Nixon to make revelation today

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon, entering another critical week for his presidency, will reveal today how he has decided to meet demands from the House of Representatives impeachment inquiry.

The White House said Nixon reached his decision Sunday and is considering a broadcast to disclose it.

Two top Republicans said it would be inadequate for Nixon to turn over transcripts but not subpoenaed tape recordings to the House judiciary committee. That view was taken by former attorney-general Elliot Richardson and Senator Jacob Javits (Rep. N.Y.) in separate television interviews Sunday.

Nixon spent much of the weekend at his Camp David, Md., retreat working on his response.

The House committee has subpoenaed tapes of 42 presidential conversations and a response is due by 10 a.m. EDT Tuesday.

In addition, a subpoena requested by special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski that demanded tapes and records of 64 presidential conversations calls for a response Thursday.

WILL MEET DEADLINE

Deputy press secretary Gerald Warren said that "we have every intention" of meeting the Tuesday deadline for an answer to the House committee subpoena.

Richardson said that supplying the transcripts of the tapes would not meet the order of the committee's subpoena. He also said that "the case is close," about whether there is sufficient evidence to prove Nixon committed an indictable offence.

Richardson resigned Oct. 10 rather than fire then-special prosecutor Archibald Cox.

Asked why he felt the possibility of an indictable offence against Nixon is "close," Richardson said:

"What would bother me is the pattern. The direct answer is I don't think that the evidence is sufficient in any given situation: milk, ITT, cover-up of Watergate, to directly implicate the president. But the cumulative pattern of these things surrounding the president, in each case involving somebody next to him in responsibility, creates a really troublesome question."

"A failure on his part now to full meet the requests for tapes justifies an adverse inference on this very question."

SHOULD STEP DOWN

Javits said that turning over transcripts likely would be viewed as inadequate. He also said that if the House votes an impeachment, Nixon should step down temporarily while he is on trial in the Senate.

Last week the judiciary committee voted 34 to 4 to grant a White House request for five more days. Originally the deadline was last Thursday.

Mitchell, Stans acquitted on all charges

NEW YORK (AP) — A jury that started out "screaming and yelling across the table" has acquitted former attorney-general John Mitchell and former commerce secretary Maurice Stans of all charges in their criminal conspiracy case.

The nine men and three women came to unanimous agreement Sunday afternoon after 26 hours of deliberation that the former cabinet colleagues were not guilty of conspiracy, obstruction of justice and perjury.

Mitchell and Stans were accused of trying to block a Securities and Exchange Commission investigation of financier Robert Vesco, in return for Vesco's secret $200,000 cash contribution to President Nixon's re-election campaign.

Referring to Vesco and his aides, juror Clarence Brown said after the verdict: "They wanted to get something, but I don't think that Stans and Mitchell ever fell for it."

The jury's forewoman, Sybil Kucharski, said: "We were off in little groups screaming and yelling across the table" when the deliberations began. She said the jury was split even on the conspiracy count, so it turned to the six separate perjury counts against Mitchell and Stans.

"After looking through all the perjury charges, the rest was easy," Miss Kucharski said. "We figured there couldn't be any conspiracy if there was no perjury."

STILL FACES TRIAL

The verdict brought a smile to the face of the normally undemonstrative Mitchell. But it brought no legal surcease. He faces trial in Washington at a date as yet unset on almost identical charges in connection with the cover-up of the Watergate break-in.

Leon Jaworski, the Watergate special prosecutor, is still studying part of the Nixon campaign financing operation which Stans headed.

"Our faith was resting with a very, very fine jury," Mitchell told a news conference. "They were a cross section of the people and they were representative of America."

Stans was shedding tears of relief by the time the lengthy 15-count verdict had been read. "I've been reborn," he told a reporter. "I was innocent all along, but it's good to have it confirmed."

In Washington, deputy White House press secretary Gerald Warren said of President Nixon: "The president was very pleased for the two men and for their families."

Senator Sam Ervin (Dem. N.C.), chairman of the Senate Watergate committee, said he sees no connection between the verdict and future Watergate cases. "Each case stands on its own bottom," he said.

Vesco, who was indicted with Stans and Mitchell and lives in exile in Costa Rica, called the verdict the "first fair verdict I've heard in a long time."

VERDICT 'ROTTEN'

The chief prosecutor, Assistant U.S. Attorney John W. King, was deeply disappointed. Asked how he felt about the verdict, he replied:

"Rotten! If we could have gotten Vesco back it would have been different. It was absolutely not a waste. When there's evidence that people committed a crime, those crimes should be investigated and prosecuted."

Vesco fled the U.S. in the midst of an SEC investigation of his corporate activities and all efforts to bring him back failed.

Mitchell and Stans were charged with conspiring to obstruct an SEC fraud investigation of Vesco, who has corporate interests in such diverse locales as Hong Kong, Beirut and the Bahamas.

Mitchell, 60, now is estranged from his wife, Martha. Asked at his post-trial news conference whether he had talked to Martha since his acquittal, Mitchell asked: "Who?"

Stans reached his 66th birthday midway in the 10-week trial. A certified public accountant, he was deputy postmaster and later budget director during the Eisenhower administration.

Both defendants left the cabinet in early 1972 to become Nixon's campaign managers. While Stans raised the money, Mitchell mapped the strategy.

Ontario Liberals braced for election

SUDBURY, Ont. (CP) — Most of the 1,300 persons who attended the Ontario Liberal convention are back in their ridings today braced for a federal election following speeches by Prime Minister Trudeau and seven federal cabinet ministers.

The Ontario party's first northern convention ended Sunday with heavy emphasis on federal politics.

Mr. Trudeau set the tone for the three-day convention Saturday with a blistering attack on the Progressive Conservative and New Democratic Party opposition.

He said the government will not fight unless forced, but it is ready for an election. The Liberals will "make this the biggest dam fight the Tories ever had."

Mr. Trudeau was interrupted about 30 times by cheering.

He said he wants to govern and is not attempting to turn low-grade election fever into a political crisis.

READY TO RATTLE

"We're not rattling any sabres, but believe me, we've got a sabre to rattle,"

He also said that while the two opposition leaders might want an election, their colleagues do not because they are afraid of losing their seats.

Mr. Trudeau's tough federal stance was echoed by Energy Minister Donald Macdonald, Health Minister Marc Lalonde, State Secretary Hugh Faulkner, Immigration Minister Robert Andras, Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp and Labor Minister John Munro.

Mr. Trudeau's speech was punctuated with sharp attacks on Conservative leader Robert Stanfield and NDP chieftain David Lewis.

He called Tory proposals for wage and price controls phoney. Such fiscal policies are outmoded and could lead only to shortages and rationing and financial hardship on the average wage earner.

His administration will help that "little guy" and he promised to "get after the big guys who are trying to get the fast buck."

The other ministers told party workers to get organized now.

Mr. Lalonde said he could promise even more Liberal seats from Quebec and it is up to Ontario Liberals to show what they can do.

Mr. Macdonald said the Liberals should campaign as the only party which has brought unity to Canada.

The federal contingent said the Canadian economy is healthy and not all gloom and doom as some would have the country believe.

Mr. Trudeau mentioned news stories in foreign papers and predictions from international banking houses on Canada's bright fiscal future.

Mr. Whelan said millions "would be happy to live on what we throw away as garbage," but warned Canadians must prepare for higher food prices.

Mr. Andras told delegates to make sure that all 12 Northern Ontario seats went Liberal instead of the nine they got last time.

Mr. Macdonald challenged Ontario Premier William Davis to roll back oil prices by cutting down on the provincial sales tax or setting up a prices review board.

African rebels reject Portuguese overtones

LISBON (AP) — Rebel leaders in Portugal's African territories have spurned the new junta's promise of limited self-government and say they will fight on for independence.

"The only way to end the war in Mozambique is for the Portuguese to recognize the right of the Mozambique people—led by Frelimo—to independence," said Frelimo, the guerrilla movement in Mozambique.

"The war will continue if the junta's intention is to perpetrate the colonial system through new means," it said.

The Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola, one of the two main guerrilla groups in that territory, said it is prepared to negotiate "concerning the complete independence of our country." But it rejected the proposal by the leader of the junta, Gen. Antonio de Spínola, for a federation of Portugal with her African colonies.

"In such a federation, Portugal would always have the last word," it said. "The power of the state can only be in the hands of Angolans."

BEGINS WITH BOOK

The chain of events that ended in the military coup last week began with a book by Spínola in which he said Portugal could never win a military victory in its war against the African rebels. But he is reported to have told a meeting of politicians and newspaper editors Saturday that the African territories must be granted self-determination, not independence.

"Self-determination is the right of every people freely to choose its own destiny," Spínola said. "But for this decision, a people needs to be conscious of its choice and needs to possess a certain cultural level. Otherwise, third parties would determine this destiny."

"Self-determination must express the will of the people, and immediately independence would mean the acceptance of someone else's will."

This was considered a reference to claims of the ousted regime that Communist countries foster and support the African rebel movements.

Newspaper reports of the meeting said Spínola also declared:

All Portuguese will be given freedom of political activity except extremists; "the junta cannot consent to the establishment of authoritarian regimes, whether from the right or from the left."

Meanwhile, an ecstatic crowd of 5,000 in Lisbon welcomed the first political exile home Sunday. He was socialist Mario Soares, who returned from four years in Paris to one of the first such demonstrations permitted in years and to a warm embrace from Spínola.

"The army has given people freedom of expression," Soares told the crowd at the railway station. "But it is not the army but the workers and the people who must finish the job. It is not the time for division. People who want democracy must unite."

Spínola has pledged free elections within a year, and Soares, 49, is expected to play a major role in future politics.

Throughout Lisbon, the heady celebration of the coup mingled with cries for vengeance.

Stanfield says party ready for an election

TROIS-RIVIERES, Que. (CP) — Quebec Conservatives ended a weekend convention on an optimistic note, with both party leader Robert Stanfield and Quebec section president Claude Dupras saying the party is ready for an election.

Mr. Stanfield told about 500 enthusiastic supporters he does not want an election just because he wants to take power, but "because it has become urgent for our country to have a new administration—competent, firm, frank, effective and human."

He said that traditionally the prime minister has chosen the election date, but "today that prerogative no longer belongs to him alone, because he openly shares it with his good and faithful servant, the leader of the New Democratic Party."

The Progressive Conservative leader renewed his attacks on the government for dealing with a bill to outlaw United States football in Canada when economic issues needed action by the government.

"What are we to think of a government that takes great pains to adopt a bill to control football and that doesn't have the intelligence to give effective means of action to the price control commission?"

"What are we to think of a government in which the transport minister says the Canadian transportation system is in a complete muddle, but that he can do nothing to remedy it?"

"And finally, what are we to think of a government that since January, 1973, has proceeded only with legislation dictated to it by a third party...?"

READY TO GOVERN

Mr. Stanfield said the Conservative national convention in Ottawa last month showed the party is ready for an election and ready to govern.

The convention of the Quebec section during the weekend confirmed this and showed the party apparatus in Quebec was also ready.

Mr. Dupras, elected president of the Quebec section last year and returned to the office unopposed this year, said in an interview, "We're ready to fight right now."

He said in his annual report that 68 riding associations have been formed out of 74 ridings in the province and added in the interview that 30 of these have been organized "right down to the polls."

This was a major achievement for the party, which until a year ago had only a dozen riding associations.

Mr. Dupras said the new organization means the party will be able to count on its own permanent organizations at the riding level, whereas it used to depend on the provincial Union Nationale party for its organization in Quebec.

He said this could swing the support in a dozen ridings where the Conservatives lost by less than 2,000 votes in the 1972 election.

Business head questions B.C. policy

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia's ruling New Democratic Party does not seem to have an idea of the ultimate outcome of what it is doing, says the new chairman of MacMillan Bloedel Ltd.

