THE STANDARD'S SERIES OF BEAUTIFUL WINNIPEG HOMES—Residence of Mr. J. S. Hough, K.C., a well-known member of the legal profession. Mr. Hough was born at Picton, Ont., and went to Winnipeg in 1887, being one of the earliest settlers in the city.

front were now being served with ever-increasing precision, as the Russian gunners stood secure from any chance of injury to man or gun. The infantry concealed along the causeway ridge kept up a constant and effectual fire. It must have been from them a hint now came that I bore no harm which could bear me unscathed through the dread valley of death. A musket ball struck my mare's hind leg and lamed her so badly that for any purpose that might bear me on or back to our lines, she was quite useless. I can recall the sinking of my heart as I beheld the 11th Hussars ride on, while I was left alone far from the British lines to do the best I could. But I felt a strange reluctance to dismount. "Black Bess" had been the fastest mare in all the troop; high bred and hardy, she had borne campaigning well. With no soul in sight, for the regiments in front had passed away obscured by dust and smoke, I made a good mark for musketry fire. A ball passed through my right leg; a shot from the left tilted my busby over my right ear, while "Black Bess" received the "coup de grace" which brought us both to earth, though I was still astride the mare. My case seemed desperate, but there was no time for vain regrets. My leg was bleeding, though I felt no pain. I looked around for refuge from their pattering fire, for bullets were still raising little clouds of dust quite near; and now I shuddered as I beheld disarmed and helpless men of ours singly attacked by many Russian lancers who did not scruple to kill them in cold blood! I still could move upon my feet, and standing clear of poor dead "Black Bess," and unbuckling the waist-belt which encumbered me, held fast my sword, resolved if thus beset to sell my life as dearly as I might. I think I must have been distant a mile, or even more, from the point

THE LIGHT CHARGE AT BALACLAVA, 25th OCTOBER, 1854.

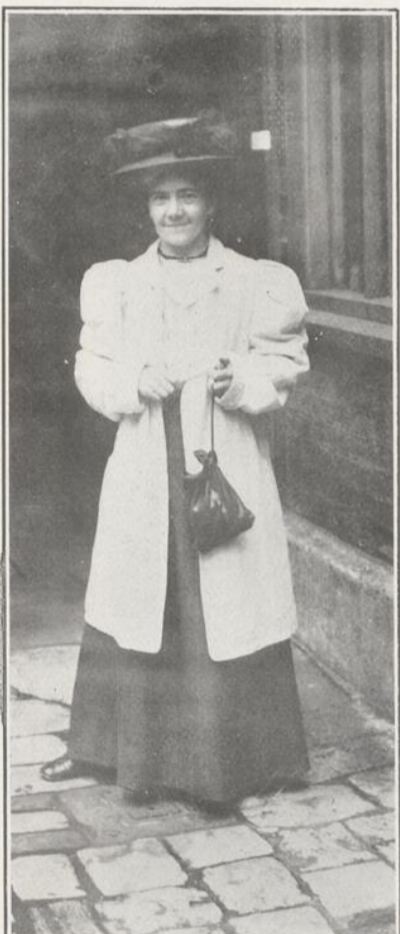

(Extract from "The Sea, Camp and Stage," by W. H. Pennington, a survivor of Balacava.)

Lord Lucan is understood to have said that there was nothing for it but to obey, and the order to advance, as given in the following words by Lord Cardigan, are vivid in my recollection, and I hear them again as I record them: "The Light Brigade will advance—walk—march—trot." (No trumpet sounding took place.) We heard the words with incredulous amazement, for the madness of our errand was plain to the weakest judgment amongst us. The awful gravity of the moment can only be realized by those who were riding, as each one of us believed, to certain destruction.

The enemy's artillery and musketry,

IN MEMORY OF BALACLAVA, OCT. 25, 1854—William Henry Pennington, of the 11th Hussars, one of the 30 survivors of the famous charge of the Light Brigade, which unparalleled deed of valor took place just 54 years ago. The above photograph, taken soon after the memorable combat, shows the wounds received by Mr. Pennington, who afterwards became an intimate friend of the late Mr. Gladstone. Mr. Pennington's brother is a resident of Montreal. Through his courtesy the above photo is reproduced in The Standard.

now too accurately served, continued to send forth a hail of grape, round shot, shell and minie balls. In the tension and excitement of this trying and appalling hour there was scarcely time to note the terrible nature of the wounds which laid so many men and horses low. To see a forearm torn by shot or shell, bleeding and dangling by the tendons which still held it to the upper joint, or brains protruding from a shattered skull, would in cool moments have been a soul-moving and a sickening sight.

