

Beautiful Buildings And Well-kept Farms Speak For Themselves in Elgin

Residents Claim First Concession of Elgin About the Finest Farming District in County of Huntingdon—Letter to Gleaner Points Out Facts

In an interview story with the Gleaner last week a local resident painted a word picture of the first concession of Elgin that was not unlike Goldsmith's "Desire Village" and was not in keeping with the true state of progress and beauty of this part of Huntingdon county, according to residents of that district.

A drive along the first concession of Elgin from the Malone Highway to Powerscourt reveals, with the possible exception of a stretch about a mile and a half long, a beautiful countryside with prosperous looking and well-kept farms. Pictures taken by the Gleaner which appear elsewhere in this issue bear testimony to the fact that there are many outstanding farm buildings in Elgin.

The first concession of Elgin is the home of pure bred Holstein cattle. The first Holstein bull ever brought into the county of Huntingdon was brought to the first concession of Elgin by D. H. and F. L. Brown, according to Mr. J. A. Brown, Mr. J. A. Brown has pure bred Holstein cattle on his farm now from this bull and claims he has "one of the oldest, if not the oldest, continuous breeding herd of Holsteins in Canada." He is proud of this herd which has the same blood line for some years back.

Mr. J. A. Brown doubted very much the statements of the individual interviewed by the Gleaner last week with respect to the disparaging of buildings on the first concession of Elgin and added that if he were to make a check-up of farm buildings from the property of J. W. Ross clean through to the highway one would find that in the last twenty years there are more than twenty barns that have been extensively improved as to class them as practically new barns. "I don't believe there's a road in Huntingdon County where you can drive along and find such consistently good farms as you will find right along this first concession of Elgin," stated J. A. Brown. He pointed out there are roads where you might find better farms here and there with poor ones in between. But along the first concession of Elgin the farms are consistently good with the exception of a stretch of about one mile and a half where the land is very difficult to farm. This particular land is "stony, poor and run out."

Referring to the interview, Mr. D. L. Brown stated, "I know of no farms offered for taxes along the first concession of Elgin and I am one of the assessors."

The Shawinigan built a hydro line along the first concession of Elgin about a year ago last Fall and I do not believe they would do that if they didn't have faith in the future of Elgin," said Mr. J. A. Brown. "The Gleaner is widely read not only all over this district but by many former residents who live throughout different parts of Canada and the United States," said Mr. D. L. Brown. "What they read in the Gleaner they believe they would the Bible and since this is the case they will get a wrong impression of Elgin from what appeared in the interview story."

A woman resident of the first concession of Elgin, who preferred to remain unidentified, stated that in regard to taxes she knew for a fact that the residents of the first concession of Elgin were the very first people to pay their taxes. She maintained that this district was comparatively well fixed financially and that the beautiful farms and well-kept lands were proof of this. Magnificent fields of corn swayed and glistened in the late summer sun along the first concession of Elgin as proof of the finely cultivated fields. Hay crops were exceptionally good while the crops of grain were also very good.

Mr. C. W. McClatchie of Huntingdon took exception to the statements contained in the interview story and in a very friendly manner pointed out what he believes to be the situation in the following letter to the Gleaner:

Presents Statement

HON. M. B. FISHER, Provincial Treasurer, whose recent Financial Statement showed a surplus of more than $3 million in ordinary expenditures.

Editor, Huntingdon Gleaner, Dear Sir:

A year or so ago, I offered to bet a dollar with Jack Patterson, that next to myself he was the biggest liar in the County of Huntingdon and Jack was quite indignant to think I would place myself ahead of him. After reading your reported interview with him regarding the first concession of Elgin I am convinced his indignation was justifiable. Now Sir, this letter is going to be rather lengthy, but in view of the space allotted in the Gleaner to the reported interview with Jack I hope you will pardon my audacity. Jack seems to have a grudge against his native home and everyone in general along the first concession of Elgin. From the old covered bridge which crosses the Chateauguay River, to the steel bridge which crosses Trout River and by the way Jack thinks a lot of families will cross these bridges in the next 20 years perhaps never to return. What a dismal picture. He thinks there will not be five families left on the first concession twenty years hence. That means there will not be more than four left and that makes it sound a little worse and I take it (Continued on page 8)

Championship On Gladioli to A. B. Ogilvie

Mr. Ogilvie Plans on Sending Fine Exhibit of Gladioli to Huntingdon Fair for Exhibition Purposes

Albert B. Ogilvie, Lac Nantel, Que., and formerly of North Georgetown has again made a successful showing of gladioli at the fourth annual exhibition held in Montreal. Albert was successful in winning the Open Championship, 1st for best 20 spikes in light varieties, 2nd for best 15 spikes in dark varieties, 3rd for yellow or orange spikes with garden flowers, 1st on Picardy, 2nd on scarlet, 1st on pink with cream as well as other special prizes. His son Robert exhibited in the novice class and won 2nd place on smoky gladioli.

Mr. Ogilvie intends to send a quantity of gladioli to Huntingdon fair for exhibition, providing they are not destroyed by the elements in the interval of time.

Indians Stage War Dance At the H'don Fair Grounds

Garbed in Colorful Native Costumes, They Dance, Get Pictures Taken and Then Relate Their Woes

St. Regis Indians staged a war dance at the Huntingdon Fair Grounds on Friday morning. They were only five in number as follows: Peter Cook, Chief Loren Jocko, Grand Chief A. P. Thompson, Francis J. Johnson and Peter J. Johnson.

No audience watched them as they yippi-yi-yipped through their snake-like dances and screeched to the winds except two members of the Gleaner staff.

They came to Huntingdon because they wanted their pictures taken and because they wanted to tell all who would lend a willing ear that they were not getting proper consideration from the authorities—that is in regard to Indian rights.

Garbed in their brilliant native costume at the Fair grounds they first posed for their pictures, then stepped off into a war dance and finally, with outstretched hands, related their woes. The empty softball bleachers at the Fair Grounds stared at them blankly; the winds whistled and the two Gleaner representatives endeavored to be interested. They endeavored to be even more interested when one of the Chiefs was so far as to consider making them honorary chiefs.

