

H. W. STEWART HONORED BY HUMANE SOCIETY

Presentation Made at Home of W. H. Stewart on Occasion of Social.

Mr. Stewart Rescued a Boy From Drowning in 1925.

The social which was held at the home of W. H. Stewart and sons on Friday evening, the 15th, inst., was a great success as more than one hundred people were present.

The principal feature of the evening was the presentation to Henry Stewart of a life saving certificate from the Royal Canadian Humane Association for the rescue of Gaston Barriere from drowning in the English River. The chairman, C. W. Potter, called the meeting to order by calling on R. W. Blair, Mayor of the village of Hemmingford to make the remarks. He spoke briefly explaining how on the 8th. Oct., 1925, Henry Stewart had saved Gaston Barriere from drowning and that he held in his hand a certificate from the Royal Canadian Humane Association, signed by George C. Copley, Hon. President, H. E. Waterman, Hon. Secretary, and countersigned by H. E. McLaren, Treasurer, and Capt. George J. Guy, Chairman, and dated at Hamilton, June 10th, 1927. Continuing he said that such recognition as this was not easily earned but that Henry was justly entitled to this Honorary Testimonial of the Association which was awarded for prompt action and presence of mind. He also mentioned other times when Henry had risked his life to save property. He then called on C. W. Potter, Mayor of the Township of Hemmingford to present the certificate to Henry which he did with a few remarks appropriate to the occasion. Henry expressed his thanks to Mr. Copley, to Mr. Blair and to C. W. Potter, who were instrumental in securing this recognition. The choir then sang "For He is a Jolly Good Fellow," after which Mr. F. A. Sweet entertained the audience in his usual humorous good style. He was heartily cheered and responded with a short recitation. Ice cream and cake were served free and all went home feeling that they had spent quite a pleasant evening. Thanks is due to W. H. Stewart for opening his house for such an occasion.

ROCKBURN

Mr. George Davidson of Springfield, Mass., is visiting with friends in Rockburn and Gore.

Mrs. John Oliver spent a few days with friends in Montreal last week. Word has reached here of the loss by fire of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Frier of Carthage, N. Y. Fortunately the family escaped and were able to save many of the house furnishings on the ground floor. It is not known how the fire started. Mr. and Mrs. Frier's friends will extend sincere sympathy in their loss.

The Rockburn baseball team took the short end of a 4 to 12 score from the Beavers on the local diamond on Saturday afternoon. While the result never seemed to be in doubt the locals put up a fairly good game in spite of a few costly errors.

MOANS OF DYING MAN HEARD

It was revealed yesterday that shortly after ten o'clock on Sunday night, George Gibson and Sam Dwyer, both of Malone, accompanied by a party of girls, among whom was Dwyer's sister, who was at the wheel, drove past the spot where Bouchard's body was found on Monday afternoon. One of the men heard a sound which seemed to him to resemble the moaning of a man. It came from the side of the road. Miss Dwyer too, heard it and stopped the car.

One of the children, whose leg was broken, and Paul Durocher, were admitted to the St. Johns Hospital, while the others were able to go home after treatment for bruises and cuts.

According to witnesses, Mrs. Oumet was driving the automobile of her brother-in-law, when she lost control and the machine crashed into a post and capsized.

FIRE BRIGADE HOLD SPECIAL MEETING

Majority of Men Present Signed up For Service.

NUMBER PRESENT.

Practice to be Held Friday Evening.

A special meeting of the Fire Brigade was held in the County Building Monday evening. To a marked degree was enthusiasm shown over this step of progress in the history of the town. The popularity of the fine idea was borne out by the large number present at the meeting. Approximately fifty were present and the majority signed for service when they would be needed. Ways and means were discussed by which this Brigade could make the more progress in the least amount of time.

The financing of such a brigade and the work involved in its formation is no small task and all who have in a large way contributed to its success deserve credit. However, this institution can prosper but by the support and membership of local men and the whole-hearted encouragement which can be given them by the citizens. And, when in some way or other a citizen can contribute financially he should consider it his duty to do so.

A special practice of the brigade will take place Friday evening at 7 o'clock p.m. All members and interested parties are requested to be present.

SCHOLARSHIP WON BY MISS J. GOODFELLOW

Judge Brown Scholarship Carried Off by Miss Gladys McKell.

14 PASS.

Application of the Fifty Per Cent Pass Rule Strictly Enforced.

Results in the McGill matriculation and the province of Quebec leaving examinations, conducted recently at McGill were made known Monday afternoon. Of the 805 school leaving examination candidates, 395 satisfied the requirements for matriculation in McGill, although only a certain proportion of these contemplate taking a university course. Of the straight matriculation candidates who took the whole examination, 81 passed, and 40 others qualified for admission by completing the requirements, part of which had been done the year before.

New Regulations.

The High School leaving certificate is being granted this year under a new set of regulations, which were adopted by the Protestant Committee of the Department of Education over a year ago. The chief differences between the new and old regulations are that the pass standard has been raised from 40 to 50 per cent., and that French has been added to the list of compulsory subjects. It was stated at McGill that it is not to be wondered at therefore, that there is greater number of failures this year than has been the case in the past, not, however, as a general thing, as the record of schools. Last year, out of 715 candidates, 150 or 21 per cent. failed. This year, out of 804 candidates, 266, or 33 per cent. failed. The number of failures would be greater, were it not for a modification of the 50 per cent. pass rule, according to which failure in a compulsory subject can be overlooked, provided the candidate obtains 65 per cent. on the whole examination, Dr. Nicholson said.

Strict application of the 50 per cent. pass rule sometimes prevents a candidate from obtaining a school leaving certificate, while on the other hand the matriculation regulation, which allows one to fall as low as 40 per cent. in a paper, although requiring 60 per cent. on the whole examination, the candidate may be able to obtain a matriculation certificate.

Scholarship Winners.

Much credit is due Miss Jessie Goodfellow who leads the graduating class and who wins the Lord Atholstan Scholarship of $1000. Miss Goodfellow has led her class every year she has attended school with the exception of the school term she was in grade seven. HOWICK YOUTH PRESIDES OVER DROWNED IN PRESIDES OVER HEROIC ATTEMPT FARM LANDS CASE

Accidental Death Verdict Returned by Coroner McMahon.

COURT FINDING

Drowned at Dorval in Attempt to Save Two Girls.

A verdict of accidental death was returned by Coroner McMahon Tuesday morning in the case of George West, aged 20, of Howick, Que., who was drowned at 5 o'clock Monday evening at the foot of Dorval avenue, Dorval, while attempting to save the lives of two girls. The girls were rescued by Charles J. Daigneau, of Dorval, who went to their aid in a row boat.

Chief Boyer of the Dorval police in the Coroner's Court Tuesday morning declared swimming to be extremely dangerous at that point, and stated that civil action would be taken to render impossible further mishaps there. The wharf starts out in low water, but drops very suddenly, the chief said.

Evidence placed before the coroner revealed that the girls, May Cleveley, aged 17, and her sister Catherine, aged 12, of Church street, Dorval, had gone into the water at this point, unaware that there was a 15-foot drop. Their cries for help attracted West, who, employed on the farm of Ross Sims nearby, had been working in the fields. He waded out to assist them, although he was fully dressed, and sank just before he reached them.

The testimony of David Ferguson, of Dorval, corroborated by Mrs. Drysdale, revealed that he had been summoned by his wife, who heard the cries from the water. On reaching the shore after summoning others he saw that Daigneau was rowing back and reached the girls. An oar was thrust at them, and the other was seized by the hair as she was sinking.

West's body was recovered 40 minutes later by Chief Boyer and Constable St. Aubin. Dr. Ernest Decarie, of Lachine, was summoned, but artificial respiration failed.

REV. W. T. B. CROMBIE DIED IN 55TH. YEAR

Was at One Time Pastor For Athelstan And Elgin Congregation.

Following a breakdown in health which compelled retirement from active ministerial duties, the Rev. William T. B. Crombie, M.A., B.D., died half an hour after midnight, Friday morning at his residence, 356 Magdalen street, Montreal. For the past ten months he had been confined to bed and his condition had gradually become more serious.

At the time that Mr. Crombie relinquished pastoral work he was in charge of the Kingsbury and Flood-Don, Ont., Presbyterian congregation, while previous charges held included Oliver's Ferry, near Perth, and Elgin and Athelstan, Que., which was also a double pastorate. Mr. Crombie was the son of the late Rev. George Crombie, who for many years was a missionary in China. He was a graduate of McGill University and took his studies in theology at the Presbyterian College here.