But death was feasting to his fill. Riderless horses, maimed or unhurt, were galloping now between our intervals, rendered frantic by the deafening noise, to the great distress of those who rode on unhurt, or rushing madly up and down, and sometimes breaking through the files as our men did their best to keep formation as their ranks were thinned by the all-prevailing hail. The guns in the twelve-gun battery in whence Lord Cardigan had given the order to advance. My leg now giving signs of stiffness coming on, I had some half-formed plan of hobbling to the rear, when, to my great surprise, I heard the thud of horses' hoofs behind. They were the 8th Hussars. Great was my relief and joy when Sergeant-Major Harrison, seeing my plight, halted and bade me mount a grey mare he led as he rode serafic. Its rider had been killed. Lame as I had now become, I yet contrived to mount. The firing of the enemy had now died down. Lord George Paget states that from the moment of the order to advance the 8th Hussars had gradually inclined too much to the right, and that he shouted himself hoarse in the vain attempt to bring them into alignment with the 4th Light Dragoons, which was the directing regiment, he being second in command. They were now, however, moving steadily at a moderate trot, their ranks thinned by the fire of the batteries and infantry right and left, but with no certainty of purpose, as Colonel Shewell could discern no trace of any other regiment of the brigade.

I fancy that it was here that a small party of the 17th, who in the struggle at the guns had separated from that corps, added their strength to ours, and then we numbered only seventy well-mounted men. It was now discovered that some squadrons of Russian lancers had ranged themselves across the valley in our rear, and thus interposed between us and the British lines. "Cut off!" was the excited cry. In this dilemma, having rapidly consulted with Major de Salis, Colonel Shewell shouted, "threes about!" There was hesitation shown, for the withered ranks had kept well together, but lost their count by "threes." His able subordinate Scagar (afterwards lieutenant-general) interposed: "Excuse me, sir; 'tis right about wheel." The Colonel then cried, "3th, right about wheel!" The 3th responded as if on home parade, and thus we faced the strong squadrons in our rear. This incident is vividly impressed upon my mind, but I have never seen a reference to it in any previous account.

The enemy remained halted, leaving us to force a passage through their serried ranks. Colonel Shewell led the way, well seconded by every man, for this last desperate struggle was for dear life and freedom to pass in the direction of the British lines. The Russian squadrons, quite four hundred strong, had ample time to meet our rush with force enough to bear us down and make all prisoners. To our amazement, their right fell back, and giving way, assisted our design. Some passed without collision, a few were mingled in the mass, and these fought clear in quicker time than one can tell it. I bore well to the left, quite losing touch with the 8th.

Thus separated from all aid, lancers pursued me up the valley; but I kept them on my right and rear, my sword arm free to sweep around. With many a feint cut and thrust (for I feared to check the gallant grey), I kept them at arm's length, foiled their attempts to get upon my left, where they might strike across my bridlehand, and the grey mare gradually drew ahead. With what delight I came in sight of our brave "Heavies" may well be understood; for now the Russian lancers turned about and rode away, disappearing down the vale. Balls from the causeway ridge raised up the dust around the grey mare's hoofs, but happily their force was spent. The first person I encountered as I rode in was a sergeant of the 13th Light Dragoons. He had been down the valley, and with his horse returned without a scratch. He rode up to me, and without a word exchanged, he grasped my hand, moved by the peril we had escaped and shared. I judged his feelings by my own. I made my way to where our camp had been, and was assisted to dismount, for my right leg was now quite stiff, though blood had long since ceased to flow. I contrived to slip in front of the grey mare that had done me such great service, and I kissed her on the nose, for to her I owed my life. One cannot leave the "Valley of death" without acknowledging the debt of gratitude due from the Light Brigade to the famed Chasseurs d'Afrique, who without hesitation sprang upon the enemy posted on the Fedoukine

Hills. Their dashing charges appear to have elicited the admiration of all who saw them. They silenced the batteries there, diverting all attack upon the broken Light Brigade from that part of the field.

THE POPE'S SCHOOL REPORT. Everything gets published nowadays, and here is publicity given in an Italian newspaper to an old school report on Giuseppe Sarto, now his Holiness Pope Pius X. He was at a secondary school at Castelfranco, under a priest named Amadio, in 1849; and this is the pedagogic account of his comparative attainments in various subjects: Literature, excellent; Italian language, first of his class; mathematics, very good; Latin, moderately good.—Westminster Gazette.

THE UNPRIVILEGED PRINCE.

It came as a surprise to the public recently to learn that a Prince of the Royal blood may be fined, like any orinary mortal if the motor-car exceeds the legal limit of speed. So privileged is the King in his exemption from any and every law, that one would naturally expect his children might do pretty much as they like.

But Englishmen have always been very jealous of Royal personages, and the fact is that Princes enjoy very few privileges indeed. The Prince of Wales cannot be sued personally for debt. If the debt is not

A NOVEL WITH A PURPOSE

"The Irresistible Current,"

BY MRS. I. LOWENBERG

The San Francisco "Examiner" says: Among the novels of the day that seem to be penned solely with the purpose of entertaining, there comes occasionally one like this one to break the monotony. Like Upton Sinclair's "Metropolis," Isaac Stevens' "The Liberators" and Winston Churchill's "Mr. Crew's Career," Mrs. Lowenberg's novel is written with a purpose. It is an interesting stretch of comedy and tragedy that protests against one of the last barriers that is said to impede the progress of social evolution—the intolerance of modern creeds.
