, weighing 15 to 20 pounds each.

Patient 100 Miles Away

The story of a five-day battle with death, with physicians and patient never nearer than 100 miles, was told when the Baltimore mail liner, City of Hamburg, docked at Baltimore, Md. A sailor on the British freighter, Aracataca, was the patient and Dr. Vernon H. Condon, medical officer of the City of Hamburg, the physician. The Baltimore liner was off the Grand Banks of Newfoundland, when a message from the Aracataca was intercepted. The message said: "Seaman aboard critically ill. Temperature 104½. Delirious. Breath short." Dr. Condon asked for further information and then diagnosed the ailment as pneumonia. As both vessels were moving eastward, they were almost abreast for five days. Dr. Condon several times each day received information and prescribed for his long distance patient. On the fifth day, this message was received: "Patient resting well. Pulse, respiration and heart normal. Thanks for your help."

Finance Chief Writes Music

Immediately after declaring the moratorium, the Hungarian Minister of Finance Baron Frederic Koranyi, sat down at his piano and composed an oratorio. Baron Koranyi, one of the most outstanding figures of the Hungarian government, is as well known as a composer as he is as a statesman. Numerous of his compositions have been repeatedly successfully performed at fashionable Budapest concerts. His newest composition, an oratorio, is scheduled to be performed soon in Budapest with the city's best artists. The fact that, on the one hand, as minister of finance, he is compelled to enforce now, unpopular taxes, while, on the other, as a composer, his success is dependent upon popular acclamation has made him the object of numerous sarcastic attacks in Budapest newspapers. Ironical critics declare his music, which is strictly conservative, to be very good for a minister of finance, while political opponents state his financial policy to be fair for a composer.

"Moonshine" Bath Cramps Cure

"I am dying!" was the statement made by Wm. Westoski, a farmer of Goulburn Township, Ontario, to Magistrate G. Russell Boucher, in County Police Court at Ottawa in defending himself on a charge of having liquor illegally. Wetoski said he was sure he was going to die from "cramps," and a friend had told him to have a "bath in liquor and it would help him." This was his explanation of the presence in the summer kitchen of his farm of two gallons of "moonshine liquor," which on analysis was found to possess 35 per cent. alcoholic content. The magistrate found Westoski guilty of the offence and remanded him for a week. The liquor was found by Provincial Police Inspector Phil Walter and Constable W. J. Johnston.

Dynamite Explodes in River

In one of the strangest accidents ever recorded, Tony Muluccio, employed by the railroad, had his left leg shattered by a blast of dynamite while he was swimming near Pulgrave, Ont. With two companions, he reached for a large rock on the overhanging bank to clamber out. The rock became dislodged, narrowly missing Muluccio, and then dropped to the bottom of the river. A dynamite cap or stick on the bottom was hit by the rock and exploded. The blast hurled Muluccio high in the air and he was rescued in an unconscious condition by his two companions. It is thought that the explosive had been placed by fishermen who blast fish from the water in the early spring, contrary to game laws.

Boy Mistaken For Deer

Earl Hicks, aged thirteen, of Hicksville, N.S., was shot and killed by Hartley Hicks, an uncle, who told Royal Canadian Mounted Police that he had mistaken the boy for a deer in the woods near Hartley Hick's residence. Accompanied by his father, Earl left home to hunt deer, while Hartley Hicks and a son also set out on a similar quest from a nearby farm. Half an hour later a shot rang out and Earl dropped dead from a bullet wound near the heart. Rushing to the scene, Hartley Hicks and his son assisted the victim's father in carrying the lifeless body a distance of two miles.

Bees Placed Under "Arrest"

Five hundred were taken into custody in Whitby, Ont. Chief Constable Sidney Quantrill believes his round-up constitutes a mark other Canadian cities cannot equal. But it was not Communists who fell foul of the law. It was not persons at all. It was a swarm of bees which fell foul of Whitby bowlers, selecting the clubhouse of the Whitby Bowling Club around which to swarm. The irate bowlers were mollified when Chief Quantrill, who keeps bees, arrived with a hive and added to his apiary.

4-year-old Saves Sister

Little Johnny Webster of Burlington, Wis., is four years old, and a hero who doesn't appreciate why everyone is making a fuss over him. He held her head above water and yelled. His cries attracted their mother, Mrs. John Webster. The girl was in the water so long that she suffered from exposure.

The child told officers he had been chained at intervals for two years because his step-mother "doesn't like me."

Ray Irvin did the pitching for the homesters and made a peach of a job out of it. He let the visiting aggregation down with only three scattered hits, while his team-mates were slugging the visiting slab artists for 15 bingles.

ARE you looking forward to the time when you will be able to lay down the tools of labour and enjoy a well-earned rest—a permanent vacation amid pleasant surroundings, free from worry or dependence on others?

This need not be an idle dream. It can be a reality for you as it will be for thousands who are "pensioning themselves" by means of Life Insurance Pension Policies, which provide for monthly payments to them at definite ages in addition to the insurance protection in case of early death.

We shall be pleased to send particulars of a pension policy for yourself entirely without obligation.

SIX BLUEBOOKS FOR DATA ON TRADE STUDY

Elaborate Plans For Imperial Economic Conference About Completed

When the delegates to the Imperial Economic Conference assemble in Ottawa on July 21 they will have before them the most complete and exhaustive figures on commerce, trade, and tariffs to aid them in their deliberations.

R. H. Coats, Dominion Statistician, has prepared six bluebooks which analyze trade within the Empire from every angle. These books will be printed for the conference.

The Cabinet has been sitting daily considering various phases of the great Empire meeting.

Agenda About Ready

The agenda of the parley is in the course of final preparation and will include such important questions as trade, currency, communications, and migration. When the conference assembles sub-committees will be named to deal with these subjects.

Four sub-committees, one on administration, headed by Hon. Martin Burrell, on entertainment with Sir George H. Perley as chairman, on statistics headed by R. H. Coats, and on tariffs with R. W. Breadner as chairman, have been working for weeks and reporting to the Government and the Cabinet has been dealing with the problems raised.

Representatives of manufacturers of the Dominion and importers have submitted representations to the committee on tariffs. A delegation headed by Premier S. F. Tolmie, representing British Columbia lumbermen in particular, have suggested that Canadian lumber be given a special preference over Soviet lumber in the British market.

To Speed Up Work

Although a program of entertainment is being arranged for the delegates to the conference it is believed that weather permitting every effort will be made to speed up the parley. The meeting essentially is a business meeting, a conference of economic experts. In some quarters it is believed the meeting will be concluded within a month.

The delegates are to be taken to the gold and silver camps of Northern Ontario and also to the Niagara Peninsula. There will be about 225 in the official party, but more than 1,000 visitors are expected. Many of them will be here with watching briefs.

State Dinner July 21

There will be a State dinner on the night of July 21 in honor of the visitors. Premier Taschereau of Quebec has offered to co-operate with the Dominion in welcoming the delegates to the conference.

During the sojourn of the delegates in Canada special automobile licenses, which have been prepared by Ottawa, will be issued to be placed on automobiles used by the visitors. These special licenses will carry the words: "License, Imperial Economic Conference," with a distinctive number.

NEW QUEBEC CANNING RULES

Promotion of Industry and Protection of Public Considered in Clauses Sanctioned

The Minister of Agriculture, Hon. Adelard Godbout, has ordered the publication of the new regulations, which are to govern the canning of food. This publication will take the form of a bulletin, which will be distributed free of charge in a few days to any one applying for it. This bulletin will not only be useful but absolutely necessary for any one who is already interested in the canning industry or intends to go into that business. It will contain the provisions which have been set by the Minister of Agriculture with the co-operation of the officials of the Horticultural Service, who are in charge of that service, as they were sanctioned by the Legislature on the 19th of February last.

The object of this new legislation is to protect the public against badly prepared canned food, to provide for more uniformity in the canning, to maintain the quality of these products and to preserve with this Quebec industry in the Province and also outside. The law has been prepared so as to create no radical change and the restrictions, which have been included, have been made with the idea of promoting this industry, which each year is becoming more extensive and which constitutes for agricultural classes an important source of revenues.

It is first stipulated that no one, no society or no company may manufacture for commercial purposes canned goods if a permit has not first been obtained from the Minister of Agriculture. This permit is given free and will be available after the first of July. It may be revoked for cause by the Minister. The issue of this permit will allow the authorities to supervise the canning factories very closely and thus to protect the canners who will observe the law against those who might attempt to violate it.