One of Mr. Crombie's interests apart from his ministerial functions was that of astronomy. He was a member of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada and was, in fact, the prime mover in bringing about the establishment of the Montreal branch of that society.

Surviving Mr. Crombie is his widow, who was formerly Mrs. Breakall, of Leduc, Ont., also five daughters, the Misses Mary, Jean, Isabel, Annie and Maude, and one son, Harry, all living at home.

JUDGE MARIN PRESIDES OVER FARM LANDS CASE

Case is Dismissed. Costs Borne by Town of Huntingdon Amount to $24.15.

The taxing of vacant lands within the town limits has been a point in question for some few years. Under the Cities and Towns Act it is to be found the following:

"522. All lands under cultivation or farmed or used as pasture for cattle, as well as all undeveloped land or wood lots within the municipality, shall be taxed to an amount of not more than one per cent."

This portion of the act is where the question of determining what are really farm lands. The specifications as farm lands are lacking. Mayor O'Connor interviewed the Attorney General, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Municipal Affairs on this matter. They were unable to tell him definitely what really was to be classed Farm Lands but recommended that a test case be made and have a judgment rendered.

A few years ago several ratepayers were reimbursed tax money in excess of the 1 per cent. paid. Since then the council received legal advice advising them to collect the taxes in full. This year Mr. H. T. Cunningham who owns lots at the foot of Dorval avenue and located in the town took exception to paying taxes in excess of the 1 per cent. The Town therefore took the case to court as a test case. The case was heard before Judge Marin in Valfield who dismissed the case with costs. We are therefore no further enlightened. The Town costs amounted to $24.15.

BOARD OF TRADE TO SEND FLOAT TO MALONE

Chairman of Empire Trade League of Great Britain Asked to Visit Huntingdon.

Erect Swings on Fair Grounds Volunteer Fire Brigade Will be Supported by Board of Trade in the Matter of Raising Funds for Room Equipment.

Last evening the July meeting of the Board of Trade was held in the County Building. Vice-President, Dr. J. E. Caza, presided.

Mr. C. W. Thomas brought up the subject of having the swings, teeters, etc., purchased by the Board of Trade last year for the benefit of the town children. He advocated that they be handed over to the Huntingdon Agricultural Society, who might have them erected for at least the three fair days. The idea of having them on the Fair Grounds instead of on some public lot in the town was discussed but was ultimately decided to have the Fair Board make use of them.

The Executive of the Malone Old Home Week having asked that Huntingdon Board of Trade send a float to Malone for their street parade on August 4th, it was the next matter before the meeting.

All present seemed much in favor of reciprocating to Malone who have on all occasions assisted Huntingdon for such events. On motion made by Mr. T. B. Pringle, seconded by Mr. C. W. Thomas it was decided to send a float. A committee of three were appointed to have charge of its make up, etc.

The Board of Trade were approached asking if they could assist in staging a celebration or in some way help raise some money for the Volunteer Fire Brigade. The funds to be raised are for the equipping of the recreation hall for the benefit of the volunteers. The members present voiced themselves as willing to assist in the raising of funds for the worthy brigade.

Secretary Martin read a lengthy letter from the chairman of the Empire Trade League of Great Britain. This letter explained that this league were interesting themselves in having British firms locate in Canada and other British Dominions. The writer of the letter is at present in Canada and is visiting many places addressing public gatherings. He wished to visit as many towns as he could that might be beneficial to industrials. Dr. Caza stated that upon the receipt of the letter no meeting was being called, the secretary acknowledged the letter extending the invitation for his visiting Huntingdon at a convenient date to himself.

Charles Helm Finds Body Of Murdered Man In Ditch Near H'don

Adelard Bouchard, Taxi Driver of Lachine, Was Victim.—Two Men And Woman Believed to Have Committed Crime, by Shooting With 38 Calibre Revolver.

SUSPECTED MURDERERS ARE STILL AT LARGE.

Autopsy Showed Man Died Not Only From Blow on Head And by Two Gun Shots But Also by Drowning in Ditch.—Gallon of Water And Mud Found in Body.

On Monday at about 1 p.m. as Charlie Helm who delivers meat for A. C. H. Picard in the country was passing Joseph Duhem's farm on the Malone-Trout River Highway he saw the form of a man lying in the deep ditch. Charlie went and got Mr. Arthur Caldwell who returned to the scene with him and declared the man dead. Coroner Dr. Wm. M. Rowat of Athelstan, was called.

The dead man was identified on Tuesday by his brother-in-law and two other men of Lachine. The victim of the murder was Adelard Bouchard. With the various clues investigated the following story in brief is thought correct:

Bouchard was hired by a man giving his name as McDonald, another Vance and a woman supposed to be Vance's wife, to take them from the Mount Royal Hotel to Syracuse. Bouchard was a taxi driver of Lachine and was to get $140. for the trip. They left Montreal Sunday evening after they had an afternoon's driving in Montreal. The auto reported at the U. S. Customs office at Trout River. Inspector Robie and Badger and customs officer Cummings were on duty. They passed the customs man but they were unable to give satisfactory answers to the Immigration officers.

Inspector William C. Robie gave a detailed and keenly observant account of what he knew of the party of three, thought to have been the murderers of Bouchard, at the inquest. He told of ordering them on their first appearance to return to the Customs house because they lacked clearances papers.

"They were nervous and 'fresh' when they spoke to us," he testified, "and I told the other officer that they would get a good 'frisking' if they came back."

He then described their return. "The woman in the auto seemed very nervous," he said. "She struck me as one who had been drinking very heavily. She had apparently been on a 'bait' for a long time, and she admitted as much when I questioned her in the machine. She remarked that 'if you had been drinking champagne for a week in Montreal the way I have you would be this way too.'"

The driver of the auto, the "cross-eyed" man, handed over Bouchard's card. The other man who gave his name as George Vance showed a U. S. marine engineer's licence and described the woman as his wife. "Vance appeared stupefied as by drink," the witness said.

Inspector Robie's description of the woman was elaborate and full of color. "She was good-looking and she wore like a trooper." There was a turning of heads towards two tall state troopers who were in the court at this point, and the witness turned too and nodded his apologies.

The immigration inspector described the woman's clothing when she arrived at the border and was obliged to enter the office. "I don't want to go in," she told him when he suggested that she come in with her husband. "In fact I can't go in, for I have no skirt on." The man supposed to be one McDonald and cross-eyed said to her "Go on in and save any trouble."

Knowing that she had no alternative she went in and in leaving the car wrapped a robe about her. It was later that it was noticed that she wore no stockings and was lacking other of the customary feminine articles of clothing. "I had seen some dancers pass through the line without stockings and the witness turned too and nodded his apologies. He explained.

Mr. Robie questioned both the man and woman concerning their credentials. The woman said her maiden name was Doris Wallace, aged 23, born in Pittsburgh and residing in New York City at West 60th street address. She had much to say about her father in Mount Vernon, N. Y. "He has an oil mine in Oklahoma, and every time I spend I spend a little more money," she declared, according to the witness.

Refused Entry to U. S.

He questioned her as to the date and place of her marriage. In doing this he ordered "Vance" to leave the room, and later he put the man through the same questions. Everything in the information they gave tallied but the place of their marriage. The woman said they were married in Port Colchester, N. Y., by a Justice of the Peace, and the man declared they were married in Los Angeles, Calif., by a minister.

The refusal of entry followed almost immediately afterwards.

While the man and woman were in the office, Mr. Robie said they showed a receipted bill from the Mount Royal Hotel, for $294. for a three days' sojourn there. "I asked her if she did not find that a pretty stiff account for three days and she answered 'if you had been drinking and paying for the champagne we have been ordering there you would understand it.'"

During the time that this interview was taking place, the cross-eyed "chauffeur" had gone to a store nearby. He showed a cut in his finger and asked for "a small piece of iodine" to put on it.

Before the woman left the immigration office, she made some reference to the fact that she was "always getting people out of scrapes." "You got drunk in Montreal and kicked out the window of the auto," she reminded Vance reproachfully and with several thick epithets, "I suppose I'm going to have to get you out of some trouble now."

The reference to the broken window, Inspector Robie pointed out, was apparently part of the alibi plan of the trio. It is the theory of Detective Germain of the Provincial Police working on the case that during the scuffle which ensued when the man was killed he was shoved through the right front window of the auto. Scores of bits of glass were picked out of the ditch about the man's body.

