ORFORD

After a few years of high-profile jobs, including a stint as artistic director of the prestigious Vienna Boys Choir, renowned choral conductor Agnès Grossman answered a call to return to the Orford Arts Center this season.

Born in Vienna in 1946, Grossman began piano lessons with her world-famous father Ferdinand Grossmann, who headed the Vienna Boys Choir and was an acclaimed voice teacher in Austria and Japan.

The elder Grossmann was pleased his daughter had inherited his perfect pitch, but he was reluctant to allow her to become a child prodigy. His older stepsister had been a musical genius but under such enormous pressure lost all interest in music, Grossmann explained.

His stepmother would not allow her father to study music, she said, but to compensate he drew a keyboard on his windowsill and managed to practice on the silent instrument as he had such an excellent ear. "Sometimes he also sneaked into churches to play the organ."

Grossman said her father had a terrible childhood and did not want his children to have such a hard life. She described her own childhood, growing up in the countryside outside Vienna, as fantastic.

At the age of nine, Grossman's music teacher insisted on speaking to her parents and explained that she could no longer take responsibility for teaching Grossman. She would have to attend the music academy.

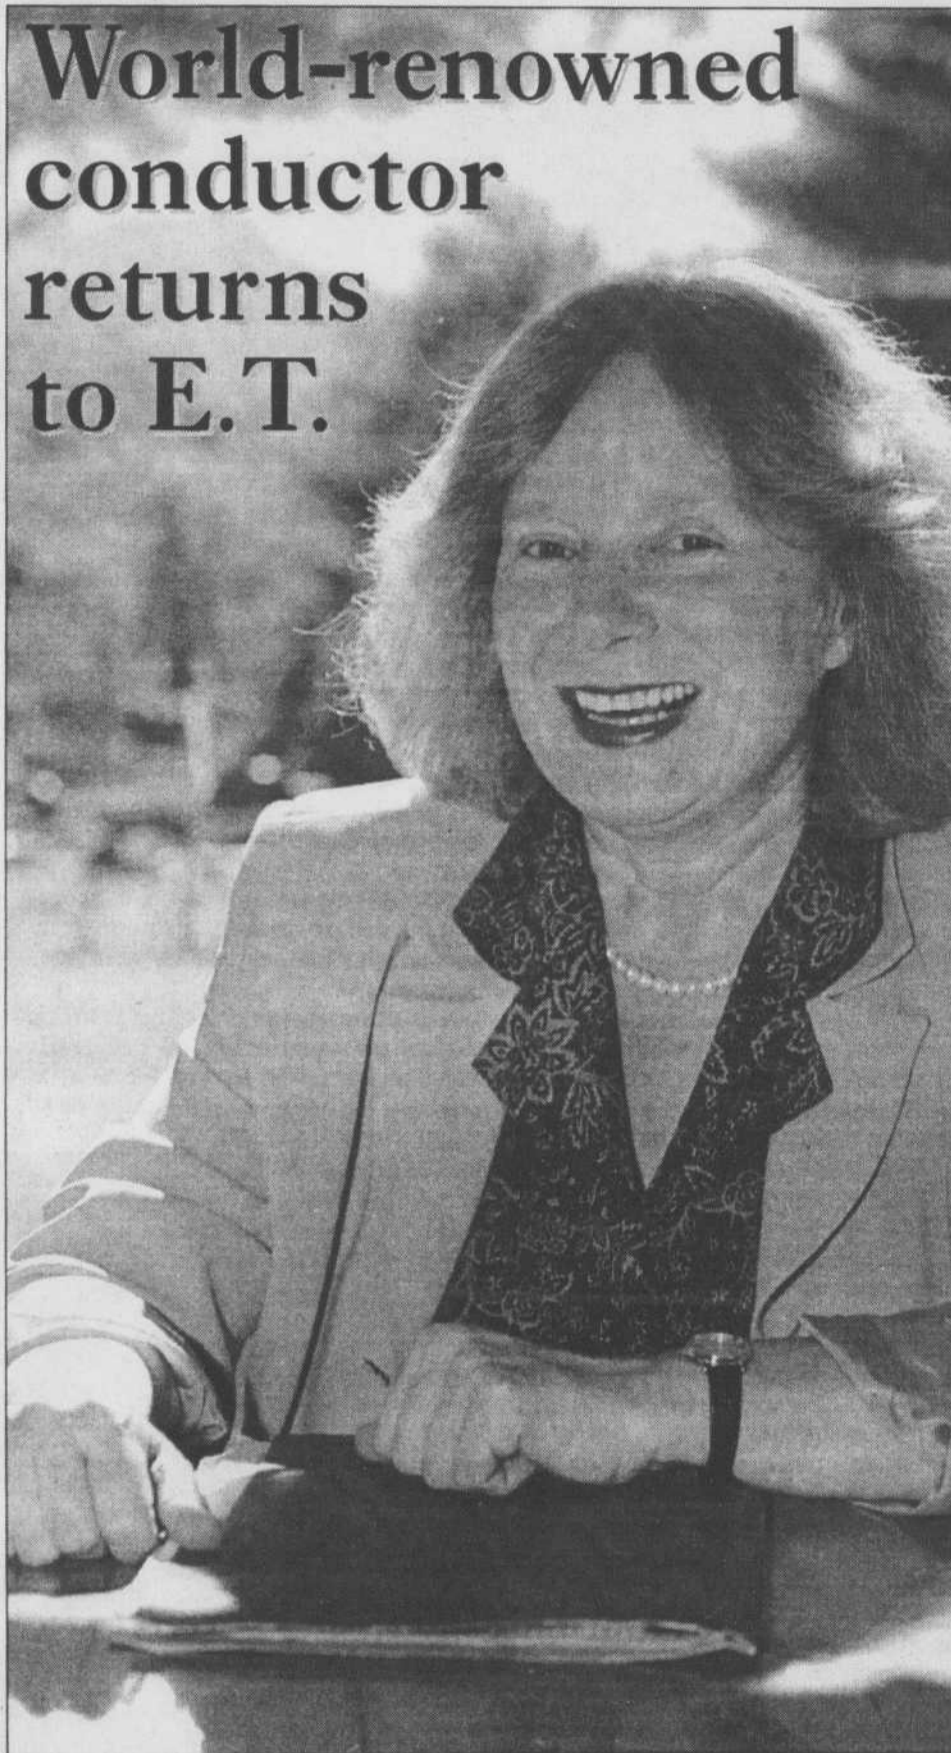

At the tender age of 10, Grossman left for two years of preparatory classes at the Academy of Music in Vienna and went on to Master classes where she studied under famed pianist Bruno Seidlhofer. At 17 she received a scholarship to study at the Conservatoire Nationale Supérieure de Musique in Paris under Pierre Sancan, who had also worked at the Orford Arts Center.

