I wish I could remember who it was who famously said: "An Irishman is one who refuses to leave the middle of a thorn bush for fear that someone will take his place". This, for me, captures a certain feature of the Irish psyche. Of late this column has offered several reviews which focus on the Ireland of the past 40 years—Donal Ryan's The Spinning Heart, John Banville's The Blue Guitar, Benjamin Black's Christine Falls. If one had to extrapolate, there seem to be two main traumas that dominate the Irish national consciousness at this time—the sudden collapse in 2008 of the Celtic Tiger (the economic boom that occurred in the 1990's); and the legacy of abuse associated with the Catholic Church. The economic boom brought to a traditionally staid and fixed society upward mobility, unprecedented wealth, and hand-over-fist materialism. Its collapse left a gaping hole in place of optimism, and a feeling of bitterness for those who had enjoyed riding the wave and those who had been swamped by it. As for the Catholic Church, the revelations of abuse have heightened the already strong discontent at the theocratic aspects of Irish society.

Roddy Doyle's Smile (2017) highlights the sense of desperation in this economic post-lapsarian Ireland, with a special focus on masculinity—how it can be defined and realized in this social context. As Doyle acknowledges in an interview, this novel is a departure from his usual fiction. There are still all the traditional Doylean rewards in crisp dialogue and a story well told, but the ambivalent and fragmentary narrative perspective and psychological complexity set Smile apart.

Smile begins with the main character, Victor Forde, searching for a watering hole. He is in his mid-fifties and, apparently, has just separated from his wife and is starting over. We discover that he has moved into a tiny apartment, provided it with the barest of furnishings, and is scouting his old north Dublin neighbourhood for a "local"—a place where he can go out for a pint and read and have the odd conversation. We see that he is a stranger to this type of thing, having been married for some time to a very high-achiever and being thoroughly occupied with domestic and professional affairs. He finds a suitable place, Donnaly's, and is just getting comfortably settled when he is accosted by a mysterious figure from his past, Edward...Eddie...no, Ed Fitzpatrick. Trouble is, he cannot for the life of him remember Ed. Ed alludes to shared school experiences with the (OMINOUS STRINGS) Christian Brothers, and refers to his sister Síla Fitzpatrick, who, in their youths, had been a real bike—the bike, as Ed puts it.

In these opening scenes, then, Doyle sets the tone for the novel. The smooth, almost glib, dialogue keeps drawing the reader towards buried secrets, vague and fearful recollections of the past. The character Ed Fitzpatrick is introduced as a black blob against the light of the doorway. He gradually assumes colour—pink shirt; baggy cargo pants which, on account of their bagginess, are at times too revealing; fat stomach, which he slaps in most unsavoury fashion. And, as the story progresses, each time Victor Forde ventures from his apartment, Ed becomes more and more of an annoying and then menacing presence.

Meanwhile, in a series of flashbacks, we are presented with Victor's brilliant career—his early borderline abusive experiences at school with the Christian Brothers; the death of his father; his early successes as a UCD student, then as an iconoclastic, moving and shaking reviewer, journalist, and radio personality; his surprisingly passionate love affair with and then marriage to Rachel Carey, a high-achieving woman from a well-to-do family.

Yet all is not well. He tries unsuccessfully to initiate a relationship with a woman he meets in his new local—no soap. He keeps trying to duck the attentions of the troublesome Ed Fitzpatrick—no soap. Finally he narrates a past radio interview in which he revealed some sordid details about schooling under the Christian Brothers. It is here that one senses the pressures of a psychological whirlpool. The reader is being drawn into something. The typically straightforward dialogue is undercut by narrative lapses. The realism seems to dissolve into a dreamscape.... Stories like A Picture of Dorian Gray, Death in Venice, Fight Club come to mind.

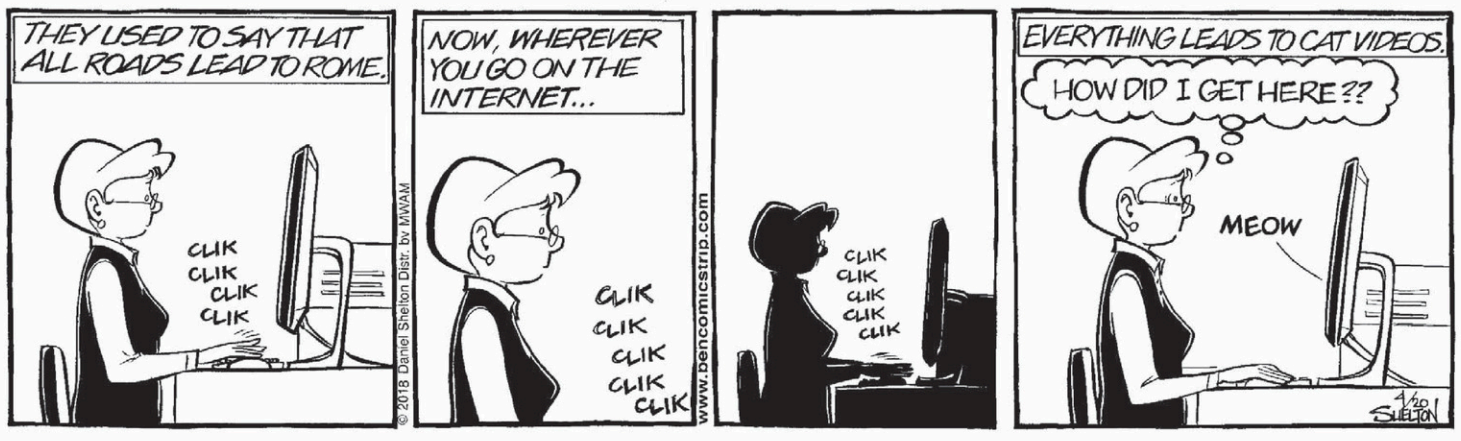

Some readers find the disjointed narration a bit off-putting, but it greatly adds to the effect of psychodrama (both psychotherapeutic and fictional!). In fact, this is probably the most Hitchcockian of all of Doyle's works. The author has always had a fascination with the spoken language, and has a great ability to evoke images and motives from very spare dialogue. And, in a sense we are set up by our own expectations derived from Doyle's other works. But nothing in our previous reading of Doyle prepares us for the unsettling final chapters of Smile.

—Stephen Sheeran

A Sherbrooke Police officer seriously injured by a 'sucker punch' from career criminal Frederic Martel in 2006, leaving him with serious after-effects, has filed suit for half a million dollars in damages.

Éric Lefebvre is claiming $485,700 in damages, including $100,000 in punitive damages for himself and $25,000 for his partner Maryse Fournier. He has also asked the court to declare any awards of judgment he might receive a debt that cannot be relinquished in a personal bankruptcy.

