Godin a God in guitars

Luthier making new waves in La Patrie

By Jake Brennan
SPECIAL TO THE RECORD
LA PATRIE

Step into the small front office of Godin Guitars in La Patrie and you might get the wrong impression. The wallpaper is tattered, the ceilings are patchy — it looks like any other small-time business in a middle-of-nowhere town.

But pass through the double doors into the plant behind and a completely different picture forms, one of a guitar manufacturer whose product is anything but small time.

The La Patrie employees worked under the Lasido banner during the 1980s, manufacturing guitars for big name companies that no one, out of respect for their competitors, would name.

But as Patrick Godin, in charge of international sales, put it, "we didn't get any recognition for the products we made. It was a good school for us, because those people demanded very high quality, but there's no future in making guitars for other people."

After almost two decades in the shadows, chief designer Robert Godin decided last year to brand himself and get the credit he'd long deserved. After all, we're talking about a company that grew steadily through the '90s, and now makes thousands of guitars every year between six different plants, including new-style polypropylene cases at the old H.H. Brown factory in Richmond.

Godin's acoustic and electric axes range from beginner models to very, very high end, according to rave reviews in Guitar Player and other industry magazines. The reviews stress not just the quality, but also the originality.

While acoustic guitar designs are more conservative and stable, "electric guitars change a lot — they follow styles just like clothes," said Daniel Gervais, vice president of quality assurance at the La Patrie plant.

To anticipate — or even generate — fads, Robert Godin keeps his ear to the amplifier, anticipating the next design coming down the patch cord.

"Every week Robert has a new idea," said his son, Patrick Godin.

Those turn into about 10 new guitar models a year, adding to the hundreds of different models already in their six differently named lines, Godin, Seagull, Norman and La Patrie among them.

The 200 employees at the electric guitar plant in La Patrie (there's also an acoustic factory in town) keep busy assembling all the necks, bridges, and bodies for the electric guitars that will create, once they're fully assembled in Berlin, New Hampshire, great sound.

Because of the wide range of models, the factory has gone with computer-assisted machines to do much of the work.

"Our factory gives us flexibility," explained Gervais. "If we want to make a series of 500 or 1,000 guitars, we can do that. If we want to make only 20, that's fine too."

Nutty crust gives nuggets an edge

Dining

This recipe is definitely dinner party material. These plump chicken nuggets coated with nuts, tarragon and sesame and paired with crunchy green peas are simple, yet very original and visually striking.

PANTRY

Feel free to add more accompaniments if the number of guests is large — like white rice and warm apple sauce with a dash of salt.

The green peas may be substituted by another vegetable, like al dente green beans or roasted endives, as long as it adds the necessary crunch to the dish.

INGREDIENTS (FOR FOUR PEOPLE):

1 kg skinless breasts of chicken
500 grams green peas
150 de-shelled pecans
3 tbsp. sesame seeds
3 tbsp. dried tarragon
200 grams unsalted butter
salt and freshly-ground pepper

DIRECTIONS

1. Wash the peas and pat them dry. Remove the tips and the strings that run across the edges with a small, sharp knife. Cut the chicken breast into nuggets, all approximately the same size (about four or five per breast). Reserve.

2. On a large cutting board, chop the nuts. When they have been reduced to a coarse meal, add the tarragon, sesame seeds and a generous amount of salt and pepper. Chop some more until all ingredients are perfectly blended and there are no chunks visible. Alternatively, you can pulse the ingredients in a food processor, which will save you time.

3. Coat the pieces of chicken by firmly pressing them against the breading mix (no, you will not need to dip the chicken in raw eggs). Reserve. Melt half of the butter in a wok or large frying pan. Add the green beans and put on a lid. Let the green beans cook in their own steam until just cooked through, and very crunchy. It could take up to 10 minutes. Add salt and pepper.

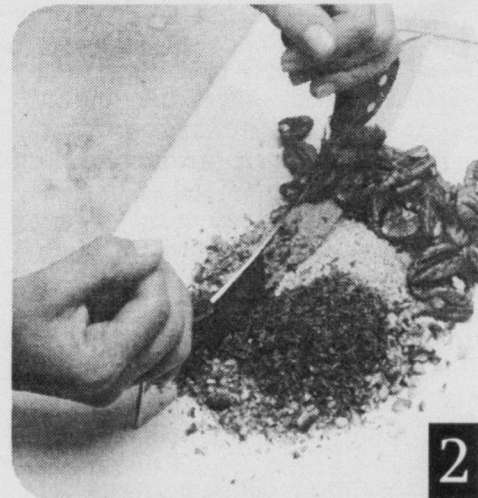

4. Melt the other half of the butter in a large, heavy skillet with a few drops of oil. Sauté the pieces of chicken in the butter for about three minutes on either side, being careful not to turn them more than once nor stir, so that the crust stays intact. If you would like to pre-prepare the chicken before your guests arrive, you may reheat the nuggets quickly, for no more than three minutes, in a very hot pre-heated oven. As for the beans, they really do taste fresher and crunchier if cooked right before serving.

Grilled salmon with fruit salsa

CANWEST NEWS SERVICE

This is a great centerpiece for a small summer dinner party. Don't be put off by what looks like a lengthy list of ingredients: it actually can be put together quickly. The sweet-tart flavour of the raspberries and nectarines plays off well against the richness of the salmon.

Serve with boiled new potatoes and a crisp green salad.