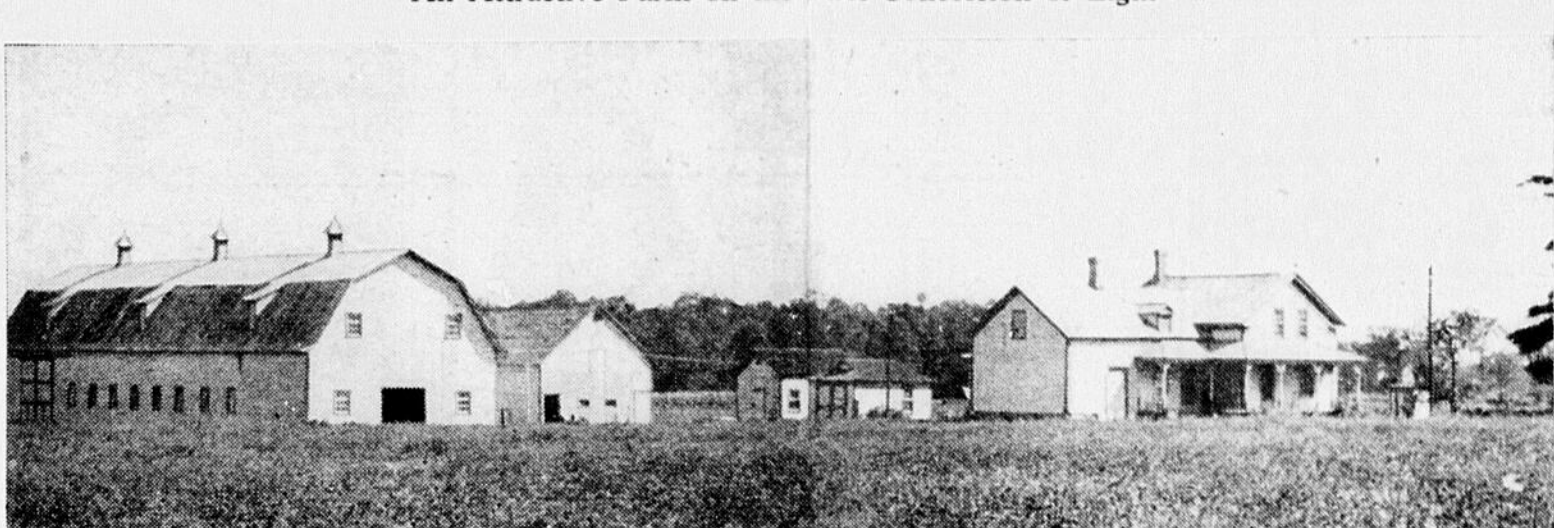

But they were kind of skeptical about this. "As long as the grass grows, the water runs and the sun rises we were to be given our Indian rights," said Chief Jocko, speaking of a treaty for the protection of the Indians. He spoke in his native tongue but this was translated into English by one of the Indian party.

Peter J. Johnson, among complaints, stated that the St. Lawrence River was taken away from them. "They (United States and Canada) made the treaty of the St. Lawrence Waterway and we knew nothing about it," said Peter J. Johnson. He then complained about the depression and how hard it was on the Indians because of lack of work and consequent cash.

Grand Chief Thompson complained about the depression, Indian rights and a few other things and thought something should be done about it. This was generally agreed—that something should be done about it.

Finally the Indians produced a copy of their ancient laws, which they call wampums. A story concerning them appeared in last week's issue of the Gleaner. There are 80 wampums.

An Attractive Farm on the First Concession of Elgin

The barn and house of Walter Hay on the first concession of Elgin is but one of the numerous ones along that road which make of it one of the outstanding farming districts in the county of Huntingdon.

Brothers Are Welcomed to Huntingdon

Rev. Father A. Pigeon Delivers Interesting Sermon on Sunday—Many Present at Function

Colorful ceremonies marked the official welcome in Huntingdon of the new teachers at St. Joseph School, the Brothers of the St. Viator Congregation, on Sunday morning, in St. Joseph's Church. As is remembered, the commissioners of St. Joseph School decided in the Spring of 1938 to change their teaching staff and install brothers in the school for the forthcoming term, 1938-39.

Rev. Father Pigeon, Provincial Superior of the St. Viator Congregation, officiated at the Solemn High Mass while the sermon on this occasion was delivered by Rev. Father A. Pigeon, parish priest. In his remarks, Father Pigeon made a brief outline of the history of St. Joseph School and its early struggles along with a word of praise for its founders and first teachers.

At the conclusion of his remarks, Father Pigeon extended a cordial welcome to the Brothers and in the name of the parish he expressed pleasure on Rev. Father Pigeon's presence in Huntingdon on this memorable day.

The director of St. Joseph School, Mr. J. A. Pigeon, also added a few short remarks in French when he narrated the good work carried out by the St. Viator Congregation throughout the Province and the whole world.

The director of St. Joseph School was born in Huntingdon. He is Rev. Brother James Fallon, formerly of Bourget College, Rigaud, who will be assisted by the Rev. Brothers Valois, Bourbonnais, and Valois.

A special musical program was carried out by the choir on Sunday during the High Mass and was well rendered. Seated in the middle aisle were the new teachers of St. Joseph School, along with the school commissioners, D. J. O'Connor, president, Dr. J. E. Caza, Patrick Montpetit and secretary-treasurer, Dan Faubert.

The pupils will be welcomed at St. Joseph School on Tuesday, September 6th, by the director of the school and his assistants.

OATS GROW FAST ON T. B. STARK FARM NEAR HUNTINGDON

Vineyard cut samples, which were registered at Ottawa in 1937, were received at the beginning of May by Mrs. T. B. Stark, of Huntingdon, and sown on the 10th of the same month. This week Mrs. Stark informed the local agronomist, Mr. J. L. Pelletier, that she had reaped these oats and had obtained 2½ lbs. of oats from four dozen grains. It took exactly 88 days to ripen these oats which is not far from a record.

MALONE CAR DITCHED NEAR ST. JOSEPH CHURCH

A 1929 Ford roadster driven by Ralph Moody of Malone, N.Y., turned over on Sunday morning at about 3 a.m., when the driver was not aware of the turn on York street leading to Highway No. 4 near St. Joseph's Church. The car was apparently travelling at a fast clip when the accident occurred, it is stated.

The occupants were Moody, Milton Beane of Malone, N.Y., and Miss Grace Fish of Tupper Lake, N.Y., and were given first aid by Dr. St. Onge. Moody and Miss Fish were injured, with the former suffering internal injuries and cuts about the face and neck while the girl had a bruised neck. They were taken to Alice Hyde Hospital in Malone, N.Y., and Beane was able to return home after being given first aid treatment.

P. McWhinnie Injured in Car Accident

Two of Four Occupants Injured When Car Takes Ditch Near Vance's School, Saturday

Percy McWhinnie, of Huntingdon, is in the Montreal Victoria Hospital as the result of a car accident which occurred at about 1.30 a.m. Saturday morning, on Route 52 near the Lost Nation Road.

According to reports, John Nussey, of Brysonville, accompanied by McWhinnie, Lloyd Bruce of Franklin, and William McKell, of Rockburn, were returning to Huntingdon from a dance when the accident occurred.

On turning the corner near Vance's school-house, Nussey, who was driving the Ford roadster, kept close to his right side of the road in order to avoid colliding with a car driven by a party from St. Johns, travelling in the opposite direction. The St. Johns car, it is reported, took more than its share of the road and forced Nussey to take the ditch and hit a pole.

Nussey suffered a cut in the right arm and minor external injuries, while McWhinnie had two bones broken in the neck and other minor injuries. The other occupants escaped uninjured.

