N. Y. Evening Post, 14th.

PAUL MARILL, LONDON, 14th.

We have now arrived at the season of useful legislation. Next Tuesday will be given up to the well-worn subject of the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sundays. Sir Wilfred Lawson and the brewers will make a hard fight of it. Mr. John Talbot, in the hope of bringing both sides to an agreement, has proposed a compromise, that the House while unable to concur in a proposal to close hours of refreshment during the whole day, is of opinion that the present hours might be curtailed.

The most spirited discussion in Parliament this week has been that on the woman-suffrage clause in the Franchise Bill. It took place on Thursday night. The ladies' gallery was crowded. Some of the Conservatives seemed inclined to support a "lady-like suffrage"—that is, a propertyed single woman's vote—and such would undoubtedly increase Conservative influence.

Considerable progress was made last night with the new Franchise Bill, which if it passes is not to come into operation till the first of January next. From this it would appear that the Government, if they pass the bill, do not contemplate dissolution during the coming fall.

On Thursday night Tawhiao and the Maori chiefs visited the House of Commons, where they watched the proceedings, which were explained to them by an interpreter, with much interest. They sat in the press gallery, where Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Goschen visited them, and remained chatting for some time. On their reappearance the public made such a rush to get a sight at the strange visitors that the police had much difficulty in securing them a dignified retreat.

The recent inquiry before the Select Committee of the House of Lords into the scheme for making Manchester a port lasted forty-one days. The costs, I hear, amount to over £160,000. It is not expected that the opposition of public bodies and railway companies in the House of Commons will be successful.

The Times devotes its first editorial this morning to the Egyptian question, and the coming Conference. It reviews the events which have led to the present position and admits that the evils both of native and foreign rapacity have become worse instead of better under our occupation. It charges the present disorganization of Egyptian affairs to the want of a distinct policy on the part of the English Government, and contends that the greater part of the present difficulties might have been avoided by a firm administration. The Times this morning contains twenty-four pages. I have just come from the Foreign Office, where the fall of Barber is still unconfirmed.

The general feeling on the subject of the dynamite outrages is not unfairly represented by Punch in the principal cartoon this week. It represents John Bull and Brother Jonathan talking, while O'Donovan Rossa appears as a skunk in the distance. Brother Jonathan says, "John, why can't you shoot down that beast?"

Mr. Gladstone writes me this morning excusing himself from an interview, on the ground of his many engagements. He says that, notwithstanding the tone of a large section of the American press on the recent dynamite outrages, he has the fullest confidence in the friendly sentiments which the American people generally entertain toward England. He adds that his age precludes the hope of his ever visiting the United States.

London is to have another People's Palace. The building first erected for the Dublin Exhibition in 1856, is to be rebuilt in Battersea Park. It is claimed that its nearness to the West End will attract some of the visitors who now go to Sydenham.

The difficulty of rapid transit to suburban districts is quite as much a burning question in London as in New York. I took a trip this week on the new steep gradient tramway, just opened to Highbury. The system adopted is similar to that in use in Chicago. The route is very sinuous and the gradients are from one in ten to one in seventy-five. The cable is seven-eighths of an inch in diameter, composed of six crucible steel wire strands bound over a hemp core. The cars are of the ordinary American type, fitted with cable grips at both ends. The route starts from Highbury up to the top of the hill, where the cable passes over a large pulley, and so down the other side to the Highbury Tavern at the bottom. The line is the first of the kind run in England. The fare is four cents.

The Gambetta Memorial Committee are now considering designs. Eighty-two have been sent in, one of which represents Gambetta beside the balloon in which he escaped from Paris during the war.

The Welsh Society held its annual meeting on Tuesday. Mr. Palston, M.P., presided. In the course of the proceedings it was resolved to erect a memorial to the late Dean of Bangor.

By appointment I called on Mr. Maskelyne at his "Temple of Mysteries," Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly. Conversing about the recent current of thought tending toward mysticism, Mr. Maskelyne said:—"I do not deny that there occur daily phenomena which baffle the scientist, well worthy of serious investigation—but, unfortunately, during recent years there has been a distinct tendency, not only not to investigate seriously, but credulously to accept the most obvious humbug. It has been my work to expose the so-called mediums, and I claim that I have succeeded. I believe I may safely say that in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, both what are called mesmerism and spiritualism are pure humbug; so also is Indian jugglery."

