AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.
No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs: none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.
"In 1857 I took a severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continued use of the PECTORAL a permanent cure was effected. I am now 62 years old, hale and hearty, and am satisfied your CHERRY PECTORAL saved me.
HORACE FAIRBROTHER."
Rockingham, Vt., July 15, 1882.

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.
"While in the country last winter my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with croup; it seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried in small and frequent doses, and to our delight in less than half an hour the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the CHERRY PECTORAL had saved my darling's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude? Sincerely yours,
MRS. EMMA GEDNEY."
159 West 128th St., New York, May 16, 1882.
"I have used AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the most effectual remedy for coughs and colds we have ever tried. A. J. CRANE."
Lake Crystal, Minn., March 13, 1882.
"I suffered for eight years from Bronchitis, and after trying many remedies with no success, I was cured by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. JOSEPH WALDEN."
Byhalia, Miss., April 5, 1882.
"I cannot say enough in praise of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, believing as I do that but for its use I should long since have died from lung troubles. E. BRAGDON."
Palestine, Texas, April 22, 1882.
No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

Poetry.

The Irish Immigrant Girl.

A young Irish immigrant girl remarkable for her beauty died recently at Mr. ——— 3rd con, ——— of a fever she contracted on the voyage out. Her last words were "Gerald darlin'."—

For death had struck the Irish girl and dimmed her azure eyes,
So soft and blue, just like the hue of Erin's summer skies,
As she lay tossing on the bed, her splendid golden hair
Shone like a halo round her head, as she lay dying there.
She knew no more the stranger's face, she knew not where she lay,
But cried aloud for home and friends, the weary night and day.
Ah! it would touch a heart of stone to hear the maiden's cry,
"Oh, take me back where shamrocks grow and lay me down to die;
Oh, Gerald darlin', where are you, come to my side, asthore,
And fold your arms around me neck and kiss me lips once more.
Why did I lave you, Gerald dear, to come so far away,
And lave you there behind me love, beyond the cruel say?
Me eyes are filled with scaldin' tears and me heart is sad and sore,
Me soul is yearnin' for your voice, Oh! call me 'love' once more;
Oh! fold me closer, Gerald dear, close to your faithful heart,
For something cold and awful drear, drags you and me apart,
Oh, hold me closer, tighter yet, and whisper as of yore,
How much you love your colleen bawn, and we shall part no more.
For I can hear the Shannon rush, 'mid hedges thick and green;
And I can hear the wee birds sing amid the hawthorn tree,
Where first you took me in your arms and plighted troth to me,
The rose you gave me on that night and twined amid my hair.
'Tis lying now close to my heart, ah, you can find it there,
It's growing dark, my Gerald dear, and I can see no more,
And we must part till morning, love, then kiss me once, as thore,
And when the little birds to God their vesper hymns have sung
Then you can lead me by the hand the meadows green among
And you can put a shamrock wreath around your Kathleen's head,
Then good-by Gerald darlin'," the Irish girl was dead.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE CHILDREN'S GREAT-UNCLE.

It was a very few days after this that, the morning being very bright and sunshiny, the little maid, Anne, determined to give Daisy and the baby a long morning in the Park. Mrs. Home was expected back in a few days. Harold was very much better, and Anne, being a faithful and loving little soul, was extremely anxious that Daisy and the baby should show as rosy faces as possible to greet their mother's return. Hinton, who still occupied the drawing-rooms, was absent, as usual, for the day. Mr. Home would not come in until tea-time. So Anne, putting some dinner for the children and herself in the back of the perambulator, and the house latch-key in her pocket, started off to have what she called to Daisy a "picnic in the park."

The baby was now nearly ten months old. His beauty had increased with his growing months, and many people turned to look at the lovely little fellow as Anne gayly wheeled him along. He had a great deal of hair, which showed in soft, gold rings under his cap, and his eyes, large and gentle as a gazelle's looked calmly out of his innocent face. Daisy, too, was quite pretty enough to come in for her share of admiration, and Anne felt proud of both her little charges.

Reaching the park, she wheeled the perambulator under the shade of a great tree, and, sitting down herself on a bench, took little Angus in her arms. Daisy scampered about and inquired when her namesakes, the starry daisies of the field, would be there for her to gather.

As the little child played and shouted with delight, and the baby and small maid looked on, a stout, florid-faced man of foreign appearance, passing slowly by, was attracted by the picturesque group. Daisy had flung off her shabby little hat. Her bright hair was in wild confusion. Her gray eyes looked black beneath their dark lashes. Running full tilt across the stranger's path, she suddenly stumbled and fell. He stooped to pick her up. She scarcely thanked him, but flew back to Anne. The foreign-looking man, however, stood still. Daisy's piquant little face had caused him to start and change color.

"Good gracious! what a likeness," he exclaimed, and he turned and sat down on the bench beside Anne and the baby.

"I hope the little thing didn't get hurt by that fall," he said to the small maid.

Anne, who was accustomed to having all admiration bestowed on her baby, replied brifly that missy was right enough.

As she spoke she turned baby Angus round so that the stianger might see his radiant little face. The dark eys, however, of the pretty boy had no attraction for the man. He still watched Daisy, who had resumed her amusements at a little distance.

Anne, had perceived that Daisy had attracted the stranger's admiration, was determined to stay to watch the play out. She pretended to amuse little Angus, but her eye took futive glances at the foreign-looking man. Presently Daisy, who was not at all shy, came up.

'You never thanked me for picking you up from the ground,' said the stranger to the little girl.

Four-year-old Daisy turned up her eyes to his face.

'I wor so busy,' she apologized. 'Tank 'ou now.'

The light on her face, her very expression, caused this rough-looking man's heart to beat strangely. He held out his hand. Daisy put her soft little palm into his.

'Come and sit on my knee,' he said.

Daisy accepted the invitation with alacrity. She dearly liked attention, and it was not with baby by, that she came in for the lion's share.

'What a funny red beard 'ou have!' she said, putting up her small fingers to touch it delicately.

This action, however, scandalized Anie, who, awakening to a sudden sense of her responsibilities, rose to depart.

'Come along, Miss Daisy,' she exclaimed; 'tis time we were moving home, and you mustn't trouble the gentleman no further.'

'I s'ant go home, and I will stay,' responded Daisy, her face growing very red as she clung to her new friend. The man put his arm round her in delight.

'Sit down, my girl,' he said, addressing Anne; 'the little miss is not troubling me. Quite the contrary, she reminds me of a little lassy I used to know once, and she had the same name too, Daisy. Daisy Wilson was her name. Now, this little kid is so like her that I shouldn't a bit wonder if she was a relation—perhaps her daughter. Shall I tell you what your two names are, little one?'

Daisy nodded her head and looked up expectantly. Anne, hoping no harm was done, and devoured with curiosity, resumed her seat.

'Your mamma's name was Daisy Wilson. You are her dear little daughter, and your name is Daisy Harman. Well, I'm right, ain't I?' The man's face was now crimson, and he only waited for Daisy's reply to clasp her to his breast. But Daisy in high delight at his mistake, clapped her little hands.

'No, no,' she said, 'you're quite wrong. Guess again, again.'

Instantly his interest died out. He pushed the child a trifle away, and said, 'I made a mistake. I can't guess.'

'I'm Daisy Home,' replied Daisy, 'and my mamma was never no Daisy Wilson. Her name is Sarlotte Home.'

The stranger put Daisy gently from his lap, and the discovery which was to affect so many people might never have been made but for Anne. But Anne, who read the Family Herald, was burning with anxiety and wonder. Many kinds of visions were flashing before her romantic young eyes. This man might be very rich—very, very rich. He must have something to say to them all. She had long identified herself with the Home family. This man was coming to give them gold in abundance. He was not so beautiful to look at, but he might be just as valuable as the pretty lady of Harold's dreams. That pretty lady had not come back, though Anne had almost prayed for her return. Yes, she was sure this man was a relation.

It was highly probable. Such things were always happening in the Family Herald. Raising her shrill, high-pitched voice, she exclaimed:

"Miss Daisy, you're too young to know, or may be you furgets. But I think the gentleman is near right. Yer mamma's name wos Harman afore she married yer papa, missy, and I ha' seen for sure and certain in some old books at the house the name o' Daisy Wilson writ down as plain as could be, so may be that wor yer grandma's name afore she married too."

At these words the stranger caught Daisy up and kissed her.

"I thought that little face could only belong to one related to Daisy Wilson," he said. "Little one, put yer arms round me. I'm your great-uncle—your great-uncle! I never thought that Daisy Wilson could have a daughter married, and that that daughter could have little ones of her own. Well, well, well, how time does fly! I'm your grandmother's brother—Sandy Wilson, home from Australia, my little pet; and when shall I see you all? It does my old heart good to see my sister over again in a little thing like you."

"My great-uncle?" repeated Daisy. She was an affectionate little thing, and the man's agitation and delight so far touched her baby heart as to induce her to give him one very slight, dainty kiss. The she sidled down to the ground.