George Currie, who took over the chairman's post when Robert Bonner resigned last week, said in an interview that so far, the actions taken by the NDP government will only lead to fewer jobs.

"I do not know the men in the NDP caucus well, although I do know some of them," he said. "They do not strike me as being men of ill will or men who are ill-equipped intellectually."

"As their experience developed, I would have expected that they would have developed more rational plans, more rational legislation. This does not seem to be happening, at least not in my judgment," said Mr. Currie.

"To sum it up, we see a greater potential here in British Columbia than we are apparently going to be permitted to realize."

"And it's something that would not be realized through a rape of the resource. We're grown-up people, we recognize our responsibilities."

"It's just that the ability to achieve the province's potential is being blunted by some of the things that are happening today."

DECRIES TREND

Mr. Currie said there are things going on in B.C. which in his view are detrimental to the health of the province's economy.

"Bill 31 (proposed new mining legislation) is a prize example. The way in which the government has set the terms of reference for the Pearce Task Force (studying royalties, stumpage, land and other taxes payable to the provincial government by the forest industry) with this piecemeal reporting technique also seems to me to be wrong."

He said that the balance in the province's resource-based economy can easily be upset and even destroyed, and that industries like forestry and mining involve long-term planning.

Using as an example MacMillan Bloedel's small log wood room being installed at Harmac, on Vancouver Island, Mr. Currie said it is not simply a matter of putting the room in and processing the trees into lumber. Rather, it is a matter of assessing where that output is going to go, how it fits into the company's trading patterns, and how those particular grades can be sold, he explained. "You don't come to the conclusion in a matter of days or even weeks or months."

"Then having once put the facility into place, to have the ground rules changed on you, can upset the whole balance, not only of that installation but of various other parts of the company."

STAKE IN B.C.

Mr. Currie said that despite publicity given to MacMillan Bloedel's investments outside the province, "we are not running away from British Columbia—we've got a big stake in this province." Slightly more than half of this year's capital expenditures of some $159 million will be spent in B.C., he said.

"We started diversifying out of B.C. in terms of direct investment 10 to 12 years ago, simply because it was fundamental good sense. But he went on to admit: "The atmosphere of this province is not without its influence on our program."

Mr. Currie, 49, a former regional general manager for the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce for B.C. and the Yukon, moved over to MacMillan Bloedel after a successful banking career.

After a series of positions with the company, as assistant vice-president, administration, in the pulp and paper group; and vice-president of strategic planning and development; he was elected to the board of directors in 1970. He was executive vice-president, finance and administration, at the time of the election as chairman and remains the company's chief financial officer.

Inflation gives contractors jitters; they're refusing fixed-cost bidding

TORONTO (CP) — Inflation is giving contractors the jitters.

As prices of materials soar, they're refusing to bid for work on a fixed-price basis.

When a government department requests bids on a multi-million-dollar project, for example, even big well-financed contractors are insisting on clauses to cover rising prices or some other protective measures.

Canadian General Electric Co. Ltd. (CGE) Canada's largest supplier of power transformers and other electrical apparatus, has given notice it won't take a chance on extended contracts even for small orders.

Price-increase clauses previously applied on CGE orders of more than $50,000. Now it covers orders under that amount and will be based on Statistics Canada price indexes.

Big Foundation Co. of Canada Ltd., prime contractor on the 1,800-foot CN Tower in Toronto, was awarded a $17-million job by the Canadian government on a fixed-price basis and it isn't happy.

A TAXPAYER WORRY

Government officials shudder over escalation clauses. Their customers are the taxpayers who like to know what a big project will cost.

A contract official in Ontario's ministry of transportation and communication says:

"We're against escalation clauses because they make it appear that government is encouraging inflation. Not only do we have to go easy on spending dollars, we have to appeal to be going easy."

Public works officials fear that if a contractor knows he'll be reimbursed for higher-than-expected labor costs over the life of a contract he'll not struggle to keep wages down.

Then there's the question of dealing with sub-contractors. "Do you let the electricians, plumbers and other sub-contractors all the way down the line put escalation clauses in their bids to the main contractor?" a federal contracts official asked.

"Where do you draw the line?"

PASS ALONG COSTS

Big companies, unlike governments, can often pass along rising costs in the form of higher prices. And, unlike governments, they can avoid the public tender system which applies to governments by law.

Price-increase clauses have become common for companies dealing with contractors, especially the "cost plus service fee" bid. It involves charging the owner with actual costs, increased to reflect labor and materials costs at estimated levels over the life of the contract.

The owner is given access to the contractor's books at all stages to assure himself that he's paying the true costs. Above such costs, the contractor gets an agreed-upon fee which increases if he "comes in" under estimated costs.

A compromise system involves appointment of a project manager to administer the job within the bounds of a set budget. He awards contracts as the need arises, not months or years before work begins. He can also act on cost-saving opportunities as they arise.

Beer producers want higher prices

TORONTO (CP) — Profit margins of Canadian beer producers will remain under pressure this year unless price increases are granted in several provinces, says Bell Gouinlock and Co. Ltd. of Toronto.

Increases comparable with Ontario's recent eight-per-cent rise are needed in Alberta, Manitoba and Nova Scotia as well as further increases in British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Quebec to offset rising labor costs and continuing high costs of raw materials, the firm says in a recent review of the industry.

"It is unlikely that any such price increases will be forthcoming before the end of the current calendar year. One possible mitigating factor would be a reduction in the price of barley which would help to offset rising costs in other areas."

In Alberta, a recent walkout by clerks of the liquor control board also has complicated near-term prospects, the firm says.

PROFIT UNDER PRESSURE

Bell Gouinlock says Molson Companies' profit margins are under pressure in some of its non-brewing as well as brewing operations.

Molson stated in its nine-months interim report that while it expects satisfactory sales growth in the final three months, earnings are not likely to equal those of the final quarter of last year.

"Since the majority of Molson's earnings are derived from its brewing operations, we continue to advise clients to defer purchases until further price relief is granted on the sale of beer," Bell Gouinlock says.

John Labatt continues to show satisfactory profit gains despite pressure on brewing margins and continuing problems at its 64-per-cent owned Laura Secord candy operation.

Labatt is expected to increase earnings by 13.2 per cent to $2.15 a share in fiscal 1974 and a 14 per cent in fiscal 1975 to $2.45 a share because of strong gains by its subsidiary Ogilvie Flour Mills and an anticipated turnaround in Laura Secord.

CONVERSION POSSIBLE

"If Labatt were to increase the dividend paid on its common shares by at least 10 per cent over the next year, there could possibly be a full conversion of the preferred shares into common shares," Bell Gouinlock says.

"At $23.25, the shares seem fully priced under current market conditions."

Carling O'Keefe's six months earnings to Dec. 31, 1973, continued to show a decline. Its main problem, Bell Gouinlock says, is its U.S. operation which is not able to effectively compete with other large U.S. brewers.

Bell Gouinlock says it does not expect the U.S. operation to improve in fiscal 1974 and Canadian brewing operations will show lower profits due to increasing production costs and only partial price relief.

The investment firm says it "cannot justify purchasing or holding this stock at the present time except as a speculation that U.S. losses may be reduced."

Labatt is expected to increase earnings by 13.2 per cent to $2.15 a share in fiscal

Oswald: "East's three diamonds bid was made to suggest a lead. If North had doubled East would have run to four clubs, a contract that would only be set one trick if West played correctly. North didn't bother to double and the spade game was reached."

Jim: "This hand is given as an example of how an alert declarer bases his play on knowledge of his opponents' bidding methods. The defense started with the ace of diamonds, a diamond ruff and the king of clubs lead. South took dummy's ace, drew trumps with two leads and discarded his last club and a heart on dummy's good diamonds. Then he ruffed dummy's last club and studied the heart suit."

Oswald: "Playing bridge in a vacuum, South would cash dummy's ace of hearts and lead a heart toward his queen. This play would work if East held the king of hearts or West held the doubleton king. In this latter case he would have to give South a ruff and a discard."

Jim: "It would also have failed miserably this time and South was sure that it would. West's two club overcall had marked him with the king of hearts. If he only held two hearts he would have held an eight-card club suit. So South entered dummy with a trump, led a low heart; stuck in his nine after East followed and poor West was end-played."

In rural areas, one enumerator will prepare the electoral list by visiting each home sometime between May 6th to the 11th from 9:00 A.M. to 10:00 P.M. or by any other means.

If, for any reason (you were not home when the enumerators came by, etc.), your name does not appear on the permanent electoral list, you must go and add your name to the revised list at the time of a general election.

Cecil Butters Hospital enters new phase

AUSTIN (MI) — With the retirement of Lily Esther Butters, the Cecil Butters Memorial Hospital enters a new phase in its history.

Mrs. Butters, who celebrated her 80th birthday March 25, founded and directed the hospital between 1949 and 1974. Only this year has she agreed to allow her daughter, Mary Camber, to assume the directorship.

The hospital, devoted to the care of mongoloid children and adults, earned its name in memory of Cecil Butters, a son of Mrs. Butters who lost his life during the Second World War.

During the same war, Mrs. Butters left behind the Austin farm on which she had settled since arriving in Canada from England in 1929 and joined the Canadian Women's Army Corps (CWAC) where she attained a rank comparable to that of sergeant-major.

Following a medical discharge from the CWAC, she followed a program for trained attendants, then established on her farm a hospital intended to serve convalescents and elderly persons.

It was by chance that the Cecil Butters Memorial Hospital entered the field that was destined to make its fame and success.

In its first years of operation, the hospital was requested by a Montreal social service agency to take in a mongolian child. When Mrs. Butters assumed responsibility for the child she rapidly discovered the very great demand for care of these and other severely retarded children.

Almost immediately, she resolved to turn the attentions of her hospital to these persons and began to phase out the service to the original clientele. From 19 children in 1950, the Cecil Butters Memorial Hospital grew to a point where, in early 1973, some 435 patients were attended to by its staff.

Mrs. Camber, a registered nursing assistant with a graduate degree in hospital administration, has been with the hospital for 20 of its 25 years existence. "Many of the patients have to be completely cared for; they're really overgrown babies," according to Mrs. Camber.

Consequently, the hospital staff numbers about 190, making the Cecil Butters Memorial Hospital the largest employer of year-round full-time personnel in Brome County, she notes. "Just the same we're well below the recommended ratio of one staff member for one patient," she claims.

With the tremendous increase in the number of persons making use of its services, the hospital inherited major spacing problems. "Some children have gone from infancy to adulthood at the hospital," Mrs. Camber says, "causing extreme crowding as they grew to need full-size beds instead of children's cribs."

Under Mrs. Butters' guidance the farmhouse was extended in all directions, including upward and downward in such a way that the farmhouse became the core of the expanded physical plant.

Among its facilities, the hospital counts a laundry which cleans 5,000 diapers and 500 sheets each day; a kitchen which employs 10 operators; an activities centre in which some 25-30 of the older children work to fill contracts for various firms; and a sewage treatment plant which renders effluent almost pure.

Among the contracts which the hospital's patients have held have been jobs dealing with packing garbage bags, making sign boards and making cushions. "We are looking for more contracts of all kinds to occupy the children and also to make a little bit of spending money which is used in the summertime to take these children to the zoo, the circus, picnics and various other activities," Mrs. Camber explains.

One of the hospital's most cherished facilities involves medical attention. According to Mrs. Camber, the Cecil Butters Memorial Hospital receives better medical service from Magog doctors Alan Scott and John Bryant than that which it could expect if it were situated in Montreal.

"A call from the hospital brings an immediate reply from them: with the traveling from Magog, we can expect them within 15-20 minutes," she states.

