The contractors of the Chats Falls development, have been examining several gravel pits in this district with a view to getting an unlimited supply in one locality, that can be tapped by a spur line from the C. N. R. A very large quantity of gravel will be required for the contemplated work, as it is said, the stone in the neighborhood is too hard for crushing. Doubtless this is only one of the many rumors that get going in connection with such matters.

Yarm Resident Found Dead

Mr. John Dagg, resident of Yarm section, who lived alone, was found dead in his bed on Monday afternoon, when after several calls on the phone had met with no response, the door of the house was forced open by Mayor Tracy. Examination of the body by Dr. McPherson indicated that the man had been dead for at least two days, and perhaps longer. Mr. Dagg was known to have been afflicted with heart affection.

Messrs. Jimmie Horner, Dean Howard and John McKinley motored to New York city for the week-end.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Bradley and son, Kieth, of Mansonville, Que., visited Mr. and Mrs. Lem Hodgins, last week.

Mr. Bill Steele and sisters, Misses Ella and Lyl Steele, of Ottawa, visited relatives here on Sunday last.

Mrs. H. Millar, of Ottawa, was a week-end guest of her sister, Mrs. Wellington Armstrong, and other relatives in town.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Argue and children left on Friday afternoon for Carthage, N. Y., where they visited relatives.

Mr. A. G. Brough, who was suddenly called to Timmins, Ont., on the 9th inst., on account of the serious illness of his mother, arrived home again at 3 o'clock Friday morning, his mother in the meantime having shown gratifying evidence of improvement. He had only been a few minutes at home, however, when a message came with the sad news that Mrs. Brough had unexpectedly passed away. As the remains were brought for interment in the family plot near Peterborough on Monday, Mr. Brough left for that place on Saturday afternoon to be present when the relatives from Timmins arrived with the body.

Macdonald College Shortcourse in Household Science

Applications are now being received for the Winter Short Course which will open January 6th and close March 14th, giving ten weeks of instruction in various subjects pertaining to the home. These include laboratory classes in cookery, dressmaking and millinery, laundry, housewifery and house furnishings; as well as lectures in nutrition, home nursing and household administration. Instruction in either poultry management or horticulture is also included.

The course is of an essentially practical nature, designed to meet the needs of those who are unable to attend one of the longer courses. It aims to give as thorough a training in the art of homemaking as is possible in so short a time.

Accommodation is limited, and students will be accepted in the order of application.

The number of carcasses of deer that have been brought down the Highway this year — chiefly by American sportsmen—largely exceeds the shipments of past years. This, of course, is due to the greater number of nimrods from across the line who came over here this Fall to secure their venison, which, whether one hunts for it or not, can be procured for a consideration on the "speak-easy" principle. And as the years go by the influx of sporting visitors is bound to increase and take on a permanency in the wild lands of Quebec, which the native born and the backwoods settler may not appreciate.

Hot Meat Pies

By EDWARD WOODWARD

Miss Grace Morris, twenty-three, and as pretty as need be, got to know Mr. George Andrews, who made up for the lack of a straight nose by a straight outlook, at the Deptford Technical School. They were both attending an evening class in General Knowledge. Frankly, George had paid his fee less for general knowledge than particular knowledge of Grace.

Up to the moment when their eyes met they had been definite individualists, but thereafter they believed hotly in co-operation, and mutual ben-e fit occupied all their leisure hours.

These periods were limited by the fact that Grace managed the circulating library and stationery department in her father's bookshop, and George helped commerce forward in an office in Mincing Lane.

From the first they recognized their affection as the real thing, and dur ing their walks Grace often spoke seriously of the future.

"A smart young business man like you, George," she would whisper, "will make our library and bookshop into a second Smithson's. Dad's getting a bit past it, you know, and—"

She would finish with a blushing smile, and George thought of himself as owner of the bookshop in Deptford Broadway.

Then one Saturday evening, after they had known each other for a month, a man with a hot-pie cart and raucous voice waved enthusiastically to them.

"What-ho, George! 'Ave a 'ot pie with me?"

George returned the hail, flushed, shook his head, and glanced a little anxiously at Grace. Grace flushed, too and regarded George with eyes like blue glass.

"Do you know that—that man, George?" she asked stiffly.

"Know Alf Jennings?" answered George, with a laugh. "I should think I do! We've been pals for along time, told you about my lending him a bit of money to start in business."

"But you said that Mr. Jennings was a caterer!" exclaimed Grace.

"Well, isn't selling hot pies catering?" chuckled George.

Grace remained silent and held herself very rigid. She felt she had been grossly misled.

"It's not what I call catering," she said presently. "Selling hot pies in the street. It's low!"

George halted.

"Look here!" he said a little angrily. "Don't you be narrow. You told me that they taught you at the political economy class that all productive labor was dignified. Alf makes all his pies himself, so he's got something up on a bishop. And they're good pies, too!"

Grace saw the strength of George's orgument, but she was stubborn.

"That's an extreme view!" she retorted. "There's the reputation of the shop to think of, and unless you are willing to give up your low acquaintances I must give you up."

George was hurt. He was also angry. What was the good of all the theory Grace had preached to him about capital and labor if the moment it was put into practice it fell down?

"I'm not going to give old Alf Jennings up," he said defiantly.

"Then good-bye!" snapped Grace, with a suspicion of dew round her eyes; and before George could stop her she had turned on her heel and walked away.

George was tempted to run after her and continue the argument; but he was a bit stiff-necked himself. So, instead of following Grace, as she expected he would, he strolled back to where Alf Jennings was still popping hot pies into paper bags.

"Hallo, Alf!" he said. "How's trade?"

"Hot as the pies, George," grinned Alf. "Folk can eat my pies when they ain't got a fancy for anything else. Where's your gal? She looked a bit of all right."

"Had to go home," answered George evasively. "Give me a pie."

He bit into the crisp pastry and, munching, stood and watched the eager buying. The thought of what Grace would say if she saw him now brought a grim smile to his face.

But Grace had returned to her father's shop disappointed and depressed. She cried herself to sleep that night. She was genuinely fond of George, and had seen herself lifting him to a great place in the bookselling world; and now that wretched pie-man and George's stubbornness had demolished all her dreams.

With the drying of her eyes, however, hope returned. George would see his folly and write to her for forgiveness; and because she was large-minded and tolerant she would forgive him.

But George did not write; and at the end of a fortnight of silence she pocketed her pride and, going to the city, waited outside his office.

But although she waited until nearly seven o'clock George didn't appear. Then, seeing the commissionaire preparing to lock up, she inquired if Mr. Andrews had gone.

"Gawn? Yes, miss—gawn for good!" smiled the commissionaire.

Surprise and concern robbed Grace of breath.

"Gone?" she gasped. "Do—do you mean he has left?"

"That's it, miss. Went a week ago to better himself."

"Do you know where he has gone?" Grace's voice was agitated.

"Setting up somewhere for himself, I believe, miss," said the commissionaire briefly.

Grace was upset to think that George had taken this step without seeking to make friends with her again to discuss the matter. Yet she felt a thrill of satisfaction. Apparently her words had struck home so deeply that he had cut adrift from his very job.

"Th-thank you," she said, in a pathetically composed voice; and returned to the library and bookshop to await news. She felt convinced that sooner or later she would hear from George.

Feeling that she was stooping to conquer, she took to searching Deptford Broadway on Saturday nights for Alf Jennings' hot-pie cart, in the hope that he would be able to enlighten her as to George's whereabouts. But after four wasted Saturday evenings she gave up the search. Alf Jennings, too, had vanished.

Twelve months, which seemed to Grace like twelve years, went by, and Mr. Morris, who had been ailing for some time, took to his bed. The stationery business shrank, and the library and bookselling department was heavily hit by the arrival of a larger and more go-ahead concern. At the end of eighteen months Mr. Morris died, the business was sold to pay its debts, and Grace was forced to take a job as a book-canvasser. Her general knowledge and theories on political and social economy were a drug on the market.

She only had time to think of George in the evenings, but she thought of him a very great deal then.

One wet day in November she was waiting for a 'bus on the sopping pavement, her stockings ruined with mud, and her thin shoes wet-compresses round her feet, when a smart coupe slithered to a halt at the curb, and George Andrews' face appeared at the lowered window.

"Hallo, Grace!" he called. "What a stranger you are!"

Grace's heart gave a great bound, and for a second she feared she was going to make a fool of herself and cry. She was so very miserable.

"George!" she exclaimed. "Oh, George, I—I——" she stopped speaking, not knowing what next to say. Then, seeing the beauty of the car, she asked: "Are you a commercial traveller?"

"No, I'm on my own," grinned George.

"Do you mean this is your car?" asked Grace.

"Every nut of it," George assured her. "And there's a lot of empty space by my side here, if you want a lift."

He flung open the door as he spoke, and without mentioning where she wanted to go, Grace stepped in. George didn't inquire her destination. In a sort of dream of well-being at having Grace by his side again, he let in the clutch and drove forward.

For a time there was a constrained silence; then Grace looked shyly at him.

"Things seem to have prospered with you George," she said.

"Made a bit of money," answered George. "Heard a month ago that your dad was dead and that your shop had gone bust. Looked around for you, but couldn't trace you. I cut adrift from those Technical School classes when we parted. They taught theory; I went in for practice."

Being stubborn, Grace looked at him squarely.

"If you've made all the money you say you have without following theoretical teaching, George, what would you be if you'd stuck to it?" she asked.

George grinned.

"Maybe I'd be keeping a bookseller's shop on Deptford Broadway, Grace," he said. "As it is, I'm keeping a model factory and finding five hundred men and women productive work."

"What at?" exclaimed Grace.

"Making meat-pies!" smiled George. "Alf Jennings looks after the production and I look after the business side."

There was silence, and then Grace sighed.

"I'm book-canvassing," she said.

"Were," corrected George. "From now on you are going in for a bit of real welfare work."

"Whose?" asked Grace.

"Mine," grinned George. He slid his free hand round her. "Will you take the job?"