Mr. Maskelyne quite accepted the theories propounded both in the "Occult World" and "Esoteric Buddhism" of Mr. Sinnet. "No one," he said, "many of the phenomena chronicled in these books actually did take place, but no spirit power or force was at work. The operators had a profound knowledge of the laws of nature—there lies the whole secret."

I called by appointment at the residence of Cardinal Manning, in Vauxhall Bridge Road. "I long to see America and know the Americans," the Cardinal said, "but alas I am too old. I know but one journey to make now. Forty times have I travelled to Rome, and I am weary of that journey. The people of the Church in America is to me of great interest. You see in America the Church has lost nothing—it never had anything to lose. There you have no aristocracy handing down the traditions of the Anglican Church; no powerful territorial interest operating against Rome; there you have not the effects of three hundred years of Anglican prestige. The Church is free and untrammelled." Discussing religious against secular education, the Cardinal said: "I have my worst fears for the future in England. In France the Secularists have full right to exercise their tyranny. In Belgium the position is almost as bad, though recent events have improved the position of the clerical party." As to America, quoting the opinion of the Bishop of St. Paul, Minnesota, he said: "The influence of the seventeenth century English Puritan blood is too strong to allow the sacred tie of parent and child to be severed by the State." "In England we have lost the ear of the people; but the Church makes marvellous strides. She was never more pure, free, independent, and powerful than at the position of the Pope temporarily." "The Church has been to an extent temporarily driven from the position which it had attained. Whether she will ever be restored to that position no man knoweth, but this we do know: 'No man who lays hands on the Vicar of Christ (and thus on the Church) has ever prospered.'" The Cardinal spoke highly of the work of the Blue Ribbon Army, but condemned the operations of General Booth. Of Freemasonry, he said that the Church could not approve a secret system because it was sometimes harmless.

Musurus Pasha, the Turkish Ambassador in London, is translating Dante's Purgatorio into Modern Greek. The Hugenots was given at Covent Garden on Thursday with Mesdames Sembrich and Lucie. The French plays are now proceeding at the Gaity Theatre. Madame Judic is most popular with her audiences. The Prince of Orange is recovering.

HONORING A CITY EDITOR.

Presentations to Mr. Colson of the "Gazette."

On Saturday afternoon a very pleasant event took place at the Gazette office when Mr. Frederick Colson, who has occupied the position of city editor for a number of years, was the recipient of a very handsome mark of esteem from the members of the composing staff. The testimonial was in the shape of a beautiful gold cygnet ring accompanied by the following address: Mr. Frederick Colson,

Sir—On behalf of my fellow employees of the composing staff, I have the honor to present to you this testimonial, which is a mark of esteem from the composing staff, and which we hope will be a reminder to you of the many years of your service to the Gazette, and the many friends you have made during that time.

Mr. Finn, foreman of the composing room, made the presentation in a very happy manner, in the course of his remarks referring to the fact that during the eight years or more in which Mr. Colson had been associated with the Gazette, his relations with the composing staff had been of the most cordial nature. He bespoke for Mr. Colson the best wishes of every member of the staff, and expressed on their behalf the hope that the future of himself and lady would be of the brightest nature. Mr. Colson feelingly replied, reciprocating the sentiments expressed by Mr. Finn, and expressing the hope that the happy relations that had existed in the past would continue uninterrupted to the close.

In the evening Mr. Colson was the recipient of another token of esteem in the shape of a handsome suite of furniture presented to him by his confreres on the paper as a token of their regard for him, and of the pleasant relations that have always existed between him and the other members of the staff, all of whom wish him the best success in the future. Mr. Colson, who was taken quite by surprise, also made a feeling reply to this further mark of esteem. In the evening Mr. Richard White entertained the members of the staff to lunch at his residence, when a very pleasant time was spent. Mr. Colson being the recipient of the most kindly wishes for the future happiness of himself and the lady who is to become his bride.

A MYSTERIOUS DWELLING.

