MONTREAL PRODUCE MARKET TENDENCIES

What They Protend

(The Gleaner Correspondent)

Practically every commodity has showed a sharp advance in price this winter. In some cases the blame was placed on world short ages, in others the coal situation or transportation charges and taxes were advanced as the reason, but to the average man the causes do not seem to be original, the conditions given for their jumps not being new. How then will it affect the farmer? The Montreal market which absorbs the greater part of the produce from southern Quebec is if anything below normal. Butter last week dropped in price one to one and a half cents and the supply offered so far this winter is practically 150,000 packages more than during the same time last year. Cheese likewise is down, and here despite the fact that the production has been over three hundred thousand boxes less than during a similar period last year. This tends to show that Quebec marketing conditions are ineffectual in maintaining a reasonable price for the producer in the face of an advancing market for his own necessities. When dealing with dairy produce mention might be made of the coming into force of revised regulations regarding butter and cheese. Inspectors have been appointed in Montreal to carry out this work, one being Mr. Monaghan, formerly factory inspector in the District of Beauharnois. The object is to have these inspectors grade all butter and cheese and grade it on the following points: Flavor 45, Texture 25, Closeness 15, Colour 10, Finish 5. The grading will result in the following classifications: Special grade 94 points and over; First grade or finest 92 and under 94; Second grade 87 an under 92; Third grade under 87.

Butter is also to be graded and on the following basis: Flavour 45; Texture 15, Incorporation of Moisture 10, Colour 10, Salting 10, Packing 10. These will result in the folowing classifications: Special Grade 94 and over; First Grade 92 and under 94; Second Grade 87 and under 92; Third Grade under 87.

In regard to these rules the following stipulation should be watched by the factorymen: "All packages containing butter or cheese shall be marked at the factory in the following manner:— Every churning of butter shall be given a number and this number shall be marked plainly and legibly on the side of each package containing said butter. Every vat or batch of cheese shall be given a number and this number shall be plainly marked on all the cheese from the vat or in the batch, and on all boxes containing said cheese." The penalties are a fine up to $200 and not less than $50, or to imprisonment not exceeding three months.

The result of this grading will be watched with interest and well informed men in the trade believe that if the inspection is carried out in a practicable manner a great deal of good may be done and the name of Canada's products enhanced on the European markets.

The Beef Trade

Regarding this phase of the market conditions are unstable. The lifting of the embargo by England has made an outlet possible and the ground is now open for experimental work. News of the arrivals of the first shipments in England have been received and the reports are encouraging. We should not, however, let our anticipations run away from us, for the small farmers in all the British Isles are out to beat us out. With them it is a serious matter, and they will strive to produce at a lower cost and so undersell us on the Liverpool and Glasgow markets. In all frankness it must be admitted that some of the stuff that is offered for sale on the Montreal market, and suggested as suitable for this export business, is useless. A beef animal that will pay for the extra handling and transportation costs, must be one that can put on weight and rapidly. The fattening process in England must be rapid, and lots of the local stuff have not the inherent characteristics for such a thing. If the farmers who sell on the Montreal market, think that this British business is worth going after, then they should study the market conditions and market necessities and make their plans accordingly. It is possible to sell much on this new market, and many farms, which perhaps are not suited for intensive dairying, can be made to produce a good living by beef raising.

ORMSTOWN SHOW PLANS RAPIDLY PROGRESSING

Prize List Being Distributed This Week

With the snow leaving the ground the directors of the Ormstown show are getting to work with their plans for the season. While it is hoped that the show will not suffer from weather such as was uncorked last year, still if the worst comes to the worst the grounds will be in better shape than before. A great deal of grading has been for the year and the whole of the area around the Arena will have a complete and permanent appearance.

In the Prize List the chief addition from other years is the large number of prizes offered by the Federal Live Stock department for grade heifers. These prizes, totaling $1,000 in all, are to be divided among the grades of the different breeds and should bring out a large number of new exhibitors. It will be a wonderful opportunity for men with good grade stock to enter into competition, for naturally the prize money offered for grades at previous shows would not permit many farmers with grade stocks to compete and make any margin of profit out of the event. Those who have stock should get busy and fit them the show. Copies of the prize list can be obtained either from the Secretary or the printers, Sellar Bros.

As usual particular care is being given to the progam in the Arena and many cups and special prizes are being offered for the horse classes.

WAS A DANGEROUS FLOOD POSSIBLE?