First aid was rendered the injured by Drs. St. Onge and McCrimmon, and McWhinnie was brought to Montreal a few hours after the accident in Fred Moore's car. The badly damaged Ford roadster was towed to Hebert's Garage in Huntingdon.

It is said that McWhinnie is doing fairly well considering the seriousness of the accident.

On Thursday morning the pipers would parade through the town streets on their way to the fair. They would also head the livestock parade that is to be held on the show grounds at 1 p.m. on Friday.

So successful have the two work bees been on the fair grounds, it was decided a third should be held on Friday. The work started on providing 30 new horse stalls will be completed as well as other work done about the grounds.

The President, R. A. Arthur and the Vice-Pres., Wm. Graham were named to meet with the County Council relative to the customary grant accorded the Agricultural Society.

Messrs. Arthur, Graham, Riddick and Sellar were asked to interview the Hon. Martin B. Fisher with a view to securing a special grant for the benefit of the Fair.

The beautiful War Memorial which is situated in front of the Court House contains the names of 38 men who were killed in action in the Great War and also the names of 15 men who have since died.

The ceremony is under the auspices of the Valleyfield branch,

A real catastrophe must have been pictured in the above group of "funnies" since "Rex" has pricked up his ears and looks as if he isn't missing one bit of action.

Huntingdon, Wed., August 31st, 1938

Huntingdon Fair Approaches

HUNTINGDON Fair swings open on Thursday, September 8th, and from all appearances it is going to show some marked improvements over recent years. This fair was founded in 1828, there by making it an institution 110 years old. Huntingdon village was founded in 1825. So only three years after the founding of the village, our fair was established. According to records the fair was promoted by Colonel Brown and Mr. Norval. At the fair were exhibited oxen, a few horses, some cattle and the odd sheep. The prize money totaled $72.00.

During these intervening years many changes have taken place in the Chateauguay Valley. We now have the great Ormstown Exhibition, fall fairs at Havelock and Huntingdon, and the Valleyfield Exhibition in August of each year. Some few years ago the fairs at Ste. Martine and St. Louis were abandoned. That Huntingdon and Havelock can well afford to maintain fall fairs is agreed. These two fairs may never become large institutions, but they can serve a useful purpose if our townspeople and farmers accord it an entry and patronage that is essential.

For the Huntingdon Fair of 1938 a genuine effort appears to be made by the directors and farmers to make the fair force ahead of what it has been in the more recent years. That the townspeople are getting behind the fair is evidenced by the remark made by Secretary John Small at the directors' meeting on Friday evening, when he stated "Never in the history of the fair since I became secretary have the Huntingdon business men so willingly contributed special prizes, and at the same time spoken so encouragingly towards the 1938 fair." That is what is desired. The sporting fans are also co-operating to put the fair over successfully through providing an excellent sports programme. Mr. Douglas McGerrigle has always exemplified a keen interest in field sports for juveniles, and in this respect he is able to report a fine programme for Thursday morning's show.

The shortage of musical entertainment is being taken care of this year, through Mr. Mac Ruddick arranging with some of the famous "Black Watch Highland Pipers and Drummers" from Montreal to be with us on both days of the fair. Besides supplying Highland airs they will present a number of Scotch dances.

The Fair Grounds have been allowed to slip into a bad state of disrepair on account of the depression and shortage of funds. The marked changes that have taken place towards the restoration of buildings is gratifying. Two working bees have already been held, and a third is called, for Friday of this week. It is just such united effort put forth that will stimulate real genuine interest in the fair and restore it to a position it ought to be in, in order to bring credit to this great agricultural community.

In place of Huntingdon Fair have a prize list of $72.00 that it had in 1828 it now offers well over $2,000 in cash and on top of that are special prizes that will swell the prize list to a valuation of well over $2,500.

The livestock exhibit is usually very representative, but for all of that it is to be hoped new exhibitors will put in an appearance. They will undoubtedly receive encouragement and in a few years time they will become larger exhibitors thereby raising the fair to a higher level than heretofore.

The show buildings give promise of being well filled, largely due to the fact that the season has been ideal, although somewhat dry. The harvest has been early which will make it all the more easy for people to prepare their entries to be placed on exhibition. The great number of special prizes for all sections of the fair prize list will prove inviting to everyone who might have something to exhibit.

Hobbies are encouraged at the fair; for this year we note two special features are being played up, one hobby being that of amateur photography and the other that of craftsmanship in the building of sailing yachts.

The general appearance of the grounds has been greatly improved through the spending of the $600, received from the Federal Government through the efforts of Mr. D. E. Black, M.P. The old "red building" is now in a very much improved state of repair. Thirty additional horse stalls have been provided and the amount of whitewashing that Mr. Peter Shearer has done with a power spray goes a long way towards brightening things up.

Dangerous Season

THE hunting season is at hand and all the dangers it brings with it. There is always danger in handling guns and it is important to know how to use firearms safely. Many people are killed each year through carelessness in using them.

Mr. A. Leduc of the Province of Quebec Safety League calls for attention to this fact.

"Before using a firearm," Mr. Leduc counsels, "you should 'break the gun,' remove the bolt or put safety catch 'on,' or if it is an automatic gun, remove the magazine and eject the cartridge. After a misfire, one should wait at least a minute before clearing gun. Be sure the gun is unloaded before cleaning it. Keep your guns thoroughly clean at all times and use only good ammunition."

Another life-saving precaution is that a gun should always be carried with the muzzle down, especially in forests where foliage is thick. When you are packing for a hunting trip, be especially careful in depositing your gun in the back of the car, and in a boat or canoe, because of the danger of the trigger accidentally touching something and the gun going off.

Mr. Leduc finally recommends that all firearms should be kept under lock and key, away from young children.

School Re-opening

THE season for school re-opening has arrived! In a few days bells will ring from turret tops throughout the district and pupils will fall in line for another academic term.

This particular section of Quebec is fortunate in having, generally speaking, fine schools with capable teaching staffs. The residents of the district have always shown a keen interest in education and this has been very well reflected by men who have gone from here and who have made a success, due in no small measure to their education and training here.

At this season of the year the fact is brought to mind of the tremendous responsibility that rests on the teacher. Many parents look to the teachers to do so much towards training their child. Possibly they look too much in this direction, since a great deal of desired training should be given in the home whereas parents just leave it to the teacher to do it. It hardly seems fair that such a burden should be placed on the teacher since the teacher has all he or she can do—and more—to look after the education of the child in the school room.

However, the teacher goes even beyond the bounds of the school room these days and endeavours to instruct the child how to occupy leisure time when out of school. To us, this seems rather important. One can not help but notice that many men soon die upon retirement from business, particularly those who have been most active. They have led a busy life and when the time comes for them to retire they are absolutely incapable of enjoying life. Some men even fear to retire from business for the very reason they know they won't know what to do with themselves when they have stopped work. For this reason it is important that children not only learn how to work in the class room but how also to use their leisure time in order that if and when such a time comes when they will retire from business they will know how to enjoy the period after they have spent a life of work—that they will know how to live.