Grace answered in the most convincing way, and when she regained her breath smiled into George's eyes.

"Will you ask Alf Jennings to be your best man?" she asked.

"He'll be tickled to death," laughed George, and kissed her again.—Answers.

"There's that new Zeppelin."

"Yep, it's a fine ship, but how would you like to buy gas every time you take off?"

The Problem of Narcotics

The Evil of Narcotics is One That Strikes Both Directly andIndirectly at the Home

There are about 8,000 drug adbicts—or dope fiends, as they are more commonly called—in Canada. They consume—and here is an even more startling figure—about $80,000 worth of drugs every day.

The danger from the widespread use of narcotics in Canada is that drug adbicts breed drug adbidcts; each one is an agency of evil who will try to pull other victims into the mire in which he finds himself.

The four main drugs that have assailed Canada are opium, morphine, cocaine and heroin. Opium is the juice of the white poppy, cultivated mainly in Hindustan and Asiatic Turkey, and thickened by evaporation.

Opium would not be so important to us, but for the fact that other drugs that are used most extensively in Canada, come from opium.

About one hundred and twenty-five years ago, a French chemist found that he could produce another drug-morphine, which was named after the god of sleep, Morpheus—from opium.

Sixty-five years later another chemist, this one an Austrian, found by experimenting with cocoa leaves that he could produce cocaine.

Just thirty years ago, a German chemist found he coul take from opium still another drug, which was called heroin. It is three or four times stronger than morphine, and is blamed largely for the increase in drug usage on this continent since the war. At first heroin was not believed to be habit-forming, and was used on that assumption. But two years after its discovery, it was found to be as bad if not worse, in getting a grip on its victim. It has been renounced by the medical profession as not at all necessary for their purpose. Put it continues in use throughout the world, a dangerous drug, without and redeeming feature or excuse for its existence.

All these three drugs, morphine, cocaine and heroin, are white powders, bitter to the taste and soluble in water. All are deleterious, both mentally and physically. The habitual use of any of them will bring death with inexorable certainty. Opium is the slowest to kill, morphine, the next, while heroin is the most rapid of all.

For example, to compare the drug habit with the liquor habit; Five ounces of alcohol is considered a fatal dose. Five ounces of morphine taken at one time will kill fifteen hundred men.

Chemistry has given us these drugs, and passed them on to the medical profession. The doctors used them, with the exception of heroin, to assuage pain. But mankind was not satisfied with that, and the use of these drugs spread to people who did not need them. Now the combined wisdom of chemistry, medicine, and governments, is not sufficient to strike down the peril.

There are fantastic stories at times of people who have become drug adbicts because they were given one of these drugs in a time of need, and that one administration made them adbicts. Those are very rare cases, and hardly need to be taken into consideration. The use of drugs is spread about almost entirely by people who profit greatly by creating other adbicts.

Thousands of tons of poisonous drugs are consumed every year by the human race. Less than one percent. of the total consumption is necessary for medicinal purposes.

Before heroin came into such general use, adults were, in the main, the only adbicts. The dealers in heroin, however, recruit among their customers young children. The average age of the heroin adbict is about 22 years of age, which means that he must have become adbicted some years before he was twenty.

Again to compare the drug habit with the liquor habit: It takes some time of regular drinking before a youth becomes a regular drunkard. Not so with heroin. An ounce of heroin can make two thousand adbicts within a week. As well as that, a drunkard sometimes serves as a useful example with which to point the warning finger. In fact a drunkard as a general rule, will advise others to keep away from the stimulant that caused his downfall. Not so the heroin adbicts. He begins right away to drag others into the net. He is used as a recruiting agent for the operators who are making the money. The more heroin he gets, the more he craves. He is told that in order to get more of it, he must introduce more customers. And so the peril spreads.

U.S. Town Tries New Credit Idea

All Business Done on Cash Basis Makes Big Difference to all the Merchants and Saves Money

To all intents and purposes, there is a town in Nebraska where nobody in is debt, observes the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot. This town, Bloomfield, has a population of 1,431, according to the last census, and is an agricultural center with bank, flour mill, and butter factory. Bloomfield, to quote the Virginia paper further, "has lighted a beacon of hope that probably few towns will have the hardihood to follow, but that Bloomfield finds no reason to regret":

Recently the Bloomfield Chamber of Commerce persuaded all business houses in the town to stop credit to retail purchasers. The shoe pinched, of course, as was to be expected. Old customers left their favorite stores, but if they crossed the street, they only collided against another good-natured wall of "cash only." Bloomfield reports that they have gotten over their initial irritation, and that as a result the merchants of the town, freed from the nightmare of old debts and bad debts, have so cut their prices that far from business leaving Bloomfield, business is coming to it from near-by towns.

The news from Bloomfield also brings a word of comment from the column of editor Glenn Griswold of the Chicago Journal of Commerce. He understands that the cash-only plan, which was tried out as an experiment last year, has been adopted permanently: "not only stores but barbers, dentists, and doctors as well, are said to have thrown away their books and to be doing their business for cash only." Mr. Griswold goes on:

Just how it is possible for all the housewives of a town the size of Bloomfield—no matter how big Bloomfield is—day in and day out and from one week's end to another, to maintain the Spartan fortitude that is necessary, to say no to a partial-payment salesman, is difficult to understand.

The Chamber of Commerce at Bloomfield says that "results have surpassed the fondest expectations"; that the system is working perfectly; and the inference is given that it is working 100 per cent. It is said that no business has permanently left town, but that, on the other hand, the low prices prevailing as a result of cash trading are attracting customers from all over the country.

It is not made clear whether this rule applies to retail business only. The presumption is that the storekeepers still talk about sixty and ninety days and ten and twenty off when they do business with traveling salesmen.

If this scheme works in Bloomfield, why shouldnt it work elsewhere? Why doesn't some live Ontario village start the good work?

Women All Alike World Over, Says Explorer's Wife

The Call of the Wild Delight in Personal Adornment to Attract the Mate

A year in the wilds of South America is a sure cure for "trying to keep up with the Joneses."

This, in brief, is the simple but startling recommendation of Mrs. Herbert Spencer Dickey who has just returned from four years there with her famous surgeon-explorer husband and who left Montreal recently after a brief stay there.

The trip made a philosopher of the debutante girl Mrs. Dickey was, and incidentally furnished plenty of material for her husband's new book "The Misadventure of a Tropical Medico."

"I love gay and pretty clothes, lovely surroundings," this smart and charming looking woman joyously told a reporter just before she went to the train bound for New York. "But I know now that one costume is all you can ever wear at one time, one bed and sufficient food is enough. I know that all I really need is a roof over my head when it storms, warmth when it is cold, shade when it is hot and a few friends of whom I am fond," she added.

Never Roughed It

Mrs. Dickey, she confided to the reporter, met her husband four years ago when she went to Guayaquil to visit relatives. There she met Dr. Dickey, who has spent the past 31 years in uncivilized Central America. Born and brought up in New York, she had never roughed it, never even been camping. She didn't know how to cook and had never kept house. But they fell in love, and were married at Panama and thus her romance started.

Their honeymoon was a year's exploration trip, the hardest Dr. Dickey had ever undertaken, a great search inland for the unknown source of the Oronoco River. They tramped on foot for 400 miles of the 3,000 mile trip, from Guayaquil to Brazil, from the Pacific to the Atlantic.

"I learned to live, when necessary, just like a savage," Mrs. Dickey said. "I learned to cook as they do, eat what they do. Now I even like stewed monkey!

"The woman savages were very curious about me at first," she continued.

"They thought me worthless because I carried no cargo on my back or head. And they thought I was pathetic because I was an only wife and their husbands were rich with five or more. They used to put their arms alongside of mine comparing their dark skins with mine. Obviously they felt sorry for me! They took off my hat and gloves and tried them on, just like children. And they had a perfect circus making up with my cosmetics.

"The savage women we encountered are virtual slaves. Yet they are at the bese of all tribal wars and disturbances. And while the Indians are communists, the women are intensely personal property. Marriages are arranged between infants. Girls' fathers pay dearly for boy husbands for them. Marriages take place when the children are 10 or 11. Then the husband goes in for kidnapping other wives, the number allowed him depending on his importance in his tribe. A chief of any given tribe is a modern Solomon.

Peaceful Old Age

"One of the most consoling things about these savages is their peaceful old age. Savage women, too old and toothless for carrying burdens, occupy themselves with manufacturing chica, the national intoxicant. They sit and chew the root of the yucca or mania all day long, enjoying a peace that is enviable.

Mrs. Dickey made friends with many of the wild animals and Dr. Dickey watched her with amazement apparently. Her monkies snapped at him, but when she left camp they wrung their hands and cried. She brought a green cacique and some hooded sapajous, rare specimens back, and was only able to keep the cacique alive on the boat trip by taking it to bed to keep it warm.

"When we started, my husband offered me as many months in Paris as we spent on the trip, at the end of the exploration," said Mrs. Dickey. "I was to have a new frock or hat for every hardship. And I thought at first that I could never wait to get there.

"But when I finally walked along the Rue de la Paix, looking into the shop windows at gowns, hats and jewels, I surprised myself by realizing that all women are just like savages.

Grew Homesick

"What is the difference between our love of these fine things and the savage woman's delight in trinkets from the 'five and ten'? I watched the cultivated, poised woman who passed. I grew homesick for the simplicity of the uncivilized land. I long to see again the lithe, subtle, animal grace of the savage.

"Yes, I am going back some day," she said. "I guess everybody who has ever been there wants to.

"We can learn a lot about living from the savages."—Montreal Standard.

Dreaded anaemia can be banished!

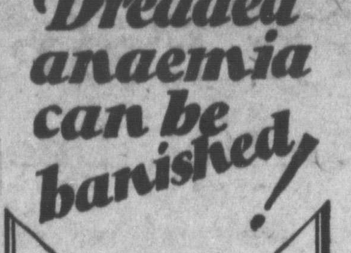

IN middle life, when vitality is not as great as it once was, and the blood stream is naturally thinned and devitalized, anaemia easily lays hold on the system. At first, just a tired feeling, it quickly results in bodily weakness that ordinary tonics cannot avail.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills then become a wonderful aid. They supply the necessary oxygen to the blood, increase the blood count and renew waning vigor.