The APNCPE selected Magog as the location of its protest because the President of the Union, Any Sanders, is based in the community.

Sherbrooke man admits to child porn charges

Record Staff
SHERBROOKE

A 28-year old Sherbrooke man, Samuel Fabi, was convicted Wednesday of charges related to child pornography in a Sherbrooke court.

Samuel Fabi was convicted of producing child pornography between August 23, 2014 and March 5, 2016 and possession of child pornography between July 1, 2014 and August 5, 2016.

These convictions will mean Fabi will have to serve time, as the minimum sentence in such cases is set at one year of detention.

Transcripts of Skype conversations were entered as evidence to support the charge of producing child pornography. These sexually suggestive communications between Fabi and his victims are considered child pornography. Witness statements were also admitted into evidence, as were Fabi's own statements to police. In addition, child pornography files were found in Fabi's computer and on a USB key were also submitted as evidence.

Fabi admitted that the statement he gave to police came freely and voluntarily and, through his lawyer, offered no defense.

Some charges against Fabi were dropped in a deal that saw Fabi drop the threat of a constitutional objection to the admittance of some of the evidence.

The Crown had pledged to take a strong stand in cases of computer luring of minors as well as distributing and accessing child pornography when court returned on September 11.

Organ and Tissue Donation: CIUSSS says 'Talk to Your Family'

SHERBROOKE

The CIUSSS de l'Estrie – CHUS is encouraging the public to discuss the idea of organ and tissue donation with their families before a crisis strikes. Failing to do so can result in potential donations being withheld because loved ones are unaware of the wishes of the deceased.

About 90 per cent of Quebecers support organ and tissue donation, but only 4 out of 10 have formalized their decision with the Quebec Health Insurance Board (RAMQ) or the Quebec Chambre des notaires registry. The subject of organ and tissue donation is rarely discussed between potential donors and their families.

"One of the reasons for a family's refusal to donate organs and tissue from their deceased loved one is that they are unaware of last wishes. Last year, in the Estrie region, 63 per cent of families justified their refusal in this way," says Organ Donation Resource Nurse Annie Chouinard, who works for the CIUSSS of Estrie – CHUS

Benoit Lefebvre, the father of a young donor, confirmed: "We must think about this before the situation arises. When it happens, on the spot, it is much too difficult. We experience so much emotion."

Although a person may decide before dying to donate organs and tissues, care teams still want the consent of the family, as it is they who ultimately have the final word. "On our side, we look in the records and on the health insurance card to know the person's wishes and talk with the family," Chouinard said.." But sometimes, there is nothing there. People must make a choice if unaware of their loved one's desires. With all the emotions involved, it's harder for the family, much harder."

When a person has taken a position on organ and tissue donation before death and has discussed their choice with their loved ones, it makes the decision for the family much easier. This was the case for Martine Ouellet, whose 21-year-old son died after his car collided with a truck. The event happened 14 years ago, but the pain is still very much alive.

Ouellet remembers the death of her son, taken in the prime of his life: "Hugo was hit hard in the head and had severe head trauma and a lot of bleeding," she recalled."We went to the hospital where we met a team that really took good care of us. A few days later, we were told that Hugo was not going to make it, that we were going to lose him. His organs were about to stop working. My partner and I thought that if we loved him, we had to let him go."

In the end, Hugo could not donate his organs because he did not meet all the criteria. But he was able to donate tissue, bequeathing his corneas. A few weeks later, Martine had confirmation that the transplants were successful. Thanks to Hugo's gesture, two people found a new quality of life. When thinking of this, his mom is filled with pride for her son.

Three ways to signify consent

1. Sign the sticker and affix it to the back of your health insurance card.

2. Sign the Consent for Organ and Tissue Donation form from the Régie de l'assurance maladie du Québec (RAMQ).

3. Register your consent with the Quebec Registry of Consents for Organ and Tissue Donation.

Above all, share your wishes with your loved ones!

By Matthew McCully

In a judgment rendered on March 13, Superior Court Judge Sylvain Provencher ruled in favour of real estate development company 9270-5912 QUÉBEC INC (Domaine Memphrémagog sur le lac) in a case against Stanstead Township.

The developer took action against the municipality for having refused to authorise the construction of a pathway built on stilts along Lake Memphremagog in Fitch Bay.

The municipality is appealing the decision.

The property, a 122-acre lot, was purchased by the real estate company in December of 2012.

Because access to a portion of the lakefront property flooded at certain times of year and was extremely humid and difficult to walk on, it was determined by the owner that a path on stilts needed to be built to access the lake.

The owner then approached the Stanstead Township Municipal inspector to apply for the proper permits for construction of the path, but was told that the project required the approval of the Ministry of Sustainable Development, Environment and the Fight against Climate Change (MDDELCC).

In February of 2013, the property owner filed the application, but in the months following began construction without having received the proper authorisation.

While in hot water with the MDDELCC, it was discovered in August that based on the type of construction project, the jurisdiction fell under the municipality and not the Ministry of Environment.

The property owner,9270-5912 QUÉBEC INC (Domaine Memphrémagog sur le lac), then turned to the town for the proper permits, but was refused.

According to the details explained in the judgment, the property owner asserted that the path that was built conformed to the municipality's regulations. Even if it did not, the owner claimed to have an acquired right to build the path, since previously a walking path was already in the same place.

The legal challenge mounted was to oblige Stanstead Township to provide the developer with permits authorising the path that was built, as well as $500,000 in damages and $50,000 in punitive damages.

While the civil aspects were not addressed in the recent ruling, the judge declared the path to be inconformity with Stanstead Township's existing by-laws, and gave the municipality 30 days to provide the property owner with the appropriate certificates of authorisation for the path. The judge included an amendment preventing the municipality from forcing the property owner to remove the path.

Stanstead Township Mayor could not discuss the specific details surrounding the case, but confirmed that the municipality intends to appeal the decision.

Despite the recent ruling in the legal challenge against Stanstead Township, Domaine Memphrémagog-sur-le-lac real estate company still has to answer to the Ministry of Environment. For contravening section 22 of the Environment Quality Act, the company received fines in February totaling over $65,000 for having carried out work in a swamp, a marsh, a bog, and on the shoreline of Lake Memphremagog without first obtaining a certificate of authorization from the Ministry of the Environment.

Coaticook CAB gets innovation award

Record Staff
COATICOOK

The Coaticook MRC Centre for Volunteer Action (CAB) is proud has announced that it is one of five organizations (out of 51 applicants) to receive an Hommage bénévolat-Québec 2018 award in the category of Organizations. This award recognizes the contributions of organizations that have developed innovative strategies and methods to mentor and support volunteers and to promote volunteerism.