Situated on 10 acres of a 200-acre farm belonging to Mrs. Butters, the hospital grounds provide much opportunity to patients to cultivate their own gardens. But Mrs. Camber has additional plans for the area.

"We need to divide our services in keeping with the new style of placing 12-15 children in a self sufficient home with two foster parents," she says. While the space is obviously available, the problem at present centers on building construction.

However, the hospital will get its first chance at the venture in the near future. A building which the United Church found it could not use has been turned over to the hospital and, because the government intends to build a highway where it now stands, the department of transport is going to pay for moving it to the hospital's premises, according to Mrs. Camber. It is this building which will be the first small home of the nature she describes, Mrs. Camber hopes.

The Cecil Butters Memorial Hospital is undergoing a process of depopulation at the initiative of the department of social affairs. Currently serving 370 patients, the hospital expects to see the number decrease to 325 by the end of 1974.

Mrs. Camber looks forward to the possibility of offering more intensive individual training programs to the hospital's patients because of the decrease. "There is a new theory that mongoloids can be developed; I'm personally very strongly in favor of this."

"They can be developed, but not to normal capacity," she contends. "It used to be thought that they could never progress."

She believes students graduating from CEGEP special education programs will have a solid future ahead of them. "It is a field which right now is wide open, and there has been a lot of attention paid to the mentally retarded at the moment — even the severely mentally retarded — they are trying to rehabilitate," she explains.

According to Mrs. Camber, the measle epidemic which hit the hospital in 1961 focused the public eye on the hospital and provoked the government and other agencies into providing it with more assistance. Nevertheless, she says, many parents have left their children with the hospital and never been in contact with officials again, thereby leaving the children completely dependent on the hospital.

She estimates that five to 10 per cent of the children at the Cecil Butters Memorial Hospital become attached to their parents. Another 50 per cent, she believes, gain attachment to some of the staff and other patients at the hospital.

"The remainder are not capable of communicating with other people, do not have sufficient intellectual capacity to form attachments to others," she feels.

In establishing the hospital, Mrs. Butters sought persons from the Netherlands where, in the words of Mrs. Camber, "There is an extremely advanced system of care for this type of patient." Some of these persons are still with the hospital, while others have established similar hospitals of their own.

For Mrs. Butters, attending to her patients became a devotion of such intensity that she found herself giving most of her time to what she had originally conceived as a basically commercial enterprise. For that she has been recognized several times by many groups.

The pinnacle of her fame, however, was reached on October 26, 1972. On that night, in Ottawa, then-Governor-General Roland Michener presented her with the Order of Canada.

In 1974, with her retirement, the Cecil Butters Memorial Hospital must look for greater strength from others and, specifically, from her daughter. Nevertheless, in the light of the pioneering efforts which Mrs. Butters has led for a quarter-century, the hospital can be confidently secure of its purposeful existence as Mrs. Camber comes forward to continue Mrs. Butters' life work.

Pouliot found guilty of assault

SHERBROOKE (CC) — A 30-year-old Belvedere Heights man was found guilty of assaulting a Lennoxville police constable but freed on the charge which led to the incident, in Sessions Court Friday.

Robert Pouliot was found guilty on the assault charge by Judge Benoit Turmel and given the benefit of the doubt concerning a charge of hit and run following an accident with the Lennoxville police car December 23, 1973.

Mr. Pouliot was given neither fine nor a sentence following the conviction because Judge Turmel believed the man, who had no previous criminal record, had already suffered enough.

ASKS FOR DECISION
Defense lawyer Roch Fournier had asked for the decision and Crown Prosecutor Pierre Boily left the punishment up to the discretion of the judge.

Although Mr. Fournier presented a formidable case attempting to show that the circumstances involved in the assault of constable Peter Martin made it a unique case, Judge Turmel noted that the court could not overlook the fact that Mr. Pouliot had assaulted a police officer in uniform while he was carrying out his peace keeping duties.

The incident goes back to last year when Mr. Pouliot's car struck and damaged the door of the Lennoxville police car.

KINGDON TESTIFIES
According to testimony given by Constable Maurice Kingdon and Constable Martin, they were called to 400 Queen street where a car had left the road. When they arrived at the scene Mr. Kingdon failed to close the driver's door as he hurried to the site.

Mr. Pouliot, driving along behind, stopped a few feet from the door and then accelerated past it. However, his car clipped the door causing it to go forward on its hinges causing $45 worth of damages.

It was shortly after that the police took after Mr. Pouliot.

However, Mr. Pouliot said Friday he did not think he had damaged the door. "I would have stopped right there if I thought I had," he said.

NO SOUND
He added he heard no sound and believed he had not touched the car.

According to the testimony, he then proceeded to Sherbrooke at a normal pace. The Lennoxville police, without Mr. Pouliot knowing it, were in fast pursuit.

They caught up with Mr. Pouliot at the traffic lights at the corner of King and Wellington. Mr. Martin jumped from the car to go get Mr. Pouliot.

It was at that point testimony was contradictory. Constable Martin claimed he was at the car door when Mr. Pouliot opened it and punched him at least two times in the face.

NO CONTACT
He claimed he did not talk to or touch Mr. Pouliot before he was struck. Two witnesses called by the defense claimed Mr. Martin had jumped from the police car, hauled open Mr. Pouliot's door and grabbed Mr. Pouliot by the shoulder.

Mr. Pouliot said he did have a scuffle with Mr. Martin at that time but claimed no punches were thrown. Mr. Martin was knocked to the ground during the scuffle and as Mr. Kingdon moved in to collar Mr. Pouliot, Constable Martin radioed for help from the Sherbrooke police department. During the initial scuffle Mr. Pouliot's wife got out of the car and walked over to the two men telling them to stop it. Defense witnesses testified constable Martin pushed her aside telling her to keep out of it.

SLIPPED AND FELL
It was icy that night and Mrs. Pouliot slipped, fell, hit her head on the ground and was knocked unconscious. Mr. Martin claimed he did not touch her.

As Sherbrooke police arrived Mr. Pouliot was taken peacefully to the back seat of a Sherbrooke police car.

His wife was picked up by two persons in a following car and put back in Mr. Pouliot's car. An ambulance was called.

Approximately ten minutes later Mr. Pouliot asked if he could go see how his wife was. He went over to his car and found his wife still unconscious.

As he was returning to the Sherbrooke police car he knelt down to fix his rubber and as he rose was grabbed by constable Martin.

It was at that time that Mr. Pouliot delivered a punch to the face of Mr. Martin. Mr. Martin was also knocked unconscious and was forced to undergo hospitalization. He needed five stitches to close one cut.

Mr. Pouliot was returned forcibly to the Sherbrooke police car and later taken to police headquarters.

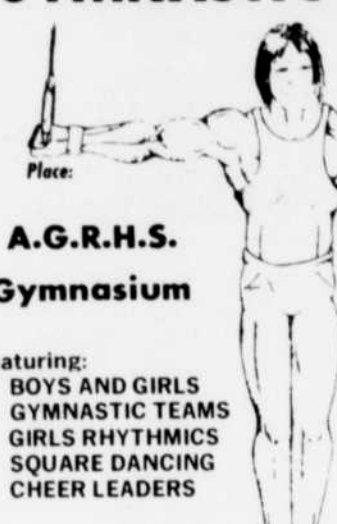

Mr. Martin had not approached the Sherbrooke police car and did not know why Mr. Pouliot was allowed out. "He was still my prisoner," he told the court.

Judge Turmel believed Mr. Pouliot had no right to strike the Lennoxville policeman and therefore found him guilty on the assault charge.

Martin changes option, pleads guilty to charges

SWEETSBURG WARD (JD) — Alex Martin, Waterloo, changed his option and pleaded guilty to possession of stolen goods, to wit one .45 automatic pistol, and not having a permit for the same weapon.

Martin who was recently sentenced to three years in St. Hyacinthe for armed robbery, was also fined $100 and costs, in default 30 days, for public mischief in Waterloo in 1973, when he and an accomplice hurled projectiles at a Waterloo squad car.

Crown prosecutor Claude Noisieux asked for terms of one year, concurrent on each other yet consecutive to the term Martin is currently serving on the arms charges.

Claude Leveille, in defence, said such a punitive term would probably result in a person who comes out of prison resenting society. He suggested the best interests of justice would be well served with a concurrent sentence.

Mr. Noisieux said: "I insist on a consecutive sentence in Martin's case. If the bench wants to hand down a concurrent one it will be his responsibility."

Judge Bernard Legare sentenced Martin to three months, concurrent on each other but consecutive to the three year sentence.

William Maghia, 20, Sheldon Vt., pleaded not guilty to five counts of public mischief and property damage, at Notre Dame de Stanbridge, April 20.

Defence counsel Jacques Meunier opted for trial by judge and jury. Preliminary hearing was fixed for April 24. Maghia was remanded to cells pending preliminary hearing.

Three accomplices, all juveniles, are to be arraigned in Social Welfare Court. They too were held without bail.

Rodney Cleary, Waterloo, changed his option and pleaded guilty to two counts of public mischief and property damage at the Eastman Hotel.

Crown prosecutor Noisieux suggested two years probation, restitution of damages and a prohibition to enter places selling liquor for consumption on the premises within 15 miles of Eastman.

Judge Legare ordered one year's probation, restitution of $496, a fine of $25 and costs on each count, and the prohibition to enter licensed premises within 15 miles of Eastman.

Serge St. Germain, 20, Montreal and Granby, was sentenced to 15 weeks in jail. He had earlier pleaded guilty to six counts of uttering forged cheques.

Defence counsel Louis Grignon pointed out the accused had no prior record, had a background which indicated he could be rehabilitated, and suggested weekend sentence in order to allow the young man to retain his employment.

Raymond Gladu, Granby, was remanded to cells pending sentence on charges of possession of burglary tools, complicity to commit armed robbery, May 13.

Judge Legare asked a member of the social welfare staff to expedite pre-sentence reports when the persons were held in preventative detention.

Pierre Pepin an inmate at the Cowansville Federal Institution, pleaded guilty to a count of breaking and entering and receiving stolen goods.

The offences occurred in the Judicial District of Algoma in November and December 1971.

Defence lawyer Pierre Bachand asked that the sentence pronounced be concurrent as Pepin had been trying for two years to have the cases cleared, and that he was eligible for ticket of leave on June 23rd. He was serving a two year sentence.

Crown prosecutor Claude Noisieux said he had no special instructions from Queen's Park, and added the possession charge was under $50.

Judge Legare sentenced Pepin to 45 days, concurrent, in both cases.

Judge Legare ordered Huguette Lussier Desmarais, Farnham, to a psychiatric exam at the Sherbrooke University Medical Centre. Mrs. Desmarais is charged with a count of arson, in Farnham, April 18. Arraignment was continued to April 29.

Fabien Boucher, Cowansville, pleaded not guilty to counts of using a weapon dangerous to the public peace, and threats on the person of his wife, in Cowansville, April 18. He was allowed his freedom pending preliminary hearing May 16, with the understanding he stays away from his family, and keeps out of places selling alcohol by the glass within 15 miles of Cowansville.

Firemen seek hazards in annual inspection

SHERBROOKE (CC) — The Sherbrooke fire department will begin its annual home inspection for fire hazards on Tuesday. The service will continue to September and fire department officials hope to inspect most of the homes in the city.

Inspections will be undertaken Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays between 9:30 a.m. and 11 a.m., and 1:30 p.m. to 4 p.m.

The work will be performed by regular fire fighters, on duty at the nearest station. Through means of radio contact they will be able to answer alarms while performing inspections without delay.

The home inspection is primarily directed towards basements, utility rooms and garages unless otherwise requested by the occupants.

It is designed to show home owners various hazards in their home which might contribute to starting a fire, causing damage and possible injury and loss of life.