Grossman went on to a brilliant and promising career as a soloist and chamber orchestra musician. She received a contract from Columbia Artists Management and toured Europe, the United States, Canada and Japan.

"Then one day while I was on tour in the United States, I had a strange feeling in my hand. It was as if I did not have any pain, as if I had lost control over my middle finger."

Pot-Pourri choir brings music to Townships

By Caroline Kehne
RECORD CORRESPONDENT
MANSONVILLE

With all the hype surrounding the Tour des Arts, it is easy to forget how many musicians now call the Eastern Townships home.

The many classically trained musicians who settle in the region are transplanting the seeds of an urban musical tradition.

Susan Reininger, director of the Brome-Missisquoi region's Pot-Pourri Choir, has brought her McGill training and 16 years of experience in central Europe to aspiring singers from Cowansville to Mansonville.

Reininger received a Bachelor of Music degree in orchestral direction from McGill University in 1973. Following graduation, she taught music and in a small town in Hungary until 1995.

There, she taught in a school with a "music enriched" program that was part of a national system established after World War II by the Hungarian scholar-composer Zoltan Kodaly.

During this time, she studied choral conducting and theory and frequently competed internationally. "The only way to get out of the country (under the old communist system) was to be a choir singer or an athlete," recalls Reininger. "As a singer, you got to breathe the air of other countries."