"I was seized with anaemia," writes Mrs. Charles Lambert of Port Hope, Ont., "and was in a very bad state. As a girl I had taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for a run-down condition and decided to take them once more. Again the result was marvellous. In a little while I was fully well again."

You cannot begin too early to check anaemia. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold at your druggist's or by mail, postpaid, 50 cents, from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Vancouver Province (Ind. Cons.): (Englishmen are said to be taking to the kilt, and eightsome reels are being danced in London ballrooms, in honor of the Duchess of York). By encouraging the music and dances of the Highlands, the Duchess of York may seriously undermine the popularity of modern music and daning. Highland regiments have in times past conquered in darkest Africa and possibly Highland music may now supplant the barbaric jazz and tribal dances copied by modern society folk from the villages of jungleland.

A Different Woman

"I have great pleasure in informing you that Kruschen Salts have worked wonders for me. I have been a great sufferer of liver and kidney trouble, and after trying one bottle I am a different woman. I had to give up my work, but thanks to Kruschen Salts I am back at work again, and I give my son a little every morning, and I don't hear of the little complaints now which a child generally gets. He is happier and brighter. I have enclosed a snap-shot of son and self. I am 43 years, boy 6 years. I shall always highly recommend Kruschen, and I would not be without them myself in a hurry." —(Mrs.) M. P.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at drug and department stores in Canada at 75c. a bottle. A bottle contains enough to last for 4 or 5 months—good health for half-a-cent a day.

Mussolini On Drink

Mr. Alfred Pearce Dennis had an interesting article on Signor Mussolini in the "World" recently. He interviewed the Italian statesman, who told him amongst other things how he dealt with excess in drinking—

"I am personally dry," Mussolini said, "in a country overwhelmingly wet. Our people drink too much for their own good," he commented, quoting a string of figures as to production, consumption, imports. "Our national consumption of wine approximates a hundred litres (twenty-six gallons per capita, but as the women and hildren drink but little this means a per capita consumption of more than two hundred litres for the men. The enormous acreage in vineyards brings little or no gold into the country, since the bulk of our wine, unlike that of France, is not produced for export.

"Italian wines are heady, running about 12 per cent. alcohol. Our people who drink in their homes or in cafes belong to the type of moderate drinkers. Heavy drinking in Italy is associated with the common public house, wheer no food is served with drink. Frequenters of these low bars, such as chauffeurs, muleteers, pick-and-shovel men, drink to excess.

"I am aiming to reduce the consumption of wine by that element of the population which uses it to excess. I see no logic in penalizing other classes of our population who use wine in moderation. We are cursed in Italy by the low-class bars, and I intend to do away with them—but gradually. When a complaint is made about a particular place I close it, and from my edict there is no appeal. I have closed twenty-seven thousand in five years; give me time, and I will close them all.

"I deal with the drink question by making haste slowly rather than by attempting to change inveterate national habits overnight. In this matter of closing public houses I am fortunately not compeled to solicit the approval of either the keeper or his clients."

THE HORSE

(A horse-cab driver summoned for assault declared that a motor driver had jeered at the cab driver's horse).

The man who jeers the patient steed
Has fallen very low indeed.
The tyres of such a wretch accurst
Should sinultaneously burst;
His timing should be quite upset or
Water invade his carburetor,
His oil and petrol should run out
With ne'er a garage round about:
He should be trapped and smartly fined
For faults of every sort and kind,
And on his journeying the road
With nuts and gadgets should be stowed.
His radiator, too, should freeze
In winter, and his pistons seize,
And cranking-up be no avail
What time his batteries shall fail.
Yea, every evil that can be
Should come to such an one as he.
Till 'mid the mirth we can't restrain
A steed shall tow him home again,
Tortured at last with deep remorse
For having mocked the noble horse.

Too Much ACID

Many people, two hours after eating, suffer indigestion as they call it. It is usually excess acid. Correct it with an alkali. The best way, the quick, harmless and efficient way, is Phillips Milk of Magnesia. It has remained for 50 years the standard with physicians. One spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in stomach acids, and at once. The symptoms disappear in five minutes.

You will never use crude methods when you know this better method. And you will never suffer from excess acid when you prove out this easy relief. Please do that—for your own sake—now.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. Each bottle contains full directions—any drugstore.

HOW TO RELIEVE CHILDREN'S COLDS

Avoid Serious Results by Using Baby's Own Tablets.

When a child shows the first symptoms of a cold, such as sneezing, redness of the eyes, clogged or running nose, prompt measures for relief may avert serious results. Mothers should always have on hand some simple safe and effective remedy for immediate use.

Baby's Own Tablets act quickly, contain no opiates or narcotics, are tasteless and harmless. Concerning them Mrs. Jos. Cadieux, Holyoke, Mass., says:—"I have used Baby's Own Tablets for my children and find them a very satisfactory medicine. When my little boy had a cold I gave him the Tablets at night and he was well the next day. I gave them to the children for constipation and they are always benefited. I think Baby's Own Tablets are much easier to give a child than liquid medicine. I strongly recommend all mothers who have young children to keep a box of the Tablets in the house."

Baby's Own Tablets are sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Cave-Man

Now Peter Park possessed a wife
Who'd plagued him all their wedded life;
'Twas war eternal, to the knife,
Between his dame and Peter.
Whatever Peter did or said
It brought down vengeance on his head;
He lived in constant fear and dread,
Did poor, unhappy Peter.

At last, he sought a man he knew,
Who quickly taught him ju-jutsu,
A soft persuasion known to few,
And home in hope hied Peter.
On all his chums he tried his skill,
But none could stand against his will;
So Peter's fame the town did fill,
And strength the soul of Peter.

One night his wife let loose her tongue
With words that should have bit and stung,
But Peter merely laughed and sung
And with contempt did treat her.
When cups and plates commenced to hum,
He "locked" her quietly by the thumb,
And soon in startled fear grew dumb
The clacking wife of Peter.

Thus Peter now became her lord,
Looked up to, worshipped and adored,
And both found peace in sweet accord
Through ju-jutsu and Peter.
The moral's pretty plain to see;
A man both strong and kind should be,
And exercise diplomacy—
If not as used by Peter.

League of Nations

With the visit of Rt. Hon. Ramsay MacDonald to the United States and Canada and the momentuous decisions which will result from that visit public attention has been concentrated on the subject of world peace.

In considering this subject much credit is given to the League of Nations in Geneva and the great work it is doing. This is only right and the more the ideals of the League are brought before the public the more likely is it that still further practical results will follow its effects. But in Canada and elsewhere it is only fair that some credit should come to the home societies which are actively propagating League ideals in their several countries.

In Canada there has existed for some nine years an organization well and favorably known as the League of Nations Society of Canada. Handicapped by lack of funds, by comparative public indifference and an inadequate staff it has continuously attempted to be an influence for good in all parts of the country and to zealously battle for the ideals for which it was founded.

Through the co-operation of the press of Canada whose leading executives recognize the importance of its campaign some publicity has been given to the yearly effort of this organization to increase its membership but we feel that more continuous co-operation both by press and public would be most opportune at the present time.

Geneva is far away and many of the issues with which it deals are too complicated for the average man to readily understand. No organization is more in need of domestic interpretation and that work is being carried but with praiseworthy diligence.

It is not too much to say that such an organization would be a fit subject for a perpetual endowment which would relieve it of the necessity of canvassing for the comparatively small sum which it requires to carry on its immensely valuable work.—The Fredericton Daily Mail, October 25th, 1929.

Canada-Italian Trade Favorable

Commissioner Here During Tour Says Exports Continue

Trade with Italy is good and more than 60 Canadian firms have representatives in that country, A. B. Muddiman, Dominion Government trade commissioner with headquarters in Milan, stated recently. At the same time, he pointed out, exports this year will be less than last, when according to official Italian statistics $51,000,000 worth of goods were sold, owing to the grain drop. Mr. Middiman has visited Montreal in the course of a tour of Canada. While his office is in Milan he is also interested in promoting trade with Spain, Portugal and Yugo Slavia.

Among Canada's exports to Italy he enumerated wheat, oats, Indian corn, nickle, lead and other metals, lumber agricultural machinery, asbestos, canned salmon, cod fish, eels, shoes, radio appliances, furs, building materials.

The new commercial treaty between Portugal and Spain which came into effect last year, he said is showing good results as it has placed Canadian cod fish on the same tariff basis as other countries.

In regard to Spain, Mr. Muddiman stated that there was a large increase in Canadian exports last year but this year the figure will be reduced greatly owing to the grain crop. He has not had an opportunity of visiting Yugo Slavia for some time but hopes to go next year. People there are now interested, he said, in establishing silver fox farms.

Mr. Muddiman refused to be quoted on the general situation in the countries he represents, saying that he is concerned solely with trade, but he did make the observation that under the present regime Italy is going ahead by leaps and bounds.

St. Lawrence Waterway

Manitoba Free Press (Lib.): The opening of the Hudson Bay line may alter Montreal's attitude towards the St. Lawrence waterway). If Montreal interests were to give some thought to the situation that will inevitably arise within the next few years, it might occur to them that, if they want Western grain through their own port, they had better help to bring about the reduction of the present carrying charge from Port Arthur to Montreal through the deepening of the St. Lawrence waterway. By the time it is built, given the greatest expedition, Montreal will be in urgent need of the lower rates which the waterway will make possible. Montreal needs this waterway much more than the West does.

TORONTO girl is Prize Winner...

"CONSTANCE was cross and fretful a lot," says Mrs. J. Flatt, 99 Highfield Road, Toronto, Ontario. She was upset and bilious; didn't want to eat and couldn't digest her food right.