The fire department points out that the inspections are undertaken on a voluntary basis and occupants don't have to allow firemen into their homes. However, the department adds the inspection is for the good of the occupant and asks for the co-operation of everyone.

"Shame over an untidy house, fear of consequences, ignorance of what it is all about should be forgotten," a note in the press release announcing the service points out.

The department describes the campaign as: "Close your door to fire; keep it open for fire prevention."

Three quarters of all fires happen in the home. Basic hazards are quite simple: over fusing, frayed wiring, faulty heater, rubbish, etc.

Even before the inspections begin the fire department asks home owners to check for the above mentioned hazards.

Israeli-Syrian conflict

LONDON (CP) — Against a background of momentous diplomatic shifts elsewhere in the Middle East, the Israelis and Syrians have been maintaining their intensive clashes along the Golan Heights in the last days before Henry Kissinger begins another of his spectacular peace missions.

One explanation for the fierce Israeli-Syrian flareups is that Syria has been trying to push the Israelis from commanding positions on Mount Heron before the American state secretary arrives to launch talks about military disengagement between the two sides.

Already the Syrians have claimed gains in their military efforts, which may equally be designed to prove to the Americans, Israelis and others that Damascus means business in the coming negotiations.

Mount Heron is the focus of the current hostilities. From its heights, the Israelis can virtually see the Syrian capital of Damascus and survey guerrilla and other military movements in both Lebanon and adjacent regions of Syria.

STRENGTH WAXES

The impending Kissinger peace expedition will also coincide with a period of instability in Israel where Yitzhak Rabin, chosen to succeed Golda Meir, is threatened with deep difficulties in forming a cabinet.

By comparison with some elements inside and outside his Labor party, Rabin has the reputation of being a dove on relations with the Arabs.

But underlining the fact that Israel also will be a tough bargainer in the Kissinger peace efforts is Mrs. Meir's latest warning to the Arabs that "we shall cut off the arm raised to destroy us."

Aside from the rigid Israeli-Syrian situation, the Middle East appears to be in a state of flux, largely due to the spectacular reconciliation between Egypt and the United States and the estrangement of Cairo from the world power that formerly was its stoutest ally, the Soviet Union.

Thus, American naval power is once more being welcomed in Egyptian waters, $250 million in U.S. economic aid for Egypt has been proposed by President Nixon and indications are that the Americans will play a leading part in restoring the Suez canal.

ARMS SUPPLIED

Other examples of renewed Western involvement in the Arab communities include French arms sales to Kuwait and Saudi Arabia.

The European Common Market also has taken steps to establish stronger ties with the all-important Arab oil-producing states.

The Egyptians themselves say the visit by Chancellor Willy Brandt of West Germany to Cairo may be the starting point for friendlier links between his country and Egypt.

Adding to the strong impression of an Egyptian swing westwards is the Cairo split with the anti-American Libyan government.

A major complicating factor is the attitude of the Soviet Union towards these developments and towards the Kissinger mission.

The Syrians have obtained and are making conspicuous use of sophisticated Soviet weapons in their Golan Heights battle.

The Russians may seek to reverse current Egyptian policy, but Moscow's own strategy may be complicated by its assumed desire to maintain detente with the U.S., at least in economic and technological fields.

CNR role to change substantially

MONTREAL (CP) — Vast changes in the transportation scene may require Canadian National Railways to fulfil a different social role than in the past, the company's new command reported last week.

This view emerged at a news conference featuring Pierre Taschereau, the new CN chairman, and Robert A. Bandede, new president and chief executive officer, who together succeed N. J. MacMillan, the present chairman and president, retiring April 30.

Mr. Bandede, 43-year-old economist, reported plans to establish a small "strategy group" or think-tank of perhaps three planners to help find answers to some problems facing the company and the country generally.

Mr. Taschereau, 53-year-old lawyer, said the new group would help in making recommendations and proposing solutions for problems such as arose in the last year as railways sought to cope with enormous shipments of grain and other commodities.

The two new chiefs, both executive vice-presidents of the railway, stressed policies of flexibility in the face of Canadian economic growth.

Mr. MacMillan earns $75,000 a year—a salary rate established during the reign of his predecessor, the late Donald Gordon—but reporters were told that the salaries of the two new men had not yet been announced.

NOT EXCLUSIVE

Mr. Bandede will handle CN operations, with Mr. Taschereau responsible for the publicly-owned company's relations with the government, though duties were not "exclusive" and they would work as a team.

Mr. Bandede said he does not concur with all statements recently made by Transport Minister Jean Marchand but he does feel that the "whole climate" in transportation is changing.

There was going to be tremendous growth in the railway, paralleling the country's economic growth to some degree but even greater in some sectors. The railway was thinking in terms of seven-per-cent growth but faster in certain parts of Canada than in the rest of the country.

"There is also a distinct change in the social climate, part of it related to transportation," said Mr. Bandede.

In such a situation, the company had to ask itself such questions as whether it exists just to provide a viable transportation system or whether it also has changing social responsibilities.

QUESTIONS VITAL

These questions were vital to the government as well as to the company, which wanted to play a significant role and place constructive ideas before the various levels of government.

Asked to elaborate on the social aspect, Mr. Bandede said there appears to be a demand, especially by provincial governments in the east and west, for a different role.

These governments saw the railway as a tool for industrial development of their provinces—arguing that transportation should encourage faster industrialization. This was the sort of thing that needed study.

Mr. Bandede said the CN regards the National Transportation Act of 1967-68 as still adequate but there might be a change of emphasis in the application of the legislation to accommodate changes in the economic climate.

The act, for example, provides that uneconomic railway services be carried on if government deems it advisable and picks up the tab. This provision now was being applied in a somewhat negative way regarding passenger services.

"I think there is great scope there for the federal and even the provincial governments," said Mr. Bandede. "This part of the act could be used more positively and it could be used as an instrument of social policy."

LANGUAGE SURPRISE

Mr. Taschereau, the first French-Canadian to reach CN's top echelon, defended the position of the company on bilingualism, though it was recently severely criticized by Keith Spicer, language commissioner under the Official Languages Act.

Mr. Taschereau said that when he returned to the CN three years ago after a stint as vice-chairman of the Canadian transport commission, the company enjoyed a reputation as an "innovator" in bilingualism.

"I must say this," he added. "Mr. Spicer has made several reports and this is the first one in which he comes down on us, probably because of the large number of reports made to him."

"Perhaps he had a large number compared with other departments or Crown corporations but he must think in terms of the size of the CN and its operations from coast to coast and remote areas where it is most difficult to find bilingual people to serve the public. It seems we can't meet fully the demand."

Mr. Taschereau speculated that Mr. Spicer wanted to "shock" the CN into greater efforts. On the same question, Mr. Bandede said he did not think the criticism was justified and "if it's true, I certainly intend to change it." He felt CN during the last 10 years had been in the "forefront" of bilingual progress.

In relation to Western traffic problems, the management duo told reporters the CN had never made a decision not to carry grain in favor of more profitable shipments.

CN had hardly recovered from a nationwide strike ending last September when it was hit by "the biggest traffic ever," throwing the system out of whack. Problems were aggravated by the severe winter.

Mr. Taschereau told a questioner he was unaware of any transport commission discussions regarding CN taking over some services now operated by Canadian Pacific. There was, however, a "thrill" by the federal body regarding "rationalizing" of Maritime and transcontinental services.

Gerry's looking better all the time

By Bruce Blossat

WASHINGTON (NEA)

Vice President Gerald Ford is a deeply torn man today as he watches the swirling Watergate currents which might spin him into the presidency he says he does not aspire to. Thoughtful Republican analysts who have begun to watch Ford closely find absolutely no reason to doubt his sincerity when he declares right now that he doesn't want the big job and won't seek it in 1976. They do not believe he has developed secret aspirations since he took over from Spiro Agnew who resigned in October, 1973.

Yet, obvious to all, his position six months later is vastly altered. Public opinion polls have showed his leading top Democrats for the presidency. To be sure, one gauging responses of lower-echelon GOP officials placed him well behind California's aspiring Gov. Ronald Reagan, but that is not really significant. Many party leaders are touting Ford, and one tough-minded reporter who held the standard impression of "plain-talking Jerry" told me he found his recent Chicago speech to midwestern Republicans "electrifying."

Meantime, of course, the mills in Congress grind slowly but inexorably toward a judgment on impeachment of President Nixon, with a greatly heightened prospect the House decision will go against the President. And I have just heard again, persuasively, that such a decision would fairly quickly line up nearly 60 of the 67 Senate votes needed for removal of Mr. Nixon when and if that body sits as a jury in the case.

Truly this was not foreseen when Ford was inducted. It was pre-Saturday night massacre (the firing of Special Prosecutor Cox), and, notwithstanding a massive array of evidence possibly drawing the President into Watergate, no real stirrings toward impeachment had begun.

Moreover, and it is cruel to have to report this judgment from a most knowledgeable source, Mr. Nixon had chosen Ford with what he deemed to be great precision as the kind of man the Congress and the party and the country would never want to see as president. Whatever Ford was told, or thought the reasons to be, in the President's eyes he was fresh insurance that the Congress, most crucial because of its impeachment role, would prefer to have Mr. Nixon serve out his second term.

The President miscalculated, as he so often does when he is trying hardest not to do so. Ford quickly gained appeal as a clean, new figure, and at least for a while, as a "safe haven" for politicians to seek out who are sick of the mess and not entranced by the prospect of a 1976 race fought on the old, threadbare Reagan-Rockefeller lines.

Looking at this today, Ford, as indicated, is puzzled. Closer to the presidency than he imagined he ever would be, he is constantly pulled at—increasingly at the private level—by those who say he must separate himself from Mr. Nixon. Why? Loyalty to a party in great distress, self-preservation, the need for independent stature if he should have to play a key role on both the domestic and foreign scene. But Ford also hears another drum, pounding the incessant theme of loyalty to the man who chose him. So he wobbles back and forth.

If he became president through Mr. Nixon's removal, he would likely be free of Watergate mud but deluged by all the practical problems of energy, inflation, trade, etc. which really bother Americans most. Incumbency might be no blessing, even if Ford then became a true aspirant for 1976. He has not sorted out the personal and family considerations involved in such a choice. Ford-watchers doubt he has realized that, even as incumbent, he would have to contend against other hard battlers for the nomination. It is much too early to say he either wants the great prize, or could hold it long if it fell to him.

Japan, Soviet Union to develop Siberia

TOKYO (AP) — Japan and the Soviet Union have taken the first step towards major international development of the vast resources of Siberia.

A protocol signed last week sets the terms under which Moscow can receive more than $1 billion in Japanese loans provided agreement can be reached on other details of the development projects.

The protocol might be a major breakthrough in the long negotiations on Siberian development, which gained impetus from last winter's world oil crisis.

Altogether the Soviet Union is asking for more than $7 billion in credits to buy equipment from Japan and the United States for five major projects. These involve oil from the Tyumen field in western Siberia, gas from the northern part of the Yakutsk republic, coal from southern Yakutsk and offshore oil exploration near Sakhalin island.

The Soviet Union want Japan to make up its mind about the development deals by September so they can be worked into Moscow's next five-year plan beginning in 1976.

DETAILS REMAIN

Thus far the Japanese have been reluctant to make quick decisions and despite the new protocol, many details remain to be worked out.

The U.S. is being drawn into Siberian development talks because American companies are the only ones with the range of technological know-how needed to exploit oil and gas finds.

The lure for Japan is the prospect that if the Siberian projects develop by the early 1980s, fleets of tankers might carry oil and gas from Siberia to Japan and the U.S.

The Japanese say U.S. participation would encourage the Soviets to live up to agreements. They also hope U.S. presence will make the projects more acceptable to China, which would be antagonized by any boost to Soviet power in the Asian area.