A Weak Dam at Chateaugay Threatened the Countryside

The danger of a flood in the springtime is governed by the amount of snow that is lying in the fields and in the mountains, but according to Mr. J. B. Cooper of Huntingdon, the people in the lowlands of the Chateauguay Valley were in a more dangerous position. A few years ago he was up around Chateauguay Lake and went to the old Forge to look over surroundings of bye-gone days. Standing near the dam he was struck by the fact that it was bent back by the pressure of the water and was being undermined. "Fearing a second Johnstown flood, which would wipe out the American village of Chateaugay and all the villages on this side of the border I decided something should be done. All the water for 20 miles back was being held in check by this old dam and as it was from 15 to 20 feet deep and in many places one mile wide in the event of the dam breaking the disaster would be terrible. I communicated with our member, the Hon. Mr. Robb and he took the question up at Ottawa. In consequence American engineers investigated the situation and condemned the old dam and I am glad to say that to-day there is one of the finest dams in all the North country erected on the upper reaches of the Chateaugay. Not a resident on the Chateauguay from end to end but what is benefitted by this new cement dam."

Yesterday morning Mr. Cooper received the following letter from the Hon. Mr. Robb:—

Ottawa, April 10th, 1923

My Dear Cooper:

I have yours of April 7th and am glad to know that the dam at Chateauguay Lake has been made perfectly safe. I remember very well your speaking to me about it and I communicated with Sir Robert Borden, who was then Prime Minister and he passed the word on to Washington.

You surely are deserving of commendation for having brought this to the attention of the government.

Yours faithfully
JAMES A. ROBB

To Abandon Passenger Service to Mooers

It is reported that passenger service on the Mooers Branch of the D. & H. will be discontinued on and after April 24. Notice to this effect have been posted on the company's bulletin boards. This branch, which was once a part of the old Plattsburgh and Montreal Railroad, has been carrying passengers continuously since 1851. The discontinuation of the passenger service on this road is viewed with consternation by people living at Scotia and elsewhere on the branch.

ST. LOUIS RIVER MAY BE DREDGED

Montreal La Patrie Tells of Proposal

The people along the St. Louis river around St. Louis de Gonzague and St. Etienne have been anxious to have the river dredged for many years, but the incompleted work has never been carried out. Last year petitions were signed by over 200 farmers and sent to the authorities, but nothing was done last year. However, on Monday night La Partie carried the following news item, which may foretell a start in the dredging operations:

Another dredging scheme is on its way towards realization and that is the dredging of the St. Louis river. This river originates between the villages of Ste. Barbe and St. Stanislas and runs through the parishes of St. Louis de Gonzague and Saint-Etienne, emptying into Lake St. Louis at Beauharnois, being a distance of 20 miles from its source. From 1884 to 1886, before the district was populated, a connecting canal was dug from Grosse Pointe to Lake St. Francis. This work was 4 miles long and cost approximately $50,000, including the bridges. This canal was dug to bring water from Lake St. Francis to the mills and factories near the Simon Bridge. From 1905 to 1916, $82,000 was spent in improving this channel. This time the demand is for the dredging of three miles more. In view of the fact that the work being incomplete a large number of farmers have been forced to leave their farms because two-thirds of the land along the St. Louis river is under water most of the year, this work seems to be urgently required. The cost of this dredging and of irrigating these lands is estimated to be $76,000. Plans have been drawn for some time and have been submitted to the Federal Governent engineers."

Whether this means that work is to be done is by no means certain and any who might know were reticent when asked for a statement.

LEADING MERCHANT DIES IN VALLEYFIELD

Founder of the House of Dion Ltee. Dies

On April 9th Eusebe Dion, founder of la Cie Dion Limitee died at the age of 93 years. Mr. Dion by his own efforts built up one of the largest departmental stores outside of the large cities and it stands as a mounment to his business abilities. Mr. Dion was born at St. Timothee in 1830 and lived in that village until eighteen years old when he left for the Eastern Townships. He returned to his native village two years later and established himself in the lumber and feed business. When 32 years of age he moved to Valleyfield and started a small grocery store which developed into the tremendous busness that dominated the view of Valleyfield from the Bay.

Daniel Dion, the present Mayor of Valleyfield is his son. A daughter is the wife of Mr. Paul Mercier, representative in the Federal parliament for Westmount-St. Henry.

EVERLASTING BOILERS

In some parts of England it is possible to find small steam boilers which were installed anywhere from 50 to 100 years ago. These boilers are still at work and are kept at work more for sentimental reasons than because of their high efficiency. They provide, however, active witness to the excellence of British engineering. A short time ago a leading British boiler expert had the curiosity to subject two old iron boilers, probably about 60 years old, to careful tests. He found that the old iron stood up astonishingly well under heavy hydraulic pressure, and he noted particularly that the slight cracks which had been formed round the rivet holes in the original punching had not extended during the working life of the boilers. Thus he proved that the old kind of iron used in these British boilers was hardly surpassed by the material employed in the finest up-to-date plant.