In the summer of 1995, she returned to Canada and learned of the search for a new choral director for the Pot-Pourri Choir, previously under the direction of John Purdy. In 1996, she took over the reins.

The choir averages 15 female singers and three male singers, many of whom have little or no previous musical training or experience. The singers drive from throughout Brome-Missisquoi to a central rehearsal point at Knowlton Academy where, every Thursday evening from September through November and February through June, they rehearse for an hour and a half.

For new members, there is no audition and sight-reading of music is not required. Reininger said that she has never turned a singer away, and in fact, she is desperate for male singers, who seem difficult to come by.

John Ballantyne, a baritone and 8-year veteran of the Pot-Pourri Choir says that it is not easy being one of three male voices amidst 15 females.

"It's a little awkward: you have to know your music very well; there's no place to hide," he says.

He has an opinion on why men are reluctant to sing in choirs: "It's pretty much the same over the world. It's a perception on the part of males that it is not a virile thing to do. Out here in the country, it's even worse, it's just not part of the culture."

Ballantyne adds that the choral director has resisted suggestions to simply turn the Pot-Pourri Choir into an all-female choir, remaining optimistic that someday local men's attitudes, given time and exposure, might change.

The group performs a variety of choral works, including early Gregorian chants, music of the Renaissance and more modern genres. In a recent concert in Cowansville, the group performed a program that covered a four-century span of music, from the Renaissance chansons of Orlando di Lasso and John Dowland, to Baroque works by J.S. Bach and finally, to the Lieder of Johannes Brahms.

As a choral director, Reininger is not afraid to push her singers. "She demands a lot and we try to give it to her," says Ballantyne.

Despite the hard work, the choir is not all work and no play. Camaraderie is an important aspect of practice. After each rehearsal, group members meet for a quick beer before heading for

The Pot-Pourri Choir's summer concert, a program entitled "Girls' Night Out," will take place at 8 pm at Arts Sutton at 7 Academy Street in Sutton. The concert, produced in conjunction with Tour des Arts, will feature Belgian, English and French-Canadian folksongs.

The repertoire will include poems from France Mangeau, Liz Davidson and the late Dena Goldberg set to music by Susan Reininger.

The concert is free but good-will donations to benefit a local charity will be accepted.

Country wave of music to hit the Traversée

*Traversée du Lac

Cherry River band*

By Jessie Aulis

As part of the activities planned for La Traversée du lac Memphremagog on Wednesday, July 19, the committee will host a performance by The Fabuleux Elegants, four of Quebec's most renowned performers.

The four musicians are united by a common passion: music. Patrick Normand and Jeff Smallwood on guitars, Bourbon Gautier on drums and Pierre Bertrand on bass, - all have separate solo careers but have joined forces for a series of shows.

The first part of the Traversée festivities, of interest to Townshippers with local talent Dan Goupil and the Cherry River Band, starts at 9 p.m. on the exterior main stage at Merry Point in Magog.

This will be a major rendezvous for country music enthusiasts as well as anyone who enjoys good music. Goupil, the driving force behind the band, is an author, composer, rhythm guitarist and lead singer.

"Cherry River is a band fused together by diverse musical backgrounds which brings a new sound to country music," said Goupil, a resident of Cherry River. Goupil and his group have been the house band for the TV show Visage D'Artiste for two seasons and have enjoyed the experience.

Goupil is a self taught musician and has always had a love for country music. He has performed on various stages, with ten years as part of the Group Show (a variety song and dance company based in Sherbrooke).

This is where and when he teamed up with his partners and decided to form Cherry River: Francois Laperle, guitarist and mandolinist; and Alexandre Branchaud, keyboards and saxophone.

The band would not be complete without Sebastien Côté on drums, Karl Surprenant on bass and Marie-Claude Guay on back vocals. The diverse influences brought by the members of the band result in a fresh, colourful sound.

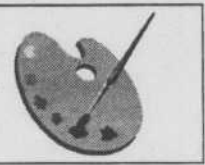

This sound led to the recording of their debut album, Bound For Nashville, which offers country music in shades of folk, rock, jazz and blues.