"This award recognizes all the efforts we have made in recent years to promote volunteerism and raise awareness of its importance," explained CAB Chair Michèle Hamelin.

Since 1987, the Coaticook MRC's Volunteer Center has launched some interesting initiatives to highlight the work of volunteers in the region, including the Volunteer Action Campaign that features a community activist every week. This is done publicly through newspaper columns, on radio, on Facebook, and in other social media. During National Volunteer Week, all the texts are presented during the regional recognition dinner. These pieces also demystify volunteerism and encourage others to take part. In addition, in order to stimulate youth succession, the CAB organized the "I really live, I volunteer" contest, illustrating the volunteer activities of a youth group from the MRC in a video. It also introduced an institutional volunteer component for various activities.

In this Volunteer Week and this year when Coaticook CAB is celebrating its 30th anniversary, the award honours its 148 active volunteers who have accomplished nearly 12,500 volunteer hours during the year.2017-2018.

funding of health and social services," Fortin said "this is a debate that has been going on for more than twenty years and today we are putting an end to it."

Fortin explained that a funding formula put in place 30 years ago that was only ever indexed for inflation and didn't take into account population changes over that time left several regions of the province at a financial disadvantage when it came to health and social services. This past March, as a solution to that problem, a sum of $300 million was set aside to improve service and access across these underfunded regions. That overall amount was then divided between regions based on a formula that takes into account population, service needs, and regional characteristics like population age and known health concerns.

For Gauthier, the funding comes as very good news in a region that has more seniors, more poverty, and more mental health concerns than the provincial average.

"This will allow the stabilization of personnel," the General Manager said, making reference to the issue of absenteeism that has arisen at local healthcare centres as a result of intense demands on staff. By using the new, recurrent funding to help support staffing needs, Gauthier said that the public can expect to see a more efficient and functional environment in all the facilities of the CIUSSS de L'Estrie – CHUS shortly.

The other areas benefiting from the new funding are the Mauricie-Centre-du-Quebec, Outaouais, Chaudière-Appalaches, Laval, Lanaudière, Laurentians, and Montérégie regions.

Letters

Dear Editor;

Congrats to The Record for publishing Wednesday's supplement on firefighters and first responders.

Lots of pages filled with new and old stories and photos from around the greater Eastern Townships. I have had the privilege to know almost all of the fire chiefs in the articles... and am old enough to have been able to name the majority of the Lennoxville firefighters from the 1960s... because most of them were still there when I joined the LFD in 1973!

I have a feeling that after seeing this, you could probably do another special section to include all of the towns or departments that didn't submit anything this time!

Bruce Porter
Retired Sherbrooke firefighter

Dear Editor,

I received my Record today, Tuesday, April 17 and as usual settled down to the pleasure of reading it. At first, I admired the thickness of the paper as it has become very thin the past little while. The section on Keeping our community safe slipped out and that became the priority of reading.

I read with enjoyment as one fire department after another was mentioned and the work of the first responders and firemen was disclosed. What a tribute to such fine people who work so hard to keep our communities safe.

Something just didn't seem right by the time I closed that section so I went back to the first page and started in again. Looking and wondering what I had missed. The third time through it finally hit me. What about the firemen and first responders in Stanstead County? I saw Stanstead with Fire Chief Goodsell. But where is our Fire Chief Brian Wharry in Stanstead County? Looking back through the section, I believe that you have mentioned every Fire Station in southern Quebec except for Stanstead County.

I don't know who was in charge of submitting information to the Record or who did the research on the Fire Departments but I was very disappointed that the Fire department in Stanstead County did not receive a worthy mention. Having called the Fire Department this winter when my smoke detectors went off around five thirty in the morning, I can tell you first hand that those first responders and firefighters are worthy of every bit respect and value and I for one thank them very much for their service.

Sincerely,
Elaine Laraway

Dear Editor;

Marcus Tabachnick's plea for the infusion of new blood for the upcoming Fall 2018 school board elections (School Board Elections-Community Engagement, April 18) fails to recognize a hard truth: English school boards control little.

Voter engagement in the last round of school board elections barely hit double digits and approximately half of all commissioner positions, along with several chair openings, were filled by acclimation. This lack of interest for school boards does not reflect on the overall engagement of citizens; rather, it underscores the understanding by the electorate that they are voting for hollow organizations that accomplish little and are nothing more than handmaidens of the Quebec Ministry of Education.

Every meaningful educational element that impacts the classroom is determined and dictated from Quebec City. For example, the courses of study, classroom time per subject, approved instructional resources, evaluation regimes, and even the overall school calendar descend from "on high" and do not in any way respect or reflect local community needs and/or aspirations.

The most recent imposition of a deeply flawed history program focusing on Quebec's quest for independence, notwithstanding widespread community condemnation, was meekly and immediately imposed upon our secondary III and IV students. All English school boards abrogated whatever trust they had acquired by refusing to defend Anglophone histories and cultures. This is simply the latest situation where school boards have clearly demonstrated their true nature: cry democracy, promise much, but deliver nothing!

Unfortunately, school boards will be maintained as artificial vessels as the Ministry must have an intermediate administrative layer so as to directly control community schools without overtly appearing to do so. However, Anglophone citizens have long recognized that these sham structures do not impact meaningful educational elements but are simply ethereal organizations filled with smoke and mirrors!

Jon Bradley
Beaconsfield,

Dear Editor;

As a volunteer / participant by asking questions and making comments at Council of Commissioners' meetings for the past twenty years, permit me to respond to The Record letter published , on April 18, by school-board businessman Marcus Tabachnick: "School Board Elections - Community Engagement."

There is no one in Quebec who is more knowledgeable about the English public education system than Mr. Tabachnick. For several years he was both chairman of the Lester B. Pearson School Board and president of the Quebec English School Boards Association (QESBA).

Moreover, consider as QESBA's Executive Director, for about three years, when it was announced on April 21, 2017 that he was leaving the Association he founded, he was praised and criticized.

He was praised by the QESBA and school board commissioners for leading the way in taking down school board reform Bill 86, which called for the scrapping of school board elections in favour of giving schools greater decision-making power. He was criticized for refusing, in writing, to divulge the financial records of the QESBA.

There is no evidence anywhere that his tenure at the QESBA was of any value to our English-speaking students nor the community.

Think about the lack of English textbooks for students writing matriculation exams, and the access to English schools matter.

Despite Tabachnick's focus on school boards, the most urgent issue facing English education today is declining enrollment.

It is the school not the school board that is central to the vitality of the community.

Mr. Tabachnick is fully justified in writing: "Some of the English school boards have suffered through several years of political unrest, turmoil internally, disruptive squabbles with employees , the public and the media. There seems to be a lack of clear, coherent leadership."