Daylight Saving

Whether humanity ever grows up, or is dominated by habit, is a question likely to be asked when daylight saving is a public issue. Why by advancing the clock one hour it is easier to get up one hour earlier—for that is the root of the scheme—should be a matter that must yearly be adjudicated upon, is a mystery. It is admitted that by getting to work earlier during the hot summer months a saving of energy and time is made, but why shouldn't those who want to start earlier and close sooner do so without legislation being passed for the purpose? There is no governmental law saying when a man must open or close his business, and by merely setting the hands of his alarm clock he can effect the saving he desires. But no! He must make himself believe that he is running true to his usual habits. A democracy likes to wish its pleasures and desires unto others, whether they so consider them or not, and in consequence we have the yearly squabbles over daylight saving.

The decision of Montreal was important. Those living in the country who have to go to the City on business, last year found it embarrassing when they tried to get in a full day's work with the business houses closing at 4 p. m. standard time. This year the municipal authorities decided that the standard time was the best and things remain as they are. Candidly it must be admitted that the one and only Mederic did not stage the event with the settings that are expected of him. Pile upon pile of petitions is an old effect. He might have borrowed the plan of the State of Connecticut where a bill has been introduced making it a jail offence for anyone to tamper with the hands of a clock! There have been some rare discoveries in the ancient tombs of Egypt, and many wise men have gone into raptures over some sort of wooden horse discovered there. The wonder is what will be thought if some hundreds of centuries from now a digger discovers some of the records concerning this generation's daylight saving battles.

Revenue and Expense

By releasing information regarding the receipts and expenditures of the past year the Finance department is paving the way for the new Budget. So on Monday it was learned that while ordinary revenue last year exceeded the ordinary expenditure by some seventy-seven millions, nevertheless the country is forty-five millions more in debt than ever. In this month of April when Income Tax returns have to be made it is discouraging to read such facts, for they foreshadow the fact that the income tax and other taxes of like nature cannot be removed for years and years. Again the discouraging speeches which have been made at Ottawa this session would almost lead a person to believe that the country is going to the dogs.

Last year it was stated the national debt of the country was two and a half billions, a figure we can't follow, and this week's quotations of revenues and expenditures show that the government handled some 384 millions—figures that are equally beyond the average ken. It would at a first glance look as though the financing of the country was getting beyond the ordinary understanding, but now and then illuminating statistics are issued by the departments that show things are not so bad as some would paint them. For instance the agricultural statistics show that the lordly barn-yard rooster is a considerable asset to the country. If all the hens and other like fowl, excepting the ducks, turkeys and geese, were to be sold to-morrow the country should realize over thirty-three millions, or very close unto the amount realized by the excise department last year. If all the farm poultry were sold the revenue would fall only 18 millions short of what the income tax paid last year—and the clamour raised over the proportions of incomes which have to go to the government coffers would infer a belief that all the year's earnings were being given up—so there are liars some place for hens are not main assets on a farm or village back-yard.

The national wealth of the Dominion when estimated in things we understand, is tremendous. While farming is one of the most important means of gaining a living in Canada, the stories told by the western members during the immigration debate would infer the belief that there was nothing but bankruptcy in the business. Yet the figures show that in cattle, horses, sheep and swine, the Dominion has assets of 681 millions of dollars, or nearly a third of the gross national debt.

There is no need for us getting discouraged about the future. The right class of citizens need not be scared from entering our lands. Canada is large enough and wealthy enough to make its way and pay its debts, but a more earnest application of the principle of spending only what we earn would help the present considerably.

The Moose Jaw Result

The result in Moose Jaw comes as little surprise to most people. In the 1921 elections Mr. Johnston was elected by over nine hundred in a 3 cornered fight, and his unseating created no disgusting scandal. He did not come before the Progressive convention as a candidate and the Farmer who took the field was a former Conservative. The Liberals put up Mr. Knowles of the city of Moose Jaw, who had represented them in the House before. He was decisively defeated. The bye-election merely proves that the Progressives are just as strong as ever in the hearts of the prairie electors, and that the Liberals have gained no ground as a party. That is about the only moral that can be gained from the contest. Mr. King knows that he is in power without the unquestioned backing of straight party men from the West, but as the policy of general support to him by the Progressives on main issues has been obvious, the result shows that the West is satisfied with that policy.

At Ottawa the result makes no change. The Liberals carry on as before, with retrenchment of expenditures without stepping on too many political corns the only safe policy for keeping general support in the country at large. Another step in that direction was shown last week when announcement was made that a number of the Government ships were to be sold. The merchant marine showed another loss last year, but being a smaller amount than other business schemes of the Dominion, it has caused less comment. Gradually a withdrawal from the public ownership business is being made, and in consequence a saving results to the country.

ORMSTOWN

The secretary of the Ormstown Village School Commission received a letter from the Hon. Honore Mercier this week stating that the Quebec Government would grant $4000.00 towards the building of a new addition to the present school building.

At a meeting of the Parish School Commissioners held on Monday evening there were twelve applications for the five schools requiring teachers. Applications from the following teachers were accepted, Miss Florence G. Dunn for No. 1 Stoney Creek; Miss Lilian Brown, No. 5 Upper Ormstown; Miss Florence Nussey No. 6 Grant's and Miss Mary C. Simpson for No. 13 Tatehurst.