The word factory does not mean the farmer must construct a special building to manufacture canned goods. As was the case in the past, the farmer may use a kitchen, a shed or other premises as long as the chosen place be exclusively used for this work and that it be in accordance with the hygienic requirements. In other words, factory means any place where food is treated, canned or bottled, stored or demonstrated for commerce.

Before delivering a permit, the Minister of Agriculture may ascertain if the establishment is well lighted and ventilated, if all the accessories used for canning purposes are clean and in perfect sanitary conditions and if all the operations are carried on with care, and whether the employees connected with the work are free from contagious disease or not.

Since 1910, the Government has proved to be a great help to the canners, both in regard to financial and technical needs. Large sums have been spent in grants to help in promoting the production of fruits and vegetables of higher standard. The efforts have been made to find a market for the handling of these products through canning.

In 1917-18, while war was provoking an extraordinary demand for food due to the fact that the oversea markets were in need of all what could be produced to feed the armies and the civil population, the Federal Government organized a Production Bureau and asked the Provincial Government to incite the farmers to produce more and to can the surplus of their production so as to have sufficient supply for the winter. This movement gave a new impetus to the policy which had been advocated by the Department of Agriculture of Quebec and the farmers soon took the habit to produce for their own needs and to make up a reserve.

This movement having been created, Canadian firms were organized to manufacture small canning devices at very low prices and the production as result increased so much that, in 1929, it had reached 250,000 cases, but this production, which had been made partly without any official control unfortunately lacked uniformity and under the same label one could obtain good, medium or bad canned food. Complaints were made by the public, by the merchants and even by the manufacturers of good canned food. The Government was asked by the merchants and the manufacturers to put in force a law which would provide for a proper and efficient control of the canning industry, which would result in a better quality of products, more uniformity and at the same time would maintain the good reputation of reliable manufacturers who were carrying on their business properly.

This canned Food Act, adopted after very serious study of the problem from all angles, is in accordance with the "buy at home policy," as it will result in the improvement of our canned goods and in the satisfactory handling of the consumers of those products, which is increasing each day, so as to place that industry on a commercial and methodical basis.

The Bulletin, which contains the Canned Food Act may be obtained free of charge by applying to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Quebec.

Friends Fête Henry Stewart.—

On the occasion of his impending marriage, the many friends of Henry Stewart gathered last Thursday in the Banquet Hall of Frontier Inn to offer him their congratulations and their good wishes. An appropriate token of remembrance was added to the expression of their friendly feelings in the form of a clock. In the tastefully decorated room, very suitable otherwise for the circumstance, a huge U shaped table offered a tantalizing display. Mr. C. E. Petch, acting as toastmaster showed real talent in keeping the guests in good humor, aptly choosing this sentence of Shakespeare as his text sentence: "When I said I would die a bachelor, I did not think I should live till I were married." The gathering was constantly kept in a joyful mood by the witty repartees and the ready-made stories. Among the contributors in the oratorical entertainment we picked: Wm. Rutherford, Mr. Beaudin, W. P. Fisher, Raymond Bourdon, Dr. A. J. Abran, Notary Bouchard and J. B. Maltais.

HAROLD S. EDGAR

A series of weekly articles on advertising and merchandising prepared for the merchants of the Chateauguay Valley with the co-operation of the Huntingdon Gleaner.

More About Up Grade Merchandising

The question is often asked—why continue to spend millions each year to advertise a product so widely distributed and so well known, and Wm. Wrigley, Jr., gives this answer.

"Tell 'em quick and tell 'em often. You must have a good product in the first place and something that people want, for it's easier to row down stream than up. Explain to folks plainly and sincerely what you have to sell, do it in as few words as possible—and keep everlastingly coming at them."

"Advertising is pretty much like running a furnace. You've got to keep on shoveling coal. Once you stop stoking, the fire goes out. It's strange that some people's imagination can't compass this fact."

A merchant told me the other day that he did not believe in doing any advertising. He said he had a list of customers who had been coming to him for years. He was blind to the fact that many of those old customers were gradually dying off or moving out of the district and the balance were being appealed to by the advertising of other merchants. To be successful in business today you must be continually working to hold all your old customers as well as building up new business. As I have said before the man who is standing still is really dropping behind.

Another merchant in commenting on his plans said, "As the business is going at present we are not going to make a profit for the year and we will be hard put to it to avoid a loss. At the same time, I don't think we should cut advertising except as the last resort because it is advertising we depend on to build up our business. In fact we need to consider a further substantial increase of advertising as soon as we can manage to commence it if we are to hold our own in this market.

Be busy doing business, or be busy trying to get business. No one likes to do business with a doleful merchant, and a busy appearance, even though it may be on the outside, will frequently create the actual. Do not think for one moment conditions are going to come back exactly as they were before; they never do and never have. The energy displayed when things were moving fast is too slow for harder conditions. The gas which will run your car on the level, will not be sufficient to get it over a stiff grade.

The store front, go outside and look at it. Does it look clean, bright and prosperous? If not, now is the time to make it right.

Your windows, are they frequently dressed? Do people stop and look at them expecting something new, or do they pass them by because of the same old story? Inside the store, are you making the best use of the display in the location of the goods and the relation of the products to each other?

The lighting of your windows, do you light them early in the evening and leave the light on while people are on the street (even if the store is not open), it usually is worth more than it costs.

Is the store inside bright and cheerful? or are you holding down your light bill?

I cannot emphasize too strongly that it is essential for you to study your store and see if you cannot easily make changes that will make for better display. Study your shelving—your counters—your windows—your advertising. Study other stores and other advertising, not necessarily in your size or even your own type of business, but study them all and look about you for ideas.

Next Week—DRESS IN BUSINESS.

Mr. Edgar will be glad to answer questions in this column, if readers will address their communications in care of this paper. Confidential replies can be arranged through the editor.—(Copyright)

Obituary

The late W. A. Sharpe

On Friday morning, July 1st, our community was saddened by the death of one of our most esteemed and highly respected citizens in the person of William A. Sharpe. He had been in ill health for the last few months, but only confined to bed for four weeks.

The late Mr. Sharpe spent the greater part of his life in Franklin Centre, Que., where he was born in 1856, with the exception of a few years in the employ of Mr. Dalgleish, merchant, Huntingdon, Que., later coming back to Franklin and purchasing the store of the late John Haire where he has carried on a very successful business as merchant and undertaker for the last forty-nine years. He was Post Master and Justice of the Peace for several years; these positions he filled very efficiently until his resignation a few years ago. He took an active part in having the Bell Telephone line constructed through the county and also had the pay station for some years.

On June 24, 1913, he was united in marriage with Estella M. Waddell, who tenderly and lovingly cared for him during his illness. He also leaves to mourn his loss, two children Dorothy and Milton. He was treasurer of the Cantwell Cemetery committee, and took an active part in raising a fund for the perpetual upkeep of same. Mr. Sharpe was prohibitionist and usually did all he could to help the cause, often giving a word of advice to many who were addicted to drink.

The funeral was held on Sunday afternoon at 2 p.m. at the United Church, of which he was a member, service being conducted by his pastor, Rev. T. F. Duncan, assisted by Rev. W. Ross and Rev. W. T. Payne, of Ormstown. Mr. Duncan took for his text a portion of the 23rd Psalm: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me, Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me." The choir rendered two hymns during the service: Nearer My God to Thee and Asleep in Jesus and Mrs. Duncan a solo "The Christian's Good Night." The choir also sang "Safe in the Arms of Jesus," at the grave-side. The funeral was the largest ever held in Franklin, there being upwards of seven hundred people present, which showed the respect in which the deceased was held. The bearers were Messrs. Wm. Hanna, Wm. Whitehead, Robert C. Manning, John Vaillancourt, Benj. Johnston and Chas. R. Barr.

Those from a distance who attended the funeral were: Mrs. John Sharpe and son, William, Albany, N.Y., Mr. Bruce P. Haire, Niagara Falls, N.Y., Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Harrington, Burlington, Vt., Mr. and Mrs. Jas. A. Wilson, Mr. Wm. Cully, Mr. Thos. Cully, Mr. Rutchie Cully, Mr. Alfred Norwood, Mr. Jos. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Earl McNiece, the Misses Libbie, Essie and Anna Waddell, the Misses Ella and Louise MacDiarmid, all of Montreal, Mrs. Wm. Ball, Ottawa, Ont., Mr. Sylvester MacMillan, Plattsburg, N.Y., Mrs. L. MacCormick, Chateaugay, N.Y.