BARBECUED SALMON STEAKS WITH NECTARINES AND BERRY SALSA (Makes four servings)

4 salmon steaks, about 6 ounces each
Salt and pepper
Marinade
2 tablespoons (25 mL) olive oil

2 tablespoons (25 mL) balsamic vinegar
2 large garlic cloves, crushed
Salsa
2 nectarines, sliced thin
1/2 cup (125 mL) finely diced English cucumber
1/2 cup (125 mL) thinly sliced red onion
1 teaspoon (5 mL) finely chopped jalapeno pepper
1 tablespoon (15 mL) chopped cilantro
1 tablespoon (15 mL) chopped mint
2 teaspoons (10 mL) raspberry vinegar
1 teaspoon (5 mL) granulated sugar
Salt and pepper
1 cup (250 mL) fresh raspberries

DIRECTIONS

Marinade: In shallow glass baking dish large enough to hold salmon steaks in single layer, whisk together oil, balsamic vinegar and garlic. Add steaks to marinade and turn to coat evenly; let stand for 5 minutes, turning several times.

Meanwhile, prepare salsa: In bowl, combine nectarines, cucumber, onion, jalapeno pepper, cilantro, mint, raspberry vinegar, sugar, and salt and pepper to taste. Gently stir in raspberries; set aside.

Place steaks on greased barbecue grill over medium-high heat and cook for 10 minutes per inch of thickness or until fish flakes when tested with a fork, turning once and basting with marinade.

Transfer steaks to serving platter and sprinkle with salt and pepper to taste. Top with some of the salsa.

Kuerti to play the keys in Orford

Music

By Jake Brennan
SPECIAL TO THE RECORD
ORFORD

One could certainly be at a loss for words in front of Anton Kuerti. Not that the Austrian-born pianist, who has lived in Toronto for decades, puts you ill at ease with his mild, approachable manner. It's just, well, a man many have called the greatest living practitioner of 88 keys seems almost beyond questions.

Kuerti is in the neighbourhood teaching at the Orford Arts Centre, a process he has enjoyed enough to come back some 20 times. He used to teach at the University of Toronto, but gave it up years back because he just didn't feel right about it.

"I'm very busy, and if you're traveling a lot, playing a lot of concerts, it's really not responsible in terms of visiting the students," he said straightforwardly, scanning the picnic table between us up and down, as if it held keys.

A lot of concerts is an understatement, which Kuerti seems to have a penchant for — verbally, at least. His exquisite career has included tours to 40 countries, and he has soloed with many of the world's greatest orchestras and conductors. Tonight, he will perform at the Orford Arts Centre as part of its annual summer festival.

He is also one of today's most recorded classical artists, having put on disc all the Beethoven Concertos and Sonatas, Schubert Sonatas, Brahms Concertos and works by many others.

But one gets the impression that, despite his busy schedule, he still wants to give back to the tradition that has made his career. "I feel that I can be more helpful to a student who comes (to Orford) for a week — every morning we work for four hours — than to give a lesson on average once a month."

The son of Viennese music amateurs, Kuerti grew up in the U.S. studying along the way with renowned teachers like Arthur Loesser, Mieczyslaw Horszowski and Rudolf Serkin.

"When you're young and trying to make a career, you're driven by competition and the other talented people around you," he said.

But seeking one's drive in others is a short cut to burnout, he suggested obviously not for the first time. "You have to love what you're doing, and it's hard to get anywhere if you don't. You have to love your practicing because you'll spend a lot more time practicing than performing."

JAKE BRENNAN/SPECIAL

At this point, however, Kuerti no longer feels the need to touch a piano daily, and his greying, frizzy, professorial hair belies his youthful attraction to adventure. "I do some fairly serious hiking," said Kuerti, who has climbed the Rockies, Appalachians and the highest mountain in southeast Asia, Borneo's 4,100m Kinabalu, as recently as last December.

He's also an ardent rafter, having followed the Nahanni River in the Northwest Territories twice, and the Tatshensheni in the Yukon with his son and no guide.

But is all this adventure is a bit of a gamble for someone whose hands are worth millions of dollars?

"Risk taking is part of the game," he said simply, making the link to his livelihood. "A lot of music is written in such a way that you have to take risks to play it properly."

At tonight's recital Kuerti will play three pieces he's already recorded, a seemingly safe bet.

"I've played them before, but it doesn't really help me to say 'usually I can play these quite well,'" he joked.

He has selected Mendelssohn-Bartholdy's Fantasia in F flat minor because, although seldom played, Kuerti feels it's the composer's finest work for solo piano.

Next, Schumann's Novelettes, op. 21, is one of the cornerstones of the repertoire, what he called "a wonderfully impassioned, highly romantic piece."

The concert's second half will be Beethoven's Hammerklavier Sonata, the most massive of the German giant's sonatas, and one of the most complex of the classical period. After so many beautiful notes, searching for words about Anton Kuerti will probably be the last thing on listeners' minds.

For tickets to the 8 p.m. performance, at the Orford Arts Centre, call 819-843-9871 or 888-310-3665.

Manual labour still part of process

Music

GUITARS:

"It's very versatile as a production method, which we need because there are all sorts of demands. Almost everything's custom today."

New design settings are also much easier to type into a computer than alter manually. One computerized machine operates in five different geometric planes with four tool heads — drills and routers — at a time. What once took hours now takes minutes, and is more precise.

Which is not to say that manual labour has left the process. Two full-time luthier trainers at each factory teach the skilled labourers every aspect of the process. While assembly posts might take a few days to learn, sanding and painting, still both done largely by hand, are skills gleaned over months.

Employees rotate posts regularly, said Gervais, so as not to wear down their muscles — or interest.

The materials arrive from around the world — mahogany from Brazil for necks, rosewood from India for acoustic fingerboards and bridges, African ebony for lute fret boards. But most of Godin's wood comes from British Columbia and Quebec.

"We really favour the use of Canadian woods," said Gervais, adding that they'll use a Quebec soft maple instead of mahogany because it's more local, has the same musical characteristics and preserves the Brazilian forests.

JAKE BRENNAN/SPECIAL

Materials for Godin's guitars arrive from around the world, from Brazil to India to British Columbia and Quebec.

But for really high-end guitars, they still use mahogany, not because it's better, but because players will pay for the traditional materials. On the other hand, hard rock maple from Beauce, with its good resonance and great strength, is used for guitar necks all over the world.