On account of high water our electric light service has not been of much benefit of late, Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights there being no light at all as a consequence church service in the three churches were cancelled at night.

Messrs. J. H. Tomson and Sydney W. Tomson sent a valuable box of books over to the Academy this week as a gift to the school library, needless to say this new stock of books will be much appreciated by the scholars and others as a source of knowledge.

Mr. Blackburn of late connected with the Family Herald and Weekly Star of Montreal takes over the Bulletin business on April 25th. The village and community will miss J. H. Tomson and S. W. Tomson as they were always public spirited men and ready to boost anything that they thought would be a benefit to the community.

At a regular meeting of the Village school commission held on Tuesday evening a resolution was passed tendering Mr. J. H. Tomson and son a sincere vote of thanks for the valuable gift of books they had presented to the school library. Miss Jean McNaughton was re-engaged as teacher in the elementary department.

The commission decided to call a public meeting of the ratepayers on Friday evening April 20th, to discuss the building of a new wing to the Academy.

HOWICK

Miss Roach of Macdonald college again visited Howick last week and gave an interesting address to the ladies of the Homemakers' Club on the general objects of the Association. Miss Roach is always welcomed as a clear and concise speaker and has many engagements to fill in the Province of Quebec.

There is considerable agitation at present amongst the farming community on account of the unbalanced condition of the market between what the farmer has to purchase and what he has to sell. The best farmers in this community have had great difficulty during the last few years to balance income and expenditure and many are losing ground. The demand for milk in Montreal is slacking off and is causing much inconvenience and reducing the farmers' income. Many are shipping their surplus to the States. The Howick factory has opened for the manufacture of butter and cheese. Butter in pound packages is sold here for fifty cents.

The spring thaw arrived unusually late this season and sleighing continues. The ice is still firm in the rivers although it generally disappears before the first of April. Maple sap is beginning to drop from the trees where the sun's rays reach them but the air is too frosty yet for an abundant run.

Mr. Daniel Craig, who has resided for many years in Howick since retiring from farming on Fertile Creek is again taking up farming and has moved to the property on the old Chateauguay river which he has bought from George McArthur. His bakery has changed hands several times since he disposed of the business. Bread is sold in Howick from Montreal, St. Martine and St. Louis as well as by the Howick baker.

As there is a larger quantity of wood than usual brought to Howick this winter, sawyers are in demand and four different machines have been at work, the old saw and sawhoses seldom being used. The latest and quickest device for sawing is one supplied by T. Carson who utilizes his Ford machine by attaching a shaft and pulley to the saw shaft. The car hauls the whole apparatus itself where required.

BAD FIRE AT FRANKLIN CENTRE

Last Saturday evening about 10 p.m. Mr. Joseph Supernault had the misfortune to have his house catch fire from the chimney, and the house and contents were totally destroyed. The family were all in bed and only got out in their night clothes. It was very hard on Mrs. Supernault as she was carried out on a bed, with a nine day old baby. It was with difficulty that the children were saved. Mr. Fred Supernault, brother of Joseph, got his face badly burned rescuing the children. Mr. and Mrs. Supernault Sr. and Mr. Joseph's family were all taken over to Mr. Broux as they were the nearest neighbors and are there at present.

Mrs. Supernault is in bed under the doctor's care but the rest are well. It was a sad blow to them, as they had just got the house enlarged and newly furnished all through last year. It was insured, but not enough to cover half the loss, Mr. Supernault will build again this summer.

Mr. William Hanna is not as well as his many friends would wish to see him.

Last Friday Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Dickenson, Miss Hazel and Master John Dickenson and Romeo Demars, emptied the water out of two thousand sap buckets in an hour. Who says Franklin people aren't smart.

Last Friday Mr. Herbert Rowe drove to Ormstown in his car after his daughter and the Misses Clara Blair and Elsie Johnson, who are attending school at Ormstown, and he had very bad roads to get over. Coming home he had to be drawn out of a snow drift had no accident happen to the car.

A block away from the hotel Barney parted from Old Jimmie. For a space Barney thought of his partner. Barney had quick eyes which were quite capable of taking in two things at once; and while he had seen the excited glow his final speech had brought back into Maggie's face, he also had caught that swift look of uncertainty in the lean, cunning face of Old Jimmie; a look of one who is eager to go on, yet sees himself frustrated by his own eagerness. To Barney it was a puzzling, suspicious look.

As Barney made his way toward a harbor of refreshment he wondered about Old Jimmie—not in the manner Larry had wondered about a father bringing his daughter up in crooked ways—but he wondered what kind of a man beneath his shrewd, yielding, placating manner Old Jimmie really was, how far he was to be trusted, whether he was in this game on the level or whether he was playing some very secret hand of his own.