Not more than a mile up the road near Mr. Gilbert McMillan's lane were found a cartridge shell, a pair of ladies shoes, stockings and dress. Near Mr. Robert Arthur's home were found a ladies undergarment. These articles were all found by men employed on the road construction work. On Wednesday what is apparently the ladies hat was found near Mr. Arthur's. The finding of these garments may help lead to the identity of the woman.

A Danish sea captain's wife was robbed on Saturday in Montreal by three people thought to be the same gang. This party was robbed of $280. On Monday night a man's grey coat and vest were turned in to the balliff, which had been picked up along the roadside early in the morning. When Inspector Robie was shown the coat and vest he identified them as similar to the clothes worn by the man giving the name of Vance.

The idea of putting the cross-eyed man in the role of Bouchard following the brutal murder may have been suggested by the fact that the two men resembled each other somewhat in build. When Mr. Robie first saw the man, he turned to him and thought, "It might be that of the cross-eyed man. Examination of the eyes, however, showed him at once that he was mistaken."

Two Bullets in Body. Two bullets were recovered from the body of the murdered man, Dr. Rosario Fontaine testified. One of them, which severed his jugular vein would have been sufficient to cause his death, as would a concussion on the brain, apparently caused by a blow from the butt-end of a revolver. The other bullet broke his right arm but lodged in some muscles and would not alone have been fatal. Death was hastened, Dr. Fontaine testified, from the Montreal morgue, said by the fact that the man, while unconscious, was thrown head down in the water of the ditch.

Over a gallon of water was found in the stomach and some Deepening the St. Lawrence.

Upwards of twenty years ago the government of Canada and the United States started a joint investigation to see if it were feasible to have ocean navigation to the head of the lakes, or at least to the western bounds of Lake Ontario. The demand came from the United States Middle West and from the Province of Ontario. The investigations were made and the reports filed. Later on, as the use of electricity became more general, demands were made that the investigations should be reopened and a report made on the amount of electric power that could be obtained. By this time the demand for the development was swinging into the New England states also, and it is the demand of those states which is making the question a matter of public interest just now. Various engineering reports have been filed, but the Canadian government has refused to open any negotiations until the full reports are in.

It may reasonably be said that the question is not now one of navigation, primary, but of power. It is estimated that it would be possible to develop millions of horse power, and that the chief development would be in that part of the river lying between Prescott and Cornwall. Then coming closer to Montreal it is estimated that at least another million could be taken from the river between Coteau and Lachine.

Negotiations will ultimately take place and both countries go into the conference with certain advantages, Canada, because a major portion of the power is in Canadian waters, the United States, because they have the money available to invest in such a project. The United States will press for an early development because they are running short of power in the thickly populated industrial centres all along the coast, but Canada feels no such pressure. We have still adequate powers in the rivers which form the river shed of the St. Lawrence, so the government has ample time to consider matters fully, for not only is the project one of gigantic proportions, but also it will be a bartering of part of our national heritage. There is nothing objectionable in selling something of which we have a surplus, but the price must be right, and the arrangement must be such that the future growth of Canada is not restricted.

Perhaps the majority of Canadians will be inclined to make haste slowly, for the United States policy as shown by the water steal at Chicago is not such as to impress confidence in our minds. We want no snaps of paper bargains.

The development of the waterways scheme will mean a great deal to this part of Canada, in some respects it will help it, in other ways we may be injured. If the levels of Lake St. Francis are raised, it will make the draining of the low lands that much more difficult, in fact it may become a first class engineering problem to get the water away. On the other hand it will tend to industrialize this section. It is not a question that we can afford to ignore, or merely read the headlines in the papers, we must be prepared to take an intelligent view of the whole question and see how it will touch us.

Making Haste to Die.

During the past week upwards of a hundred people in the northern part of the United States died from the heat wave. On Sunday a like number were either killed or permanently injured owing to automobile accidents. The heat waves are beyond our control, but the automobile is a man-made machine and should be controlled. The Province of Quebec is making a determined effort to slow down the speed of cars, the Province of Ontario is requiring every driver to pass a test showing that he understands how to drive a car, and is mentally fit to be in charge of a motor vehicle. The success of the ventures will be watched with considerable interest, but a perusal of the papers frequently shows that an American car is mixed up in many of the accidents and he is in many ways beyond the control of our laws. An American driver in Canada is at a disadvantage in more ways than one. First of all he probably comes from a state where they have no set limit of speed, the test is public safety. Then again he is on unfamiliar roads, and roads which are too narrow for modern day traffic; also, there is not the teamwork among Canadian motorists that there should be. A Canadian driver thinks that he is doing all that is required of him if he shoves out a hand once in a while—leaving the intent to your imagination, and is prone to take liberties in cutting traffic that would not be tolerated in other countries.

Human nature cannot be modelled down to a single type, that is beyond the abilities of any man or of any law. We must take human nature as we find it, and admit that there will always be reckless drivers, fast drivers, careless drivers, road hogs, incompetent drivers, etc. They may be disciplined to a certain extent, but a surer way to avoid accidents will be to make the roads so wide and well graded that the danger of collision is reduced to a minimum. Last year about $45,000,000 was spent on road work in Canada and employment was given to 26,000 men in building and repairing roads. At least an equal amount of money will be spent this year, while the chances are that it will be exceeded but if the policy of building narrow roads is continued, the builders instead of helping the taxpayers are preparing traps which will cost lives.

Next to Godliness.

Who originated the idea of holding a 'Clean up day,' 'Mothers day,' etc., each year, probably never realized how far the scheme was to go and become commercialized. When the necktie people introduced "buy a tie for father day" the limit was believed to be reached, but the soap people have gone one better. It is announced in the papers that this fall a "bath day" will be introduced and the embarrassing question of whether or not you have had a bath this week will become a topic fit for polite conversation. The announcement gravely states that "some people think they can take a bath a week or leave it alone," but they are warned that their day is run they will be asked the question on the streets, the moral will be spelt out on the screen at the moving picture shows, bill boards will advertise it and pulpits will thunder it. The soap must be used. Human nature is human nature, so we will watch the experiment with interest. It has been determined by scientists, that the brain of the average person is that of a teen age child, and the average boy is not an enthusiastic parader on Saturday night.

INDUSTRY HALTS FOR ROBINS

Venturesome Birds Built Home in Ill-Advised Spot.

Portland.—That supposedly heartless giant, modern industry, has turned aside for a bird's nest.

A few weeks ago two venturesome robins built their home in an ill-advised spot—on a projecting girder in Portland's newest construction of concrete and huge steel frames. Later, the anxious mother bird was dislodged from the nest long enough that three small blue eggs were discerned.

Then came the issuance of probably one of the strangest orders in the history of building construction. It was, in effect:

"Two robins are nesting on the crane girde in the main bay. Any man who intentionally molests them or causes them to leave their nest can draw his time."

The eggs have hatched out now. Strange, threatening feet have come close to the nest but never touched it. Steel girders have been swung aside and iron work installed with specially deadened pneumatic hammers. And the two robins have stuck steadfastly on feeding and rearing their family.

Excellent Pic Crust
 2 cups pastry flour, two-thirds cup fat, three-quarters teaspoonful salt, six to eight tablespoons cold water. Sift flour and salt together. Add only enough water to hold. Roll one-eighth inch thick. For baked shell, cover bottom of pie plate. Leave enough edge to fold back to make it firm. Prick well with fork to prevent bubbles. Bake in hot oven for fifteen minutes.

To prevent juices soaking under crust, before putting in the fruit, brush the bottom crust with melted butter and dust with a little flour.

To prevent juices running out of pies, insert three or four pieces of large macaroni in openings of upper crust and wrap a strip of wet white cloth around the edge.

The tramcar was crowded, and an old gentleman, with a kindly twinkle in his eye, took five-year-old Tommy on his lap.

"This will be better than standing, won't it, my boy?" he suggested.

"Yes," said Tommy, rather reluctantly, for he had enjoyed lurching about the car.

"But you want to be careful that I don't pick your pocket," the old man said, in a whisper.

"Can't," Tom retorted, his voice somewhat muffled. "As soon as I saw you looking at me I put my penny in my mouth."

GLENELM

The regular meeting of the W. M. S. was held at the home of Mrs. J. Scriver on July 13th. The ladies sewed after which they were entertained to a beautiful supper.