Goupil, who has been concentrating on writing material for a second album, said he's looking forward to performing in Magog and seeing all the fans.

Country life of olden days

*A new exhibit

RECORD CORRESPONDENT
MELBOURNE

A new exhibit of some very old handiwork is on at the Richmond County Historical Museum in Melbourne. A collection of needlework - crochet, tatting, embroidery and quilting - has been gathered and will be on display in the museum this season.

"Most of these are from before the turn of the century. Everything was decorated. We have a dress collar here, pillowcases, all decorated by hand," explained curator Judy Laberee as she showed some of the needlework on display downstairs in the museum.

Upstairs on the beds and around the museum there are several handmade antique quilts. Two are displayed here on the front lawn by this summer's guides: Edward Wilson-Ewing and Krystal Blais. One quilt was made in 1835 by then 12-year-old Eliza Fee, the other, donated by Gwen Elliot, is a novelty quilt composed of early 1900 agricultural exposition prize ribbons from around the province.

These and other exhibits, as well as the Historical Society Archives may be visited from Wednesday to Sunday from 2-5 p.m. until August 20. A special invitation is extended to everyone on July 16 from 1:30 to 4 p.m. for the annual ice cream social to be held in the beautiful Pollack gardens surrounding the museum. The price of a ticket includes not only the ice cream, fruit and sweets, but also entry to the museum and archives. For more information call 826-2303 or 826-1332.

A window on Mexico

DAVID ANDERSON/CORRESPONDENT

Contemplation by Ruth Watson Brown of West Brome.

The vibrant colours of Mexico were on display at the Rose Window gallery last weekend as three artist friends who spend their winters in San Miguel de Allende exhibited their paintings. Ruth Watson Brown of West Brome, Marilyn Pugach of New Jersey and Dorothy Uhlig Green of Boston have varied backgrounds, but they all share a love of capturing the beauty of their surroundings on canvas, be it at home or on their travels. They were brought together for the exhibit by Diana Severs of Knowlton - also the landlady of the gallery - who met them on a vacation in San Miguel. "We were playing bridge together and we got to know each other and had lots of fun. And then I discovered how talented they were," said Severs. "I wanted to get together again and to bring their art to show it here. I thought people would enjoy seeing it." Brown exhibited paintings that expressed the serenity of San Miguel; Green's cacophony of colours captured Mexico in a different light; and Pugach's lush landscapes and delicate flowers were found both in North America and Mexico. The exhibit ran from July 7 through the 9th. - Sunil Mahtani.

Grossmann recently led the Vienna Boys Choir

A lump had developed on her tendon, making her finger feel numb. Surgeons told her they would operate and it would be fine after three weeks. But after a few weeks she could not lift her finger anymore and two years of seeing all the top specialists did not change a thing.

"No one could really help," she said. At the age of 27, her career as an internationally renowned pianist was over.

"But I said 'Agnes Grossmann can't stop doing music, she cannot stop doing music'." After much reflection, she decided to continue making music, this time as a conductor.

"It was difficult to switch to the baton which is so rigid and it does not offer all of the possibilities of control as the piano. But I found a new language - a direct language because you need to get an immediate response with the baton."

Becoming a conductor was not obvious - especially in the macho world of music in Europe.

"Of course, with the tradition where women were not even accepted into the orchestra it was difficult," she explained, adding that 20 years ago the classical music world was still very much dominated by men.

"For me it was, for instance, impossible to get a choir - even in a church." The sexism of the Catholic church is so radical in Austria that, even as artistic director of the Vienna Boys Choir the last few years, she was not allowed to conduct at the Royal Chapel, the church where the choirboys perform every Sunday.

But the roadblocks did not stop Grossmann. She got a position at the University of Vienna teaching ear training for young composers and conductors and introduced the solfège method she had learned in France.