The English community needs to consider these facts:

Presently, as the QESBA is developing a 'Strategic Plan' to justify its existence, there are three Quebec political parties calling for the ditching / revamping of the anachronistic elected public school system: Conservative, Green and the Coalition Avenir Quebec, led by former Education Minister François Legault.

The Quebec Liberal Party, which prides itself on its ethics policy should take a close look at the QESBA, which has no ethics policy.

Then, seriously reconsider the future of the elected school board system by adopting something similar to the CAQ education platform or with some tweaking, its original Liberal Bill 86.

Let us try to hold these two images together, both the grand and the small, and let us be filled with gratitude.

ONE COLUMN, FOUR VOICES

Opening to the Spirit

Today's Word: Earth

By Revs Mead Baldwin, W. Lynn Dillabough, Lee Ann Hogle, and Carole Martignacco

1) This coming Sunday is Earth Day. We will continue our recent tradition of ringing the church bell, this year 400 times, as both a celebration of the earth and a call to action. I never have a problem getting volunteers to help. Coincidentally on Sunday we will also celebrate the birth of a child in a baptism ceremony. I was holding the little baby last night while visiting the parents to plan the service, and this made me think: What kind of planet are we leaving to our children?

I have fond memories of growing up in the country, splashing in brooks, walking barefoot, making tree houses, building a raft for our pond, and spending most of the summer outdoors enjoying nature. My skin got a bit red at first, but then I tanned quickly and never had to worry about sunscreen. I could drink water from the brook behind the house and eat carrots from the garden and strawberries from the field. I certainly never worried if there would a healthy planet for my grandchildren. Yet here in 2018 we face global warming, thousands of people across the land have no drinkable water, oceans are rising and polar ice is melting. Our plastic garbage is filling up landfills and polluting the ocean.

"Called by earth and sky, promise of hope held high, this is our sacred living trust, treasure of life sanctified, called by earth and sky". We will be singing these words in our service on Sunday. The lyrics go on to talk about how precious the earth, water and sky are. We have been given a beautiful earth to live on and care for. Let's all do our part so that every new baby can laugh and play and enjoy our precious plant long into the future.

2) Two images come to mind. One is our beautiful blue earth from a distance. The white clouds swirl around the perfect roundness of ocean and land. It is at once majestic and humbling. We are so beautiful from a distance. The second image is a bit of earth in the hand. A clump of dark soil, cool and moist, trickles back to the ground from between my fingers. Both of these are earth.

Earth is our home and earth is what gives us life. All of our food comes from the earth. Gardeners know all about the feel of soil in their hands. There is little that comes close to the satisfaction of harvesting food that you have grown – picking a tomato warmed by the sun or gathering lettuce that is wet with rain.

Let us try to hold these two images together, both the grand and the small, and let us be filled with gratitude.

3) As Earth Day approaches it seems fitting to reflect on our changing attitude to this planet we inhabit. As I was growing up we never questioned the quality of our air or water or how much garbage we generated. It was common practice to drop our candy wrappers, cigarette butts and used gum on the street or out the travelling car window. We embraced wholeheartedly all the convenience of "use once and throw it away" products. It seemed the earth could supply us with an unending quantity of natural resources we could use any way we pleased. The sustainability of our planet was taken for granted. Our ignorance was bliss!

Earth itself is teaching us the error of our ways. The same science lauded for showing us how to extract and refine earth's resources is also telling us we have gone too far. We have crossed the point at which earth can rejuvenate itself at a pace that sustains life as we know it. It's time to make hard choices. Jobs, the economy, our ability to pay for social services we expect are reasons used to keep doing what we've done for so long – produce, sell and consume as much as we possibly can.

Economic costs of our current system are not the only factors to consider. How do we evaluate the moral costs to a society so short-sighted it is willing to sacrifice future generations' well-being for the short term convenience of cheap oil, plastic and a new mobile phone every three years? What will our great grandchildren say about us when environmentally induced sterility is commonplace and our rivers and lakes can no longer be enjoyed by swimmers, fishermen or kayakers?

Currently no big money interests will benefit from the drastic changes needed to make human life on this planet sustainable, only the voiceless interests of future generations. "If we could still claim ignorance of the damage we have done, we could not be held to account. Now that our eyes have been opened, we must all carry the blame for our inaction." (John 9: 41, paraphrased) We are past the time individual recycling will turn the tide. Only by raising our voices against economic interests that keep us locked into current patterns can we hope to turn this situation around. This coming Sunday consider how you might contribute to being part of the solution.

4) A mere decades ago humanity first stepped off the surface to view from space this spinning blue marble we call home. We've only begun to realize we do not live on the earth but within it. At birth we emerged, individual cells in a living organism, as physicist James Lovelock called it, in a body called earth that functions as a whole. We are like fleas, Lovelock said in his 1970s film The Gaia Hyposesis, who jumped off the elephant's back to view it from a new perspective and ask, "Could it be that the elephant is a living, breathing being?" Our notion of earth and the relatedness of everything continues to change.

Sallie McFague called the earth God's body. "Ground of our being" was Tillich's name for the holy. Only within the context of earth do we experience the divine creative energy that brought forth the universe. Every insect and plant, every rock and mineral, drop of water and breath of air and all living beings is infused with it. Including us, who struggle to admit it and respect each other and the rest of the earth community. We've only begun to see the earth itself as holy, deserving of our infinite gratitude and reverence.

Dreamers coming awake now, however slowly, we wake from a deep and beautiful delusion that dates back to the very beginning, when first we began to question our place and purpose. So many origin myths assigned humans a position at the top of the pyramid of beings and claimed for us dominion over all below. Not so, we now know. If we continue to trash the planet, we may ourselves end up at the bottom of the heap. We're beginning to grasp the harm we've done, to the whole earth community and ourselves within its context.

Everyday should be Earth Day. The words of a haunting native chant ring through my ears as a prayer: "Every part of the earth be to my people holy." Repeat, repeat, repeat. May it be so!

One word, four voices - now it's your turn: What comes to your mind when you hear the word "Earth"?

Ottawa and Quebec reach agreements to ease tensions over asylum seekers

The Canadian Press

Rising tensions between Quebec and the federal government were eased Wednesday night after new agreements were struck aimed at helping the province deal with an ongoing surge in asylum seekers crossing the Canada-U.S. border.

Following a meeting in Ottawa of the ad hoc intergovernmental task force on irregular migration, politicians emerged with new measures to address the growing pressures in Quebec.

A working group was struck to look at the costs Quebec says it has borne as a result of a spike in irregular migration that began last summer and is expected to surge again this summer.

A triage system will also be set up to ask asylum seekers arriving in Quebec where in Canada they ultimately hope to stay.

Quebec Immigration Minister David Heurtel said he was pleased to hear Ottawa finally taking some action on the concerns he has been raising and also recognizing that his province has shouldered a significant burden due to irregular migration.