"Ef you please, sir," said Anne again, who felt absolutely certain that she had now made the fortune of her family, and who thought that that fact ought to be recognized—"ef you please, sir, 'tis but right as you should know as my missis's mother have long bin dead. My missis as is her living model is away, and won't be back afore Thursday. She's down by the seaside wid Master Harold, wot 'ad the scarlet fever, and wor like to die; and the family address, please sir, is 10, Tremins Road, Kentish Town."

At the news of his sister's death so curtly announced by Anne, the man's rough, weather-beaten face grew white. He did not touch Daisy again, or even look at little Angus; but going up to Anne, he slipped a sovereigh into her hand.

"Take those children safely home now," he said; "the day is turning chilly, and—and—thank you for what you told me of, my good lass. I'll come and see your missis on Thursday night."

Then, without another word, he hurried away.

Quickly this big, rough man, who had nearly knocked down Jasper Harman the night before, hurried through the park. The exultation had died out of his face; his heart had ceased to beat wildly. Little Daisy's pretty figure was still before his eyes; but, weather-beaten and life-beaten man that he was, he found himself looking at it through a mist of tears.

"'Tis a bit of a shock," he said to himself. "I'll take it quietly, of course. Sandy Wilson learned long ago to take everything quietly; but it's a rare bit of a shock. I never guessed as my little Daisy would die. Five-and-twenty years since we met, and all that time I've never once clasped the hand of a blood-relation—never had one belonging to me. I thought I was coming back to Daisy, and Daisy has died. She was very young to die—quite five years younger than me. A pretty, pretty lass; the little 'un is her image. How odd I should have knocked up against Daisy's grandchild, and should find her out by the likeness. Well, well, I'll call at 10 Tremins Road. I'll call, of course; not that I care much now, as my little sister Daisy Wilson, is dead."

He pressed his hand before his eyes; they felt weak and dim. The rough man had got a considerable shock; he did not care to look at London sights again to-day; he returned to the Commercial Hotel in the Strand, where for the present he was staying.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

CUT OFF WITH A SHILLING.

Never was a little maid-of-all-work more excited than Anne on the night on which her mistress was expected home from Torquay. A secret—quite a great secret—had been burning a hole in her heart ever since Monday, and to-night she expected this secret to result in somewhat grand. Anne felt that the days of poverty for the family were over. the days for scraping and toiling were at an end. The uncle from Australia would give her misses everything that money could buy; he must be a very rich man indeed, for had he not given her a sovereign? Whoever before had ever dreamed of giving little hard-worked Anne a sovereign? It meant unheard of wealth to this childish soul of sixteen; it filled her with delight, and, carefully put away in a little gingham bag, it lay golden and warm now against her heart.

But Anne's honest little heart had another less selfish cause for rejoicing. It was she who was bringing this uncle and niece to meet again; but for her prompt interference Daisy and her great-uncle would never have discovered their relationship; but for her the uncle, so blessed with riches, would not have known where to seek for his niece. In a big place like London was it likely, was it at all likely, that they would meet? No, no, he would look for his poor dead sister for a little while, and then go back to Australia, and perhaps give his money to some one else. Anne felt that the family owed her a great deal, but she had full confidence in them; and felt sure that in their rise in life they would not forget her. Misses could keep plenty of servants now; she would have a cook and a housemaid, and probably some one to help in the nursery. This was what a family whom Anne thought immensely wealthy did in a house just round the corner. In that case she, Anne, would be promoted to the proud position of head nurse—head nurse with wages—well, say wages as high as £13 a year. Even to think of being raised to so dazzling a height made Anne's head a trifle giddy. On the strength of it, and all the riches in prospect, she became quite reckless in preparing misses's tea. She put out the best table linen, and all the silver the house posessed, and she filled a great dish with water-cresses, and had hot buttered scones and a seed-cake and eggs—rather fresh for London—and finally half a pound of sliced ham.

She was standing contemplating her well-laden board when the cab drove up, and out stepped her master and mistress and little Harold—Harold looking white and thin even yet, but still with an altogether improved expression on his little face. Anne was so excited, knowing all that was to come, that she caught Harold up in her arms and kissed him, which proceeding he bore with more patience than appreciation. Then ensued bustle and confusion and pleasant excitement.

Charlotte Home felt so well and rested from her change, her husband was so delighted to get her back, and little Harold was so manifestly better, that Anne flew about nearly wild with delight. 'They'll be a deal, deal 'appier by-and-by, and 'tis h'all 'long of H'Anne,' she kept whispering to herself.

And now, tea being over, and Harold tucked up comfortably once more in his own little cot in the nursery, the small maid began to be devoured with impatience for the expected ring. It came at last; Anne with her own hands unfastened the door, showed the rich uncle into the dining-room, and danced upstairs to find her mistress.

Charlotte Home was unpacking a trunk in her own room.

'What do you say, Anne? A gentleman down-stairs, and wants to see me? But I am so dreadfully busy. What does he want? Do you think he has come about the drawing-rooms? They will be vacant next week.'

'I don't think 'tis about the drawing-rooms, 'em,' answered Anne, as demurely as she could speak. 'I aven't put no card h'up yet. He looks a most benevolent gen'leman, and he axedfur you, yer h'own selt, 'em, most partic'lar bad.'

"I wish he had not come this evening, everything is in such confusion. Anne, are you sure your master is out?"

"Yes, 'em, sure and certain; and, ef you please, 'em, it wor fur you as the strange gentleman axed."

"Well, I suppose I must go down. He may have heard of the drawing-rooms through Mr. Hinton, and it would not do to lose a good lodger."

Charlotte went to the looking glass to smooth her hair. She felt travel-stained and dusty; she was only a worn, pale-looking woman at the best of times. She ran down-stairs, and Anne's heart beat as she heard the dining-room door shut behind her.

Mr. Wilson—Sandy Wilson as he preferred to be called—had got himself with due care for his interview with his niece. He had a perfectly new and shining broad-cloth suit on, a diamond pin was in his necktie, and a very massive gold chain could be seen dangling from his vest-pocket. His full face, always florid, was now flushed with extra color from agitation. Yes, Daisy might be dead, but the next best thing was to see Daisy's child. When the door opened he came forward eegerly, with outstretched hands, A pale, slight, cold-looking woman had come in. He drew back in dismay. She showed but too plainly by one swift glance that she thought him a stranger, and a vulgar one. He owned to himself that he looked at her with a kind of shock. This Daisy Wilson's daughter? This pale, dark, thin woman, the child of that little, bright, curly-locked, golden-headed sister, whose face was as the sun, whose gay, rounded figure he had seen flitting before his eyes during all the weary years of his exile? It could scarcely be possible. Perhaps it was not possible?

'I have come to see Mrs. Home,' he began.

'And I am Mrs. Home,' answered the distinct, quiet voice.

No, there was no hope: his Daisy's daughter was not in the least like her. Well, she was at least her child. He must take what comfort he could out of the relationship without the likeness.

'You are Daisy Wilson's child?' he said, and now again his hands were outstreched, and the smiles had returned to his face.

But Mrs. Home, completely in the dark, rather startled than otherwise, made no gesture of welcome. Her hands were not held out, her lips remained unsmiling.

'My mother's name was Wilson,' she admited. 'Yes, it was Daisy Wilson. I did not recognize it at first, as of course she never called it to me.'

'Ay, ay, likely enough; but she was never anything else to me, just always little, bright, Daisy Wilson. I thought I'd find her before me, something as she used to be, a bit stoutened, perhaps, but not greatly altered. I have pictured her last, the bonniest bit of a thing the sun ever shone on.'

'You knew my mother, then?' said Charlotte.

'Knew her, lass, knew her! good heavens, what next? Did Daisy never speak to you about me? I don't believe it. Before I left it was 'Sandy, Sandy, from morning to night. It was not in her to forget. Tell me, lass, did you never hear of your mother's big brother, Sandy Wilson, who went to Australia?'

Charlotte's eyes began to dilate.

'My mother often spoke of this brother,' she said, slowly. 'My mother would have liked to have met you had you known him. She never fretted for any one so much, except when my father died. My mother's brother is dead for many, many years. They are together now.'

'In spirit, lass, in spirit, I doubt not, but not otherwise. Why, is it possible you don't know me? Aren't you prepared? Did not your little lass tell you? I am your mother's brother. I am alive as you see; I am Sandy Wilson.'

'You!' Charlotte looked at him half incredulous, half pained; but then a sudden joy came over her, she forgot the vulgarity in the love for her dead mother which still shone out of those honest blue eyes. She glanced up again; those eyes were her mother's eyes; instantly they acted as open sesame to her heart. She held out her own hands now and her eyes filled with tears. 'Forgive me, Uncle Sandy; if you are indeed he. I did not know you, I could not know you; I have believed you dead for many, many years. But you have a look of my mother. She would welcome you to night, so I must in her name.

'Will you kiss me in her name, my lassy? Ah! that's good; 'tis long since I kissed one of my own. Yes, I've come back. I never did die, you see, though I knew that the report had reached England. I let it be, I did not trouble to contradict it.'