The floral tributes were numerous and beautiful and consisted of a pillow from the family; wreaths from Rev. and Mrs. H. A. Gillingham, Ottawa; the United Church, Franklin Centre; Mrs. John Waddell and family; Mr. and Mrs. Earl McNiece; Mrs. W. MacMillan and Mrs. Fred Adams; Sprays from Mr. and Mrs. Jas. A. Wilson, Mrs. John Sharpe and son, William; Mr. Jos. Smith; Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Harrington; Mrs. Wm. Briscoe; Dr. and Mrs. P. H. O'Leary; Mrs. D. O'Leary and Mr. Sylvester MacMillan; also basket of roses from Mrs. Wm. Parham and Miss Alma Parham. He was laid to rest in the Cantwell cemetery, Franklin Centre, Que., and the large cortege of relatives and friends which followed his remains to its last resting place proved the respect in which he was held by everyone far and near. The community has lost a man who has been a friend and helper to each and everyone in need or distress.

Aubrey

The July meeting of the Aubrey-Riverfield W.I. was held at the home of Mrs. Ewart Orr on Thursday at 2 p.m. with about twenty-five ladies, members and visitors present. The response to the roll-call was "Canadian Women of Note and Why?" A very comprehensive report of the Convention held at Macdonald College in June given by the delegate Mrs. Wm. Templeton proved very interesting and a hearty vote of thanks was given her. A most interesting and trite article on "The Art of living with people," was read by Mrs. Lawrence Gruer and greatly appreciated by all present. A biography of the life of the late Sir William Dawson, one time principal of McGill University, was given by Mrs. Jas. Orr. It was decided that this Institute hold a drive and picnic to Macdonald College in August. It is expected that Miss Gladys McKell who spent last summer in the Canadian Labrador will give a talk on her work there. At the close of the meeting dainty refreshments were served by the hostesses for the day, Mrs. Geo. Robb, Mrs. Ray Reddick and Mrs. Ewart Orr and a social hour spent.

Word has been received by friends here from Chilliwack, B.C., of the death of Mr. Everett MacFarlane, a young man of 26, son of Mr. John MacFarlane, a former resident of Aubrey, under mysterious circumstances. It seems that Everett and a companion left on a trapping expedition expecting to be gone about two months. When he failed to return at the appointed time, his parents became uneasy and finally went to his companion's home to see if there was any word from the boys. They were surprised to find that his companion had been home for the past three weeks, and upon enquiry as to Everett's whereabouts, said he had got separated from him and did not know where he was. Mr. MacFarlane then communicated with the North-West Mounted Police and a search was begun, resulting in the finding of Everett's dead body. Foul play was suspected and a thorough investigation is being made. Much sympathy is felt for Mr. and Mrs. MacFarlane and family in the loss of a dearly loved son and brother in such sad circumstances.

Mr. Sherman Robb was taken to Lachine Hospital on Wednesday suffering from an attack of appendicitis. He was immediately operated on and is doing as well as can be expected. His many friends hope he will soon be able to come home.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Orr, Mrs. Currie and Mrs. Antice attended the picnic in Hooker's grove on Tuesday.

Mrs. Orrie Pollock and children are guests of her sister, Mrs. Angus Black.

The Riverfield Presbyterian Church held their annual picnic in the grove of Mr. Thos. Goundrey on Thursday. The weather was ideal and a large crowd gathered to partake of the good things provided by the ladies. After dinner races were held and a social time enjoyed by all.

The Sunshine Mission Band of Howick United Church met on Saturday at 2 p.m. at the home of Mrs. Jas. Orr, about twenty-seven children and five ladies being present. Three new members had their names enrolled. Interesting facts about Japanese homes were learned. At the close of the meeting refreshments were served and a social hour enjoyed by the children.

Mr. and Mrs. W. McNeally and Roy were week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Reddick. Mrs. McNeally and Roy remaining for a week's visit at this home.

The Misses Ruth and Edna Reddick returned home Saturday after a week's visit with friends in the city.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Robb, Morris and Keith, Mrs. Wm. Reddick and Mrs. W. Stacey motored to Lachine on Sunday afternoon and visited Mr. Sherman Robb who is a patient in Lachine General Hospital.

Miss Esther Craig left on Saturday for Hudson where she has a position for the remainder of the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. F. N. Williams, Ann and Vera, and Mrs. Randles Brooks were Sunday evening callers at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Bruce.

The funeral of the late Joseph Arthur, who passed away on June 29th was held from the residence of his son Roderick Friday, July 1st. Mr. Arthur had suffered from an infection in one of his feet and was removed to Valleyfield Hospital where the leg was amputated in an effort to save his life. The shock, however, proved to be too great and he lived only a few days after the operation. Mr. Arthur was a man of quiet and retiring disposition and was held in high esteem in the community. Some twelve years ago he retired from active work and selling the homestead to his son Roderick, moved to this village where he resided until the time of his death. His wife, formerly Miss Cornelia McLaren, predeceased him a few years ago and he leaves two daughters, Mrs. W. Merson of Huntingdon and Mrs. W. Wood of Aubrey, and three sons, Leslie, Harry and Roderick of this community to mourn the loss of a kind and good father. The funeral was conducted by the Rev. W. Ross, assisted by Rev. Mr. Lloyd of Russeltown, and interment was made in Hillside cemetery.

Sixty Years Among the Farmers

MANY years ago it was decided that the fortunes of The Canadian Bank of Commerce would be largely dependent on the growth and development of agriculture.

For that reason it has always been the policy of this Bank to follow the farmer East and West,—to give him adequate banking service,—to support him to the fullest possible extent.

Isobel was determined that the children should be outdoors this summer, but Tom could get away from the office only at week-ends and she dreaded the long days alone in the country.

"That's easy," Tom said, "we'll use the telephone. A call to the city costs only a few cents."

And so Isobel's difficulty is solved. Tom telephones her nearly every evening and she finds Long Distance a convenient, inexpensive way of arranging visits and keeping in touch with friends in town.

To Absorb Grease

When boiling a suet pudding, put three or four pieces of orange peel in the water. They will collect all the grease, and the pudding will boil quicker and will be much lighter.

Obituary

The late John Christopher Buchanan

John Christopher Buchanan, mining contractor, of Cobalt, Ont., died in the Haileybury hospital on Wednesday following an illness of several months. Born in Russelltown, Que. in 1880, Mr. Buchanan was the younger son of the late Arthur Buchanan of Havelock. As a young man he was keenly interested in the militia, joining the 6th. Duke of Connaught's Royal Canadian Hussars in 1897, and preserving his connection with the regiment until he left Huntingdon some years later. He was one of the original officers of the 23rd. Alberta Rangers when it was organized in 1908. At Summerview, Alberta, he recruited a company composed entirely of Orangemen for the annual training at Calgary. He was complimented for this unique turnout by the then Governor-General, Earl Grey, who remarked that it was the first time he had ever had the pleasure of inspecting a company of Orangemen.

The funeral was held under Masonic auspices at Haileybury on Friday afternoon, interment being in the Mount Pleasant Cemetery, Haileybury. Besides his widow, formerly Miss Janet Bailey, of North Bay, he is survived by three daughters, Frances, sixteen, Florence, twelve, and Phyllis, nine; also two sisters, Mrs. J. F. Rollit and Miss Mildred Buchanan of Westmount.

Fruit Jar Washer

A snap clothespin can be used to hold a sponge, steel wool, or a rag when washing fruit jars by adding an extension handle to the clothespin. A round stick of soft wood is used for the extension. A notch is cut in one end of the stick to hold one arm of the pin. This pin arm is fastened to the stick with small brads. Another notch, near the tin end of the stick is cut to hold one end of the pin's spring. The inside of deep fruit jars or crocks are easily reached and quickly washed with a long handled washer of this sort. The wash rag can be renewed without difficulty.