Transport Minister Marc Garneau, who chairs the task force, said he was also able to offer Quebec assurances that $74 million has been earmarked to reduce extensive backlogs that now exist for migrants to have their refugee claims processed.

Magog, Orford Music reach collaboration deal

Record Staff

The City of Magog has entered into a three-year agreement with Orford Musique in which the City will help sponsor musical performances. This year, the City is sponsoring the opening performance of the organization's summer Music Festival by the internationally renowned French-Canadian chamber orchestra Les Violons du Roy, as well as the show at Saint-Patrice Church in Magog, featuring part of the annual "Orford on the Road" Tour. This second performance will take place as part of the third edition of the City's Family Day.

"The proximity of a high quality music school like Orford Musique is a privilege," said Magog Mayor Vicki-May Hamm. "For this reason, we are making a point of supporting it. The City is putting a lot of effort into making culture accessible to its citizens, young and old, and developing a varied cultural offering with its partners that is likely to please the greatest number of people. Orford Musique's classical programming is an important asset that allows the Memphrémagog region to shine. Many musicians come to perfect their art with teachers whose reputation is well established. It is an an honor for our region! "

Hamm added that Family Day, which introduces children to music through free activities in a fun atmosphere, is one of the things that is most important to her. She also took the opportunity to encourage Magog residents to follow the activities of the Orford Festival closely and to welcome the young virtuosos who will be staying in Orford during the summer period.

By Ross Marowits
THE CANDIAN PRESS

Gov. Gen. Julie Payette says a Southwest Airlines pilot who landed her plane safely after a mid-air engine mishap is rightfully being called a hero.

Payette told aviation officials Thursday that Capt. Tammie Jo Shults showed nerves of steel as she deployed years of training as a U.S. Navy fighter pilot to avoid greater injury.

One person was killed and seven others were injured after the twin-engine Boeing 737 blew an engine at 30,000 feet Tuesday and got hit by shrapnel that smashed a window.

Media reports following the incident have drawn attention to the fact that Shults is a woman pilot, in an industry still heavily dominated by men.

But Payette asked why anyone would be surprised that a woman who is extraordinarily well-trained could excel in the face of danger.

Some industry observers say Shults will become a role model for women and prompt more to consider careers in aviation.

Alexandre de Juniac, director general of the International Air Transport Association, said at a Montreal luncheon that more needs to be done to address the severe underrepresentation of women in the industry.

The airline association is taking a small step in a few weeks with the appointment of its first female board member.

IATA says the percentage of female aviation executives lags other industries. Just three per cent of aviation CEOs were women last year, compared with 12 per cent in other sectors.

By contrast, about one-third of human resources directors are women, compared with 23 per cent in other industries.

Men dominate senior aviation executive roles around the world but women have a larger share of positions _ about 15 per cent _ in Europe and North America.

Old Dominion won the award April 15

COUNTRY CONNECTION

JESSIE PELLETIER AULIS

Champlain Valley Fair didn't know back in January, when they announced the first show in their lineup, that they would be presenting the Academy of Country Music Awards Vocal Group of the Year, Old Dominion.

Old Dominion won the ACM Vocal Group of the Year Award, competing with star artists including Lady Antebellum and Little Big Town, as well as new bands Midland and Lanco at the ACM Awards 53rd Ceremonies held on April 15, 2018.

The group will be performing on the Coca-Cola Grandstand, kicking off the fair on August 24 at 7 p.m. with country music singer Michael Ray as the opening act. This came as great news for the fair.

Old Dominion is a five-member country music band formed in Nashville, Tennessee. The band consists of Matthew Ramsey (lead vocals), Trevor Rosen (guitar, keyboards), Whit Sellers (drums), Geoff Sprung (bass guitar), and Brad Tursi (guitar).

Their sound is contemporary country with rock instrumentation, and has pop overtones. Their 2017 album Happy Endings, which was also nominated for ACM Album of the Year, yielded two No. 1 singles with 'No Such Thing as a Broken Heart' and 'Written in the Sand.' Their new single, 'Hotel Key,' currently sits at No. 45 on the Billboard Country Airplay chart and rising.

Old Dominion's members Ramsey and Rosen are behind many of the songs you hear in country music today. During the past 10 years of writing, a number of their songs have been recorded and released by artists including The Band Perry, Keith Urban, Luke Bryan, Dierks Bentley, Chris Young, and Craig Morgan.

At one point the Nashville-based group decided to personally deliver their music to the people. They signed a record deal with RCA Nashville in late February 2015. The band also opened for Kenny Chesney in his Big Revival Tour.

The band has so far released two full-length albums and two EPs. They released their self-titled EP in 2014, followed in the next year by their debut studio album, Meat and Candy on RCA Records Nashville.

Meat and Candy included the singles 'Break Up with Him,' 'Snapback,' and 'Song for Another Time.' Their second album, Happy Endings, was released in 2017. The band chose the name Old Dominion in 2007. Old Dominion was selected because it is a nickname for the state of Virginia, and four members of the group have links to Virginia.

Ramsey and Sellers are both originally from the Roanoke region of Virginia, and played on drumlines for their respective, rival high schools, James River High School and Lord Botetourt High School.

After high school, Ramsey went to Virginia Commonwealth University and moved to Nashville after graduation to become a songwriter. He was introduced to Rosen in 2003 and formed a songwriting partnership for some years while working as a solo artist. Sellers went to James Madison University in Virginia where he met Sprung and Tursi. Sellers and Sprung also ended up in Nashville where they joined forces with Ramsey and formed Old Dominion. Tursi, who was once a member of the rock band Army of Me, joined the band in 2012.

Members of the band have writing credits on many songs recorded by other artists: Brad Tursi has written Luke Bryan's 'Light It Up,' Cole Swindell's 'Remember Boys,' and 'Up,' as well as Randy Houser's 'Whiskeysippi,' Tyler Farr's 'A Guy Walks Into a Bar,' and William Michael Morgan's 'I Met A Girl,' just to name a few.

The group's original purpose was to provide a showcase for the songs that its various members were creating. Tables have turned and now they are a band of accomplished songwriters and extremely talented instrumentalist, who chose to perform their own material.

Old Dominion has unapologetically been marching to its own creative beat for a while now. The guys can really rock a stage with their high-energy performance and their years of experience, both in the studio and on the road. It will be showcased on the stage of The Champlain Valley Fair.

Sainte Marie urges empathy on road to reconciliation

The Canadian Press

Indigenous rights activist Buffy Sainte-Marie says all Canadians — Indigenous and not — must show empathy and patience as they grapple with a legacy of racism she has been fighting much of her life.

The award-winning singer-songwriter told an audience in Halifax that the path to reconciliation between the country's Aboriginal and non-indigenous population is through teaching others about injustice in a compassionate and non-combative way.