'But it was wrong of you, UncleSandy. You said you loved my mother, and report of your death gave her terrible pain.

'I am sorry for it, lass; I never guessed about the pain, though I might have thought of it, sweet soul; but I knew she was married to a very rich man. I was poor, so poor as to know what hunger was—I thought she could do without me. I went into the bush and staid there until I had made my fortune. After a while I got accustomed o knowing that every one in England would think me dead. I used to laugh in my sleeve at the surprise I meant to give Daisy when I walked in aich some day. Well, well, what an old fool I made of myself! I never once thought of her dying. She is dead, and I am left; there is no one to welcome me back, after all.'

'She has been dead for over six years now; but come to the fire uncle. I welcome you in my mother's name, and my children will love you. Now you must sit there and I will ring for Anne to bring some tea.'

After this the uncle and niece talked together for some time. Anne brought in some tea, and looked at them with eyes rendered round and large with excitement. They both nodded to her, for they felt pleased. Uncle Sandy had discovered that his niece had a voice like her mother, it not a face. It was delicious for him to sit so close to his own flesh and blood, and Charlotte, who had heard of UncleSandy during all her early days, who had seen her mother's eyes filled with tears when she mentioned him, felt now that for her mother's sake she could not make enough of this newly recovered relation. His rough, honest, kindly nature was finding its way too, very straight to her heart. There was nothing innately common or vulger about Uncle Sandy. Charlotte was a keen observer of character, and she deteced the true metal within.

'To think I should have mistaken my uncle for some one going to see after the drawing-room!' she said, after a pause.

'Ay, lass, you looked fairly dazed when I came up with my hand stretched out, hoping for a kiss,' he said; 'but no wonder: I never reckoned that that little maid-servant of yours would have told you nothing—nothing whatever. But what is it about drawing-rooms? You don't mean to tell me that you, Daisy Wilson's child let lodgings?'

The color flew into Charlotte's pale, proud face.

'We do not need all the room in the house, so I generally have some one in the drawing-room,' she answered, 'the drawing-room and bed-room beyond.'

'Are your rooms free now, Charlotte?'

'No; but in a week they will be.'

'Suppose you let the old uncle have them? I will pay any rent you like to ask. The fact is, I have lost my whole heart to that little Daisy of yours. I want to be near the child. I won't spoil her more than I can help.'

'Then I was called down to my drawing room lodger,' answered Charlotte, with a faint, sweet smile.

'Yes, and I don't expect he'll want to leave in a hurry. The fact is, I have been so utterly friendless and homeless for such a number of years, that it is nearly as good as finding Daisy to be with her child. But, my dear lass, you will forgive a frank old man asking you a frank question. It's all moonshine about the house being too big for you. These houses are not so monstrous, to judge by the looks of them. You have three children, so you tell me; if you let two rooms you must be a bit crippled, put on as good a face as you will.'

'We also want the money. The want of the help this brings in, in the matter of rent, is our true reason for letting,' replied Charlotte. 'You see, Uncle Sandy, my husband is a clergyman—a clergyman and curate. Such men are never overburdened with money.'

Sandy Wilson had small, penetrating, but very bright blue eyes; they were fixed now earnestly on his niece. He took a glance round the little parlor where they sat. He was an old Australian, accustomed to bush life, but even he noticed how threadbare was the carpet, how poor and meagre the window-curtains. Charlotte herself, too, how thin and worn she was! Could those pale and hollow cheeks mean insufficient food?

'How old are you, Niece Charlotte, he suddenly demanded.

'I was twenty-five my last birthday.'

'Forgive me, my lass, you look very old for that; I should have taken you for thirty. The fact is, you are poor. Nothing ages like poverty. And the greater fact remains that it was full time for old Uncle Sandy to come home and prove himself of some use in the world.'

'We are poor,' answered Charlotte; 'we certainly are very poor. But poverty is not the greatest of trouble.'

'No, but it puzzles me why you should be poor. When I left my little sister, she had been married about three months to that rich old Mr. Harman. He seemed devoted to her. He had surrounded her with wealth; and he assured me, when I came to bid her good-by and she put her dear arms round my neck, that my little darling should never want for anything. He was a good old man, ages too old, of course, for my bright little Daisy. But it seemed better than leaving her as a governess. It was my one comfort when parting with Daisy, to feel that she could never want for anything that money could get her.'

'My mother has told me that during father's life she lived as rich a woman,' answered Charlotte.

'That means she did not afterward. Did the old gentleman die bankrupt? I don't see how he could, for he had retired from business.'

'No, my father died a very wealthy man.'

'Then he did not leave her well off? You don't surely mean to tell me, Charlotte Home, that the old man dared to do anything but leave a large sum of money to your pretty young mother and to you? Why, he told me with his own lips that he would make most ample provision for her.'

At these words Charlotte's white face grew yet whiter, and a piteous look of terror came into her eyes, but all she said was:

'Nevertheless, after my father's death we were poor.'

'Oh! the scoundrel! 'Tis well he's out of Sandy Wilson's power. To think of my Daisy not profiting by his wealth at least. How much did he leave to your mother, Charlotte?'

'Nothing.'

'Nothing!' Here Uncle Sandy sprang to his feet. 'Mr. Harman left my Daisy nothing—nothing whatever. Then he did die bankrupt?'

'No, Uncle Sandy, he died rich.'

'And her name was mentioned in the will?'

'No.'

'Ah! there was a will. Have you seen it?'

'No; why should I? It all happened long, long ago,' she replied.

'And your mother never saw the will?'

'I don't think she did.'

'Then to whom, may I ask, did he leave all his wealth?'

'You forget, Uncle Sandy, that my father was married before. He had two sons by his first marriage. These sons came in for his fortune. They were—they said the were—sorry for my mother and they settled on her one hundred and fifty pounds a year for her life.'

'Ay, I suppose you have got that pittance now?' he inquired.

'No, it was only for my mother, when she died, six years ago, it ceased.

Sandy Wilson began to pace up and down the little parlor.

'Nothing left to Daisy, name not mentioned in the will. Brothers sorry—pretend to be. Daisy's pittance for her life—nothing to the child. Charlotte,' he suddenly stopped in front of his niece, 'don't you think you are a good bit of a fool?'

'Perhaps I am, Uncle Sandy. But I never recognized the fact before.'

'You believe that story about the will?'

'I told you the tale as my own mother told it to me.'

'Ay, Daisy was always too credulous, a foolish little thing, if you like. But you,—you are of different metal. You believe that story?'

'I—I——Don't ask me, Uncle Sandy.

'You don't believe it?'

'If you will have it so, I do not believe it.'

'Ay, my lass, shake hands on that. You are not a fool. Oh! it was full time Sandy Wilson came home. Sandy can see to your rights, late as it is in the day.'

Mrs. Home was silent. The old Australian was stamping his feet on the hearth-rug. His face was now crimson from excitement and anger.

'Charlotte,' he repeated, 'why don't you speak to me? I have come back to see to your rights. Do you hear me, niece?'

'Charlotte put her hand into his.

'Thank you, Uncle Sandy.' Then she added, 'You can do nothing. I mean you can take no legal steps without my knowledge and sanction.'

'Well, it is not likely you will withhold your sanction from getting back what is your own. Charlotte, where are these half-brothers of yours? Why, they were a good bit older than Daisy. They must be old men now. Where are they, Charlotte? Are they alive?'

'They are alive. I will tell you all about them to-morrow. I want to think.'

'And so do I want to think. I will run away now, my dear niece. I am staggered by this tale, perfectly staggered. I will look in to-morrow evening, and you shall tell me more. Ay, I guess they never reckoned that Sandy Wilson would turn up. They thought, with the rest of you, that old Sandy—sharp old Sandy, was safe in his grave; and they said to themselves that dead men tell no tales. If I remember aright, your father told me I should be one of the trustees to my sister. He did mention it; though, just like me, I never thought of it until this minute. Is it likely that he would speak of trustees if he meant to cut off that poor darling with a shilling? Oh! it's preposterous, preposterous. But I'll sleep over it. We'll think how best to expose the villians!'

'Uncle Sandy, you will promise me one thing: you will do nothing until you see me again?'

'Well, child, I can scarcely do much. I don't want to be long away from you, Niece Charlotte. I'll look in to morrow, about six o'clock. See that little Daisy is up, and introduce me to your husband. Oh! it was plain to be seen that Sandy Wilson was wanting in this country. Bless my old heart, what a Providence is over everything! Oh, the scoundrels! But Sandy will expose them. My Daisy cut off with a shilling!'

How it was Saved.

"Gentleman," said a Western judge, "this court, as the bar well knows, is naturally quick tempered; and if the court had not taken warning in time; and abstained from the use of ardent spirits, this court would now be in the penitentiary or its grave.

A Strangely Familiar Face.

"I beg your pardon, madam," said a gentleman, lifting his hat politely to a richly dressed woman on the street, "but your face is strangely familiar to me. I am sure that I have met you before."

"Yes' Mister Jones," replied the richly dressed woman; "It's myself that knows ye. Oi'm your cook."