Over the next 20 years, Grossmann juggled many jobs, becoming the artistic director of a number of illustrious organizations with which she enjoyed much critical success. They include the high profile Wiener Singakademie choir in Vienna (1983-1986), the Chamber Players of Toronto (1984-1990), the Orchestre et Choeurs Métropolitain (1986-1995), and the Orford Arts Center (1989-1995). She was also principal guest conductor of Pro Coro Canada in Edmonton Alberta (1995-1997) and was guest conductor for choirs in Canada, Japan and Europe, including: the Orchestras of Toronto, Vancouver, and Calgary; the Canadian Chamber Ensemble; the National Arts Center Orchestra in Ottawa; the Jeunesses Musicales World Orchestra, the Arcadia Orchestra and Choir and the Osaka Philharmonic in Japan, as well as the Salzburg Mozarteum Orchestra and the Vienna Chamber Orchestra in her native Austria.

At the start of her career in Vienna, Grossmann had few opportunities to conduct, so when a call came through from a pianist she had worked with offering her a job with the University of Ottawa choir, she took a leave of absence and accepted the new challenge.

"For the first time I was not only preparing concerts for guest conductors but I was also conducting them and for Agnes Grossmann that was fantastic."

Grossmann returned to Vienna in 1983 to continue teaching and conducting. During this time she worked with all the great choral conductors, but she did very few concerts of her own. Then she got another call - this one from the Orchestre Métropolitain de Montreal.

"I knew it was a risk, because I would be losing job security, but I said I have to make music and I will go."

Grossmann was eventually appointed artistic director of the Orford Arts Center in 1990, but in 1995 she resigned from both jobs to spend more time on her international guest conducting career. However, in 1996, an opportunity arose she could not turn down. Grossman was invited to lead the internationally renowned Vienna Boys Choir on the eve of its 500th anniversary.

The boys choir, which was founded in 1948 by Emperor Maximilian I, had a stellar reputation and a turnover of $5 million a year. But it was undergoing an artistic and public relations crisis. The choir was accused of mistreating the young singers, who faced draconian discipline, austere living conditions and a stressful concert schedule.

Despite living in a palace, the young choir boys lead a tough and demanding life. The choir functions like a strict boarding school, with exacting study and rehearsing schedules. The young boys, aged nine to 14, have a gruelling schedule, performing in about 100 concerts a year in Austria, throughout Europe and overseas.

Boogie-woogie at the Haskell

America's top ragtime/boogie-woogie pianist Bob Milne will present his fourth annual concert at the Haskell Opera House in Stanstead, on Saturday, July 29.

This year's concert is called "A Night in the Barrelhouse." Milne performs for theater and performing arts center audiences from coast to coast as a full-time touring artist. In recent newspaper reviews, he was referred to as "the finest ragtime/boogie-woogie pianist on this planet" and "one of the greatest ragtime pianists ever."

He was recently honored by the U.S. Navy when he was asked by the captain to perform aboard the USS George Washington aircraft carrier in June of 1999.

A favorite among ragtime fans, classical music lovers and general audiences alike, Mr. Milne demonstrates the many different and often pianistically showy styles of the ragtime era, a period in American history lasting from the mid-1800's right through until the 1920's. His stories and commentaries about the music and the musicians who created it are entertaining and enlightening, and his piano playing has been referred to as "spectacular" and "amazing."

Grossmann arrived with many ambitious reform plans, including a plan to create a fifth choir to reduce the pressure on the young superstars.

"The idea was to create a fifth choir to have less concerts and better quality," she said, adding that she also wanted to create a better life for the children so they could have other interests. "Psychiatrists insisted very much on that because children being away from home - it is very tough."

Under her choral direction, the choir flourished and it had a successful 500th anniversary tour.

"It was a triumphant success," she said. But on the day of her return from North America, the board met with Grossman and rejected her reform plan. After barely two years, Grossmann quit the choir, stating a growing incompatibility with the board and an inability to institute changes which included a plan to seek more private sponsorships and government funding.

Now Grossmann is facing new challenges. She has returned to take over the Orford Arts Center on the eve of its 50th anniversary next year - a challenge she is ready to meet with her usual zeal.