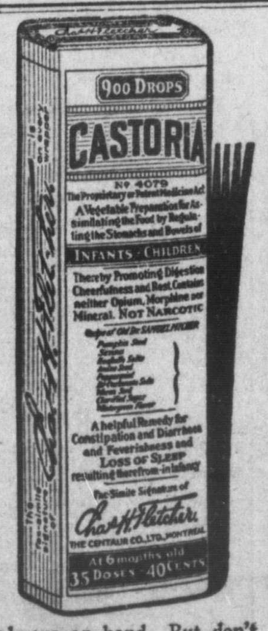

"California Fig Syrup has changed all that, and made her a different girl. It regulated her bowels quickly, improved her appetite and digestion. She has had no trouble since; but has continued to gain until today friends say she's a regular prize winner for health."

Mothers by thousands are praising California Fig Syrup. Physicians endorse it. A pure vegetable product; it is safe for any child. The prompt relief it brings bilious, headachy, constipated children lasts; because it helps tone and strengthen bowels and stomach. Appetite increases; digestion improves with its use! A youngster's entire system benefits. Next time bad breath, coated tongue or feverishness warn of constipation, try it with your child and see how it helps!

When buying, look for the name California. That marks the genuine.

When BABIES are upset

Baby ills and ailments seem twice as serious at night. A sudden cry may mean colic. Or a sudden attack of diarrhea—a condition it is always important to check quickly. How would you meet this emergency—tonight? Have you a bottle of Castoria ready? There is nothing that can take the place of this harmless but effective remedy for children; nothing that acts quite the same, or has quite the same comforting effect on them.

For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old, reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an everyday aid. Its gentle influence will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. Its mild regulation will help an older child whose tongue is coated because of sluggish bowels. All druggists have Castoria; the genuine bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

THE EQUITY

SHAWVILLE, NOV. 21, 1929.

Mr. A. A. McGillvray, leader for several years of the Conservative party in the Legislature of Alberta, has resigned that position, but will retain his seat in the House.

Major George W. Stephens, of Montreal, and Hon. James Malcolm, are spoken of in connection with the vacancy in the Dominion cabinet caused by the death of Hon. James Robb, late Minister of Finance. If Mr. Malcolm should be chosen for this important portfolio, it is likely Mr. Stephens will succeed him as Minister of Trade and Commerce, according to current rumor.

Mining development in Northern Manitoba is reported to have taken on a marked degree of permanency during the present year, expenditures having reached an average of one million dollars per month—a vast increase over last year. This is evidence that faith in the possibilites of the district has been established beyond all doubt, and that a bright future is in store for that part of a province which hitherto has been measuring its progress by the number of bushels of grain it annually produced.

The Saskatchewan Government has now on hand the problem of dealing with 5,000 Russian Mennonites who desire to emigrate to Western Canada, where many of their countrymen have been located for years and are reported to be doing well. These would-be emigrants have been ordered to get out of Russia, and being in a penniless condition their plight is indeed a pitiable one. Yet it is stated their compatriots in Saskatchewan are unsympathetic and decline to hold out a beckoning hand. This makes the matter a decidedly difficult one for Premier Anderson to deal with. To impose the burden of five thousand penniless people upon the province seems too heavy a responsibility.

Deadly Stone Fish.

A deadly fish that has killed people who have trodden on it by injecting poison into their feet is described by Mr. Geoffrey Tandy, B.A., assistant keeper of the Department of Botany at the Natural History Museum, South Kensington. It is called the stone fish. It was one of many strange things seen on the Great Barrier Reef of Australia by the marine biological expedition. Mr. Tandy, who accompanied the expedition, describes it as "a genuine horror both in appearance and effects. He is repulsive-looking, of a dirty greenish brown color and very underhung. His danger lies in the row of spines on his back. These can be erect, and they contain a very deadly and, I believe, unknown poison." A painful and unduly protracted death is the fate of most people who have made too close an acquaintance with the stone fish.

NEW MEXICAN LAW.

Cable For a Divorce and It Comes to You.

Divorce by letter or by telegraph, which bids fair to make Paris a sort of super-Reno, is the latest development in the realm of international law, says a Paris despatch to the London Daily Mail. Reno, a city of Nevada, was for years regarded as the easiest centre for divorce in the United States.

Ingenious lawyers have found various means of evading the obstacles that now face United States citizens seeking divorces in the Paris courts. The old process was to qualify for French legal rights by a brief stay at a Paris hotel, but this was ended by the divorce scandal here last year, when the Ministry of Justice intervened.

United States citizens on the continent now merely consult a European lawyer well versed in Mexican law and, on the strength of a letter or telegram, they are granted within six weeks a divorce in Mexico. It is not necessary for either of the parties to have set foot in that country.

Nevertheless the divorce is said to be valid in France and in the United States.

"Under the new Mexican law voted by the Obregon Government," said a lawyer recently, "all that is necessary is to invoke mental cruelty—a very elastic term. For instance, if the wife wants to go to see a talking film and the husband insists on taking her to a theatre, he is committing mental cruelty. The cost of such divorces is $2,000, and this includes all telegraphic and legal charges."

French Wine Makers.

In Rheims, France, there are many miles of catacombs or tunnels, each walled with bottles of wine or champagne. The principal company operating there is the Pommery company, famous for its champagne. This concern alone has more than 11,000,000 bottles of champagne now in the making; the underground passages in which they lie curing are more than ten miles in length. The Pommery company gathers black grapes from forty different vineyards in the Champagne country of France. Juice from the grapes is blended in a huge hogshead, a process which requires six months. After that the liquor takes four to six years to run through the process that makes it into champagne. The fermentation goes on in bottles, which are set in racks, and which, after four or five years, are shaken every day for six weeks, to get the sediment down to the cork. The sediment is then artificially frozen and taken out as a small cake of ice. After that some sweetening is added, or some special liquor put in to give the desired flavor. The bottle is then recorked under great pressure, and packed away. One year later it is ready for sale.

Where Jews Predominate.

Poland is a land of the Jews with forty times as many Israelites as there are in Palestine. It has more Jews than any other country in Europe and just about one-fifth of all there are in the world. More than one-third of Warsaw is occupied by Hebrews. The city has a large Jewish quarter, containing 600 synagogues. Its streets are thronged with people who look more like the typical Jew of the stage than those we know in our cities. The Polish Jew often appears in the ancient costume of his people, wearing a skull-cap or fur cap without visor and a long black coat buttoned up to the neck and falling almost to the feet.

DEATHS

On November 13, 1929, Martha Ann Caldwell, beloved wife of Augustive G. Lemoine, in her 61st year. Funeral to Trinity Memorial Church Montreal, Friday morning at 10 o'clock.

The funeral of the late Hon. James Robb, Minister of Finance in the King Government, took place at the late Minister's home in Valleyfield, Que., on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 13, and although conducted without much pomp or ceremony, was very largely attended, and a great wealth of floral tributes bore testimony of the high esteem in which the deceased statesman was held by all classes.

A leading figure in women's philanthropic work in Ottawa was removed on Tuesday afternoon of last week, by the death of Mrs. Jennie Laura Dinwoodie, wife of William Dinwoodie, from injuries received in an automobile accident just a short time before. The accident happened almost opposite Mrs. Dinwoodie's home, 108 Belmont avenue. She was crossing the intersection of Willard and Belmont avenues when she was struck by a car driven by Mrs. Charles A. O'Connor, Third avenue. It was while she was engaged in the work she loved, that of helping others that she met her death.

BRITAIN'S INVESTMENTS.

Realize $120,000,000 Annually From U. S. Securities.

Investors in the United Kingdom have an income of more than $120,000,000 annually from their American securities, amounting to more than $1,500,000,000, according to publishers of Encyclopedia Americana.

A high percentage of the long term credit which the residents of the United Kingdom have in the United States is said to be in stocks and bonds, fortunately selected, with a present yield of more than 7 per cent. Income from their long term investments is estimated at $105,000,000 and the short term $15,000,000.

The American adds that U. S. long term investments in England and Scotland is estimated at $750,000,000, or only half of British investment in the United States. United States annual income on short term investments from British capital amounts to only $4,000,000 as compared with their $15,000,000.

Investment of English capital in the United States greatly aids Britain in paying off her unfavorable balance of trade with the United States, the Americana says, for the United Kingdom reported an unfavorable balance of $498,900,000 last year, or an increase of 3.4 per cent. over the unfavorable balance of $482,000,000 in 1927.

The United Kingdom, not including Ireland, pays off this deficit with approximately $500,000,000 in revenues collected from Americans. In 1928 U. S. gold imports exceeded exports by $5,000,000. Americans spent $77,000,000 for ocean freights and $73,000,000 for cabin passage in British vessels; $41,000,000 in tourist expenditures abroad; and $8,000,000 for visa, customs, and other immigrant remittances, all of which were greatly in excess of the payments received from Britons for similar services.

GLOWWORM SPINS WEB.

Millions Inhabit Thermal Caves of New Zealand.

North Island, New Zealand, contains a few mountain peaks, but the most interesting features are the caves and the thermal regions, says the International Communication Review. The Waitomo Glowworm Cave is especially remarkable and should not be missed by any visitor to New Zealand.

It consists primarily of several caverns or grottoes, through which runs an underground river. On the ceilings of these underground chambers are literally millions of glowworms, not the type of glowworm which is familiar to the northern hemisphere, but quite a different species which, it is said, is found only in New Zealand.

The glowworm itself is about the size of a grasshopper. It strings a thread 12 to 18 inches long from two points in the ceiling, and from this thread suspends a fringe which resembles nothing more than strings of very tiny seed pearls. Having erected this structure, the glowworm takes up a position on the ceiling near the end of the thread and proceeds to glow. The idea is that the light attracts mosquitoes which, in making for the light, get entangled in the threads.

The confusion in the threads telegraphs a message up to the glowworm, which then proceeds along the top of the fringe, cuts off the thread on which the mosquito is entangled, pulls it up, enjoys its meal and puts the thread down back again.

Witty American Preacher.