This time I had no difficulty in getting into the house. A nurse from a neighboring hospital ushered me to Madame Jansen's room. A strange scene presented itself. On the chairs, whose coverings hung in shreds, were scattered articles of clothing, old bonnets, saucers, and other culinary utensils, mingled with scraps of food. Spiders' webs hung from the ceiling, and stretched across the curtainless windows. The windows had apparently been closed for years. When the nurse drew aside the heavy curtains of the old-fashioned bed, a sound like the clanking of a chain was audible, and I saw a large bunch of keys firmly held by a shriveled hand. A lean form, enveloped in a soldier's ragged cape, tried to raise itself on the pillows. A small wrinkled face gazed into mine, while a shrill voice shrieked discordantly:

"Turn out that witch!"

Madame Jansen made an effort to strike the nurse with her keys. But a moment later the sick woman sank back helpless on her pillows.

"You are come to inquire after my health, sir?" she said in softer terms, "and I thank you for your neighborly attention. But this person," and then she raised her voice again in anger—"this person, who thrusts herself upon me, is only come to watch me."

"But you have met with an accident; your state of health requires care—" I said soothingly.

"I have no need of a nurse," she replied sharply. "Last night they tried to rob me. There were strangers about in the basement. Marked figures crept through the garret windows, and all the bells in the house pealed."

"All the bells!" said I. "That would have been a most unusual proceeding on the part of thieves."

"I tell you," cried the sick woman with rekindled energy, "I tell you all the bells rang! My nephew, who is at the head of the police, is far too stupid to catch the robbers. He came here and tried to persuade me that I had been dreaming. Ha, ha! He would have liked it better if I had dreamt my will also."

I knew that her nephew was burdened with a large family, and that his salary was small, so I tried to enlist her sympathy mainly on the score of the relationship subsisting between them. But I said:

"Your nephew is, of course, one of your heirs," said I interrogatively.

"My heirs?" she exclaimed disdainfully. "No, no, my dear sir. My heirs are those whom I am at liberty to choose, and I have chosen them."

She then explained, with evident satisfaction, the provisions of her will.

"But," said I, "that charity is already amply endowed."

"Is that your opinion?" she asked.

"No matter, it is my will. I desire these old pensioners to have something better to drink than vile potato brandy. After my death they shall taste Jamaica rum that has crossed the line three times."

"And your nephews' large family?"

"Yes, yes," she said petulantly, "they increase and multiply in the confidence and hope of living on my fortune. But I—and she now spoke with much bitterness—"I have no children."

"Will you not, at all events, make a codicil assigning a small portion of your fortune to these poor girls?"

"Poor girls!" she cried, as her old head shook pitilessly, and her frame trembled with excitement. "They shall not have a groshen, not a groshen."

At these words she sank back exhausted, and I gazed at her with astonishment.

Work, broken by age, apparently subsiding on the strong passion of hatred, I hesitated a moment, and then plucked up courage to say:

"What have you against your nephew? Has he offended you?"

"Me! Oh, dear no!" she replied.

"Quite the contrary. No sooner had he received his appointment than he came here to pay his respects. I—then she added with bitterness—"To look up his inheritance of course. Though I had never seen him before, he called me 'dear aunt'; but I saw through him. He brought his eldest daughter with him. Her name is Matilde—a grand lady—quite a grand lady, I assure you! They must be rich people, my nephew and his daughters. She wore a dress trimmed with rich Valenciennes, and a cameo brooch was fastened at her throat. She hoped, doubtless, that I would fall in love with her baby face. Her little mouth was so sweet and innocent, it was hard to believe that rosy cheeks, little grins, and many other delicacies were all put into it!"

She shook her head meditatively, recalling, perchance, her own past life. Suddenly she turned towards me, and with a strange light in her eyes, which seemed to have been kindled from her buried youth, cried passionately:

"Look at me, look at me! I also have been beautiful."

I was for a moment taken aback at the sight of her shriveled form, held erect as a torch, among the pillows. But the large eyes had already become dull and fixed.

"You would not think so now, for I am old," she whispered. "Death is very near—but the nights, oh! those nights! Then must I wander about without ceasing, it is fortunate indeed that my house is so large."

"You are suffering from want of sleep," I said; "that is a consolation elderly people often too in vain."

But she only shook her head.

"No, no, my dear sir. I keep myself awake by main force—by main force, I tell you. I am afraid of the old Sythian; but only when I am asleep. I have so often taken folk by surprise then! But he shall not catch me yet. The town authorities would be glad to hear of my death. Bah! I believe they wish to place me under restraint. By the way," she exclaimed, glancing suddenly and suspiciously at me, "you are also an official, my friend?"