Matrimonial

Marchand-Laberge

A lovely summer wedding was solemnized Monday morning of this week in the Church of Saint Joachim de Chateauguay, when Annette Laberge, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Napoleon Laberge, of Chateauguay Basin, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to G. A. Marchand, son of Dr. and Mrs. Z. E. Marchand, of Chateauguay Village. The bride who looked very charming was given away by her father and was attended by three bridesmaids. Standards of garden flowers, in pale pink and blue tones, with palms formed the background. The bride wore a pink taffeta frock of Empire period fashioned with puffed sleeves. Rows of frills around the bottom of the skirt, formed a small train. With this the bride wore a hat of maline, pink moire shoes, also pink lace mittens, and she carried a sheaf of garden flowers. Rev. Father J. E. Bourbonnais, parish priest of St. Joachim de Chateauguay, performed the ceremony in the presence of a large congregation. Soft organ music preceded the ceremony and was presided over by the prominent organist of this lovely parish church. Six ushers, who were immediate friends of the family attended. Immediately after the wedding service, the relatives and guests of the family sat down to a wedding breakfast, which formed the reception given at the home of the bride. Later on in the morning the bride and bridegroom left for a motor trip of the Maritime Provinces, the bride travelling in a skipper blue diagonally striped silk serge suit, with kid sandals, club bag and turban to match. The jacket of the suit was lined with white and red printed crepe, which matched the blouse. On their return they will live at Chateauguay village.

Seven members of the crew, including Lieutenant du Mesnil, the ship's commander, were saved when they were hurled from the deck into the sea by the lurch of the vessel in its unexpected dive. They swam for an hour until they were picked up by a fishing boat. The Promethee was one of the newer submersibles of the French navy. It was completed in 1930, 295 feet in length with a beam of 26 feet and draught of 15½ feet, has an underwater displacement of 1,970 tons and surface speed of 18 knots per hour.

The Hold of the Liquor Traffic

The liquor traffic well understands its hold of finance and appetite in Canada, and the truth of the matter leaks out when it comes to contentions between political parties.

Hon. E. A. Dunlop, provincial treasurer, Ontario, in replying to Mr. M. F. Hepburn, Ontario Liberal leader, in regard to disposal of liquor funds, said: "Mr. Hepburn should know that the Liquor Control Board agreed at the beginning of the financial year to pay the sum of $10,000,000 to the government out of operating surplus. And this is the amount, no more and no less, which was paid over."

And this is the confessed financial liquor hold the government has on Ontario, and the electorate have sold out the most precious human possessions—home at its best, moral character and a commendable record in life's battle creating a sober and progressive onward march in this world, not to mention the Biblical warning, the drunkard shall come to poverty.

Less Drinking Under Provincial Prohibition

That the total quantity of liquor consumed under prohibition was much less than under government sale is evidenced by the fact that the extension of government sale brought huge increase of capitalization of our breweries and distilleries. In the prohibition period in 1920 there were operating in Canada 4 distilleries and 57 breweries; in 1931 there were 28 distilleries and 86 breweries. In 1920 the joint capitalization of distilleries and breweries was $49,267,442; in 1928 it had reached a total of $128,327,789. This increase is based on increased production. Other facts indicate approximately a three-fold increase.

A Cocktail, Cigarette Motherhood

Surely it seems as if there were influences at work, during these passing days, seeking a semi-barbaric drift against a Christian home influence by way of a cocktail, cigarette motherhood.

Not long ago Dr. W. W. Chipman, Montreal, had this to say to the Ottawa Women's Canadian Club: "Two or three cocktails a day and 30 cigarettes in the same period of time do not tend to make girls into good mothers."

This issue of alcohol and the unborn child was of such pressing importance as to receive attention at the British Royal Commission on Licensing. Dr. Courtenay Weeks, recognized as a medical authority, when he came before that Commission, as part of his evidence, quoted Dr. Louise McIlroy, Director of the Obstetrical Unit of the Royal Free Hospital, who declares: "I think it no exaggeration to say that alcohol is a poison, and that the foetus, the unborn child, of a chronic alcoholic mother is itself a chronic alcoholic absorbing alcohol from the mother's blood, and subsequently from her milk. I would claim that there are facts that ought to be made known to every girl in the land."

When Dr. Courtenay Weeks was closely examined and asked: "Are the children necessarily inferior? Are the sins of the fathers visited upon the children in that respect?" he answered: "Absolutely. The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge. There is no doubt about that in modern biology."

School Work.—

There is ever a touch of sadness in the thought that what is old must at some time or other give place to that which is new. STAR OF THE NORTH

A Romance

OF THE BIG WOODS

CHAPTER XLI

As fast as his emaciated frame would allow, Ed started north. The going was fairly good for some distance. He had gone perhaps half a mile when the tall growth of pine came to an end. A thick hedge of laurel and huckleberry bushes appeared. He entered the hedge more slowly, and about fifty feet further he came abruptly upon a clearing, with a small log cabin close to the hedge.

So close was he to the cabin before he could see it, that it frightened him. He backed a few feet into the hedge, and through the vines tried to make an optical survey of the grounds so suddenly discovered. He heard music. A violin was turning out an old negro melody. Then a crooning female voice started singing. He tried to make out the words, but they were quite indistinct. After listening awhile, the words came quite clear.

"Oh, my poor Nellie Gray.
They have taken her away;
The white man has bound her with his chain;
They have taken her to Georgia for to wear her life away.
As she toils in the cotton and the cane."

Thrilled by the sweet sympathetic tone, Ed remained for some minutes, but could only hear the violin trailing its mournful strains, and finally ceasing altogether. "Friends, at last," he thought.

Ed was about to walk boldly up to the cabin, when voices came loud and clear. "Here you, George Washington, put up dat ere fiddle an' go bring me some eggs, you good-fer-nothing lazy nigger."

Eggs! Eggs! How much would he give for a good old-fashioned farm meal such as his mother used to cook in the little farm house in Burke.

"George Washington" scampered to the little log stable, where hens were cackling, and as he disappeared in the doorway, Ed walked out in full view of the cabin. Far out in the wide fields, he saw several negroes. They looked as though they were planting corn or cotton. Off to the east on a slight elevation, a large white plantation house loomed up. A blue and white smoke spiral issued from one of its chimneys. Doubtful as to the attitude of the inmates of the plantation house toward the northern soldiers, he believed that the singer of the negro song was in sympathy with the Union.

Keeping the cabin between him and the big white house, Ed walked to the door and rapped.

"Now yer don' want tel fool yer ole mammy by knockin' on the door. You jes come right in wid dem eggs ef yer wants any dinner, you good-fer-nothin' chile."

Ed stepped back, thinking he had better wait until "George Washington" came with the eggs. He leaned against the door casing for support. 'Twas but the matter of a few seconds when the colored boy returned with a hat full of eggs. Ed felt like seizing the eggs and swallowing them whole, but refrained.

Evidently, George Washington was used to witnessing such spectacles as Ed presented in his tattered blue Union suit. He bowed low to Ed, and made a motion as if to remove his hat, which, however, he was using as a basket.

"Mornin', suh. Come right in, mistah. Mama likes de Union sojers, caus day mak us free."

"God bless your mama, boy, and you too." A million in gold could not have been more pleasing news for Ed than that little speech from the colored boy. Ed followed the boy in.

"Oh, de good Lawd be praised. I'se got a chance to hep another Yank sojer."

"Indeed you have, Mrs. Washington," said Felton, "but I have a chum who is nearly dead with exposure and fever, lying back by the river. Unless I can get help for him very soon, he will die."

"Hey, George Washington, run dis minit, git yo' good-fer-nothin' father, an' yo' two brothers. Tell 'em quick, Yank sojer dyin' in de swamp."

The eggs were already frying. Corn bread and bacon, with sweet potatoes were cooking. Milk and butter were on the table, and Ed was worrying lest he eat too much.

With life renewed, he guided the negroes to the river. Rand was delirious with fever, and until Ed assured him that the colored men were friends, he would resist all attempts to raise him to his feet. It was found that he could take only a few steps at a time, and that with difficulty and great pain. The negroes were already experienced in the horrors of war and, with two on each side, carried him bodily through the thickets of laurel and dogwood shrubbery, only stopping once to rest before reaching the cabin.

The negress had a comfortable cot ready, on which they laid the now unconscious Rand.

"Here, you old man! run up to de marse's house an' ax de missus to come head to hep doctor 'nother Union sojer wid de fever. Go quick now."

The "ole man" lost no time, and a matronly-looking, middle-aged white woman accompanied him back, the negro carrying a load of home-made medicines on his back. Ed saluted her.

"I hope it is not too late to save my companion, Mrs.—"

"Birmingham is my name," she said, "and I have saved many with a special compound of my own concoction."

"Thank God. We have fallen into a Good Samaritan's hands."

It was a long, painful struggle against death. For two months Rand lay on that cot, hovering between life and death, before Mrs. Birmingham would give Ed any encouragement for his recovery.