Although being a guitar player is not a prerequisite to working at Godin, many of the employees do play. Despite growing up in a musical family, Patrick thought he'd strike out on his own after university. He soon felt the strings pulling him back to his father's trade, though.

"If you do a job you don't like, it shows," he said. "We're very fortunate to be in this industry, and we're all passionate people here. I wouldn't go anywhere else."

Gervais put his job satisfaction more succinctly.

"It's a nice trade to be in. We make music here."

Theatre Lac Brome goes back in time

By Diahann Saddler
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

Theatre Lac Brome is taking audiences back in time with a production of one of G. B. Shaw's earliest works, Mrs. Warren's Profession.

Opening tonight, it is a classic about the hypocrisy of Victorian society, and the challenges modern women faced in circumventing and overcoming the rigid mores and class structures of Victorian England.

Written around 1894, the play failed to pass the rigorous censorship of the Lord Chamberlain's Examiner due to the scandalous nature of the material. It was finally produced eight years later, after the death of Queen Victoria, and only through the ruse of an amateur production. Its two-night staging caused a tremendous furor even then.

Mrs. Warren's Profession tells the story of an English prostitute who has been operating in Brussels, and has had her daughter respectfully reared in boarding schools in England. The plot follows the emotional fall-out that ensues when the truth of Mrs. Warren's profession is deduced.

Director Greg Kramer is a Shaw enthusiast who first directed this play at the Tarragon theatre in Toronto in 1997.

"I love this piece. I am delighted to be directing it. It is rare to be able to do a piece like this in summer theatre," he noted. "It is a problematic play — there are no solutions, no easy answers. Most of the characters are unresolved and troublesome, and I think it packs such a punch because of that."

Reflecting on Shaw's tendency to preach, Kramer is not worried that Mrs. Warren's Profession is just a pulpit for Shaw's position on the issue of women's independence.

"I don't think people will find Shaw too didactic — he starts with his point, then has his characters play it out. He has a position on an issue, but is smart enough a writer not to shove it down our throats. He uses balanced arguments."

Mary Harvey plays Kitty Warren, and finds her "almost larger than life, but inside really down to earth."

"I am really pleased to be playing her. She has many different sides. In the normal course I might not have been able to play her for another 10 years."

"And it is always a joy to work with Greg Kramer. He brings things down to a very real level — there is no artifice with him."

Helen King, who plays daughter Vivie, says she finds her an exciting person.

"She is extremely intelligent and work-oriented, but ill equipped emotionally to deal with what she hears about her mother's life," said King, noting that Vivie has gone to Cambridge and passed math exams.

"She is a working girl, but not in the same sense as her mother," she added.

Local drama teacher and amateur actor Doug Hooper makes his professional debut as Rev. Samuel Gardner "a man with a past who is hiding from it," Hooper explained. "He went into the church because he had very few other options."

Hooper is reveling in this foray into the professional theatre.

"It is inspiring. There is a big difference between amateur and professional. In teaching, you have to cajole people to get them to do things they don't want to do. Here they want to do it."

This is Hooper's only appearance at TLB, but fans can catch his performance in Art, which will open at The Piggery on July 15. He has the distinction of being the only actor in the company to do repertory in two different theatres.

Shaw fans can call the TLB box office at 450-242-2270 for tickets and information.

Five questions with Caleb Rimtobaye

Q & A

By Nancy Nourse
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

Caleb Rimtobaye is the main author and composer for the group H'Sao, which appeared at Place de la Cite in Sherbrooke this week.

This group of six determined youth from the small African province of Tchad came away from the Jeux de la Francophonie in Ottawa (2001) with the bronze medalion. Since then, they have been touring Europe and North America, delighting audiences with their flexible voices and many musical talents.

The Record had the chance to sit down with Rimtobaye.

THE RECORD: Tell us about the group H'Sao?

RIMTOBAYE: "The group today is made up of the members of two families — the Rimtobaye's and the Ledjebgue's. Originally my brothers and close cousins began singing together in the church where my father was pastor. He is the one who gave us the name 'Hirondelle,' after the swallows that were the sacred messenger birds in the Bible. Renowned for their bravery and courage, these little birds were determined to reach higher ground. We are also a small voice in the world, but are determined to reach a higher goal of spreading the word and doing what we can to improve life in Tchad.

"We added Sao to the name of our group as a way to distinguish us from the other 120 cultures in Africa. The Saos were the ancestors of the Tchadian people, hence 'Hirondelle Sao' or 'H'Sao' It was about that time that we heard Charles and Service, the Ledjebgue brothers, whose unique performance led us to joining our energies and ideas."

THE RECORD: How would you explain your style of music?

RIMTOBAYE: "With our roots definitely in Gospel music, we add a touch of soul to traditional style music of Tchad. Our songs are based on our experiences and beliefs. We sometimes mix in a little jazz and other more modern influences to create what we feel is our own unique sound."

THE RECORD: Tell us about the festivals and other competitions that you have been involved with?

RIMTOBAYE: "Not only did the concerts that we performed at the Fest' Africa in Northern France, give us much needed experience and exposure, but it also gave us the confidence to record our first five songs. The 16th Editions of the Festival International Nuits d'Afrique in 2002, that took place in Ottawa, involved over 400 musicians, singers and dancers notably from Argentina, Mali, Maroc, Algeria, Mexico, Cuba and Madagascar, who came out to celebrate the afro-beat and Latin rhythms."

THE RECORD: What are your main goals as a person and as a group?

RIMTOBAYE: "Personally, I plan to continue writing, composing and performing. As a group, we hope that through our music, we can increase public awareness of the troubles of the African people, and bring the people of Tchad into the international light — bringing a brighter future to all Chadians. Chadians are a very proud and positive people. Even though so many of our people are living in difficult conditions and under trying circumstances, we never give up hope for a better life."