We are sorry Miss Jean Gorton is laid up with a broken ankle. We hope for a speedy recovery.

The regular meeting of the "Y" was held at Mrs. J. J. Tannahill on 12th. The meeting was conducted by the President, Elsie Salter, and the games by Miss Jean Mowatt on the lawn. The members then came in and after finding partners enjoyed lunch.

Miss Vane: "He says his love for me is as deep as the ocean."

"Is your wife one of those women who look at their husbands and say, 'I made a man of him?' asked the incontinent friend.

"No," answered Mr. Meekton. "Henrietta is very unassuming. She merely says she has done her best."

Enjoy a Real Tour on Gum-Dipped Tires

When you tour on Gum-Dipped Tires all roads seem equally good. There is nothing to compare with the smooth, sure performances of these big, low-pressure tires. Jolts and vibrations disappear. Stretches of rough going cannot disturb you or harm the mechanism and well-built structure of your car.

If it is slippery and muddy underfoot, Gum-Dipped Tires, having double the road contact, cling to the road and hold the car unwaveringly to a true, straight course. On grades there is extra traction; at sharp curves or in quick stops you will have perfect control of wheel and brake. Skidding is almost impossible.

Through the development of the exclusive Gum-Dipping process, Firestone has tremendously increased tire mileage in balloon tires. This insulates and impregnates every fibre of every cord with rubber, reduces internal heat and friction and delivers thousands of extra miles with added comfort and safety.

Ask any Firestone Dealer to show you the structure of Balloon Gum-Dipped Tires and to tell you their advantages. He is an authority on this type of tire and is in a position to serve you better and save you money. See him to-day.

FIRESTONE TIRE &

PREPARATIONS ON LARGE SCALE FOR HOME WEEK

Street Parade to be Held on Thursday Will be Biggest Parade Ever Held in Malone.

$750. Voted For Baseball.

Massena to Play Albany Two Exhibition Baseball Games.

The people of Malone are now preparing on a large scale for the holding of an Old Home Week. The program has practically been completed. Most people from the section of the County of Huntingdon will pay a visit to Malone during the week and in all probability Thursday will be the big day and during that afternoon the grand street parade will be held.

Capt. George B. Brandish, who is chairman of the parade committee has tabled the following report which we reproduce. The parade will form in Webster, Fort Covington and West Main streets in the vicinity of the armory shortly after one o'clock and will start promptly at 1:30, proceeding east through Main street to the Fair Grounds. It will be reviewed by village, town and county officials as it passes Arsenal Green. The parade will be divided into three or four sections, each headed by a uniformed organization. These probably will be the Knights Templar, the St. John's Guard of Honor, the American Legion and Company I.

Each section will be composed of several units. All commercial and industrial firms and all patriotic, military and civic organizations will be represented by floats and by men and women in the line of march. Every group in line is urged to adopt some distinctive decoration such as colored sashes, kilts, cocked hats or other device or garment. These can be made of colored crepe paper at little expense and with little effort, and may be in colors of the organization. Catalogues of materials for floats, with many suggestions of designs, are in the hands of Capt. Brandish and Joe Leonard and are available to any organization, committee or individual desiring to see them.

Three prizes of $12, $8, and $5 will be awarded for the best float in the commercial class and three of the same amounts for the best float in the passenger car class.

On Thursday evening of Old Home Week most of the lodges will keep "open house." Dances will be held at the Elks, K. of C. Home, Masonic Temple, Moose Club and the St. John's Home. Light refreshments will be served at these club houses and also at the Elks club house and possibly at Foresters, Odd Fellows and Grange Hall. Books of registration will be kept at all of the club houses and all visitors will be asked to register.

The entertainment is provided mainly for the visitors. It is expected they will circulate about from one club house to another, dancing a while at one, perhaps partaking of refreshments at another and visiting with friends wherever they find them.

The Rotary Club will entertain the visiting Rotarians at their noon luncheon that day and will have a float in the parade.

The American Legion will have a float in the parade and the Legionnaires and Auxiliary will march. A Legion drum corps will also be in line though it may be divided into groups to lead the various sections.

The Union St. John expects to have seventy-five men in line and also a decorated float. An orchestra has been engaged for a dance at the St. John's Home in the evening and punch will be served.

The Relief Corps of the G. A. R. posts will be in line.

The Moose Lodge and Mooseheart Legion will be in line and will have one or two floats. They will keep open house in the evening and probably will have a dance. Refreshments will be served.

Besides having the Commandery in the procession, the Masonic bodies probably will have a float. The Eastern Stars will serve a luncheon on Thursday evening and there will be dancing. The Temple will be open to visitors throughout Old Home Week.

The Odd Fellows, Foresters and Grange will be represented in the parade and will keep open house in the evening, but cannot have dances because of fire law restrictions.

The Elks will march in a body and will have a float. They will keep open house in the evening and will serve light refreshments and will have a dance. Exalted Ruler Thos. L. Hagerty has appointed the following committees to handle these events:—Open house, Leo Delancy, chairman; F. F. Fisk and Ralph Levy; float, Joseph Langdon.

The K. of C. will have a dance and refreshments as their part of the open house program and will have a float. The members also will march in a body. The C. D. of A. and the Junior Catholic Daughters also will have floats and will march in the parade.

It is expected that there will be nearly two thousand men and women in line and that it will be the biggest thing in the nature of a parade that Malone has ever witnessed.

The parade will be followed by a big program of field sports at the Fair Grounds and by the open house entertainment at the club house in the evening, making in all the most elaborate program of any single day in Old Home Week.

Lovers of baseball are going to be treated to two extra good baseball games. The teams engaged are Massena and an Albany team. $750. has been allotted for the financing of these two games.

STE. MARTINE
Mesdames E. Beauvais, Jos. McGowan, the Misses C. Patenaude and C. Laberge and Messrs. J. Patenaude, Philippe Verner, H. Beliveau and M. Dubuc of Montreal are visitors in town.

Mrs. Charles Monard recently spent some time at Coteau Station visiting her sister, Mrs. Lamont. It is estimated that approximately 200 people spent Sunday afternoon on the river. The attraction is the fine bathing place near the dam. Many from Montreal and St. Remi enjoyed this fine spot.

EXHIBITION AT OTTAWA WILL BE GREAT EVENT

Directors Promise Attractions of Unusual Merit. Only Four Weeks Until C. N. E. Opens.

Four weeks from Monday will be the opening day for the Ottawa Exhibition for 1927 and prospects for a wonderful week were never more rosy.

Realizing the importance of the Jubilee of Confederation celebration, the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, the World's Poultry Congress and other events, the directors started early to make the exhibition worthy of jubilee year in the Capital of Canada. Building space has to be provided for so many departments of the big exhibition and the demand for space from manufacturers, merchants and others has been so great that the directors found difficulty in locating all. For lack of suitable space, the cat show has been cancelled for this year. The committee which has had such a successful art gallery display for several years has also waived this feature for this year and the art building will be devoted entirely to the photographic salon which was such a remarkable success last year in spite of the rather unsuitable quarters in which it was housed.

High Class Horse Show.
Advantage has been taken of the enlarged Horvick Hall to stage a high class horse show program which will be held for the first four nights of the week in the Coliseum. For the last two nights in the Coliseum there will be special music features which will include the famous Centenary choir of 1,000 voices. Creature and his band, one of the most outstanding musical organizations of the day, will be heard in free concerts each day from the bandstand which was erected last year.

In front of the grandstand, the program will be such as has never before been assembled by the exhibition directors. The stellar offering will be The Follies of 1927, a spectacular music and dance revue, with a cast, mostly girls, selected from the best Broadway productions. This is really a big New York production, working on its own, with sumptuous costumes and scenic equipment. The Royal Pekinese troupe, Wei's elephants and many other high class acts will round out the bill. Horse racing in the afternoon and a big fireworks display each evening will complete a program which is sure to appeal to all.

The dog show, which has not been held for a year will be conducted in the new building, one of the finest in Canada for a dog show. Charles G. Hopton, of New York, has been selected as judge and already many owners of the best dogs in Canada and the United States have signified their intention of exhibiting.

On the Midway.
A new and bigger midway is also assured. New rides, new shows, and more of them, will be assembled and the inspection made by the committee of directors is an assurance that the midway will be clean and high-class in every respect.