Though he had known and worked with Old Jimmie for years, Barney had never been admitted to the inner chambers of the older man's character. He sensed that there were hidden rooms and twisting passages; and of this much he was certain, that Old Jimmie was sly and saturnine.

Well, he would be on guard that Old Jimmie didn't put anything over your obliging servant, Barney Palmer.

This was the era of legal prohibition, but thus far Barney had not been severely discommoded by the action of the representatives of America's free institutions in Washington, for Barney knew his New York. In an ex-saloon on Sixth avenue, which nominally sold only he soft drinks permitted by the wise men of the Capital, Barney leaned at his ease upon the bar and remarked, "Give me some of the real stuff, Tim, and forget that eye-dropper the boss bought you last week." Barney had a drink of the real stuff and then another drink, in the measuring of neither of which had an eye-dropper been involved.

After that, much heartened, he put two dollars on the bar and went his way. His course took the dapper Barney into three of the gayest restaurants in the Times Square section; and in these Barney paused long enough to speak to a few after-theatre supper parties. For this was the hour when Barney paid his social calls; he was very strict with himself upon this point.

Barney was really by way of being a rising figure in this particular circle of New York society composed of people who had or believed they had an interest in the theatre, of expensively gowned women the foreground of whose lives was most attractive, but whose background was perhaps wisely kept out of the picture, and of moneney young men who gloried in the idea that they were living the life. These social calls from gay table to gay table, at all of which Barney was welcome—for here Barney showed only his most attractive surfaces, his most brilliant facets—were in truth a very important part of Barney's business.

A little later, alone at a corner table in a quieter restaurant, he was eating his supper and making an inventory of his prospects. He was in a very exultant mood. The whiskey he had drunk had given broad wings to his self-satisfaction; and what he was now sipping from his teacup—it was not tea for Barney was on the proper terms with his waiter here—this draught from his tea cup tipped these broad wings at a yet more soaring angle.

Yes, Barney had certainly put it over so far. And Maggie would certainly prove a winner. Those fair women he had chatted with as he had moved from table to table—why, they'd be less than dirt compared to Maggie when Maggie was rigged out and roadied up and the stage was set. And it had been he, Barney Palmer, who had been the first to discover Maggie's latent possibilities!

He had an eye beyond mere surfaces, had Barney. He had used women in the past in putting over many of his more private transactions (and had done so partly for the reason that using women so was eminently "safe"—this despite his violent outburst of sneering disdain at Larry when the latter had spoken of safety); some of them professional sharpers, some unscrupulous actresses of the lower flight—such women as he had just chatted with in the restaurants where he had made his brief visits. But such he now recognized, were rather "blasees," rather too obvious. They were the blown rose. But Maggie was fresh, and once she was properly broken in, she would be his perfect instrument. Yes, perfect!

Barney's plans soared on. Some day, when it fitted in just right with his plans, he was going to marry Maggie. It was only recently that he had seen her full charms, and still more recently that he had determined upon marriage. That decision had materially altered certain details of the career Barney had blue-printed for himself. Barney had long regarded marriage as an asset for himself; a valuable resource which he must hold in reserve and not liquidate, or capitalize, until his own market was at its peak.

He knew that he was good looking, an excellent dancer, that he had the metropolitan finish. He had calculated that some time some rich girl, perhaps from the West, who did not know the world too well, would fall under the spell of his charms; and he would marry her promptly while she was still infatuated, before she codld learn too much about him.

Such had been Barney's idea of marriage for himself; which is very similar to ideas held by thousands of gentlemen, young and otherwise, in this broad land of ours, who consider themselves neither law-breakers nor adventurers.

But that was all changed now. Now it was Maggie, though Maggie in pursuit of their joint advantage might possibly first have to go through the marriage ceremony with some other man. Of course a very rich, very rich man! Barney already had this man marked. He hoped though, they would not have to go so far as marriage. However, he was willing to wait his proper turn. As he had told Maggie, you could not put over a big thing in a hurry.

As for Larry, he'd certainly handled that business in a swell fashion! He'd certainly put a crimp in what had been developing between Larry and Maggie. And he'd get Larry in time too. The dragnet was too large and close of mesh for Larry to hope to escape it. The word he'd slipped that boob Gavegan had sure done the business!

And the indirect way he had tipped off the police about Red Hannigan and Jack Rosenfeldt and had then made his pals think Larry had squealed—that was sure playing the game too! Jack and Red would get off easy—there was nothing on them; but little old Barney Palmer had certainly used his bean in the way he had set the machinery of the police and the underworld in motion against Larry!

While other occupants of the cafe, particularly the women, stole looks at the handsome, flawlessly dressed, interesting-looking Barney, Barney had yet another of those concoctions which the discreet waiter served in a tea-cup. He'd done a great little job, you bet! Not another man in New York could have done better. He was sure going to put Maggie across! And in doing so, he was going to do what was right by yours truly.