THE RECORD: For those of us who missed your performance at Place de la Cite, will we have another opportunity to see you perform?

RIMTOBAYE: "Our 70-concert tour will be taking us to places like Ste. Agathe, Toronto and Halifax. We have really enjoyed our first visit to Sherbrooke, and are pleased to say that we will be returning to this beautiful area in November for a concert at Bishop's Centennial Theatre in Lennoxville. We also have an album that was officially released in late June of this year at the Festival de Jazz in Montreal."

Ranee Lee honours her Dark Divas

Theatre

By Diahann Saddler
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

Jazz lovers rejoice, The Piggery in North Hatley is presenting world-renowned singer Ranee Lee in her one-woman show, Dark Divas, for a three-week engagement.

A tribute to some of the female vocalists who have influenced her career, Divas gives Lee the opportunity to act as well as sing.

"In the first half of the show, I present four women in character (in 20-minute segments): Josephine Baker, Billie Holiday, Lena Horne and Pearl Bailey," explained Lee. "They have all played important roles in my career choices. I researched a lot of women, and felt they contributed most to my choice."

During the second half of the show, Lee talks about Dinah Washington, Sarah Vaughan and Ella Fitzgerald.

"If I gave each of them 20 minutes, I would have a three-hour show!" she laughed. "So I am talking about them rather than acting them out."

Lee will have seven musicians backing her up on stage, including husband Richard Ring on guitar, as well as a pianist, tenor saxophonist, trumpeter, drummer, bassist and trombonist.

Lee underwent serious surgery in March, and has spent the past three months on a sabbatical. Because of that, she did not perform at the Montreal Jazz festival for the first time in years.

Lee had her first gig about two weeks ago at the chalet on top of Mount Royal.

"There was not too much pressure there," said Lee. "This appearance at The Piggery is our first major strenuous performance since the operation."

Lee will be returning to McGill University in September, where she teaches in the music department. She will release a new album in October with Justin Time records, and will be performing on a jazz cruise through the Panama Canal in November with fellow Canadians Rob McConnell and Guido Basso.

DARK DIVAS WILL RUN UNTIL AUG. 1, ALTERNATING WITH SUNSHINE THEATRE'S PRODUCTION OF ART, WHICH OPENS JULY 15. FOR TICKETS AND INFORMATION ABOUT DARK DIVAS, PLEASE CALL THE PIGGERY BOX OFFICE AT 819-842-2431. THE

COURTESY JUSTIN TIME RECORDS

Renowned jazz singer Ranee Lee continues her one-woman show, Dark Divas, at The Piggery in North Hatley this weekend, in conjunction with the theatre's annual gala on Saturday.

The Piggery has come a long way

By Diahann Saddler
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

The Piggery Theatre has been resurrected from a near-death experience. Despite great publicity and critically acclaimed plays, the 2002 season under Douglas Campbell did not stave off financial ruin for The Piggery, and the doors were about to close when local writer Bill Lee rode in on his white horse. Just days before the board was to announce the closing for the season, Lee made a proposal to keep the theatre going, and was accepted.

A Montreal native, Lee has been involved in the film industry for the last 20 years as screenwriter and producer. He moved to North Hatley 14 years ago with his wife, opened a Bed and Breakfast, and turned from production to writing.

In his first season with The Piggery, Lee is offering a truly varied season that lasts well into September. The Sunday Funnies series debuted last month, featuring stand-up comics from Ernie Butler's Comedy Nest in Montreal. Every second Sunday, several comedians from the Nest will perform.

Butler was involved in the conception of the Just for Laughs festival in Montreal, and is planing a comedy fest in North Hatley Aug. 24 to 30, which will include a comedy workshop. He has even scored a coup in getting Just for Laughs headliner Mike McDonald to appear at the next comedy night this Sunday

Another well-known Montrealer, Ranee Lee, will bring her show Dark Divas to the Piggery that started July 8. The Piggery Gala will take place during the run of this show on July 12.

Sunshine Productions will present Art by Yasmina Reza from July 15 to Aug. 9. A Little Turn of Sadness, a family drama/comedy by Bishop graduate Amy Vallis, follows. This work opens Aug. 6, and runs through to Aug. 21.

Emma Stevens will bring her Shirley Valentine to The Piggery from Aug. 15 to the 31. It has been some time since Stevens left Knowlton and her beloved Echo Art Theatre.

In September Lee has an audacious plan — to put on Rehearsal for Murder with the Townships Players. The Players are an amateur group similar in conception to the Knowlton Players.

The audacity is due to the fact that at press time Lee had not yet formed the Townships Players, nor did he have a director lined up.

The season ends with Peter Landecker's Tribute to Bob Dylan in Words and Music, a show that Landecker first produced to great acclaim in San Francisco 15 years ago.

Also happening at The Piggery over the summer will be a country and western barbecue on July 18, as well as the house and garden tour on Aug. 10. This time, the houses are all local B&Bs.

A language arts camp will run from July 21 to Aug. 8. Students will have the opportunity to learn either French or English as a second language through the arts. Jane Pankovich is running the program.

Money can't buy you happiness

By Carellin Brooks
CANWEST NEWS SERVICE

Bad books have a fascination all their own, so when I say I read steadily through Trading Up, don't take it as a recommendation. Instead, understand that there's something about Candace Bushnell's genre that lends itself, irresistibly, to spectatorship.

This, after all, is a story about people with too much money, fame, power or beauty, and their struggles to get ahead in a world of vicious social distinctions, many of which they themselves assiduously perpetuate.

While the lower end of this genre is defined by its gratuitous brandsmanship, with characters endlessly calling for Cristal champagne and tossing restlessly on Frette sheets, the better efforts can approach art.