Ed had long been curious as to why Mrs. Birmingham, a southern lady, was loyal to the northerners. Her home, apparently, was a considerable distance west of the principal route of travel, hence only outcasts and escaping prisoners ever came in contact with the plantation. As the fever turned, and Rand slowly gained in appetite and strength, Ed thought the time was ripe to ask a few questions of Mrs. Birmingham. She had been a faithful nurse, never missing a day from Rand's bedside, and the old negress, also, had attended faithfully to all the little details necessary for a very sick man. Finally, Ed asked:

"Mrs. Birmingham, have you any objections to telling me why you favor the Union soldiers?"

"Not in the least, Mr. Felton. Mr. Birmingham and I are northerners, born and bred in the north, and only a year before the war broke out we bought this plantation and moved here. Mr. Birmingham is a soldier in General Grant's army. I have one son in the Union service, and one son in the Southern army. Consequently, I have to be neutral when questioned by the higher officers, which however does not happen very often.

"Our colored men were slaves when we came here, but we freed them as soon as the war broke out, and now they are my faithful guards. At first, I was in grave danger of being imprisoned for sympathizing with the North. However, the South being naturally chivalrous and hospitable, especially to the female sex, and old mammy negress declared it would be two months before he should be allowed to travel. Time dragged heavily with the two men, and soon Rand insisted on getting out and exercising his flabby muscles, walking and helping George Washington in the garden.

Mrs. Birmingham had an old Monteith's Geography, brought down from the North where her two sons had attended a district school, and from this Ed and Rand learned that the river they had crossed was the Tennessee, instead of the James, as they first thought, and that the Alleghany Mountains were west and north of them. They thought it best, when they were ready to leave, to follow the mountain range and try to get through the rebel lines in cover of the forest and on dark nights, learning that I had a son in the Southern army, left me and my little group of slaves, (the negroes had told the southern officers that I owned them and needed them for my sole support) to our own devices.

"Howover, I sincerely think that, should they find out how I succored the northern soldiers in distress, they might avenge themselves by burning me out and shooting the negroes. I have heard that they are capable of such acts of cruelty.

"Mr. Felton you are perfectly all right to ask me questions. I wish you to know that my sympathies are entirely with the North, but I am human enough to nurse a southern soldier back to health, should the chance come to me. You are welcome to remain here with your comrade, as long as you may deem it necessary, but I would caution you, when you depart, go in the night, and one of my faithful negroes will guide you through the lines if possible."

"Thank you, Mrs. Birmingham, and may God protect you in your noble work."

Rand was yet very weak, and the

CHAPTER XLII

During the three years of struggle, Mrs. Birmingham's negroes had secured nearly a dozen rifles and shotguns, which she had kept concealed for her protection, if needed. But very little ammunition was secured with the rifles. As the time drew near for their departure, Mrs. Birmingham produced two of the rifles and a few rounds of cartridges, and handed them to Rand and Felton, saying:

"I think you will need them if you travel through the mountains, as we have reason to suspect there are bands of guerrillas raiding the small towns, and camping in the mountains. Of course, as you know, they are neither rebels nor Union men, but lawless renegades, who take advantage of the war to carry on their robberies and murders. They have not molested us here yet, probably because they have ascertained that there is nothing here to benefit them.

This was somewhat disconcerting news for the men, but with their health and strength renewed, they felt equal to the hardships of another dash for the North. It was midsummer, and the colored men were busy harvesting the earlier crops. The old mammy negress had deftly patched and mended the men's tattered suits while they were in bed, and at last they decided to start north.

Rand and Ed had accepted Mrs. Birmingham's urgent request to visit her plantation house before starting, so the day before they planned to leave, they went up to the big white frame house. It was a pretentious establishment. From the chamber could be seen many miles of the beautiful curving Tennessee River, with its myriads of all kinds of water fowl, and along its banks could be seen the flowering magnolia trees, intermingled with tall cypress and scattered pine.

"What a beautiful place in which to live," thought Rand, "but not to be compared with Chateaugay Lake, in the Adirondacks."

"I wonder if I shall ever see that lake again," he murmured aloud.

"What's that ye're sayin' about Chateaugay Lake?'" said Ed.

"Oh, I was just talking to myself."

"Yes, yes, but I've fished in Chateaugay Lake myelf. Yes, went up there once with Hank Bellows, an' we got a boat from Lute Bellows. Lute, he had a small hotel there. Ah, but we got a nice mess of trout."

"But did you go to the Upper Lake, Ed?"

"No, we didn't have time—too far to row."

"Well, you missed the most wonderful place in the mountains. I worked for a man one summer on a farm on the east side of the Lower Lake, and I used to go to the Upper Lake most every Sunday fishing. A trapper and fisherman had a nice log camp up there—let's see—if I remember rightly, his name was Dide Merrill."

"Dide Merrill? Gosh, Hank Bellows told me a lot about Dide Merrill. He taught school one winter up in the Drown district, an' boarded with Hank."

Mrs. Birmingham had two stout colored girls for servants, and on her porch were two haversacks packed full of eatables. From the field came two husky negroes, both armed with shotguns. As they came up to the porch, Mrs. Birmingham said, "Sam, you and Ikey are to carry the haversacks for these two Union soldiers, and I want you to go with them as far north as they will need you. You know how to return, when they need your services no longer."

"Yes, missus, we'll shoot de rebels ef dey don' leave us alone," said Sam.

"Oh Mrs. Birmingham, how can we ever repay you for this," said Rand.

She waved her hands, "Boys, it's a pleasure to be of any assistance to the cause of the North. I have a husband and a son in the northern army, and may God save them and return them to me." Tears were in her eyes, and her voice faltered, as she turned to give the negro boys their final orders.

"Sam, you and Ikey are to take turns as sentry at night and see that you make a comfortable place for these men to sleep."

Rand turned back to ask one more question, which had been on his mind for weeks. "Mrs. Birmingham, could I write a letter before I go?"

"Certainly you may, Mr. Goodwyn. But if it is to go north, I advise you not to write it here, unless you wish to carry it with you, as otherwise it would never reach its destination. All mail matter is overhauled and examined by the officers before it leaves the past office."

"Oh thank you, Mrs. Birmingham. I had suspected just that." Rand was sorely disappointed. He had not had a chance to answer Cristie's letter since receiving it more than a year ago, and it seemed like two years to Rand.

The husky negro boys, with the haversacks slung over their shoulders, and doubled shotguns in their hands, were waiting patiently. Although Rand was feeling well after his long rest at the plantation, he realized when night came after their first day's tramp, that he was not as strong as he had thought he was. Felton had wholly regained his former stength, and noticed with alarm the apparent weakness of Rand's legs, and his pale, haggard face, now nearly covered with a heavy beard.

The first night was passed in comfort. The faithful negroes were constantly on the lookout for danger. Mosquitoes and midgets were their only trouble, but they dared not start a fire at night. A little blaze in the early morning was not dangerous, also at noon to cook their coffee, but at night a small fire could be seen many miles.

The second day's march took them well into the Cumberland Mountains and many little brooks (head waters of the Cumberland River) they crossed. And here they found fresh signs of guerrilla camps, with trails leading east and west. They hurried through this section of the hills, to avoid meeting the vandals if possible. Owing to Rand's somewhat depleted state of health, their progress was necessarily slow, and they rested often while the colored boys would shoot a ruffled grouse or catch a mess of perch in the little creeks.

All went well for a week, and the grub was getting quite low. Ed thought they had crossed the west end of North Carolina and were entering the Alleghenies at the west end of Virginia, and their hopes ran high. So far all had gone well and, as is natural with most human beings, unusual success breeds carelessness, and now that provisions were getting low, it was quite obvious that some risks must be taken to provide more food.

Accordingly, one night when camped beside a rocky ledge where a cold spring bubbled musically through the stones, a consultation was held, and resulted in a plan whereby the two colored boys were to scout through the mountains in search of some lone mountaineer's cabin. The boys said such cabins were located at intervals throughout the mountains. These scattered settlers were friendly (through fear) to both North and South but took no active part in the war. But their greatest fear was of the frequent raids of the guerrillas, who favored neither North nor South.

The next morning, the colored boys started on their exploring trip, with instructions to return before dark. Rand and Ed took a much-needed rest that day. About 4 o'clock in the afternoon the boys returned, tired but quite excited. Sam started narrating:

"Marse Rand, we go far Nor'east, 'bout four mile, den we see clearin', log house, corn and sweet potatoes growin'. I make Ikey hide, an' I goes right up to cabin and knock on doah. White woman open, much scared—think devil guerrilla comin'. I tole her 'bout you an' Marse Felton. She tink I lie, den she say, "Go bring yo' sojers here. If yo no lie, I give someting to eat."