All seemed perfect in Barney's world. . .

And while Barney sat exulting over triumphs already achieved, and those inevitably to be achieved, Maggie lay in her new bed dreaming exultant dreams of her own; heedless of the regular snoring which resounded in the adjoining room—for the excellent Miss Grierson, while able to keep her every act in perfect form while in the conscious state, unfortunately when unconscious had no more control of the goings-on of her moral functions than the lowliest washwoman. Maggie's flights of fancy circled round and round Larry. She stifled any excuses or insurgent yearnings for him. He'd deserved what he had got. Already, contrary to his predictions, she had made a tremendous advance into her brilliant future. She would show him! Yes, she would show him! Oh, but she was going to do things!

But while she dreamed thus, shaping a magnificent destiny—an independent, self-engineered young woman, so very, very confident of the great future she was going to achieve through the supremacy of her own will and her own abilities—no slightest surmise came into her mind that Barney Palmer was making plans by which her will was to count as naught and by which he was to be the master of her fate, and that the furtive, yielding Old Jimmie was also dreaming a patient dream in which she was to be a mere chess-piece which was to capture a long-cherished game.

And yet, after all, Maggie's dreams, aside from the peculiar twist life had given them, were fundamentally just the ordinary dreams of youth; of wilful confident youth to whom but a small part of the world has yet been opened, who in fact does not yet half know its own future.

CHAPTER XI.

No prison could have been more agreeable—that is no prison from which Maggie was omitted—than this in which Larry was now confined. He had the run of the apartment; Dick Sherwood outfitted him liberally with clothing from his superabundance of the best; Judkins and the other servants treated him as the member of the family which they had been informed he was; the lively Dick, with his puppy-like friendliness, asked never an uncomfortable question, and placed Larry almost on the footing of a chum; and the whimsically smiling Miss Sherwood treated Larry exactly as she might have treated any well-bred gentleman and in every detail made good on her promise to give him a chance. In fact, in all his life Larry had never lived so well.

WHERE THE FISH ARE COMING FROM

It is a mystery to some anglers that the brook trout sinks itself in the mud during the winter season and remains there inactive until the warming sun-rays of spring awaken them and send them out again to brighten up their colors and take something internally for their health. This is not to say that the brook trout does not consume some food but certain it is not in sufficient quantity to arouse any attention. What it does obtain is such as comes within its reach. It does not move far from the place it selected in the autumn; and if mud is a hand it will sink itself in that. Many a mink, however, has taken a nice fellow out from sunken leaves and other debris, likewise has many an otter fed himself upon some of the nice fellows as the remnants on the ice will prove. In regard to the movements and the coloration of the brook trout in the spring Southara has commented:

"The angler should remembered that at no other period of the year are the changes in trout discoloration so sluggish and the time required for the changes to take place so long and uncertain as in the early spring. At this time, when trout are caught which have a dark coloration, the angler can correctly surmise that such fish have within a very few days worked out of deep water. On the other hand, if the trout have only a dull or subdued coloration he can correctly surmise that such fish have been in shallow water for at least a week, if not longer. But when quite bright colored trout are caught the angler can be certain that such trout have been in shallow water with a light bottom for some time, and that they have finished their spring cleaning by scouring theselves on gravelly and sandy bottoms. In lakes and fairly still water fo streams trout usually stay in or near the shallow water they first seek in the spring after coming out of deep water until they have finished scouring themselves, when as a rule, they will school, move to other shallow places, and by the middle of June settle in some good feeding place for the summer habitat."

At no time of the year are trout so easy to catch as at this season mainly for the reason that the fish is at a distinct disadvantage in that they are watching the bottom for food, and that the angler uses angleworms instead of flies. A brook trout moving along the bottom of the stream, much like a bottom-hugging rough fish, which sees an angleworm come rolling down does not question very much but gulps it as food a is of course caught. At the same time the larger trout are then caught because they are the first out of bed, so to speak, and heading for the shallower water. It is probable that brook trout have places where they congregate in the winter and it is at such places that the spring angler has the fish at his mercy and should of course take only a few of the fine fellows. There are those who state that it is possible to catch brook trout on flies in the early spring but I greatly doubo this. I have yet to see it done

A FORTUNE ON OLD IRON

A Frenchman has just appeared before a Paris court charged with concealing $180,000 war profits to escape taxation. When war broke out he kept a small cafe at Saint Denis, his wife attending to the inn while he peddled with a push-cart. He bought old scrap iron and made so much money that he paid $5,400,000 for the war stock of the American camp at Romorantine.

WILL THERE BE AN ELECTION?