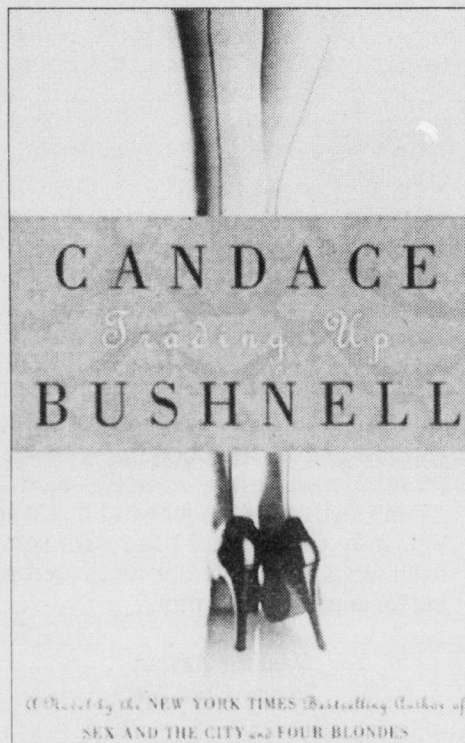

Sadly, despite Bushnell's previous successes (the TV series Sex and the City is loosely based on her first book), Trading Up doesn't measure up.

The novel is set in the Manhattan of 2000. It ends before 9/11, and the twin towers are ever on the horizon. One wonders what Bushnell's spoiled little poor-girl heroine, Janey Wilcox, would make of the the collapses and the choking dust that are to come.

In Trading Up, Janey is a fading (i.e., over 30) model whose career has recently received some much-needed figurative Botox from a new Victoria's Secret ad campaign. Now appearing on billboards, she immediately marries rich but still finds herself — you'll be shocked — dissatisfied.

Indeed, in Trading Up the only remarkable thing about the upper echelons of New York society, besides their inherent lack of appeal, would seem to be their collective discontent. Sure, they eat at the trendy restaurant of the moment, seeing and being seen on pink suede banquettes and, sure, they go to the best parties. And, sure, a uniformed driver follows them around in a Lincoln Town Car (oops, branding again), but they just don't enjoy those things the way you or I would.

The only even marginally compelling characters in Trading Up are Digger, a rock star originally from Des Moines, and his wife Patty, Janey's little sister. While these two weather a real crisis in the course of the novel (a wannabe groupie claims Digger is the father of her baby), Janey is more concerned with getting just the right expression on her face as she pretends to offer advice to a distraught Patty. She wants a socialite she's scheming to befriend to see them and be enchanted by her display of sisterly affection.

Bushnell is a credible writer who has perhaps received more than her share of attention because of her Sex and the City beginnings. What she does have is a real ear for dialogue, especially the sort of petty after-hours griping that goes on between husband and wife and the unspoken fencing in a fragile new friendship between powerful women.

But the sneering tone she affects is eventually wearying. Even if I did read through to the end, it was only to assure myself that, no matter how much or how little money I have, I'm still having more fun than all these people put together.

A revisionist reading of Ronald Reagan

By Marc Nadeau
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

Whether we agree with his politics or not — and there is certainly a clear divide among his detractors and supporters — it's hard to dispute Ronald Reagan's commitment to stamping our Communism.

Anybody nurturing doubts about it should read Peter Schweizer's latest book, Reagan's War.

In this eloquent account, Schweizer describes how, from his days as an actor in Hollywood starting in the 1940s till his ascension to the White House in 1984, Reagan was on a crusade to fight and defeat communism.

Some may think that this book is only an ode to the former president, written by a supporter. Drawing on sources from the former communist régimes, however, Schweizer details with precision the positions and actions taken by Reagan to combat the "evil empire", along with the reactions of the communist world. Thus, while many other politicians were ready to compromise with communism, trying to establish better relations with the Kremlin while the communists gathered strength, Reagan was intransigent.

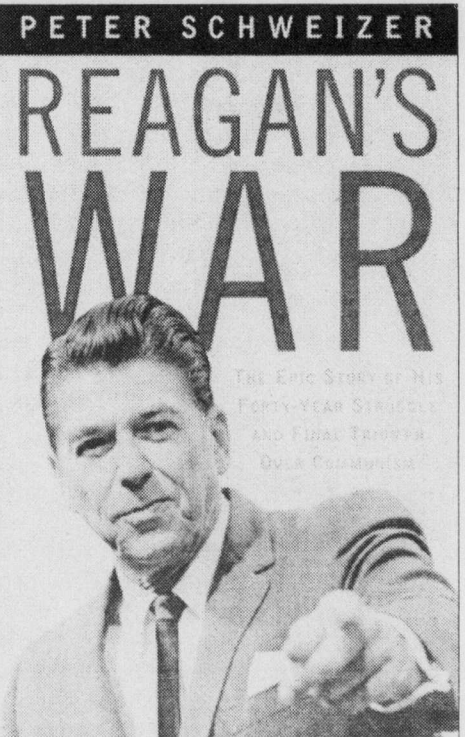

While this intransigence would be contested in the U.S. and abroad, it would come to haunt and demoralize the Kremlin, once Reagan arrived in the Oval Office.

Upon arriving in Washington, Reagan promoted a military buildup, approved actions to support opponents to communism around the globe and made sure that the Polish opposition movement — Solidarity — wasn't overthrown by communist authorities. In tandem with Pope John Paul II, he exploited the weaknesses of the eastern bloc.

Schweizer then quotes General Czeslaw Kiszczak, who was the Polish Interior Minister and one of the staunchest opponents to the Solidarity movement, who came to the conclusion that "Reagan's activity in foreign affairs is not an improvisation, is not a chain of spontaneous initiatives, but a carefully planned and coordinated action, something of an integrated front of action under the slogans of world advocacy of the idea of freedom."

Schweizer then notes that "when it came to Reagan, his enemies understood him perhaps better than anyone."

Reading Schweizer, one can of course draw some parallels between Reagan and George W. Bush. After all, a recent article described the 43rd President as the ideological son of the 40th.