Time is Money.

Time and money will be saved by keeping Kidney-Wort in the house. Keep it by you.

The Verdict of Experts.

"Fetch in your corpse," demanded the foreman of a Texas Coroner's jury.

The body was laid before them.

The jury made a careful examination, and questioned the attending surgeon.

"Whar was he shot?"

"Square through the heart."

"Dead in the centre o' the heart?"

"Right in the centre."

"Who shot him?"

"Jake Daniels."

A dozen witnesses declared Jake fired the shot, and Jake himself admitted it.

The jury consulted softly for some time.

"Well, jedge, we've come to the conclusion the Jake Daniels is ther dandiest shot in these parts, and don't you furgit it."

Low Prices for Butter.

The New York Tribune in its market report, explained why some butter is sold for such low prices. In speaking of butter it said; 'Light colored goods are very hard to dispose of and several lots were thought well sold at 8 to 10 cents.' If butter makers would get the top price, they should use the Improved Butter Color, made by Well, Richardson & Co, Burlington, Vt. It gives a pure dandelion color and never turns red or rancid, but tends to improve and preserve the butter.

A Sharp Witness.

During a recent trial the following occurred, varying the monotony of the preceedings. Among the witnesses was one; as verdant a specimen of humanity as one would wish to meet with. After a severe cross-examination, the counsel for the government paused; and then, putting on a look of severity, and an ominous shake of the head exclaimed:

"Mr. Witness, has not an effort been made to induce you to tell a different story?"

"A different story from what I have told, sir?"

"That is what I mean."

"Yes sir; several persons have tried to get me to tell a different story from that what I have told, but they couldn't."

"Now, sir, upon your oath I wish to know who those persons are."

"Waal, I guess you've tried about as hard as any of 'em."

The witness was dismissed while judge, jury and spectators indulged in a hearty laugh.

Our Canadian Silk Industry

is prosperous. The great difficulty to be contended with is the low grade of goods required. In nothing is this more apparent than in the comparatively small article of sewing silks. The great demand in Canada seems to be for cheap quality, buyers forgetting that a cheap thread must necessarily be a fine & consequently a weak one. Messrs. Belding, Paul & Co. make three grades of spool silk; of these different qualities the poorest one has by far the largest sale, at the same time they constantly hear of complaints of poor sewing silk. If ladies will take the trouble to ask for Belding Paul & Co's own brand, and see that their name is on each end of each spool, they will be sure of getting the best made. tt.

Loss of sleep, it is said, is making men small and puny. That is a fact. Just look at the difference in the physique of a delicate scholar and the robust night police-man.

Dr. Scott's Prepared Spice is put up in a round blue box, and printed with gold letters, the trade mark is a horse's head through a horse shoe, which is on the top of every box. When you get this medicine you have got the best ever used for horses, cattle, sheep and swine.

"Why do you carry your pocket-book in your hand?" asked a husband of his young wife. "Oh," was the quiet reply "it is so light that I am afraid it might jump out of my pocket."

A FIRM OPINION.

THE U. S. PRESIDENCY.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

We learn by telegram from Chicago this afternoon that Governor Cleveland was nominated for President to-day on the second ballot.

HOW IMMIGRATION IS NOT PROMOTED.

Says Le Progres de l'Est:

"A sufficiently grave accusation has been made against M. Elisée Noel, French Immigration Agent in this city. It appears that about the middle of March a Mr. T. W. F. Roose Haverkamp, a Dutchman, who has resided at Sherbrooke for some months, applied to Mr. Noel for a loan of $50, as security for which he proposed to pledge with him some diamonds, etc., valued at $150. On the 20th March Mr. Noel, having had the jewels valued, granted the loan of $50 for six weeks, in consideration of the payment of $13 interest. The pledger now complains that he had to pay this sum in order to save his pledge, and he has made a complaint respecting it befor Mr. J. Griffith, Revenue Inspector, who, on demand of the Provincial Treasurer to that effect, has submitted the case to the Government, which now have it under consideration."

A week or two ago the Star, speaking of Mr. Noel's labours in the cause of Quebec immigration, said:—

"This gentleman wrote 28 letters to France during the year, which he admits or rather claims with modest pride were long and tiresome. The number of persons who addressed themselves personally to his office to obtain information in order to settle was 163, of whom 79 were repatriated Canadians, 16 Canadians from the older parishes, 50 Belgians, and 18 Frenchmen. In the brief moments of leisure snatched during the intervals between his arduous labors of writing the 28 letters and receiving the 163 visitors, Mr. Noel seems to have pondered much upon the attractions of his country, and in his report unburdens himself as follows:—

'Our country seems to be reserved for courageous and energetic people.

Although nature has richly endowed it with a healthy climate, moderate temperature, forest and mineral riches of an inappreciable value, and a fertile soil: although it has a model constitutional government—'"

Heavens! a model constitutional Government!—But hear we M. Noel in reply.—

He writes to Le Pionnier last week:—

"Perhaps they (of the Star) may hereafter be able to convince themselves that the work—a very humble work, it is true—done by me in this office is not as unfruitful as they think, or at least affect to think. Let the tree grow a little, gentlemen, and when it shall arrive at a fruitbearing age, if it produces no fruit let it be grubbed out and cast into the fire. Their experience should teach them that the seed of this tree is full of life, and if its germination is slow, the young shoot is but the stronger and more vigorous."

To be sure!—especially when stimulated by interest at the rate of 220 per cent.

In another article, Le Progres pays a well-merited tribute of praise to the indefatigable labors of the English Immigration Agent here, Col. Ibbotson, who, according to the returns to Government, received during the year 1,478 immigrants of nationalities as under:

From which it appears that Col. Ibbotson, the English agent, has received and placed, besides 1,463 others, 15 French as against M. Noel's 18. "Why," Le Progres asks, "do nearly half the French show a preference for Col. Ibbotson? and why did 10 Belgians out of 60 address themselves to him rather than to M. Noel? These are questions to whose solution M. Noel would do better to address himself, instead of treating the public to a long dissertation on the advantages which our province offers to people who either will not come to it, or if they do, avoid his agency."

In his report M. Noel complains to the Department of a sort of isolation in which he finds himself placed. "I feel," says he, "that I am ignored, and that immigrants that ought to be sent to my charge arrive at Sherbrooke unknown to me." Monstrous! —But, why is it? "Is their arrival unknown to him," asks Le Progres, "because the trains arrive too late at night or too early in the morning?"

M. Noel is in a pitiable case. Think of the money he could make if a few more Dutch immigrants fell in his way. 220 per cent! We can hardly wonder at the immigrants avoiding his office; but, surely, the man who possesses such an aptitude for doubling money should not be "ignored." It is right to add that M. Noel in self defence states that not having the money to lend, he has acted in this affair as the agent of another. Who that other is he does not say. The Provincial Treasurer has been prompt to take charge of the matter—yet we hardly believe it can be the Government. But, really now—they have done so many curious things of the like, or worse, that, in the present state of their finances, they might do much worse than remove M. Noel from his present useless office to another sphere where his brilliant talents could be utilized to the profit of the province—or its legislators.

THE FRANCHISE BILL.

Earl Cairns's amendment to the Franchise Bill postponing the extension of the franchise until a Redistribution scheme was included in it was adopted on a vote of 205 to 146 by the House of Lords on Tuesday night.

Whatever talk may have been indulged in by the Lords at the earlier stages of the Bill, they appear latterly to have accepted the principle of an extension of the Franchise, and if the Conservatives came into power now, probably one of their first measures, in obedience to the popular demand, would be a Franchise Bill on the lines of the present, but including a scheme of redistribution. Without such a scheme no bill is likely to pass, while the Lords can prevent it. They have no objection to adding two millions of voters to the present electorate, if the electors wish it, but they do object, and very naturally, to be needlessly kept in ignorance of the manner in which these new voters are to be apportioned out among the existing constituencies. They desire to know whether this is to be done fairly or whether certain of the Conservative constituencies are to be gerrymandered out of existence, by deluging them with these new voters, who it is assumed will be chiefly Liberals. We observe The Times says the House of Lords has nullified four months labor of the Commons and deprived two million persons of the rights of the franchise. But this is hardly the case. The labor is not nullified. The passage of the Bill is postponed indeed, but the people having made up their mind to have it, it will pass in the immediate future as sure as the year will come to an end.

With reference to the usurious pawnbroking operation of the French Immigration Agent here, detailed in another place, we are informed that M. Noel, having refused, at the demand of the Revenue Inspector, Mr. Griffith, to take out a pawnbroker's license, the matter was referred by the Inspector to the Government, who yesterday, after some correspondence, finally decided not to prosecute M. Noel, as there was no probability of getting a judgment against him on a single case. The matter is now referred to the department of the Minister of Agriculture, who is M. Noel's official superior, and who will doubtless deal promptly with it. It might easily do an irreparable injury to the cause of emigration to this province; and no considerations, partizen, personal, or religious, should stand in the way of swift and exemplary justice being done.