ORFORD ARTS CENTER

Already, Grossmann has been credited by tough critics with meriting the "s" in the Orford Art"s" Center title, following a partnership with acclaimed Quebec dancer Marie Chouinard who awed audiences with a stunning performance at Centennial Theater last weekend.

Next year Chouinard will be back at the Center, this time to teach master dance classes.

"Orford Center was created with the intent of doing all the arts, but music is at the center of everything here," Grossmann explained, adding that Orford has carved itself an important spot on the Canadian arts scene as home to the Jeunesses Musicales World Orchestra. She promised to continue showcasing all the arts, from visual arts exhibits to the performing arts, including the choral and chamber music that animates her heart and soul.

Grossmann began this summer's season by introducing jazz concerts to the festival staple which has always centered around chamber and classical music. The festival has also brought back the popular "Baroque a l'Abbaye" concerts at the abbey in St-Benoit du Lac, a performance which is already sold out.

As Grossman rushed off to try and set up a second concert at St-Benoit du Lac, she announced she is planning another surprise for the 50th anniversary season next year - this one involving another of her longtime passions,

X-Men mystique amazes actor

By Jamie Portman
SOUTHAM NEWS

It took an encounter with a Canadian customs agent at Toronto's Pearson Airport to make Hugh Jackman appreciate the true nature of the X-Men phenomenon.

When the Australian actor's plane landed in Toronto, he had yet to nail down a role in the new movie version of the legendary Marvel Comic series about a formidable group of mutants with extraordinary powers.

Then, on his way to his final audition for the part of Logan, a.k.a. Wolverine, the morose loner who's an extraordinary fighting machine thanks to retractable metal claws and amazing healing capabilities, Jackman found himself confronting a customs agent who turned out to be an X-Men fanatic.

"It was my first window into the fans of X-Men," Jackman says by telephone from New York. "There was a guy in a very packed customs hall stamping passports and asking the same boring old questions. When I turned up, he asked me what my business was and I said I was having a meeting with the director of X-Men. Well, he put down his pen, looked me straight in the eye, and said: 'WHAT do you mean?'"

Jackman explained he was an actor and auditioning for a role in an X-Men movie. At that point the customs inspector started yelling excitedly to his friends: "They're making a movie of X-Men here in Toronto!" The normal decorum of the customs hall was further upset when Jackman explained he was auditioning for the role of Wolverine. "Wolverine - that's my favourite character!" exclaimed the customs guy as he shoved a piece of paper at Jackman. "Sign this for me."

"I'm only auditioning," Jackman protested. "You don't want to jinx it for me."

"I don't care, man," the customs agency responded. "Sign this." So Jackman, wanting to make sure he got into the country, obeyed.

"It's the best reception I've ever had going into any country, including my own," he laughs. "And it was the first time I became really aware of the X-Men cult."

He became even more aware in the days ahead. After meeting director Brian Singer (The Usual Suspects) in Toronto, he was confirmed in the role and returned to Los Angeles where a visit to his agent at the Creative Artists Agency caused pandemonium. "Pretty much the whole operation stopped when I walked through the door. Guys were yelling 'Wolverine!' down the hall. One senior executive halted a high-level meeting to come out to congratulate me. It suddenly dawned on me how big a role this really was and how hotly it had been sought after."

The 31-year-old actor won the role after a 10-month audition process that began while he was in London, singing the role of Curly in the Royal National Theatre's production of Rogers and Hammerstein's Oklahoma. That was when he was asked to do a couple of tests on tape. At one point, he wasn't even the producers' first choice for a role: they were looking at Dougray Scott who later faced a conflict because of prior commitments to Mission Impossible 2.

Later, when Jackman moved to the front of the line, the boss of Marvel Comics took him aside to emphasize what he was getting into: "This is probably 10 times bigger than Superman, Batman or Spiderman. X-Men is huge and your character is the most popular."

The message is clear. If X-Men is a success when it opens July 14, it could make Jackman - who resembles a rugged younger version of Clint Eastwood - into a star overnight.