Poultry and pets, live stock of all kinds, industrial and educational exhibits, child welfare, hobby show, domestic science competitions, special music day features, a wonderful floral display, government exhibits, and the hundred and one things which go to make an exhibition will be seen at their best.

When jubilee year comes to a close the exhibition, August 22 to 27, will be included in the outstanding event.

ST. ANICET
A very successful dance was held at McDonald's pavilion, Sylvestre's Point on Thursday evening. Over 100 couples attended, people coming from local points and Ormstown, Malone, Chateaugay, Brush-ton and Melira. The music was supplied by Larry Odair's orchestra of Cornwall, Ont., a fine orchestra. Considering the time that the dance was advertised the representation was very good. The popular opinion is that a better dancing floor could not be found.

Make your store "Hers"!
There are a lot of women in small towns surrounding your store who can be persuaded to look on your store as their own.

Calling them by Long Distance at the very low rates for Interurban Service, to offer them some special bargain or to invite them to a sale will help them form the habit of coming to you for anything.

It doesn't require a large stock. Wholesale's and manufacturers' warehouses are at your elbow. By Long Distance you can order and promptly receive anything your customers may have seen advertised in magazines or newspapers.

This trade can be yours, if you will go after it.

The SAGUENAY
Where the Blessed Virgin Guards a Mystic Canyon

Like a dream ship floating on a river of ebony, your boat merges into the eerie shadows of the towering Saguenay Canyons. You glance upward. Fleecy clouds hang in a rich blue sky. There! high on yonder cliff - a vision of white - surely an angel descended from the sky, guarding and guiding you over the mysterious waters of the Saguenay Canyon.

For over thirty years this beautiful statue of the Virgin, on Cape Trinity, has looked down upon the dark, deep waters below. A thank offering of a devout Frenchman for his return to health.

This fascinating scene is but one of many on that voyage of romance and beauty on the famous Saguenay Cruise from Montreal that takes you down the historic "Valley of the Voyageurs" past ancient Quebec, Montmorency Falls, Murray Bay and historic Tadoussac. Plan a different vacation this year. Take the Saguenay Cruise for perfect rest and inspiration. Jolly times on ship-board all the way. Regular sailings from Victoria Pier, Montreal for three-day or seven-day cruises.

NEW WELLAND SHIP CANAL

Important Link in Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Waterway.—Notable Engineering Works Nears Completion.

In Canada, with her wide expanse of territory, the problem of transportation is a vital one. The economic growth of the Dominion is inseparably linked up with the development of lines of communication. This was early realized in Canada and one of the first important expenditures on public works was made for canals.

The Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence river form a system of waterways which extend inland to the heart of the continent. Canals have played an important part in overcoming the many obstacles which occur along the great water highway. In the route from Montreal at the head of ocean navigation to Port William and Port Arthur, a distance of 1,214 miles, there are 74 miles of canals, with 49 locks and 1,140 miles of river and like waters. One of the most important units in this system is the Welland canal constructed across the Niagara peninsula between Lake Ontario and Lake Erie and which overcomes the obstruction to navigation along the Niagara river caused by the famous falls of the same name.

The work now nearing completion on the Welland Ship Canal is one of the most important and notable engineering works undertaken in Canada in recent years. The waterway under construction is the fourth since the beginning of the first canal in 1824. This first land canal was projected and built by a private company incorporated for that purpose. Communication was first established between the two lakes by means of a canal from Lake Ontario to the Welland river at Port Robinson, thence to the Niagara river and by means of the latter to Lake Erie. The canal proper was afterwards continued from Port Robinson to Port Colborne, on Lake Erie and completed in 1833. The original canal was twenty-seven and a half miles long, and it required forty wooden locks to overcome the barrier imposed by the Niagara escarpment. These locks were each 110 feet long, 22 feet wide, with 8 feet of water on the sills.

After nearly ten years of service this canal was taken over by the Government of Upper Canada in 1841 and rebuilt on practically the same location from Port Dalhousie to its junction with the Welland canal south of Welland. The locks, however, were built of masonry and the number was reduced from 40 to 27. Their dimensions were also altered, the new locks being 150 feet long, 26½ feet wide, with 9 feet of water on the sills. Shortly after its completion the depth was increased to 12 feet by raising the banks along the canal reaches and increasing the height of the lock walls.

This canal sufficed for about twenty-five years when the requirements of navigation called for further enlargement and work was begun on the construction of the present canal by the Dominion Government, with masonry locks 270 feet long, 45 feet wide, and with 12 feet of water on the sills. This canal was completed in 1882 and since then the depth has been increased to 14 feet by raising the banks and lock walls. The present canal was built on an entirely new location from Lake Ontario to the village of Allanburg. Within this distance all of the locks occur and the location offered a straighter channel, the result being an increase in the length of the canal from twenty-seven and a half miles to twenty-six and three-quarter miles.

The immense improvement which will be brought about by the reconstruction now in hand is evident from the following facts. The number of locks is being reduced from 25 to 8. The usable length and breadth is being increased respectively from 270 feet and 45 feet to 800 feet and 80 feet, while the depth on the sill will be 30 feet. These dimensions will place the present work in the front rank, and in fact in some respects it stands absolutely unequalled. The Panama canal has a highest level of 85 feet above sea level. The highest lift for any lock is slightly over 30 feet compared with 46½ feet negotiated at each lock of the new Welland canal. Furthermore a flight of three twin locks at Thorold effects a rise of practically 140 feet, and as regards its "mass concrete" is comparable with the great Gatun locks at Panama.

The route of the new canal departs from that of the former ones to a very considerable extent, taking a straighter course and further reducing the distance to twenty-five miles. It is being built on a new location from Lake Ontario to Allanburg, a distance of twelve miles. From Allanburg to Lake Erie the course of the present canal is more or less followed.

The size of the lock culverts has been calculated so that a lock chamber can be filled or emptied in about eight minutes. The time required to pass a vessel through one of the ship canal locks will be about twenty minutes and the estimated time of passing a loaded freight vessel through the entire canal is eight hours, as against fifteen or eighteen hours on the present canal. When traffic is heavy or becomes congested for any reason, several vessels of present canal size can be passed through the ship canal locks at one lockage. Up to the present the length of vessels reaching Lake Ontario either from the St. Lawrence or from Lake Erie has been about 250 feet, but with the completion of the new canal it will be possible for the 600 foot freighters now plying the upper lakes to pass into Lake Ontario and the upper St. Lawrence.

The history of canal communication between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario is one of almost constant enlargement and reconstruction to meet the rapid growth of trade and commerce on the Great Lakes, and the consequent steady increase in size of vessels plying these waters.

Dan Lorrain's Boys.

(Written for The Ottawa Journal by F. W. Rowse.)

The success of the authorities in solving the latest Gatineau Valley mystery—the shooting to death of a farmer, named Mulligan—again switches the spotlight on the Quebec Provincial Detective Bureau.

For doggedness of purpose, for intelligent investigation, and for finesse the provincial sleuths of our sister province have no equals throughout the length and breadth of this continent, always excepting highly trained federal investigators of both Canada and the United States.

It would seem that there is something in the French blood which lends itself readily to detective work, but one has to seek further than an growing Sherlock complex for an explanation of the signal successes which have crowned the efforts of the Quebec officials over a number of years.

Taking the men of the Quebec force collectively, one would say, at once, that they were different in many respects from the members of other provincial and state police. In the first place they are not policemen, and few of them bear any resemblance to the conventional type of "dick," familiar to all movie fans. They are "white collar" men, if ever there was such a type.

Not a little of the success of the bureau is due, as one would naturally expect, to its administrative head, Chief D. Lorrain, or, as he prefers to be known, "Dan" Lorrain, a detective of detectives, and, withal, a gentleman.

You pass over Place D'Armes, in Montreal, and follow one of the city's richest streets, St. James, until it turns around the angles of the court house. At the end of the street, appropriately named "Dead Men's Curve," stands a four-story, old grey stone building. Its second floor is connected to the massive Palais de Justice across the street by a covered passageway, high over the single-track street car rails on cobbled pavement. You slip under this "bridge of sighs" and, right at your writing hand is an old door, whose glass bears the legend "Provincial Detective Bureau." There is no elevator, but you have only one flight of stairs to climb. The building is gloomy, and tightly closed doors opening off the stairway and the hall to which it leads, heighten the atmosphere of the place.