I nodded. Then, with her eyes still fixed intently on mine, she exclaimed:

"Have they charged you with a mission to my house?"

"They feared that your weak state of health might necessitate some kind of guardianship."

At these words she started.

"Weak!" she cried pitiously. "No, no, not weak! I am rich, very rich, they think, and they want to rob me; but I will barter my house, even though I die of hunger inside."

So saying, she seized the bed-curtains and tried to put her feet to the ground. She must get up; she must show me how strong she was.

I called the nurse, and we both did our best to soothe her. I came round the bed and stood facing her, the light full upon me. Something in my appearance seemed to steady her, for she grew calm and listened attentively to my words. I told her that, in my opinion, there was no need for personal guardianship, but that the strange manner in which she had hoarded her wealth suggested a certain administrative incapacity on her part, and concluded by offering to find some trustworthy person who would invest her fortune to the best advantage.

I noticed that, while I spoke, she never took her eyes from me, and regarded me with that searching look which I had before observed in the garden.

"Some one of trust! Who is there?" she repeated several times with evident agitation.

At length she exclaimed hurriedly: "You—you may do so if you like."

I was astonished.

"But, Madame Jansen, you forget; I am a stranger to you."

She examined me attentively for a while, and then said:

"N. You are a young man, but I know that you would not deceive a poor, helpless old woman."

I reflected a moment. Was this due to the charm for which Monsieur Vorlist had given me credit? Be this as it may, I readily gave my consent on condition that the transfer of power into my hands be made in the presence of a lawyer, and asked her to fix the day and hour.

She made no reply, but kept fast hold of my hand, and when at last I rose to leave her, she seemed to drop it with reluctance. I asked whether she would like me to send a doctor, who would help to re-establish her strength. At these words she looked into my eyes, as though hoping to find some confirmation of the sympathy she detected in my voice, and then, holding up her left hand, of which two fingers were closed and paralyzed, she exclaimed with a hoarse laugh:

"Behold the work of the celebrated Dr. Nicolovius! No, no, my friend, no doctors for me; they are all quacks. I know my own constitution better than any one else."

With these words my task for the day was ended.

CELEBODYNE.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CELEBODYNE.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the inventor of Celebodyne, that the whole story of the defence of the defendant was a libel, and that he regretted to say that it had been sworn to.—Times, July 13, 1884.

Dr. J. Collis Browne's Celebodyne is the best and most certain remedy in coughs, colds, asthma, consumption, neuralgia, rheumatism, &c.

The Right Hon. EARL RUSSELL communicated to the College of Physicians and J. T. Davenport that he had received information to the effect that the only remedy of any service in Cholera was Celebodyne.—See Lancet, December 31, 1884.

Dr. J. Collis Browne's Celebodyne is prescribed by scores of orthodox practitioners. Of course it would not be thus singularly popular did it not "supply a want and fill a place."—Medical Times, January 12, 1886.

Dr. J. Collis Browne's Celebodyne is a certain cure for Cholera, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Cholera, &c.

PROCESSION SUNDAY.

Celebration of the Fete Dieu Yesterday.

Yesterday was a glorious day for the great annual religious procession of Montreal and the turnout of citizens to witness the imposing spectacle was consequently very large. Long before the hour appointed the streets along the expected line of march were crowded with spectators, all gaily dressed and in the highest spirits, the windows commanding good views were filled with sightseers, and in many cases even the house tops were utilized for that purpose. As is customary, the front of houses were decorated with green branches and the display of flags and bunting was quite as large as usual. The parish church of Notre Dame was beautifully decorated inside with flags, banners, devices and boughs of maple and evergreen. The route of the procession was from the church westward along N. D. street, and as Mountain, up Mountain to St. James street west, and returning by that street to the church. The procession was fully as large as in former years, and advanced much more steadily than usual, but few halts and those of no account, taking place. The parade was more numerous this year, more remarkably elaborate ones being erected at various points. At the corner of St. Francois Xavier and Notre Dame was a small and very pretty arch. Opposite No. 1874 Notre Dame was another arch of elegant design. From thence to Chabouillez square the street was profusely decorated with flags, and resembled a bower of leafy foliage, owing to the hundreds of boughs with which the shop fronts were lined. At the corner of Kennedy street was another fine arch. One of the most magnificent arches on the whole route was in front of 2104 Notre Dame street, and was profusely decorated with inscriptions in Latin, and lavishly draped with flags. At the corner of Notre Dame and Mountain street was reared another splendid arch as well as an altar. The next arch on the route was on the corner of Mountain and St. James street west. Along St. James street west were several small arches placed in gateways. Opposite No. 625 St. James street west was another pretty arch of unique design, surmounted by a belfry in evergreen. The roadway underneath was strewn with sawdust, and the inscription on the arch read "Voici le pain des Anges." The procession in passing The Herald building was one hour and five minutes. The following was the order of the procession:—