Quebec's Financial Statement

HON. Martin B. Fisher, Provincial Treasurer, on Wednesday revealed a pleasing surplus of over three millions on ordinary expenditures.

In view of the fact that this was accomplished without the smallest increase in taxation, there is a great deal of credit due Hon. Martin B. Fisher. Right from the start Hon. Mr. Fisher has shown himself to be a Provincial Treasurer of outstanding ability. In such trying financial times the office of the Provincial Treasurer is not a highly desirable one and the holder of such office can not help but be the object of a great deal of unjust criticism. Knowing Hon. Mr. Fisher as we do, we are entirely confident he would leave no stone unturned to render to his Province the greatest possible service in order that its financial statement might be one of which the Province could be proud. He has labored hard. And he has labored dutifully. Of this we are confident. For he is a man of this type.

The fruits of his labor have been sweet. They are a credit to the Province of Quebec.

A sharp increase in succession duties have done considerable to keep the wolf from the treasury door. In 1936, death contributed to the coffers of the Province only a trifle over four millions, while last year the Grim Reaper came through with nearly twelve millions. Another great contributor to the revenues of the Province are motorists who are "good" for about more than fourteen millions a year. Seven millions are due to the depletion of our natural resources. From the sale of liquor comes four million dollars.

The statement shows that "extraordinary expenditures" are responsible for a deficit of thirteen millions. This amount, of course, is not figured in on the ordinary expenditures which show a surplus of more than three millions. It is these "extraordinary expenditures" which, if they continue for many more years, will place the financial condition not only of this Province but all provinces and the Dominion government as well, in a condition from which it will take a long time to recover. The people simply can not afford them and the sooner this is realized the better it will be.

Of these sixteen millions for "extraordinary expenditures," twelve millions can be attributed to relief, expenditures on relief work and return to the land. Colonization and charity make up the rest. Should these "extraordinary expenditures" be not classed as such it would make the public erroneously think that the government was extraordinarily extravagant. Like the patient who was "doing as well as could be expected under the circumstances," the Provincial Treasurer is doing likewise with provincial finances.

In view of the financial condition of the Provinces in general and of many governments the world over, the Hon. Martin Fisher's statement is commendable. It seems that one can but wait and hope for something to turn up, whatever it might be, that will block off this flood of "extraordinary expenditures" in government which seems to be so universally prevalent.

75th Anniversary Number

THREE weeks from today the 75th anniversary number of the Huntingdon Gleaner is scheduled to appear.

Already messages of congratulations have come from daily newspaper and weekly newspaper editors from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast in Canada and from numerous other well-known personalities in the public life of Canada as well as from a number in this district. Features and stories of a wide range of interest are to appear in the issue together with many district photographs.

This anniversary number is expected to have a circulation of 5,000, covering thoroughly not only this district but going to many weekly and daily newspapers offices across Canada and to former residents of this district now located in various parts of the United States and Canada. It is an issue that will give the Chateauguay Valley much publicity. The issue will reflect the progressiveness of this district just as a show window reflects the degree of progressiveness and state of being up-to-date of a merchant. Any information you might have for this issue will make the show window of the district just that much better.

To publish such an issue involves a great deal of expense. For this reason it is hoped that the merchants and residents of the district will show every co-operation in the way of advertising to make the issue the best yet. News matter can be published only in accordance with the volume of advertising received. Many national advertisements have already been received but it is hoped that district advertisers will give full co-operation in the home-stretch of the preparation of this anniversary number.

HOW BARBARA GOT IT

Working in a Watertown, N.Y., dry goods store at $10 a week, Frank Woolworth got an idea from a visiting Michigan storekeeper who kept a counter of odds and ends selling at five cents each. Woolworth and his boss put in the same kind of counter and it was cleaned off in a few days. If one counter of five-cent articles should have such an appeal, why not a whole store of them, reasoned Woolworth, who induced his boss to advance him $300 worth of such merchandise and opened a small store in nearby Utica. That was in August, 1878. From that small beginning was developed the "five-and-ten-cent" chain of Woolworth stores, and up on which a dozen other chains have been patterned. Frank Woolworth died in 1919, a multimillionaire. When his wife died in 1924, the fortune was divided, $26,000,000 going to each of the families of the three Woolworth daughters. There were no sons. Only offspring of one of these daughters was Barbara Hutton, whose mother had died. So Barbara, then a girl of 12, was awarded her mother's share. It grew to $45,000,000 by the time she was of age. Since then her life story has been on the front pages of the newspapers. Most recent development is her suit for divorce from the Danish count she married three years ago, for whom she renounced her American citizenship and was naturalized a Dane.

Bats in the belfry are worrying the rector of Loden, England, Rev. E. G. Bevan. They flap over the heads of his congregation during his sermons. He has asked the Norfolk Archaeological society for assistance. The rector has killed 15 of the bats himself, but others, he says, seem uncatchable.

ELECTRIC FISHING

A new and illegal method of fishing has been discovered in Georgia and Lenox Henderson, fish and game warden of Tifton, Ga., is looking for the perpetrator. The scheme involves connecting a strand of wire to a spark plug in an auto and throwing the other end into a lake or stream. The motor is started and all fish coming in contact with the wire are electrocuted and rise to the surface where the fisherman gathers them in.

JOB 62 YEARS

"All this business about a man being through at 65 is a lot of bunk. I may get fired, but I'm not retiring," said J. I would not be anywhere else in the world if I had my choice."

MOTHER LOVE SAVES

Mrs. Alex. Wutrich can thank her mother love for the fact she was not killed when a colored man tried to rob her husband's store, in Frame Switch, Tex. Mrs. Wutrich reached for her baby on the floor when the man appeared and began to threaten her. As she bent over the hold-up man fired, and the bullet went through the back of the chair where it would almost certainly have caused her death had she remained upright. The bullet slightly wounded her husband. The robber was captured.

Consider the Other Driver The Crazy One

Father Gives Advice to Son Re Safe Car Driving

One of the best little lessons on safe driving is contained in a letter recently written by J. P. McEvoy, satirist, novelist and feature writer. Mr. McEvoy has recently completed a book entitled "Father Meets Son," published by J. B. Lippincott Co. The book is a series of letters something after the pattern of those written a couple of hundred years ago by Lord Chesterfield. In Mr. McEvoy's volume the father writes letters to his son who had just entered the business world after a rather hectic college career. The letters discuss every aspect of the young man's future life—questions of employment, marriage, social responsibilities, and so on.

On one occasion the lad, who was working at the time as a private chauffeur, took his employer's car out one night without permission and "wrapped it around a lamp-post."