Drowning accidents, by which many young lives are lost, are but too common at this season of the year. They are a dreadful and most painful calamity. It is not probable that the pitiable young victims themselves feel more than a momentary alarm as nature realizes its peril, a last hurried glance at the world of light, a brief ecstatic vision of home and loved ones, and all is over—the light is hidden in a moment, for all time, by the downrushing curtains of night. But the shock to a parent of being suddenly told—"Your boy is drowned," is a terrible one. Few but those who have experienced it can realize the intense agony that follows it—the dull monotonous grief and fruitless longing of the sore-stricken heart, to which no earthly thing can bring solace. We can but sympathize with them in silence, and pray that they may be comforted.

CHOLERA.

To the Editor of the EXAMINER.

SIR—I would venture to ask if the Sanitary Committee of the Council are taking any measures to guard against the evils of the cholera scourge, should it unfortunately cross the Atlantic and appear amongst us. Experience teaches us that with care the epidemic of cholera may be greatly lessened in virulence if not altogether averted. But no undrained town, where a want of cleanliness exists among the people can hope to escape, and I fear that much laxity exists in Sherbrooke.

My object is to warn and not to alarm, and if the Council will exert the power with which they are armed by the Legislature they may do a great deal to withstand the danger. The scourge has appeared in the South of Europe, and Germany is threatened. Crowds are leaving Paris for the seaside watering places, and the alarm is widespread. In the ordinary course of events we may look for the arrival of the pest in the New World next summer, and it seems to me the Council will fail in their duty if the Sanitary Committee do not give some proof of more than usual activity.

Your obedient servant,

R. W. HENEKER.

INSPECTION OF 53rd BATTALION

The annual inspection of a volunteer Battalion is always an event of interest, and this year it was no exception, as shown by the large gathering of citizens present, many being ladies. Soon after noon, on Wednesday red coats began to appear in our streets, the bugles sounding the assembly from the Drill Shed. At half-past three the regiment were in readiness, and preceded by their band, marched on to the Parade Ground, where they were formed up at open order to receive the inspecting officer. At 4 p. m. sharp Lt.-Col. Van Straubenzie, D. A. G., accompanied by Lt.-Col. Mattice, B. M., came upon the ground and was received with a general salute. He then went down the ranks, accompanied by Lt.-Col. Felton, and made a close inspection of the men, their arms and accoutrements, afterwards intimating his desire to have them march past in column, also at quarter distance column. Col. Felton closed the ranks, which broke into column to the right, and marched past, the band playing. The wheeling and marching was a credit to the officers and men concerned, the lines coming up straight, stepping shoulder to shoulder, heads erect, showing that they were alive to the occasion, the officers saluting as they came near the General. The Battalion then closed and went by at quarter column, the line being still well kept. At the request of Col. Straubenzie several battalion movements were then performed, among which were extending for attack—No. 1 extending, No. 2 forming the support, Nos. 3 and 4 the reserve. The attacking line advanced, firing at the supposed enemy—presently reinforced by the supports, the firing became heavier—and again reinforced by the reserve, when the fire was so well directed as to cause a waver in the ranks of the enemy; when the line advanced with the bayonet and swept all before them. Quickly falling in on their markers, they were moved about—deployed, changed front to left on left company—formed cavalry squares both in company and column—retired from the right in rear of the left—advanced in column and formed line to the right, each company delivering a volley as they came into positon, &c.; all which movements were done in a manner that showed they had paid close attention to their drill instruction, and eliciting very favorable comment from the spectators. The regiment was then formed in column for roll call and paymaster's inspection by Lt.-Col. de Bellefeuille, assisted by the regimental paymaster, Capt. H. A. Odell. This being completed, the men were closed to quarter column, faced to the left and addressed by the inspecting officer, Lt-Col. Straubenzie, who congratulated them on their drill; which he said was a vast improvement over last year. They had done very well indeed, and they looked well, bright, and smart. There was only one thing of which he could find fault, and that was in the appearance of their pouches. These were not as clean as they should be. He had noticed one or two that were quite right—one was that of an old soldier, Sergeant McLaughlin, who had been in his own regiment; and the regiment should take pattern by these men. He was very glad to see them so much improved in every way. If they went on they would soon take rank with the city corps of Montreal. In conclusion he said he should be very happy to mention the 53rd in very complimentary terms in his report.

The inspection then came to an end; and on the proposal of Lt.-Col. Felton, three cheers were given by the regiment for the Queen, and three more with a rider for the Inspecting Officer, which, having been acknowledged by Col. Straubenzie, brought the proceedings to a close.

The regiment afterwards marched through the city and returned to the Drill Shed, where the Colonel thanked all for the excellent work done and the good turn-out, and they were dismissed. In the evening the regiment were entertained by the officers to a lunch and dance in the Drill Shed, which was largely attended and a pleasant time had.

The following is a complete list of the officers of the Battalion; Lt.-Col. E. P. Felton, Majors, Morehouse and Leckie; Adjutant, Capt. A. N. Worthington, Surgeon-Major, E. D. Worthington, M. D.; Paymaster, H. A. Odell; Quarter Master, Capt. W. J. Hunt. Captains,—H. R. Fraser, Bowen, E. B. Worthington and Belanger; Lieutenants—Beckett, Wilson, Farwell, Brooks, Thomas, Morris, Vaillancourt, and Caron. Sergeant-Major, T. Rawson Leader of the Band, W. Glasgow. The colors were carried by the junior Lieutenants, Thomas and Caron.

C. E. T. S.

A temperance meeting under the auspices of St. Peter's Church Branch of the C. E. T. S. was held in the Brompton School House on Friday evening last. The building was very full and a good deal of interest was taken in the proceedings. The Rev. B. B. Smith, the President of the Society, presided, and Mr. A. H. Anderson, the Secretary, was also present. Mr. H. A. Elkins gave a short address, and Mr. H. D. Lawrence, two readings. The Rev. Dr. Reid gave a stirring address, appealing to parents and more especially to the young; and strongly urging young men if they went no further in the movement, to avoid by all mean the pernicious habit of treating. Some fifteen new members having joined the Society (it now numbers 34 from that part, 32 of whom are total abstinent) the meeting was brought to a close at an early hour.

CITY COUNCIL.

At the regular meeting of the Council, held on Monday last, a letter from Hon. J. G. Robertson was read respecting the Municipal Loan Fund, offering to take $36,140.54 with interest. The payment of G. B. Loomis's judgment for damages, with costs, $552.00—was recommended by the Finance Committee. By-law No. 103 to impose a tax on dogs and to make other provisions in respect to the same was read a first, second, and third time and passed. The Secretary-Treasurer was instructed to notify all persons in arrears for taxes that unless the same are paid before 15th August next they will be placed in the hands of the City Attorney for collection.

The Convention at Cookshire.

SCOTT ACT RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED—A GRAND SUCCESS.

Even the most enthusiastic supporters of temperance in Compton, did not expect anything like the success which attended the convention at Cookshire, on Monday. From every village and town in the country, the delegates turned out, mayors, councillors, doctors, farmers, etc., etc. The Court House where the convention was held was crowded, and those who in the morning were disposed to laugh at the idea as a huge farce, were seen to go away with faces of unordinate length.

Among the most noteworthy remarks were the following:

Mr. French, of Eaton Corner, knew many drinkers who would support the Act, they would give it a good solid majority.

Mr. Boyd, of Newport, also knew many men accustomed to drink but who were on favor of prohibition; had told him they would support the Act.

Mr. Labonté, of Sandhill said they would give a large majority. People must not imagine and the whiskey men tried to persuade them that his church was an intemperate church, it was not his fellow countrymen, would support, the Act; the priests of his church would do so as soon as invited. (Cheers.)

Dr. King, of Compton, promised a large majority. He wanted to answer 'Anti-prohibitionery" in the Sherbrooke Gazette who dared anyone to say there was less drinking under the local prohibition than there had been under license. "Now," said he, "I dare to say it, I dare to tell you that there is less drunkenness, and I challenge, I dare the writer of that article to make those assertions over his own name." (Loud cheers.)

Mr. McGoveran, of Waterville, said he represented the whole Diocese of Sherbrooke. The clergy of his church were with the convention in this. He had seen the Rev. Father Choquette, of Compton, and had been requested to say that he would he glad to give his most hearty support to the Act, and that His Lordship of Sherbrooke, Bishop Racine would give it his cordial support. The Roman Catholic Church was a temperance church and would assist the cause. (Cheers.)

Mr. T. R. Paige, of Waterville, said he had been in the liquor business for 25 years, but was thankful to say, he was now out of it. He would give the Act his hearty support. (Applause.)

When all the delegates had been heard from, the resolution to submit the Act was passed without opposition, and amidst loud cheers.

Resolution to ask the assistance of the clergy were also passed. The following committee was chosen:—

SUPERIOR COURT.

PRESENT MR. JUSTICE BROOKS.