Le Devoir and Maclean's Talk About It

Reading reports from Ottawa are apt to be tiresome, for most of the writers are bound by a particular newspaper policy and can say little or nothing independent of general party support. In Montreal Le Devoir having as a policy the belief that there is good in neither of the old parties, the Ottawa correspondent, Mr. Desrosiers, gives a freer expression of opinion than most reporters are able to.

Friday he discussed the possibility of an election and said: Rumours of a general election spread their wings from time to time, so this morning's papers print a statement of Mr. Langley of Saskatchewan on the subject. Mr. Langley affirms that the Liberals will make an appeal to the people next autumn, for they then will have passed the law rearranging the electoral districts and wil have taken precautions to cut out with minute care the Western divisions so that they may elect their candidates.

This declaration of Mr. Langley is taken with a grain of salt in the Dominion's capital, for it is recognized as electioneering strategy. By telling the Moose Jaw electors that the Liberals are preparing a mortal blow at the Progressives, the Progressive organizers hope to turn the voting sentiment in favor of Mr. Hopkins, their candidate, and against M. Knowles, champion of the Liberal party in the Prairies. Everything points to the contrary —that the Liberals will not be able to pattern the redistribution to their own personal tastes. They have not a large enough majority to make a gerrymander like Sir John A. Macdonald did in his time. And moreover each member will be there to see that no harm is done to his party in the district he represents. It is also generally believed that there will be at least one more session before dissolution. The reason is very simple. All those who are asked about a general election shrug their shoulders, for they can see no advantage in an election. A new election they say would not change the position of the parties to any extent. The only ones to profit would be perhaps the Conservatives who expect to regain ground in Ontario.

However Mr. Meighen well knows that unlesss the unforeseen happened he would be unable to take control. He would not be able to carry even 20 seats more and 20 seats would not be enough to govern, far from that.

The Progressives and the Liberals are also in the same position. That the former will lose some seats to the latter is probable, but that the Liberals will be able to again carry a solid Quebec and Nova Scotia, and the same number of ridings in Ontario is beyond all possibility.

In the meantime every one is at peace. The Liberals cannot do all they try, lacking a solid majority, but they are in power enjoying the remnants of patronage which are not to be despised, creating senators and judges, in fact enjoying all the benefits of the party in power. And all the members are likewise at peace. They draw their fat parliamentary indemnities, paying the kindness of the capital by making short addresses here and there. They are careful not to be too troublesome in order that they may so remain for a long time. . . . .The chiefs naturally are less apathetic. They are anxious for the future. They also have their organizations to prepare, their platforms to make in order to gain the victory. But what will be done before an appeal is made to the people is hard to say. It is difficult to force events and a union of parties will only be accomplished under the irresistible pressure of circumstances. So if after another appeal to the people the Liberals return with 15 or 20 members less and the two opposition parties with as many more we would probably meet with an alliance of some sort. But, to-day, the Liberals are satisfied with dividing the spoils with no one and the Progressives and the Conservatives can do nothing. They are too weak to either displace or to take their place. All that the Opposition can hope for is a gain of some seats which will also leave them incapable of forming the government of the country.

Nevertheless the unforeseen situation which will open the way to an appeal to the country can happen at any time. The by-elections can do this, but that is not certain. So a Liberal victory in Moose Jaw can give them hopes of making a break in the West, but . . . .

Likewise in Maclean's, the well informed writer, Mr. J. K. Munro says: Now is there anything to indicate that Tory Ontario is being coaxed away from the idols of other days? That the Progressive wave in the banner province is receding is abundantly evident. But the constituencies that sent Farmers to the present House give every evidence of sending Tories to the next. In fact everything leads to the conclusion that a new election would bring the old parties much closer together. Consequently the Prairies have before them the opportunity of holding the balance of power in the next Parliament, not by a measly one or two, but by a comfortable plurality. However, that can only come through united action. Unless the Grain Growers are more united in the country than their representatives are in the House, the old parties have little to fear. The one that grabs the Government can depend on the West to furnish the majority with which to carry it on!

Children of the Whirlwind

As for Miss Sherwood's aunt, a sister of Miss Sherwood' mother and a figure of pale, absent-minded dignity, she kept very much to her own sitting-room. She was a recent convert to the younger English novelists, and was forced to her seclusion by the amazing fecundity with which they kept repopulating her reading table. Larry she accepted with a hazy, preoccupied politeness, eager always to get back to the more substantial characters of her latest fiction.

Of course Miss Sherwood did not make of Larry a complete confidant. For all her smiling, easy frankness he knew that there were many doors of her being which she never unlocked for him; what he saw was so interesting that he could not help being interested about the rest.

Of course many details were open to him. She was an excellent sportswoman; a rare dancer; there were many men interested in her; she dined out almost every other evening at some social affair blooming belatedly in May (most of her friends were already settled in their country homes and she was still in town because her place on Long Island was in disorder due to a two months' delay in the completion of alterations caused by labor difficulties); she had made a study of beetles; she had a tiny vivarium in the apartment and here she would sit studying her pets with an industry and patience not unlike that of old Fabre upon his stony farm. Also, as Larry learned from her accounts, there was a day nursery on the East Side whose lack of a deficit was due to her.