Wolverine is only one of the characters with remarkable talents. Cyclops (James Marsden) has eyes that can release an energy beam capable of ripping holes through mountains. Storm (Halle Berry) can manipulate the weather. Jean Grey (Famke Janssen) has both telekinetic and telepathic powers. Rogue (Anna Paquin) is an alienated teenager who absorbs the powers and memories of anyone she touches.

All are children of the atomic era. All have been born with genetic mutations that give them these unique powers. And all are being victimized by a social and political culture that fears them as dangerous freaks of nature.

The enlightened Charles Xavier (Patrick Stewart) is a powerful telepath who sees these mutants as forces of good capable of harnessing their powers for the benefit of mankind. His arch enemy is Erik Lehnsherr, a.k.a. Magneto (Ian McKellen), a powerful mutant who has turned his back on society: instead of working for a world in which mutants and ordinary humans coexist, he seeks one in which the mutants will dominate. Magneto has enlisted some terrifying recruits. Among them Mystique (Rebecca Romijn-Stamos) a lethal creature capable of metamorphizing into all manner of shapes and identities, and the gargantuan Sabretooth (Tyler Mane).

But Jackman concedes that Wolverine can be pretty terrifying himself, thanks to those blade-like claws that can thrust their way out of his arms. Special effects supervisor Gordon Smith created 15 different sets for Jackman to wear - some plastic or metal, some flexible and manufactured from hard rubber, some computer-generated.

"They had various degrees of maiming ability that I never really trusted myself with," chuckles Jackman. "The rubber ones ensured I didn't cause real damage to my colleagues. I also had a fake arm so the claws could pop out."

Jackman agrees with producer Lauren Shuler Donner's description of Wolverine as a "truly tragic hero."

"As an actor you can look at him and say - yeah, he really is tragic, although Wolverine himself would never admit to it. He's a very lonely private guy with no sense of history or the past. And being feared and ostracized by society would make anyone pretty angry and bitter. I wanted to make sure audiences saw a kind of melancholy about this man. No matter how cool and unfazed he seems, there's a real well of despair underneath, a well of loneliness."

The actor didn't expect to feel such a tremendous burden of responsibility in playing this role.

"There are two kinds of role I always considered toughest for an actor. The toughest would be to play someone who was alive and famous. The second hardest, I would have thought, would be to play the great traditional roles - the Hamlets and the Macbeths. I now realize that when you're playing someone like Wolverine, you're dealing with the imaginations of millions of people who have already seen this movie and this character in their heads. So it is a great responsibility, maybe even greater than the two I've already mentioned. But at the end of the day, the fans also want to love the film. They want to see it, and it's always nice for an actor to know the audience is on your side."

Jackman has done film in his native Australia, but X-Men is not just his first American movie - it is his first encounter with a summer Hollywood blockbuster - even though it was filmed in Toronto to save money. "It's definitely another world. My first day on set it was like going to a Rolling Stones concert. It was an outdoor shoot at night, there were huge banks of lights and about 400 cast and crew members. Then, when I was ushered into my trailer, my first reaction was that it was bigger than my home back in Australia."

Revisiting Battlestar Galactica

TV DATA

Battlestar Galactica, starring Dirk Benedict and Richard Hatch, is spotlighted in the premiere of Sciography Sunday on the Sci-Fi Channel. The new series, which explores the world of science-fiction entertainment, begins with a look at one of the most expensive failures in network television history: Battlestar Galactica. "Battlestar Galactica is absolutely perfect for our show," executive producer Andy Schatzberg says, "because everyone remembers it, and yet there are so many wonderful stories to tell about it. People remember the show as being a flop, but the fact is, it was still in the top 15 when it was canceled. The ratings were still good, but there were all sorts of problems behind the scenes." Chief among those was a lawsuit brought by George Lucas alleging that the series ripped off his 1977 Star Wars movie smash. In fact, Galactica creator Glen Larson first pitched his series in 1967 under the title Adam's Ark. "You have to remember, back then the only science-fiction series on TV was Star Trek, and it was not doing well," Schatzberg says. "It actually only became a hit 20 years later, so the networks weren't keen on Adam's Ark. Then when Star Wars hit, everyone wanted a Star Wars project."