R. D. Morkill, Jr., et al Petitioners, vs. The Corporation of the City of Sherbrooke Respondents.—In this question, which is one of some public interest and which has formed the subject of considerable discussion, His Honor in delivering judgment said:—

"This is a petition to set aside a resolution of the Council of this City of Sherbrooke passed on the 2nd day of April, 1884, authorizing the Mayor and Secretary Treasurer to accept from J. D. Mowrey, Esq., the sum of $3,000 in cash, and a mortgage of $9,000, payable in three years, with interest at six per cent secured by first hypothec secured on lot number two in East Sherbrooke, commonly known as the "Meat Factory Property"; in settlement of the claims of the city, which was the original owner of the property, and in discharge, of the sums of money that had been collocated to the city on the proceeds of this property sold at Sheriff's sale.

The Petitioners say that they are municipal electors; that the session of the Council at which the resolution was passed was illegally called; that no proper notices of the meeting were given; and that the resolution was illegal, being in its nature a loan and ultra vires of the corporation.

Respondents have pleaded in the first place prescription, alleging that the petition is too late, that it ought to have been made within thirty days of the passing of the resolution. That under the new Procedure Act (46 Vict. Chap. 26) which makes every day a term day for certain purposes, this petition could have been presented to the Court within the thirty days, and that there was no necessity for delaying the presentation of it to the first day of the ordinary term commencing on the 10th of June.

In this connection it is necessary to examine the articles 352, 354 and 360 of the Municipal Code, which seems to indicate, that the petition can only be presented at a term during which the trial can be proceeded with, and I should be inclined to hold that that could only be done during the ordinary terms; but as the parties have joined issue on the merits, I will not adjudicate upon this question at this time.

The circumstances are these; Mr. Mowrey had a judgment against Bowen & Woodward for a large amount, and having issued an execution against them, sold the property in question which was adjudicated to him for the sum of $12,500. Out of this amount the city was collocated for about $11,000 on account of their claim upon the property and also some $400 for taxes. Mr. Mowrey did not play the price of adjudication at the time, but gave his bond to the Sheriff. He then made a proposition to the city to pay the instalments of the principal then due with all arrears of taxes and interest, and to give them a mortgage for the balance at six per cent. This proposition was accepted by the Council, who by the resolution in question authorized the Mayor and Secretary to accept the proposal.

The petitioners say that this was a loan, and beyond the power of the Corporation to make it; that the City, at the time, was owing moneys to the Eastern Townships Bank and other parties, upon which they were paying seven per cent interest; and that under these circumstances they ought to have insisted upon payment in cash to be applied on their indebtedness.

Two points are raised here: in the first place was this a loan, in the second place, if it was a loan, was it ultra vires of the corporation. It can hardly be called a loan, as the City had not the money; and if Mowrey did not pay it, their only recourse was to have the property resold, at his folle-enchère. The Council had a discretion to exercise in this matter; they gave delay for a time, getting six per cent in place of five per cent payable under the old mortgage. This was not a direct loan, and even if it had been, it is a question whether the petitioners have shown sufficient personal interest to ask to have the resolution set aside. It was a matter in the discretion of the City, and the Court cannot place itself in the position of the Council, to investigate the financial standing of the City. Article 499 of the Municipal Code gives the Council power "to deposit at interest in a chartered bank, or to invest in the public funds of Canada, or of this province, or on first hypothec, any moneys belonging to the corporation," so that if the transaction can be regarded as a loan, it seems to fall within the provisions of this Article.

Two of the petitioners, namely: R. D. Morkill, Jr., and H. L. Gilbert are proved not to have been municipal electors; but two of them, namely: Messrs Bradford and Mitchell were municipal electors. The petition is therefore dismissed."

July 2nd, 1884.

J. D. Mowrey, Plaintiff vs. E. C. Bowen et. al. Defendants; and J. D. Mowrey, Petitioner; and The Quebec Central Railway Company mis en cause.—This was a petition on behalf of the Plaintiff, Mr. Mowrey, for a writ of possession to order the Sheriff to put him into possession of the property known as the "Meat Factory Property" in East Sherbrooke, bought by the Plaintiff at Sheriff's sale on the fifteenth day of January last.

The petition was contested by the Quebec Central Railway Company who claimed to be holding the property under an annual lease from Bowen & Woodward, terminating on the first day of May each year. That as they had held over since the first day of May 1884, with permission of the Defendants, they could not be dispossessed until the first day of May 1885.

His Honor held that it was unnecessary in this case to go into the question as to whether a Sheriff's sale entitled the adjudicataire to expel the tenant without notice, as the Quebec Central Railway Company had continued their possession up to the expiration of the term ending the first of May 1884. But that under the circumstances of this case there could be no presumption of the tacit renewal of the lease between Defendants and the Quebec Central Railway Company, inasmuch as the ownership of the Defendants ceased on the fifteenth day of January last, when the Plaintiff became the adjudicataire, since which date the Plaintiff had been endeavoring to obtain possession of his property.

That the circumstances of this case were altogether against the presumption of the tacit reconduction pleaded by the Quebec Central Railway Company and the petition must be granted. Writ ordered to issue to dispossess the Defendants and the Quebec Central Railway Company, and put the Plaintiff into possession.

Ives, Brown & French, for Plaintiff; Hall, White & Cate, for the Defendants and mise en cause.

Almost every person has some form of scrofulous poison latent in his veins. When this developes in scrofulous sores, ulcers, or eruptions, or takes the form of rheumatism, or organic diseases, the suffering that ensues is terrible beyond description. Hence the gratitude of those who discover, as thousands yearly do, that Ayer's Sarsaparilla will thoroughly eradicate this evil from the system.

St. Nicholas For July.—Is a brilliant "Fourth of July" number, which should arouse the interest and enthusiasm of every patriotic American girl and boy, The number opens with, "How the Tories broke up Meeting," by Emma W. Demeritt, a spirited sketch of revolutionary time. An interesting and valuable contribution is the story of Richard Lordu Jones, "The Youngest Soldier of the Revolution," by W. W. Crannell; it is accompanied by a fac-simile engraving of a three-dollar bill presented to the hero by Mrs. Martha Washington. In "Nabby Blackington," Virginia L. Townsend aptly versifies a bright touch of nature, an incident of the march to Concord. E. S. Brooks falls into line with the boyhood biography of "Stephen Van Rensselaer of Rensselaerswyck: The Boy Patroon," the "Historic Boy" who nobly supported the cause of independence, the sucess which was to strip him of all his hereditary rights and honors. Of the serials, J. T. Trowbridge's "The Scarlet Tanager" ends with an interesting denouement; "Marvin and his Boy Hunters pass though many entertaining adventures and Louisa M. Alcott contributes a "Spinning-wheel Story" of healthful and helpful significance to hosts of American girls. There are poems and verses and a well-executed frontispiece by Alfred Kappes, and many beautiful illustrations by other well-known artists.

The July Century.—Contains a remarkable contribution to United States history in "The Ku Klux Klan: Its origin Growth, and Disbandment," by the Rev. D. L. Wilson, the paper also furnishes the text for the leading editorial, in "Topics of the Time." The Frontispiece is an engraving from a full-length photograph of John Bright accompanying a careful and discriminating estimate, by T. H. S. Escott, editor of "The Fortnightly Review," Mr. Escott includes in his article several amusing and characteristic anecdotes of the great English radical. "The Scenes of Hawthorne's Romances" are described in a chatty way. The "Cruise of the Alice May," by S. G. W. Benjmin, is completed in "Cruising around Cape Breton," for which Burns makes the drawings. In fiction this number is particularly strong, Frank R. Stockton has one of his inimitable stories "The Reversible Landscape," on art of a "kind that cannot be too high," and Miss Julia D. Whiting has a pathetic New England love-story; besides installments of G. W. Cable's "Dr. Sevier," in which we hear mutterings of the coming rebellion; and the conclusion of "Lady Barberina," by Henry James, in which there is an elopement. In "Topics of the Time" are editorials on various subjects. "Bric-a-Brace," besides humorous and society verse by W. W. Fink, Walter Learned, W. A. Croffut, and others, and some drawings by Thackeray.

A NOTE OF WARNING TO SUFFERING HUMANITY.

We feel that we would be wanting in the duty we owe the humanity if we did not sound a note of warning in regard to the use of Mercury and other poisonous minerals in the treatment of blood and skin deseases. If the reader could see the horrible suffering, the awful wrecks of human health and happiness, shown by our correspondence with those who have been dosed with these mineral poisons, he would shudder with horror. Aresnse, Mercuro, Antimony, and little of Potassium are some of the remedies most ordinarily used for these diseases, and they are all Poison. Do not take these poisons. They might dry up your disease for a few days, but it will surely return, and with it you will have Mercurial Rheumatism, which may bring you years of torture. Shaker Blood Syrup will invigorate you and build you up, and torce all the poison out through the pores of your skin, and cure you sound and well.

It is now asserted that the new Lieut-Governor of Quebec will beeither Senator Masson or Senator Chapais.