The father, when he heard about the accident, sat down and wrote his son a letter containing a great deal of food for thought which should be thoroughly digested by everyone who drives a car. Here is what he wrote:

Dear Son:

You used up a lot of paper explaining how the accident was not your fault, and I can believe you. But you are going to continue to drive cars, and a few words on the subject won't do any harm. In the 25 years that I have been driving automobiles, I have never met anyone who had an accident through his own fault—it was always the car, the road, or the other fellow. Mostly the Other Fellow. . . . This Other Fellow is worth some study. There seems to be no escaping him. To look at him, you would think he was harmless, but last year he killed a great many people, and injured many more. I have seen the Other Fellow, and certainly he doesn't look like a killer. Sometimes he is a young nice-looking kid like you. Sometimes he is a middle-aged, middle-aged fellow like me. Sometimes he is a gentle sweet little woman like your mother, but that only goes to show you can't judge by appearances. He's a killer, and no mistake, and something is going to be done about it—or is it?

Some time ago, the champion safety driver of one of the largest bus companies in the world was given a banquet and a medal. He had completed half a million miles without an accident. When they called on him for a speech, he rose and said: "I ain't much of a hand at making speeches. I suppose you want to know how I got away so long without an accident? I just got one rule. I drive like the other fellow was crazy."

So that seems to explain it. The other fellow is crazy. If you cut out of line on a two-lane road, don't expect him to let you push him into a ditch, so you can cut in again. If you pass a car on a blind curve, don't expect the fellow coming the other way to be sensible about it and go off the road and cut into the field to let you by. He's just crazy enough to run right into you because you are on his side of the road. If you speed through a main intersection you will meet a lot of people who are crazy enough to think they have the right of way just because they are on a through street and you are coming in off a side street. If you like to pass on a hill, don't be surprised if a car comes over the crest and the driver doesn't leap over you or run under you. That would be the same thing to do, of course, but, you see, he's crazy. Yes, he's crazy, but you are rude—and that's what makes him crazy. It doesn't matter so much if you are walking down the street and you are rude enough to push someone aside, but if you are rude enough to push him aside with a three-ton automobile going 60 miles an hour you'll kill him. You can elbow your way through a crowd, if you are that impolite, and do no damage at all. But when you elbow your way through traffic with your bad manners stepped up to a hundred horsepower you're bound to do a lot of damage to a lot of innocent people.

For every accident caused by high speeding, there are a thousand caused by low breeding. Is it coincidence that the continent which leads in fatalities lags in formalities? We may not be the most uncivil people on two feet, but we certainly are the prize terrorists on four wheels. My boy, you may think it is silly to be polite, but a kiss on a warm cheek is worth two on a cold brow.

To-day we put a premium on agility rather than civility. Each year our manners become cruder as our gasoline become more refined. Wide roads won't prevent accidents, so long as they continue to fill up with narrow people. Good brakes on cars are no protection against bad breaks in behaviour. The growing problem of automobiles fatalities will not be solved around the drafting board but around the family table. Then we can have a monster under the hood, because there will be a gentleman at the wheel.

Affectionately, DAD.

A NOVEL MONEY MAKING SCHEME

Have you been having difficulty raising money for your church club or your favourite charity? The answer is: who doesn't have difficulty raising money? Because it's a universal complaint, we'd like to suggest a method of money making which is novel and not too much trouble. In fact, it can be a lot of fun if everyone cooperates and does her share. Try holding a jelly bazaar this fall but do the work

now. Of course you don't have to confine yourself to jelly—jams, marmalades and preserves will be equally popular with the buyers. Here are a few points to remember if you decide to hold a bazaar of this kind. First appoint a committee and have each member pledge a definite number of glasses for the sale. If you can get 200 glasses pledged and sell them at 10 cents a piece, your profit will be $20.00. Get the cooperation of your local newspaper in publicizing your sale and if it can be arranged, have a display of the jams and jellies in the lobby of a theatre, a library or in the window of a popular store beforehand. An attractive poster giving the date, place of sale and name of the charity to benefit by the bazaar should accompany this display. Another point which is very important to the success of the affair is the appearance of the glasses. Dress them up by putting them in unusual glasses and jars and wrapping them in transparent paper. Lastly, be sure the labels are neat and legible and the covers of the glasses tidy and attractive. Because you want this to be a success, make jelly that is worth buying. You can't afford to lose time of fruit and sugar either so we suggest using the "short boil" method. This method consists of adding bottled fruit pectin to the fruit and sugar and takes less time, less trouble but gives you more jars of jam and jelly. You can be sure, too, if you follow the recipe exactly that your jelly and jam will be of the right texture and have a delicious flavour. Here is the recipe for grape jelly and you'll be proud to admit you made it.

Fresh Grape Jelly

4 cups (2 lbs.) juice; 7½ cups (3¼ lbs.) sugar; ½ bottle fruit pectin. To prepare jelly, stem about 3 pounds fully ripe grapes and crush thoroughly. Add ½ cup water; bring to a boil, cover, and simmer 10 minutes. Place fruit in jelly cloth or bag and squeeze out juice. (If Malagas or other tight-skinned grapes are used, the juice of 1 lemon should be added to prepare the juice.) Measure sugar and juice into large saucepan and mix. Bring to a boil over hottest fire and at once add pectin, stirring constantly. Then bring to a full rolling boil and simmer 5 minutes. Remove from fire, skim, pour quickly into jars and cover at once. Makes about 11 glasses (6 fluid ounces each.)

A LUXURY JAM

Ripe grape jam is a real luxury sweet. It's a little more trouble to make than ordinary jam, but it's worth it. The first part of the job, before you begin the real jam-making, is what takes the extra time and trouble. The sweet pulp of the grapes and the skins, for lovely colour and extra flavour are needed, but not the seeds. So the skins have to be slipped off and then the pulp and seeds have to be parted. This should be done by putting the pulp through a sieve. To get the skins into small enough pieces, they should be put through a food chopper.

Concord grapes make the choicest jam, the colour of the juice is bright and the flavour is zestful but this recipe will do for any kind of grapes, so use whatever variety are found in your district. And make this jam as soon as the grapes are ripe. They don't keep well after they ripen but are perfect when just ripe. That is one of the advantages of modern jam making methods. The fruit can be used when it's at the peak of its flavour and colour—not when it's under-ripe as used to be the case. The secret of being able to use ripe fruit is that bottled fruit pectin is added to get jam of the right texture. Before bottled fruit pectin was available, only fruit that was under-ripe had enough pectin to set properly but what it made up in pectin it lacked in flavour and colour. None of this difficulty besets the present day jam-maker. She can use the ripest, its finest and still be sure of the texture of her jam.