Saint-Marie issued the appeal before being presented with an honorary doctorate degree from Dalhousie University on Tuesday.

The singer and educator says it is the job of indigenous people "to teach, not to scold" others about Canada's painful history of Aboriginal relations.

Sainte-Marie told the crowd that indigenous people need to understand that much of "settler racism has to do with not knowing," something she suggested is changing with a growing awareness of Aboriginal issues.

Sainte-Marie, who was born on the Piapot Plains Cree First Nation reserve in Saskatchewan, gained fame for her folk music in the 1960s that addressed issues plaguing indigenous people including lack of access to education, civil rights, and social genocide.

Jann Arden quoted in new James Comey book

By Victoria Ahearn
THE CANADIAN PRESS

Canadian singer Jann Arden has always had a realistic outlook on death.

Growing up in Springbank, Alta., she saw farm animals die and had frank discussions about such matters with her parents, who didn't view death as a taboo topic.

"When my parents started getting sick and we were just little kids, my mom used to say, 'Well, you're going to die someday, so you better get living,"' the eight-time Juno Award-winning artist recalled in an interview.

Arden has expressed such a viewpoint in interviews in the past but didn't realize what kind of an impact it might have until this week, when she was surprised to see her words of wisdom in the highly anticipated new book by former FBI Director James Comey.

The quote attributed to Arden — "To not think of dying, is to not think of living" — kicks off the book's first chapter, titled "The Life."

"It's really fascinating. I'm very touched by it and I think it's really cool," Arden told The Canadian Press by phone Tuesday, the day the book hit shelves.

"I know how important words are to me and I'm glad that it resonated with him. I think he's in a precarious position and has taken a lot of blows the last year or so, and I hope he's part of the equation that brings down this guy — that brings some light to this presidency."

Arden said she's seen the quote attributed to her a couple of times in other circumstances. She thinks it came from an interview she did "many years ago," perhaps from a health and wellness magazine.

"I always find that people gravitate towards that quote," said the singer-songwriter, who's known for hits including "I Would Die For You" and "Insensitive."

"I read about these guys at a university in the States that had used that quote as well and I wonder if (Comey) took it from a speech that they had given and attributed to me. I'm not sure. Who knows. We'll have to ask him someday, huh?"

Not that Arden has plans to run into Comey any time soon.

She said she doesn't know him and had no idea she was on his radar.

"I'm pretty sure he has no idea that I'm even a musician," said the always quick-witted Arden, who's written three books, had various TV stints and produced two documentaries.

Arden first learned of the quote in the Comey book, "A Higher Loyalty: Truth, Lies & Leadership," on Twitter on Monday night. She then downloaded the book onto her tablet and planned to read it on a plane to Toronto on Wednesday.

"I had a really good chuckle last night, went to bed with a smile on my face," Arden said.

As for the quote itself, Arden sticks by it.

"You have to just think about it..."

Are your eyes 'performance ready'? It's never too late to have an eye exam.

Clear vision allows athletes to stay in the game longer

A RUNNER'S MIND

CHRISTINE BLANCHETTE

Improving body and mind through working out takes dedication and time. It takes commitment to get your self in gear, speaking rhetorically and literally. The running boom has spawned a multi-billion dollar shoe industry, whose experts will help you achieve your goals in comfort. Our feet are taken care of but what about our eyes? This is what Alcon DAILIES TOTAL1® contact lenses can do for your vision. Having your eyes feeling uncomfortable during a workout will steal your focus and drain your energy. With high quality contacts lenses you can concentrate on the task at hand. Conversely, your focus at work or school will diminish if your eyes become dry from wearing contacts longer than normal, with no solution in sight (pun intended).

From a sunset walk along the beach, to having coffee with friends, to getting away for the weekend, there is much in life we take for granted. You end up foregoing it all if you are battling a constant irritation of your eyes. You may learn to cope, however, without regular eye exams which detect the onset of disease, as well as making you aware of the best eye care available, your eye health could be at risk.

There is a solution for the every-day contact wearer. ALCON®DAILIES® are daily disposable lenses offering sharper vision. They are the world's first water gradient contact lens, meaning they're designed to offer more comfort and breathability for longer. They provide more than three hours of additional comfortable wear time per day, compared to their regular lenses.

Taking control of your vision will improve your confidence in everything you do. You will never have to quit a long run because a lens had become uncomfortable. Athletes will apply the latest information on supplements, diet and training methods to give themselves an edge. It's just as important to get proper vision care, which could be a difference maker.

Are your eyes 'performance ready'? It's never too late to have an eye exam. It is Vision Health month in May, which is a national campaign to bring awareness to Canadians to get regular eye check ups. According to the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, (CNIB) seventy-five per cent of vision loss can be prevented or treated. Preventive measures and early detection of eye disease significantly lowers your risk of vision loss. Keep your eyes healthy by getting a regular eye exam, eating healthy and exercising. You can protect your eyes from ultra violet damage by wearing sun glasses at work or at play.

Learn about some eye conditions such as presbyopia, which is a common eye condition that often occurs around age 40 due to a gradual loss of the eye's ability to focus on close objects, affecting nearly 1.7 billion people worldwide – a number expected to increase to 2.1 billion in the next five years.

Alcon Multifocal lenses can treat presbyopia. There will be no squinting to read the menu or blurred vision while looking at your fitness gadget. Accepting less than perfect vision is no longer necessary with the advanced eye care that is available.

Seeing the world up close and personal is now possible. Please visit your eye care practitioner for further information.

Canada's Christine Girard confirmed Olympic weightlifting champion by IOC

By Donna Spencer
THE CANADIAN PRESS

Christine Girard is reconnecting with the version of herself who lifted twice her body weight over her head at the 2012 Olympic Games in London.

The businesswoman, weightlifting coach and mother of three children will be crowned Olympic champion years later.

The women ahead of her stripped of gold and silver months ago for doping violations, the International Olympic Committee has confirmed the medal redistribution of the women's 63-kilogram class and Girard's promotion from bronze to gold.

"It feels like it's been so long," Girard told The Canadian Press on Thursday. "I look at videos and pictures that pop up on my Facebook and it really feels like it was another life."

Girard will receive not only her gold medal from 2012, but also a belated bronze from the 2008 Olympics in Beijing, at a ceremony to be organized by the Canadian Olympic Committee at a later date.

"Yes, it's overdue, but the message of my medals is now so much stronger," she said. "I want that moment to be not just for me. I want it for us. It's a huge win for our country and for clean sport."

Girard is Canada's first Olympic champion in weightlifting and the first Canadian to win a pair of medals in the sport.

"She is a weightlifting trailblazer in so many ways and we are extremely proud of her," COC president Tricia Smith said in a statement.