You enter a bare chamber, furnished with a single, bar-backed chair, and you step up to a counter which divides it into two. Behind the counter a stenographer rattles along on a typewriter. She is the first bright spot in this grim headquarters. A plainclothes officer comes to the counter. You ask to see Chief Lorrain.

You are not kept waiting long. "Dan" is a busy man, but he is always ahead of his work. You are motioned to a door leading off the waiting room at your right. As you knock and grasp the knob of the door handle, there is a quick click. A hidden button, under the chief's desk, has been pressed to unlock the door for you.

The chief is sitting at a flat-topped desk, facing you, and with his back to a window through which you see the handsome stone facade of Montreal's newest court house building across the way. Through the other window at your left, the historic Palais, fronted by a neatly-trimmed lawn, is your sky-line.

As the chief rises to greet you, carefully clearing his desk of piles of papers and oddsends, your eye is caught by a photograph high over his right shoulder. "Hands Up" is its title, and you find yourself staring down the muzzle of a revolver, leveled straight at your head, by a masked, shirted bandit.

You try to step out of the line of fire, and gratefully accept a chair "Dan" offers you. But the muzzle of the gun is upon the portrait follows you. If you have been here before, you know that this is the famous Pinkerton portrait, a study of the great private detective who justly claimed to be able to keep everyone "covered" at once.

Now Dan is talking. "Well, what's the new day?" he enquires brightly, forestalling you. You tell him, and, if there is an ulterior motive for your visit, you draw him on in conversation. If D. D. likes you he will talk.

He is not a big man, but possesses a tremendous vitality. His interests are broad and comprehensive. He is particularly interested in his work. He is a scientist as well as an officer of the law, and you feel at once that he is trying to put you at ease.

When you leave, to the click of his private door lock, you take away with you the impression that he was glad to see you. He says so himself. "Come again. If there is anything I can do for you you know where to find me."

Perhaps, before you reach the bottom of the stairs, you have met some of "Dan's" boys. If you do you will be struck by the smooth discipline of this central office and by the kindly nature of these quiet men who have succeeded in rising above the sordid character of much of their work. There are no "builders" or "flat-feet" here. Perhaps you will meet M. Samson, big, gentle-mannered lieutenant of the chief, or you may meet Dan's strolling in from a busy morning around the corner's court, where he spends much of his time as representative of the provincial force, or one of the other clever operatives may come in or go out with you. They will all greet you with a smile, and, some times, a quiet hint of news. You feel that here you are among friends.

What wonder that Dan Lorrain's boys have established a record of achievement all over Canada. You just know that these calm, efficient men can puzzle out the mysteries of criminal affairs. Most of all you are impressed by the fact that sobriety and decency are much to be desired to brutality and crudeness in the modern science of criminology. The father is under a shawl, and the landlady is the widow. Dan here's to you; you've got your faults—but you may have lots of 'em—but you are all right, and we'll miss you when you are gone. Dad, here's to you.

WHEN THE BEARS WENT TO COURT

Did you ever hear of the bears of Berne? Berne, you know, is in Switzerland and the bear is part of its heraldry. It may be one of those old heraldic jokes that people used to be so fond of, but at any rate there are bears kept at Berne to this day, and all over Switzerland you can buy little carved wooden bears as souvenirs.

The bears of Berne not long ago appeared as witnesses in a law suit of which The Times gives the following account:—

For the first time in the annals of law courts, two bears from the Berne pit were recognized as capable witnesses before the Cantonal Courts. One of the assistant keepers had brought charges of cruelty against the head keeper. The case was duly called, and, as a part of his defense, the head keeper, to the apprehension of the judges and attendants, appeared for trial followed by two of the bears. The charges were made and the complaining witness described how the animals, even the two brought into court, had been mistreated.

The usual emphatic denials were entered by the defense, and after a discourse upon the habits, intelligence and honesty of bears in general, the counsel for the head keeper asked if the Court would permit him to introduce, as the only witnesses for his client, the bears themselves.

The Court, unable to find reason as to the incompetence of the bears as witnesses, inasmuch as they were the aggrieved parties, and impressed by the arguments of the counsel, consented, whereupon the two animals were led before the Bench. The complaining witnesses and several other attendants of the bear-pit were asked to come down from their places and confront the bears.

Much to the consternation of everyone except the head keeper and his lawyer, one of the bears, showing his dislike for the attendant before him, moved menacingly towards his supposed defender in an effort to administer a savage cuff. The other attendants he paid no attention to whatsoever. The argument proved sufficient and the judge dismissed the complaint against the head keeper, who, followed by the two shuffling brutes, walked out of the court-room.

A WATER DRINKING PUBLIC MAN Two Quarts is Hon. Mr. Motherwell's Daily Allowance By V. M. Kipp

A grateful country has done fairly well for the Honorable W. R. Motherwell. As a young man trying to get along in the world he went to Saskatchewan from Lanark, the county of his birth, and prospered with his farm. He went into politics, was elected to the first Saskatchewan legislature in 1905, and held the portfolio of agriculture until 1918. Then the people who choose that body decided they could get along without Mr. Motherwell, and he stayed at home until 1921, when Reg'na sent him to the House of Commons and Mr. King took him to his bosom. It is true Mr. King had little choice in the matter of material from Western Canada for his cabinet, but the Premier made him Minister of Agriculture, and it might be ungenerous to enquire too closely into his reasons. Having survived the intervening elections Mr. Motherwell has continued to deserve the good will of his chief.

Successful cabinet ministers, from the administrative viewpoint as distinguished from the political, fall mainly within two classes. The first, and rarer, class includes men of outstanding ability as executives who bring much originality to the Cabinet, nor any great genius for policy and debate, he contributes an impeccable respectability which is well worth what he is paid. The Minister of Agriculture, we are told on reliable authority, drinks two quarts of water each day and for exercise, swings a chair about his head sixty times daily. Politically they both seem to be perfectly safe practices. Mr. Motherwell is 67 years old, and ought to be good for another score of years at least. If he does not end his days in the Senate of Canada we shall lose all our faith in signs and omens.

The Customs Commission is now investigating in Halifax. Among facts brought to light in Nova Scotia, it was shown that Demerara rum, 20,000 gallons in one cargo, was brought up to a point off the Nova Scotia coast about twelve miles from the town of Lunenburg last year by the schooner D. D. MacKenzie, and sold there to Canadian purchasers. The rum cost 46 cents a gallon in Georgetown, Demerara. It sold for $1.10 a gallon at the Nova Scotia coast. It was not declared, and no duty was paid on it. The duty is ten dollars a gallon.

The first, and rarer, class includes men of outstanding ability as executives who bring much originality to the Cabinet, nor any great genius for policy and debate, he contributes an impeccable respectability which is well worth what he is paid.

The Minister of Agriculture, we are told on reliable authority, drinks two quarts of water each day and for exercise, swings a chair about his head sixty times daily. Politically they both seem to be perfectly safe practices. Mr. Motherwell is 67 years old, and ought to be good for another score of years at least. If he does not end his days in the Senate of Canada we shall lose all our faith in signs and omens.

The Customs Commission is now investigating in Halifax. Among facts brought to light in Nova Scotia, it was shown that Demerara rum, 20,000 gallons in one cargo, was brought up to a point off the Nova Scotia coast about twelve miles from the town of Lunenburg last year by the schooner D. D. MacKenzie, and sold there to Canadian purchasers. The rum cost 46 cents a gallon in Georgetown, Demerara. It sold for $1.10 a gallon at the Nova Scotia coast. It was not declared, and no duty was paid on it. The duty is ten dollars a gallon.

CHAPTER XX

Inspector Raglan had received a bad jolt. He was not deceived by Blunt's valiant lie any more than he had been. Our way back to the village was punctuated by his complaints.

"This alters everything, this does, I don't know whether you've realized it, Monsieur Poirot."

"I think so, yes, I think so," said Poirot. "You tell me, I have been familiar with the idea for some time."

Inspector Raglan, who had only had the idea presented to him a short half-hour ago, looked at Poirot unhappily, and went on with his discoveries.

"Those things now. Worthless! Absolutely worthless. Got to start again. Find out what every one was doing from nine thirty onwards. Nine thirty—that's the time we've got to hang on to. You were quite right about the man Kent—we do not release him yet awhile. Let me see now—nine forty-five at the Dog and Whistle. He might have got there in a quarter of an hour if he ran. It's just possible that it was his voice Mr. Raymond heard talking to Mr. Ackroyd—asking for money which Mr. Ackroyd refused. But one thing's clear—it wasn't he who sent the telephone message. The station is half a mile and the other direction—over a mile and a half from the Dog and Whistle, and he was at the Dog and Whistle until about ten minutes past ten. Dang that telephone call! We always come up against it."