Posse of Six City Police and Sergeant. The Parishioners of St. Bridget's. St. Peter's Young Men's Congregation. St. Peter's Congregation. The Pupils of St. Bridget's Brothers School. St. Bridget's Young Men's Congregation. St. Bridget's Children of Mary. Congregation of Mary Immaculate. Parishioners of St. Joseph's. Victoria Rifles Band. The Pupils of St. Joseph's School. The Grey Nuns. Christian Brothers Children. Congregation des Hommes. St. James' Parishioners. Christian Brothers Schools. St. Denis Academy pupils. St. Laurent's College. Pensionnaire de la Congregation de Notre Dame. Little servants of the poor. Confraternity of St. Roch. St. James Temperance Society. St. James Congregation of Mary Immaculate. The Clergy. L'Union des Commis Marchands. St. Mary's College. Montreal College with band. Ville Marie Congregation des Hommes. The 65th Band and Regiment. St. Sulpice Seminary. The Clergy. The Canopy and Host. The Local Judges and members of the Bar and prominent citizens. Irish Catholic Benefit Society. St. Ann's T. A. & B. Society. Young Irishmen's L. & B. Society with band. Christian Brothers pupils.

At the head of the procession marched a cross-bearer attended by two acolytes, after which came a band of little girls very prettily attired in white, singing as they paced slowly along, their fresh young voices sounding sweetly in the clear spring air. Then came a number of women, some dressed in black with long white veils over their heads and half covering their figures, others in bright blue costumes with white veils, and others again in black. The Prince of Wales band following after drowned the chants of the devotees with bursts of martial music. Then came the temperance societies, each with their distinguishing badge, bearing gorgeous banners on which were depicted their patron saints, and escorted by religious who strove manfully to keep them in some sort of time when they sang. After these came another cross-bearer and two acolytes preceding a strong contingent of the clergy, all attired and wearing bretelles on their heads. Then more women, all wearing the inevitable white veil, and several schools of charity children in their quaint attire, then the boys of the Friars schools accompanied by their percepsors, who looked most uncomfortably warm in their heavy black coats. The boys of the Jesuits college looked remarkably neat in their tasty uniform. The college band came after, playing in their usual masterly style. Then a number of the societies, carrying banners, followed by the 65th band. A guard of honor from the 65th regiment was in attendance and marched outside of the long line of acolytes and subalterns, the latter wearing gorgeous vestments. Then came the canopy with His Lordship Bishop Fabre carrying the Host and attended by ecclesiastical dignitaries. The cords of the canopy were held by prominent French citizens and the officers of the 65th acted as a military guard. Behind the canopy came the local judges and the members of the Bar in their robes, while the Irish Catholic societies brought up the rear of the procession.

ORDINATION SERVICE.

St. Bartholomew's Reformed Episcopal Church.

The service at this church last evening was rendered particularly interesting from the fact that one of our most respected fellow citizens, Mr. Benjamin Dawson, was ordained to the ministry. Bishop Usher referred in very pleasing terms to Mr. Dawson's admission to the ministry, and said that although some might think he was too far advanced in years for such an undertaking, it was nevertheless a fitting way of closing a long and useful and Christian career.

Mr. Dawson has very liberally contributed to the Reformed Episcopal Church, and enters the ministry from a desire to accomplish all the good he can, having leisure and means. He will for the present act as Unostentatious assistant, and with that unobtrusive generosity which has always characterized him, gives his services gratuitously.

The Bishop preached a most appropriate sermon from the text Isaiah 6: c., 5-7 v.

Y. M. C. A. SECRETARIES.

Last Day of the Conference-Meetings and Services Yesterday.