"Christine has always lived the values of sport and of competing clean. We are so pleased to see her finally receive the Olympic gold medal which she has so rightfully earned."

Girard, 33, was born in Elliot Lake, Ont., but grew up in Rouyn-Noranda, Que.

She and husband Walter Bailey moved to White Rock, B.C., in 2009. They co-founded the Kilophile Weightlifting Club in Surrey, B.C., in 2012.

Girard gave birth to their third child _ a son _ in March. The family is moving to Aylmer, Que., in June for Bailey's job in Ottawa with the RCMP.

The medals _ when Girard gets them _ will feel like a bridge back to the woman who grimaced with determination as she hoisted 133 kilograms off the mat at the ExCel exhibition centre in London.

"It does feel a bit funny to know that Christina that was in another life will actually get the medals too," Girard said.

More than 1,500 samples from Beijing and London were re-tested in 2016.

A total of 65 sanctions involving 40 medals were imposed from the Beijing Games, and 45 sanctions impacted 20 medals in London, according to the IOC.

Olympic weightlifting medals are determined by the sum of each lifter's best result in the snatch and the clean and jerk, with three attempts allowed in each.

Girard's winning total was 236 kilograms. Kazakhstan's Maiya Maneza and Russia's Svetlana Tzarukaeva were disqualified for testing positive for steroids, according to the IOC.

Girard was also bumped up to bronze in 2008 when silver medallist Irina Nekrassova of Kazakhstan also failed a re-test.

Girard can't help but wonder 'what if?'

"My years between 2008 and 2012 were the hardest years of my life," she said. "I was training in a (garage) that was barely heated. I had so many things getting in the way of my medal and my dream of being on the podium.

"If I had come back with a bronze medal in 2008, I think I would have had a lot more support and a lot more financial support that would have definitely changed those four years of my life.

"That being said, those four years allowed me to get on the podium and made the person I am now. I have no regrets, but definitely my life would have been different in a lot of ways."

Girard also hopes her gold and bronze will help rehabilitate her sport's image. Bulgaria and Russia were banned from weightlifting at the 2016 Olympic Games for doping offences.

"In my sport, there's a lot of clean countries," Girard said. "I think we know who we are and I had a message from Australia saying 'Hey, you have no idea what this means for us.'

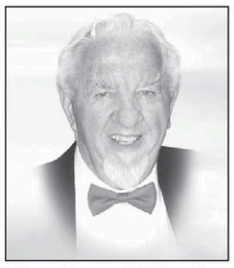

"I think it's really meaningful to a lot of countries, not just for ours, within our sport. I hope that will help clean the name of my sport."

Used to the lifestyle

Dear Annie

FRIDAY, APRIL 20, 2018

Dear Annie: I'm not sure whether there is any advice you can give me, but here goes. I am a 23-year-old gay man. I have been living with my 56-year-old boyfriend, "Bob," for the past four years. I love Bob but am no longer in love with him. I would like to move out but don't make very much money and can't afford it. I can't move back with either parent. My brother (who is in a real mess) lives with my mom, and my dad pretty much disowned me when I started seeing Bob. I've grown accustomed to the lifestyle I have with Bob. We go out to dinner often and on many exotic cruises and vacations. I'm not ready to give those up. As I said, I love Bob but am not super happy. What should I do? — Spoiled

Dear Spoiled: It's not fair to continue using this man as a meal ticket (and plane ticket and cruise ticket). Everyone deserves to be with someone who really wants to be with him, and you're denying Bob that opportunity. Breakups are rarely convenient, but people find ways to survive. See whether you can stay with a friend for a few weeks while you set aside enough money for renting your own room. You're 23 years old; you should be working toward financial independence, not setting yourself up for a lifetime of relying on others. Show respect for yourself, for Bob and for the good times you shared by ending things, pronto.

Dear Annie: I disagree with your advice to "Stuck in Santa Fe." You said she and her boyfriend should put their plans on hold while they await news of an uncertain job transfer, which may come many months down the road.

The best advice anyone ever gave me as a young man was to assume that nothing will ever change. This is not to say you should ignore the future or never plan for change. It simply means you should not put your life on hold waiting for things that may never happen.

That Santa Fe couple should live in the present, look for that better apartment and continue planning their life together now. But at the same time, they should keep looking for that next opportunity and be prepared to manage that change when it actually arrives.

If they follow my advice and the boyfriend gets the job of his dreams, they may have to lose one month's worth of rent. But even if that happens, they will at least have been in a better apartment and building their lives. And who knows? An even better opportunity may yet take them in another direction. So my advice: Always have plans for the future and work toward them, but live your life in the present. — Fatherly Advice

Dear Fatherly Advice: I hear you. When patience becomes indolence, it's no longer a virtue. To plan for the future but live in the present is excellent advice, so I'm glad to be printing your letter.

Dear Annie: I am writing to you looking for help with substance abuse. I would like to find a natural way of releasing myself totally from this disease, as well as from crushing grief I'm experiencing from loss.

I recently lost my kids' father. I have taken it really hard, to the point that I lost myself. A part of me has so many regrets from all the wrong I did in my relationship because of my substance abuse. He thought I was against him, and I completely wasn't. I was stuck in an addiction. I spoke negatively of him to some mutual friends, but that was because of my addiction, my selfishness and my need for instant gratification and validation. I regret that.

Since he passed away, I've truly lost the ability to look forward most days. My heart is so heavy with the pain I caused him with my substance abuse, lies and unfaithfulness.

I would really appreciate it if you could refer me to someone for help in dealing with grief and finding a way to mend the past and accept that he's dead and in a better place so I can move on and hopefully have a future. I don't want to see myself sitting in this same place next year. I want to see myself reaching up and building my self-esteem, self-confidence, self-worth. I want to actually believe that I am somebody and deserve to find a better place in society and, more importantly, a better place within myself. — Lost

Dear Lost: Hitting rock bottom is painful. But it's also powerful. As cliched as it sounds, it's true: There's nowhere to go but up.

I strongly encourage you to see a therapist. If that's not feasible for you at this point, please consider attending a 12-step program, such as Alcoholics Anonymous or Narcotics Anonymous, where you might find peace in surrender and strength in solidarity. You can also call the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration's 24/7 National Helpline, at 800-662-4357, for referral to resources and treatment available in your state.

I'm so sorry for your loss.

Dear Annie: You didn't give any specifics to "Crowded Canal," the woman who wasn't sure how to get friends to stop using her house essentially like a free vacation rental. I totally understand "Crowded Canal's" difficulty with saying a simple "no." Perhaps she could tell her self-inviters: "We are worn-out from having so much company lately. It seems everyone is asking to visit, and I'm having trouble keeping up with all the cooking and cleaning. I'd be happy to meet you out for dinner if you come to town, because I would love to see you and could use a meal out for a change." Maybe they'd get the hint and see themselves in the mirror. — Robin

Dear Robin: In an ideal world, one shouldn't feel compelled to provide explanations for having boundaries. There's really nothing wrong with simply saying "no." But we don't live in an ideal world, and the line you suggested is a good compromise.