Grape Jam

4½ cups (2¼ lbs.) prepared fruit; 7 cups (3½ lbs.) sugar; ½ bottle fruit pectin. To prepare fruit, slip skins from about 3 pounds fully ripe grapes. Simmer pulp, covered, 5 minutes. Remove seeds by sieving. Chop or grind skins and add to pulp. (Concord grapes give best colour and flavour.) If wild grapes, Malagas, or other tight-skinned grapes are used, stem, crush, and simmer with ½ cup water 30 minutes. Sieve and measure. Use 4 cups prepared fruit and add juice of 2 medium lemons. Measure sugar and prepared fruit into large kettle, mix well, and bring to a full rolling boil over hottest fire. Stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard one minute. Remove from fire and stir in pectin. Pour quickly. Paraffin at once. Makes about 11 glasses (6 fluid ounces each.)

Matrimonial

Poirier-Talbot

The marriage of Eva Veronica, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Talbot, of Valleyfield, to Mr. Jules Wilfrid Poirier, of Montreal, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jules Poirier, of Montreal, took place Monday morning at 8 o'clock in the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Valleyfield, the Rev. Father Hervé Charlebois, vicar at St. Joseph's Church, Huntingdon officiating.

Mr. Bernard Shea, of Montreal, sang solos during the service. Gladioli, chrysanthemums and asters were used with large ferns to decorate the church.

The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a gown of white tulle, tulle on period lines with long puffed sleeves finishing in points over her hands, and shirred bodice. The long full skirt was edged with ruffling caught with range blossoms worn by her mother at her wedding. Her veil of tulle illusion reached her finger tips, and she carried a shower bouquet of shell-pink carnations, baby's breath and lily-of-the-valley.

Mr. Albert Hébert, of Huntingdon, who was her sister's only attendant, wore a gown of dusty pink chiffon with a bolero, a large matching felt hat trimmed with pink and green velvet, and carried a sheaf of pink gladioli.

Mr. Albert Poirier, of Mont Joli, acted as best man, and the ushers were Mr. Elmer Robson and Mr. Lawrence O'Neill.

Mrs. Talbot, the bride's mother, wore a blue chiffon suit with a blue hat and accessories and a corsage bouquet of Better Time roses.

The reception was held at the residence of the bride, where white gladioli and asters were used to decorate. Later, Mr. and Mrs. Poirier left for New York, the bride travelling in a navy blue chiffon suit with matching hat and accessories, and wore silver fox furs, the gift of the bridegroom.

On their return the couple will reside at 470 East, St. Joseph Blvd., Montreal.

The out-of-town guests who attended the wedding ceremony included: Dr. Ernest Talbot, brother of the bride, of Bridgeport, Conn.; Mr. and Mrs. T. Bernard Shea, Miss Estelle Innes, Mr. and Mrs. C. Morais, of Montreal, also Mrs. Claude Mercier, Miss Berengere Huart, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. McKinnon, of Quebec City; Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hébert and Father Hervé Charlebois of Huntingdon; Mr. Clovis Poirier, Mr. Albert Poirier, Miss Jean Poirier, Miss Germaine Poirier, of Mont Joli; the groom's immediate family; Miss Therese Boudreau, of Trois Pistoles; Mr. and Mrs. James Thompson, of Ierville, Que.

Farewell For...

St. Paul's Church have gathered here partly for the purpose of enjoying one more social evening together, as pastor and people, and partly to express our regret at your leaving, as well as to assure you of our sincere appreciation of the conduct of your pastorate, during the ten years you have labored amongst us. Year after year the good reports of work done by the different societies of our church, have testified to the ability, tact and efficiency of the leader and pastor of St. Paul's. Touching every part of our life, you have given comfort in times of sorrow, cheered the sick and shut-ins in homes and hospitals, shared our joys, pleasures and sports, even winning and reproving when you felt it was your duty to do so, always proving yourself to be a workman, desirous of declaring the whole truth, loyal to your great commission of preaching, teaching and living the Gospel.

Our regret at your departure is tempered by the fact that you are not removing far, and there is no need of any break in the friendship that we value so highly. We ask you to accept a small parting gift from your Ormstown friends—a slight token of our love and regard, along with our warmest wishes for your future welfare and happiness.

GLEANER vs. SHAWINIGAN

at 6.15 p.m.

There is a rumor circulating around town these days to the effect that the remaining Towson League playoff games would be played at the Ormstown Fair Ground under flood lights. This would be one solution to the games called off account of darkness but what would be the reaction of the local fans?

Mr. and Mrs. John Mills, and Mr. and Mrs. Alex Stewart, N.D.C. Montreal, were Sunday guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley McNeil.

Monday evening's game was more peppy and active than the previous contest and although Shawinigan walked away with the honors, the game will have to be re-played as all playoff games must be played to their full extent. The score was 16-5 in favor of the Shawinigan nine at the end of their fourth inning.

"The Ticker Tape Murder"

— By —
Milton M. Propper

"I Never Took Him"

Parker's dismissal was a vital blow to the gang's plans. As long as he worked for the financier, the latter's movements were well known to it, and schemes arranged accordingly. After his departure, however, nothing could be accomplished except with infinitely greater danger to all concerned. It followed then that, besides sending a final note of warning, the gang must act in the short period the chauffeur was still employed; if no opportunity arose to carry out the plans, one must be created within the twenty-four hours which remained.

Then came the day during which Philip Nixon was murdered. "As you know," Parker related, addressing Gilmore, "I was to call for Nixon at his office at 2:30 in the afternoon, to take him to the bank. And afterward, as I told you, I had to take him home, which we left at half-past 4. But what I didn't tell you was the fact that, as we left the office, Mr. Nixon informed me that I would later drive him to Cape May. The very opportunity that we hoped would occur took place! On the journey there was no telling what chances we'd have to get at him. And while Mr. Nixon was in the bank, I called up Ike and told him to get hold of Arthur and a car and drive out to Bryn Mawr. From there they would follow us on the trip; I would go slowly enough so they could keep up with us all the time."

Thus far, Gilmore knew he was telling the truth; the facts fitted in with Rankin's discoveries at McKenney's Garage. The call for Stahl had come there at about a quarter of three.

"Mr. Nixon always gave me my orders before we started out," Parker continued, "so that he wouldn't have to speak again. When he left the house, he said: 'Drive to Cape May by way of Newfield and Rockton, Parker. When we reach Rockton, leave the main highway just beyond the town; we'll make inquiry there as to the rest of the road.' I just nodded, and when I saw that Morin and Stahl were outside the auto drive ready to follow, I started."

"So that you knew Nixon was bound for Rockton and beyond?"

"That's right," only I never took him. Just as we were crossing the Delaware River Bridge into Camden, Mr. Nixon leans over to me and says, 'I've changed my mind, Parker; I'll take the train to Rockton and get a machine there. Drive me to the terminal; I can just make the 5:20 train.' Well that left me flat; I don't know why he changed his mind, for he couldn't very well suspect me of anything. I had been too careful for that. But if he did go by train, unless we could think of something else, we'd lose our last chance for getting at him. Still, I had to obey the order, because we were in the city; so I took him to the terminal and he caught the 5:20 just five minutes before it pulled out."