The conference opened on Saturday morning with devotional exercises, conducted by Mr. C. Yachtsman, of New Jersey. Mr. L. D. Wishart, of Chicago, gave a Bible reading on wisdom.

Mr. Budge, Montreal, read a paper on the subject of educational classes for the young men in the light of benefit both to the young men and to the associations. Referring to the work in Montreal Mr. Budge expressed the opinion, after three years faithful trial, that both objects were found to be fulfilled in a remarkable degree. The direct benefit received through opening this branch was an increased liberality on the part of the business community in the support of the general work. Another point was that by careful calculation it was found that three-fourths of the young men who had been in the library and reading room at the noon and hour and evenings, and to meet this demand the number of magazines and papers had been increased and the quality improved.

In showing the benefits derived from these educational classes he said he had heard from one of the students who had been selected on account of the regularity of their attendance, and in each case direct benefits in business life were reported and in many cases they were led to attend the religious meetings.

He would suggest that the Reception Committee each year give two or three reception classes, and in these reception classes had already been found to be of great value in following up the work. He would finally say: Have educational classes; have them on a business basis; get the best teachers possible; make all arrangements and announcements at least two months in advance; do not bore the students with announcements and invitations to your religious meetings; put the best men on the reception committee, and let them study to influence young men by personal contact as they passed in and out, and above all make it a subject of constant prayer, and they might rest assured of success.

An evangelistic class, conducted by Mr. R. W. McBurnley, of New York, completed the morning session. The afternoon session was devoted to routine business and the evening to the recitation of memorials.

Yesterday the pupils of many city churches were filled by visiting secretaries who gave accounts of the work elsewhere.

The mass meeting at the Queen's Hall yesterday afternoon was conducted by Mr. McConaghy, of Philadelphia. A large volunteer choir led the singing, and there were from five to six hundred present. Mr. Wishart, International Secretary, gave an earnest and powerful address, followed by Mr. Gordon and others. As a result, several young men remained for the enquiry meeting afterward.

A mass meeting for ladies was held at the same time in the Queen's Hall. The usual evangelistic meeting was held last evening in the Y.M.C.A. hall.

The secretaries held their final meeting or "farewell" meeting for praise and prayer in the David Morrice Hall last evening.

Rescue the Perishing.

A gospel temperance meeting was held in the large hall of the Y.M.C.A. at 4.15 yesterday afternoon, with a fair attendance of ladies and gentlemen interested in the cause of prohibition. The chair was occupied by Mr. T. T. Horney, of Soranton, Pa., who had with him on the platform Mr. Hurd and Mr. R. H. Sheldon, of Worcester, Mass.

The meeting was opened by the hymn "Safe in the arms of Jesus," prayer, and the reading of a portion of the ninth chapter of St. Mark. Mr. Hurd sang "He Saved a Poor Sinner Like Me," after which the Chairman remarked that the question of temperance had been treated from so many points that it would be useless for him to suggest any new phase of the subject. To suppress the evils arising from intemperance the work of doing so had been divided and sub-divided under a multitude of heads. He believed in signing the pledge, prohibition, local option, teaching the young in the public schools to avoid the use of liquor and all other legitimate means which could be put forth to secure the end for which all earnest workers in the cause labored. The greatest help, however, he had found in his years of experience had been an implicit reliance in the saving power of God, and to any who were struggling to overcome their weakness a direct appeal to the Divine Power was the most efficacious means, and one upon which all could rely. He also made reference to the good work which was being done by the Women's Christian Temperance Union throughout the breadth of the land. The good work which had been done by gospel temperance meetings could never be known on account of its far reaching character. He had had a great deal to do with men who were seekers after a new life from the thralldom of drink, and he had seen the conditions to be put in place in work which appealed to the conscience and neglected the welfare of the soul.