"Was she alone, Sam?" Rand asked.

"One, two chilluns. Man out huntin'. Dat was all she say. Me an' Ikey we don' lake her, she look bad."

Hunger made them bold, as they neared the "clearin" about noon next day.

CHAPTER XLIII

Soon after the departure of the colored boys from the log cabin, the white woman cautiously opened the back door and peered toward the surrounding forest. Then she turned back and, grasping a large tin dinner-horn which hung by the door she swiftly strode to the summit of a small hill at the north edge of the clearing. First casting sharp eyes in all directions, she blew three short, resounding blasts. Waited a minute and repeated the call. In the distance, a rifle shot answered, and she turned back to the cabin. Half an hour later, four rough-looking, bearded men came straggling to the cabin. Some ten or twelve minutes elapsed between the arrival of each. They were dressed in ragged homespun, neither blue nor gray. Each carried an old muzzle-loading musket.

When within about one hundred feet of the cabin, Rand, Ed, and the colored boys suddenly stopped. The door of the cabin had opened, and four tough-looking men quickly followed each other out, with muskets cocked and at their shoulders. The leader shouted, "Throw down your arms, or we bore you with lead."

Sam was close to Rand's side and, as Rand hesitated, and still carried his rifle in the hollow of his arm, Sam whispered, "Trow rifle down quick, Massa. Ikey an' me fix 'em guerrilla."

Knowing the faithfulness of the colored boys, and the emphatic instructions given them by Mrs. Birmingham, Rand dropped his rifle and Ed followed his example. Evidently, the colored boys were of no importance.

"What d'ye want hyer?" the leader shouted.

"We're hungry and tired. Thought we could beg or buy something to eat," said Rand.

"Throw yer packs on the ground, an' head fer the bush, an' be quick 'bout it too, ef yer want ter keep yer skin whole," was the answer that came back.

Rand and Ed were in no state of mind to deliver up their rifles, and starve in the mountains; might as well die fighting as to be driven to certain starvation in the forest. The guerrillas had dropped the butts of their muskets to the ground. Rand glanced at Ed, and read the same determination in his hardened countenance. Simultaneously they stooped to pick up their rifles. The colored boys were watching. So also were the renegades. Two shots in quick succession came from the cabin. Sam, close to Rand, sprawled on the ground, but as quickly regained his feet. "Now, massa, take 'em quick."

Buckshot from Ikey and Sam, and rifle shots from Rand and Ed mowed down the leader and the man who stood next to him. The other two, knowing they could not reload in time to save themselves, dove thru the cabin door to safety.

Blood was running from a flesh wound in Sam's leg. Rand's sympathetic nature immediately asserted itself. "You're wounded, Sam, boy. Let me examine your leg."

"Dat's nuttin', massa. Jes now we bettah git out a heah, fore dem guerrillas gits loaded up agin."

Safety first was Sam's motto and Rand realized the wisdom in his advice. A hasty consultation resulted in their immediate departure, rightly judging that the two remaining renegades would not care to follow them up, after this exhibition of their bravery. The all-important subject now was how to obtain some food. Loitering would be disastrous, and abnormal speed was almost impossible in their weakened condition. They hastened to the shelter of the forest, and while the others were reloading their guns, Ikey detoured to a corner of the sweet potato field, out of view of the cabin, and filled his haversack with the "yams." Returning, he contained his trips until all four packs were filled.

This proved a bonanza for the half-starved men. When at a safe distance from the clearing, they built a fire and roasted some of the delicious potatoes.

The colored boys proved an able escort. Apparently, they could stand more physical hardship than the white men. As they zigzagged around spurs of the jutting Alleghenies they found small fruit in abundance, and leeks. Always camping by a little brook at night, Ikey would often catch a mess of perch. Thus they kept the breath of life in their emaciated bodies. Rand and Ed were alike astonished at the sagacity and loyalty of the black lads to their white companions. Rand found himself comparing them to his old trapping partner, Bill Preston, the half breed Abenakis.

Then, as his mental vision flashed along, he nearly broke down. Where was little Petol, his beautiful princess, the North Star, and his own dear Cristie. Would he ever see them again? At night, he dreamed of the little settlement in the Canadian forest where he and Cristie had spent so many happy hours. Why had Fate kept him so long away from her? Would she forget him? These thoughts led him on and on, until it was with considerable effort that he could control his feelings.

"Sick, Rand?" It was Ed, sympathetic and always practical. "Brace up, old boy, it's all in a life time. We're going to pull through."

"Yes, Ed, I know I'm a softy, but you know, after all, I've had quite a pull at it, first in Canada and now in the States. I admire your nerve. Wish I had as much."

"Tut, tut, Rand, when it comes right down to a try-out, you're all there. I noticed you took it cool enough when you dropped that venomous guerilla, just like you would a bear."

"Oh well, that was a case of necessity."

"As, yes, I thought so, too."

"We'll trust in God, and keep our rifles with us," said Rand, who was fast recovering from his despondency.

Sustained by various small fruits and an occasional rabbit or ruffed grouse, and often a mess of perch, their strength allowed them to keep going, forging ahead steadily, day by day. It is doubtful if the two men could ever have gotten through alive, had not the two colored boys been with them. Far northward they steadily followed the Allegheny range, which was the boundary line between Virginia and West Virginia.

At last, they emerged from mountain cliffs to the lower flat lands. Before descending to the lower country, they climbed the last high cliff to get a view to the north and east. It was a varied scene that met their gaze. For nearly a hundred miles it was an undulating wilderness, broken by few plantations, with small rivers coursing crookedly across the cleared ground, to be lost in the forest farther east. Far to the northeast, they could discern faintly a larger river, which they rightly surmised was the Potomac.

Descending, they flushed a family of wild turkeys. Ikey deftly brought down a big gobbler with his shotgun.

Sam had extracted some medicinal herbs, such as his old black mammy had taught him were good medicine and, with Rand's help, had bandaged his wounded leg, which was now about healed.

Another week, and they were nearing some broad open fields. Looking from the thicket of shrubbery that boarded the field, they discovered a long line of little white tents, over a mile distanct from them. Civilization! But which—Rebels or Yanks? They could not determine. Hastily, they retreated about 200 yards, into the underbrush, and decided to reconnoiter.

It was Ikey who settled the line of action. "Massa Rand, and Massa Ed, you wait heah. I go find out who dey is. Noboby shoot nigger. If dey's rebels, I git away, come back heah. If dey's yanks, I bring dem heah to git ya, hey?"

Rand and Ed gave this proposal serious thought. If it proved to be a rebel encampment, they would not only be putting Ikey in a dangerous predicament, but would also expose themselves to recapture, which was a heart-breaking thought. But what else could they do?

"Ikey, we think it too dangerous an undertaking for you."

"No! no! Marse Rand, no danger. Nigger boy play fool. If dey's rebels, maybe two day fore I gits back. If dey's yanks, I come quick wid ossifer."

"Dat's all right, massa. No danger. Ikey git back all right," said Sam.

But it was not without some misgivings that the two men decided to let Ikey do the scouting. They thought it best to wait until dark, so that in case it were a rebel encampment, they would not know from what direction he had come.

Promptly at dusk Ikey left his shotgun and started for the encampment. As black himself as the night, he was not seen until within fifty feet of the picket line, then a hoarse voice called from the dark, "Who goes there?"

"Friend; jes poor fool nigger," shouted Ikey.

"Advance and give the countersign."

"Ah, massa, I'se don' know countasine. Don' shoot! I'se jes poor fool nigger."

With rifle cocked, the guard, fearing a night attack, signalled the next picket.

"Advance at once, or I shoot! Throw down your arms, and consider yourself my prisoner," he shouted, as Ikey obeyed the order. At close view, Ikey commenced to dance with joy. The guard's suit was blue.

BRIDGE PLANS NEAR FRUITION

Compromise Has Been Effected With Federal Government on Caughnawaga Span

The work of linking the Island of Montreal with the mainland, south of the St. Lawrence River, may be commenced at any time now that the federal order-in-council in reference to the Caughnawaga bridge has passed, thus bringing to fruition a long-dreamed of hope, and a clumination of years of effort on the part of Hon. Honoré Mercier, Minister of Lands and Forests, who has had the matter in hand.