Was Parker again lying? When he had made this same claim before, Gilmore had not believed it, but since that time he had unearthed facts that indicated it might nevertheless be true. Nixon, who believed his chauffeur at least a thief, if not more, had in his pocket $5,000—a sum sufficient to entice a dishonest employee. A journey with him, under those circumstances, was not conducive to the financier's peace of mind. It was natural, therefore, that he should change his mind. More important, the fact that Nixon had turned up near Pelham woods in a machine driven by two strangers might be explainable if, after taking the train to Rockton, he hired a machine to complete his journey.

The chauffeur saw the incredulity mirrored in Gilmore's eyes. "That's the truth, Gilmore," he said earnestly, breaking off in his narrative. "He did take the train; I never drove him down. The rest of it wasn't right, but that part was true."

"All right, Parker," the detective said reassuringly. "Just keep on going—I'll give you my opinion when it's all finished."

Racing the Train

"As soon as he got on, I joined the others who had followed us to the terminal. We talked it over quickly; we didn't have time to waste and we couldn't afford to lose his trail. Yet, unless we all took the train, the only way to get him was to race it to Rockton, beat it there, and somehow manage to pick him up there when he got off. But the car Stahl got in the garage where he worked wasn't fast enough; there was just a chance that we could get there first in the Rolls-Royce. Even that might have been impossible, only the train was a local, and took sixty-five minutes or more to make the forty miles. And that meant that we had to make it at forty miles an hour, at the very least."

For the only time during his narrative Parker smiled, a grim smile, at the recollection of that thrilling race, to beat the train to Rockton. Gilmore was aware that the 5:20 was a local train, nevertheless he fully realized what a feat Parker had performed if he won his race.

"We started off; and once outside of Camden, on the Black Horse Pike, made up for time lost in the city traffic. Except through town, I must have averaged more than fifty miles an hour for over twenty miles. The shore-bound traffic was not very heavy. But I wouldn't like to repeat a ride like that again, though; it was a mighty close thing, and I wasn't letting anything get by me."

"At Malaga—that's about twenty-seven miles out—we went off the main road to take the road that paralleled the railroad track through Newfield to Rockton; it goes through Millville further on. We got to Newfield at 10 minutes after 6, beating the train by three minutes.

"Outside Newfield a State cop on a motorcycle came out of the bushes and tried to stop us. I paid no attention to him; if we stopped, we'd have an argument on our hands and if we got into a jam, Stahl and Morin might be identified. That was a risk we couldn't afford to take. So I sent him bowling over into a ditch—came near running over him. It would have been good riddance if I did, but the tires became suddenly malicious. 'By the time he'd got himself together we were out of sight.'"

As the speaker stopped for breath Dr. Curtis lit a cigarette. The detective found himself too engrossed to interrupt with questions.

"We beat the train into Rockton by five minutes," the chauffeur continued, "getting there about 20 minutes after 6. The storm had begun to threaten us, and it was getting dark; just the same, I think I hit the last eight miles at sixty an hour. We had just time enough left to get to the only garage in the place hire a car and hurry down to the station. Then the train came in."

"Just a moment," Gilmore interrupted, recalling the only garage that Rockton boasted of. "What was the name of the garage?"

"The Rockton Center, it was called."

"You arrived at 20 after 6; do you know the name of the man who rented you the car?"

"No, I didn't notice him," Parker replied, "and I like him. He had only time left to pay the deposit demanded and get to the station as quickly as he could. And then the train came in at 6:25, and when Philip Nixon got off the cars, Ike and Arthur were there to meet him."

The elements of time informed the detective that what he was listening to was absolutely veracious. A bit later than half-past 6, according to Mrs. Belcher's rough assumption, the financier had made his appearance, in black car, at the crossroads four miles outside of Rockton. And five minutes later Mrs. Solby, residing near Pelham woods, had overhead two shots. It all followed with precision.

"At least you can describe the car, Parker," Gilmore said.

"An old five-passenger black Buick, 1926 model; I guess you can find it if you look it up at the garage."

The detective nodded and Parker resumed his narrative. "Nixon fell for the trap nicely; if he hadn't, at least he would have had something to follow him in wherever he went. Of course, I kept the Rolls out of sight, but if Nixon saw that he'd know something was wrong. There was no car at the station besides the one we hired, and Nixon needed one; besides, the storm was coming up fast and he had to get into shelter somewhere. So when Ike offered him the car, he got in. In case the old man got suspicious at a second man up front, Ike said that his friend lived on the way out of town and he'd take him along."

"As soon as they got him in I started back to the city. As God is my witness, Gilmore, I don't know what happened to Nixon after that. I had never planned to kill him and if Morin and Stahl did it, well, you can't lay the murder on me." The speaker extended his hands and spoke with a sincerity there was no gainsaying. "I never heard of him or the gang again; my one desire was to get back and escape as fast as I could. I knew that there would be inquiries almost at once, and I wanted to get away before my troubles with Nixon came out through Bennett. I knew he was bound to tell."

"And then, Gilmore, I ran into that cop again! I had forgotten all about him in my hurry, but he hadn't forgotten me or what I'd done to him. This time, he didn't waste any time trying to stop me; he just came out after me, and when I kept on past him, he began to chase me. I was scared then; I was not going to be halted and held for a hearing; when the investigation began, I wanted to be out of town. I stepped on the gas and so did he; by that time, it had begun to storm and pour at a terrific rate. We both went through Newfield as fast as we were safe to go on wet roads, and he hung on like grim death right out the other side. It was a wonder we didn't kill somebody."

"On the open road, he began to fire at me. Twice he hit me, once under the hood and once by the midguard, fortunately for me, he missed the tires; that only made me go faster, and gradually I began to draw away from him. The storm helped me; it was bad enough for me in the open car but much worse for him on a motorcycle with the wind howling at him and the strain streaming down into his face, and blinding him. So, after some miles, he fell further behind, and finally I was so far ahead of him that I had lost him."

"But I couldn't afford to take any chances. At a turn in the road, where I was sure he couldn't see me any more, I turned off into a country lane for about five miles, expecting to come out on some other highway. And then I got lost; that is what made me get back to Nixon's place almost at midnight. The lane led only into other narrow muddy paths; and for almost two hours, I twisted along them, with woods on both sides of me and not a house for miles. It was a wonder I didn't get stuck a dozen times in that muck; it was so black and lonely that my brightest lights couldn't pierce the darkness, and so narrow I could hardly get through. But after a while I found my way out; and when I got back, I was too late, as you know, to make any headway."