The Hatley-Stanstead W.I. met on April 5th at the Stanstead Manoir for their monthly meeting. Jackie Tilton and Barbara Hewitt were hostess.

Eleven member and one guest were in attendance. Jackie was thanked for making arrangements to hold the meeting at the Manoir and to Barbara for co-hosting. We were happy to have Gertrude Ketchum, a residence of the Manoir and a long-time member of the Hatley-Stanstead W.I with us.

Barbara Hewitt, President, called the meeting to order and all recited the "Mary Stewart Collect". The motto of the month is: "The difference between a flower and a weed is your judgement." Roll Call was to bring in our "March Garden" to be judged and cookies for the cookies bags. During roll call members were asked to name their favourite weed. Six birthdays were acknowledged.

Elaine Stone presented the secretary report and Phyllis Dustin presented the treasurer's report.

Thank yous have been received from Gertrude Ketchum, Debbie Smith, Breakfast Program at ACES, CSVM Clinic Ayer's Cliff, Lennoxville Women's Center, Foundation Vitae (Argyle), Massawippi Grace Village, Memphremagog Hospital Foundation, Dyanne Saanum, Janet McLellan and Elvera Patterson.

Barbara reported that the QWI Convention will be held in Ste Anne de Bellevue on May 25th.

Cookie bags were filled with homemade cookies to be given out to individuals in the community. People who received the cookies also enjoyed their visit from the W.I. members. While members were preparing the cookie bags the agriculture convenors – Phyllis Dustin and Scotty Miller were busy judging our "March Gardens" Elaine Stone was given the 1st prize ribbon and Jackie Tilton the 2nd. Velma Eryou won the consolation prize.

An enjoyable afternoon was had by all and we look forward to meeting at Rev. Doreen Moffat's on May 3rd for the May meeting.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Look at new and old options and consider how each will serve you best. Dictate what you want to see happen to avoid any misunderstanding. Be precise and direct.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Emotions will surface. Try not to get into a disagreement with a co-worker or someone who could hurt your reputation. Use caution when dealing with an unpredictable person.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You'll face emotional manipulation if you decide not to accommodate someone pestering you for something. Temptation will be difficult to walk away from. Avoid indulgent behavior.

When you say nine, do not think 10

By Phillip Alder

H.L. Mencken said, "The cynics are right nine times out of 10."

When you are in the world's most common contract, three no-trump, you are trying to win nine tricks. Hoping for 10 instead is not a good idea when the necessary play puts your contract in jeopardy. (Yes, if you are playing in a duplicate pairs event, and the chance for an overtrick is good, you should go for it. In that scoring system, overtricks can be very valuable.)

In today's deal, South should be happy with nine tricks. What ought he to do after West leads the heart nine?

Not many pairs would end in three no-trump, but five of either minor ought to fail. In this auction, South ignored his diamond suit. Then, when North showed that suit, South temporized with three hearts, suggesting that he needed some help in that suit for no-trump. North, with good hearts and the spade void, bid three no-trump; and South was happy to pass.

Declarer began with six top tricks: two spades, three hearts and one club. There were four more winners available in clubs, but communications were iffy. If South had immediately played the club ace and another club, West would have taken that trick and led another heart to strand declarer in the dummy and leave him with only eight tricks.

So, South carefully cashed the spade ace first, getting his ninth trick in the bank. Then he played the ace and another club. But if he had greedily cashed both top spades, he would have lost one club, two diamonds and three spades.

Your Birthday

SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 2018

Making travel plans, visiting distant relatives or arranging to reunite with people from your past will make for an exciting year filled with knowledge, intrigue and closure. Opportunities are abundant if you make plans and follow through with enthusiasm. Love, romance and personal physical alterations are favored.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Learn all there is to know before you make a decision. Understand what is expected of you and be sure to let others know what you want in return.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Joint ventures should be handled with caution. You are likely to end up with more responsibility than you anticipated. Speak up and let your position and your demands be known.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A creative idea should be looked at closely. Network with people who could have an interest in something you want to pursue. Romance is in the stars.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Take care of personal paperwork. If you leave your responsibilities up to someone else, you are likely to be disappointed with the outcome. Change begins within.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Participate in events that are geared toward something you enjoy and do well. Being given the opportunity to show off will attract compliments as well as a romantic gesture.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) — Make alterations to your living space that will help lower your overhead or add to your comfort. Get approval from anyone affected by your planned changes before you begin.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) — Make physical changes that will help build your confidence and strength. Good health and habits will make a difference to how well you do. Romance is encouraged.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) — Look over personal papers, agreements and settlements. You'll discover something you have overlooked in the past. Tie up loose ends. Avoid getting involved in a joint money venture.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Plan to spend more time with the people you love. Don't let an outsider's wants disrupt your plans. Stick close to home and enjoy what you've worked so hard to achieve.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) — Consider how you earn your living and whether it is satisfying, worth it financially or emotionally draining. A different approach or mindset will help you overcome any pitfalls.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) — Not everyone will agree with what you want to do, but it's you who needs to be satisfied. If you do your own thing, you'll eventually overcome any adversity you face.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Moodiness will not go over well. Put your differences aside and get along with the people you need in your corner to get things done. Diplomacy, patience and compromise will be necessary.

SUNDAY, APRIL 22, 2018

Use your skills, expertise and knowledge wisely. Someone with more experience or an elder who trusts you with his or her affairs will test your ability to do a good job. Focus on what's important to you and do your best to make your home a place of comfort.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Put a little elbow grease into fixing up your place and preparing for activities you want to host. A family gathering will bring greater insight into how loved ones are doing.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Emotions will turn out to be costly if you act impatiently when it comes to legal or financial matters. Don't make decisions about your health, wealth or legal matters without doing the proper research.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Attend a cultural event or visit a destination that offers something unique. Love and romance are on the rise and will improve your life. Enjoy connecting with an old friend or crush.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Sit tight, regardless of what others do. The changes going on around you aren't likely to end up as well as someone suggests. Don't get involved in a risky venture.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Don't follow the crowd or jump into a joint venture that someone hypes. A temperate approach to whatever you pursue will save you from loss and disappointment.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) — Communicate with someone you know you can count on for support. Discussing your ideas and plans will help you iron out any problem areas before you begin.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) — Don't get involved in something without knowing the risks. Use your intelligence to outsmart anyone trying to separate you from your cash. Trust in yourself.