Dr. Matthew Byles, a preacher and famed for his wit, was arrested in New York in 1776 as a "pernicious" Tory. He was subsequently tried, convicted and sentenced to confinement on board a guardship, and to be sent to England with his family in forty days. Later the sentence was changed to confinement in his own house. A guard was placed over him and then removed, then replaced and again removed, whereupon the doctor exclaimed that he had been guarded, reguarded and disreguarded. He called his sentry his observa-Tory.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Alden Drake, formerly a sailor, grown soft and flabby through a life of idle ease, ships aboard the clipper Orontes as "boy," under the command of Jake Stevens, whose enmity he incurs because of a mutual love for Mary Manning, daughter of the owner, who is a passenger. At Cape Town, Stevens is superseded as captain by Drake, whose lawyers have seen to the purchase of the Orontes during its cruise. In his new role of master, Drake becomes cold and dignified in the presence of Mar . Stevens, now chief mate, finds time to follow his suit. Stevens shyly approaches Mary in her cabin. "Whom do you love?" he asks her, "me or —?"

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

Blushing furiously, Mary sprang from her chair, hurling her work broadcast over the deck, and ran below, leaving Jake Stevens there with his question unanswered yet answered plainly enough. His breath whistled through his teeth. He felt murderous.

Suddenly came a commotion of men in the black shadows of the waist. Curses stabbed the still air like metal. The mate ran to the rail, bawling down for silence. Mary half emerged, glad of anything that promised to break the awful heaviness that hung over all.

"I keel you!" shrilled the voice of Tony.

"Yus you won't! Bli'me! Wyte!" screamed 'Erbert Oats in ratlike fury.

"'Ere, shut yer bleedin' row!" wheezed Joe Bunting. Then Mr. Stevens leaped down the ladder and plunged headlong into the unseen quarrel. Mary stepped from her shelter and hung over the poop rail starry eyed with excitement. he time-keeping apprentice appeared from his own hiding place and stood beside her.

"Somebody's going to catch Hob!" he grinned.

"Hush!" whispered Mary, then stifled as cream. From the scuffle of feet and the uproar of voices in the darkness came the sound of blows; then a horrible, sobbing shriek.

"Holy Mother!" It sounded like Tony's voice. There was another voice, like no man's, but like the snarl of a tortured cat.

"'Ere! 'Ands orf!" yelled Joe Bunting. Then the mate uttered a splitting curse that was cut short midway and died in a fearful grunting groan. And as abruptly as the row started it died to silence.

"My cripes! There's something up!" gasped the apprentice, and stood irresolutely at the ladder head. And to the rail glided Drake, awakened by the breaking of the night's peace.

"What is it?" he demanded. He glanced around, saw no officer, and gripped the boy's arm. The boy choked down his fright, but could only point. Drake ran down the ladder. Soon he shouted for lanterns. The rest of the watch ran up, then the sleepers awoke and swarmed around in the lantern glow. Mary stared down from the poop and felt as if she were on the edge of Inferno looking in.

A deathly silence hung over the circle of illumination. In it, on the deck which was queerly streaked with glistening fluid, Tony lay dead, his hands clutching at his breast. Beside him Jake Stevens knelt, slowly toppling over, blood staining his white jacket at the breast.

Joe Bunting half knelt beside both. In his hand was a dripping knife. In his round gray eyes horror. Men crowded around. The Doctor hung on the edge of the circle, chattering with fear, holding a gleaming cleaver in one palsied hand. The other hand was outstretched, talonwise, toward Joe.

"'E done it, Captain! It was 'im! 'Im wiv the knife!"

CHAPTER XXII.

MAH JONGG.

Through the saloon they carried Jake Stevens to his own berth. Mary followed, white and silent. Ike Saintly hovered near, wringing his hands, useless, pallid.

"Where shall I put Bunting, sir?" the second mate asked of Drake, coming into the saloon after the bearers.

"Iron him," snapped Drake. The second mate nodded.

Counting the People

London Free Press (Cons.): Arrangements are already being made at Ottawa for taking the 1931 censes of the Dominion. It is interesting to know that the credit for taking the first census of modern times belongs to Canada. They year was 1665, the census that of the colony of New France. The census of 1665 was a systematic enumeration of the people, showing age, sex, occupation and conjugal and family conditions. A supplementary inquiry in 1667 included the areas under cultivation and the number of sheep and cattle. Apart from the famous Domesday Book, the first census in France and England dates from the beginning of the nineteenth century. The first census in the United States was taken in 1790.

The Crowd

I love the crowd that fills the city street,
The endless stream of people passing by.
Here in equality before my eye
I see the rich man and the beggar meet.
I try to lift the veil that masks each face,
That I may read the hope that spurs some on;
Or in a countenance forlorn and wan,
The dark despair behind the lagging pace.
Here in the schoolroom of humanity,
I learn of grit and courage when I see
The little crippled newsboy at his stand,
A sightless fiddler playing near at hand.
With such as these belonging, I am proud
To call myself a member of the crowd.

The Crow a Criminal

Toronto Star (Ind.): When Jack Miner gets talking about the crow he does not mince his words, and the statement issued by the Department of Agriculture at Washington that the crow is not as black as he is painted aroused him to wrath. In a signed article in Field and Stream Mr. Miner paints the crow blacker than we have ever seen him. The crow, he declares, feeds her young on the eggs of song, insectivorous and game birds, and when she cannot get enough of these eggs she will steal the baby young. There are many who do not share the inveterate enmity of Jack Miner to the crow, and there are a few who would argue with him on the subject. But he has accused, pursued and kept tab on the crow for many years and finds evidence against this bird always piling higher—a bad bird that ought to be destroyed in the interests of all the desirable species of native birds. And some, led by his crusade to keep watch on the crow, report that the bird is probably quite as black as he is painted.

Nowadays walking is excellent exercise—for the wits.

The ship swam forward in peace, and into the peace his stormy temper hurled dark discord.

"Call all hands!" he roared. "You, boy! Call the bosun. Tell him to turn out all hands and sweat up everything all around the ship! Get a move on!"

CHAPTER XXI.

A KNIFE IN THE DARK.

One man's turbulent passions shattered the peace of thirty human beings. If the men thought they had been worked up before, they soon felt that all that had gone by had been nothing but a pleasure cruise.

"There ain't no call to bullydam us like this, Mister Stevens!" fat little Joe Bunting told him one blazing forenoon when Madagascar loomed blue through the shimmering haze. Joe had just finished a boy's job, far aloft, slushing down the mainskysail pole and royal mast. It was near noon, and Joe had gone straight from the wheel at ten o'clock to the slushing job without the five minutes smoke which was the relieved helmsman's immemorial rivilege. He knew that eight bells would strike before he had got halfway up to his next job of slushing down the fore.

"Are you giving me slack?" snarled Stevens. "Are you giving me back chat, you useless lump o' lard?"

"Don't call me out o' me name, sir," returned Joe fearlessly. "I ain't givin' yer no slack. It's nigh eight—"

"I'll show you!" gritted Jake, and knocked fat little roly-poly Joe headlong with a cruelly unexpected punch on the ear. Joe scrambled to his feet, blood trickling from his ear, his twinkling eyes cold and starry. Drake was taking a noon sight on the poop, with Mr. Twining taking another for a check from the monkey bridge. Drake happened to remove his sextant from his eye for a rest, the sun still being short of meridian, and saw Joe confront Stevens. There was something about the happy little seaman that warned Drake all was not well. He laid down his sextant, and walked forward along the monkey bridge.

"Mister Stevens, you 'it me," wheezed Joe simply. "I'm a hable seaman, sir, and I give yer no lip. I don't hallow no man to 'it me for nothink. 'It me again, sir, please. I'll pay yer aht fer two in one. Come on, man. You started it.

"I'll talk ter you arterwards, me son!" said Joe grimly, waiting for the mate to take up his challesge. Jake grinned like a snarling dog, leaning forward in a crouch, his great hands clenching and unclenching until the bones cracked. Slowly he reached out until the clawlike fingers of his left hand were almost at Joe's neck; his right fist drew back to strike. Joe watched the approaching claw out of a corner of one eye; but he evinced no fear. Rather he looked as if he welcomed the chance to take a good solid wallop at that terrifying face. He hoped the mate would not be too long getting started. It was almost eight bells.

"That will do, Mr. Stevens! You may go aft! You, Bunting, get for'ard at once!" said a clear, level voice, and Drake leaped from the monkey bridge to the fore hatch, and thence to the deck between the belligerents.

"He's a mutinous dog!" snarled Stevens. "He wants flaking."

"That will do. I want no flaking done, Mr. Stevens. Go aft!" retorted Drake. The mate turned aft muttering. The seamen dispersed, still muttering their grievance, for they felt they had been robbed of a piece of sport.

On the night following the trouble with Joe Bunting, Mary was restless, could not sleep. She slipped a warm robe about her to stand off the heavy Tropic dew, and went on deck. She did not go outside the open companionway, but stood there in the shadow, gazing out across the softly heaving sea which lay like a gem smothered carpet of purple satin under the glittering heavens. Stevens was on watch. His big, powerful figure paced fore and aft on feet light as a girl's, head sunk between his shoulders, except at each turn when he raised his eyes to sweep the ship and sea with a sailorly glance.

Needless Suffering

The next time a headache makes you stay at home—

Or some other ache or pain prevents your keeping an engagement—

Remember Aspirin! For there is scarcely any sort of pain it cannot relieve, and relieve promptly.

