BANKRUPTCY LAW.—We believe the attempt to construct a bankruptcy law, which will be pleasant to creditors, is very much like the attempt of the accommodating executioner, who is to be the law for protection of the debtor, of the thief he was fogging, at last despaired of giving satisfaction, strike where he would.

ALL that is possible for a bankrupt must of necessity be a losing business. It rarely takes place unless the business has been so badly managed that the best management must fail to rescue creditors from very severe damage, and the estate being taken out of the hands of the person most competent to manage it well and cheaply, is unavoidably consigned to the hands of officials, who are bound to execute the sanctions of judges and sanctions of creditors, which are in their nature cumbersome and therefore costly. The truth is that a bankruptcy must be regarded as a calamity to be met with the best of us, and we shall attain that end most surely by ascertaining what the causes of the misfortune are possible, and confining our efforts to them rather than by attempting impossibilities. All that is possible for creditors to do with an insolvent debtor is unfortunately too easily summed up. First they may take all the property he possesses, so far as it comes to them, by stopping his business previous to his making a bad case worse. Then they may examine him, and his books, detect fraud if possible, and punish it if found out. The bill of which we supply a synopsis in another column, professes, if it becomes law, to provide for all these objects, but it is higher for protection of the creditor than for the benefit of the debtor. It is more for the creditor than for the debtor, and for the reasons we have already given, and for the additional one—that the truly difficult attending a bankruptcy law lies not in its enactment, but in its administration.

Mr. Stone may declare that the bankrupt shall give up all his property, and that he will not be a dishonest man, how are you to enforce such an enactment against all the dodges, which a party intimately acquainted with his own concerns may resort to before the bankruptcy or may resort to at the time of the bankruptcy. You must not put the fraud of the debtor on your conscience, but you do not diminish one bit the difficulty of establishing fraud so as to secure its punishment. You may even adopt the expedient of keeping a bankrupt without the release which he obtains from the allowance of his creditors, and place him in the hands of officials, to be kept in prison, but you gain not one penny in the 2 more for the benefit of the creditors. We believe that nearly all that can be done has been done by the English consolidation of the bankruptcy laws passed in 1849, under the auspices of the late Lord Brougham, and Mr. Alley's bill, because it is based upon the British Act, and seems to follow it pretty closely in all its details. Where it falls to follow its example, it generally goes wrong.

Both the existing English law and Mr. Alley's bill are in many respects identical with the old English bankruptcy law, and with that which prevailed here until it was—imprudently it appears to us—allowed to expire. The changes are chiefly directed to taking the administration of bankrupt estates out of the hands of creditors and placing them in the hands of officials, to be made to be necessary in England, to avoid the collisions which too frequently occur between the bankrupt and creditors, who might be of service to him in getting his certificates, and also to destroy the idea of creditors being able to make more in their capacity of assignees than they lost by the failure of their debtor to pay his debt.

The great principle running through all the laws is, that any creditor, after testing the insolvency of his debtor, may sue him for the debt, and the debtor to wind up his estate for the benefit of all concerned. The chief modifications of the old law are the substitution of official assignees, not hampered with other business, for the trade assignees in the administration of the estate, and the measures of the Court of Commissioners, who are to be appointed in England, as the measures of the Court to support the law, to reduce to poverty both parents and daughters of those noble families with whom they are famous.

When Nelson's famous signal was given—"England expects every man to do his duty"—two Scotchmen were standing on deck, and one of them put on a long, fair face, and said, "My dear Sir, there's a little more to be said, and Scotland?" "Hoot, hoot," said Sandy, "and land ken weel her bairns say to their father, 'I've a hint to thy Englishers!'"

SEVERAL ENGLISH GOVERNMENTS IN RUSSIA have been advised to return, on grounds of expediency, as the measures of the Court to support the law, to reduce to poverty both parents and daughters of those noble families with whom they are famous.

Osgood, Oct. 13th, 1854.
I feel me great pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the "OLD GLING OIL." I have sold it out, and have always found it to cure in all cases of external injuries,
sprains, Rheumatic Pains, Burns
the Galls, Lumps and Swellings
of the skin.

The numerous extraordinary
cures, under my own observation,
have made me a warm advocate of it. Afterwards received a large and useful effect of your oil place; the