Parker's gesture of finality as effectively concluded the tale as the silence that followed his last words. After a moment, he said: (To be continued)

CIGARETTE BEETLE

Although called the cigarette beetle owing to its preference for tobacco and its destruction of the manufactured cigarette, the beetle feeds on many other substances, such as seeds, dried drugs, yeast cakes, and vegetable materials used in upholstered furniture. Scientists now report that this destructive pest can be controlled by relatively short exposures to low temperature. At 36 degrees F., a 16-day exposure killed all stages of the beetle, and at 25 degrees a seven-day exposure produced complete mortality.

Calls For The Restoration Of The Family As Predominant Factor In World Society

German Professor Speaks At International Agricultural Conference—Levelling of Incomes Suggested To Raise Standard of Living On The Farm

The restoration of the family to its old place as the predominant factor in society was advocated by Prof. H. Niehaus, of the University of Rostock, Germany, speaking at the Fifth International Conference of Agricultural Economists in session at Ste. Anne de Bellevue, Prof. Niehaus was one of the party of International agriculturists who visited in Huntingdon some time ago and who was impressed by the fine dairy farms about Huntingdon. Tracing the decline of the birth-rate in Germany up until 1933, he ascribed to the commercializing of the richer farm areas and the establishment of the bourgeois ideal of a small family.

"We in Germany have abolished the Marxist class strife," he declared, "but we have still to abolish the materialistic ideal in many walks of life." Though admitting that large families tend to lower the standard of living, the German agronomist stated that this standard is arbitrary and fluctuating and that now in Germany "a large family is becoming an essential social honor."

The adaptation of closer contacts between forestry and agriculture, theoretically and in practice, was advanced by R. D. Craig, of the Dominion Forest Service, Department of Mines and Resources, Ottawa, as a plan to aid the farmer. The subject was introduced, L. K. Elmhurst, of Totnes, Devon, president of the conference said, as the result of various requests from Scandinavian members.

Mr. Craig outlined the advantages to the country at large from well-planned and tended tracts of timber in the matter of soil preservation and water conservation. A substantial saving could also be effected in the farm budget by a good wood-lot. The integration of lumbering and agriculture in countries such as Canada and Scandinavia, he declared was an important phase of agronomy.

A revolution in land ownership must take place before national planning in agriculture can become effective. E. C. Young of Purdue University, Lafayette, Indiana, told the meeting.

The professor was speaking in a discussion of the first papers of the conference delivered previously by J. P. Booth, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, and M. L. Wilson, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, on "Social Implications of Economic Progress in Present Day Agriculture."

"In the United States all programmes for production control and social reorganization have run aground on the institutions of free ownership of land and the right to transfer and lease land," Prof. Young said. "To date, nothing of any consequence has been done to modify these rights. The refinancing programme of the Farm Credit Administration followed traditional lines."

"National planning for agriculture, if it is to become an effective force in initiating and controlling economic change, must first plan and effect far reaching abridgements in these rights," he continued.

Though he did not underestimate the influence of national planning on agriculture in the United States, Professor Young declared it has been a negligible factor compared with the effect of development in farm machinery, crop and livestock improvement and transportation, production control and other federal programmes.

A distinct cleavage of ideas arose later in the day from the reading of Mr. Wilson's paper. The Washington official declared he had "great faith" in the future of the newly evolved "rural industrial community," and advocated an expansion of the unified community projects and rural industrial social groups.

Taking issue with Mr. Wilson over the value of the rural industrial community were Prof. A. W. Ashby, of the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth, and Dr. C. A. Dawson, of McGill University, Prof.

Ashby held that "rural industrial communities can never become effective on a very wide scale."

Secretary Wilson's idea that such communities could be made to absorb all the unemployed urban workers and the semi-rural farm population, Prof. Ashby declared unsound. "It is a safe forecast," he said, "for either Great Britain or the United States that development of what is called rural industry will never cause any important modification of the industrial system, as such or exercise any very important influence in the solution of the problems of agricultural unemployment, unless there is general industrial and political break-up in these two great societies."

Professor Ashby declared that "one of the great problems of this and the next generation will be that of the integration of industrial and agricultural ways of life," but went on record as being opposed to the wide separation of the agricultural community to preserve the peasant culture. He advocated on the contrary a levelling of incomes to raise the standard of living on the farm, which would automatically bring the two extremes closer together.

Dr. Dawson, also in disagreement with Mr. Wilson, voiced opposition to extensive outside help for the farmer. Agricultural planning should only be tentative in its aid to the farmer, he said, in discussing Mr. Wilson's point that the trend seemed to be inevitably towards the extension of governmental programs for agricultural improvement.

His services were held in the Methodist Church at 2 p.m. Sunday, with interment at Winthrop.

Obituary

The Late Matthew Henry MacLaren

Friends and neighbours were most sorry to learn of the death of Henry MacLaren, who died at his home on Grove Street, New Milford, Conn., Monday, August 22, following an illness of several months duration.

Mr. MacLaren had been a resident of New Milford for the past 18 years and during his stay here steadily gained friends and acquaintances, who will miss him greatly. To his bereaved family is extended much sorrow in their great loss.

Mr. MacLaren was born in Herdman, Que. November 1, 1860, and was the son of Robert MacLaren and Eliza Margaret (Herdman) MacLaren. He made his home in Quebec until twenty-one years ago when he came to Colebrook, N.H. for a few years. Eighteen years ago he came to New Milford with his family where he was employed with the Merwin-Wilson Silver shop and several years ago retired from work due to ill health. The Merwin-Wilson shop is now owned by the Danforth Company.

Mr. MacLaren was married to Miss Helena Lavery, May 15th, 1889 by the Rev. James O'Hara. He was a member of the Methodist church for thirty-seven years where he was an active worker. He is survived by his wife, two sons, Robert MacLaren of New Milford and Earle MacLaren of Westport, Conn., two daughters, Lila MacLaren and Lillian MacLaren, of New Milford, two grandchildren, Shirley and Robert MacLaren, of New Milford. RICH FROM USHERING

When a boy, Andrew Frain got a job ushering in the Chicago stadium. Being observant, he soon learned there was a great deal more to the job of seating a large audience properly than is generally supposed. Six years ago, he called on the superintendent of the race track near Louisville, Ky. just before the Kentucky Derby was run and showed this official, Matt Winn, the confusion and waste of time caused by the insufficient seating of the crowd. Frain induced Winn to give him a contract for the ushering job and has held that contract ever since. This year, the Kentucky Derby made $5 to $10 each for 750 high school and college boys under the direction of Frain, who received $1,500 himself for his day's work. Since his first Kentucky Derby job, Frain has branched out and now holds ushering contracts in several big league ball parks and race tracks in the United States, England and Ireland. At the age of 32, he is making a net profit of from $15,000 to $25,000 yearly, has a payroll exceeding $500,000 and employs 1,500 young men of high school and college age.

LOST IN SAFE PLACE

In 1904, Victor Roberts, carpenter, lost his saw while remodeling a building in Key West, Fla. and thought it was stolen. Recently, he was awarded the job of heading down the same building and in one of the corners found his saw, as bright and sharp as the day he sealed it in.