Mr. Sheldon made a few remarks on the saving power of the gospel when applied to men who had become addicted to an undue use of stimulants, taking as his guide the fourth chapter of the Bible, latter part of the tenth verse. Unlike the previous speaker, he (Mr. Sheldon) personally knew little or nothing of the evils of strong drink. What he desired to speak upon was the terrible effects of the opium habit upon a man's physical and moral existence. While the occupant of a responsible position, and his mental energies during a season of commercial trouble, and in order to successfully bear up under the pressure had recourse to opium as a stimulant. The habit grew day by day, until his existence depended upon taking it. Finding himself in danger of being wrecked in his business, he had tried to stop the use of the drug by the "tapering off" process, but to no purpose. So great was his craving for the narcotic that the loss of one-eighth of a grain per day was to be missed. He had taken medical advice and gone under skilled treatment for a cure; had tried preparations supposed to allay the craving for opium, but all with the same result—the habit still remained. Finally, while at a gospel meeting at Tremont Temple, Boston, he had been moved by the exhortations of Moody and Sankey to seek relief through the medium of prayer, and through the help of Divine assistance he had been enabled to shake a new man. Mr. Sheldon dwelt upon the futility of people endeavoring to discard evil practices without calling upon the aid of the Savior; to truly reform and combat evil influences one must possess the consciousness that the Lord is with them and that they are not depending upon mere self-reliance.

Mr. Hurd gave a vocal selection, with organ accompaniment, "Come Unto Me and Rest."

The Chairman said one of the hardest things for a man to do was to stand before an audience and make a speech as Mr. Sheldon had done. But the result of such confessions had been to further the cause of good, and half way. A prominent railroad man in Pennsylvania had said to him, not long ago: "What good do you temperance people do? I have heard you talking for twenty years, and there is more whiskey drunk to-day than ever." The gentleman referred to was a moderate drinker, and it is the moderate drinkers who go to swell the ranks of the sixty thousand drunkards who die in the United States every year. Mr. Horney concluded by exhorting those present to make an individual effort to rescue some erring one from a downward path, and bring them to a knowledge of the abstinence and willingness of God to receive such, according to His promise declared in the Gospel.

An invitation to sign the pledge was extended to any who might wish to do so.

Mr. Hurd pronounced the Benediction and the assemblage dispersed.

NATURAL HISTORY SOCIETY.

Their Annual Field Day at St. Bruno on Saturday.

A large party of excursionists left Bonaventure depot at 9 o'clock Saturday morning to participate in the annual field day of the Natural History Society, which was held this year at Montarville Mountain. The party left the train at the St. Bruno station, and then drove in carriages some two and a half miles to the mountain or series of small mountains with seven or eight picturesque lakes lying between them. The village here was noticeably primitive, being pretty well cut off from railway or river, and showed the character of rustic French Canadians to good advantage. Arrived here, the party was joined by Mr. and Mrs. Bethune, of the Manor House, who kindly placed their house and grounds at the disposal of the naturalists. The latter then set out upon their general expeditions, some bent on securing insects, others peering about for rare or unusual flowers, which were, however, scarce, as it was rather late for spring bloom, and still others on the search for whatever of interest might be found. Prof. Penhallow and Dr. McConnell took charge and directed the efforts of the botanizing group.

About noon all reported at headquarters, handed in their various collections, upon which prizes were allotted as follows:— Botanical specimens—1, Miss Baylis; 2, Miss Martin. Insects—1, Master George Sumner; 2, Master Walker Adams. Miscellaneous, rocks, shells, etc.—1, Miss Jane Lovell; 2, Master George Tiffin.

The presence of Mr. Arakawa, a young Japanese gentleman studying in this country, added interest to the excursion. Boating on the lake was much enjoyed by many of those present, there being several boats at the disposal of the visitors. After luncheon Mr. Marler gave an historical account of the seignior and pointed out an old Indian road over the mountain with which were connected many historical incidents. The mountain lay in the line of an old portage route between the Richelieu and St. Lawrence rivers, which accounted for the formation of the road.

Prof. Penhallow then demonstrated the relations between the flora of Japan and of this part of North America, which, being under the same climatic conditions, showed many similarities.

Dr. T. Sterry, President of the Society, then gave an address on the geological formation of the region, the peculiarities of Montarville and its resemblance to Beloit, Montreal and Rougemont mountains, all of which were shown to be roots or bases of old eruptive masses and not improbably connected with ancient volcanoes. They were geologically unlike the Laurentides or any other hills in eastern North America.

The party returned to town about 7 p.m., all well satisfied with the day's outing.

Erps' COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected COCOA, Mr. Erps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which will save us many heavy burdens of disease. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure food and properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette. Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in Packages and Tins (2 lbs. and 1 lb.) by Grocers, labelled "Erps' COCOA & Co., Homoeopathic Chemists, London."