"We do indeed," agreed Poirot. "It is curious."

"It's just possible that if Captain Paton climbed into his uncle's room and found there murdered, he may have sent it. Got the wind up, thought he'd be accused, and cleared out. That's possible, isn't it?"

"Why should he have telephoned?"

"May have had doubts if the old man was really dead. Thought he'd get the doctor up there as soon as possible, but didn't want to give himself away. Yes, I say now, how is that for a theory? Something in that, I should say."

The inspector swelled his chest out importantly. He was so plainly delighted with himself that any words of ours would have been quite superfluous.

We arrived back at my house at this minute, and I hurried in to my surgery patients, who had all been waiting a considerable time, leaving Poirot to walk to the police station with the inspector.

Having dismissed the last patient, I strolled into the little room at the back of the house which I call my workshop—I am rather proud of the home-made wireless set I turned out. Caroline hates my workshop. I keep my tools there, and Annie is not allowed to wreak havoc with a dustpan and brush. I was just adjusting the interior of an alarm clock which had been denounced as wholly unreliable by the household, when the door opened and Caroline put her head in.

"Oh! there you are, James," she said, with deep disapproval. "M. Poirot wants to see you."

"Well," I said, rather irritably, for her sudden entrance had startled me and I had let go of a delicate mechanism "if he wants to see me, he can come in here."

"In here?" said Caroline. "That's what I said—in here."

Caroline gave a sniff of disapproval and retired. She returned in a moment or two, ushering in Poirot, and then retired again, shutting the door with a bang.

"Ah! my friend," said Poirot, coming forward and rubbing his hands. "You have not got rid of me so easily, you see!"

"Finished with the inspector?" I asked.

"For the moment, yes. And you, you have seen all the patients?"

"Yes."

Poirot sat down and looked at me, tilting his egg-shaped head on one side, with the air of one who savors a very delicious joke.

"You are in error," he said at last. "You have still one patient to see."

"Not you?" I exclaimed in surprise.

"Ah, not me, bien entendu. Me, I have the health magnificent. No, to tell you the truth, it is a little complaint of mine. There is some one I wish to see, you understand—and at the same time it is not necessary that the whole village should intrigue itself about the matter—which is what would happen if the lady were seen to come to my house—for it is a lady. But to you she has already come as a patient before."

"Miss Russell?" I exclaimed.

"Precisément. I wish much to speak with her, so I send her the little note and make the appointment in your surgery. You are not annoyed with me?"

"On the contrary," I said. "That is, presuming I am allowed to be present at the interview?"

"But naturally! In your own surgery!"

"You know," I said, throwing down the pencil. I was holding. "It's extraordinarily intriguing, the whole thing. Every new development that arises is like the shake you give to a kaleidoscope—the thing changes entirely in aspect. Now, why are you so anxious to see Miss Russell?"

Poirot raised his eyebrows. "Surely it is obvious?" he murmured.

"There you go again," I grumbled. "According to you everything is obvious. But you leave me walking about in a fog."

Poirot shook his head genially at me. "You mock yourself at me. Take the matter of Mademoiselle Flora. The inspector was surprised—but you were not."

"I never dreamed of her being the thief," I expostulated.

"That—perhaps not. But I was watching your face and you were not—like Inspector Raglan—startled and incredulous."

I thought for a minute or two. "Perhaps you are right," I said at last. "All along I felt that Flora was keeping back something—so the truth, when it came, was subconsciously expected. It upset Inspector Raglan very much indeed, poor man."

"Ah! poor Flora!" The poor man must rearrange all his ideas. I profited by his state of mental chaos to induce him to grant me a little favor."

"What was that?"

Poirot took a sheet of notepaper from his pocket. Some words were written on it, and he read them aloud.

"The police have, for some days, been seeking for Captain Ralph Paton, the nephew of Mr. Ackroyd of Ferny Park, whose death occurred under such tragic circumstances last Friday. Captain Paton has been found at Liverpool, where he was on the point of embarking for America."

He folded up the piece of paper again. "That, my friend, will be in the newspapers tomorrow morning."

I stared at him, dumbfounded.

"But—but it isn't true! He's not at Liverpool!"

Poirot beamed on me. "You have the intelligence so quick! No, he has not been found at Liverpool. Inspector Raglan was very loath to let me send this paragraph to the press, especially as I could not take him into my confidence. But I assured him most solemnly that very interesting results would follow its appearance in print, so he gave in, after stipulating that he was, on no account, to hear of the responsibility."

I stared at Poirot. He smiled back at me.

"It beats me," I said at last. "What you expect to get out of that?"

"You should employ your little gray cells," said Poirot gravely. "He rose and came across to the bench. 'It is that you have really the love of the machinery,' he said, after inspecting the debris of my labors."

Every man has his hobby. I immediately drew Poirot's attention to my home-made wireless. Finding him sympathetic, I showed him one or two little inventions of my own—trifling things, but useful in the house.

"Decidedly," said Poirot. "you should be an inventor by trade, not a doctor. But I hear the bell—that is your patient. Let us go into the surgery."

Once before I had been struck by the remnants of beauty in the housekeeper's face. This morning I was struck anew. Very simply dressed in black, tall, upright and independent as ever, with her big dark eyes and an unwonted flush of color in her usually pale cheeks, I realized that as a girl she must have been startlingly handsome.

"Good morning, mademoiselle," said Poirot. "Will you be seated? Dr. Sheppard is so kind as to permit me the use of his surgery for a little conversation I am anxious to have with you."

Miss Russell sat down with her usual composure. If she felt any inward agitation, it did not display itself in any outward manifestation.

"It seems a queer way of doing things if you'll allow me to say so," she remarked.

"Miss Russell—I have news to give you."

"Charles Kent has been arrested at Liverpool."

Not a muscle of her face moved. She merely opened her eyes a trifle wider, and asked, with a tinge of defiance: "What, what of it?"

But at that moment it came to me—the resemblance that had haunted me all along, something familiar in the defiance of Charles Kent's manner. The two voices, one rough and coarse, the other painfully ladylike—were strangely the same in timbre. It was of Miss Russell that I had been reminded that night outside the gates of Ferny Park. I looked at Poirot, full of my discovery, and he gave me an imperceptible nod.

In answer to Miss Russell's question, he threw out his hands in a thoroughly French gesture.

"I thought you might be interested, that is all," he said mildly.

"Well, I'm not particularly," said Miss Russell. "Who is this Charles Kent anyway?"

"He is a man, mademoiselle, who was at Ferny on the night of the murder."

"Really?"

"Fortunately for him, he has an alibi. At a quarter to ten he was at a public-house a mile from here."

"Lucky for him," commented Miss Russell.

"But we still do not know what he was doing at Ferny—who it was he went to meet, for instance."

"I'm afraid I can't help you at all," said the housekeeper politely. "Nothing came to my ears. If that is all—"

She made a tentative movement as though to rise. Poirot stopped her. "It is not quite all," he said smoothly. "This morning fresh developments have arisen. It seems now that Mr. Ackroyd was murdered, not at a quarter to ten, but before. Between ten minutes to nine, when Dr. Sheppard left, and a quarter to ten."

I saw the color drain from the housekeeper's face, leaving it dead white. She leaned forward, her figure swaying.

"But Miss Ackroyd said—Miss Ackroyd said—"

"Miss Ackroyd has admitted she was lying. She was never in the study at all that evening."

"Then it would seem that in this Charles Kent we have the man we are looking for. He came to Ferny, can give no account of what he was doing there—"

"I can tell you what he was doing there. He never touched a hair of old Ackroyd's head—he never went near the study. He didn't do it, I tell you."

She was leaning forward. That iron self-control was broken thru at last. Terror and desperation were in her face.

"M. Poirot! M. Poirot! Oh, do believe me."

Poirot got up and came to her. He patted her reassuringly on the shoulder. "But yes—but yes, I will believe. I had to make you speak, you know."

For an instant suspicion flared up in her. "Is what you said true?"

"That Charles Kent is suspected of the crime? Yes, that is true. You alone can save him, by telling the reason for his being at Ferny."

"He came to see me," she spoke in a low, hurried voice. "I went out to meet him."