The Chinese are vitally concerned in developments north of their contested border with the U.S.S.R., and the Soviets are asking help to build another strategically important trans-Siberian railway.

INFORMS CHINA

If Japan proceeds with the Siberian projects, it might find itself in hot water with China. Yet the Japanese government is particularly anxious to maintain good relations with Peking, and for that reason has kept Peking informed on the Siberian talks.

Japan badly needs the raw materials from Siberia. But some suspect that the Soviet Union is exploiting the world's energy crisis to demand low-cost loans while keeping their prices high on the future Siberian exports.

"Some people are doubtful of the economic benefits of these projects and some are skeptical of the political interests of the Russian government," says an unofficial Japanese source.

Mining industry ponders future

MONTREAL (CP) — A series of predictions for the future of the Canadian mining industry—sometimes bittersweet and sometimes contradictory—occupied the first full day of the annual conference of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy last week.

The gist of what delegates were told is that the industry will have big opportunities but big problems in the next 25 years—opportunities to develop new mineral sources to meet growing world demand, and problems in the area of financing, manpower, energy source transformations and government energy policy.

Several speakers from the industry itself and related fields gave their forecasts for the next 25 years, led by Jack Austin, deputy federal minister of energy, mines and resources.

Mr. Austin said rising world demand would require Canada to double at least its mineral production in all sectors simply to maintain its current status as third among the producing nations.

He indicated that demand might rise to a point where it would not be in Canada's best interest to meet all of it and he called for clearer intergovernmental policies as guidelines for the ways in which mineral resources should be used.

BIG GROUPS FAVORED

Addressing the problem of mineral exploration in the future, R. D. Hutchison of the Mineral Exploration Research Institute said the task of finding new reserves would increasingly fall to large, well-financed groups.

Mr. Hutchison said higher costs for labor and development of increasingly remote deposits are striking the industry at a time when provincial securities commissions are making it difficult for small companies to raise risk capital.

He said the same types of minerals now being sought will continue to be mining objectives but he said the depletion of easy deposits will force companies to look for deeper orebodies in existing mining regions or new deposits in more remote areas, even outside of Canada.

Whereas Mr. Hutchison said mining techniques in the next 25 years are not likely to change, another speaker suggested that the industry should spend money at an increasing rate to develop new technologies.

R. P. Douglas, manager of outside mining for Cominco Ltd., said underground mining will become increasingly necessary as new and deeper deposits go beyond the reach of currently successful open pit techniques.

The major benefit of new technology, he said, would be to improve working conditions in underground mines and make them more attractive to the Canadian labor force.

"I doubt if many of the parents in this room have advised their sons who wish to enter a vocational trade to become an underground miner—an open pit miner maybe but not an underground miner," Mr. Douglas said.

The problem of manpower shortages was listed as the mineral industry's most serious by Frank C. Burnet, vice-president for employee relations of International Nickel Co. of Canada Ltd.

In addition to the traditional difficulties of labor, Mr. Burnet listed the trend toward early retirement and delayed entry into the work force along with competitive pressure from other industries as causes of the manpower problem.

He said new technologies and new immigration policies may be necessary but what is most urgently needed now is "intensive application of known management skills in the employee relations field."

TALKS MONEY

Aspects of financing the coming mining boom were touched on by Michel Belanger, president of the Montreal Stock Exchange and one of several speakers to refer to mineral exportation as Canada's comparative advantage in world trade.

If capital necessary for mining development is to be obtained, it will be necessary that the mechanisms for raising funds act in the industry's favor, he said.

Mr. Belanger said the growth in mining investments, due come about, presents a challenge for stock exchanges to create rules which allow a free flow of funds while at the same time controlling excessive speculation.

He said the solution could be found in current talks among the administrators of the different Canadian stock exchanges aimed at streamlining their operations.

DR LAWRENCE E. LAMB

Extra rib isn't a rare problem

By Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — My son was in the Air Force in Vietnam for approximately one year. At the end of this time he became sick and was sent to a hospital in Japan. He had some kind of infection in the lymph glands which was cleared up, but the main problem was with his left arm which kept going to sleep when held in a certain position. After many, many tests it was diagnosed as "Thoracic Outlet Syndrome." He was sent back to the States to a medical center where he went all through the same tests again. He was told there that his top rib was very high and a vein was being pinched between his collarbone and top rib, interfering with the circulation. One doctor told him he should have it removed (the top rib), and another told him it was something he could live with and he was sent back to duty. He is now in the National Guard.

This condition still bothers him, and I think he is worried that he has something more than he was told. I would really appreciate your opinion on this matter.

DEAR READER — It sounds to me as if your son has had some pretty smart doctors. Your description of the problem is a fairly typical one. Sometimes a person has an extra rib, off the last neck vertebrae (a cervical rib) that acts this way. Soldiers were noted to have this problem when carrying a backpack. The straps around the shoulders to the pack would pull the shoulders back under the weight of the pack. This would pull the collarbone back compressing the arteries and sometimes the veins and nerves in this area.

Another way this can happen is for certain muscles in the neck to be pulled taut over an artery or nerve and cause problems in the arm. Some people have obstructive compression from muscles or tendons in the arm. The only way to define the problem and what is causing the obstruction is by careful examinations.

When the symptoms are marked or there are problems in the function of the hand or arm, the obstruction can be relieved. This eliminates the problem. If the obstruction is not severe and the symptoms are not all that troublesome, then one can ignore the problem without surgery. Incidentally, the surgery isn't all that difficult or dangerous. It is a fairly simple procedure.

I'm inclined to think, from the complete description you have made and what your son has been told, that neither he nor you have anything to worry about. I'm confident he has been told a fairly complete story regarding his health.

DEAR LAMB — I read your piece about the man who used electricity to cure arthritis, and you said it was no good. I just wondered about using heating pads. I have done that often.

DEAR READER — That's a horse of a different color. Heat, if used properly, will help to relax the muscles and prevent muscle spasm. It is very useful. It will not cure arthritis, but with a sore joint from osteoarthritis (the wear and tear kind) it can help give you relief. Some of the soreness in wear and tear arthritis is from associated muscle soreness. Of course, you should take sensible precautions and not burn yourself.

Fortin-Bullis united

DERBY LINE — A lovely spring wedding took place on Saturday morning, April 20 at ten o'clock at St. Edward's Parish church in Derby Line, when Theresa Marie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Bullis of Derby Line, became the bride of Mr. Edward Ernest Fortin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Fortin of Holland, Vt.

Easter lilies, mauve hydrangeas and mixed spring flowers were in the chancel. Father Ronald Benoit, Parish priest, officiated for the double ring ceremony. Mrs. John Gaudreau played the traditional organ music and accompanied the soloist, Miss Madeline Roy, who sang, "We've Only Just Begun," and, "Theme from Love Story."

The bride was escorted down the aisle on the arm of her father to meet the groom at the chancel steps. Her gown of white sheer organza and chantilly lace over peau de soie was fashioned on colonial lines with ruffles edging the lace bib effect bodice and the high neckline, the full Gibson Girl sleeves were gathered to wide lace trimmed cuffs. The ruffles continued into the skirt with inserts of lace. The back interest was a bustle of lace and ruffles to terminate into the cathedral length train. Her fingertip length veil of silk illusion was held in place by a Juliet cap of lace and satin. She carried a colonial of red sweetheart roses and baby's breath surrounded by white lace, with ivy trailing.

Miss Debra Bullis was maid of honor for her sister. She was wearing a gown of Nile green sheer having all over white pin dots, over matching color taffeta and fashioned similar to the gown of the bride with long sleeves gathered to wide cuffs trimmed with lace and a ruffled edged lace bib effect on the highrised bodice.

The bridesmaids were Miss Lucy Fortin and Miss Diane Fortin, sister and cousin of the groom. The flower girl was Miss Doris Fortin, sister of the groom. They wore gowns of rose pink sheer with white dots over taffeta styled identical to the maid of honor. They carried upright sprays of white daisies, and green fern, the flower girl, a basket of daisies and baby's breath.

Mr. Francis Fortin, from Bennington, Vt., was groomsmen for his brother. The ushers were Mr. David Bullis, brother of the bride and Roger Piette, cousin of the groom from Newport. The bride's brother, Mr. Thomas Bullis was ring bearer.

The groom wore a white jacket trimmed with black to match his trousers and a blue carnation boutonniere. The other gentlemen in the wedding party wore black trimmed blue jackets and black trousers, and white carnation boutonnieres. The ring bearer carried the rings on a lace trimmed heart designed satin cushion.

Mrs. Bullis, mother of the bride, chose a gown of heaven blue crepe polyester trimmed with silver braid and seed pearls, she carried a matching handbag and wore a corsage of iridescent pink and white carnations.

The groom's mother, Mrs. Fortin, was in a gown of white Irish lace over beige taffeta. Her accessories toned and her corsage was of pink and white variegated carnations.

Among the guests were Mrs. Violet Hillard and Mrs. Percy Bullis, maternal and paternal grandmother of the bride, and Mrs. Napoleon Letourneau, maternal grandmother of the groom. They wore corsages of yellow carnations. Mrs. Mary Bullis, the bride's great-grandmother was unable to attend as planned.

The reception was held at Paul's Sugarhouse and attended by over 200 guests. The management served an excellent family style turkey dinner.

The wedding cake was in "Antique" design, a masterpiece of Mrs. Benoit Blais. In triple tiers the bottom tier on green base was decorated in white with wedding bells, scroll, clusters of pink roses and love birds, lacy pillars raised the second and third tiers. The second tier featured harp playing angels and the top, the bride and groom standing in front of a Marriage in Christ cross and church window encircled with small flowers. This was flanked by candles in silver.

The toast to the couple was proposed by the groomsmen, Mr. Fortin.

As Mrs. Violet Hillard was celebrating her birthday. The Birthday song was sung and she was wished "Many happy returns."

Music for dancing was played by Wilfred Guillet. Miss Debra Bullis was in charge of the gift table.

Relatives and friends signed the guest book from New Hampshire, Maine, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Derby, Newport, Morgan, Holland, Orleans, Brownington, Barton, Westfield, Troy, North Troy, West Glover, Richford, Irasburg, Brandon and Three Villages.

On return from their wedding trip in the New England States, Mr. and Mrs. Fortin have taken up residence in Holland, Vt.

Mastectomy is nightmare

Dear Ann Landers: Okay. So I let a doctor talk me into having a mastectomy (a breast removed) and now I need a head-shrinker because of that damned operation. I will never forgive myself for allowing such a brutal thing to be done to me.

I can't bring myself to accept a date for fear it might develop into an emotional involvement. How unfair for a woman to let a man fall in love with her when she can give him only a mutilated body. It's too cruel to even think about.

Women who have had this operation are lying when they say it didn't change their sex lives. How could it miss? Sign me — Too Late And Plenty Sorry Dear Friend: You DO need a head-shrinker, and I hope you find one soon. You say you "let a doctor talk you into a mastectomy." Unless the biopsy showed a malignancy, no doctor would remove a breast. Be thankful the cancerous breast was removed because otherwise the disease would have killed you.

Thousands of married women have had breasts removed and are enjoying sex as they did before. Granted, some husbands aren't able to accept the change, but they are immature, ignorant fools. Any woman who loses a husband because of this hasn't lost much.

Obviously you are single, but I can assure you many love affairs and marriages have taken place after breast removals. I hope women who have experienced this will write to me. I will print their letters and prove that your fears are groundless.

Dear Ann Landers: I am 13 years old and have been a fan of yours for a long time, but I sure wish you would print more letters from teenagers. We have troubles, too, and there aren't many places for us to go for help.

For years, people have mistaken me for girl. I am a boy. In stores they say, "Thank you, Miss," and even on the bus I've been riding for ages, the driver still says, "Hi, honey," and stuff like that.