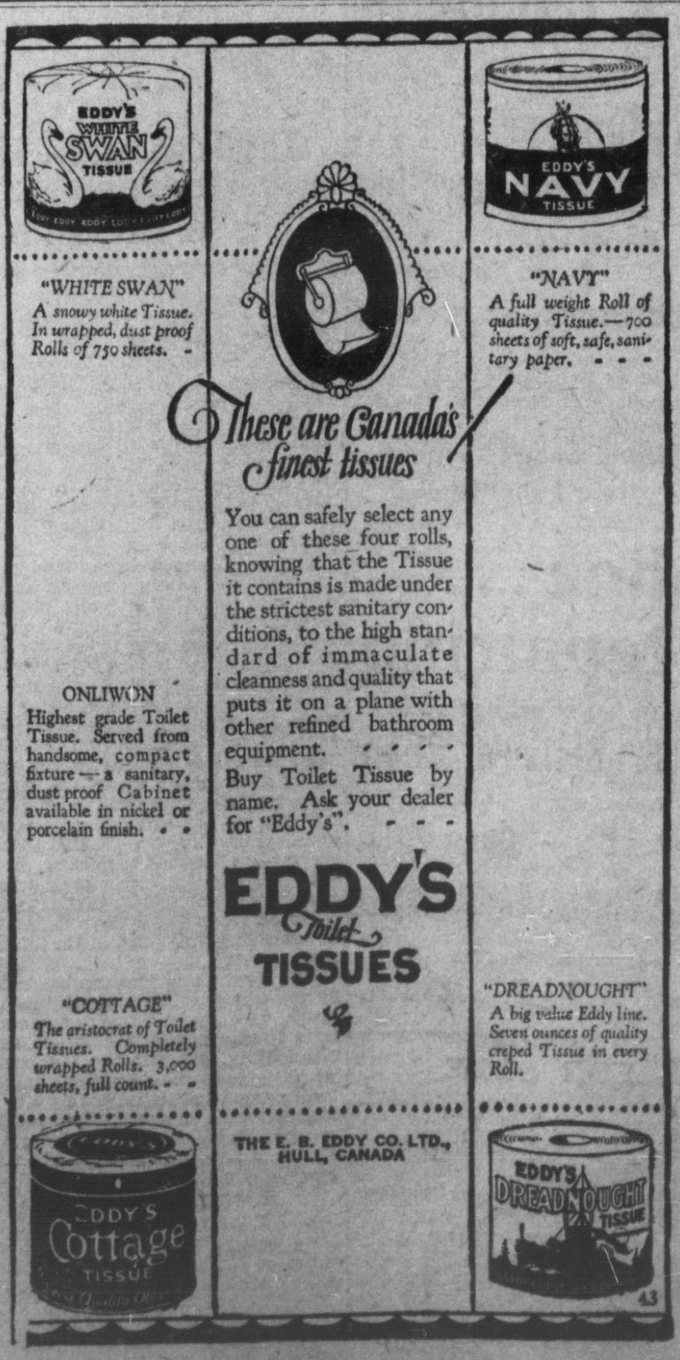

These tablets give real relief, or millions would not continue to take them. They are quite harmless, or the medical profession would not constantly prescribe them.

Don't be a martyr to unnecessary pain. To colds that might so easily be checked; neuritis, neuralgia; to those pains peculiar to women; or any suffering for which Aspirin is such an effective antidote.

You need not hesitate to take Aspirin. It is safe. It is always the same. It never depresses the heart, so use it as often as needed; but the cause of any pain can be treated only by a doctor.

What Will Mr. Thomas Do?

Canadiant Are All Doubly Interested in British Politics Since The Visit During the Past Few Months of Mr. Thomas, Winston Churchill and Last But Not Least Premier Ramsay MacDonald

Politics in Great Britain at the moment are a paradox. We see a Government elected by artisan votes going from strength to strength in foreign diplomacy.

It is true that the Socialist voter is keener on a forward disarmament policy than other politicians suspected, but his main preoccupation is unemploymen .t Yet the Government which he elected are succeeding nowhere at home. Conservatives are too despondent to expose the failure.

The One Mistake

Only one mistake has been made abroad. Mr. Henderson startled the country by his declaration that he was ready to sign on the spot a convention whih would bind Great Britain to pay for other people's wars, through the League of Nations.

An outcry was raised. Mr. Henderson, it was said, would answe. it, but silence has prevailed at Geneva. This shows that he will not be allowed to pursue the road to disaster.

A Great Triumph

Mr. MacDonald's agreement on naval disarmament with President Hoover is a great triumph.

Agreement must now have been reached. The Prime Minister is too good a politician to risk a spectatular Transatlantic journey if there was a chance of failure. Mr. MacDonald can only make the voyage to sign an agreement already determined.

Conservatives will be still more jaundiced at this result, for with more imagination they might have had the credit which the Soialist has snatched from them.

Unemployment

All goes well for the Government abroad. But what of the home front? Mr. Thomas' friends are complaining that he is quite barren as Minister of Employment.

He returns from Canada with, so far as one can judge, nothing accomplished, nothing done. His friends hope that he may redeem himself, but they gravely fear that he will not.

The Eight-Hour Day

Another isue is miners' hours. The miners, who have a large representation in Parliament, are determined that the eight-hour day imposed after the 1926 stoppage shall be shortened at once without waiting for the two years which the Act still has to run.

Mr. Turner, the Secretary for Mines, is a veteran textile official who has just desended a mine to see the conditions of work for himself. His sympathy is certain, and Mr. MacDonald's has been publicly confessed.

Dearer Coal

A simple method of meeting the cost of shorter hours has been devised by the coal owners. They mean to increase the price of coal both for home fires and for industrial furnaces. That will not please the public, and the Government will suffer in prestige if they take that easy way out of the difficulty.

The Railwaymen

Railway wages are another problem. The railwaymen consented to a perentage reduction when they were told that the railways were doing badly. Now they say the railways are doing well, and they want their percentage restored.

As a business man resigns his directorships on taking office, so Mr. Thomas will take no part in the negotiations while he is a Minister. Mr. Cramp will act for him, and Mr. Cramp is unpopular with some trade unionists because as a member of the court of arbitration he agreed to a reduction in the wages of cotton workers. He and the railwaymen will expect the support of the Government in this wages question.

As Bad As Ever

What of the unemployment figures? Mr. Thomas in his first speech as a Minister divided them up to show that they included many temporary displacements. People changed their work and large numbers found new jobs almost as soon as they were registered out of work.

Socialists always scoffed at this contention when it was advanced by Conservatives. Now the Minstry of Labour issue their statistics in a form which emphasizes the truth of it. But when you add up the figures, the total is as bad as ever. Unemployment is not reduced.

The Laurels At Home

The Government, t r i u m p h a n t abroad, have nothing to their credit at home—not even bathing kiosks on the banks of the Serpentine.

Conservatives are in such a desperate condition that they have not the vigor to expose the shortcomings of the Government at home. They are busy quarrelling among themselves at the position in the Central Office, where Mr. Davidson still succeeds by having failed. Even the "Morning Post," the stalwart Conservative organ, shows dissatisfaction.

The Flight to the City

Leaders like Sir Laming Worthington-Evans deserted shaky seats for safe seats before the last election. Now they are deserting the Front Bench for directorships in the City.

Mr. Winston Churchill remains faithful to Parliament, and shows no tendency to join Lord Birkenhead or Lord Melchett, who are recruiting political leaders to the board rooms.

Mr. Churchill has been lecturing to the Canadian Clubs, where controversial politics are not expected. Only one comment on current politics has crossed the Atlantic from his lips. At Quebec he gave his approval to Mr. Snowden's stand at The Hague.

A Mysterious Silence

Mr. Churchill in doing so has left Sir Josiah Stamp to defend himself. Sir Josiah was the principal British delegate who signed the Young plan, and he signed it during the Conservative administration — when Mr. Churchill was at the Treasury. Mr. Snowden rejected the plan and succeeded in modifying the plan which Sir Josiah signed. Mr. Churchill approves the modification.

Sir Josiah has been singularly silent in his own defence. He has made only one statement, and he has said either too much or too little. What if Sir Josiah Stamp speaks out and defends himself? Will he incriminate the Conservative Government? Will he say that the Conservative Government made him sign the Young plan?

What Is the Story?

These are bold questions, but it is tantalizing to be told by him in his single public defence "The full story cannot be told for some years, I fear." He went on to declare that the right course (the course which he followed) was to "accept the obloquy of apparently letting our case down in the general interest of a settlement." What then is the "full story" which cannot be told until years have dimmed its interest?

Leather Coats In Lively Shades

The new leather coats show many improvements on last year's models. They are lighter in weight, less bulky and better cut. The best shapes have a wide skirt flap that is buttoned back on the inside when the wearer walks, ut covers the knees like a rug when she travels or drives a car. A button at the left hip on the inside of the coat the holds the flap in place. Smooth metal rings have replaced bone buckles so that the edge of the belt may not be rubbed, and in some models a strip of leather slotted through the upstanding colar fastens with a matching ring-buckle.

Suede jackets were seen last year, but full-length coats in suede are new and very attractive. They may not perhaps wear quite so well as chrome leather but are delightfully supple and light. Suede looks best when it is severely tailored, and one desirable long coat seen in London is perfectly plain, with an outstanding collar trimmed with rows of self-colored stitching, a stithed breast pocket, stitched cuffs and belt. This coat is available in tan as well as in a multitude of brilliant shades.

As a rule, long and three-quarter suede coats are lined with a fine kasha, ut the jackets have a weatherproof art-silk lining. Some suede jackets follow the lines of a Norfolk coat with strappings down the back and front and deep patch pockets. This design is particularly helpful to a full figure because the line of the straps gives an effet of length. For the slim figure there are trimly tailored double-breasted suede jackets in gay colors which would look well with a pleated skirt in a matching shade. Another suede jacket, that should be partnered with a skirt to match, is in hunting-green, with collar and cuffs of golden-brown beaver lamb.

A yoke appears on many of the coats and it insures a good fit round the shoulders and allows for fullness where needed by the insertion of inverted box pleats that are not stitched down. For the sake of comfort, the hard wearing full chrome leather coats that are intended to carry the wearer through any weather, are given a lining of fine weatherproofed tweed and quilted sleeves. If at the end of a season a full chrome coat grows shabby it can be cleaned, and after several cleanings redipped to regain its original color. Suede coats can be brushed at home until they get really soiled and then they should e sent to a dry cleaner.