But one can also remember that, in his day, another famous politician — who is now a political legend — was also decried by commentators and fellow politicians. This man was Winston Churchill. In 1905, a friend of Churchill's noted that "The first time you meet Winston, you see all his faults, and the rest of your life you spend in discovering his virtues." It may be just so with Reagan.

It is interesting to note that, 15 years after leaving the public scene, there is a growing tendency to seriously explore the features of Ronald Reagan.

Books like Reagan's War make sure that the battle for Reagan's legacy will continue. On the one hand, we encounter people like Schweizer, who arrives on the scene to promote and defend the record of Reagan. On the other hand, critics will always be prone to decry the 40th President.

That's the richness of history. But in an age when we harshly criticize — and rightly so — our public personalities as being arrogant and cynical, it is refreshing to read about a not-so-distant President who was not eager to bend his views for the sake of public approval or instant popularity.

D.D. JACKSON
Suite For New York
(Justin Time)

D.D. Jackson's Suite For New York is contemporary, conceptual and downright brilliant. It's not just jazz, nor just classical elements, but also spoken word layered into the mix as written and read by David Gonzales. Introducing the album that pays homage to the wild and wonderful world that is New York City, listeners hear of eight million people, dreams all floating about on the surface, dipping and diving in and out amidst the organized chaos. On Suite For New York, D.D. Jackson works with a plethora of talents like Brad Turner on trumpet from the relative calm that is Montreal in December, 2002. Sticklers for traditional jazz styles with steady flowing moments might not appreciate how this album jumps a lot. Yet those with a passion for assorted styles melding from the mind of one into the ears of many will delight.

Chapter II
(Murder Inc./Universal)

Velvet-voiced vixen Ashanti made a beeline for superstardom via some hot collaborations with rapper Ja Rule and a simple, inoffensive sensuality that made her an easy listen for the young R&B set. The title says it all:

This disc offers more midtempo, hip-hop flavoured grooves for Ashanti to coo over. It does not do more. She is reminiscent of Notorious B.I.G. main squeeze/protege Faith Evans in that she doesn't have a strong personality or distinct style. She's just kind of "there." But that seems to be enough for her fans, and she'll probably be heard everywhere this time around as well. Special bonus: The CD cover folds out into a miniposter swimsuit shot for your bedroom wall or school locker.

VARIOUS ARTISTS
Legally Blonde 2
Red White & Blonde Soundtrack
(Curb Records)

Fluffy, light and fun like the movie, the soundtrack to Legally Blonde 2 is as varied as it is old school. Rapper Coolio is back on the scene, pairing up with the superb funk master George Clinton on 'Atomic Dog', which is modelled loosely on an old Snoop Dogg song.

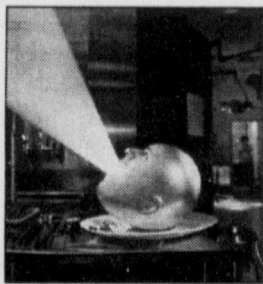

'Break-through' by Hope 7 stands out on a girl rock/pop front, while Superchic(k) rock out with 'Me Against The World'. Spoken word and music mix with 'I'm Just A Bill' from Deluxx Folk Implosion in a strange but novel explanation of how a thought turns into an idea and progresses into a bill, then through a long process into a law.

THE MARS VOLTA
De-Loused in the Comatorium
(Universal)

When you are an alt-rock fan, you learn to surrender the selfish need to keep your fave band a secret, especially when they do what great cult bands do and become famous. What, however, do you do when your band agrees with your selfish need? At the Drive-In was that band, a volatile collision of personalities who couldn't even handle the suggestion of stardom, let alone the full-blown real thing. After helping midwife a kind of agit-rock emo-punk, they broke up. Omar Rodriguez and Cedric Bixler left to create this madly assaultive prog-everything unit. Early reading of numbers like Drunkship of Lanterns' says if they tighten up the 12-minute sonic explorations, they could become Captain Beefheart, and if they don't, they'll be the angry Yes. They already have a helping of sadness: sideman Jeremy Ward was found dead in his home in Los Angeles on May 25. Full judgment is reserved pending live show, when their indulgences will either be channelled or unleashed. You have been warned.

PLAY
Replay
(Columbia/Sony)

At first glance, listeners may think Play is just another carefully produced girl band. In this case, looks do not deceive. This cute, young quartet rock their way through Radio Disney-friendly pop songs in a way only Sugar Jones or All Saints could. Even groups like Atomic Kitten jump to mind. Throughout the album, Play wavers into R&B, pure pop and a little bit of rock, doing so with the aid of a whole host of writers, producers and stylists. Take it for what it is, a delightfully fluffy bit of filler with some swell songs. But don't look to this recording for depth or ingenuity.

VARIOUS ARTISTS
Reggae Gold 2003
(VP Records/Virgin)

Reggae Gold 2003 features big name dancehall artists mashing it up with some lesser known acts. The remix album has bits and pieces of familiar songs, stitched together in winding-and-grinding way. There's no middle ground for this compilation, you'll either love it or hate it. Sean Paul has been making waves on the North American scene recently, but before his rise he was popular in Jamaica with musical acts like Bounty Killer, Elephant Man and T.O.K. Also featured are Dutchess and the famous Tanya Stephens.

VARIOUS ARTISTS
Soca Gold 2003
(VP Records/Virgin)

You don't often hear much about the soca music scene, but there exists an enormous community of artists, musicians, DJs devoted to the genre. It is a sort of music that fits with hot weather grooving, meaning there's not a better time of the year to launch a record devoted to the music. Think dance, but add a whole heap of spice, rhythm and joie de vivre. Even the now popular Indian Bhangra style melds with soca on one song. Like dancehall, it may not appeal to everyone, but this compilation stands as a testament to the present music makers offering a fairly comprehensive look into the world of soca.