I'm sort of short and skinny with brown curly hair. Like all the other guys in my crowd, I wear my hair long, but this is not considered girlish because it's the style. I wear jeans and shirts, and I can't help it if a lot of girls wear them, too. They are copying US.

As soon as I can grow a moustache, I will, but it doesn't look like that will happen for quite a while yet. What can I do NOW? — A Him

Dear Him: The first thing you can do is cut off some of that curly brown hair. If you're wearing beads and sandals, knock those off, too. Pretty soon your voice will change and that will help. When someone says, "Thank you, Miss," you can reply in a bass voice. "Call me Mister."

Dear Ann Landers: Is it against the law for a teacher to teach a class while he is intoxicated?

Our son tells us a certain professor is bombed out of his mind at least three afternoons a week and has a terrible temper when he is loaded. He has already suspended two students.

The college is small and it seems someone in administration should have noticed this. What do you advise? — Concerned Parent

Dear Parent: The Dean should be informed at once. The next time the prof shows up plastered — if this is really what's happening — the Dean should be summoned to observe the scene.

+++ Even if drinking is the "in" thing in your crowd, it needn't crowd you out. Learn the facts from Ann Landers's booklet, "Booze and You — For Teen-Agers Only." Send 35 cents in coin and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 3346, Chicago, Ill. 60654.

Miss E. McCourt feted on birthday

RICHMOND — Mr. and Mrs. W.J. Collins of Hampstead who spent the winter months in Jacksonville, Florida, as guests of Mr. Collins's sister, Mrs. Edward Hayes and Mr. Hayes has returned home and came to Richmond to assist their aunt Miss Edith McCourt, College St., who was celebrating her birthday anniversary on April 4, to which everyone was welcome.

The rooms were prettily decorated with several bouquets of flowers which were gifts from Mrs. R.A. Marcotte, Mr. and Mrs. D. Thorogood (Greenfield Park), Nicole Ward and Sheila Adamson, Mr. and Mrs. A.J. Slater (Pierrefonds), Mrs. Cecil Ross and Mr. and Mrs. Collins.

At the tea hour Mrs. Howard Hills poured tea from the silver tea service and a beautiful decorated birthday cake, inscribed with "Many Happy Birthdays, Eddie," and topped with one candle, adorned the table. After the initial cut and extinguishing the candle, to the singing of the traditional birthday song, the cake was served to the guests by Miss Irene LaRoche. The afternoon was pleasantly spent reminiscing on interesting events which had taken place.

Miss McCourt afterwards expressed her appreciation to the guests and to all who had remembered her on this special occasion.

Open House

A number of friends and neighbours visited the home and extended happy birthday and best wishes to the celebrant. Miss McCourt was the recipient of many gifts, telephone calls from Ontario and various places in Quebec as well as 55 birthday cards, among which was one signed by members of the I.O.D.E., Olive Branch Rebekah Lodge No. 9, the U.C.W. of Richmond - Melbourne United Church and the Melbourne Unit.

THE LAST OF THE ARTISANS

Was quality the price of progress?

By Tom Tiede

(Second in a Series)

MARIETTA, Pa. — (NEA) — In some ways, no doubt, blacksmith Jerry Martin would puzzle Longfellow. The spreading chestnut tree has been extinct in this village for 50 years, for one thing; and for another, young Martin is not a mighty man "with large and sinewy hands; nor are the muscles of his arms as strong as iron bands."

Martin, 24, is a rather slight smithy, and neither his speech nor actions mimic the leather-aproned behemoth of the Longfellow poem. Today is different from yesterday.

Jerry Martin is gentle, somewhat shy and no doubt Henry Wadsworth would not understand this smithy's philosophies at all. "I believe in reincarnation," says Martin. Reincarnation? The Longfellow view was that blacksmiths believed in Sunday at church.

Yet beyond these obvious differences, perhaps today is not so different from yesterday at that. Not with Jerry Martin, anyway. It may have something to do with his belief in rebirth, or it may be just that he prefers the past, but in many ways Martin is living 100 year years ago. His two-story, fifteen-room restored home is a century old. His furnishings date to Paul Revere, with candle sconces on the walls and a 1790 clock in the corner. And as for his work, blacksmithing, it too is a remarkable page from history.

Martin got interested in smithing as a child. "Anything I saw, I wanted to copy." By the time he got out of high school he had a reputation as being one of the most exacting iron workers and tinsmiths in Pennsylvania.

Today, self employed, his in-home shop is a replica of ageless vintage; his fire is heated by soft coal (with water sprinkling) and fanned by an 18th-century bellows.

When the fire is full, shop temperatures climb to 130, the iron on the anvil burns red hot, and what with the resulting grime, Martin is not unlike Longfellow's character. "His hair is crisp and black and long; his face is like the tan; his brow is wet with honest sweat; he earns what he can."

Assuredly, there are those who wonder on the wisdom and worth of this particular artisan. After all, blacksmithing is not precisely a critical industry anymore. And, asks a neighbor will be broken and discarded in a few years; mine will last a lifetime.

bellows? Propane would do the job much better."

To which Martin has no satisfactory answer to anyone but himself. If people have to wonder why he does what he does, they will never know.

"I suppose it's the educational system today," says Martin, sunk into an antique chair. "We aren't taught to appreciate quality anymore."

Take this chair, for instance. Most people when they buy furniture buy three rooms full for $500 or something like that. When I buy a chair I may spend that much for one piece. Now, all their furniture will be broken and discarded in a few years; mine will last a lifetime."

This is the point, then, for blacksmith Martin. He produces goods to last a lifetime. He follows an all but forgotten canon of American industry. Do it well or don't do it. It is the kind of professionalism that American consumerism can no longer abide, because it is necessarily expensive and thus counter to the modern demand for instant everything.

Homes of yore accumulated goods through the years, today young marrieds want everything the first week. The system, says Martin, prohibits quality.

Yet there are still a few people, representing every economic level, who desire excellence. Thus Martin has orders two years in advance. Daily in his brick-walled shop he hammers out gate hinges, strap hinges, even rosette nails for those who eschew the contemporary counterparts. Besides this he is a tinsmith, fashioning authentic reproductions of chandeliers, candle holders, "anything the customer wants."

Without doubt, the merchandise is fine. Martin's family has been in the tinsmith business for more than 100 years, and the blacksmithing, while not handed-down, has been developed through strict adherence to authenticity.

Martin does not use power tools to trim his goods, though no one would guess if he did; rather, like his predecessors of history, he hammers each shape out by hand, using either photographs or models from which to manufacture copies.

The goods are often expensive. And Martin's future, in a world increasingly forged of plastic rather than iron, is uncertain. Yet Longfellow would understand at least his pluck.

"Thanks to thee, my worthy friend, for the lesson thou hast taught; Thus at the flaming forge of life our fortunes must be wrought." The lesson of Jerry Martin is, of course, that there are still people in the land who want to do it their way.

Mrs. Agnes Duncan passed away recently after a short illness, at the B.M.P. Hospital.

Mrs. Duncan had however been in failing health for a long time, and had retired several years previously from her active duties with her beloved children at the Alderbrook Home, where she and her daughter, Mrs. Rose MacLean had been operating this home for many years. Mrs. Duncan will be sadly missed in this community, where she was an active member of the Knowlton United Church, and several years ago was made an Honorary member of Brome Branch Royal Canadian Legion for her untiring services and work for and on behalf of veterans and for the general aims and objects of the Royal Canadian Legion. The sympathy of the entire community is extended to Mrs. Rose MacLean.

A familiar and well known personality of this area passed away at the B.M.P. Hospital on April 12, after a short illness, Thomas Conolly, who had made his home here in Knowlton for many years, and prior to that he resided at Iron Hill. Tom was buried with full Royal Canadian Legion honors from St. Paul's Church on Monday April 15 with the Rev. Ian Dodd officiating. Full representation of Brome Branch Royal Canadian Legion were in attendance, and also members of the Ladies Auxiliary. Tom was a stalwart and devoted member of the Legion, and was always keen and interested in all phases of Legion work; he worked hard during the annual Remembrance Week, and indeed at all times his interest was with the Legion. He was also a dedicated member of St. Paul's Church, and an active sidesman until very recently, when he had to be persuaded to give up this work on account of his steadily failing health. The remains were laid to rest in the Knowlton Protestant Cemetery vault with burial in May. The bearers, all Legion members, were Albert Smith, Earle Falle, Robert Hastings, Tom Doucet, John Syberg and William Russell.

The Rev. Ian N. Dodd, Rector of Knowlton-Mansfield Parish for the past four years, announced through the parish letter this week his intention of leaving Knowlton to take up a call he has received from England, where he will be assistant at St. Mark's Church, Kingstanding, Birmingham, England. The Rev. Dodd was inducted Rector of Knowlton-Mansfield in St. Paul's Church on July 31, 1970 and since that time has worked hard and has been a dedicated and devoted Priest to his parishioners scattered over many miles from Knowlton to Mansfield, where he served at five churches during his ministry here. His intention is to be with us for the summer, and is leaving for England on September 16. On May 13 there will be a SPECIAL PARISH VESTRY meeting for the purpose of forming a committee to meet with the Bishop of Montreal for the object of obtaining a new Rector as soon as possible. It is the hope of the Parish that a new Rector will be appointed to take up the duties the same week as Rev. and Mrs. Dodd leave the Parish.

Mr. Alexander Gordon Anderson, retired from the Bell Telephone Company where he served in an executive capacity, passed away at the B.M.P. Hospital on Monday April 22nd. The sympathy of the community is extended to Mrs. Anderson and her family.

Series tied 2-2

Rangers in high spirits following 2-1 overtime triumph

NEW YORK (CP) — Right winger Rod Gilbert says New York Rangers are optimistic facing Tuesday night's fifth game of their best-of-seven Stanley Cup semi-final in Philadelphia against the Flyers.

Coach Emile Francis of the Rangers echoed Gilbert's sentiments after the right winger's goal at 4:20 of the first sudden-death overtime period Sunday sank the Flyers 2-1 and earned New York a 2-2 tie in the series.

Tuesday's fifth game starts at 8:05 p.m. EDT.

"We're optimistic," Gilbert said. "We're going to go in there and play our style of game and come out a winner."

Gilbert made the prediction after explaining that it was only chance that saw him on the ice to score against Bernie Parent and cause 17,500 screaming fans to give him a standing ovation.

When the goal was scored, the other two members of Gilbert's line—Bobby Rousseau and Jean Ratelle—already were on the New York bench. They had been replaced by Walt Tkaczuk and left winger Steve Vickers.

Gilbert said he also had been heading for the bench, but when he found himself near the Philadelphia net and Vickers in control of the puck in the Flyers' zone, he decided to stay.

Gilbert's short shot went between Parent's pads.

The overtime situation was set up when Rousseau scored for the Rangers on a second-period power play to offset a first-period goal by defenceman Joe Watson of the Flyers.

And ironically, it was Watson who had the best opportunity to prevent Gilbert's winner. The Philadelphia player was in the process of dumping the New York winger when Gilbert got the shot away.

In the second minute of overtime, veteran Flyers defenceman Barry Ashbee was struck near the right eye by a shot from the stick of New York's Dale Rolfe.

Ashbee left the ice on a stretcher and was taken to hospital, where his condition was later described as "good."

A hospital spokesman said it could take two days to determine the extent of Ashbee's injury, although preliminary x-rays revealed no broken bones.

Francis, who had some anxious moments when his Rangers dropped two decisions to the Flyers in Philadelphia before winning the third and fourth games here, said his confidence had not been shaken by the earlier losses.

"I felt from the start we have a hockey club that won't be beaten," Francis said. "It was no different when we were down two games than now when we are tied 2-2. They caught us when we were flat in the first game. The second game we played well and lost a tough one."