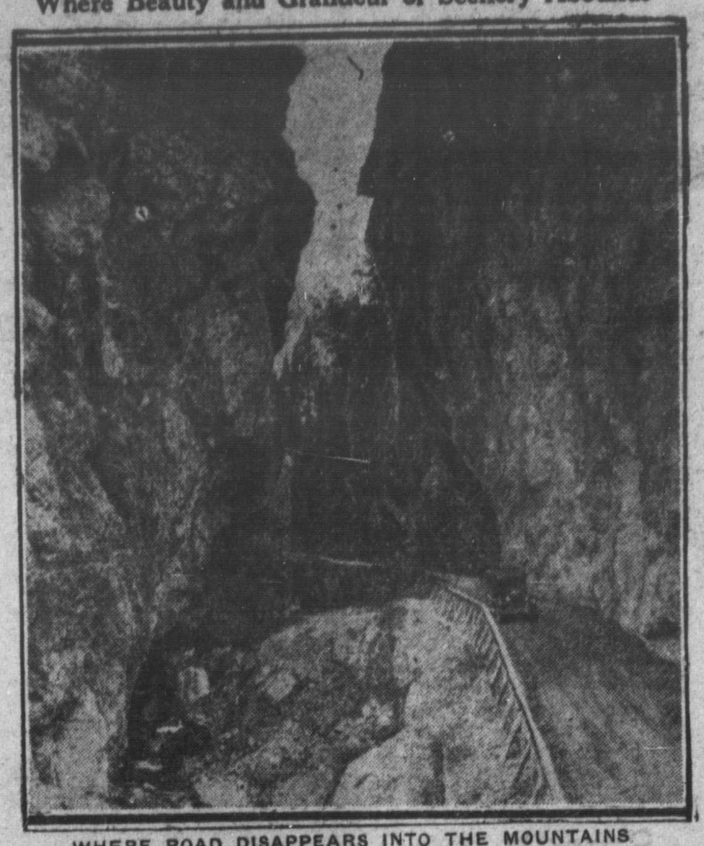

Beaver lamb, golden-pulled and silver-pulled coney are the furs most often used for collar and cuffs on leather coats.

This season both town and country should look as cheerful as an artist's palette—lovebird, green, mulberry (an uncommon tawny purple) and many lively shades of brown, will all be available, and when a good quality of leather is hosen there is no risk that the color will fade.—Christian Science Monitor.

Factor Britain Must Bear in Mind

It is Not Recognized in Great Britain That "Canada's Manufacturing Production Now Far Exceeds Her Agricultural Products."

"We all remember the day when Canadians were regarded, and were indeed ready to regard themselves, as the producers of no more than foodstuffs and raw materials to be exchanged for British manufactures. The position is quite different to-day."

—The Canadian Gazette.

"It is true that Canadian yield of farm produce is still stupendous, and, despite occasional setbacks such as in the wheat crop of this year, tends to increase," adds the Canadian Gazette. "The wheat yield in the past five years has averaged well over 400 million bushels, and taking the average annual value of the crop has been something like $430 millions, or £86 millons sterling. The value of all agricultural products has been more than fourfold as great as five years ago.

"But the fact remains that Canada's manufacturing production far exceeds her agricultural production, and wi l so remain. Indeed, the British Trade Commissioner in Canada reports that no less than $5,750 milions, or £950 millions sterling, is now invested in Canadian factories, and the investment covers a very large field of industrial production.

"Thus it includes cotton yarns and cloth, men's and women's clothing, hosiery and gloves, boots and shoes, rubber goods, electrical goods, motors, railway rolling stock, castings and forgings, sheet metal products, machinery, hardware and tools, and bras sand copper products.

The Questions to Ask

"What British industrialists may wel ask themselves is—How can they themselves share in this Canadian industrial expansion as their United States rivals have done? There are abundant opportunites for British investment in Canadian manufacturing enterprise. Secondly, they may usefuly consider whether they cannot by better methods and a closer study of Canadian conditions supply some part of the manufactured goods which Canada does not now make and is not likely in the near future to make for herself and must continue to import from other countries.

"The Canadian importations from the United States have increased from $45.98 to $74.49 per head of the poullation since 1912. Canadians should themselves replace much of this importation, and there is room also for greater British enterprise in meeting Canadian import needs.

"It is futile to go on arguing as though Canada was still a producer and seler of foodstuffs only, or even mainly. She has come to rank among the manufacturing nations of the world.

"To-day agriculture still leads in net value of product, ut the difference is rapidly disappearing. Manufacturing has increased 700 per cent. in output over that of 1901, and agriculture 400 per cent. Coincident with the development in manufacturing has been the construction of power plants to furnish energy for their operations. Hydro-electric installation in 1900 was less than 200,000 horse-power, and today's installation has a capacity of 5,500,000.

"Furthermore, in 1911 the value of Canadian mineral production was less than $50,000,000; in 1929 the total will be close to $300,000,000. Indeed, Canada now ranks first among the nations of the world in the production of Nickel and asbestos, third in gold and the output of copper, lead and zinc and other minerals is rapidly increasing."

The Alberta Wheat Pool recently issued cheques to its members totalling $325,000 in payment of interest at the rate of six per cent. on deductions made for elevator and commercial reserve purposes from deliveries of Pool wheat from 1923 to 1927 inclusive. The interest payment covers the term from August 31, 1928, to August 31, 1929.

The outcome of a proposal often rests on an income.

Sir Alan Talks

"As far as facilities for flying are oncerned, with the exception of Croydon Aerodrome, we are almost as we were 10 years ago. We have simply stood still," writes Sir Alan Cobham, the famous airman, in the Daily Mail.

"I find that enthusiastic private owners of aircraft are selling their machines, not because they did not enjoy flying, not because there was any fault with the aeroplane, but simply because they could not use their craft.

"They had nowhere to go. The few places where there were aerodromes they did not want to visit and where they wanted to go they could not land. They were tired of landing in farmers' fields, climbing over hedges and ditches to the nearest road, asking passing cars for a lift into the town where petrol could be bought, and then finding their way back to discover that cows had chewed the tail of the aeroplane.

"I have come to the conclusion that until every town and village in the British Isles has its own aerodrome and it would be possible for one to fly from anywhere to anywhere in a straight line flying could no prove its utility.

"Britons are born flyers, and now is our chance to lead the world in air transport as we have led the world in shipping and railways in the past."

Mountain Freight Rates

Winnipeg Tribune (Ind. Cons.): There is no possible excuse for upsetting the present rate structure. If the Cabinet intervenes it can only be for the purpose of gaining some political advantage in British Columbia, and anything it may gain in that way will be more than offset by what it will unquestionably lose in Winnipeg and Manitoba. This city and this province are tired now of being left to bear the burden of unjust freight rates. If there is to be any fruther rate reduction in the West it is time that Winnipeg and Manitoba shared in it. Further relief can be offered Vancouver and British Columbia only at the expense of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and they are already suffering injustice as a result of the concessions made to the coast province. The Cabinet will be well advised to let well enough alone.

Girl Jockeys

When Horsewomen Ride in a Race, Mere Man Has to Look to His Laurels

Women are not often seen in the saddle as jockeys. They ride at Newmarket, however, in a race for the Town Plate, which was run recently. Here is a contest which dates back to the time of Charles II., who founded the race in 1666.

The affair sometimes has its humorour side, as in 1926, when Miss Iris Rickaby won from Miss Eileen Joel. On this ocasion there were five riders, three of whom took a wrong turning and disappeared from view during the race! No objection was raised, it being generaly agreed that the best horse had won. A very pleasant sporting spirit, you will admit.

In 1923 Miss Betty Tanner finished third in a field of five. Miss Rickaby and Miss Marjorie Benson, of London, wanted to ride, but failed to get mounts on this occasion.

Last year produced a most exciting race. Miss Rickaby and Mrs. A. Heald rode neck-and-neck for some distance, the former rider eventually winning by just over a length. Only one man competed with the ladies that year, and he came in third. He was Mr. F. A. Simpson, and he has won the race on no fewer than thirteen occasions.

Miss Joel and Miss D. Saunders were the other riders. It was a colorful affair.

Keeping the Course Clear

Miss Rickaby wore a dark blue jersey, tight fawn felt hat, brown breeches, and riding boots. Mrs. Heald sported a yellow and white shirt and little black jockey cap. Mr. Simpson was resplendent in tangerine shirt with black stripes, white breeches, and cream cap. Miss Joel wore a light blue jersey, and Miss Saunders a white cricket shirt.

Eve as a jockey has been known to do well apart from the Newmarket event. In 1804 Mrs. Thornton, the wife of a Yorkshire landowner, rode a four-mile race at York for £1,000, with a side-bet of £500, against her brother-in-law, Captain Flint. The race attracted such attention that soldiers had to be employed to keep the course clear. Mrs. Thornton rode splendidly and looked like being an easy winner, when her saddle slipped and she had to pull up.

Again, in 1905, Mrs. Maggio, wife of a veterinary surgeon, rode in a mile race at Epsom against a Mr. Wyatt, of Reigate, for £100 a side. In this race the lady rode at a weight of 11 st., while her opponent tipped the scale at 9 st. 6 lb. In spite of this sandicap, Mrs. Maggio won easily.

To make the young heroine take the hero's place and ride a winning race is a favorite device when we see Eve riding to victory at Newmarket so often.

Names 6 Alleged Spies in France

Ousted Soviet Envoy Makes New Allegations Against Russians

Paris.—Georges Bessadovsky, ousted Soviet Charge D'Affaires here, made new allegations against Russian spies, including the charge that they had obtained highly valuable economic documents belonging to the American Embassy in Berlin.

He gave the French secret police the names of six alleged Soviet superspies who, he said, direct a vast espionage system in France. He said three were Soviets employed by the Embassy, the Soviet bank and the Soviet commercial agency; one was a former Czarist general, and two were Frenchmen whose duties were to report the activities of the French Cabinet and Parliament.

The French secret police replied they long had known of the activities ofthe six men named.

"Last year, when I was a guest of Ambassador Kretinsky in Berlin, I heard a counsellor advise the Ambassador that Soviet agents had obtained most valuable economic documents of the American Embassy," Bessadovsky told the United Press.