There were two objections raised by the federal Government to the plans submitted by Quebec, this after the Federal Parliament had passed the legislation to permit the bridge to be built. Both objections are based on the possibility or probability of a greater St. Lawrence waterway. One objection was that there is to be a new Lachine Canal, sufficiently deep to handle boats which can be taken care of by the new Welland Canal. These are the Upper Lake boats. The new Lachine Canal would be built within the river skirting the outward bank, and the provincial authorities were asked to provide for such a canal by provision for a lift bridge. The expenditure for this is considerable, but the idea was tentatively accepted by the province, though involving some hundreds of thousands of dollars. It will mean a different form of base and the actual lift lock, and its cost of maintenance, when and if the new canal is built. The second objection raised by Ottawa was a more serious one. It was urged as against the provincial plans that the time may come when the St. Lawrence River at the point to be crossed may be used by heavy boat traffic, presumably through an elaborate deepening scheme, for the river at this point is used only by boats which "shoot the rapids."

Passage For Ships

It was suggested by Ottawa to the provincial authorities that provision be made for a lift bridge over a projected channel in the river so that ships might pass in the event of the river being made navigable. There was considerable objection raised by the provincial authorities as to this second Ottawa proposal, since interest and carrying charges on such a plan would mean around $75,000 a year. There were several conferences at Ottawa on the subject, and one at which the federal minister was present, and a promise of reconsideration was made. The decision now is that Ottawa waives its second objection, and the bridge work may go ahead.

The provincial Legislature has voted up to $3,000,000 for the bridge, and there are no signs of any contributions by municipalities towards this amount, while it has been settled for some time now that the federal Government will not contribute towards the cost of a toll bridge.

However, the province feels that the traffic over even a bridge costing three millions will ultimately justify the expenditure, though it is realized that to do so such traffic will have to be heavy. The province has been fortunate in the matter of its own toll bridges, results in all cases having even exceeded anticipations. Thus the Batiscan Bridge, and the two bridges, Taschereau and Galipeault, which run from Ste. Anne de Bellevue to Ile Perrot and Vaudreuil, have more than paid for themselves, which is the reason for the Legislature of last session decreeing that the revenue from these bridges is to go to consolidated revenue fund. These are the only three toll bridges which the Government owns, though it is interested, through guarantees, in other bridges. By the close of this year and certainly before the end of next year, there will be other Government-owned bridges opened for traffic, such as that over the Richelieu at Sorel, over the St. Francis at St. Francois du Lac, and over the Yamaska and the big bridge to connect the Island of Orleans and the mainland.

The Caughnawaga bridge will make the ferry now run from Lachine unnecessary or auxiliary at best, and will mean the completion of the Montreal-Malone Highway, which gives rapid access through a beautiful territory into New York State, and vice-versa, and, what is considered of equal if not greater importance, it will mean that the rich agricultural counties of Chateauguay, Huntingdon and Beauharnois will have quick access for market garden and dairy produce into the metropolitan market of Montreal—(The Gazette.)

Ball Game.—

On Saturday afternoon the Hinchinbrooke boys played a friendly game with Athelstan boys at Athelstan on the Beaver's diamond. In spite of the wet grounds a very closely contested game was played. The score throughout the game was very close and the Hinchinbrooke boys tallied five runs in the last inning. For the locals, Ellis Wilson pitched an excellent game and Clark Sloan played exceptionally well at short stop. Good fielding was emphasized by both sides and the hitting was fair. The score was 16 to 9 in favor of Hinchinbrooke. The line-up was as follows:

Swimming Pool—"Lake St. Arthur"—

The young people are looking forward to many pleasant hours bathing and swimming during the summer and skating in the winter. The lake is approximately 150 feet square and has a depth sloping from 2 feet to 5½ feet. It is fed by a pipe leading from a spring brook nearby, therefore assuring a constant supply of fresh water.

Russelltown

On Sunday, July 3rd, friends gathered from far and near to the Russeltown United Church to celebrate the 106th anniversary of the building of the church. This church is very beautifully situated on a slight hill two miles from St. Chrysostome. The grounds are nicely kept and the white painted church with green shutters is a landmark in the community. For 106 years this church has been giving her testimony to Jesus Christ and His influence in this place and though the congregation is now small and scattered the services of Sunday revealed this fact that there is still a place for this church here and work is still to be done.

The celebration took the form of special music by an augmented choir and a special preacher in the person of the Rev. W. L. Tucker of Montreal, who gave two inspiring messages at the morning and evening services. One feature of the anniversary was the use of a Bible which was formerly the pulpit Bible but has been replaced. The old Bible was inscribed: "Presented by the Montreal Auxiliary of the Bible Society to the Russeltown Presbyterian Church, 1832." So this was the 100th anniversary of this Bible. Large numbers were in attendance for both services.

The anniversary was concluded with a supper on the church grounds on Tuesday evening, July 6th. The evening was ideal and a large number of friends gathered from far and near for supper and a well balanced programme followed the supper. The music was led by the St. Chrysostome orchestra under the efficient leadership of Mrs. Armand Santoire. They gave a number of selections throughout the evening which were much enjoyed. The choir sang "The Lord is King." Mr. Templeton of Howick gave two solos which were much appreciated. Master Gordon Small of St. Remi, a grandson of one of our old members sang a very pleasing song. The Misses Hazel and Rita Gilmore sang "The end of a Perfect Day," which was very well received. Greetings were received from the Howick congregation by the Rev. Mr. Morrison and from Hemmingford by the Rev. J. G. Fulcher.

Flowers that Kill

All Flies or Mosquitoes with a

Perfumed Mist

Some years ago it was discovered that a certain field flower grown in Japan drove away winged insects. A shipment was sent to America for testing in a research laboratory. Here an extract was made from the flowers and sprayed in a closed room filled with flies and mosquitoes. Every insect perished at its touch.

Now that extract is the basis of Fly-Tox, developed at Mellon Institute of Industrial Research by Rex Research Fellowship. Ten years and over $100,000 have been spent by us in perfecting it. This Fly-Tox, used as directed, fills the room with a perfumed mist, at a cost of only 1 or 2 cents. That mist is harmless to people, stainless to anything. But every fly or mosquito that it touches dies at once. And they can't escape it when the room is filled.

These pests are deadly, for they carry the germs of over 30 diseases. They deposit those germs on foods or in blood streams. Many thousands of children die every year from this cause. Fly-Tox rightly used, frees your home and keeps it free, in an easy, certain, economical way.

Think what that means to you and yours.

FLY-TOX ONLY

A Rex Research Product

Use Fly-Tox only, and always in a new-type Fly-Tox sprayer. Every lot is tested on flies in our laboratory. The efficiency is guaranteed. What Do You Give?

A New York vocational guidance expert advises people who are not happy in their jobs to save their money until they can make a change. She might say, too, that if people are not taking happiness out of their jobs they would do well to see that they are putting into those jobs everything they have to give. What you get out of your job in the way of contentment depends upon what you are willing to put into it in a day to day effort.—Grove Patterson, in the Mobile Register.

An Ancient Craft

One of the oldest trades is that of gold beater. The methods are just the same as those used by the craftsmen who made the gold ornaments found in Tutankhamen's tomb. Gold is the most ductile of all metals. It can be beaten into sheets of almost incredible thinness or drawn out into wire finer than hair. From a single grain of gold—there are 7,000 grains in a pound avoirdupois—a wire 500 ft. long con be drawn. A little calculation will show how far a pound of gold could be made to stretch. Gold sheets can be beaten so thin that they are almost transparent. The gold used for making gold leaf is beaten with a tiny hammer to a thickness of a quarter of a millionth part of an inch. A single ounce of gold has been beaten into sheets covering an area of 300 square feet.

Alva Declared Creator of United Netherlands

William the Silent is closely connected with the three hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Dutch nation, writes P. C. Gordon Walker, in the London Daily Telegraph, though in reality he did all he could to frustrate the emergence of a separate Dutch nation, his ideal being a United Netherlands, including the modern Belgium. It is Alva, the Spanish general, whose name should be in Dutch mouths as the chief creator of Holland, instead of being reviled as the cruelest persecutor in history. For he found the Netherlands a single, undivided district, with Calvinism and Catholicism evenly spread over the country, and with greater linguistic difference between the Walloons, the Flemish and the Dutch than there was between Dutch and Germans.