The Flyers lashed the Rangers 4-0 in the opener and beat them 5-2 in the second game. But the New Yorkers won the third game 5-

3—a rough contest that saw 108 minutes in penalties called by referee Bryan Lewis. Left winger Dave Schultz of the Flyers took 31 of the 81 minutes his team was assessed in that game.

But referee Lloyd Gilmour ruled the fourth game with an iron hand. After calling 10 minor penalties and two majors in the opening period, he assessed only seven minors in the second and one in the third.

Parent was sensational and stopped 35 of 37 shots the Rangers fired at him. New York's Ed Giacomin also had some key saves among the 20 shots by the Flyers.

The Rangers also had injuries. Winger Bruce MacGregor had a sore elbow that kept him out of action after the first period. Vic Hadfield's left ankle didn't allow him to play, and Ron Harris reinjured his chest and rib cage.

Francis said MacGregor and possibly Hadfield will be ready Tuesday, but Harris remains a doubtful starter.

Bucyk, Esposito put Bruins ahead

BOSTON (CP) — His teammates thought it was like watching a 23-year-old rookie in high gear, but Johnny Bucyk felt like a 39-year-old veteran whose legs can't take the hard skating employed by Boston Bruins.

Bucyk scored the first two Boston goals, in the second period, and the Bruins went on to a 6-2 victory Sunday night over Chicago Black Hawks.

The win gave Boston a 3-2 lead in the Stanley Cup semifinal, the first time they have had the edge in the best-of-seven series. The sixth game will be in Chicago at 8:30 p.m. EDT Tuesday night.

"I've got to do a lot of things different at my age," said Bucyk, the Boston captain who will be 39 May 12. "I've got to pace myself."

"I still feel pretty good, but I've got to rest myself. Right now, I'm just tired. I've been losing six to eight pounds a night in the playoffs."

Bucyk wasn't the only player tired in the sweltering Boston Garden where outside temperatures were in the mid-70s during the afternoon.

ALSO SCORED TWICE

"(Chicago defenceman) Dick Redmond and my brother (Chicago goalie Tony) really looked tired out there tonight," said Boston's Phil Esposito, the National Hockey League's scoring champion four of the last five years and another two-goal scorer Sunday night.

The other Bruin goals went to Gregg Sheppard, his eighth in the playoffs after scoring only 16 in regular season play, and Dallas

Smith.

Both Chicago goals came off the power play, Cliff Koroll's first of the playoffs after Boston had opened a 4-0 lead, and another by Pit Martin—the only scoring in the third period.

Said Ken Hodge, the big right winger whose work in the corners was instrumental in setting up both Esposito's goals:

"We have played three games (two wins and a loss) that are indicative of the way this club can really play."

"Yeah, we forechecked the hell out of them," Esposito added. "And when we play this way there's no team going to beat us."

HAD NO ALIBIES

Losing coach Billy Reay had no alibies, saying only: "We looked really bad out there in the second period" when the Bruins scored three goals in two minutes and 48 seconds.

Chicago winger Dennis Hull, who suffered a muscle spasm near the base of his spine in Boston's 5-3 win Thursday, did not play and may not be ready Tuesday.

Boston defenceman Carol Vadnais, who injured his left thigh in the same game when he slipped on some debris on Detroit ice, was back in action Sunday.

One worried man after the game was Boston coach Bep Guidolin who was unhappy about the way his team played in the third period.

The Bruins were held scoreless by Mike Veisor who replaced Tony Esposito for the last 20 minutes.

"With that type of lead, though, it's hard to get these guys going," Guidolin said. "It's a bad way to develop bad habits."

Cougars take playoff lead over Toros, Houston evens count with Minnesota

Chicago Cougars, who had to stalk Quebec Nordiques until the last week of the schedule to gain a playoff berth in the World Hockey Association, have taken the lead in their semi-final series with Toronto Toros, while Houston Aeros played catch-up to even their set with Minnesota Fighting Saints.

After a layoff of almost a week, the Cougars, who placed fourth in the East Division in the regular season, defeated the Toros 3-2 Sunday to take a 2-1 lead in their best-of-seven series, which continues Tuesday in Mount Prospect, Ill., a Chicago suburb.

The Aeros stopped the Saints 4-1 in St. Paul, Minn., to square their best-of-seven round at two games each. The fifth game is scheduled for Houston Tuesday night.

Rosaire Paiement hammered in two third-period goals to lift the Cougars to victory.

Paiement tied the game 2-2 at 1:26 of the final period as he tipped in a shot taken by Dick Proceviat. Some five minutes later, Chicago player-coach Pat Stapleton intercepted a Toronto pass and sent the puck to Paiement, who drove in a 30-foot shot for the winning goal.

GOALIES SWITCHED

During the final period, Toronto coach Billy Harris replaced starting goalie Gilles Gratton with veteran Les Binkley. Less than two minutes later, at 16:13 of the final period, Harris had Gratton back in the nets, after an apparent rest break.

The Toros suffered injuries to defencemen Steve Cuddie and Rick Cunningham. Cuddie suffered a shattered contact lens when hit in the right eye by a puck in the first period. Cunningham suffered an ankle injury in the second period. Both were taken to hospital for observation.

The Cougars finished with 32 shots on goal to 24 for their opponents.

Game 5 will be played in Toronto Wednesday night and if a sixth game is needed, it will be played in the suburban Chicago shopping centre rink next Saturday. The Cougars' usual home rink has been taken over by a Peter Pan production.

Harris said he hoped to have both Cuddie and Cunningham back for Tuesday's game, but "we'll just have to wait for the reports on them."

Bob Sicinski was the other goal-getter for the Cougars, while Bob Leduc and Brian Gibbons scored for the Toros.

HOWE SCORES

The Gordie Howe, recovered from the flu that slowed him in earlier games, put the Aeros ahead 2-0 during Houston's only power-play advantage.

The crowd of 17,211 was a WHA record, surpassing the 16,412 set one week ago in the third game of the series, also at the St. Paul Civic Centre.

John Schella, Gord Labossiere and Frank Hughes also scored for Houston. Wayne Connelly connected late in the second period for Minnesota's only goal.

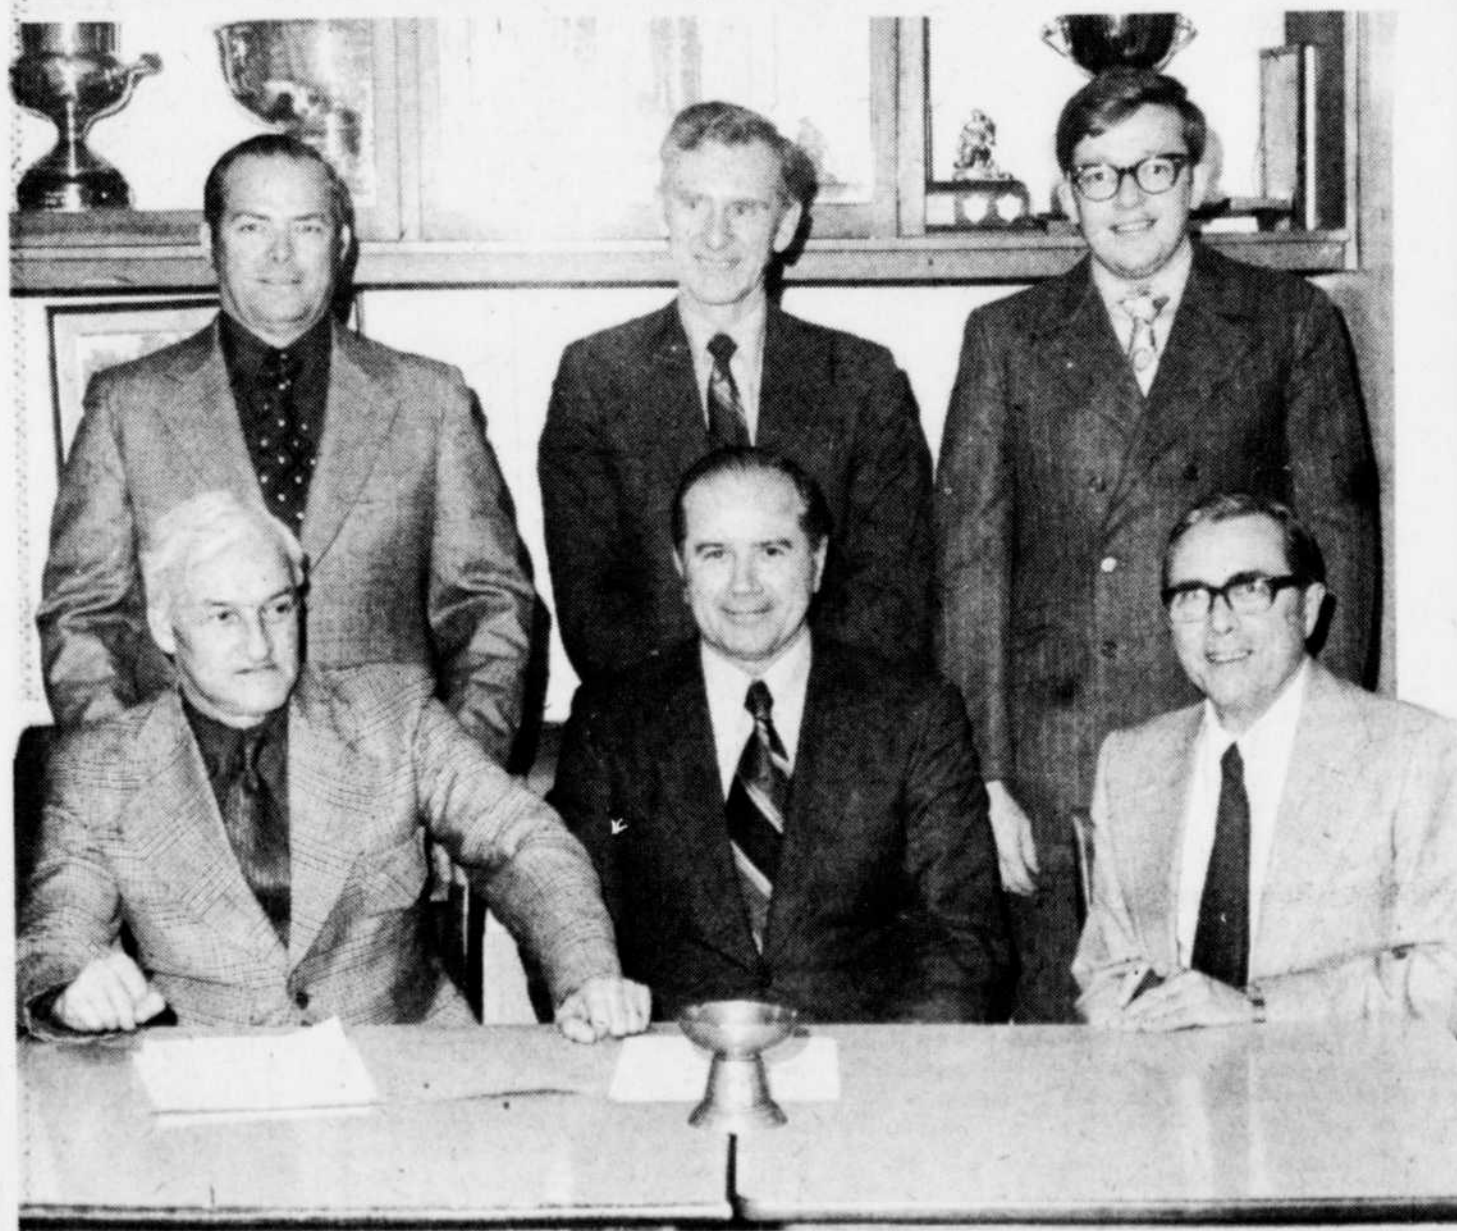

Both players' benches emptied during a first-period brawl that ended with 89 minutes in penalties assessed, including a game misconduct to Minnesota's Bob Goldthorpe.