The Who
Live at the Royal Albert Hall
(SPV)

Townshend, Daltrey and Entwistle weren't just going through the motions when they reunited to play this 2000 benefit for the Teenage Cancer Trust. Sounding more passionate and focused than we had a right to expect, they joyously attacked the Who catalogue that night — with guests like Eddie Vedder, Bryan Adams, Noel Gallagher and Paul Weller rising to the occasion. At his best, Townshend can bring a tear to your eye one moment — as he does in a newly written autobiographical verse in The Kids Are Alright — and make you laugh the next: Check out what he substitutes for "yeah!" at the end of the bridge in Baba O'Riley.

YEGOR DYACHKOV, CELLO.
JEAN SAULNIER, PIANO
Brahms Cello Sonatas
(Analekta FL 2 3167)

The rerecording of classical repertoire proceeds apace. Denis Brott and pianist Glen Montgomery performed Brahms's Cello Sonatas well enough for Analekta in 1994. Now Yegor Dyachkov and Jean Saulnier have a go on the same Quebec label. The playing is comparable in insight, the newcomers bringing more vitality and freshness to the Sonata Op. 99, the veterans tapping a fuller vein of lyricism in the transcribed Violin Sonata Op. 78. Engineering gives the edge to the new disc: There is more air around the instruments and the tone is less grainy. For the Sonata Op. 38 you are cordially invited to prefer the Rostropovich-Serkin version discussed above.

Depp's preparation gives brass jitters

Movies

By Jamie Portman
CANWEST NEWS SERVICE

Johnny Depp has been back in California for two reasons.

He's here to do promotion for Disney's Pirates Of The Caribbean, in which he plays a raffish buccaneer named Jack Sparrow. But he figures it's also time to remove a controversial element in his characterization — the gold caps on his front teeth — before he returns home to France.

At the end of filming several months ago, he decided to keep the gold in place in case he was called back for reshoots. "Three weeks passed and they said no, we're not doing reshoots, and by this time I was over in Europe and I realized I was 5,000 miles away from the dentist who had put these things on. And you know, you can't go to any guy because he'll just start grinding your teeth away. I just got back to Los Angeles the day before yesterday, so hopefully I can get them off."

The gold teeth were Depp's own idea and they gave the Disney brass the jitters when he had them done. In fact, when it came to the way he approached his character, they were nervous about a lot of things. In fact, Pirates Of The Caribbean offers a fascinating illustration of what happens when a gifted but idiosyncratic actor accepts a role in a big summer studio movie.

In the film opening July 9, the 40-year-old actor's portrait of piracy is predictably quirky, meaning that it's definitely off centre. Jack Sparrow keeps losing his balance, he slurs his speeches, and his swagger often turns into a stagger. But he's also imbued with a mischievous charm as he pursues his single-minded goal of regaining the ship that has been taken from him.

Jack wears a red bandana and black eye makeup. His hair is beaded and he has three braids dangling from his chin. And his teeth are gold. Depp loved the idea of giving this 18th century buccaneer a Rastafarian look. But he says the main inspiration for this character was Rolling Stones guitarist Keith Richards with a bit of everybody's favorite cartoon skunk, Pepe Le Pew, thrown in for good measure.

"I was trying to figure the pirates of the 18th century and what it was all about. Initially you think money and all that. But I think it also had much more to do with freedom and to be out there moving forward. I sort of thought that pirates would be the rock and roll stars of the 18th century. The greatest rock and roll star of all time, the coolest rock and roll star of all time, is Keith Richards — hands down. And Keith is very — I mean, you spend time with him and he's very much a pirate."

But when it came to conveying Jack Sparrow's romantic nature, Depp immediately thought of Pepe Le Pew.

"What I love about Pepe Le Pew is that this guy is absolutely convinced that he's a great lady's man. And he's a skunk! You're watching those cartoons and this guy falls deeply in love with this cat, and the cat clearly despises him.

But Pepe Le Pew takes it that she's playing hard to get — that she's shy, poor thing. I loved that character's blindness — no matter what the actual reality is, this guy sees only what he wants to see."

Depp considers Pepe Le Pew "the sort of character who was able "to run between the raindrops." And that, he says, is how he envisaged Jack Sparrow.

Depp's take is far removed from such great cinematic pirates of the past as Douglas Fairbanks and Errol Flynn. Indeed, his use of eye shadow caused almost as much consternation as the gold choppers.

"I remember seeing photographs of the Tauregs — nomads in Africa — and the Berbers. They took coal — you know, charcoal, and lined their eyes . . . it's protection from reflections on the sand and the water. It's also a medicinal thing." So Depp promptly called for the mascara. "It's like an athlete of today putting the black stripes on his face."

But Disney bosses were still freaking out — and producer Jerry Bruckheimer found himself running interference.

"I loved what he was doing," Bruckheimer says. "It scares you the first time you see it because he's so out there . . .

but it just works beautifully. But yeah, you always get a young executive who's 26 years old and says:

"My God, what are they doing there? They've got a pirate with mascara on!"

Bruckheimer's biggest battle was over the gold teeth. "I got caught in the middle," he laughs now. An anguished studio executive called Bruckheimer: "You gotta get those gold teeth out. They're scary." Bruckheimer sought a compromise. "You know what's going to happen?" he warned Depp. "They (the audience) are going to be watching your gold teeth. They're not going to be watching your performance. They're going to be fixated on your mouth. I don't think you want that."

Depp thought it over. "You're right," he finally replied, and reduced the caps by two.

Yes, Mr. Bean speaks English

Movies

By Jamie Portman
CANWEST NEWS SERVICE

People are constantly surprised that Rowan Atkinson can talk.

It seems they know him only for his work as the speechless Mr. Bean in the legendary television series, as the peculiar bloke who prefers to communicate through his frantically mobile eyebrows and manic grin.