Our Canadian Silk Industry is prosperous. The great difficulty to be contended with is the low grade of goods required. In nothing is this more apparent than in the comparatively small article of sewing silks. The great demand in Canada seems to be for cheap quality, buyers forgetting that a cheap thread must necessarily be a fine & consequently a weak one. Messrs. Belding, Paul & Co. make three grades of spool silk; of these different qualities the poorest one has by far the largest sale, at the same time they constantly hear of complaints of poor sewing silk. If ladies will take the trouble to ask for Belding Paul & Co's own brand, and see that their name is on each end of each spool, they will be sure of getting the best made. tt.

The present cool lowering weather will much improve the grass. Owing in part to its being winter-killed in many places, and in part to the long-continued dry weather, the hay crop has promised to be very light; but this weather will fill it up, and if it continues for a few days, and all goes well, the hay crop, the most important of all, will be a very good one.

The Allans have sustained a great loss in the death of Capt. Jos. E. Dutton, commander of the "Sardinian." He was a splendid seaman and a most exemplary officer and Christian worker. His funeral was very largely attended from the vessel he so long had charge of, the services being conducted by the Revs. J. Borland, Alex. Campbell and D. V. Lucas. Captain Dutton's sister, Mrs Bond, of Sherbrooke, was with him in his last hours, and seathed his dying moments.

The Teacher's Institute, which met at Richmond on Tuesday and is continuing for 4 days, is having an attendance much beyond what was anticipated by the projectors. So far about 60 teachers, mostly ladies, have been present, among whom are the professors of St. Francis College, Mr. and Mrs. Maston of Coaticook, Mr. Parkin and Misses Sutton, Low, Stevens, Hogue Steere, and Bompas, of Sherbrooke; Mrs. Cook and Miss Hepburne of Bury; Misses Bailey and Pender. of Compton, and nearly all the local teachers, also Inspectors Hubbard, Stenson and Thompson. The lectures so far have been mainly by Dr. Robins of McGill Normal School and Rev. Secretary Rexford, who acts as chairman of the Institute, but Principals Passmore and Maston, Inspector Hubbard and others have taken prominent part in the exercises. Altogether, both as regards the number present and the interest shown, the success has been very gratifying, and the session must result in much advantage.

Edinburgh, June 18.—At the Live Stock Market, Haymarket, yesterday Messrs. John Swan & Sons had a large and prime display of all classes of fat stock. There were more south country buyers present, while both Canadian and States cattle being much shorter for Glasgow induced an increased attenance of Westcountrymen, local buyers also taking their regular requirement, best bullocks made up to £36 apiece, heifers, of which the supply was limited, made up to £23, the best classes of useful weight cattle making 10s to 10s 3d per stone; secondary sorts, 9s 6d per stone. 159 fat cows met a ready sale, Shorthorns, up to £28s 10d Ayrshires th £23 apiece. The show of sheep was very prime. Trade throughout was fairly steady at last week's prices. The Rev. J. T. Pitcher commenced his pastorate of the Methodist Church in Sherbrooke last Sunday. The morning he devoted to reading the Rules of the Society and making some remarks upon the way he proposed doing his work, all of which were practical and to the point. In the evening he gave an able and eloquent sermon on the Miracle of the Loaves and Fishes and was attentively listened to by a large audience. We believe the impression given was most favorable, and we think we can safely predict for him as successful a career in Sherbrooke as he has had elsewhere.

North Hatley.

Thursday, July 3rd, 1884.—The friends and relatives of Mr. & Mrs. A. P. LeBaron, of North Hatley, arranged a party to celebrate the 25th anniversary of their wedding. The gathering was held in the new annex to the store of Benj. LeBaron, Esq., where all had been invited to dedicate the new room and take dinner; when to the complete surprise of Mr. & Mrs. LeBaron, they were presented with a number of useful and valuable presents, consisting in part of a large easy chair for each, a nice hand painted china set, a large album, silver fruit dish, silver pickle dish, etc., etc. A bountiful collation was served after the presentation, and the afternoon was spent in visiting and social enjoyment. At the close of the exercises an original poem was read, when all departed wishing that the couple may live to enjoy a golden wedding.

CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to return thanks to our friends and relatives for their many useful and valuable presents given us in remembrance of our 25th wedding anniversary, also the fine collation and the enjoyment furnished.

Mr. & Mrs. A. P. LeBaron.

Waterville.

On Wednesday, July 2nd, a pic-nic was held in Mrs. Bell's grove in this village, under the auspices of the Congregational Ladies' Missionary Society. The attendance was good, and a very pleasant time was spent. Singing and some excellent readings forming a prominent feature and what contributed greatly to the interest of the occasion, was the reading of a letter received from the Rev. Chas. Brooks, of Constantinople, giving an account of the work in that country.... On the evening of the same day a very enthusiastic meeting was held in the Congregational Church, the object of the meeting was to test the feeling of the community with respect to the Scott Act, and if it would be desirable to seek at the present time its adoption in the County of Compton. The Rev. G. Purkis took the chair, who after offering a few remarks on the objects of the meeting, called on Mrs. Middleton, the Provincial President of the W. C. T. Union, who was followed by Mrs. Jordan, President of the Compton County branch of the same. These Ladies both spoke with great calmness, but at the same time with much earnestness, showing that the work they were engaged in was real heart work. After these the chairman called on Mr. Hewton, County Secretary of the Dominion Alliance, who delivered a very excellent address. If the spirit of the meeting is to be taken as a criterion of the feeling of the county, there can be no fear of the result, for when the question was proposed "Is it your wish that the Scott Act should be submitted to the electors," the whole audience arose to their feet as if by one impulse. We are not however to expect that the Act will be adopted without opposition. Let every lover of his county be at his post when the voting time comes, for it is votes that tell in the long run. May God speed the right.

SAD DROWNING ACCIDENT.

At about six o'clock on Friday evening the 4th, some boys, going to the Massawippi River to bathe, found on the bank the clothing of two others who were not to be seen. The sad fact that they were drowned was evident, and word was at once taken to the village. Messrs T. W. Bown and George Severance, identified the clothes as belonging to their sons, Thomas Frederick Bown and Calvin Elias Severance, aged 10 and 9 respectively, who had been missing for about two hours. The news spreading rapidly, a crowd was soon on the spot, and measures were at once taken to find the bodies. The greater part of the night was spent in searching by torchlight, but it was not until morning that the bodies were recovered. There is a sand bar in the river at that place, over which the water is very shallow, dropping suddenly to a depth of about 16 ft. The poor little fellows are supposed to have been wading on the bar, and so have got into the deep water. The lads were schoolmates, in the same class also at Sabbath School, and they were buried at the same time, the united funerals being held on Sunday afternoon in the English Church, which was thronged, many being obliged to stand. It is not often that a whole community is so deeply moved as ours has been by this sad calamity. The bereaved families have the sympathy of all in their great affliction.

At a meeting of the Municipal Council of the village of Lennoxville, held on Monday evening, 7th July, 1884, the following resolution was passed unanimously:

Moved by Councillor Mallory, seconded by Councillor Wilson, and Resolved, "That this Council hereby tender their sincere and heartfelt sympathy with Councillor Bown, his wife and family, in their sad bereavement at losing their beloved child by drowning, and they earnestly pray that the Almighty may be pleased to support them in their sad trial. It was also resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent to the family."

Milby and Vicinity.

Dominion Day passed off very quietly in this vicinity, most of the boys thought best to help our neighbours south of 45 celebrate the 4th of July.... The growing crops are looking fairly well, but have suffered somewhat from the want of rain. The refreshing showers of last Saturday, and Sunday, will no doubt make an improvement in their appearance. The hay crop will scarcely be an average one. The hop crop (with the exception of some new yards), is not looking very well. The fruit crop, especially apples, will not be as large as was at first expected, many of the small apples are dropping off the trees.... Mr. John Miles had a horse stolen from his pasture not long since, but the horse and thief were soon caught, and we understand the thief has been sent up to Kingston for the term of two years.... Mr. A. E. Smith is doing a lively business in the manufacture of butter tubs this season. Mr. Simon Powers has started the silver plating business here and we understand is meeting with splended success. Mr. James Moy, who has carried the mail from Lennoxville to Huntingville ever since the Grand Trunk was started, and to Milby since the Post Office was opened here, has resigned on account of old age. We think he should have had a pension. If ever a man deserved a pension for long and faithful service it is Mr. Moy. Miss Mary Hunting who for several years has been the the organst in the Church at Huntingville, was on Saturday June 28th presented with a silver napkin ring, cake basket, and sugar bowl, by her many friends. Sunday June 29, being Children's Sunday the church at Huntingville was beautifuly trimmed with flowers, evergreens &c. The Rev. F. E Healy preached an eloquent sermon suitable to the ocasion. We were somewhat amused to see that the Hon. J. H. Pope had been interviewed by some of his friends on the subject of the Scott Act. They got the answer they should have have expected. Mr. Pope will not interest himself about a matter of that kind, until others have worked up a public feeling in its favor, when he will be ready to shout himself hoarse in favor of its adoption, and then be will turn to his friends an say "how nicely we killed that bear."