"The agents had hoped to get very important political documents from the same source, but they failed.

"The Soviet's chief European spy office is in Berlin, where Moscow agents cover every Embassy, especially those of France and Great Britain.

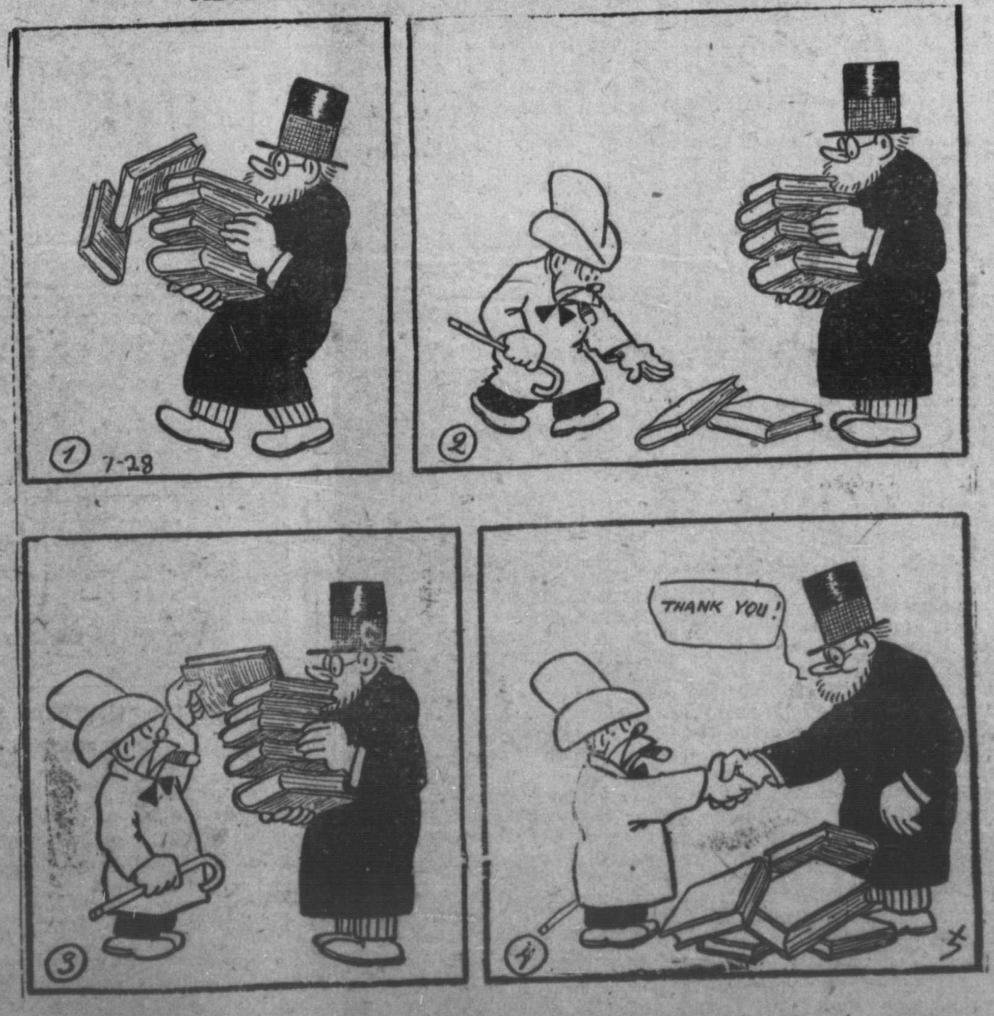

"While I was Soviet Charge D'Affaires in Tokio, many documents were offered for sale, chiefly English, Chinese and French, but no American.

"Since I've been in Paris I know of only two cases where the spies obtained secret codes—those used by Italy in communicating with its Berlin Embassy, and those employed by Great Britain in corresponding with India."

U. S. Unemployment

Hamilton Spectator (Ind. Cons.): It has been estimated by the Department of Labor of the U. S. that there are more than a million men and women in the Republic vainly walking the streets in search of employment. . . . We on this side of the border line sometimes make the mistake of considering our neighor's prosperity to be traditional, something to be taken for granted. But it is a fact that throughout this year, in comparison with population, there was much less unemployment in Canada than in the United States.

NINE YEARS

of Increasing Profits for Confederation Life Policyholders

FOR the ninth successive year profits for participating policyholders of this Association have been substantially increased.

And remember—100% of all profits earned by the participating branch are allotted to participating policyholders.

What does that mean? It means that the Confederation Life Association is well managed, that it is careful in the selecting of risks and that it is particularly prudent in the investment of policyholders' funds.

These are reasons why Confederation Life Association is so satisfactory a company to insure with.

Write for the pamphlet entitled "Profits to Policyholders". It describes some policyholders' experiences.

Without cost to the town Hon. Thomas Low proposes to erect a Soldiers' Memorial in Renfrew.

It is understood that the late John Bingham, left an estate valued at more than one million dollars.

The contract has been awarded for Renfrew's new skating rink. The tender, without heating, plumbing and light is $15,186.

Investigation is proceeding at Pembroke into the death of Duncan McCoshen, a game warden, whose dead body was found on Nov. 13. after he had been missing for a day. A fatal wound from a riffe bullet told the tale, but how inflicted is involved in mystery. The liklihood is that McCoshen accidentally shot himself.

Three men — Archie Smith, L. Nelson and A. Nelson—members of a party of the Canadian Mining and Smelting Co, were drowned in Little Joe Lake near Sudbury, on Nov. 14. The body of Archie Smith, who belonged to Pembroke, was recovered shortly afterwards. The fatality occurred through the upsetting of a canoe. E. C. Kilburn and Wilfred Gelinas, members of the party escaped.

Utters His Protest With Dynamite

Investigation was started by Detective J. F. Dalpe, of the Quebec provincial police Friday afternoon into the alleged dynamiting of a wooden bridge at Lake Cayamont, north of Gracefield, where a resident of the district is said to have taken this method of protesting against a ruling of the municipal council. Detective Dalpe expects to make an arrest shortly.

According to the findings of Detective Dalpe, the dynamiting is alleged to have taken place on two occasions. One time the blowing up of the structure nearly caused the death of a person who reached safety a few minutes before.

The township council decided some time ago, Detective Dalpe declared, on the building of a new road. A resident also started construction of another road in opposition, it is alleged, and in order to hinder the township building program and at the same time force travellers to use his own road, he had blown up the bridge.

Indignation at the alleged offence is widespread in the Gracefield district.

CORRESPONDENCE

Dear Mr. Editor :

As one of the citizens of the village of Shawville I desire to join with The Equity in expressing my appreciation to the Mayor, Mr. John Argue, and the members of the Council in providing our village with a supply of pure spring water. Many of us were anxious during the past severe dry spell when we learned that our former source of water was running low, and we are greatly relieved by the pains-taking enterprise of our council in finding the new way by which water may be obtained. Often men in public life give unstintingly of their time and labor in meeting the needs of those they serve and their efforts are rewarded with little or no expression of thanks, and only too frequently with rather severe criticism. So it gives me great pleasure to join with many of our villagers and say that the members of our council deserve a good deal of praise for this last good achievement.

Yours, for the success of Shawville,

Wm. E. Wright.

Norway Bay Matters Discussed

Promise that he would support the requests of the Norway Bay Municipal Association for better roads and electric lights at Norway Bay was given by Wallace R. McDonald, M.L.A., for Pontiac, in addressing members of the organization at a well attended meeting in the Board of Trade rooms, Journal Building, last Wednesday night.

Mr. McDonald declared he was heartily in sympathy with the aims of the association and he would do his best to carry out its wishes. A road was being built, he said, from McKee's but this was a much longer route to Norway Bay from the highway. He would do all in his power to meet the request for a road from Wyman to Norway Bay.

The member for Pontiac said he was pleased to have Ottawa residents in Norway Bay as they were a distinct asset to the county. At the conclusion of his address he was given a hearty vote of thanks.

When the meeting opened with Michael Powell, the president, in the chair it was stated that the chief objects of the association were to obtain electric energy and better police protection for the community and a better road into Norway Bay from the Hull-Waltham highway.

The necessity for police protection was emphasized in view of recent robberies when a large number of cottages of Ottawa residents were entered and much valuable property stolen. County and provincial authorities will be urged to provide adequate protection in future.

About 50 ratepayers of the Bay attended the meeting.

An executive council consisting of Fred Runge, Norman Foster, A. Alexander, Frank Rochester and John F. Taylor, was appointed to interview the different people regarding these matters

A letter, regretting his inability to attend, was received from Mayor Nelson McLellan, of Bristol, Que.

P. J. Nolan acted as secretary of the meeting.—Ottawa Journal.

At the Pembroke Fall Assizes last week, before Mr. Justice Fisher, John Regan was acquitted of the charge of murdering his son, Michael Regan, whom he shot during the haying season last Summer, the defence being that Regan did not know the gun was loaded when he pointed it at his son, who was annoying and throwing stones at him. The jury brought in a verdict of not guilty after 40 minutes' deliberation.

Meat and the Heart.

A meal that is high in protein content, one that contains a large amount of meat, makes more work for the heart, Dr. R. M. Moore, Harvard University physiologist, has found, according to a Science Service bulletin.

In experiments in which the effect of muscular exertion, emotional excitement and temperature were carefully excluded, Dr. Moore found that after a meal of meat the heart rate of the experimental subject was increased by one-fourth or one-half of what it had been while fasting. That is, if the subject's heart had a fasting rate of 80 beats per minute, the meat meal increased it to 100 or 120 beats per minute.

This effect persisted for from 15 to 20 hours, during which time a total of many thousand extra heart beats was reached. The extra burden of work thrown on the heart by a protein meal, if other factors than the rate remain unchanged, is about equal to the total amount of work done by the heart during three or four hours under fasting conditions. Obviously, Dr. Moore pointed out, it is not possible to give the heart a rest, as is desirable in certain diseases, when a diet high in protein is being followed.