Alva it was who forced this district into nationalism by driving Calvinism and trade into the North. When he retired in 1573 Holland had become a separate nation. William the Silent had resisted this, and three years later he made a determined effort to reunite the whole Netherlands. He failed, and one of the causes of his failure was this Union of Utrecht which Holland celebrates, but which was made behind William's back and to his displeasure.

Thus twice William fought against the isolation of Holland, but from the Union of Utrecht to his murder, five years later he recognized the new facts and fought for Holland as a country against Spain.

Valleyfield

Two Serious Fires.—

Two serious fires broke out in the west quarter of Valleyfield on Wednesday, July 6th, about two o'clock in the afternoon, with short intervals of one another.

The first fire started in the upper rooms of a house occupied by Mr. Cuierrier, and situated on Ellice St. The house was of wood, and was not attached to the surrounding buildings. The cause of the firse is thought to be a short circuit. Most of the valuable furniture, etc., was removed from the premises before the fire gained headway. The lower part of the house was slightly damaged by water. Firemen under Chief W. Lemieux had the fire under control in a very short time.

The second fire was already gaining headway while the firemen were fighting the Cuierrier fire. It was a shed, located near several wooden houses. The property, situated on St. Anne St., was owned by Mr. Pilon. The shed was a blazing mass, and the surrounding buildings were already flaming when the notice of the firemen was attracted, the latter being on their way back to the station from the other fire. Firemen with several volunteers soon had the fire under control; the cause of the fire was several children playing in the shed with matches. The shed was a complete loss.

Sunday, July 10th, was the scene of several hundred Federated Guards in Valleyfield. Independent Champlain Guards had the honor of being hosts to la Garde St. Pierre, Joliette; la Garde Saint Jean-Baptiste, Plattsburg, la Garde Dollard des Ormeaux, Quebec. The guards from the above mentioned townships arrived in Valleyfield in the morning. They attended High Mass at Sacred-Heart Church at 10 a.m. At 11.30 a.m., gave the salute to the religious authorities. At 12 a.m., guests of the city to dinner; 2 p.m., they held a grand parade through the streets of the town; at 3 p.m., exercises and military revue by the different guards, and at 4 p.m., they enjoyed a game of softball.

The city is no longer proprietor of the old Police and Fire Station, No. 1. The new owner is Mr. Adélard Monette, hotel-keeper, who purchased the building for $316. Mr. Monette intends moving the building to his lots on St. Helen St., where he will make it into a house.

The death occurred on Tuesday of Mrs. Gustave Brault (née Délia Yott) after a lingering illness. Deceased was in her 42nd year. She leaves to mourn her loss, her husband, Mr. Gustave Brault, 2 sons, Benoit, 11; and Robert, 9; one daughter Marcelle, 7; her mother, Mrs. Joseph Yott, two brothers and three sisters, all of Detroit, Mich. Interment was at St. Louis de Gonzague, Thursday morning.

Young People's Society.—

A meeting of the Young People's Society was held in the Presbyterian Church basement on Monday evening, Misses Carrie and Vera Macfarlane being hostesses. For the educational part, Miss Carrie Macfarlane gave a most interesting talk on the work of Dr. Wilfrid Grenfell on the Labrador Coast. The social part of the programme, in charge of Miss Vera Macfarlane and Morley Rowat, began with a Treasure Hunt, which, after following several suggested clues unfolded the treasure which proved to be a huge Planter's Peanut, filled with kisses. There were also several guessing games, which always prove popular. The usual refreshments of coffee, cake, and sandwiches were then served which ended a very pleasant evening.

Y. W. A. Meets.—

The regular monthly meeting of the Young Women's Auxiliary, W.M.S., for July was entertained by the Misses Jean and Margaret Steele in the Presbyterian Church parlour on Wednesday afternoon. There was a good attendance of members who spent the afternoon in quilting the autograph quilt recently made for one of their number.

New Cancer Treatment

Proposal to Use X-Rays on Blood Outside of Patient's Body

A new treatment for cancer which consists in applying X-rays to the patient's blood outside his body instead of to the patient himself has been proposed to the Academy of Medicine of Vienna, Austria, by Dr. S. Dziembowski, a surgeon of that city.

The removal of some of a patient's blood, to be treated chemically in one way or another and then returned to the body that it came from, already is a recognized surgical procedure called "autohemotherapy" and believed to be useful treating a few conditions of disease or ill-health. Doctors are accustomed, too, to treat cancer with X-rays, the usual theory being that the rays kill the cancer cells and thus enable the body to get rid of the dangerous growth.

Dr. Dziembowski has found, he reports, that the effect of the X-rays on the body of a cancer patient is not confined to killing the cancer cells, but includes also an increase of the natural resistance of the body to the disease. In a number of cancer cases in which surgical removal or X-ray treatment of the growth was impracticable he tested this theory, he reported, by drawing off a pint or so of the patient's blood, exposing this blood to a definite intensity of X-rays for a definite time and then injecting the blood back into the body so that it mixed slowly with the blood that was not removed.

Successful results are said to have been obtained, the cancerous growth ceasing to grow and even vanishing slowly as they do from X-ray treatment itself. It is admitted, however, that the method must have further trials before it can be recommended for general use.

Former Vancouver Peddler Now A Chinese General

Years ago Morris Cohen peddled clothes in Vancouver's Chinatown. Today he is a general in the Chinese army.

Mystery shrouds a good deal of Cohen's career. Some say that he was born and brought up in London's Limehouse. Others claim that he was born in Canton, the son of a British consular official. There are stories to the effect that he was born in Canada, and certainly he spent a good many years in British Columbia and on the prairies.

In Edmonton they called him Morris "Two-gun" Cohen. Dr. Sun-Yat-Sen appointed him his personal bodyguard when he was alive, because he could throw two coins into the air and shoot both coins before they hit the ground. Cohen befriended the Chinese leader when the latter was in exile from his country.

General Cohen Moshe served as plain Morris Cohen in the regiment taken overseas in the Great War by Col. J. K. Cornwall of northern fame. In France he was in charge of a Chinese labor group.

Given Big Welcome

On his return to Edmonton the 600 Chinese there gave him a vociferous reception. They had come to regard him as their special adviser in real estate and other deals, and he joined the Chinese Nationalist League. He is best known by his English-speaking friends in Edmonton, some of whom now reside at Vancouver, as the greatest practical joker in the West. Many prominent citizens were victims of his jokes.

In 1922 Cohen, with a prominent Chinese merchant of Edmonton, went to China, being given a royal send-off by his celestial friends. His wardrobe was extensive, including a full quota of European clothing for all formal and most informal occasions and many Chinese garments.

Varied Career

He has had a varied career since he went to China. After he left the employ of Sun-Yat-Sen he was reported to be building a railway and negotiating a foreign loan of $1,000,000 for the purpose. He is said to have organized and drilled thousands of the Cantonese army, bringing British and other ex-army officers from Russia to instruct the troops. Then came the rumor of his own execution, a rumor which later it was said he circulated so that his enemies would leave him in peace.

Now he is credited by recent arrivals from Shanghai as being mainly responsible for the desperate defense the Chinese made against the crack Japanese troops.

Early Silk Spinning

Perhaps the first mention of the silkworm in western literature is that by Aristotle, pupil of Plato and teacher of Alexander the Great, who lived in the Fourth century B.C. He speaks of it as. "A great worm which has horns and so differs from others. At its first metamorphosis it produces a caterpillar, then a bombylius, then a chrysalis—all the three changes taking place within six months. From this animal women separate and reel off the cocoons, and afterwards spin them. It is said that silk was first spun in the Island of Cos, by Pamphile, daughter of Plates."

Degras is a dark brown unctuous fat derived from pure grease obtained by washing sheep's wool. It is used as leather stuffing, a belt-dressing compound, producing lanolin, for making printing inks, also special soaps and varnishes.

Irate parent: "No, sir! You can't have her! I won't have a son-in-law who has no more brains than to want to marry a girl with no more sense than my daughter has shown in allowing you to think you could have her!"

Mother Earth's Age

The earth is 2,000,000,000 years old, according to the estimate of Prof. Dr. Otto Hahn, director of the Kaiser Wilhelm institute at Berlin. The noted physicist bases his calculations on the quantity of lead to be found on the surface of the earth.

"The progress made recently in the study of radio-active substances and the disintegration of the atom enables us to fix the age of the world with fair accuracy," the professor told an audience of German scientists. "Uranium and thorium, contained in certain minerals, are converted, in the course of millions of years, into radium, and finally into uranium lead and thorium lead. The lead findings help us to determine the age of the earth at 2,000,000,000 years."