SEC. 10—It shall be the duty of the Chief of Police to cause to be destroyed all dogs that may be found running at large, or wandering in any part of the said City, not muzzled in the manner prescribed by the preceeding section, after the issue of such proclamation, and while the same may continue in force, and each and every owner, keeper, or harborer of any dog which shall be found running at large or wandering in any part of the City without being muzzled in the manner aforesaid, after the issue of, and during the continuance of such proclamation, shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding twenty dollars, or an imprisonment of thirty days for each offence.

SEC 11—All persons who shall violate or fail to comply with any of the provisions of this By-Law, to which no penalty is attached in any preceeding section of this By-Law, shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding twenty dollars, and in default of immediate payment of said penalty, to imprisonment in the common goal for a period not exceeding thirty days, the said imprisonment to cease on payment of the said penalty.

SEC. 12.—The word "Dog" whenever used in this By-Law shall be construed and taken in its general sense and embracing any number of dogs owned or kept by an individual.

SEC. 13—That By-Law, No. 29, of the By-Laws of this Council be, and the same is hereby repealed.

A Disjuncted Parent

Five daughters—four o' them engaged—
I think I shall go mad!
For such a surfeiting of love
No parent ever had.
The very atmosphere is charged
With it; no matter where
I go about the house, I trip
Upon some whispering pair.

At evening when I take my pipe
And seek a quiet nook
To sit and read my paper, or
Some new and tempting book,
I ope, perhaps, the parlor door,
When a familiar sound,
Quite unmistakable, suggests
It is forbidden ground.

So then more cautiously I turn
To our reception room;
But lo! again upon my ear
From its romantic gloom
Comes softly, yet with emphasis,
That warning: when I start
And leave as Lady Macbeth wished
Her guests would all depart.

My next resort is then the porch,
Where roses trail and bloom;
Ha! is it the echo that betrays
The joys of yonder room?
Ah, no! a startled change of base
Reveals the presence there
Of Cupid's votaries, and, alas!
There's still another pair.

"But sure," I think, "my library
Will be a safe retreat."
So there at once with quickened step
I take my wearied feet.
Vain hope—that warning sound again
Breaks on my listening ear;
Thank heaven! my youngest hath not yet
Attained her thirteenth year.

Hark! there she is! and bless my heart
That popinjay, young Lunn,
Is at her side—I do believe,
That she, too, has begun.
Oh, ye who live to sit and dream
Of future married joys,
Pray heaven with honest fervor that
Your girls may all be boys.

Shakespeare's Autograph.

It may be of interest to those who make the subject a study to know that there are only five genuine signatures of Shakespeare known to be in existence. One is in the London Library, the other in the British Museum, one attached to his will at Doctor's Commons, and two in possession of private collectors.

A Single Fault.

"I think that young Mr. Cutaway is just a perfect gentleman," remarked Mrs. Fussanfeather to her daughter after that young man had gone before the clock had made a ten-strike.

"He is certainly very pleasant company, but he is not perfect, mamma."

"And what have you seen to make you think he is not?"

"Why, you know," replied the joking girl with a chuckle, "he certainly has a single fault."

"Well, my daughter, remember it is leap year, and you will have yourself to blame if you allow him to have this fault at the end of the year."—Yonkers Statesman.

Leap Year in Spain.

I noticed that a Spanish girl of my acquaintance held her fan half open. I asked the philosophy of the thing.

"Why, you wouldn't have me hold it any other way, would you?" she said with mild surprise.

"What difference does it make?"

"All the difference. If I keep it closed it means I hate you."

"Heaven forbid!"

"And if I open it wide it means I l-o-v-e y-o-u."

As she began to open it I fled.

English Women as Fire-Builders.

There are no women in the world better posted on fire-making than the daughters of England. They don't feel ashamed of it in any class. They pride themselves with using the tongs to perfection. By carefully placing the coals on the fire instead of throwing them on, they leave an opening to let the blaze through between the pieces, and that is the reason that English farm-houses have a smoother and more cheerful appearance than elsewhere. With such coals as we have, they might have the handsomest fire in the world. It is a dainty thing to make a nice fire in a polished grate.—T. Goodman.

President Arthur's Newspapers.

At the White House nearly every important newspaper in the United States is taken and read. A great many papers are sent with the compliments of the publishers, and the President subscribes for a large number. From old habit he reads the New York papers through each morning, and glances at the city papers, but for dealing with great masses of daily newspapers there is a clerk especially detailed to look them through, and clip out all news relating to the president and his policy, and arrange them for his inspection.

Tigers as Playthings.

Abram Bateman, of San Francisco, has two tiger kittens that were recently stolen from a tigress in an abandoned shaft of El Rocario mine, in Sonora. They are eight weeks old, and weigh thirty pounds apiece. Having been petted all their lives, they are as tame and playful as domestic kittens, and betray few signs of ferocity excepting when feeding, at which time they are unapproachable.

They are kept confined in a cage in the back yard, but are often brought into the parlor and turned loose for the entertainment of guests. Then they evince their appreciation of their liberty by chasing each other, jumping over furniture, and scattering ladies and children in every direction. When tired of the play the kittens either climb to their owner's lap or sprawl on the sofa, and then purr contentedly until they fall asleep.

A School of Good Manners.

The court of Versailles under Louis XIV, and even under his wretched successor, was such a school of good manners as the world had never seen. Much of the polish which graces the Frenchmen of to-day comes to them from the time that politeness was cultivated as a religion; when that, diplomacy, and the turning of pretty compliments, were ranked among the fine arts. Nor can it be overlooked that when all the glory, wealth and beauty of the kingdom were centered at Versailles, genius flourished under these auspicious influences, and France stood foremost in the world for the number of her great men. In the days of their utmost power and magnificence the Bourbons patronized authors, artists, and men of science as no other rulers thought it expedient to do, and secure for them a position in public esteem which might hardly ever have been won yet but for this patronage, once so valued. Nor were the Bourbons ever unpopular as men. They were not a cruel race, but rather disposed to kindness and good humor, and their besetting sin—excessive gallantry—was one which Frenchmen never viewed too sternly, though it often cost the country so dear.

"Mamma, where's papa gone to?" asked a little girl one day. "He's gone up town to earn more bread and butter. I wish he would sometimes earn buns," sighed the child.

The question is asked, "what is the duration of a kiss?" The duration of a kiss is generally from about half past seven o'clock in the evening until the old man throws a boot-jack downstairs.

"Love is blind." Maybe that's why the gas is so often turned down in the parlor when love takes possession. Because why, love being blind, there is no sense in wasting gas to make light for it.

GREAT FATALITY.

The ravages of cholera infantum and summer complaints among children is truly alarming. The most reliable cure is Dr. Fowlers Wild Strawberry. Every bottle guaranted to give satisfaction. 2w46

A pompous and unloving husband rebuked his wife for stealing behind him as he came home one evening and affectionately kissing him. "Oh," she retorted "excuse me. I didn't know it was you.

"What influence has the moon upon the tide?" asked the professor. The class wag replied that he didn't know exactly what influence it had upon the tied, but that it had a tendency to make the united awful spoony.

MODERN LOGIC.

The magical power over pain that Hagyard's Yellow Oil possesses, outrivals the marvels of ancient times. It acts in a natural manner to subdue inflammation, cures rheumatism, croup, deafness, sore throat, and painful injuries. 2w46

"If there is anything I love, it's roast goose," remarked Fenderson, as he passed up his plate for a second helping. "It does you credit," said Fogg; "there is nothing so beautiful as affection among members of a family."

"Lost the cough I long did know,
Many years I felt its blow,
Without the use of pills or blister,
I cured the same with Dow's Elixer.

Thousands of affidavits prove,
That it doth man's ills remove,
Coughs and cold, and hooping cough
By its powers soon are off." tf

Rev. Father Wilds'

EXPERIENCE.

The Rev. Z. P. Wilds, well-known city missionary in New York, and brother of the late eminent Judge Wilds, of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, writes as follows:

"78 E. 54th St., New York, May 16, 1882.

MESSRS. J. C. AYER & CO., Gentlemen:

Last winter I was troubled with a most uncomfortable itching humor affecting more especially my limbs, which itched so intolerably at night, and burned so intensely, that I could scarcely bear any clothing over them. I was also a sufferer from a severe catarrh and catarrhal cough; my appetite was poor, and my system a good deal run down. Knowing the value of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, by observation of many other cases, and from personal use in former years, I began taking it for the above-named disorders. My appetite improved almost from the first dose. After a short time the fever and itching were allayed, and all signs of irritation of the skin disappeared. My catarrh and cough were also cured by the same means, and my general health greatly improved, until it is now excellent. I feel a hundred per cent stronger, and I attribute these results to the use of the SARSAPARILLA, which I recommend with all confidence as the best blood medicine ever devised. I took it in small doses three times a day, and used, in all, less than two bottles. I place these facts at your service, hoping their publication may do good.

Yours respectfully, Z. P. WILDS."

The above instance is but one of the many constantly coming to our notice, which prove the perfect adaptability of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to the cure of all diseases arising from impure or impoverished blood, and a weakened vitality.