The truth, of course, is different: Atkinson has had plenty of speaking roles throughout his career — in other TV series like Blackadder and The Thin Blue Line as well as in movies like Four Weddings And A Funeral and Rat Race.

But such has been the international impact of his Bean portrayal that many fans know him only as the comedian who never speaks. He's even run into this misconception in the course of doing interviews for his new film, Johnny English, in which he plays a bumbling British secret service agent.

"Oh yes, I got a lot of that when I went to promote the movie in Germany," Atkinson says cheerfully. "I had a lot of young journalists saying: 'Oh, I did not know you could talk.' At this point Atkinson, 48, is starting to sound like Arnold Schwarzenegger as he mimics an incredulous interviewer marvelling at the fact that he can talk "bet-ter" than most people. "And I say: 'That's very kind of you, but actually I've been talking for years.'"

His only concern after playing Bean was that audiences would be unwilling to accept him as "a character who talks." But that's ceased to be a worry in view of the box-office showing of Johnny English, a movie that doesn't open in North America until July 18, but which has already raked in more than $100 million elsewhere.

Atkinson has a lot to say in the new movie. But he seems particularly amused by his line or so of Japanese — although the actual speech is far naughtier than what the subtitles show in the film.

"What I'm actually saying in Japanese is not what the caption is translating," Atkinson says impishly. "The caption is something completely different because we had to censor what I do say. What I said in Japanese was 'may all your daughters be born with large penises' — but we couldn't get away with that ... so the English caption says: 'May all your daughters be born with three bottoms.'"

Atkinson's, 48, not convinced he possesses an extraordinary talent. He only feels secure as a funnyman when he's in front of the camera or proper live audience.

"I remember standing up in front of my classmates when I was about 11 doing something in the sports changing room — I can't remember what it was, probably an impersonation of somebody — and hearing people laugh at it. But it was a rare event, and once adolescent self-consciousness set in, I never did it again in front of friends and classmates."

Atkinson believes that he functions best when he is able to exercise some control over his projects and the people he works with. He cites his long association with writer Richard Curtis — a friend since their first meeting at Oxford. Curtis encouraged him to pursue a show business career and also became a valued colleague who helped him invent the character of Mr. Bean and served as writer or co-writer on many of his projects.

Despite the worldwide success of Johnny English — which is inspired by a series of 90-second British credit card commercials in which he played an accident-prone spy — Atkinson still finds himself brooding over the end result.

"What's this scene doing here? Why isn't it shorter? Why isn't it funnier? Why didn't I do this, that, or the other thing? But that's the nature of the perfectionist in me. I think what we ended up with is pretty funny. It's got some good jokes."

Neal Purvis and Robert Wade, two writers involved in the last two James Bond films, were hired to work on a Johnny English. It has a deliberately preposterous story line about a French billionaire (John Malkovich) whose theft of the Crown jewels from the Tower of London is merely the first step in a diabolical conspiracy to have himself crowned King of England.

Rowan plays supersleuth Johnny English — the last hope of the B.S.S. (that's short for British Secret Service) to save the nation from a fate worse than death. But as Atkinson points out, Johnny has his problems:

"He's a fatuous smug man who wants to do things his own way and doesn't have a great grip on reality and always comes out with the most ridiculously convoluted solutions to problems when actually there's always a simple one." And Atkinson adored playing him.

"What's interesting to me about the film is that it's not really a spoof. It's a proper spy movie that happens to have more jokes and a more ridiculous central character than you would normally find. A lot of the time, we were just keen to tell the story and let the jokes fall out in quite a natural way."

Doc Walker, Gregory headline Brome Fair

Country music fans are always anxious for the Brome County Agricultural Fair, and they won't be disappointed with this year's line-up.

In the past, organizers have signed great acts like Paul Brandt, Michelle Wright, The Oak Ridge Boys, Terri Clark and Leahy.

This year, Saturday night's entertainment (8:30 p.m. is Doc Walker, a Canadian group which has built a sizable fan base with the release of their album Curve.

Doc Walker have pushed the boundaries to stay away from the trends of country music today. Their live shows offer a mix of rock and pop country, which appeals to the younger audience.

The group was awarded Country Radio Group of the Year 2003, and was nominated for a Juno 2003.

Sunday night's entertainment will feature a performance by young Canadian Country Artist, Adam Gregory at 8:30 p.m. Gregory was nominated for CCMA 2002 Male Artist of the Year and Fan's Choice.

The Way I'm Made, Gregory's debut CD, was released when he was only 14 years old, and the promotion along with touring gave him a very particular lifestyle for a teenager. This first album was very successful, with four hit singles: 'Horse-shoes', 'Only Know I Do', 'No Vacancy' and 'Big Star'.

His sophomore release, Workin' On It, is a logical follow up for Gregory. It offers a nice mixture of up-tempo songs and ballads. The themes are similar to those on the first album. The difference is that Gregory has matured—he's not afraid to experiment.

David C. Martin produced the album, and also co-wrote some of the material found on the collection. Adam Gregory co-wrote two songs: 'Walking', about searching for the meaning of life, and 'Memory Like That', a beautiful ballad that describes the feelings of falling in love. On Workin' Ont It, Gregory also worked with some renowned tunesmiths including Canadian composer Stephan Moccio, who wrote the title track for Celine Dion's 2002 release, A New Day Has Come. Moccio penned 'Don't Think So' for Gregory's album.

Gregory also co-wrote the beautiful, 'Don't Look The Other Way' with Jim Witter, and recorded 'Sweet Memories', which is written by country mega star Garth Brooks.

Another interesting collaboration is with 'When I Leave This House', written by Tom Wilson and Colin James, on which Gregory duets with country hunk Billy Ray Cyrus.

As for the title track of the album, it's a pretty special song about two people working on a relationship.

The Brome Fair runs from Aug. 29 to Sept. 1. Admission is $9 for adults.

Watch for the upcoming Brome Fair contest in Country Connection.