"In the summer-house, yes, I know."

"How do you know?"

"Mademoiselle, it is the business of Hercule Poirot to know things. I know that you went out on a night in the evening, that you left a message in the summer-house to say what time you would be there."

"Yes, I did. I had heard from him—saying he was coming. I dared not let him come to the house. I wrote to the address he gave me and said I would meet him in the summer-house, and described it to him so that he would be able to find it. Then I was afraid he might not wait there patiently, and I ran out and left a piece of paper to say I would be there about ten minutes past nine. I didn't want the servants to see me, so I slipped out through the drawing-room window. As I came back, I met Dr. Sheppard, and I fancied that he would think it queer. I was out of breath, for I had been running. I had no idea that he was expected that night."

She paused.

"Go on," said Poirot. "You went out to meet him at ten minutes past nine. What did you say to each other?"

"It's difficult, you see—"

"Mademoiselle," said Poirot, interrupting her. "In this matter I must have the whole truth. What you tell us need never go beyond these four walls. Dr. Sheppard will be discreet, and so shall I. See, I will help you. This Charles Kent, he is your son, is he not?"

She nodded. The color had flamed into her cheeks.

"No one has ever known. It was long ago—long ago—down in Kent. I was not married. . . ."

"So you took the name of the county as a surname for him. I understand."

"I got work. I managed to pay for his board and lodging. I never told him that I was his mother. But he turned out badly, he drank, then took to drugs. I managed to pay his passage out to Canada. I didn't hear of him for a year or two. Then, somehow or other, he found out that I was his mother. He wrote asking me for money. Finally, I heard from him back in this country again. He was coming to see me at Ferny, he said. I dared not let him come to the house. I have always been considerably so—very respectable. If any one got an inkling—it would have been all up with my post as housekeeper. So I wrote to him in the way I have just told you."

"And in the morning you came to see Dr. Sheppard?"

"Yes, I wondered if something could be done. He was not a bad boy—before he took to drugs."

"I see," said Poirot. "Now let us go on with the story. He came that night to the summer-house?"

"Yes, he was waiting for me when I got there. He was very rough and abusive. I had brought with me all the money I had, and I gave it to him. We talked a little, and then he went away."

"What time was that?"

"It must have been between twenty and twenty-five minutes past nine. It was not yet half-past when I got back to the house."

"Which way did he go?"

"Straight out the same way he came, by the path that joined the drive just inside the lodge gates."

Poirot nodded.

"And you, what did you do?"

"I went back to the house. Major Blunt was walking up and down the terrace smoking, so I made a detour to get round to the side door. It was then just on half-past nine, as I tell you."

Poirot nodded again. He made a note or two in a microscopic pocket-book.

"I think that is all," he said thoughtfully.

"Ought I to tell all this to Inspector Raglan?"

"It may come to that. But let us not be in a hurry. Let us proceed slowly, with due order and method. Charles Kent is not formally charged with murder. Circumstances may arise which will render your story unnecessary."

Miss Russell rose. "Thank you very much, M. Poirot," she said. "You have been very kind—very kind indeed. You—you do believe me, don't you? That Charles had nothing to do with this wicked murder?"

"There seems to be no doubt that the man who was talking to Mr. Ackroyd in the library at nine thirty could not possibly have been your son. Be of good courage, mademoiselle. All will yet be well."

Miss Russell departed. Poirot and I were left together.

"So that's that," I said. "Every time we come back to Ralph Paton. How did you manage to spot Miss Russell as the person Charles Kent came to meet? Did you notice the resemblance?"

"I had connected her with the unknown man long before we actually came face to face with him. As soon as we found that quill. The quill suggested dope, and I remembered your account of Miss Russell's visit to you. Then I found the article on cocaine in that morning's paper. It all seemed very clear. She had heard from some one that morning—some one addicted to drugs, she read the article in the paper, and she came to you to ask a few tentative questions. She mentioned cocaine, since the article in question was on cocaine."

The Saturday night congestion of traffic on our Main Street now demands that some traffic regulation be put into force that will deal with the parking of autos. One hesitates to advocate parking on one side of street only or to say no parking at all where the street is narrow, but we would caution the drivers of autos to be considerate of others and park their cars close to the curb, placed so that they can get away easily when desired and yet not waste space.

NOVEL SHIP WILL VISIT ST. LAWRENCE

Tests conducted with a model in the Seine by the engineer, Adrien Remy of Cherbourg, France, inventor of what has been christened a "hydroglider torpedo boat," were pronounced successful, and, with a crew of five, Remy declared that he would make a transatlantic trip in a model craft, leaving Paris about August 15.

The hydroglider is essentially a war-engine, constructed throughout with armor plate, presenting only a small surface above the water, carrying two torpedoes, a small cannon and two machine guns. Its principal peculiarity is that it has no rudder, but its movements are controlled through changes in the position of its three groups of engines, which are built in movable towers and can be controlled from the navigator's quarters. The ship is built on two hulls, bridged across with armor plated cabins and continued in far-reaching sides like wings, on which the entire ship is raised almost to the surface of the water like a hydroplane. The engineer claims that a speed of 40 knots an hour can be maintained.

The ship still to be completed, was named R-28, and will make a trip from Paris to New York later, going via Canada up the St. Lawrence.

Mr. Brown: "Good morning, Mr. Jones, how's your wife?"

Mr. Jones (who was deaf and thought a remark had been made about the weather): "Very blustering and disagreeable, again, this morning."

BOYS BUILD PLANE FOR $600

Saugus, Mass., July 17.—A home made airplane built in a back yard at a cost of $600 made a successful flight from the race track here today. The two youths who turned out the plane will use it they said, for fun only.

Charles Hill of Melrose, an automobile mechanic, and Michael Morand of Lynn, a tool maker, learned to fly a year ago and decided to have a plane of their own. They obtained a design and went to work in their spare time in Hill's back yard. Today when the finished product was taken to the race track for a tryout series of interested neighbors followed to see the trial flight. In landing Hill, who piloted the plane, injured the propeller slightly when a wheel struck a rut.

The machine, described as a Heath-Parasol light sport plane, weighs 300 pounds, has a wing spread of 23 feet and is 16 feet over all. It has a 22 horse power motorcycle engine and a four gallon gasoline tank. Its cruising radius 150 miles.

ST. AGNES

On Sunday last, the 17th, of this month the Parish of Saint Agnes experienced a great joy. Our Pastor had the great pleasure to have with him the two brothers, the Reverend Fathers William and Harold Murphy, both members of the Order of the Holy Cross. Reverend Father Harold Murphy sang His First High Mass on that day. He was assisted by his brother William as a deacon and by our Pastor as a sub-deacon. The sermon was delivered in French and English by Father William who is to leave in September for India, where he will be a missionary amongst the Bengalese.

The altar boys were specially trained for the occasion and wore their red insignia. The master of ceremonies was Willie Rivier, the incense-bearer Anicet Lalupier, the acolytes Raymond Smythe and Ernest Demers, the torch-bearers Louis Lalupier, Lester Leblanc, Elie Léger and Horatius Gervais.

The altars were beautifully decorated with roses, a gift of our Pastor's mother. The choir executed a nice program. A duet recalling the first Mass a priest was sung by Miss Gertrude Rivier and Miss Alma Thibault. At the Offertory Mrs. Alphonse Leblanc, directress of the choir and Miss Lucy Quenneville sang the "Ave Verum" of L. Bordes; the other soloists were Mr. Alexis Quenneville and Mr. Edmond Quenneville. Mrs. Alexis Quenneville played the organ.

At noon a banquet was offered to the two young priests by Rev. Father David Murphy, their father and mother, Sister Alexandra, their aunt, Sister St. Austin, their sister, Mrs. Arsène David, their mother, Sister Josephine Arsène, and Miss Ida David, his sister, Sister Helen and Mrs. Thos. Fallon, friends of the family. In the evening a dinner was served at Mr. Arthur Murphy's home. The whole family and many friends enjoyed the nice reception and the hearty meal served. After dinner Father David and the members of the family entertained the guests with singing, recitations and music. There were present: Rev. Father J. A. David, pastor, his brother, Mr. Arsène David, his sisters, Ida David and Sister Josephine Arsène, Rev. Fathers William and Harold Murphy, their brothers and sisters, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Murphy, Mrs. D. Stowell (Mary) from Seattle, Wash., her two children Blanche and Roy; Rev. nurse at Malone, N.