Expos drop weekend games

Gibson, Brett help their own winning cause

"Rats!" St. Louis hurler Bob Gibson said upon hitting a double Sunday. There is, unfortunately, no record of what Houston's Claude Osteen said when Ken Brett, his Pittsburgh pitching rival, tagged him for a home run.

Gibson and Brett were at it again with extra-base hitting and some tight pitching. Gibson scattered 10 hits in pitching the Cardinals past Cincinnati Reds 9-2 while Brett socked his first home run of the season in the Pirates' 7-3 triumph over the Astros.

Elsewhere in the National League, Los Angeles Dodgers blanked Montreal Expos 4-0 for their sixth consecutive victory. San Diego Padres rallied for five runs in the ninth inning to edge Philadelphia Phillies 5-4. Chicago Cubs nipped Atlanta Braves 4-3, and New York Mets swept a doubleheader from San Francisco Giants 6-0 and 6-4.

Saturday it was Atlanta 5 Chicago 2, Los Angeles 5 Montreal 2, Houston 10 Pittsburgh 7, San Francisco 11 New York 3, St. Louis 4 Cincinnati 3, San Diego 5 Philadelphia 2.

Gibson, who survived a shaky start in pitching the Cardinals into a first-place tie with Montreal in the NL's East Division, drilled his double in the third inning and scored on a double by Ted Sizemore, giving St. Louis an 8-1 lead.

"When I got the hit I said, 'Rats!'" Gibson reported as he packed his surgery-scarred right knee in ice following the game. "I knew it was fair, but I also knew I was going to have to keep on running. The knee is always tired."

Gibson threw 129 pitches in posting his first 1974 triumph.

PACE CARDS' ATTACK

Sizemore and Reggie Smith paced a 15-hit Cardinal attack with three hits apiece. St. Louis shelled Clay Kirby for five runs in the first inning.

Brett, who set a record last year by homering in each of four consecutive pitching starts, belted a solo shot and Willie Stargell added a two-run homer in the Pirates' win over Houston.

Steve Yeager slammed a three-run homer to back the Dodgers four-hit pitching of Doug Rau and Mike Marshall. Yeager's homer highlighted a four-run fourth inning against Mike Torrez. Rau limited the Expos to one hit through six innings. Marshall took over in the seventh and retired pinch hitter Ron Fairly on a fly ball.

Willie McCovey's run-scoring single capped a five-run rally in the ninth inning, giving the Padres their third win in a row and sixth in their last seven games following a 3-13 start.

Philadelphia's Jim Lonborg had a six-hit shutout going into the last inning when he loaded the bases with one out on two singles and a walk. Frank Linzy gave up a two-run double to Derrel Thomas, a two-run single to Rich Morales and a single to Nate Colbert and McCovey ripped his winning hit on the first pitch from Mac Scarce.

Billy Williams' two-run homer off former team-mate Jack Aker in the eighth inning enabled the Cubs to snap a fivegame losing streak. Craig Robinson's bases-loaded two-run single in the seventh had put the Braves on top 3-2.

Ron Hodges slammed a two-run homer in the seventh inning of the nightcap, breaking a 3-3 tie. John Milner also homered for New York while Steve Ontiveros connected for the Giants. The Mets played long-ball in the opener with a pair of two-run homers by Dave Schneck backing Jon Matlack's four-hit pitching

New rules established for olympic eligibility

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) — Lord Killanin, president of the International Olympic Committee (IOC), announced today a streamlined draft rule on Olympic eligibility to replace the stringent standards for amateur status championed by Avery Brundage, his American predecessor.

The draft was designed to end a long-standing controversy over the issue that it is a peak threat to a split in international sports.

It comprises two paragraphs confirming in essence that the Olympic Games are closed to professionals. But bylaws spelling out details suggest a distinct liberalization compared with the present three pages of rules introduced in 1971 under Brundage.

"It is my personal opinion that the current rule is confusing," Lord Killanin said in a letter which he sent with the draft rule to all national Olympic committees and international sports federations. "It has endeavored to state a philosophy rather than to make a firm rule."

The draft bylaws suggest a ban on carrying advertising material in an international competition. This rule would replace the directive stipulating that an Olympic athlete "must not have directly or indirectly allowed his name, his photograph or his sports performance to be used individually for advertising purposes."

Lord Killanin said IOC membership was evenly divided between a total ban on advertising and a ban at international level only, as envisaged by the bylaw.

NEED SPONSORS

He said that "in many countries national and club sports are sponsored and the running numbers carry the names of a commercial product. This can be an affront to the freedom of the individual and indeed against his conscience, but without this structure there might be a drop in sponsorship."

The present rules forbid appearances on radio and TV during the Olympics in which an athlete is participating unless permission is received from his team leader. The new bylaws do not include such a ban "but naturally the competitor would be in breach of the (eligibility) Rule 26 if he personally obtained financial or material gain from any such work."

Lord Killanin said the present rule limiting fulltime training to a maximum of 60 days a year was "not enforceable" and was not included in the new bylaws. The decision on this was left to the individual sports federations to include in their own rules which again are subject to approval by the IOC.

PERMITS SCHOLARSHIPS

The present rules allow an Olympic competitor to accept scholarships provided they are "dependent upon the fulfillment of scholastic obligations and not on athletics."

The new draft bylaws delete all reference to scholarships. Lord Killanin explained that they were "difficult to control" and "many of the scholars who have the opportunity of furthering their education which may be assisted by their sport do not necessarily gain materially but obtain an intellectual asset which contributes toward the ideal of the Olympics."

Lord Killanin said it has been suggested that an Olympic competitor should not be included in open world championships, but this was a "subject for discussion."

Athletes now are likely to be ineligible for Olympic competition if they compete as professionals in one sport and as amateurs in another. Lord Killanin said the IOC executive committee "considered unanimously that for an Olympic competitor it (such a rule) would be impossible to control." Such pro-am status is allowed under a new rule by the American National Collegiate Athletic Association—NCAA.

Barrie leads Allan Cup

BARRIE, Ont. (CP) — Kent Ruhnke is proving to be quite an addition to the Barrie Flyers hockey club.

The University of Toronto graduate scored three goals Sunday as Barrie defeated Thunder Bay Twins 7-4 for a 2-0 lead in their best-of-five Eastern Canada Allan Cup hockey final.

Ruhnke, who joined the Flyers in March after University of Toronto Blues had been eliminated in the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union tournament, also netted the overtime winner in Barrie's 2-1 win Saturday.

In Sunday's contest, the Flyers took a 3-1 lead after two periods before the teams scored a total of seven goals in the third.

Dave Nicholson, Corby Adams, Paul Regan and Bob Baird got the other goals for Barrie, winner of the Ontario Hockey Association Senior A series.

Bryan Depiero, Murray McLeod, Dave Bragnalo and Barry Hogan replied for the Twins, champions of the United States Hockey League.

RUHNKE OPENS SCORING

Ruhnke opened the scoring in the first period on an end-to-end rush that earned goalie Ernie Miller an assist. He added his other two goals in the final period.

Coach Lee Fogolin of the Twins was upset with the officiating following the Sunday loss.

He said referee Tom Brown, who called seven minor penalties during the contest, "should have paid to get into the game. He was just another spectator."

"But I'm not making excuses. We just haven't been playing our game."

"We played our game for about the first half of the first game, but tonight (Sunday) we were slowed down by the ice conditions," which he described as sloppy.

RETRIEVE TIMING

Player-coach Darryl Sly of the Flyers said he thought his players were "getting their timing back after the two-week lay-off" since winning the OHA title.

"Thunder Bay's got a good skating club," he said. "I know, I'm tired after chasing them around."

In Saturday's game, Dave Valiant opened the scoring for

But Jenkins keeps winning

Nettles ties National League home run mark

Graig Nettles has done something that home-run king Hank Aaron has not been able to accomplish.

The New York Yankee third baseman broke an American League record and tied the major league mark with his 11th home run of April during Sunday's 8-5 loss to Texas Rangers in the second game of a doubleheader.

"It would have been a bigger thrill if it had been a game-winner," Nettles said of his accomplishment.

The Yankees, who beat the Rangers 11-2 in the opener, have the hottest long-ball hitter in the majors in Nettles.

His two-run homer Sunday off Ferguson Jenkins broke the AL record of 10 for April set in 1969 by Baltimore's Frank Robinson and tied the major league mark set by Pittsburgh's Willie Stargell in 1971.

In other games, Baltimore Orioles nipped Oakland A's 4-3, Minnesota Twins topped Milwaukee Brewers 6-5, Detroit Tigers beat Chicago White Sox 6-4, Boston Red Sox turned back Kansas City Royals 5-4 in 13 innings, and Cleveland Indians walloped California Angels 10-2.

Cleveland defeated California 6-0 Saturday. Texas downed New York 6-1, Milwaukee blanked Minnesota 9-0, Kansas City hammered Boston 10-3, Oakland downed Baltimore 11-5, and Detroit beat Chicago 8-3.

Ron Blomberg's three-run homer and Thurman Munson's solo shot highlighted a barrage of extra-base hits that produced seven runs in the third inning, powering the Yankees to their opening-game victory over Texas.

JENKINS IN FORM

Jenkins scattered eight hits and pitched his sixth consecutive complete game for the Rangers in the nightcap. The Texas ace allowed a run in each of the first two innings, the second on Blomberg's second home run of the day. Jenkins then retired the next 15 batters until Bobby Murcer walked preceding Nettles'.

home run in the seventh.

Jenkins became the first Texas-Washington pitcher since Dick Donovan in 1961 to fashion six straight complete games.

Designated hitter Tommy Davis greeted Oakland relief ace Rickey Fingers with a run-scoring single in the eighth inning, lifting Baltimore over the A's.

Davis' hit scored Bobby Grich, who opened the inning with a double off loser Ken Holtzman.

Bill Campbell posted his sixth save of the season, preserving a 6-5 victory for Minnesota over Milwaukee.

Campbell, who has not given up an earned run this season, came on in the seventh with one out and two runs home on Don Money's double. He yielded a run-scoring single to Johnny Briggs but then got George Scott, who had driven in two runs with a single and a homer, to hit into a double play.

HORTON LEADS TIGERS

Willie Horton slammed his fifth homer of the season, doubled home another run and scored twice to lead Detroit over Chicago.

The Tigers reached Wilbur Wood, 2.5, for four of their runs in the first three innings. John Hiller shut the door on a late Chicago rally and preserved Joe Coleman's fourth victory in five decisions.

Cecil Cooper led off the 13th inning with his second home run of the season, lifting Boston past Kansas City.

The victory snapped the Red Sox five-game losing streak.

The game-winning shot came off Doug Bird and was Cooper's second of the season.

Earlier, Rick Miller and Dwight Evans hit solo home runs off Marty Pattin. Fran Healy accounted for Kansas City's first two runs in the second, unloading a two-run homer off Rogelio Morret.

George Hendrick walloped a grand-slam home run in an eight-run eighth, his second homer of the game, to carry Gaylord Perry and Cleveland over California.

THE BIG SWING — But it was all for nothing after this Lennoxville girl missed the ball. The beautiful sun on Sunday brought out numbers of children all over town. The game was just for fun, but someday, they may become the softball stars of the area.

SOFTBALL ALREADY — With the comfort of watching baseball and hockey on television, who would want to do anything as ambitious as playing themselves? Members of the Begin Sports women's softball team were out for an early season practice on Saturday, getting a head start on their Lennoxville Ladies Softball League counterparts.