All in all, she was a healthy, normal, intelligent, unselfsacrificing woman who belonged distinctly to her own day; who gave a great deal to life and took a great deal from life.

Often Larry wished she would speak of Hunt, of whom he thought daily; and such talk might yield him information about the blustering, big-hearted painter who was gypsying it down at the Duchess's. But as the days passed he never mentioned Hunt again, not even to ask where he was or what he was doing.

She was adhering very strictly to the remark she had made the night Larry came here. "I don't want to know until he wants me to know." And so Hunt remained the same incomplete picture to Larry; the painter was indubitably at home in such surroundings as these, and he was at home as a roistering, hard-working vagabond at the Duchess's—but all the vast spaces between their utterly blank, except for the sketchy remarks Hunt had made covering himself.

Larry had guessed that hurt pride was the reason for Hunt's vanishment from the world which had known him. But he knew hurt pride was not Miss Sherwood's motive for making no inquiries. Anger? No Jealousy? No. Some insult offered her? No. Larry went through the category of ordinary motives, of possible happenings; but he could find none which would reconcile her very keen and kindly feeling for Hunt with her abstinence from all inquries.

From the first day in his sanctuary Larry spent long hours every day over the accounts and documents Miss Sherwood had put in his hands. They were indeed a tangle. Originally the Sherwood estate had consisted of solid real estate holdings. But, now that Larry had before him the records of holdings and of various dealings he learned that the character of the Sherwood fortune had altered greatly.

Miss Sherwood's father had neglected the care of this sober business in favor of speculative investment and even outright gambling in stocks; and Dick, possessing this strain of his father, and lacking his father's experience, had speculated and was speculating even more wildly.

Larry had followed the market since he had been in a broker's office almost ten years earlier, so he knew what stock values had been and had some idea of what they were now. The records, and some of the stock Larry found in the safe, recalled the reputation of the elder Sherwood. He had been known as a spirited, daring man who would buy anything or sell anything. He had been several times victimized by sharp traders, some of these out and out confidence men.

Studying these old records, Larry remembered that the elder Sherwood a dozen years before had lost a hundred thousand in a mining deal which Old Jimmie Carlisle had helped manipulate.

Larry found hundreds and hundreds of thousands of stock in the safe that were just so much waste paper, and he found records of other hundreds of thousands in safety deposit vaults that had no greater value. The real estate, the more solid and to the male Sherwoods the less interesting part of the fortune had long been in the care of agents; and, since Larry was prohibited fom going out and studying the condition and true value of these holdings, he had to depend upon the book valuations and the agents' reports and letters.

Upon the basis of these valuations he estimated that some holdings were returning a loss, some a bare one and a half per cent, and some running as high as fifteen per cent. Larry found many complaints from tenants; some threatening letters from the Building Department for failure to make ordered alterations to comply with new building laws; and some rather perfunctory letters of advice and recommendation from the agents themselves.

From Miss Sherwood Larry learned that the agents were old men, friends of her father since youth, that they had both made comfortable fortunes which they had no incenive to increase. Larry judged that there was no dishonesty on the part of the agents, only laxity, and an easy adherence to the methods of their earlier years when there had not been so much competition nor so many building laws. All the same Larry judged that the real estate holdings were in a bad way.

Larry liked the days and days of this work, although the farther he went the worse did the tangle seem. It was the kind of work for which his faculties fitted him and this was the his first chance to use his factulities upon large affairs in an honest way.

Thus far his work was all diagnostic; cure, construction, would not come until later—and perhaps Miss Sherwood would not trust him with such affairs. This investigation, this checking up, involved no risk on her part as she had frankly told him. The other would; it would mean at least partial control of property, the handling of funds.

PRE-SEASON BASEBALL GOSSIP

With the snow leaving the ground the boys are beginning to talk baseball again and a league meeting is expected shortly in Chateauguay. Report from the American town are to the effect that Malone and Lyon Mountain contemplate applying for membership, but nothing definite is known. Whether these towns come in or not everything points to fast season of ball. All the clubs have the nucleus of their last year's teams and with young players developing it is expected faster teams will be available for all the games. Huntingdon should start the season with better possibilities for the schedule should not be so heavy. Last year with the local club in two leagues it became almost impossible to put good teams in the field every week, but by confining themselves to one league better results should be obtained. Bush who went west last fall before the season ended, is back and expects to play the season through with Huntingdon. The club entered the season with a small balance on hand, but the early season expenses are always heavy, and the opening crowds are generally small so the chances are the town will be asked to support the club little. One of the heaviest items of expense during the season is for automobile hire and this year a list will be circulated as soon as the schedule is known asking fans to donate their cars for some trip during the season.
